39) Indra turned into a Fox. Once a haughty Vaiśya knocked down a young sage named Kaśyapa, with his chariot. The disgraced sage decided to commit suicide. Knowing this Indra went to the sage in the form of a fox and spoke to him, dwelling upon the evil aspects of suicide. At last the young sage gave up the idea of committing suicide and returned to his hermitage. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 130).

40) Indra and Subrahmaṇya. Long ago the Asuras led by Tārakāsura, persecuted the gods in many ways. Tārakāsura had received a boon from Brahmā that only the son born to Śiva could slay him. So, to distract Parameśvara from his penance, in order to make it possible for him to beget a son, Indra sent Kāmadeva (god of love) to him. But Kāmadeva was burnt up in the fire from the third eye of Śiva. After that Pārvatī won Śiva as her husband as a result of her austere penance. She prayed to Śiva that Kāmadeva should be brought back to life and that a son should be born to her. Śiva replied to her :—

"Kāma was born from Brahmā's mind. As soon as he was born, he asked Brahmā "Kaṁ Darpam ?" which means—whom shall I tempt and conquer ?" So Brahmā called him "Kandarpa". Brahmā had advised him even at that time that he should never tempt me. Disregarding that advice he came to attack me and I burned him up. Now it is not possible for him to be born in a physical form I shall beget of you a son with my spiritual power. I do not need the urge of Kāmadeva for this, as in the case of ordinary mortals".

As they were discussing this problem, Indra and Brahmā arrived there. At their request Śiva agreed to beget a son by Pārvatī. Since it is not desirable that all living beings should perish, Śiva allowed Kāmadeva to be born in the minds of all creatures. Brahmā and Indra returned quite happy. One day, Śiva and Pārvatī began their amorous dalliance. They did not stop it even after a hundred years. The whole world began to shake to its very foundations. Fearing that the world might perish, the devas, as ordered by Brahmā prayed to Agni, to interrupt the amorous play of Śiva and Pārvatī. Agni, who understood that it was not possible to achieve their object, fled and concealed himself under water. The Devas went out in search of Agni. By that time, the creatures in the water who could not bear the heat of Agni, told them the secret. Then Agni deprived them of the power of speech by a curse. After that he went and hid himself on the Mandara mountain. Elephants and parrots disclosed the secrets of Agni, who was hiding within the hollow of the trunk of a tree. Agni deprived them of their tongues by a curse. At last the gods discovered Agni. They sent him at once to Śiva to stop him in his amorous dalliance. Agni succeeded in his mission by his intense heat. Śiva transferred his semen to Agni who became pregnant. Being unable to bear its weight Agni deposited it in the river Gaṅgā, who at the behest of Śiva himself, left it in the woods on the Mahāmeru mountain. Śiva's attendant bhūtas (spirits) offered Pūjā to it there. After a thousand years a boy with six faces (Subrahmaṇya) was born out of it. He was suckled by the Kṛttikās employed for that purpose by Pārvatī and the boy grew up with astonishing rapidity within a few days. Having been suckled by the Kṛttikās, the boy got the name "Kārttikeya".

In those days, Devendra who was defeated by Tārakāsura, decided to give up war and was living in Mahāmeru. The Devas and the sages used to go to Subrahmaṇya for protection. When Devendra knew it, he became angry and went to war with Subrahmaṇya. Subrahmaṇya was wounded on the face with Indra's weapon. From the wound two sons named Śākha and Viśākha were born to Subrahmaṇya. With their help Subrahmaṇya encountered Indra again. At this stage Śiva appeared there and informed Indra that Subrahmaṇya had been born with a mission to kill Tārakāsura and to restore Indra's kingdom to him. It was then that Indra recognized Subrahmaṇya. He begged pardon of Subrahmaṇya and expressed his desire to instal him as his military commander. When he tried to perform the ceremony of installation by sprinkling the holy water on Subrahmaṇya's head, the water refused to come out of the pot. Śiva told Indra that it was because he had tried to perform the installation before propitiating Gaṇapati. Indra then offered worship to Vighneśvara (Gaṇapati) and the ceremony went off without any hitch. Subrahmaṇya who thus became Indra's commander, killed Tārakāsura shortly afterwards. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Lāvāṇakalaṁbaka, 6th Taraṅga).

41) Indra and Mahābali. The vanquished Mahābali who had left his home and country was in gloom and despair when once Indra paid him a visit. At that time Mahālakṣmī emerged from Mahābali's body and entered Indra's body. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 224).

42) Indra and Godāna (gift of cow). Once Indra asked Brahmā about the efficacy of godāna or giving a cow as gift. Brahmā told him that there is a world free from the infirmities of old age and diseases and it is called "Goloka". He added that those who perform Godāna would get a place in Goloka.

43) Indra and a bird. A hunter in Kāśī once went to shoot birds with poisoned arrows. One of his arrows hit a big tree accidentally and the powerful poison dried up the whole tree. In the hollow of the trunk of that tree there lived a bird with mystic powers. It did not like to leave that tree which had been its refuge ever since its birth. One day Devendra, in the guise of a Brahmin came to the bird, who recognized him by its mystic power. In the conversation between them Devendra advised the bird to leave the tree and find some other suitable place for its residence. The bird did not accept his advice. Indra was pleased at the bird's loyalty and gratitude towards that tree which had been its shelter all along. So he took the bird along with him to Devaloka. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 5).

44) How Indra turned Bhaṁgāśva into a woman. There was a King named Bhaṁgāśva. Once he performed a sacrifice called "Indradviṣṭa" which was believed to have the power of blessing him with children. Indra being not invited was displeased with him and was waiting for an opportunity to wreak vengeance on him.

One hundred sons were born to Bhaṁgāśva. Once he went to the forest after entrusting the affairs of the kingdom to his sons. Indra cunningly misguided him and made him lose his way in the forest. Wandering alone with his horse in the forest, he reached the bank of a river. Weary and thirsty, he stepped down into the river. To his amazement, he was instantly transformed into a woman ! The bewildered "woman" somehow reached Bhaṁgāśva's palace. All the members of his family were deeply grieved over his change of sex. To avoid embarrassment to himself and others, Bhaṁgāśva returned as a woman to the forest and there lived as the wife of a sage and became the mother of a hundred sons. After some years "she" went back to the palace with the sons and leaving them there returned again to the forest.

Indra went to the palace at this time and made the two sets of hundred sons quarrel with one another until all of them perished in fighting. Hearing about this the mother who was in the forest, wept bitterly. Indra visited her (Bhaṁgāśva) there and she told him the whole story of her misfortunes and begged his pardon for performing Indradviṣṭa sacrifice without inviting Indra. Pleased with her repentance Indra promised to resuscitate one set of her hundred sons. She wanted all the hundred sons who were born when she was a woman, to be restored to life. Indra was ready to restore her manhood too, but she preferred to continue as a woman. Indra restored to life all the 200 sons of Bhaṁgāśva and leaving Bhaṁgāśva as a woman, returned to Devaloka. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 12).

45) Indra and Mataṁga. A story is found in the Mahā-Bhārata under the title of "Indra-Mataṁga-Saṁvāda" which illustrates that a Kṣatriya, Vaiśya or Śūdra can never become a Brāhmaṇa by any means. It was told by Bhīṣma to Arjuna as follows :—

"Long ago a Brāhmaṇa's wife gave birth to a boy. The boy was given the name Mataṁga. His father sent him in a chariot drawn by a donkey, in connection with a yāga which he wanted to perform. Mataṁga whipped the donkey mercilessly. Seeing this, the donkey's mother said to Mataṁga—"You are not a Brāhmaṇa. Brāhmaṇas cannot be so cruel. You are a Caṇḍāla (a man of the lowest caste) born to your mother by a barber."

Mataṁga sadly returned to his father and after telling him what he had heard from the mother-donkey set out to perform an austere penance with the object of becoming a Brāhmaṇa. Devendra appeared to him and asked him what he wanted. Mataṁga asked for a boon whereby he could become a Brāhmaṇa; Indra vanished after saying that it was impossible. After that Mataṅga performed penance for hundred years, standing on one foot. Indra appeared again and repeated that it was impossible for Mataṅga to become a Brāhmaṇa. Then Mataṅga continued his penance for a thousand years, standing on his toe. Indra appeared again and transformed Mataṅga into a Deva named "Chandodeva". Indra told him that though he could become a Deva, he could never achieve Brahminhood. In his extreme grief Mataṅga renounced his life and entered Heaven. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapters 27, 28 and 29).

46) Indra and Śambara. There is a story in the Mahā Bhārata in which an Asura named Śambara explained the greatness of Brahminhood to Indra. Once Indra approached the Asura, Śambara and asked him what was the source of his glory and prosperity. Śambara replied that it was all due to his whole-hearted worship of Brāhmaṇas. From that time Indra began to offer worship to Brāhmaṇas and thus he won the place of Indra. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 36).

47) Indra loved Ruci. There is a story in the Mahābhārata of how a sage named Vipula who was born in the family of Bhṛgu once saved Ruci, his Guru's wife from Indra. Long ago, a great sage named Devaśarmā lived in a forest. His wife Ruci being enchantingly beautiful, many suitors were attracted to her. Chief among them was Indra. Devaśarmā was aware of this. Once he had to leave his āśrama in connection with a yāga. So he ordered his disciple Vipula to guard his wife Ruci during his absence. He had given a hint to Vipula that Indra who was an expert in disguises, might appear in the āśrama in any form. Vipula, by means of his mystic power entered into his guru's wife and guarded her.

After some time, Indra reached the Āśrama in the guise of a handsome youth. He disclosed his real identity to Ruci and told her that he had come there to spend a night with her. Ruci fell in love with him. But since she was under the mystic control of Vipula, Indra was unable to fulfil his desire. At last Vipula sent him away in disgrace. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, 44).

48) Indra's theft of Lotus. Indra once stole Agastya's lotuses. (See under Agastya).

49) Indra's theft of an Elephant. Indra once stole an elephant belonging to the great sage Gautama. The sage complained to Dhṛtarāṣṭra, who advised him to offer prayers to Indra. Accordingly Gautama pleased Indra by his prayers. Indra appeared and after returning the elephant took both the elephant and Gautama along with him to Devaloka. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 102).

50) Indra and Marutta. Long ago there was a famous king named Marutta. Indra was closely associated with him in many of his activities. (For more details see Marutta).

51) Indra and Dharmaputra. Another anecdote about Indra which deals with the last part of Dharmaputra's life is given in the Mahābhārata.

The Pāṇḍavas, towards the end of their lives entered the forest and were travelling to the north. Dharmaputra who was walking in front, was followed by a dog. On the way the four brothers and Pāñcālī fell down dead. Dharmaputra continued his journey accompanied by the dog without turning back or looking behind. At the end of the journey, Indra was waiting for him with his chariot. He told Dharmaputra that his brothers and wife had already taken their places in Heaven and that he should leave behind the dog and get into the chariot to go to Devaloka. Dharmaputra pleaded that it was not right for him to enter Devaloka after deserting the dog which had followed him so far. Even though Indra pressed him very much to enter the chariot without the dog, Dharmaputra did not yield. At last the dog assumed the form of Yama who appeared and explained to them that he had taken the form of a dog and followed his son Dharmaputra to test his noble nature. They were all happy and all the three of them proceeded in the chariot to Devaloka. (M. B. Mahāprasthānika Parva, Chapter 3).

52) Indra and Bāli. In Uttara Rāmāyaṇa there is a story as given below, about the birth of Bāli, a son of Indra :—

Aruṇa, the charioteer of Sūrya (the sun-god) went one night to Indraloka to see the goddesses dancing. Men were not allowed to enter the dancing hall. So, Aruṇa managed to enter the hall by disguising himself as a beautiful lady. The moment Indra saw her he fell in love with her. The name she assumed at that time was Aruṇī. Indra secretly took her outside and they had a sexual union. Bāli was the son born from their union.

53) Indra's theft of a Horse. A King named Sagara once performed a sacrifice. Devendra stole the sacrificial horse. Sagara sent all his 60,000 sons in search of the horse. They dug up the earth and went to the Nether worlds where they saw the horse tied in front of the sage Kapila. The enraged sons of Sagara tried to capture and bind the sage. But Kapila reduced all the 60,000 princes to ashes by his curse. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Chapter 39).

54) Indra cut an embryo to pieces. Diti and Aditi were the daughters of Dakṣa. Kaśyapa married them. Indra was born as the son of Aditi. At this birth of a son to Aditi, Diti became jealous of her sister. One day she told her husband Kaśyapa that she too wanted to have a virtuous, heroic and brave son who would be equal to Indra in every respect. Kaśyapa promised to grant her wish.

In due course, Diti became pregnant. Now it was Aditi's turn to become jealous of Diti. She could not bear the thought of Diti having a son equal to her own son Indra, in glory and splendour. So she called Indra and secretly instructed him to destroy Diti's child in the womb, by whatever means.

In obedience to his mother, Indra approached Diti pretending friendship and spent a lot of time in her company. He soon won her confidence and love by his affectionate attentions. On one occasion, when she was in sound sleep, Indra, by his mystic power, entered into Diti's womb with his weapon Vajra and cut the child in the womb into seven pieces. The child began to cry loudly, but Indra said "Mā ruda" which means "do not cry" and cut each of the pieces again into seven parts. Thus the embryo (child) was finally cut into fortynine pieces, which later became the fortynine "Mārutas" or "Maruts". When she woke up, Diti realized Indra's treachery and in her fury she cursed Indra and Aditi. She cursed that Indra would lose his kingdom of Devaloka and that Aditi would be imprisoned and her sons would be killed. As a result of this curse Devendra lost his kingdom on one occasion. Aditi, in her next birth, was born as Devakī, wife of Vasudeva and was imprisoned by Kaṁsa who killed her children. (Devī Bhāgavata, Fourth Skandha).

55) Indra and Aṁbarīṣa.

(1) King Aṁbarīṣa had a minister named Sudeva. Sudeva fell fighting in the battle-field. After some years, Aṁbarīṣa also died. When Aṁbarīṣa arrived in Heaven, he was surprised to find that Sudeva had already secured a place there long ago. Ambarīṣa had performed many more acts of holiness than Sudeva. Yet Sudeva attained Heaven earlier than Aṁbarīṣa. Aṁbarīṣa asked Indra why it was so. Indra answered that just as Aṁbarīṣa had performed many sacifices, Sudeva had performed many war-sacrifices. He added that 'war-sacrifices were as efficacious for attaining Heaven as other kinds of sacrifices (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 98).

(2) Aṁbarīṣa, King of Ayodhyā was performing a sacrifice. At that time, Indra had stolen the sacrificial animal. To continue the sacrifice without interruption, the King decided to substitute Śunaśśepha, the son of Ṛcīka, for the cow. But Śunaśśepha prayed to Indra who came and rescued him from the jaws of death. (This story is given in other Purāṇas with slight variations. Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kāṇḍa, 61st Sarga).

56) Indra and Triśaṅku. There is a story that Indra once pushed down from Heaven, Triśaṅku a King of the Sūrya vaṁśa (Solar dynasty). See under TRIŚAṄKU.

57) Indra and Viśvāmitra. Once Viśvāmitra observed a vow of silence for a period of one thousand years. At the end of that period, when he was about to take his food, Indra appeared in the form of a Brahmin and asked for that food. Viśvāmitra gave that food to the Brahmin and resumed his austere penance. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kāṇḍa, 65th Sarga).

58) Indra, Śrī Rāma and Śarabhaṅga.

(1). At the time when Śrī Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa were leading their life in the forest, one day Indra paid a visit to the Āśrama of the sage Śarabhaṅga. Devendra wished to take the sage with him to Devaloka. As they were talking, they saw Śrī Rāma coming to the Āśrama. Indra advised Śarabhaṅga to speak to Śrī Rāma and left the place. As suggested by Indra, the sage had a conversation with Śrī Rāma. After it Śarabhaṅga offered his body to the fire and went to Devaloka. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇya Kāṇḍa, 5th Sarga).

(2) When the battle between Śrī Rāma and Rāvaṇa was in progress, Indra presented to Śrī Rāma, an excellent chariot along with the horses. The chariot and horses were handed over to Śrī Rāma on the battlefield by Mātali, Indra's charioteer. Śrī Rāma fought against Rāvaṇa from that chariot and slew him. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa, Sarga 103).

(3) After the war with Rāvaṇa, Indra appeared before Śrī Rāma and asked him what boon he wanted. Śrī Rāma replied that all those monkeys who died in the war should come back to life and the forests in which they lived should abound in fruits and flowers in all the seasons of the year. Indra restored all those monkeys to life and made all the forests in which they lived, green and rich with luxuriant vegetation. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa, Sarga 129).

59) Indra gives his sword for safe-custody. During their life in the forest Śrī Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa, accompanied by Sītā entered Daṇḍakāraṇya. Śrī Rāma's chief object in going there was to give protection to the sages and their hermitages in the forest. But seeing that he had made the killing of Rākṣasas his main purpose, Sītā told him that this change in the objective would spoil other important matters. To illustrate this she told him the following story:—

'Once upon a time, a great sage was observing holy rites with great austerity. Indra was alarmed at it. He went to the sage's hermitage in the form of a warrior armed with a sword. Indra handed over his sword to the sage for safe custody. The sage accepted it and from that time all his attention was concentrated on the sword. All his time was spent in guarding the sword and he began to neglect his devotional duties as a sage. As a result of it his mystic power declined and ultimately he fell into Hell. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇya Kāṇḍa, 9th Sarga).

60) Indra and Kabandha. See under Kabandha.

61) The Post or Office of Indra. Indra was anointed as King of Devas on Meghavān mountain. In the 42nd Sarga of Kiṣkindhā kāṇḍa of Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa we find that Sugrīva had ordered the monkeys to search for Sītā on that mountain also.

62) Indra and Maya. Maya, the carpenter of the Asuras, performed penance to Brahmā and acquired complete mastery in the science of carpentry and architecture. After that he constructed a forest mansion of golden colour and took up his residence in it. Once Maya set his eyes on a goddess named Hemā. When Indra knew this he became angry and killed Maya with his weapon—Vajra. From that time Hemā got Maya's golden mansion. This was told by Hemā's maid, Svayaṁprabhā to Hanūmān. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Kiṣkindhā Kāṇḍa, 51st Sarga).

63). Indra cut off the wings of Mountains. In Kṛtayuga all the Mountains in the world had wings. They used to fly about here and there like Garuḍa with the speed of wind. The sages and the Devas feared that they might fall on their heads. The Devas held a conference and elected Indra to find a remedy for this. Indra cut off the wings of the mountains with his Vajra. The Maināka mountain was a friend of wind. When Indra was about to cut off the wings of that mountain, Wind suddenly removed it and deposited it in the ocean. It is out of his gratitude for this that the Maināka mountain rose up from the ocean and provided a resting place for Hanūmān, the son of Wind god, when he jumped to Laṅkā. This story was told by Maināka mountain to Hanūmān. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Sundara Kāṇḍa, 1st Sarga).

64) Indra cut off his preceptor's head Once Devendra accepted a sage named Viśvarūpa as his preceptor for a sacrifice. Viśvarūpa's mother was a Dānava partisan. So this priest, as directed by his mother, performed the sacrifice with the prayer—"May the gods and the Asuras prosper." As a result of the prayer, both the gods who performed the sacrifice and the Asuras who did not perform it, prospered. At this Devendra became furious and he cut off the head of the Guru. (Devī Bhāgavata, 3rd Skandha).

65) Indra and Mahiṣāsura. See under Mahiṣāsura.

66) Indra became a bull. Long ago there was a King called Kakutstha in the Ikṣvāku dynasty. When he was ruling over the kingdom of Ayodhyā, a war broke out between Devas and Asuras. In that war, the Devas were not able to defeat the Asuras. Indra in distress approached Viṣṇu for refuge. Viṣṇu advised him to seek the help of Kakutstha, King of Ayodhyā. So Indra with the other gods went to Ayodhyā. When Kakutstha heard about their appeal for help, he glady offered his help but only on condition that Indra became his vehicle. Seeing no other way, Indra assumed the form of a bull and Kakutstha, riding on the back of the bull fought against the Asuras and defeated them. It is from that day that the King came to be called "Kakutstha", "Indra-vāhana" and "Purañjaya". (His original name is unknown). "Kakut" means the "hump of a bull". Because he was seated on the "Kakut" he got the name "Kakutstha". Because he made Indra "vāhana" (vehicle) he got the name of "Indravāhana". As he defeated the Asuras and conquered their city (pura) he was called "Purañjaya". Kakutstha was the son of Śaśāda and the father of Pṛthu. Śrī Rāma is called "Kākutstha" because he was born in the family of Kakutstha. (Devī Bhāgavata, 7th Skandha).

67) Indra's Task. Devī Bhāgavata, 8th Skandha says that Indra is one of the "Aṣṭadikpālakas (the eight protectors of the quarters) and the name of his city is "Amarāvatī".

68). Indra's term of Life. The Devī Bhāgavata 5th Skandha says that two life-spans of Brahmā make Viṣṇu's life-span. Śiva has double the life-span of Viṣṇu, that during the life of Brahmā, fourteen Indras will drop down from Heaven and perish, and one day of Brahmā is made up of one thousand "Caturyugas."

There are fourteen Manvantaras during the life of the present Brahmā (See under Manvantara). This means that fourteen Manus will be born and will die one after another during this period. Each Manvantara will have its own Indra and the Devas. The first Manu was Svāyambhuva. After him five more Manus, Svārociṣa, Uttama, Tāmasa, Raivata and Cākṣuṣa, have passed away. The present Manu is Vaivasvata the son of Sūrya. The current Vaivasvata Manvantara is the seventh. At the end of seven more Manvantaras, the present Brahmā will perish and a new Brahmā will be born. For the names of the Indras of different Manvantaras, see under Manvantara. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 2, Chapter 1).

69) Indra became a Calf. (See under Pṛthu).

70) The name Purandara. Sardar K. M. Panikkar in his preface to Ṛgveda Saṁhitā says that Indra got the name Purandara because he destroyed the cities (Puras) of the Dasyus. But in Chapter 71, of Vāmana Purāṇa, we are told that he got this name because he killed "Pura", the son of Mahābali.

71) Indra in the land of Koṅkaṇa. Once an Asura named Śūrapadma obtained from Brahmā, a boon to enable him to conquer the whole world. He persecuted the inhabitants of all the three worlds. He sent his followers to bring Indrāṇī (Indra's wife) to him as a captive. Indra, who came to know of this, secretly went away with Indrāṇī to the Koṅkaṇa land and lived in a temple there. After some days, entrusting Indrāṇī to the protection of Śāstā, he went to Kailāsa. Just at this time, Śūrapadma's sister Ajāmukhī came there and tempted Indrāṇī. Śāstā cut off the hands of Ajāmukhī and took Indrāṇī to Kailāsa. (Skanda Purāṇa, Asura Kāṇḍa).

72) Indra and Mucukunda. Mucukunda, a King of the Ikṣvāku dynasty, once went to Devaloka at the invitation of Indra. In the war between the Devas and Asuras, Mucukunda helped Indra and the Asuras were defeated. Indra was pleased and asked Mucukunda what boon he wanted. Mucukunda asked for a boon which would give him long and sound sleep. Indra granted it and in addition declared that anyone who disturbed Mucukunda's sleep would be reduced to ashes. After that Mucukunda went to sleep in a cave in the middle of a dense forest.

A King of the tribe Yavana performed penance to Brahmā and obtained his boon which would enable him to defeat the Yādavas (Śrī Kṛṣṇa's clan) and he began to fight with Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Because of Brahmā's boon, Śrī Kṛṣṇa was not able to kill him. He drove Yavana into the cave in which Mucukunda was sleeping. Mucukunda suddenly woke up from his sleep and looked at him with great anger. Yavana was at once reduced to ashes. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

73) Indra's favourite Drink. The juice of the Soma Plant is the favourite drink of Indra. (Ṛgveda, 1st Maṇḍala, 1st Anuvāka, 1st Sūkta).

74) Indra became a Goat. Sage Aṅgiras began worshipping the Devas, hoping to have a son who will be equal in glory to Indra. Indra who did not like another person to be his equal, took birth himself as the son of Aṅgiras. Savya is the name of that son. Once Savya assumed the form of a goat and ate up the soma plant of a sage called Medhātithi. The sage then called him Meṣa (goat). Indra is still known by the name, Meṣa. (Ṛgveda, 1st Maṇḍala, 1st Anuvāka, 51st Sūkta).

75) Indra turns woman. Once Indra took birth as the daughter of a king named Vṛṣaṇāśva and assumed the name Menā. (Ṛgveda, 1st Maṇḍala, 1st Anuvāka, 52nd Sūkta).

76) Indra and Ṛjiśvan. Once Indra helped a King named Ṛjiśvā to defeat the Asuras, Karañja, Parṇaya and Vaṁgṛda. (Ṛgveda, 1st Maṇḍala, 1st Anuvāka, 53rd Sūkta).

77) Indra and Sūrya. A King named Svaśva offered prayers to Sūrya to bless him with children. Sūrya himself took birth as his son. Once a great sage called Etaśa got involved in a fight with this son (Sūrya). When the sage was about to collapse, Indra came to his rescue. (Ṛgveda, 1st Maṇḍala, 11th Anuvāka, 62nd Sūkta).

78) Indra and Saramā. Once an asura called Paṇi stole some cows and hid them in some unknown place. Indra asked Saramā, the bitch of the Devas to find out and inform him where the cows were kept concealed. Saramā replied that she was prepared to do so, if Indra would give milk to her child and look after it in her absence. Indra undertook that task and the bitch went out and found out the place where the cows were hidden and reported it to Indra, (Ṛgveda, 1st Maṇḍala, 11th Anuvāka, 62nd Sūkta).

79) Indra and Dadhīca. Dadhīca (Dadhīci) was the son of Atharva. He used to scare away the Asuras by his eerrible look. Once when he had gone to Heaven, the earth became infested with Asuras. Indra set out to fight them. He tried to find out whether Dadhīca had left behind anything to be used as a weapon. "Dadhīca had with him a horse-head", he was told. Indra went in search of it and at last found it in a lake at a place called Śaraṇya. It is with its bone that he killed the Asuras. (Ṛgveda, 1st Maṇḍala, 13th Anuvāka, 84th Sūkta).

80) Indra and Dadhyaṅ. Indra taught Madhuvidyā (The science of intoxicating drinks) to Dadhyaṅ. He was warned by Indra that if he communicated that lore to anyone else, his head would be cut off. Once the Aśvinīs wanted to learn it. Since Indra had denied Soma drinking to Aśvinīs, they were not on good terms with Indra. So they approached Dadhyaṅ to acquire that Knowledge. But he refused to teach them due to his fear that Indra would cut off his head. So the Aśvinīs cut off Dadhyaṅ's head and fixed a horse's head in its place. With that horse-head Dadhyaṅ taught the Aśvinīs Madhu Vidyā. After they had learnt the knowledge, they replaced his own head after removing the horse-head. (Ṛgveda, 1st Maṇḍala, 17th Anuvāka, 116th Sūkta).

81) It is said that once, in a light mood, Indra made a mare give birth to a cow. (Ṛgveda, 1st Maṇḍala, 18th Anuvāka, 121st Sūkta).

82) Indra and Śatānīka. Śatānīka was a King of the Lunar dynasty who ruled over the city of Kauśāmbī. Indra who was highly impressed by his heroic exploits once invited him to Devaloka to suppress the Asuras. In the war with Asuras, Śatānīka was killed. After that Śatānīka's son, Sahasrānīka went to Devaloka and killed the Asuras. Indra who was pleased declared that Sahasrānīka would marry the beautiful Mṛgāvatī and they were married. See under Mṛgāvatī. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Kathāmukha lambaka, 1st Taraṅga).

83) Indra and Vāsavadattā. Vāsavadattā who was the wife of Udayana was born in the world by Indra's blessing. See under "Vāsavadattā". (Kathāsaritsāgara, Kathāmukha lambaka, 1st Taraṅga).

84) Indra and Meghanāda. Rāvaṇa conquered the world with the help of Brahmā's blessing. In his pride he came into conflict with Indra. After a fierce battle, Rāvaṇa's son, Meghanāda defeated Indra. He took Indra to Laṅkā as a prisoner. Rāvaṇa chained Indra's hands and feet and tied him to his flagstaff. The Devas in distress approached Brahmā for help. Brahmā went to Laṅkā and secured the release of Indra. After giving the title of Indrajit to Meghanāda, Brahmā returned to Brahmaloka.

Sometime before this Devendra had committed adultery with Ahalyā, Sage Gautama's wife. At that time Gautama had uttered a curse on him, that he would have to spend a year in prison, chained by an enemy. His life in Rāvaṇa's prison in Laṅkā was in fulfilment of that curse. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

85) Indra and Hanūmān. Hanūmān, the son of Vāyu (wind) sprang up into the sky as soon as he was born, seeing the brilliant rising sun, and mistaking it to be some delicious food. He saw Rāhu who was standing near the sun and made a leap towards him. When he came near, he saw Airāvata, Indra's elephant, standing in Devaloka. At once he turned towards that elephant to swallow him. Seeing the struggle between Hanūmān and Airāvata Indra used his weapon Vajra which cut the monkey's "hanu" (jaw bone) and he fell down dead on the earth. Vāyu, in deep sorrow, took the dead body of his son and went to Pātāla. When Vāyu (wind) left the world, the creatures of the world underwent great suffering. Then the Devas led by Brahmā went to Pātāla, consoled Vāyu and revived Hanūmān. Since his "Hanu" was cut with Vajra, the monkey was named "Hanūmān" by Indra. Besides, Indra gave him a blessing that Hanūmān would die only when he wished. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa; Kiṣkindhā Kāṇḍa; 66th Sarga).

86) Indra and Govardhana. For the story of how the people of Gokula (Cowherds' colony) stopped the worship of Indra, how Indra caused a heavy shower of rain, and how Śrī Kṛṣṇa used the Govardhana mountain as an umbrella, see under "Kṛṣṇa".

87) Indra becomes victim of old age. Once the sage Durvāsas went to Devaloka. The goddesses gave him a grand reception at which Menakā presented him with a garland made of fragrant flowers. The sage gave it to Devendra. Indra placed it on Airāvata's tusk. The fragrance of the garland attracted a large number of bees to it. They swarmed round the head of the elephant and annoyed it. Airāvata picked up the garland trampled it under his foot, pulled it to pieces and threw it away. Durvāsas took this as an insult to himself and pronounced a curse that all the gods would be subjected to wrinkles and grey hair of old age.

Indra and the other gods fell victims to old age. Indra requested Durvāsas to release him from his curse. The sage relented and told him that if the Devas drank Amṛta obtained by churning the ocean of milk they would recover their youth. Accordingly, the ocean of milk was churned by the joint effort of the Devas and Asuras and in the end the Devas snatched it away. When the Devas drank Amṛta, the symptoms of old age disappeared and they recovered their youth. (Uttara Rāmāyana).

88) Indra and Daṇḍakāraṇya. Daṇḍa the son of Ikṣvāku, a King of the Solar dynasty, ruled over the territory between the Vindhya and the Himālayas. Once when he was out ahunting in the neighbourhood of the mountains, he saw a charming woman. She was "Arā", the daughter of the sage Śukra. The King was fascinated by her beauty and fell desperately in love with her at the very first sight. He seized her by force and committed rape on her. When Śukra knew about this, he was furious and uttered a curse that Indra should shower a rain of fire on Daṇḍa's kingdom. Thus the whole country of Daṇḍa was destroyed by Indra's rain of fire. In course of time that region was turned into a dense forest and came to be called "Daṇḍakāraṇya". (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

89) Other names of Indra. Indra; Marutvān, Maghavān, Biḍaujas, Pākaśāsana, Vṛddhaśravas, Sunāsīra, Puruhūta, Purandara, Jiṣṇu, Lekharṣabha, Śakra, Śatamanyu, Divaspati, Sutrāmā, Gotrabhit, Vajrī, Vāsava, Vṛtrahā, Vṛṣā, Vāstoṣpati, Surapati Valārāti, Śacīpati, Jambhabhedin, Harihaya, Svārāṭ, Namucisūdana, Saṁkrandana, Duścyavana, Turāṣāṭ Meghavāhana, Ākhaṇḍala, Sahasrākṣa, Ṛbhukṣā.

90) Indra's Divinity. In the earliest stage of Hinduism, Indra had occupied one of the most eminent places among the gods. Mahāviṣṇu had only the place of younger brother of Indra at that time. In Amara Kośa we find "Upendra Indrāvaraja" as the synonym of Viṣṇu. In Ṛgveda Indra has a more important place. Although Rudra is a divinity or deity and although there are references to Kapardin, there is not even a single stuti (praise) about Śiva in the Ṛgveda. Ṛgveda does not recognize Devīpūjā and idol worship. But in the Purāṇic age, Indra was transformed into a lascivious "Deva Prabhu" (Lord among the gods). Sardar K.M. Panikkar, in his preface to "Ṛgveda Saṁhitā" says about Indra:— "The main actor in Ṛgveda is Indra. In the war against the Dasyus the Āryas seek the help chiefly of Indra. Indra is represented as very handsome and of a golden complexion. His weapon is Vajra, thunderbolt which was made by Tvaṣṭā. Vāyu (wind) is his charioteer. He is constantly travelling about in the sky driving in his golden chariot. Indra likes drinking Soma juice more than the other gods. Indra is even referred to as "Somapa". He is also sometimes described as the twin brother of Agni. Sages have sung unendingly about the exploits of Indra. Hiraṇyastūpa, a sage, has composed a work entitled "Indrastuti" which celebrates many of the heroic deeds of Indra. Indra was Vajrapāṇi who had slain the Asuras like Ahi, Tuṣṇa, Śaṁbara, Vala, Vṛtra and others.

There are also several stories in the Vedas about the birth of this hero. At the time of Indra's birth, somehow, his mother felt that he was incapable of being killed. So she decided to abandon him. Fearing trouble for herself, she asked the child to leave her and go to some other place. Indra refused to do so and followed her to the house of Tvaṣṭā. There he drank the juice of the soma plant and gained strength to kill his enemies. But unaware of this, his mother, tried to keep him concealed. Indra, however, came out of the place in his dazzling attire and encountered the enemies. Vṛtra who met Indra got ready for a fight. In the fight Vyaṁsa struck down Indra. The devas fled in fear. Indra who was left alone called upon Viṣṇu and sought his aid.

Although Indra needed help in his fight with Vṛtra, he was the chief support to the Ārynas in their fight against theDasyus. It was Indra's Vajra which broke up the fortresses of many Dasyu kings. That was why he got the name "Purandara". Once Indra dried up the whole river to enable his army to cross it for the sake of Sudās. When Suśravas became helpless, Indra destroyed twenty kings and 60099 soldiers with his chariot wheel. Thus we see Indra in the Ṛgveda as the destroyer of the Dasyus and the protector of Āryans."

Indrāṇī, Śacī and Pulomajā are the names of Indra's wife. Indra's son, Jayanta is also known by the name of Pākaśāsani. Indra's city is Amarāvatī ; his chariot "Vimāna", his charioteer Mātali, and his garden Nandanavana. "Vaijayanta" is the name of his mansion. Indra's weapon has several other names, such as, Hrādinī, Kuliśa, Bhidura, Pavi, Śatakoṭi, Svaru, Śāmba, Dambholi, Aśani etc. Indra's assembly is called "Sudharmā". Indra's bow is the rainbow, his sword is Parañjaya and his residence is Heaven. The trees in Heaven are, Mandāra, Pārijāta, Santāna, Kalpavṛkṣa and Haricandana. The festival celebrated in honour of Indra is called "Śakradhvajotthāna" or "Indrotsava".

91) Indra and Uttaṅka. See under Uttaṅka.

92) Indra and Kabandha. See the second para under the name Kabandha.

93) Indra was born as Gādhi. See under Gādhi.

94) Śiva ended Indra's pride. See under Pāṇḍavas.

95) Indra stole the cows. For the story of how Indra stole the cows from Gokula see under Kṛṣṇa.

96) Indra and Mahāśani. Once Mahāśani, the son of Hiraṇya defeated the gods in a battle and took Indra and Indrāṇī to Pātāla as captives. The Devas who knew that Mahāśani was a relative of Varuṇa, sought the help of Varuṇa. At the instance of Varuṇa, Indra was released. The revengeful Indra prayed to Śiva. Śiva appeared and asked Indra to submit his complaint to Viṣṇu. Indra offered his prayers to Viṣṇu. As a result of it, a man who had the elements of Śiva and Viṣṇu, in him, took his birth from the water of the Gaṅgā. He killed Mahāśani. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa).

INDRADAIVATA. A yajña (sacrifice) performed in order to get children. King Yuvanāśva got the yajña conducted. After it was over the King drank water from pots filled by brahmins, and became pregnant. (See Māndhātā). (Devī Bhāgavata, 7th Skandha).

INDRADAMANA. A King who gifted a lot of money to Brahmins. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 234, Verse 18).

INDRADATTA. See 'Vararuci'.

INDRADHVAJA. A flag staff. It is erected in order to get rain. If anybody dreams that it has broken and fallen, it is a bad omen. It means that some disaster will befall the country. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 229).

INDRADVĪPA (INDRA ISLAND). Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva refers to the island as having once been conquered and subjugated by king Sahasrabāhu.

INDRADYUMNA I. A King born in the dynasty of Svāyambhuva Manu, and a king of the Pāṇḍya country.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu in this order :— Viṣṇu — Brahmā — Svāyambhuva Manu — Priyavrata — Agnīdhra — Nābhi — Ṛṣabha — Bharata — Sumati — Indradyumna.

2) Indradyumna turned into elephant. Indradyumna, a devotee of Viṣṇu handed over governance of the country to his children when he became old, and performed penance in the Malaya mountain. One day, when he was immersed in meditation Agastya came there. Naturally, Indradyumna did not notice Agastya's arrival. Enraged at this the latter cursed Indradyumna and turned him into an elephant. Being told immediately about the curse by his servants Indradyumna sought redemption from the curse from Agastya himself. Redemption was granted thus : Indradyumna would roam in the forest for years as an elephant, a devotee of Viṣṇu and he would attain salvation when Lord Viṣṇu came down to the earth and patted the elephant on its back. Accordingly Indradyumna who was turned into an elephant roamed about in the forest for many years in the company of a herd of wild elephants. At last it arrived at Mount Trikūṭa. There was a lake there on the banks of which was sage Devala engaged in penance. Hūhū, the Gandharva had once come to this lake with a number of Apsarā women and they indulged in amorous sports, which Devala did not like. He cursed Hūhū and turned him into a crocodile, and the crocodile lived in the same lake.

Indradyumna who was turned into an elephant, stepped into the lake to drink water when the crocodile caught hold of its hind leg. Neither did the elephant yield nor the crocodile leave the former free. Their tug of war continued for 1000 years when Mahāviṣṇu appeared on the scene, killed the crocodile and saved the elephant. At once the elephant was re-transformed into Indradyumna and he attained Vaikuṇṭha (the abode of Viṣṇu). (Bhāgavata, 8th Skandha).

A Malayalam verse summarises the above story as follows :—Impelled by Agastya's curse the elephant went to the lake at Mount Trikūṭa, and suffered for 1000 years as the crocodile which caught hold of its hind leg did not loosen its grip. Then appeared on the scene the killer of Murāsura (Lord Viṣṇu) on his vehicle, Garuḍa, killed the crocodile with his discus and granted salvation to the elephant.

3) Indradyumna's fall from heaven when the merits of his good deeds were exhausted. The merits or the result of his good and noble deeds having been exhausted, Indradyumna, the saintly king once descended from heaven to earth, and the sad King approached sage Mārkaṇḍeya. But, the sage did not recognize him. The King and the sage went to Prāvīrakarṇa, an owl living on the top of the Himālayas. It also did not recognise the King. Then they went to Nāḍījaṁgha, a stork very much older than the owl and living in the lake known as Indradyumna. Nāḍījaṁgha also could not recognise the King. In another part of the lake was living a tortoise called Akūpāra, who was older than Nāḍījaṁgha. At last the King, the sage, Prāvīrakarṇa and Nāḍījaṁgha approached Akūpāra. At his very sight Akūpāra recognized the King. Akūpāra told sage Mārkaṇḍeya that Indradyumna was a very famous King and quite liberal and munificent in distributing gifts, and that the lake Indradyumna was formed by the passage of the cows gifted by the King. Having heard these details regarding the King the sage sent him back to heaven. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 199).

INDRADYUMNA II. Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 32 refers to a certain King Indradyumna, a contemporary of Śrī Kṛṣṇa ; Kṛṣṇa killed him.

INDRADYUMNA III. A sage Indradyumna is mentioned in the list of Saints who paid their homage to Dharmaputra during his forest life. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 22).

INDRADYUMNA IV. Name of King Janaka's father.

INDRADYUMNA V. A king of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. (See Para 2, under Viśvakarman).

INDRADYUMNA VI. A king who lived in the Kṛta yuga, and a devotee of Viṣṇu. He visited the Jagannātha temple in Oḍra Deśa once to worship Lord Jagannātha. The Lord was then hidden in the sand. When the King, disappointed at this was about to return, determined to fast unto death at Mount Nīla when a celestial voice cried, "Thou shalt see Him". Afterwards the King performed a horse sacrifice and built a magnificent Viṣṇu temple. Narasiṁhamūrti brought by Nārada was installed in the temple. During sleep the King had a darśana (sight) of Lord Jagannātha. Also an astral voice directed him to cut down the fragrant tree on the seashore and make idols with it. Accordingly the king got idols of Viṣṇu, Balarāma, Sudarśana and Subhadrā made and installed them in the temple. (Skanda Purāṇa).

INDRADYUMNA(M). A lake. A stork called Nāḍījaṁgha and the Ādikūrma called Akūpāra lived in this lake. It came into existence when the cows given in gift by King Indradyumna passed along that way. (M.B. Araṇya Parva, Chapter 198). The pool lay near Mount Gandhamādana, and the Pāṇḍavas once visited it. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 118, Verse 18).

INDRAJIT. Rāvaṇa's son, Meghanāda.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu thus:—Viṣṇu,—Brahmā—Pulastya—Viśravas — Rāvaṇa — Meghanāda (Indrajit).

To Pulastya, one of the Prajāpatis was born by Mālinī, Viśravas. Viśravas had two wives, Devavarṇinī, also called Ilibilā and Kaikasī. Vaiśravaṇa or Kubera was his son by Ilibilā and Rāvaṇa, Kumbhakarṇa, Vibhīṣaṇa and Śūrpaṇakhā (daughter) being the offsprings of Kaikasī. Rāvaṇa married Mandodarī and three sons, Meghanāda, Atikāya and Akṣakumāra were born to them. Meghanāda came to be known as Indrajit also, because he had defeated Indra once.

2) Son of Śiva. Though it was Mandodarī, Rāvaṇa's wife, who gave birth to Meghanāda (Indrajit) the Uttararāmāyaṇa refers to him as the son of Śiva in a story as follows:—

Once, after religious fasting and other rites on a Monday (to propitiate the Sun-God) Madhurā, an Apsarā woman, adorned with all kinds of ornaments went to Mount Kailāsa to offer salutations to Lord Śiva. Pārvatī, Śiva's consort was not present then, and Madhurā used the opportunity to please the Lord, and she got pregnant by him. All on a sudden Pārvatī appeared on the scene, and knowing what had happened in her absence she cursed Madhurā to fall into an abandoned well as a frog. Madhurā prayed for redemption from the curse, and Śiva pitying her sad plight blessed her that after 12 years she would get herself transformed into a fair damsel and become the daughter of Maya and would, then, be married by a great King. According to Pārvatī's curse Madhurā fell into a well in the forest as a frog. Mayāsura was performing penance near the well to get a daughter. On the expiry of 12 years after Madhurā fell into the well as a frog, Mayāsura looked into it and beheld a beautiful girl. He took her to his palace named her Mandodarī and brought her up as his own daughter. Rāvaṇa married her. It was at this stage that Śiva's vital fluid which had, twelve years before, entered her womb made its appearance in the form of a son. Rāvaṇa named him Meghanāda. Being Śiva's son he grew up with great prowess. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

3) Meghanāda's yajñas. When once Rāvaṇa was away from Laṅkā on a conquest of the world, Meghanāda went to Nikumbhilā, the central place for conducting yajñas, and performed seven yajñas with sage Śukra as the chief priest. By the time all the seven yajñas, viz. Agniṣṭoma, Aśvamedha, Bahusvarṇa, Vaiṣṇava, Māheśvara, Rājasūya and Gosava were over, Rāvaṇa returned to Laṅkā and sage Śukra gave him details about the yajñas conducted by his son Meghanāda. Rāvaṇa did not like the Vaiṣṇava yāga performed by his son, and Śukra, who got angry at this cursed, Rāvaṇa that he would meet with his death at the hands of Viṣṇu. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

By performing a Śaiva yāga, Meghanāda got the blessings of Śiva, who taught him (Meghanāda) the great art of Samādhi, which helped one to move amongst others invisible to them.

4) The name, Indrajit. Once Rāvaṇa encircled Indraloka with a big army, and Indra, very much alarmed ran up to Viṣṇu for protection. Viṣṇu told Indra that it was not yet time for Rāvaṇa's death and when it was time Viṣṇu himself would slay him. Disappointed at this Indra returned, and a fierce war ensued between him and Rāvaṇa. Indra fought with Rāvaṇa, and Jayanta, his son fought with Meghanāda. When fighting reached its climax Meghanāda resorted to the art of Samādhi taught by Śiva, and became invisible to others. Then he showered his arrows. Jayanta fainted on the battlefield. Pulomā, father of Indrāṇī, carried away Jayanta without others knowing and concealed him in the ocean. Everyone thought that Jayanta was dead. Burning with grief and revenge Indra confronted Rāvaṇa again. Rāvaṇa fell down at the blow with Indra's vajra (thunderbolt). Then once more making himself invisible to others, Meghanāda jumped into Indra's chariot and bound him prisoner. By that time Rāvaṇa got up on his feet, and he and Meghanāda carried away Indra to Laṅkā and chained him to the foot of the flagstaff.

The Devas, grief-stricken at this sad fate of Indra went to Brahmā and submitted their grievance. Brahmā reached Laṅkā, and named Meghanāda Indrajit. (He who gained victory over Indra). Indrajit prayed to Brahmā for the boon, which would, ward off death for ever. When Brahmā told him that the boon of eternal deathlessness was out of the question he sought the following boon : that when he had performed a yajña, out of the sacrificial fire should emerge a chariot and necessary horses and that he should not be killed by any one while fighting from that chariot, and that he did not mind being killed by enemies if he got away without completing the yajña. Brahmā granted him the boon. And, as directed by Brahmā Rāvaṇa released Indra from imprisonment after one year. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

5) Indrajit and Hanūmān. A clash occurred between Indrajit and Hanūmān, who landed in Laṅkā in search of Sītā, and the former got Hanūmān bound by Brahmāstra. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

6) Death of Indrajit. At the height of the fierce war between Rāma and Rāvaṇa, Indrajit and Lakṣmaṇa clashed with each other. Finding victory impossible Indrajit created a fake Sītā and killed her. Thinking that Sītā was dead, grief-stricken Hanūmān, Lakṣmaṇa and the regiment of monkeys withdrew from the fight. Informed of Sītā's death Rāma fainted.

Indrajit began the yajña for victory over Rāma at the place called Nikumbhilā. Vibhīṣaṇa told Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa about the warning of Brahmā that Indrajit would be killed if the yajña was obstructed. Happy at the information Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa immediately went to Nikumbhilā to fight with Indrajit who was engaged in performing the yajña, and without completing the yajña he came out and began fighting, and Lakṣmaṇa killed him. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa, Chapters 82-91).

INDRAKĪLA. A mountain in front of the Himālaya and Gandhamādana mountains. The presiding deity of this mountain is a devotee of Kubera. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 37).

INDRALOKĀBHIGAMANA PARVA. A sub Parva in Mahābhārata.

INDRAMĀRGA. An ancient sacred place (bathing ghaṭ) Those who take a dip in the holy waters there will attain heaven. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 9).

INDRĀṆĪ. Wife of Indra (Śacī).

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu thus : Viṣṇu—Brahmā — Kaśyapa —Pulomā—Śacī (Indrāṇī). Pulomā was an asura born to Kaśyapa by his wife Danu. Indra married Śacī, the daughter of Pulomā, and hence Śacī is called Indrāṇī also. She is called Paulomī also as she was the daughter of Pulomā.

2) Indrāṇī and Śūrapadma. An Asura called Śūrapadma once coveted Indrāṇī. He deputed his men to fetch Śacī somehow or other to him. Hearing about this, Indra, keeping Indrāṇī with him, went to and stayed in the Chīyāli temple in Koṅkaṇadeśa, and afterwards Indra went to Mount Kailāsa after asking Śāstā to guard Indrāṇī. During Indra's absence Ajāmukhī, sister of Śūrapadma met Indrāṇī and induced her to become Śūrapadma's wife. Indrāṇī refused. Ultimately Indra returned and took Indrāṇī back to Devaloka.

3) Indrāṇī and Nahuṣa. See under Agastya.

4) Indrāṇī and Pāñcālī. Mahābhārata says that Pāñcālī was a partial incarnation of Indrāṇī. (See under Pāñcālī). A part of Śacī was born in the family of Drupada as Draupadī, viz. Pāñcālī. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67).

(1) Indrāṇī once went to the assembly of Brahmā and worshipped him. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 42).

(2) When once Satyabhāmā came to Devaloka with Śrī Kṛṣṇa, Indrāṇī conducted her to Aditi, mother of the Devas. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 36).

(3) Śacī also was present at the birth of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 13).

(4) Indrāṇī and Arjuna. (See under Arjuna).

INDRAPARVATA. A mountain in Videha. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 15).

INDRAPRAMATI. A disciple of Paila. He belonged to the line of Vyāsa's disciples. For other details see under Vyāsa.

INDRAPRASTHA. Capital city of the Pāṇḍavas. It is the same as Delhi, the capital of modern India.

1) Construction. As ordained by Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Dharmaputra, claimant to half of the kingdom, went to the forest Khāṇḍavaprastha with his brothers. Śrī Kṛṣṇa stood by them ; great sages like Vyāsa helped them. There, in the forest, they built a city called Indraprastha as beautiful as Indraloka. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 211).

2) Reconstruction. Once Agni burned down the Khāṇḍava forest. (See under Khāṇḍavadāha). Arjuna saved Maya and five others from the fire. Maya asked Arjuna what he should do in return for saving his life. Arjuna replied that it was not proper to expect any reward for saving one's life and that, if Maya was very keen about doing something in return, it might be done for Kṛṣṇa. Then Kṛṣṇa asked Maya to build for the Pāṇḍavas a palace, the most beautiful one in the world at Indraprastha. And, accordingly, after getting the Brahmins duly feasted, Maya marked the ground ten thousand Kiṣkus[1] in extent. Then Maya went to the mountain Maināka to the west of Mount Kailāsa, where in the pool called Bindu he had stored a large quantity of gold and gems. Maya brought those materials as also a conch called Devadatta from there and built the most beautiful palace in the world at Indraprastha. Within the palace were made many a beautiful pool and various patterns with galleries etc. in glass. It was built so beautifully and in such a manner as to create, at the very sight, the illusion that there was water where there was really no water and vice versa. It took fourteen months to complete the construction of that most beautiful model of architecture. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapters 1-3).

3) Vajra, son of Aniruddha of the Yādava dynasty was made master of Indraprastha after the time of the Pāṇḍavas. (M.B. Mausala Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 11).

INDRAPŪJĀ. This pūjā (Indra-worship) is also called Indrotsava. It was during the reign of Vasu, a king of the lunar dynasty that Indrotsava began being celebrated in an organised manner. Pleased at the long penance of Vasu, Indra appeared to him and presented a Veṇudaṇḍa. Vasu planted the daṇḍa on earth and conducted Indrapūjā. Thenceforward raising the Veṇudaṇḍa became the first item in celebrating Indrotsava. The staff is decorated with flowers, sandal, garlands etc. To the top of the staff is attached the form of a Haṁsa and offerings are given to it. The reason for this is the fact that it was in the form of a Haṁsa that Indra appeared to Vasu. Pleased by the Indrapūjā of Vasu, Indra announced as follows :—If men, and especially kings worship me in the manner done by Vasu, prosperity and welfare will accrue to them and to their kingdoms. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 63).

INDRASENA I. A son of King Nala. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 60, Verse 23). Nala had also a daughter called Indrasenā.

INDRASENA II. Son of King Parīkṣit. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 55).

INDRASENA III. Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 33. Verse 30 refers to one Indrasena, charioteer of the Pāṇḍavas. He accompanied the Pāṇḍavas in their forest life. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 11).
When the Pāṇḍavas arrived at Mount Gandhamādana they left Indrasena with Subāhu, the Pulinda King. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 140, Verse 27). After some time the Pāṇḍavas sent him to Dvārakā. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 58). Indrasena was present at the wedding of Abhimanyu which was celebrated in the city of Upaplavya. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 72, Verse 23).

INDRASENA IV. A King who fought on the side of the Kauravas. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 156, Verse 122).

INDRASENĀ I. Name of Pāñcālī in her former birth. (See under Pāñcālī).

INDRASENĀ II. Daughter of King Nala.

INDRASENĀ III. Nālāyanī, a princess of Aṅga. She was married by the sage Ṛṣyaśṛṅga. (See under Ṛṣyaśṛṅga). (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 113, Verse 11). Indrasenā served her husband for 100 years. M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 21, Verse 11).

INDRATĀPA. An Asura, who was a devotee of Varuṇa. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 15).

INDRATĪRTHA. A sacred place on the banks of the river Sarasvatī. It was here that Indra performed 100 yajñas. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 48, Verse 49).

INDRATOYĀ. A river near Mount Gandhamādana. Bathing in the river and staying there for three nights is tantamount to performing the horse sacrifice. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 11).

INDRAVĀHANA. King Kakutstha of the Ikṣvāku dynasty made Indra his vehicle in the form of an ox and fought the Asuras thus. Hence the name Indravāhana. (See under Kakutstha).

INDRAVARMAN. A King of Mālava, he fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas, and got killed by an elephant called Aśvatthāmā. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 190, Verse 15).

INDROTA (INDRODA). A sage, son of Śuka, the great sage, and also called Śaunaka. Janamejaya, son of King Parīkṣit once killed a brahmin, and at once Brahmahatyā (sin of having killed a brahmin) seized the King. The King lost all mental peace at this and sought the advice of many sages for redemption from the sin, and Indrota (Śaunaka) advised him to go on a pilgrimage and perform righteous duties (dharma). The King acted accordingly and got rid of the sin of killing the brahmin. This story occurs under the title Indrotapārikṣitīyam in Śānti Parva in three chapters. (Chapters 150-152).

INDROTSAVA. See under Indrapūjā.

INDUPRABHĀ. See under Malayaprabhā.

INDUMATĪ I. Daughter of Candrasena, King of Siṁhala and his queen, Guṇavatī. (See under Candrasenā).

INDUMATĪ II. Mother of Nahuṣa. (See under Nahuṣa).

INDUMATĪ III. Wife of Raghu.

IRĀ I. One of the wives of Kaśyapa. Aditi, Diti, Danu, Ariṣṭā, Surasā, Khaśā, Surabhi, Vinatā, Tāmrā, Krodhavaśā, Irā, Kadrū and Muni were the wives of Kaśyapa. Grass on earth originated from Irā. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 19).

IRĀ II. There was a devī called Irā among the attendants of Kubera. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 11).

IRĀMĀ. A river. Sage Mārkaṇḍeya is reported to have once seen this river in the stomach of child Kṛṣṇa. (Vana Parva, Chapter 188, Verse 104. Also see under Mārkaṇḍeya).

IRĀVĀN. A son born to Arjuna of the serpent damsel (Nāgakanyā) named Ulūpī. (For genealogy see under Arjuna).

1) Birth. According to the practice laid down Pāñcālī used to live with each husband for one year by turn. When she was living with one husband the other four husbands had no admission there. When once Arjuna wanted his arms to redeem the cows of a brahmin stolen by thieves he entered the apartment of Dharmaputra where the arms had been kept and took them. For thus having entered, against rules, the apartment then kept by Dharmaputra and Pāñcālī, Arjuna had to go on a pilgrimage for one year. Numerous brahmins accompanied Arjuna and while spending the night on the banks of the Gaṅgā, Arjuna entered its waters for bathing. There he saw the Nāga damsel, Ulūpī. They fell in love with each other and got married. And, a son named Irāvān was born to them. Ulūpī granted Arjuna the boon that all water-animals would obey him and that in water he would be invincible. Leaving Ulūpī and Irāvān behind, Arjuna continued his stay in the forest.

2) Further Information. (1) In the great war Irāvān fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas. During the first day's fighting Irāvān and Śrutāyu fought a duel. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Verses 69-71).

(2) Irāvān defeated Vinda and Anuvinda in fight. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 83, Verses 18-22).

(3) Irāvān killed five brothers of Śakuni. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 90, Verses 27-46).

(4) Irāvān fought against Alambuṣa and was killed by the latter. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 90, Verses 56-76).

IRĀVATĪ I. Grand daughter of Kaśyapa. Ten daughters were born to Kaśyapa by his wife Krodhavaśā, viz. Mṛgī, Mṛgamandā, Harī, Bhadramatā, Mātaṁgī, Śārdūlī, Śvetā, Surabhi and Kadrū, and Irāvatī was Kadrū's daughter. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇya Kāṇḍa).

IRĀVATĪ II. A sacred river. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 146, Verse 18).

ĪRJIKA. A locality. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 52).

ĪRI. There are hundred Kings in the palace of Yama worshipping him, and they are called the Īris. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 23).

IRIMPU. A Malayalam word meaning 'iron'. The metal iron originated in the following way. The Devas sought Brahmā's protection against the onslaughts of Tārakāsura, who had obtained a boon to the effect that he could be killed only by a son born to Śiva. And, implored by Brahmā and others Śiva entered into the sex act with Pārvatī. The impact shook the universe. Agni separated them from the process and the semen of Śiva dropped in Agni. Agni deposited it in the Gaṅgā. The Gaṅgā could not bear it and it coursed through her (Gaṅgā's) arteries and out of it was born Subrahmaṇya. Also from the particles of the semen gold and silver were produced. From the intensity of the heat were produced iron and copper. See under Subrahmaṇya. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Canto 37).

ĪŚA. A Viśvadeva. (Universal deva). (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 31).

ĪŚĀNA (ŚIVA). Īśāna, with matted hair rides on the ox. See under Śiva. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 51).

ĪŚĀNĀDHYUṢITA TĪRTHA. An ancient tīrtha. Tasting the water of this tīrtha will give all the benefits of the horse sacrifice. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verses 8, 9).

IṢṬARAŚMI. A King mentioned in the Ṛgveda. He performed many yajñas. (Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 13, Sūkta 123).

IṢṬĀŚVA. A King mentioned in the Ṛgveda. He performed many yajñas. (Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 19, Sūkta 124).

IṢUPĀDA. An Asura born to Kaśyapa and his wife, Danu. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 25). This Iṣupāda was reborn in his next life as the very heroic and powerful King Nagnajit. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verses 20, 21).

ĪŚVARA. Once Devī told Himavān who, according to the Hindu religion, God is, and how creation takes place from Īśvara (God). The famous discussion about Godhood, called Devīgītā is quoted hereunder.

(1) Ahamevāsa pūrvaṁ tu nānyad kiṁcit nagādhipa /
Tadātmarūpaṁ cit saṁvit
Parabrahmaikanāmakam. //

(Before the creation of the universe commenced, I alone was ; there was nothing else. Then I was called Parabrahman, Citsvarūpī, Saṁvitsvarūpī and Ātmarūpī).

(2) Apratarkyamanirdeśya-manaupamyamanāmayam /
Tasya kācit svataḥ siddhā
śaktirmāyeti viśrutā //

(That form is beyond discussion (Apratarkyam); beyond description (Anirdeśyam); incapable of being compared (Anaupamyam); beyond birth, death youth, old age etc. (Anāmayam). In this form of mine resides māyāśakti.

(3) Na satī śā nāsatī sānobhayātmā virodhataḥ / Etadvilakṣaṇā kācid-vastubhūtāsti sarvadā //

(That māyāśakti cannot be said to be existing or not existing. Thus it is neither existing nor not existing. The statement existing and not existing is subject to the error, paradox. That great force exists always in me with the pair of aspects.

(4) Pāvakasyoṣṇateveya-muṣṇāṁśoriva dīdhitiḥ /
Candrasya candrikeveyaṁ
Mameyaṁ sahajā dhruvā //

(Fire does not exist without heat, nor Sun without light nor Moon without its rays. Just like this, that māyāśakti is coeval with me. It is permanent.

(5) Tasyāṁ karmāṇi jivānāṁ
Jīvāḥ Kālāśca sañcare /
Abhedena vilīnāḥ syuḥ
Suṣuptau vyavahāravat //

(Just as all actions, feelings and even the sense of time remain latent in deep sleep, even so all the actions and emotions of all living beings lie absorbed in Māyā).

(6) Svaśakteśca samāyogādahaṁ bījātmatāṁ gatā / Svādhārāvaraṇāttasya-doṣatvaṁ ca samāgatam //

(I am myself the source of this Māyā; but it has a strange power called āvaraṇa which hides my real nature).

(7) Caitanyasya samāyogād nimittatvaṁ ca kathyate /
Prapañcapariṇāmācca
Samavāyitvamucyate //

(Being joined to Caitanya (Brahman) Māyā becomes the material as well as the immediate cause of the universe (Prapañca).

(8) Kecittām tapa ityāhustamaḥ kecijjaḍāṁ pare /
Jñānaṁ māyāṁ pradhānaṁ ca
prakṛtiṁ śaktimapyajām //

(This māyā is referred to differently by different people as tapas, tamas, jaḍa, jñāna, māyā, pradhāna, prakṛti and ajā.).

(9) Vimarśa iti tāṁ prāhuḥ Śaivaśāstraviśāradāḥ / avidyāmitare prāhur-
vedatatvārthacintakāḥ //

(Experts in Śaiva philosophical thought refer to this māyā as vimarśa and Vedic seers call it avidyā).

(10) Evam nānāvidhāni syuḥ nāmāni nigamādiṣu / tasyāḥ jaḍatvaṁ dṛśyatvāt
jñānanāśāttatossatī //

(Thus Vedas refer to māyā by various names. Because of visibility māyā is called jaḍa, and because it is destructive of true knowledge it is called asat).

(11) Caitanyasya na dṛśyatvaṁ dṛśyatve jaḍameva tat / svaprakāśaṁ ca caitanyaṁ
na pareṇa prakāśitam //

(Caitanya (Effulgence) is not visible. What is seen is jaḍa (material expression). Caitanya is self-illuminating; it is not illuminated by something else).

(12) Anavasthādoṣasatvānna svenāpi prakāśitam / Karmakartṛvirodhaḥ syāt-tasmāttaddīpavat svayam //

(13) Prakāśamānamanyeṣāṁ Bhāsakaṁ viddhi parvata /
ata eva ca nityatvaṁ
Siddhaṁ samvittanormama //

(If caitanya is not self-illuminating then it is subject to the drawback of Anavasthādoṣa (Absence of finality). If Caitanya does not possess the quality of light and illumination there should necessarily be something else, which illuminates it, and there should again be something to illuminate that which illuminates Caitanya. And, it continues ad infinitum. This state of no conclusion is called anavasthā doṣa. Also one thing cannot be, at the same time, the subject (actor) and the object of action, and that invites the draw-back of paradox. Therefore, O King of mountains! understand that Caitanya is self-illuminating and it illuminates other things by its own illumination. And this, therefore, proves that my Caitanya is eternal).

(14) Jāgratsvapnasuṣuptyādau dṛśyasya vyabhicārataḥ / saṁvido vyabhicāraśca
nānubhūtosti karhicit //

(All visible things go on changing in the three states of awaking, dream and deep sleep. But like visible things Caitanya is not subject to change, and does not experience the three states).

(15) Yadi tasyāpyanubhāvastarhyayaṁ yena sākṣiṇā / anubhūtaḥ sa evātra
śiṣṭaḥ saṁvidvapuḥ purā //

(If it is argued that it (Caitanya) experiences the three states then there must be something else as 'witness' for the experience. But, since it is established as self-illuminating there cannot be something else as 'witness'.

(16) Ata eva ca nityatvaṁ proktaṁ sacchāstrakovidaiḥ / ānandarūpatā cāsyāḥ
parapremāspadatvataḥ //

(Because of the above reasons experts in the science of philosophy hold that this Caitanya is eternal, and that, since it is the basis of bhakti which assumes the form of absolute love, it is ānandarūpa).

(17) Mā na bhūvaṁ hi bhūyāsamiti premātmani sthitaṁ / sarvasyānyasya mithyātvā-dasaṁgatvaṁ sphuṭaṁ mama //

(No living souls think 'I am not'. Every body cherishes always his self-importance, the 'I'. It is present there in every living soul in the form of love. This fact itself proves that I am different from all material objects).

(18) Aparicchinnatāpyeva-mata eva matā mama / tacca jñānaṁ nātmadharmo
dharmatve jaḍatātmanaḥ //

(That I am indivisible is quite definite. Knowledge is not an attribute of the soul (ātman) but is the very form of the soul itself. If knowledge were only an attribute of the soul it (soul) should have been material (jaḍa) and it is quite a certitude that the soul is not material, because knowledge is the very nature of the soul).

(19) Jñānasya jaḍaśeṣatvaṁ na dṛṣṭaṁ na ca saṁbhavi /
Ciddharmatvaṁ tathā nāsti
Ciraścid nahi bhidyate //

(The soul is pure knowledge without any touch of the jaḍa. It is also pure existence. It is one and indivisible).

(20) Tasmādātmā jñānarūpaḥ sukharūpaśca sarvadā / satyaḥ pūrṇopyasaṁgaśca
dvaitajālavivarjitaḥ //

(The ātman (soul) is therefore jñānarūpa (of the nature of pure knowledge), Sukharūpa (of the nature of pure joy) and satyarūpa (of the nature of absolute truth). It is unattached to anything and free from duality).

(21) Sa punaḥ kāmakarmādiyuktayā svīyamāyayā / pūrvānubhūtasaṁskārāt kālakarmavipākataḥ //

(22) Avivekācca tattvasya sisṛkṣāvān prajāyate / abuddhipūrvaḥ sargosyaṁ
kathitaste nagādhipa //

(23) Etaddhi yanmayā proktaṁ mama rūpamalaukikam / avyākṛtaṁ tadavyaktaṁ
māyāśabalamityapi //

(24) Procyate sarvaśāstreṣu sarvakāraṇakāraṇam tattvānāmādibhūtaṁ ca
saccidānandavigraham //

(25) Sarvakarmaghanībhūtamicchājñānakriyāśrayam / hrīṁkāramantravācyaṁ ta-
dādi tatvaṁ taducyate //

(Impelled by the Vāsanās of previous actions the Māyāśakti proceeds to create the world, beginning with the 24 tattvas. My form which is immaterial and unmanifested is praised by all śāstras to be the cause of all causes and the basis of all tattvas. It is also the basis of all knowledge, action and volition and realizable only through the hrīṁkāra mantra).

(26) Tasmādākāśa utpannaḥ śabdatanmātrarūpakaḥ / bhavet sparśātmako vāyus-tejorūpātmakaṁ punaḥ //
(27) Jalaṁ rasātmakaṁ paścāt—tato gandhātmikā dharā / śabdaikaguṇa ākāśo
vāyussparśaravānvitaḥ
(28) Śabdasparśarūpaguṇaṁ teja ityucyate budhaiḥ / śabdasparśarūparasairāpo vedaguṇāḥ smṛtāḥ //
(29) Śabdasparśarūparasagandhaiḥ pañcaguṇā dharā / tebhyobhavan mahatsūtraṁ
yalliṁgaṁ paricakṣate //
(30) Sarvātmakaṁ tat saṁproktaṁ sūkṣmadehoऽyamātmanaḥ / avyaktaṁ kāraṇo dehaḥ
sa coktaḥ pūrvameva hi //

(From this primordial principle the five elements (pañcabhūtas) were born. The first of these is ether which is the element of sound because sound travels through ether (śabda-tanmātra-rūpa). Then air (vāyu) gave rise to the sense of touch and so air is called sparśarūpa. This vāyu again gave rise to Agni (Vāyoragniḥ). Then came water which corresponds to the sense of taste (rasarūpa). From water came earth which is gandharūpa (the source of smell) (Udakādbhūmiḥ). Ākāśa (ether) has only one guṇa, namely sound. Vāyu (air) has two guṇas—Sabda and Sparśa (Sound and touch). Agni has three guṇas:—rūpa, śabda and sparśa. Jalaṁ (water) has four guṇas—śabda, sparśa, rūpa, and rasa. The last element—earth—has five guṇas—śabda, sparśa, rūpa, rasa and gandha. From these five tanmātrās is born the liṅga-śarīra or sūkṣma-śarīra).

(31) Yasmin jagadbījarūpaṁ sthitaṁ liṅgodbhavo yataḥ / tataḥ sthūlāni bhūtāni pañcīkaraṇamārgataḥ //
(32) Pañcasaṁkhyāni jāyante tatprakārastvathocyate / pūrvoktāni ca bhūtāni
pratyekaṁ vibhajeddvidhā //

(The jagat (universe) remained in embryo form (bījarūpa) in these pañcatanmātrās. Then by the process of Pañcīkaraṇa all the gross material objects were created. These pañcabhūtas were first divided into two (each was divided into two). Then by a process of the combination of these ten parts different substances were born as detailed in the following stanzas.

(33) Ekaikaṁ bhāgamekasya caturdhā vibhajed gire / svasvetaradvitīyāṁśe
yojanāt pañca pañca te //

(Each half of each of these five bhūtas is again subdivided into four parts. These 1/8 parts are joined to the other halves and by combining them in other fractions the material bodies (sthūlaśarīras) of all beings are made).

(34) Tatkāryaṁ ca virāṭ dehaḥ sthūladeho yamātmanaḥ / pañcabhūtasthasatvāṁśaiḥ
śrotrādīnāṁ samudbhavaḥ //

Virāṭdeha (Cosmic body) is the sum total of these individual material bodies. The inner conscience and bodily organs like ear etc. originate from the gentle and pure aspects of the five elements.

(35) Jnānendriyāṇām rājendra !
pratyekaṁ militaistu taiḥ / antaḥkaraṇamekaṁ syād
vṛttibhedāccaturvidham //
(36) Yadā tu saṁkalpavikalpakṛtyaṁ tadābhavettanmana ityabhikhyam / syād buddhisaṁjñaṁ ca yadā pravetti suniścitaṁ saṁśayahīnarūpam // (37) Anusandhānarūpaṁ taccittaṁ ca parikīrtitam / ahaṁ kṛtyātmavṛttyā tu
tadahaṁkāratāṁ gatam

(Antaḥkaraṇa, due to differences in state assumes four forms. When once conception and doubt arise in a subject, then it is called mind. When there is no doubt, but there is assuredness it is called understanding (buddhi). The function of examining a subject again and over again belongs to citta. To think of 'I' is egoism or ahaṁkāra).

(38) Teṣāṁ rajoṁśairjātāni Kramāt karmendriyāṇi ca / pratyekaṁ militaistaistu
prāṇo bhavati pañcadhā //
(39) Hṛdi prāṇo gudeऽpāno nābhisthastu samānakaḥ / kaṇṭhadeśepyudānassyād-
vyānaḥ sarvaśarīragaḥ //

(From the coarse (rājasic) aspects of the five sense-organs originate the five organs of action like word, foot, hand, excretory and the genital organ, and also the five prāṇas (breaths) called prāṇa, apāna, samāna, udāna and vyāṇa. Prāṇa is located in the heart, apāna in the anus, samāna in the nābhi (navel) udāna in the throat and vyāna all over the body).

(40) Jñānendriyāṇi pañcaiva pañcakarmendriyāṇi ca / prāṇādi pañcakaṁ caiva
dhiyā ca sahitam manaḥ //
(41) Etat sūkṣmaśarīraṁ syān mama liṅgaṁ yaducyate /
Tatra yā prakrtiḥ proktā
sā rājan dvividhā smṛtā //

(Organs of knowlege 5, of actions 5, and prāṇas 5, and buddhi 1, mind 1, the body is composed of these 17 factors). This forms the Sūkṣmaśarīra whose prakṛti is two-fold (as mentioned below).

(42) Satvātmikā tu māyā syādavidyā guṇamiśritā / svāśrayaṁ yā tu saṁrakṣet
sā māyeti nigadyate //

One is pure māyā and the other is avidyā possessing properties).

(43) Tasyāṁ yat pratibiṁbaṁsyād-bimbabhūtasya ceśituḥ sa Īśvaraḥ samākhyātaḥ svāśrayajñānavān paraḥ //
(44) Sarvajñaḥ sarvakartā ca sarvānugrahakārakaḥ / avidyāyāṁ tu yat kiṁcit
pratibiṁbaṁ nagādhipa //

(Brahmacaitanya reflected in this māyā is Īśvara (God). That Īśvara is the same as the ātman (soul), brahman absolute, creator of everything, omniscient, and the cause of all blessings. The soul reflects to a small extent in avidyā also).

(45) Tadeva jīvasaṁjñaṁ syāt sarvaduḥkhāśrayaṁ punaḥ / dvayorapīha saṁproktaṁ
dehatrayamavidyayā //

(This jīva is the receptacle of all sorrows. Due to vidyā and avidyā both get three kinds of bodies).

(46) Dehatrayābhimānāccāpyabhūnnāmatrayaṁ punaḥ / prājñastu kāraṇātmā syāt
sūkṣmadehī tu taijasaḥ //

(47) Sthūladehī tu viśvākhya-strividhaḥ parikīrtitaḥ / evamīśopi samprokto
jīvasūtravirāṭpadaiḥ //

(48) Prathamo vyaṣṭirūpastu samaṣṭyātmā paraḥ smṛtaḥ / sa hi sarveśvaraḥ sākṣāt jīvānugrahakāmyayā //

(49) Karoti vividhaṁ viśvaṁ nānābhogāśrayaṁ punaḥ / macchaktiprerito nityaṁ
mayi rājan prakalpitaḥ. //

He who is attached and is proud about the material body is called Viśva; he who attaches importance to the subtle body is called Taijasa, and he who is aware of the causal body is called Prājña. The jīva is Vyaṣṭisvarūpa (has individuality) but Īśvara is Samaṣṭyātmaka (embraces all the jīvas). Īśvara works impelled by my power).

ĪYAM. Īyaṁ in Malayalam means the metal lead. A metal formed out of the dirt in river Gaṅgā. (See Irimpu).

J

J (ज). This letter means jaya (victory). (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).

JĀBĀLĀ. The mother of the hermit Satyakāma. (For details see under Satyakāma).

JĀBĀLI I. A famous hermit. In Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 55, it is stated that Jābāli was one of the sons of Viśvāmitra. They were expounders of the Vedas. Though he was the son of Viśvāmitra his life was mostly connected with Vasiṣṭha. The Purāṇas do not make it clear how this son of Viśvāmitra happened to fall into the circle of Vasiṣṭha who was a foe of Viśvāmitra. He was one of the seven spiritual advisers of King Daśaratha. It is mentioned in Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Sarga 48 that eight hermits such as Suyajña, Vāmadeva, Jābāli, Kaśyapa Vasiṣṭha and others lived in Ayodhyā in the palace of the King Daśaratha.

When Bharata went to the forest, to bring Śrī Rāma back to Ayodhyā, Jābāli also followed him. Jābāli argued with Śrī Rāma, using several arguments, to make him return to Ayodhyā. These arguments made Śrī Rāma angry. But he was pacified by the consoling words of Vasiṣṭha. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Ayodhyā Kāṇḍa).

Jābāli comes in the line of disciples of Vyāsa. Vyāsa divided the Veda and taught Sumantu Atharvaveda. The hermit Sumantu first taught Atharvaveda to his disciple Kabandha who divided it into two parts and taught two disciples Devadarśa, and Pathya. The disciples of Devadarśa were Magadha, Brahmabali, Sautkāyani and Pippalāda. Pathya had three disciples. They were Jābāli, Kumuda and Śaunaka. Of these Jābāli was a famous expounder of Atharvaveda. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 3).

JĀBĀLI II. Son of Ṛtadhvaja, a hermit. (See under Viśvakarmā, Para 2).

JĀBĀLI III. A hermit. The descendants of this hermit also are known by this name. Jābāli who performed penance on the mountain of Mandara had several disciples.

While Jābāli was going along the forest he saw a young man of handsome appearance engaged in penance on the shore of a lake. Jābāli wanted to know about him and his penance. But as the young man was in deep meditation Jābāli had to wait there for several years. At last the young man awoke from his meditation and told Jābāli the secrets of devotional meditation and contemplation of Kṛṣṇa. The remaining life of Jābāli was spent in the worship of Kṛṣṇa, in consequence of which in the next birth he was reborn as a cowherdess, named Citragandhā in the house of the cowherd Pracaṇḍa. (Padma Purāṇa, Pātāla Khaṇḍa, Chapters 30, 72 and 109).

JĀBĀLI IV. A hermit. The intensive penance of this hermit compelled Indra to depute the celestial maid Rambhā to hinder it. Jābāli became a prey to the enticement of this heavenly beauty and a daughter was born to them. This damsel was carried away by the King Citrāṅgada. The hermit Jābāli cursed Citrāṅgada to become a leper. (Skanda Purāṇa. Chapters 3, 143, and 144).

JAḌA. An immoral brahmin. Jaḍa, who set out to do commercial business once was killed by thieves. As a result of sins committed in previous births he was turned into a Piśāca. After his death his son, who led quite a moral life went to Kāśī (Banares) to perform his father's obsequies, and at the particular spot where his father was living as Piśāca the son recited Chapter 3 of the Gītā, on hearing which Jaḍa got released from his state as Piśāca. (Padma Purāṇa, Uttarakhaṇḍa and Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa).

JAGANNĀTHA PAṆḌITA. A very powerful and ruthless literary critic in Sanskrit. He lived between 1590 and 1665. He is also known as Paṇḍitarāja (King of scholars). His most important and well-known work is Rasagaṅgādhara. To this day it remains as an invaluable treasure in rhetorics. (Alaṅkāra Śāstra).

His poetic theory is "Ramaṇīyārthapratipādakaḥ Śabdaḥ Kāvyam". (Words which convey beautiful meanings constitute poetry). He vehemently opposed the dhvani vāda (suggestive words and phrases conveying more meanings produce more rasa than they literally and apparently appear to carry). Citramīmāṁsā-Khaṇḍana is another work of the Paṇḍitarāja. In this work another rhetorician named Appayadīkṣita is strongly criticised. The allegoric poem, "Bhāminīvilāsam", is supposed to have been written by this great rhetorician based on the untimely death of his wife, Bhāminī. He has also written five other works, the five Laharīs [Gaṅgālaharī etc].

JAGATĪ. One of the seven horses which draw the chariot of Sūrya. Gāyatrī, Bṛhatī, Uṣṇik, Jagatī, Triṣṭubh, Anuṣṭubh and Paṅkti are the seven horses. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part II, Chapter 8).

JĀGRAT. According to the vision of Ṛṣis or sages, every living being has four states. They are Jāgrat (waking state), Svapna (dream), Suṣupti (profound sleep) and Turīya (the fourth state of the soul, i.e. oneness with Brahman in different degrees). The hermits and sages have said about the four states of soul as given below:—

1) Jāgrat. In this state the individual soul is awake. The five organs of senses, the five organs of activity and the four inner organs of the living being will be active, when the soul is awake. In this state he enjoys the outer world through the five senses. That is, he sees with the eyes, hears with the ears, tastes with tongue, smells with the nose and feels with the skin. Every man thinks that his understanding through the senses is real. It is the individual soul which is responsible for this understanding. But it is difficult to say whether these perceptions through the senses are real or unreal. A hermit says as follows:—"An individual soul travels from Jāgrat to Svapna and from Svapna to Jāgrat as a fish which goes from one shore to the other without touching anything. For an individual soul the state of jāgrat is only one of the four states. So we cannot give the verdict that the state of Jāgrat alone is real and all the rest are unreal." The individual soul which is in the state of Jāgrat enjoys the outer world and so it is 'bahiḥprajña' (external—knowing). In this state the individual soul enjoys the external world with the seven organs and the nineteen faces. The seven organs are, the two eyes, head, soul, body, urinal bladder and the legs. The nineteen faces are the five senses, the five organs of activity, the five life-breaths and the four inner organs of mind, intellect, egoism and will. The individual soul in the state of Jāgrat enjoys the external world with these organs and faces. The soul in this state is called 'Vaiśvānara'. This state is experienced by all the human beings of the world and so it is called Vaiśvānaras[1] (Bṛhadāraṇyaka, Māṇḍūkyopaniṣad).

2) Svapna (dream). The second state of the individual soul, is svapna (dream). He who indulges in dream, forgets everything he had experienced in the state of Jāgrat and creating new worlds he enjoys them. While the five organs of senses and the five organs of activity of the dreamer take rest, the four inner organs of citta (will) Ahaṅkāra (egoism) Buddhi (reason) and manas (Mind) will be working. See what the author of Upaniṣad says. "The dreamer separates his self from the wide universe and creates his own radiance by his own radiance. The light of the self is the light for the dreamer. That man creates a chariot or an assemblage of chariots or roads where there is no chariot or an assemblage of chariots or a road; joy, delight or extreme delight where there is no joy or delight or extreme delight; ponds, wells and rivers where there are no ponds, wells and rivers. A dreamer is a Lord; the state of the dream is the state of activity." Another hermit says as follows about the state of dream :—"The dreaming individual soul which sees again things which were seen here and there, hears again things which were heard here and there, enjoys again things which were enjoyed in places far and near, is really enjoying greatness. He sees things seen and not seen, heard and not heard enjoyed and not enjoyed. The dreamer, like a King who travels with his train throughout his country, as he pleases, plays by getting in and out of his own body, and enjoys lofty experiences, and so he is happier than he who eats alone and enjoys his food. The individual soul in its state of dream is called the Taijasa (the radiant) because he illuminates himself by his own radiance. In this state the individual soul does not touch anything and so it is sinless.[2]

3) Suṣupti. The third state of the individual soul is suṣupti (profound sleep). The soul alone is active in this state. In suṣupti the individual soul desires for nothing and does not indulge in dream. In this state the individual soul does not think that the soul and the body are two. So it is unitary. The sleeper is called 'Prājña' also. The individual soul which is in the state of sleep, completely severs its connection with the organs of senses, the organs of action, mind, the Prāṇamayakośa (the chest of the life-breaths), the manomaya kośa (the cask of mind) and Vijñānamaya Kośa, the chest of knowledge orunderstanding. The mind, the sense organs, Sūkṣmaśarīra (the suble body) and the actions are the items which could abandon the connection with jīvātmā (individual soul). In sleep the jīvātmā separating all its connections, for the time being, with these items absorbs itself in the Brahman. See what the author of the Upaniṣad says about the state of Suṣupti (Sleep).[3] As an eagle folds its wings and falls down weary and tired, after flying round in the air for a long time, the individual soul, avoiding all desires and having no dreams, takes rest. The soul sleeps in the nāḍī, with seventytwo thousand branches called 'hita', like a child or a King or Brahman. During sleep the mind, senses etc. are not destroyed. They only keep away. They reappear when the man wakes up from sleep.[4]

4) Turīyam. In the state of Turīya the Jīvātmā alone is active. The individual souls which abide in creatures are another aspect of Brahman. Everything said about Brahman can be said about the jīvātmā in the state of profound sleep. But the bliss that we enjoy in sleep is not remembered in the state of activity. The same bliss that we enjoy in profound sleep could be enjoyed in the state of samādhi (contemplation) of yoga or union with the universal soul. When it came to be known that this supernal bliss could be enjoyed even after one had awakened from contemplation, a fourth state of the jīvātmā (individual soul) was recognized. But in the Bṛhadāraṇyaka only three states of the jīvātmā are mentioned.

Immersion of the individual soul by the yogin in the universal soul Brahman in the state of jāgrat or activity is called Turīya. The individual soul which is in the state of Turīya, is described as follows in the Chāndogyopaniṣad.

"The jīvātmā which is in the state of Turīya is not conscious internally. He whose inner consciousness is active is Taijasa. He is not bahiḥprajña (conscious of the outer world). Bahiḥprajña is Vaiśvānara. He is not a combination of Taijasa and Turīya. He is not compact with consciousness as a conscious man not a conscious man; nor is he an unconscious man. He, who could be explained only by negations, cannot be seen. He is unmanifestable, indiscernible, unthinkable, indescribable and without any characteristic mark. Only by unswerving faith could he be known. It creates the universes and at the same time negates it. It is the supreme reality, the one without a second (dvaita). This is the state of Turīya.[1]

Vaiśvānara is called the soul with annamayakośa (the material body), Taijasa, the soul with Prāṇamayakośa (the sheath of the life breaths), Prājña, the soul with Vijñānamayakośa (the sheath of understanding) and Turīya, the soul with ānandamayakośa (the chest of bliss).

JĀGUḌA. A country in ancient India. In Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 51, Stanza 25, it is mentioned that the King of this country took part in the Rājasūya (royal consecration) performed by Yudhiṣṭhira.

JĀHNAVĪ. The river Gaṅgā. (See under Jahnu).

JAHNU. A hermit King born in the family of Pūru.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu in the following order :—Brahmā—Atri—Candra—Budha—Purūravas—Āyus—Nahuṣa—Yayāti—Pūru—Janamejaya—Prācinvān—Pravīra—Namasyu—Vītabhaya—Śuṇḍu— Bahuvidha — Saṁyāti — Rahovādi — Raudrāśva — Matināra—Santurodha—Duṣyanta—Bharata—Suhotra—Bṛhatputra—Ajamīḍha—Jahnu.

Ajamīḍha had three wives, Dhūminī, Nīlī and Keśinī. Ṛkṣa was born from Dhūminī, Duṣyanta and Parameṣṭhi from Nīlī and Jahnu from Keśinī. The descendants of Jahnu are called the Kuśikas. Jahnu handed over his kingdom to his son Balākāśva and went to perform penance. Kuśika was the son of Balākāśva.

2) Drank up the river Ganges. The river Gaṅgā, which flowed through the earth in accordance with the request of Bhagīratha, submerged the hermitage of Jahnu. Jahnu became angry at this haughtiness of Gaṅgā and drank up the river, but at the entreaty of Bhagīratha pushed Gaṅgādevī out through his ear. (See under Gaṅgā). From that day onwards Gaṅgā got the name Jāhnavī.

JĀHUṢA. A King of the period of Ṛgveda. It is stated in Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 17, Sūkta 116, that when this King was surrounded by enemies once, the Aśvinīdevas got him into their chariot and through easily passable ways took him to the top of a mountain.

JAIGĪṢAVYA. A hermit who attained salvation by the strength of his penance.

It is stated in Harivaṁśa Chapter 18, that three daughters, Aparṇā, Ekaparṇā and Ekapāṭalā were born to Himālaya by Menā and the hermit Devala married Ekaparṇā and the hermit Jaigīṣavya married Ekapāṭalā. In Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 229, mention is made that this hermit gave much advice to the hermit Devala, son of Asita, about the need for equanimity. On another occasion this hermit talked to Yudhiṣṭhira about the glory of Śiva. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 18, Stanza 37).

There is a story about how this hermit Jaigīṣavya attained the world of Brahmā. Once he reached the hermitage of Devala, who showed the necessary hospitalities. After a few days this hermit disappeared. After that he used to be seen only at the time of meals. Once Devala took his waterpot and went by air to the sea, to fetch water. When he reached the sea he saw Jaigīṣavya bathing there. Devala had gone when Jaigīṣavya was in the hermitage. How did he reach the sea before Devala ? Devala filled the pot and returned thoughtful. When he reached the hermitage Jaigīṣavya was there. After this Devala travelled through the world of the inspired sages. Wherever he went, he saw Jaigīṣavya. He asked the inspired sages how it was possible. They praised the attainments, Jaigīṣavya had obtained, by his 'tapas' (penance). Finally in the sight of everybody, Jaigīṣavya flew to the world of Brahmā. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 50).

It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 24, that this hermit Jaigīṣavya sits in the palace of Brahmā and carries on meditation and contemplation on Brahmā.

JAIMINI I.

1) General Information. A hermit of the highest degree of learning. In the "History of Classical Sanskrit Literature" it is mentioned that Sumantu, Jaimini, Paila, Vaiśampāyana and Śuka were the five important disciples of Vyāsa. Of these Śuka was the son of Vyāsa. In Devī Bhāgavata, it is mentioned that Vyāsa had other disciples also in his hermitage, such as Asita, Devala and others. The five disciples mentioned first gave publication to the work of Vyāsa called 'Jaya', which was the original of the Mahābhārata. Vaiśampāyana and Jaimini made some additions to the work 'Jaya'. In Sanskrit there is another book called Jaimini Bhārata, which contains only Aśvamedha Parva. (See under Guruparamparā).

2) Other details. (1) It is mentioned in Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 1 that Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa is the story told by Jaimini to Hiraṇyanābha at Naimiśāraṇya.

(2) Jaimini was present at the sarpasatra (sacrifice to kill serpents) of Janamejaya. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 53, Stanza 6).

(3) Jaimini had been a member of the council of

1 Nāntaḥ prajñaṁ na bahiḥprajñaṁ nobhayataḥ prajñaṁ na prajñānaghanaṁ na prajñaṁ nāprajñam adṛṣṭam avyāhāryam agrāhyam alakṣaṇam acintyam avyapadeśyam ekātmapratyayasāraṁ prapañcopaśamaṁ śāntaṁ śivam advaitaṁ caturthaṁ manyate sa ātmā sa vijñeyaḥ.

Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Śabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 11).

(4) This hermit visited Bhīṣma in his bed of arrows during the Bhārata Battle. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 7).

JAIMINI II. The priest of Subāhu the King of the Cholas (Colas). In accordance with the advice of this priest the King performed many good deeds and consequently attained heaven. (Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 94).

JAITRA. A son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva, Chapter 26, Stanza 14, that he was killed by Bhīmasena in the battle of Bhārata.

JAITRAM I. The chariot of King Hariścandra. It was by driving in this chariot that the King carried out the conquest of countries. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 12, Stanza 12).

JAITRAM II. The conch of Dhṛṣṭadyumna. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 61).

JĀJALI. A hermit who reared birds on his head by the power of penance.

This hermit who had practised continence from his childhood lived in a forest. Jājali never thought rain, heat of the sun, snow and such other natural things as unbearable. Once this hermit stood like a pillar in the forest, immersed in meditation. Two birds built their nests in his matted hair. Non-violence being his policy, he did not move. The birds came to their nests every evening and stayed for the night. After a few days they laid eggs in the nests. Still the hermit did not move. The eggs were hatched. The hermit understood that also. Still, he did not move. The young ones got wings. They grew up and began to go out with the parent birds. They went out in the morning and returned in the evening. The hermit stood like a pillar. One morning they went out and did not return in the evening. The hermit stood there for six days waiting for the return of the birds. On the sixth day evening they returned. Next time the hermit waited for a month for the return of the birds. They did not return. So he started from there and went to the sea and dipped in the water and said, "there is no man more virtuous than I either in water or on land" with haughtiness. But the water demons said in an ethereal voice that Tulādhāra, the merchant of Kāśi was more virtuous than he.

Hearing this Jājali went to Kāśī and saw Tulādhāra. Tulādhāra greeted him gladly and they talked for a long time. Jājali understood that Tulādhāra was far more virtuous than he. So he sought advice from Tulādhāra and thus Jājali obtained heaven. (M.B. Śānti Parva, 3 Chapters from 261).

JALA. A deity of water. In Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 20 it is mentioned that this deva was a luminary in the durbar of Brahmā.

JALĀ. A tributary of river Jamunā. The King Uśīnara performed a yāga (sacrifice) on the bank of this river and attained a position higher than Indra. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 13, Stanza 21).

JALADA. A mountain in Śāka island. The famous country known as Kumudottaravarṣa is near this mountain. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 25).

JALADHĀRA. A mountain in Śākadvīpa (The island of Śāka). (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 16).

JALADHI. The crocodile which is the conveyance of Varuṇa. It is mentioned in Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 9, about conveyances of Gods as follows :—

"The conveyance of Indra is the white elephant, which came into being from the palm of Danu, and is of extraordinary strength and valour. The black buffalo called Pauṇḍraka, which was born from the thigh of Rudra, and is as quick as the mind and very fierce, is the conveyance of Yama (the god of death). The conveyance of Varuṇa is the black crocodile called 'Jaladhi', born from the ear-wax of Rudra, and having divine power of movement. The conveyance of Vaiśravaṇa (the god of wealth) is a ferocious man with eyes like two cart-wheels and body as big as mountain, who was born from the leg of Ambikā. The eleven Rudras have speedy horses, terrible serpents and white oxen of high speed. Candra has a chariot as his vehicle yoked with five hundred swans. The vehicles of the Ādityas are chariots yoked with horses and camels. The conveyances of the Vasus are elephants, men for Yakṣas, serpents for Kinnaras, and horses for the Aśvinīdevas. The Maruts of fearful appearance have deer as conveyance. The Vidyādharas have parrots for conveyances. An asura called Andhaka has a chariot with thousand posts as his vehicle. Prahlāda had, as conveyance a divine chariot of gold and silver yoked with eight white horses and elephant for Virocana, horse for Kujambha, divine chariot yoked with yellow horses, for Śaṅkukarṇa, elephant for Hayagrīva, chariot for Maya, Great serpent for Dundubhi, Aeroplane for Śambara and lion for Ayaśśaṅku.

JALANDHAMA. A warrior of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 57).

JALANDHARA. A mightly and valiant Asura. Khaḍgaromā was his charioteer and Vṛndā was his wife. Jalandhara was the grandson of the sea of Milk. Once he met with the headless Rāhu, who said to Jalandhara, the whole story beginning from the churning of the sea of Milk. Jalandhara, became furious at the gods who had churned his grandfather. So he collected a big army of asuras and went to war with the devas. Though a large number of Asuras were killed in the battle, Indra and Viṣṇu were defeated and Viṣṇu was taken captive and hidden under the sea. Finally Paramaśiva went to fight with the Asura. In the fight Jalandhara was killed and Viṣṇu was rescued. (Padma Purāṇa, Chapters 3 to 5). For further details see under Māyāśiva.

JĀLAPĀDA. See under Devadatta I.

JALAPRADĀNIKA PARVA A sub section of Strī Parva, of the Mahābhārata. This sub section comprises of Chapters 1 to 15 of Strī Parva.

JALAPRALAYA. In all the Asiatic Purāṇas, reference to an ancient great flood, with slight changes occurs. According to Hindu Purāṇas this great flood took place before Mahāviṣṇu took the incarnation of Matsya. In the Holy Bible which is the scripture of the Christians, the story of the great flood is allied to the story of the Noah. (See under Avatāra). This story occurs in the Babylonian literature also. The book 'Gilgamish' which is as old as the Ṛgveda, is considered to be the oldest in the world. The theme of the Gilgamish is the travel of a man named Gilgamish. This story is written in twelve clay-tablets. After 1850, the scientists of England who carried on an archaeological research, found in the library of Ancient Nineveh, the most famous in the ancient world, these twelve tablets along with twenty-thousand other tablets, all of which were in good condition. This library was built by the King Aśurbānipāl in 7th century B.C., on a very high place on the bank of the river Tigris, in the ancient Nineveh.

All these clay tablets have been removed to the British Museum. It took several decades to decipher them. When these clay tablets were discovered there was not a single man who could read and understand them, in the world. In spite of hard work, several years passed by without getting even a single tablet deciphered. They were written in 'Accadean', which was the language of the court of Aśurbānipāl and the national and the international language of the time. Another copy of this great work was discovered on the bank of the Euphrates, where the capital of the famous King Hāmurābi of Ancient Babylon stood. Later discoveries disclosed that this great work Gilgamish was part and parcel of the famous ancient civilization of the Oriental countries. The Hittites and the Egyptians tried to translate this book Gilgāmish into their own languages. In the tablets with letters in the form of arrow heads, found on the bank of the Nile, the portions which were difficult for them to translate, are given red marks.

It was from a small piece of broken clay tablet that clues to the origin of this famous work were obtained. The world is indebted to the Sumerians, who had their capital in the place where the city Ur stands, for the original work of Gilgamish.

Mention is made about a great flood in Gilgamish, as follows: Gilgamish set out on an adventurous journey to see his ancestor Utnāpiṣṭim to learn from him the means of obtaining eternal life. The gods had told this man about the secret of eternal life. At last Gilgamish reached an island and found out his ancestor and asked him about the secrets of eternal life. Utnāpiṣṭim said that he had lived in 'Śhoorappak' and that he had been an ardent devotee of 'Iya' God. When the gods decided to destroy mankind by a great flood the God Iya called his devotee Utnāpiṣṭim and said to him "You, man of shoorappak, the son of Ūrbārtūtū: Demolish your house and build a ship. Leave off your wealth and search for your life. Cast away your property and save your life. Bring the seeds of every living thing into the ship. The ship you build should be according to measurements." The rest of the story is like the story of the "Ark of Noah". The scientists are of opinion that in pre-historic times the three continents of Asia, Europe and Africa were one continent and that by earthquake or some other reason the south part of Europe had sunk down and water flowed in and thus the mediterranean sea came into existence. At a time when the far off regions of the earth were unknown, the people who escaped the flood imagined that the entire world had been submerged by the flood. It could be imagined that this story of the great flood passed on to posterity verbally and after so many generations it appeared in different regions in different languages in different forms.[1]

JALASANDHI I. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Bhīmasena killed him. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 64, Stanza 33).

JALASANDHI II. A warrior who fought on the side of the Kauravas against the Pāṇḍavas. He was present at the svayaṁvara of Pāñcālī. (marriage of Pāñcālī). It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 115, Stanza 52, that he was killed by Sātyaki in the battle of Bhārata.

JALELĀ. An attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 16).

JALEŚVARĪ. An attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 16).

JALEYU. A son born to Raudrāśva the son of Pūru, by a celestial woman named Miśrakeśī. Mention is made about Jaleyu in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 10.

JAM. It means gītam (music). (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).

JAMADAGNI. A hermit of majestic power. He was the father of Paraśurāma.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu in the following order are: Brahmā— Bhṛgu — Cyavana — Aurva — Ṛcīka—Jamadagni.

2) Birth. There is an interesting story about the birth of Jamadagni. Gādhi was the son of king Kuśāṁba. A daughter named Satyavatī was born to Gādhi. The hermit Rcīka giving a dowry of one thousand horses, each with one black ear, married Satyavatī. Once Satyavatī told her husband that herself and her mother wanted to get a child each. After the sacrifice of oblations to Agni (fire), Ṛcīka took two parts filled with boiled rice and gave them to Satyavatī, with mantras (spells). The radiance of Brahmā was invoked into one pot and the radiance of Kṣātra was invoked into the other. The hermit had asked Satyavatī to eat the rice into which the radiance of Brahmā had been invoked and to give the other pot to her mother. But the daughter and mother changed the pots secretly and Satyavatī ate the rice in the pot into which Kṣātra radiance was invoked and gave the pot of rice filled with Brāhma-radiance to her mother. Both the women conceived. As the child grew in the womb the radiance of Brahmā shone on the face of the mother and Kṣātra lustre was seen on the face of Satyavatī. Rcīka asked Satyavatī for the reason. She admitted the secret interchange of the pot.

Satyavatī and her mother both delivered at the same time. Satyavatī got the son Jamadagni, who was the embodiment of Kṣātra tejas and the child with Brāhma tejas born to the mother was Viśvāmitra. Therefore, in some Purāṇas Viśvāmitra is described as the uncle of Jamadagni whereas in some others they are said to be brothers. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 57).

3) A house-holder. When Jamadagni grew up he made a tour and visited the holy places one by one and reached the palace of King Prasenajit of the family of Ikṣvāku. He saw Reṇukā the beautiful daughter of King Prasenajit and fell in love with her. He requested Prasenajit for the hand of Reṇukā. The King, without raising any objection gave his daughter Reṇukā in marriage to Jamadagni. The couple came to the bank of the river Narmadā and erecting a hermitage began 'tapas' (penance). Four sons, Ṛumaṇvān, Suhotra, Vasu and Viśvāvasu were born to Jamadagni by Reṇukā. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 58).

1 In writing about Jalapralaya, I have dealt with Gilgamish a little elaborately. Details on Gilgamish were obtained from the English translation of a famous German work by Venar Keller. This book had not been received when I wrote about the work 'Gilgamish'. So these details are included under this word "Jalapralaya".

4) The birth of Paraśu rāma. Because of the wickedness of the Kṣatriya Kings, the goddess Earth became miserable. She made a representation to Brahmā who took her to the sea of Milk and told Mahāviṣṇu everything. Mahāviṣṇu promised to take an incarnation as the son of Jamadagni and destroy all the wicked Kings. Accordingly Reṇukā gave birth to Paraśurāma, who was an incarnation of Mahāviṣṇu. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 59).

5) Jamadagni getting the bow of Viṣṇu. Once the devas (gods) desired to know who, of Śiva and Viṣṇu was the more powerful. They informed Brahmā of their desire. Brahmā asked Viśvakarmā to make two tremendous bows. He gave one to Śiva and the other to Viṣṇu. The bow which Viṣṇu got was known as Vaiṣṇavacāpa and that which Śiva got was known as Śaivacāpa. After this Brahmā caused enmity between Śiva and Viṣṇu. A terrible battle ensued between Śiva and Viṣṇu. After a while the Śaivacāpa became less effective. At the request of the devas, the fight was stopped. The devas decided that Viṣṇu was superior to Śiva, in power. Śiva got angry at this decision and gave his bow to Devarāta Janaka, the King of Videha. It was this bow that Śrī Rāma broke at the marriage of Sītā.

Seeing that Śiva had given away his cāpa (bow) Mahāviṣṇu gave his bow to his devotee, the hermit Ṛcīka. That Vaiṣṇava cāpa was given to Jamadagni by Ṛcīka. Thus the famous Vaiṣṇava cāpa arrived at the hermitage of Jamadagni. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Sarga 75).

6) Reṇukā was killed. Paraśurāma became fourteen years old. Jamadagni went to the forest to gather fruits, roots etc. After completing the cleansing work of the hermitage, leaving Paraśurāma in the forest, Reṇukā went to the bank of the river Narmadā (Revā) to fetch water. When she reached the river, Kārtavīryārjuna and his wives were playing in water. She waited for them to go. When they were gone she got into the river. But as the water was muddy because of the play, she walked a little to the east where there was pure water. She saw there Citraratha the King of Sālva playing with his wife in the water. How beautiful they were ! She had never seen so beautiful a woman or so handsome a man. She stood there looking at them for a while. When she reached the hermitage with water, Jamadagni had already returned a long while ago. He had returned weary and tired of the heat of the midday-sun. He did not see his wife in the hermitage. He had been sitting very angry when Reṇukā returned with water. She put the pot down and bowed before her husband and told him the reason for her being late. When he heard the reason his anger blazed. He called his sons one by one and ordered them to kill her. But the four elder sons did not dare to execute his order saying that slaughter of a woman was a great sin. But Paraśurāma came forward and by a cutting-arrow cut off the head of his mother. The father called the four sons who disobeyed him and cursed them thus :

"Since you have disobeyed the order of your father, because of your ignorance, you shall become foresters and live in forest."

Being overwhelmed with sorrow at the death of his mother, Paraśurāma swooned and fell down. When his anger subsided, discretion dawned on Jamadagni. He aroused his son and took him on his lap and asked him what boon he wanted for having accomplished the unaccomplishable task. Paraśurāma's request was that his mother should be brought to life again. The hermit was pleased and he brought Reṇukā to life again. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 60).

7) The sun gave Jamadagni an umbrella and sandals. See under the word Cerippu (Sandals).

8) The temptation of Dharma. See under the word 'Dharma' Para 6.

9) Jamadagni was killed. Once Kārtavīryārjuna, with his minister Candragupta and some attendants had been hunting in the forests on the banks of the river Narmadā. It was noon. The hunters grew tired of hunger and thirst. They came to the hermitage of Jamadagni. The hermit called his divine cow Suśīlā and ordered her to give food to the King and his party. Within a few seconds meals were got ready for thousands of people. The King and his attendants had a feast. On their return journey the wonderful cow Suśīlā was the subject of their talk. The King wanted to get the cow which possessed divine power. So he sent his minister Candragupta to the hermitage of Jamadagni with instructions to get the cow Suśīlā in exchange for a crore of cows or even half of the kingdom. But the hermit was not prepared to give the cow. The minister and his men caught the cow by force and went away. The hermit, filled with grief, followed the party a long way through the forest, and requested Candragupta to return the cow. Candragupta got angry and struck him to death, and took the cow to the palace, in the capital city of Māhiṣmatī.

After waiting for a long time, Reṇukā started in search of her husband. She saw Jamadagni lying almost dead, in a pool of blood. She fell down and beating her breast cried aloud. Paraśurāma with Akṛtavraṇa and other disciples came there. When she saw her son Paraśurāma, she beat her breast twentyone times[1] and cried. Paraśurāma, took an oath that since his mother beat her breast twentyone times and cried, he would travel around twentyone times and put an end to the Kṣatriya Kings. After that they took the dead body of Jamadagni and placed it on fire, and began to sing the song of Viṣṇu. Then the hermit Śukra came by that way and with the help of Mṛtasañjīvanī brought Jamadagni to life again. The lost cow Suśīlā also returned without her calf. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 69; M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 49).

10) Death of Jamadagni. Paraśurāma and Akṛtavraṇa went to the city of Māhiṣmatī with the intention of bringing the calf of Suśīlā back. They stood at the gate of the city and challenged Kārtavīryārjuna for a fight. Kārtavīryārjuna came out with his army. In the battle which ensued, Kārtavīrya and his sons and most of his warriors fell dead. Paraśurāma and Akṛtavraṇa returned with the calf. Jamadagni asked Paraśurāma to go to Mahendragiri and do penance in order to mitigate the sin of killing a large number of people. When Paraśurāma had gone for penance, Śūrasena a son of Kārtavīryārjuna came with his men to the hermitage, cut off the head of Jamadagni and took it away. Paraśurāma and the disciples of Jamadagni placed the dead body of Jamadagni on the pyre and burnt it. Reṇukā jumped into that fire and died. After this Paraśurāma began his twentyone tours for the extermination of the Kṣatriya Kings. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 86).

11) Other information. (1) Udayana grew up in the hermitage of Jamadagni. (See under Udayana).

(2) Jamadagni was one of the hundred sons of Ṛcīka. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Stanza 45).

(3) Jamadagni was one of the hermits, who visited Śrī Rāma on his return from forest life. The hermits who came to Ayodhyā from the North were, Kaśyapa, Bharadvāja, the Sanakas, Śarabhaṅga, Durvāsas, Mataṅga, Vibhāṇḍaka, Tumburu and the Saptarṣis (the seven hermits). Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

(4) Jamadagni was present at the Janmotsava (birth celebration) of Arjuna. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 51).

(5) This hermit is a luminary in the assembly of Brahmā. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 22).

(6) During the time of the battle of Mahābhārata, Jamadagni entered Kurukṣetra and advised Droṇa to stop the battle. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 190, Stanza 35).

(7) Jamadagni once delivered a speech on the bad sides of accepting rewards, to the King Vṛṣādarbhi. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 93, Stanza 44).

(8) Jamadagni vowed that he was innocent in the affair of the stealing of Agastya's lotus. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 25 .

12) The Names of Jamadagni. Ārcīka, Bhārgava, Bhārgavanandana, Bhṛguśārdūla, Bhṛguśreṣṭha, Bhṛgūttama Ṛcīkaputra are the names used by Vyāsa to denote Jamadagni, in Bhārata.

JĀMAGHA. A King of the family of Yayāti. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

JĀMBAVĀN. A monkey of extraordinary might. He was the minister of Sugrīva.[1]

1) Birth. When the troubles and hardships caused by the wickedness of Rāvaṇa became unbearable the goddess Earth and the Devas approached Brahmā for redress. Brahmā took them to the sea of Milk. Mahāviṣṇu heard everything and said that he would incarnate as the son of Daśaratha and would kill Rāvaṇa. Brahmā was directed to create monkeys to help him on that occasion. Accordingly Brahmā created Jāmbavān and several other monkeys.

There are two stories about the birth of Jāmbavān in the Purāṇas.

(1) Brahmā sat for a long time thinking about the creation of monkeys. Then he wanted to yawn., for which he opened the mouth and instantly Jāmbavān came out from inside Brahmā through the open mouth. "I have already created Jāmbavān the noble bear, who jumped out of my mouth when I yawned." (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Sarga 17, Stanza 6).

(2) One day time of Brahmā ended and the night had advanced two yāmas (six hours). The Madhukaiṭabhas born of the ear-wax of Mahāviṣṇu began to create trouble and commotion in the waters of the great flood. They saw a lotus on the surface of water. Seeing Brahmā in it they challenged him for fight. Hearing their shouting and the challenge Brahmā became afraid of the asuras. His middle face began to sweat. The sweat flowed through his cheeks and reached the loins. Jāmbavān came into being from that sweat. So he got the name Ambujāta, (born from the water of sweat). As he was the first person who entered the country of Jāmbūnada he was called Jāmbavān. As he was born when there was no universe or time his age or date of birth could not be ascertained. At the time of Śrī Rāma Jāmbavān was six Manvantaras (age of a Manu) and for hundred and sixtyfour Caturyugas (a period of four yugas) old. (The present age is the twentyeighth Caturyuga of the seventh Manu). Jāmbavān had witnessed all the incarnations from Matsya to Śrī Rāma. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa Pūrva Kāṇḍa).

2) Jāmbavān and the incarnation of Śrī Rāma. During the time of Śrī Rāma Jāmbavān was the minister of Sugrīva. It is stated in Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Kiṣkindhā Kāṇḍa, Sarga 41, that Nīla, the son of Agni, Hanūmān, Jāmbavān, Suhotra, Śarāri, Śaragulma, Gaja, Gavākṣa, Gavaya, Suṣeṇa, Ṛṣabha, Mainda, Dvivida, Vijaya, Gandhamādana, Ulkāmukha, Asaṅga, Aṅgada and others were the ministers of Sugrīva.

The monkeys who went to the south in search of Sītā, reached the sea shore. The question was how to jump over the sea to Laṅkā. Each of them came forward to show his ability and admitted failure. Finally Jāmbavān called Hanūmān to him and advised him to jump over to Laṅkā. Hanūmān who was not aware of his own powers,[2] refused. Jāmbavān told him about his birth, self-power, attainment of boons etc. Hanūmān became convinced of his powers at the words of Jāmbavān and jumped over the sea to Laṅkā. (Rāmāyaṇa, Kiṣkindhā Kāṇḍa).

3) Jāmbavān and the incarnation of Vāmana. Jāmbavān walked round Mahāviṣṇu, who incarnated as Vāmana to curb the powers of Mahābali. At that time Jāmbavān was immensely strong. But by the time of the incarnation of Śrī Rāma his strength had decreased much. Hear what he said to the monkeys who assembled on the sea shore to go in search of Sītā.

"My abilities in olden times were not what you see now. In the far old days, I had walked round that 1 It is difficult to ascertain whether Jāmbavān was a monkey or a bear. In some of the Indian languages he is described as a monkey. In Malayālaṁ he was thought of as a monkey from ancient period. In Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, which is the original work, Jāmbavān is denoted by the words 'Kapi' (monkey) and Ṛkṣa (bear). Jāmbavān is called Ṛkṣapuṅgava in Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa Bālakāṇḍa Sarga 17. From this it is to be assumed that Jāmbavān was a bear. In the same chapter it occurs that, it was the aim of Brahmā to make the gods and the celestial women take birth as monkeys to help Mahāviṣṇu in the incarnation of Śrī Rāma. So it is not wrong to consider Jāmbavān either as a bear or as a monkey.

2 For the cause of his forgetting his own powers see under Tṛṇabindu II.

Eternal Being Viṣṇu when he measured three steps at the sacrifice of Mahābali. Now, I am very old and have not enough strength to jump over the sea." (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Kiṣkindhā kāṇḍa, Sarga 65).

4) Jāmbavān and the incarnation of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. The long-living Jāmbavān who had witnessed nine out of the ten incarnations of Mahāviṣṇu is seen in connection with the precious stone Syamantaka, in the incarnation of Kṛṣṇa. The Sun-god gave this jewel Syamantaka to King Satrājit. His younger brother Prasena wore it and went to the forest for hunting. A lion killed him and took the jewel in his mouth and was going along the forest when Jāmbavān killed it and took the jewel. It was rumoured that Srī Kṛṣṇa had killed Prasena and taken the jewel. So Śrī Kṛṣṇa went in search of the jewel to the forest, defeated Jāmbavān and took the jewel, and returned it to Satrājit. Śrī Kṛṣṇa married Jāmbavatī the daughter of Jāmbavān. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

5) Jāmbavān became old for ever. At the time of the incarnation of Vāmana, Jāmbavān was very strong and valiant. When Vāmana brought under control the three worlds by measuring three steps Jāmbavān travelled throughout the three worlds carrying the news everywhere. Within three moments Jāmbavān travelled eighteen times through the three worlds. In this travel of lightning-speed the end of the nail of his toe touched the highest peak of Mahāmeru, who considered it as an insult and said "You are arrogant of your speed and youth. Hereafter your body will not reach where your mind reaches and you shall be ever old." Because of this curse Jāmbavān became old and unable to carry out what he wished. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa).

JĀMBAVATĪ. Daughter of the famous Jāmbavān. Śrī Kṛṣṇa went in search of the famous precious stone Syamantaka which was lost when Prasena wore it and went to the forest for hunting. Kṛṣṇa found it in the cave of Jāmbavān, who fought with him and was defeated. Finally he gave his daughter Jāmbavatī to Śrī Kṛṣṇa as wife, and the jewel Syamantaka as dowry.

Śrī Kṛṣṇa came to his capital Dvārakā with his wife Jāmbavatī. When sons were born to the other wives of Kṛṣṇa she became sad and requested her husband that sons may be born to her also. On hearing this request Kṛṣṇa went to the mountain where the hermit Upamanyu was engaged in penance. With that hermit who was an ardent devotee of Śiva, as his teacher, Kṛṣṇa began a penance before Śiva, in accordance with his (Upamanyu's) advice. The penance, holding yogadaṇḍa and Kapāla (devotee's staff and skull) lasted for a month. In the second month penance was performed standing on one leg and drinking only water. In the third month he did penance standing on toes only and using air as food. After six months Paramaśiva appeared and blessed him that his wives would have ten sons each. Accordingly Jāmbavatī gave birth to her first son who was named Sāmba. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 4).

JAMBHA. A Daitya (Asura). He was the chief among those who snatched away Amṛta from the hands of Dhanvantari. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 3).

In the Purāṇas several Asuras (demons) bearing the name Jambha are mentioned. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Dākṣiṇātyapāṭha, Chapter 38, that Śrī Kṛṣṇa killed an Asura named Jambha. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 98, Stanza 49 that the teacher Śukra refused to help a Jambha whom Indra killed later. It occurs in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 102, Stanza 24, that Mahāviṣṇu had killed an asura called Jambha. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 285, Stanza 2, that a group of Jambhāsuras, who had undergone training under Rāvaṇa, once attacked Hanūmān. Another Jambhāsura had been killed by Arjuna, as stated in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 49. All these Dānavas (Asuras) were sons of Kaśyapa born of his wife Danu.

JAMBHAKA. A Kṣatriya King. This King was killed in battle by Śrī Kṛṣṇa. He had a son who, later became King but was killed by Sahadeva in his conquest of the countries. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 31, Stanza 7).

JAMBŪ. A tree which stands on the southern side of the mount Mahāmeru. This tree bears fruits and flowers throughout the year irrespective of the seasons. This tree is watered by the Siddhacāraṇas. The branches of this tree reach the realm of heaven. The place in which this tree stands is known as Jambū-dvīpa. The ripe fruits as big as elephants fall down and are broken. The juice oozing from them flows as a big stream. This is called the river Jambū. It flows through the southern part of the country known as Ilāvṛtta. The goddess who lives on the bank of this big river is known as Jambvādinī. She is very fond of Jambū fruit. This goddess who loves everything in the world, is worshipped by the gods, nāgas (snakes), the hermits and sages, Rākṣasas (giants) and every body in the world with devotion. Even by the mere thinking of her she could be pleased. She destroys the sins and increases the purity of people. She cures all the diseases and gives people, health, wealth, long life, prosperity and happiness.

The juice of the Jambū fruit when mixed with soil and acted upon by water, air and sun's rays, turns into a kind of gold called Jāmbūnada. The devas, Vidyādharas etc. use this gold to make ornaments for their women. This gold is superior to other kinds of gold. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 8).

JAMBŪDVĪPA. One of the Purāṇically famous Saptadvīpas (seven continents). These seven continents are embankments separating the seven seas. Jambūdvīpa, Krauñcadvīpa, Śākadvīpa and Puṣkaradvīpa are included in the seven islands.

Jambūdvīpa has an area of one lakh of yojanas. The island is round like a lotus flower. There are eight long mountain ranges which divide the island into nine countries, which look like nine petals of the lotus flower. Each of these nine countries has an area of nine thousand yojanas. The two countries of the north and south extremities are bowshaped. Four of the remaining seven are longer than the rest. The central country is square. This country is known as Ilāvṛtta, at the centre of which there is the mountain Sumeru with a height of one lakh of yojanas. This is called Svarṇaparvata (The mountain of gold). The top of this mountain is a great flat place with an area of thirtythousand yojanas. This great plain is ten thousand yojanas above the ground level. On the northern part of Ilāvṛtta lie the three mountain ranges of Nīlagiri, Śvetagiri and Śṛṅgavān, and midway between them the three countries called Ramyaka, Hiraṇmaya and Kuru. On the southern part of Ilāvṛtta, there are the three mountains of Niṣadha, Hemakūṭa and Himālaya and three countries Harivarṣa, Kimpuruṣa and Bhārata. The mountain Mālyavān lies to the west and Gandhamādana to the east of Ilāvṛtta. There are two countries Ketumāla and Bhadrāśva having an area of two thousand yojanas each with the two mountains Nīla and Niṣadha as boundaries. At the foot of the mount Mahāmeru, there are the mountains of Mandara, Meru, Supārśvaka, Kumuda and many others. On those mountains big trees like ñāval (syzygium jambolanum) Mākanda (Mango tree) Kaṭambu (Naucka Candamba) banyan etc. grow in plenty. On the top of these mountains there are four lakes, full of milk, honey, juice of sugarcane and sweet water. The devas become prosperous by the touch of the water of these lakes. Besides these parks there are four heavenly parks known as Nandana, Caitraratha, Vaibhrāja and Sarvabhadraka. The women folk of the devas (gods) and Gandharvas (demi-gods) play in these parks, which are convenient for couples to carry on lustful play. A river is formed there, by the juice oozing from the fallen mango fruits. The river is purple coloured and is called Aruṇānadī (river Aruṇā). The goddess named Aruṇā lives here. The famous Jambū tree is in this Jambūdvīpa. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 8).

JAMBŪKA. A warrior of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 74).

JAMBUKA. (JAMBUMĀLIKA). A Śūdra Sage. The child of a brahmin died when Śrī Rāma, after his twelve years' exile in forest had returned to Ayodhyā and was ruling the country in an ideal manner. The brahmin and his wife carried the dead body of their child to the palace with loud lamentations. Everybody felt surprised how there could be child-death in the land when the King was ruling it in the most dhārmic (righteous) manner. Then did Nārada, who was present in the assembly, point out that in a corner of Rāmarājya a Śūdra Sage was doing tapas and that it was the reason for the untimely death of the brahmin child. At once Śrī Rāma set out in search of the Śūdra Sage after directing Śatrughna to see that no enemy entered the country, and asking Lakṣmaṇa to take care of the dead body of the brahmin child. After a rather detailed search Śrī Rāma found Jambuka at the mountain called Śailam doing tapas hanging from the branch of a tree on his legs with head down. He told Śrī Rāma that he was the Śūdra Sage called Jambuka and was performing tapas thus so that he might ascend to heaven in his very body. Śrī Rāma at once cut off the head of the Śūdra Sage, who attained, as soon as Rāma's sword fell on him, mokṣa (salvation), and the dead child of the brahmin returned to life again. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

JAMBUKEŚVARA. Name of an idol of Śiva (Liṅga) installed in Mysore. The Śivaliṅga installed in the Jambukeśvara temple in Mysore. Jambū is a fruit tree. There is a story about how Śiva happened to come under this tree.

Once upon a time this place was full of Jambū trees, and a recluse performing a penance under a Jambū tree got a fruit of it. Attracted, so to say, by the sanctity of the fruit the recluse submitted it first as an offering to Lord Śiva, and only after that he ate it. As a result of that the fruit germinated in the stomach of the sage grew up into a tree and emerged into light and air bursting his head open. Elated at this the sage danced before God, who asked him to return to the place from where he got the fruit. Accordingly he returned to Tiruvānakovil and continued his penance. Pleased so much with the Sage Śiva followed him and sat under the tree. From that day onwards Śiva came to be called Jambunātha. To this day Jambunātha sits under the Jambū tree.

Later, a temple came to be built there under the following circumstances. A controversy arose between Mālyavān and Puṣpadanta, two of the Bhūtagaṇas of Śiva, as to who cherished more devotion to the Lord. The controversy developed into a quarrel and Puṣpadanta cursed Mālyavān into a spider, and Mālyavān cursed Puṣpadanta into an elephant. Now, when the mutual curse took effect wisdom dawned on both Mālyavān and Puṣpadanta, and they took refuge in the Lord for redemption from the curse. The Lord sent both of them to the Cola country, and after wandering about in different parts of the country both of them came to Jambukeśvara, and lived there worshipping God. The elephant used to bathe daily in sacred tīrthas, bring holy water in its trunk and make an offering of it to the Lord. As for the spider it wove a net above the head of the Lord. so that dried leaves did not fall on it. The elephant used to daily sweep off the net above the head of the Lord and make his offering of the water thereon. But, the spider would again weave the net. Thus their quarrel continued. One day the spider, in great anger, got into the trunk of the elephant and bit it hard. Due to unbearable pain it smashed its trunk on a granite stone and fell down dead. At this God appeared and blessed both of them. The Lord also said that the sacred spot would come to be known as Tiruvāna-Kovil (āna = elephant ; Kovil = temple) in memory of Puṣpadanta who had taken the form of the elephant. The spider was told that he would be born in the Cola dynasty and carry on for long years many good acts. Accordingly Mālyavān was born as the son of Śubhadeva, the Cola king and Kamalāvatī, his queen, and ruled the land for many years under the name King Ceṅkaṇṇa. He it was who built the Jambukeśvara temple. (Tiruvānakkāvu Purāṇa).

JAMBUMĀLĪ. A Rākṣasa (giant) who was the son of Prahasta. Hanūmān killed this Rākṣasa in a fight, when he went to Laṅkā in search of Sītā. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa Sundarakāṇḍa, Sarga 44).

JAMBUMĀLIKĀ. See under Jambuka.

JAMBŪMĀRGA. An ancient holy place. If one visits this place one will attain the fruits of performing the sacrifice of Aśvamedha (horse sacrifice). (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 62).

JĀMBŪNADA I. A mountain. The river Ganges flows through the valley of this mountain which is connected with Mahāmeru. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 139, Stanza 16).

JĀMBŪNADA II. A golden mountain which stands in the place called Uśīrabīja. A King named Marutta performed sacrifice on this mountain. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 111, Stanza 23).

JĀMBŪNADA. III. Gold is formed from the river Jambū which flows through Jambūdvīpa (the island Jambū). The gold is called Jāmbūnada, according to Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 26.

JĀMBŪNADA IV. A son of Janamejaya, a King of the dynasty of Pūru. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 56).

JAMBŪNADĪ. A famous river. (See under Jambūdvīpa).

JANADEVA. A Janaka King who ruled over Mithilā (Śānti Parva, Chapter 218, Verse 3).

(1) Mahāviṣṇu, once in the guise of a brahmin, tested the King and pleased with him granted him certain boons. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 219).

(2) None of the 100 ācāryas in his court could answer his questions about salvation satisfactorily. But, Pañcaśikha, who casually came to the palace advised the King about the means to attain salvation. (Śānti Parva Chapter 211).

JANAKA.

1) Genealogy. Janaka was descended from Viṣṇu in the following order:—Brahmā,—Marīci—Kaśyapa—Vivasvān—Vaivasvata—Ikṣvāku—Nimi—Mithi— Udāvasu—Nandivardhana — Suketu — Devarāta —Bṛhadratha—Mahāvīra—Sudhṛti—Dhṛṣṭaketu—Haryaśva — Maru—Pratvantaka — Kīrtiratha — Devamīḍha —Vibudha—Mahīdhraka—Kīrtirāta—Mahāroman—Svarṇaroman—Hrasvaroman—Sīradhvaja (Janaka).

2) Janaka dynasty. Daṇḍa, Vikukṣi and Nimi were the three prominent sons of Ikṣvāku. The dynasty of Vikukṣi earned reputation as the cradle of such powerful Kings as Vikukṣi, Kratha, Māndhatā, Triśaṅku. Hariścandra, Sagara and Bhagīratha. Śrī Rāma also was born in Vikukṣi's dynasty. It was Nimi, the younger brother of Vikukṣi who founded the Videha dynasty. There is a story about that dynasty getting the name, Videha. Nimi decided to conduct a yajña and requested Vasiṣṭha to act as high priest at the yajña. Vasiṣṭha, who then was busy with the affairs of another yajña asked Nimi to postpone his proposed yajña to a later date. To this Nimi made no answer, and Vasiṣṭha went away under the impression that his suggestion had been accepted by Nimi. Accordingly, as soon as he got free from other preoccupations Vasiṣṭha went to Nimi to conduct his yajña. But, Nimi had already performed the Yajña with Gautama as high priest. Enraged at this Vasiṣṭha cursed Nimi that he should lose his body and become Videha (without body). As the result of the curse Nimi fell down dead. As Nimi had no sons living the Ṛṣis churned out of his body a child. As the child was got by mathana (churning) he was named Mithi Janaka. After that all kings born in Mithi's dynasty began using the common name Janaka.

The actual name of Janaka, father of Sītā, was Śīradhvaja. Mithilā or Mithilāpurī was the city founded by Mithi. From the time of the curse pronounced on Nimi the Kings of that dynasty also came to be known as Videhas, and the country they ruled Videha. (See Nimi). (Devī Bhāgavata, 6th Skandha).

3) Brother of Sīradhvaja. Sīradhvaja, the father of Sītā had a brother called Kuśadhvaja. While Śīradhvaja was the King of Mithilā the King of Sāṁkāśya called Sudhanvan attacked Mithilā. Sīradhvaja killed Sudhanvan in the war and crowned his brother Kuśadhvaja as the King of Sāṁkāśya. Lakṣmaṇa's wife Ūrmilā was Kuśadhvaja's daughter. Kuśadhvaja had three daughters called Māṇḍavī, Ūrmilā and Śrutakīrti. Bharata married Māṇḍavī and Śatrughna married Śrutakīrti. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa; Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa. Bālakānda, Canto 71).

4) Birth of Sītā At a time when Sīradhvaja had no issues a girl emerged from the furrows of the ploughed earth, and Sīradhvaja felt the desire to bring up the child as his own daughter. And, a celestial voice, "Oh! Sīradhvaja! it is your own daughter" clinched the issue for the King. That daughter was Sītā. Sīradhvaja—Janaka—accordingly brought up Sītā as his own daughter. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Ayodhyā Kāṇḍa, Canto118).

8) Janaka in Yamaloka. King Janaka once, by his yogic powers cast off his physical body. A vimāna (aerial chariot) from Devaloka arrived to carry Janaka's soul there. On his way to Devaloka Janaka approached Kālapurī where innumerable sinners were being tortured in the various hells. When they breathed the air which had come in contact with Janaka's body, they got much relief from their tortures and the fire of hell now became cool and pleasing to them. When Janaka was about to go away the inmates of hell begged him not to leave them in that condition. He thought to himself thus: "If these beings get some comfort or happiness from my presence I shall surely stay here in Kālapurī, which will be my svarga (heaven)." Thinking thus, Janaka the most righteous of souls stopped there.

And then Kāla arrived there to determine suitable punishments to the various kinds of sinners, and seeing Janaka there, asked why he, the most virtuous and the purest of souls, waited there, Janaka explained his reason for standing there and added that he would quit the place only if Kāla released all those people from hell. On hearing Janaka's answer Kāla pointed out to him one by one the sinners who were being tortured in hell and explained things as follows:— "Look here, that fellow there had seduced the wife of his most intimate friend, and that is why he is tied to a red hot iron bar for 10,000 years. After those 10,000 years he would be born in a pig's womb, and when he is born among human beings it would be as a eunuch. The other fellow there forcibly kissed another man's wife, and so he has to be roasted in Raurava hell for hundred years. That other fellow is put into this vessel filled with blood and pus with both his hands cut off as he had stolen other people's property. This fellow did not speak even a word of welcome to a tired and hungry man who sought his hospitality at night. That is why he has been thrown into thick darkness, and there, for a hundred years, he must undergo the additional suffering of wasp-bite. As for this man he had in a loud voice found fault with another man, and this other fellow is his friend who listened to those vilifications attentively. And, that is the reason why both of them have been pushed into this unused well. So, all these people have to suffer for their sins. You, King Janaka, who did only righteous acts will please go away from this accursed place."

Janaka asked Kāla how those sinners could be released from hell, and Kāla answered that if any good act of the King was transferred to them they could be set free. One early morning Janaka had, with a pure heart, chanted "Rāma, Rāma" and that good act was exchanged for the freedom of the sinners.

After their release had been effected, Janaka asked Kāla : "You say that only sinners come here. What sin have I committed that I should come here ?" Kāla's reply to the question was as follows :—"Oh ! King, no one else in the whole world has so much puṇya as you have got. But, a small sin you have committed. Once you prevented a cow from eating grass, and, therefore, you had to come up to the gates of hell. Now, that sin has been atoned for. So you may go to svarga." Janaka saluted Kāla and in the divine vimāna went to Heaven. (Padma Purāṇa, Chapters 30 and 31).

9) Artificial Janaka. While Sītā was a captive in Laṅkā Rāvaṇa, to bring her round, deputed a very clever magician called Marutta to her, disguised as Janaka, her father. And Marutta, in the capacity of her father consoled her and advised her to yield to the wishes of Rāvaṇa. But Sītā did not yield, and the artificial Janaka assumed his original form of Marutta and went away. (Kaṁba Rāmāyaṇa, Sundara Kāṇḍa).

10) Other information about Janaka. (1) Bhīmasena defeated one Janaka, who was King of Mithilā during the time of the Pāṇḍavas. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 13).

(2) King Janaka was a personification or incarnation of all good qualities. (Vana Parva, Chapter 207, Verse 37).

(3) Janaka, the father of Sītā, in his old age renounced his kingdom and became a recluse. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 18, Verse 4).

(4) Once the sage called Aśmaka imparted some pieces of advice to Janaka. (See under Aśmakopākhyāna).

(5) Once in a war between Janaka and a king called Pratardana, the army of Janaka, in the presence of the army of Pratardana stood aghast, and Janaka incited them to fight by showing heaven and hell to them. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 99, Verse 4).

(6) Once in a war with a King called Kṣemadarśī when victory for Janaka was found to be an impossibility he, as advised by Sage Kālakavṛkṣaka gave his daughter to Kṣemadarśī in marriage. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 106, Verse 2).

(7) Once Māṇḍavya a great sage put many questions about Tṛṣṇā (desire) to Janaka and he, the great philosopher answered the questions quite satisfactorily (Śānti Parva, Chapter 276).

(8) On another occasion Janaka had a talk with Sage Parāśara about the attainment of prosperity and welfare. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 296).

(9) There was a King called Karāla Janaka among the Janaka Kings. Once Vasiṣṭha gave some good advice to Karāla Janaka. (Śānti Parva, Chapters 302-308).

(10) Once a Sage advised a Janaka King called Vasumān on subjects relating to Dharma. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 309).

(11) Vasumān Janaka, son of Devarāta put many questions to Yājñavalkya and they were answered to the full satisfaction of the King. (Śānti Parva, Chapters 310-318).

(12) The Janaka King called Janadeva had once a discussion with Sage Pañcaśikha about the means to avoid death. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 319).

(13) There was once a Janaka King called Dharmadhvaja, and Sulabhā, an erudite woman in Mithilā wanted to test the King. By her yogic powers she assumed the form of a very beautiful woman and visited Janaka's palace. She was offered a seat by the King, and seated on the stool she took her soul into the body of Janaka, and the soul entered into a dicussion on philosophic subjects with Janaka. Sulabhā was thus convinced about the unique scholarship of the King and left the palace ashamed about her attempt to test the King. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 320).

(14) Śuka, the son of Vyāsa not being fully satisfied by the study of Bhāgavata once visited Janaka at the instance of his (Śuka's) father, and Janaka did so easily clear the doubts of Śuka, which even Vyāsa had not been able to successfully tackle. (Devī Bhāgavata, 1st Skandha).

(15) King Janaka did not eat flesh. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 115, Verse 65).

(16) Dharma, once in the guise of a brahmin imparted many pieces of advice to Janaka. (Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 32).

The above facts prove that the Janaka kings, as a rule, were great scholars and philosophers.

11) Synonyms of Janaka. Aindradyumni, Daivarāti, Dharmadhvaja, Karāla, Karālajanaka; Maithila, Mithilādhipa, Mithileśvara, Vaideha etc.

JĀNAKI I. A Kṣatriya king who was the rebirth of an asura named Candravināśana. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 20, that the Pāṇḍavas had sent to him a letter of invitation to take part in the battle of Bhārata.

JĀNAKĪ II. See under Sītā.

JANALOKA. One of the fourteen worlds. This world is situated three crores of yojanas (leagues) away from Dhruvapada (the region of Dhruva—Pole star) according to Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa II, Chapter 7).

JANAMEJAYA I. A famous King of the Solar dynasty

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu thus:—Brahmā-Atri - Candra - Budha - Purūravas-Āyus-Nahuṣa-Yayāti-Pūru - Janamejaya - Prācinvān - Pravīra-Namasyu-Vītabhaya-Śuṇḍu-Bahuvidha-Saṁyāti-Rahovādī-Raudrāśva-Matināra - Santurodha - Duṣyanta - Bharata-Suhotra-Suhotā - Gala - Garda - Suketu - Bṛhatkṣetra-Hasti-Ājamīḍha-Ṛṣa-Saṁvaraṇa-Kuru-Jahnu-Suratha-Vidūratha-Sārvabhauma-Jayatsena - Ravyaya - Bhāvuka - Cakroddhata - Devātithi - Ṛkṣa-Bhīma-Pratīca-Śantanu-Vyāsa-Pāṇḍu-Arjuna-Abhimanyu-Parīkṣit-Janamejaya.

2) Birth, marriage and accession to throne. Janamejaya was the son of Parīkṣit by his wife Madravatī. Vapuṣṭamā, daughter of Suvarṇavarman, King of Kāśī was Janamejaya's wife. Two sons, Śatānīka and Śaṅkukarṇa were born to them. Janamejaya had three brothers called Śrutasena, Ugrasena and Bhīmasena. (Devī Bhāgavata, 2nd Skandha ; Ādi Parva, Chapters 3 and 95).

3) Death of his father. Janamejaya's father, Parīkṣit ruled the country in a very distinguished manner for sixty years. While once hunting in the forest Parīkṣit became very tired and thirsty. While searching for water he came across a Sage named Śamīka and asked him for some water. Śamīka being engaged in meditation did not hear the King's request. But, the King mistaking the sage's silence for haughtiness threw in anger a dead snake round his neck and went away. But, within seven days of the incident Parīkṣit was bitten to death by Takṣaka, king of the Nāgas according to the curse pronounced on him by Gavijāta, son of sage Śamīka.

Janamejaya was only an infant at the time of his father's death. So the obsequies of the late king were performed by his ministers. After that at an auspicious time Janamejaya was crowned King. Within a short time he mastered statecraft. Dhanurvidyā was taught by Kṛpācārya. Very soon he earned reputation as an efficient administrator. He got married in due course. (Devī Bhāgavata, 2nd Skandha).

4) His hatred towards snakes. In the course of a talk one day with Janamejaya Uttaṅka the sage detailed to him the circumstances of his father's death. Only then did he understand the actual cause of Parīkṣit's death, and the information kindled in him intense feelings of revenge not only against serpents but also against the whole serpent dynasty. (Devī Bhāgavata, 2nd Skandha).

5) Sarpasatra. (Serpent yajña). Janamejaya sought the advice of priests and Ṛtviks as to how best revenge could be taken against the serpents, and they advised him to perform the great Yajña called Sarpasatra. And, accordingly all necessary arrangements for the Satra were made, and the King began dīkṣā (Initiation) for it (to live for a few days under severe routine to prepare the author of the yajña for it). But the priest who made the arrangements looked into signs about the successful conclusion of the yajña and opined that it would be obstructed by a brahmin, and, the King, therefore, ordered strict steps to be taken against the entry of strangers into the Yāgaśālā.

And, the Sarpasatra began. High priests wore black clothes, and chanting mantras they made offerings in the sacred fire, and this created a burning sensation in the hearts of serpents. They began, one after another to come and fall into the fire. All varieties of serpents got consumed by the fire thus.

Sages like Uttaṅka, Caṇḍabhārgava, Śārṅgarava, Vyāsa, Uddālaka, Ātreya, Pramataka, Śvetaketu, Nārada, Devala, Kālaghaṭa, Śrutaśravas, Kohala, Devaśarman, Maudgalya and Samasaurabha acted as Ṛtviks at the Satra. Though almost all the serpents courted death in the fire, Takṣaka alone did not come. Fear-stricken he had taken refuge with Indra.

As the chanting of mantras increased in intensity and volume Vāsuki began to feel the burning sensation. He requested his sister Jaratkāru to find out some means of escape from the Satra, and at the instance of Jaratkāru her son Āstīka set out for the palace of Janamejaya to obstruct the Yajña.

Though the Ṛtviks invoked for a long time Takṣaka did not appear. Enraged at his absence Uttaṅka searched for Takṣaka with his divine eyes and found him seated on the throne of Indra along with him, who had given him (Takṣaka) asylum. This challenge of Indra kindled the wrath of Uttaṅka all the more, and he invoked Indra, Takṣaka and Indra's throne too so that all of them might together come and fall into the fire. And, lo! there came the whole lot of them. Only two minutes more and all of them would be reduced to ashes.

By now Āstīka, the son of Jaratkāru had arrived at the Yajña śālā. Janamejaya received the young Sage with all respect and promised to grant his desire whatever that be. Āstīka's demand was that the Sarpa Satra should be stopped. Though Janamejaya was not for stopping the yajña, he was reminded of his promise to grant any desire of Āstīka and the latter insisted on the stopping of the Satra. Janamejaya stopped it. Āstīka blessed that the serpents which had died at the Satra would attain salvation. (Ādi Parva, Chapters 52-58 ; Devī Bhāgavata, 2nd Skandha).

6) Listens to the Bhārata story. While the Sarpa Śatra was being conducted Vyāsa came over there and related the whole story of the Mahābhārata at the request of Janamejaya. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 60).

7) Saramā's curse. Janamejaya along with his brother once performed a yajña of long duration at Kurukṣetra. While the yajña was going on, a dog (son of Saramā the bitch of the Devas) came there. The three brothers of Janamejaya beat the dog which returned to its mother, Saramā, crying. The mother asked him whether he had done anything to deserve the beating, and he answered thus : "No, mother, I had done nothing wrong. I did not lick the havis, nor did I even look at it." Hearing her son's reply Saramā in deep anguish, went to Kurukṣetra and questioned Janamejaya as to why her innocent son was beaten by his brothers. Neither he nor his brothers replied to Saramā, and she cursed Janamejaya that he would be subjected to adṛṣṭaphala (unforeseen results). This curse upset Janamejaya so much that after the Sarpa Satra was over and on his return to Hastināpura he made a search for a Purohita (priest) competent enough to redeem him from his sins, and at last he invited Somaśravas, son of the great sage Śrutaśravas to be his Purohita, and thus did Somaśravas become the priest of Janamejaya (Ādi Parva, Chapter 3).

8) Successors of Janamejaya. Janamejaya had two sons, Candrāpīḍa and Suryāpīḍa by his wife Kāśyā. Hundred sons, experts in archery, were born to Candrāpīḍa. The eldest of them, Satyakarṇa, ruled the country after Janamejaya. Satyakarṇa had a son called Śvetakarṇa to whom was born a son called Ajapārśva by his wife Yādavī, the daughter of Sucāru. (Bhaviṣya Parva, Chapter 1).

9) Other Information

(1) Janamejaya defeated the King of Takṣaśilā and subjugated the country. Ādi Parva, Chapter 3, Verse 20).

(2) The Sage called Veda was the preceptor of Janamejaya. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 3, Verse 82).

(3) After the Sarpa Satra, Janamejaya performed an Aśvamedha yajña at which Vyāsa delivered a lengthy discourse on life and salvation. As Janamejaya said that if he were to believe the words of Vyāsa his dead father Parīkṣit should be shown to him. Vyāsa brought Parīkṣit down from Svarga and showed him to his son. On the occasion were also present sage Śamīka and his son Śṛṅgī. (Āśramavāsika Parva, Chapter 35).

10) Life time of Janamejaya. The great war at Kurukṣetra was fought in 3138 B.C. (See under Mahābhārata) After the war was over the Pāṇḍavas ruled the country for 36 years. Vyāsa took three years to compose the Mahābhārata. According to the Mahāprasthānika Parva the Pāṇḍavas set out for the forest after handing over the government to Parīkṣit, who ruled the country for sixty years. From the above facts it becomes evident that Janamejaya became king in 3042 B.C.

11) Synonyms of Janamejaya. Bhārata, Bharataśārdūla, Bharataśreṣṭha, Bharatāḍhya, Bharatarṣabha, Bharatasattama, Kaurava, Kauravaśārdūla, Kauravanandana, Kauravendra, Kauravya, Kuruśārdūla, Kuruśreṣṭha, Kurūdvaha, Kurukulaśreṣṭha, Kurukulodvaha, Kurunandana, Kurupravīra, Kurupuṅgavāgraja, Kurusattama, Pāṇḍava, Pāṇḍavanandana, Pāṇḍaveya, Pārikṣita, Pauravya etc.

JANAMEJAYA II. One Janamejaya, a prominent member of Yamarāja's assembly is referred to in the Ādi and Sabhā Parvans of the Mahābhārata. This Janamejaya had once been defeated by Māndhātā. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 62, Verse 10). He conquered the world within three days. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 234).

JANAMEJAYA III. A Kṣatriya King who was Krodhavaśa, the Asura, reborn. He was killed by Durmukha, the son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 19).

JANAMEJAYA IV. A prince born to King Kuru by his wife called Vāhinī. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 51).

JANAMEJAYA V. Another King born in the dynasty of Parīkṣit. He had a son called Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 150, Verse 3). He once committed brahmahatyā (sin of killing a brahmin) and so had been forsaken by his subjects. So he had to take to the forest. His search for means to get rid of the sin took him at last to sage Indrota, who made him perform Aśvamedha yajña. Thus, he got redemption from the sin and he became Indrota's disciple also. (Śānti Parva, Chapters 150-153).

JANAMEJAYA VI. A son of King Kuru by his wife, Kausalyā. He is also known as Pravīra. The King had a son called Prācinvān by a noble lady called Anantā of the Madhu Dynasty. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 95).

JANAMEJAYA VII. A serpent who attends the council of Varuṇa. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 10).

JANAMEJAYA VIII. A King born in the family of Nīpa. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 174, Stanza 13).

JANAMEJAYA IX. A King who had been of help to Yudhiṣṭhira. He fought with Karṇa. This Janamejaya was the son of King Durmukha. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 23; Karṇa Parva Chapter 49).

JĀNAPADĪ A celestial maid. This celestial maid was sent by Indra to hinder the penance of the hermit Śaradvān and the moment the hermit saw this celestial beauty seminal discharge occurred to him. Kṛpa and Kṛpī were born from that semen. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 129).

JANĀRDANA I. A synonym of Mahāviṣṇu (Śrī Kṛṣṇa). Because he made the Dasyus (Asuras—demons) tremble, Śrī Kṛṣṇa was called Janārdana.

"He, who has lotus as his seat, who is eternal, imperishable and unchangeable, he who has all these attributes is Puṇḍarīkākṣa (lotus-eyed) and he who makes the Asuras tremble is Janārdana." (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 70, Stanza 6).

JANĀRDANA II. See under Ḍibaka.

JANASTHĀNA. This is a part of the forest Daṇḍaka, which lies in the basin of the Godāvarī. Śrī Rāma had lived in this forest with Sītā and Lakṣmaṇa for a long time during the period of his forest-life. It was at this place that Śrī Rāma killed fourteen thousand Rākṣasas (giants) such as Khara, Dūṣaṇa, Triśiras and others. (M.B. Dākṣiṇātya Pāṭha, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 38). Mārīca allured Sītā and Rāvaṇa kidnapped her in this place. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 147). Śūrpaṇakhā tried to attract Śrī Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa, and her nose etc, were cut off, in this forest. It was in this place that Śrī Rāma cut off the head of a Rākṣasa (demon) and threw it away. That head fell in the lap of a hermit called Mahodara. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 39). Janasthāna is regarded as a holy place. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 29, that those who stay in this place and take bath in the Godāvarī will acquire imperial prosperity.

JĀNDAKĀRA. One of the eighteen Vināyakas, who stay near the Sun. In chapter 16 of the Śāmbhava Purāṇa it is mentioned that this Jāndakāra is engaged in carrying out the orders of Yama (the god of death).

JĀṄGALA. A country in ancient India. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 56).

JAṄGĀRI. A brahmavādī son (interested in theories about Brahman) of Viśvāmitra. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 57).

JAṄGHĀBANDHU. A sage who was a member of Yudhiṣṭhira's assembly. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 16).

JANTU.

1) General information. A King of the Pūru dynasty. It is mentioned in Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278, that he was the son of the King Somaka and father of the King Vṛṣatanu.

2) Jantu born again. Somaka had hundred wives. But only one of them gave birth to a child. That child was Jantu. He was a pet of all the hundred wives. Once Jantu was bitten by an ant. All the hundred queens began crying and shouting and all ran to him. Hearing the tumult in the women's apartment of the palace, the King and the minister ran to that place. When the tumult was over the King began to think. "It is better to have no sons at all, than to have only one son. There are hundred queens. But none of them bears a child. Is there a solution for this?"

At last the King summoned his family-priests and consulted them. The decision of the priests was that if the King should sacrifice his only son, then all his wives would become pregnant and all would give birth to children, and that among the sons thus born, Jantu also would be reborn. The mother of Jantu did not look at this project with favour. "How can we be sure that Jantu also will be there among the sons to be born, after his death?" She was worried by this thought. The priests consoled her and said that there will be a golden mole on the left flank of Jantu. Finally the mother agreed to their plan. Sacrificial dais was arranged. Sacrificial fire for holy offerings was prepared. The priests tore the child into pieces and offered them as oblation in the fire. When the sacrifice was finished, all the hundred queens became pregnant. Each of them gave birth to a child. As the priests had predicted, there was a golden mole on the left flank of the child delivered by the mother of Jantu. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapters 127 and 128).

JĀNUJAṄGHA. A King who is fit to be remembered every morning and evening. Mention is made about this King in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 165, Stanza 69.

JAPA(S). A group of Gods (devas) of the third Manvantara (age of Manu). In that Manvantara the Manu was Uttama, Indra was Suśānti, and the Devagaṇas (groups of gods) were Sudharmas, Satyas, Japas, Pratardanas, and Vaśavartins, the five groups, each consisting of twelve members. (See under Manvantara).

JĀPAKA. A Brāhmaṇa who was constantly engaged in uttering Gāyatrī. Jāpaka was ordered to go to hell because certain mistakes were detected in the uttering of Gāyatrī. But Devī Sāvitrī intervened. She appeared before him and gave him heaven. This Jāpaka was a contemporary of Ikṣvāku. (M.B. Śānti Parva, 3 Chapters from 197).

JARA. A forester. It was this forester who shot an arrow at Śrī Kṛṣṇa and killed him mistaking him for an animal. (See under Śrī Kṛṣṇa).

JARĀ. A harpy (Rākṣasī). Though she was a harpy she loved human beings. It is believed that if the picture of Jarā and her children is placed in the house and venerated, there will be no haunting of any other kinds of demons.

The figure of Jarā was sculptured on the wall of the Palace of Bṛhadratha, the King of Magadha, and was being worshipped. Because the King worshipped her, she had been looking forward to an opportunity to reward the King. Bṛhadratha had married two daughters of the King of Kāśī. They were twin sisters. For a long time they remained childless. The King was very sorry, and went to the forest with his wives. He saw the hermit Kakṣīvān or Caṇḍakauśika, the son of Gautama and requested that a son should be born to him. The hermit was sitting in meditation under a mango tree and a mango fell on his lap. The hermit took it and by prayer and meditation he invoked divine power into it and gave it to the King. The King divided it into two and gave it to his wives. The queens became pregnant and the three returned joyously.

In due course both delivered. But each of them gave birth to only half of a child. The horrified queens took the uncouth figures outside the palace and left them there. Jarā was watching this. She ran to the spot and placed the two portions together. Instantly it became a child of proper form. Hearing the cry of the child the mothers came out. Jarā appeared there and placed the child before the King Bṛhadratha. As desired by Jarā the child was named Jarāsandha because he was joined together by Jarā. This child grew up and became the notorious King Jarāsandha of Magadha. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, 3 Chapters from 17).

It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 182, Stanza 12 that when Arjuna fought with Jarāsandha this harpy had been staying in the weapon of Jarāsandha and was killed in that fight.

JARATKĀRU I. A hermit who is Purāṇically famous.

1) Birth. This hermit was born in a Brāhmaṇa dynasty known as Yāyāvaras. He was the only son of Yāyāvaras. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 13).

2) The name Jaratkāru. The meaning of the name Jaratkāru is given in Bhāṣābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 40, as follows:—

"Jarā is consumption, Kāru is dāruṇa (awful). By and by his body became hard and awful and by penance he made his body to wear out, and so he got the name 'Jaratkāru'."

By means of penance he made his body lean and worn out and so got the name Jaratkāru.

3) Marriage. The calm and abstemious Jaratkāru remained unmarried for a long time. One day he happened to meet with his Manes. They were holding on to a grass and were about to fall into hell, and a rat was cutting the root of the grass which was their only hold. The moment the root is severed all the Manes would fall into the deep ravine of hell. It was at this juncture that Jaratkāru, met his Manes. The moment they saw him they said, "See Jaratkāru, we are your Manes. We have to obtain, heaven, life, contentment and happiness by the good deeds of your son. So go and get married quickly."

At first he did not like the talk about marriage. Still, in order to procure heaven for his ancestors he agreed to get married. But he made a condition that the name of the bride also should be Jaratkāru and she should be given to him as alms. Saying these words, he walked away along the forest.

News reached the ears of Vāsuki, the King of the Nāgas (serpents) that the hermit Jaratkāru was wandering through the forests calling out that somebody should give him as alms a damsel named Jaratkāru. Vāsuki had a sister. Jaratkāru was her name. Vāsuki decided to give her to the hermit Jaratkāru. She was adorned with costly garments and ornaments and was taken to the hermit Jaratkāru. Jaratkāru said :—

"Hear my condition, I will not cherish her if she causes displeasure to me. If she does so I will send her away instantly."

On condition that if she did anything displeasing to him he would leave her at once, the hermit Jaratkāru married Jaratkāru the sister of Vāsuki. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 2; Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapters 13 and 47).

4) Leaves his wife. Jaratkāru lived in the hermitage with her husband looking after him with love and loyalty. One day the hermit was sleeping with his head on the lap of his wife. Though it was sunset the hermit slept on. It was time for the evening worship of the hermit. If he is aroused he will get angry. The wife was in a difficult situation. Anyhow she aroused her husband. The hermit got up full of anger and shouted, "You have hindered my sleep, you wicked woman and teased me. So from today you are not my wife. I am going away."

She begged him for pardon with tears. But without paying any heed to the entreaties of his pregnant wife, he left her.

The helpless Jaratkāru gave birth to a son named Āstīka who later stopped the famous sacrifice, Sarpa Satra meant for killing the serpents. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 47). See under Jaratkāru II.

JARATKĀRU II.

1) General information. It occurs in Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 9, about Jaratkāru, the sister of Vāsuki and the wife of hermit Jaratkāru as follows. This devī (goddess) is the daughter of Prajāpati Kaśyapa, born from his mind. So she got the name Manasādevī (goddess born from mind). Some think that she got the name Manasādevī because she is the deity of mind. There are some who imagine that she got the name Manasādevī because she held Śrī Kṛṣṇa Paramātman (the Supreme Spirit) firmly in her mind. This devī had been meditating upon Śrī Kṛṣṇa Paramātmā for three yugas (world-ages). She is known by twelve names.

(1) Jaratkāru. Manasādevī had been performing penance, and meditating upon Śrī Kṛṣṇa Paramātman for three complete yugas and her garments and body were worn out. So Kṛṣṇa gave her the name Jaratkāru.

(2) Jagadgaurī. Because she was comely and beautiful and of fair complexion and was worshipped all over the world, she got the name Jagadgaurī.

(3) Manasā. Because she was born from the mind of Kaśyapa, the name "Manasā" was given to her.

(4) Siddhayoginī. As the fruits of her Tapas (penance), she got the attainments of Yoga (meditation, devotion, contemplation and other ways of union with the Universal Soul) and so she was given the name Siddhayoginī.

(5) Vaiṣṇavī. Because she had constant devotion to Mahāviṣṇu she was called Vaiṣṇavī.

(6) Nāgabhaginī. Because she was the sister of Vāsuki the King of the Nāgas, she got the name Nāgabhaginī. (Sister of Nāga).

(7) Śaivī. As she was a disciple of Śiva she got the name Śaivī.

(8) Nāgeśvarī. Because she saved the Nāgas (serpents) from the Sarpasatra (sacrifice for killing the serpents) of Janamejaya the son of the King Parīkṣit, she got the name Nāgeśvarī.

(9) Jaratkārupriyā. Because she became the wife of the hermit Jaratkāru she was called Jaratkārupriyā.

(10) Āstīkamātā. Because she was the mother of the hermit Āstīka she got the name Āstīkamātā.

(11) Viṣahārī. Because she was the goddess who destroyed poison, she was known by the name Viṣahārī.

(12) Mahājñānavatī. Since she had the attainments of vast knowledge, yoga and the power of bringing the dead to life, she was given the name Mahājñānavatī.

2) Birth. Once the serpents became a plague to the men of the earth and they all went to Prajāpati Kaśyapa and made their complaints. Kaśyapa and Brahmā consulted each other and at the instruction of Brahmā Kaśyapa created several Mantras (spells and incantations) and Manasādevī from his mind as the deity of these spells.

3) Power of her tapas (penance). When she was very young she went to Kailāsa and performed penance to Paramaśiva for a thousand years. At last Śiva appeared before her and gave her the divine knowledge, and taught her the Sāmaveda. He gave her the divine Śrī Kṛṣṇa mantra (a spell) called 'Aṣṭākṣarī' and the Śrī Kṛṣṇa Kavaca (the armour of Kṛṣṇa) called Trailokyamaṅgala' and taught her how to use them in worship. Wearing this armour and using the spell she performed penance in Puṣkara, meditating upon Śrī Kṛṣṇa Paramātmā, for three yugas (world ages). At the end of this period Śrī Kṛṣṇa Paramātmā appeared before her and gave her all the boons she wanted. Śrī Kṛṣṇa said that all over the world she would be worshipped and that she had power to give boons to her worshippers.

4) Marriage and rejection. Kaśyapa gave his daughter Manasādevī in marriage to Jaratkāru, a hermit. As they were living in the hermitage, once the hermit slept with his head on the lap of his wife. Seeing the setting sun she aroused her husband. The hermit became angry and decided to reject her. She thought of the Devas, who instantly arrived. Brahmā argued that it was not meet and right to reject his wife before a child was born to her. The hermit touched the groin of his wife and prayed and with the power of yoga (meditation, contemplation etc.) she became pregnant. The son born to her is the famous hermit Āstīka.

After giving birth to Āstīka she went to Kailāsa, where Parameśvara and Pārvatī received her.

5) The mantra (incantation) of worship. To get the attainment of Manasādevī one has to utter the spell (mantra) "Oṁ Hrīṁ-Śrīm-Klīṁ-Aiṁ-Manasādevyai svāhā" five lakh times. He who has got the attainment of this mantra as given above will be equal to Dhanvantari (the physician of the Gods) and to him poison will be Amṛta (ambrosia). This goddess could be invoked into a secluded room on the day of Saṅkrānti (Transit of the Sun). If offerings of oblations and worship are carried on, he would be blessed with children, wealth and fame.

JARĀSANDHA I. A terrible King of Magadha.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu in the following order :—Brahmā - Atri-Candra-Budha-Purūravas-Āyus-Nahuṣa - Yayāti-Pūru - Janamejaya-Prācinvān-Pravīra-Namasyu - Vītabhaya-Śuṇḍu-Bahuvidha-Saṁyati-Rahovādi - Raudrāśva - Matināra - Santurodha - Duṣyanta-Bharata-Suhotra-Suhotā-Gala - Garda - Suketu - Bṛhatkṣetra-Hasti-Ajamīḍha-Ṛṣa-Saṁvaraṇa-Pūru-Sudhanvā-Cyavana-Kṛti-Vasu-Bṛhadratha-Jarāsandha.

2) Birth. Jarāsandha was created by joining together two halves of a child, by a giantess called Jarā, and so this child got the name Jarāsandha. (For detailed story see under Jarā).

3) The first battle with Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Asti and Prāpti, the two wives of Kaṁsa, were daughters of Jarāsandha. When Śrī Kṛṣṇa killed Kaṁsa, the two daughters went to their father and shed tears before him. Jarāsandha became angry and with a mighty army surrounded the city of Mathurā. A fierce battle was fought between Jarāsandha and Kṛṣṇa. At last Balabhadrarāma caught hold of Jarāsandha and was about to kill him, when an ethereal voice said that Balabhadrarāma was not the person to kill Jarāsandha. Accordingly Rāma and Kṛṣṇa set Jarāsandha free. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

4) Other information.

(1) It is mentioned in Bhāgavata, Skandha 10, that Jarāsandha was the teacher too, of Kaṁsa.

(2) Jarāsandha had four sons, Soma, Sahadeva, Tūrya and Srutāśru of whom Sahadeva became King of Magadha, after the death of Jarāsandha.

(3) Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, that Jarāsandha had been present at the Svayaṁvara (marriage) of Pāñcālī.

(4) Once there arose a battle between Jarāsandha and Karṇa, in which Jarāsandha was defeated and so he made a treaty with Karṇa. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 5, Stanza 6).

5) The death of Jarāsandha. The enmity between Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Jarāsandha was life-long. These two mighty powers confronted each other eighteen times. Śrī Kṛṣṇa decided to kill Jarāsandha, the King of Magadha, in a duel. Once Śrī Kṛṣṇa with Arjuna and Bhīma, reached the city of Magadha in the guise of Brāhmaṇas. They started from the kingdom of Kuru travelled through Kurujāṅgala and passed by Padmasaras and Kālakūṭa, visited the holy places of Gaṇḍakī, Mahāśoṇā, Sadānīrā and such others, crossed the river Sarayū and reached the opposite bank. Then they travelled through the countries of East Kosala and Mithilā. Touring through the countries they crossed the rivers Carmaṇvatī, Gaṅgā and Śoṇa. Wearing matted hair and barks of trees they reached Girivraja, the capital city of Magadha. There were three big drums, which were used only on special occasions. The hide of elephant was used for making them.[1] Seeing all these sights they reached the presence of Jarāsandha, who welcomed them with necessary formalities and talked with them. But they kept silence. At last Śrī Kṛṣṇa told him that his two friends were having the vow of silence, which would terminate only at midnight. So the King left them in the sacrificial hall and went to the palace. He came to them at midnight and asked them who they were. Śrī Kṛsha revealed to him that they were Kṛṣṇa, Bhīma and Arjuna, who had come to fight a duel with Jarāsandha, who had unreasonably put many innocent Kings in dungeon, and challenged him to select any one of them for duel. Jarāsandha, trembling with fury, selected Bhīma. In that duel Jarāsandha was killed. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, 3 Chapters from 20).

6) Names given to Jarāsandha. Bārhadratha, Māgadha, Magadhādhipa and Jarāputra are some of the names used in the Mahābhārata by Vyāsa as synonyms of Jarāsandha.

JARĀSANDHA II. (Śatrusaha). One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 137, Stanza 30 that this Jarāsandha was killed by Bhīmasena.

JARĀSANDHA III. In Karṇa Parva of the Mahābhārata, Chapter 5, Stanza 30, we see a King Jayatsena who fought on the side of the Kauravas and had been killed by Abhimanyu. The father of this King Jayatsena was one Jarāsandha, a Kṣatriya of Magadha.

JARĀSANDHAVADHAPARVA. A sub-section of Sabhā Parva, of the Mahābhārata. This sub-section comprises of Chapters 20 to 24 of Sabhā Parva.

JARĀYU. An attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 43, Stanza 19).

JARITĀ. A mother bird with four young ones, who suffered much in the burning of the forest Khāṇḍava. (For detailed story see under Khāṇḍavadāha, Para 8).

JARITĀRI. A son of the mother bird Jaritā. (See under Khāṇḍavadāha, Para 8).

JARJARĀNANĀ. An attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 19).

JARTIKA. A tribe of Vāhikas. They are considered to be the lowest of the tribes. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 44, Stanza 10).

JĀRUDHI. A country in ancient India. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 38).

JĀRŪTHĪ. An ancient city. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 12, Stanza 30, that Śrī Kṛṣṇa, with his friends Āhuti and Kratha defeated Śiśupāla, Jarāsandha, Śaibya and Śatadhanvan in this city.

JATĀDHARA. A warrior of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 61).

JĀTAKARMĀDISAMSKĀRA (S). In the ancient days the people of Bhārata observed certain social and customary rites immediately after the birth of a child. They were known as Jātakarmans. Each caste had its own jātakarmans. They are given below :

If it is a male child jātakarman should be done before cutting the umbilical cord. At that time gold is to be rubbed in ghee and honey and the tongue of the child should be touched with it, uttering mantras (spells) (Colloquial name of this rite is giving gold and honey). The child should be named on the tenth or twelfth day after birth, selecting suitable lunar day, good star and auspicious moment. The name should imply prosperity to Brāhmans, might to Kṣatriyas, wealth to Vaiśyas and humility to Śūdras. That is, the word 'Śarman' in the case of Brāhmaṇa, 'Varman' for Kṣatriyas, 'Gupta' for Vaiśyas and 'Dāsa' for Śūdras, should be added to the name. The names given to girls should be of easy utterance, having clear meaning but not cruel, very beautiful, charming, and propitious avoiding long letters as far as possible. Four months after delivery, the child should be taken out of the room of confinement to see the Sun. On the sixth month the rite of 'Annaprāśa' (feeding with rice) should be performed. In accordance with hereditary customs the two rites mentioned above may be performed at any time after the third month. For Brāhmaṇas and Kṣatriyas the ceremony of 'Caula' (tonsure) may be performed at the time of birth or at the age of three. The ceremony of Upanayana (Investiture with the Brāhma string) should be conducted at the age of eight from pregnancy for Brāhmaṇas, at the age of eleven from pregnancy for Kṣatriyas and at the age of twelve for Vaiśyas. But Upanayana could be performed at the age of five for Brāhmaṇas who desire Brāhma-radiance, at the age of six for Kṣatriyas who desire might and at the age of eight for Vaiśyas who desire wealth. There is another opinion that Upanayana could be performed up to the age of sixteen for Brāhmaṇas and twentytwo for Kṣatriyas. Even after the attainment of this age, if this ceremony is not performed, that boy will be considered an out-cast from the mantra (spell) of Gāyatrī, and will have no admittance to the rituals and ceremonies performed by Brāhmaṇas and will be known by the name Vrātya (an outcast, uninvested Brāhmaṇa). These Vrātyas could not be taught Vedas or be given women as wives.

Brāhmaṇa, Kṣatriya and Vaiśya brahmacāris (celibates) could use the hides of black antelope, spotted deer or goat as upper garment and clothes made of silk thread, flax or wool of sheep or red leopard. To tie round the waist, Brāhmaṇas have to make belts out of Muñja (grass), Kṣatriyas, out of Mūrva (grass) and Vaiśyas out of flax. When these are not available, Brāhmaṇas may use Kuśa grass, Kṣatriyas ñānal grass and Vaiśyas Darbha grass called balbaja to make belts of customary three darns or five darns with a knot. A celibate should have a stick. For Brāhmaṇas the stick should be made of Bilva (Aegle marmelos) or "palāśa" (butea frondosa) and for Kṣatriyas, of banyan or blackwood. (Mimosa catechu) and for Vaiśyas, of Dillenia speciosa (Uka tree) or fig tree. For Brāhmaṇas the stick should reach up to the top of the head, for Kṣatriyas up to the forehead and for Vaiśyas up to the nose. Before going for alms, the celibate should take his stick, bow before the sun, go round the fire and only then set out. The alms received should be offered to the teacher as oblation, then he should turn to the east and wash hands and mouth and eat it. Brāhmaṇas should wear the upper garment or their sacred thread (Yajñasūtra) on the left shoulder and under the right arm and then it is called 'Upavīta'; if it is on the right shoulder and under the left arm it is called "Prācīnāvīta" and if it is round the neck it is called "Nivīta".

These Jātakarmans may be done for the female child also at the stipulated times by tantras, without reciting mantras, for the purification of the body. The rituals performed without reciting Vedamantras (spells) are called tantras. For women marriage is to be considered as Upanayana, looking after the needs of husband to be considered as learning at the house of the teacher, and housekeeping as samidādhāna (gathering fuel of Butea frondosa). (Manusmṛti, Chapter 2).

JAṬĀLIKĀ. A female attendant of Skanda. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 23).

JAṬĀPĀṬHA. See under Ghanapāṭha.

JĀTARŪPAŚILA. A mountain. This mountain stands in a place having an area of thirteen yojanas, on the opposite shore of the sea where the water-creatures fall with tremendous cry at the mouth of the submarine fire (Baḍavāgni). The monkeys sent by Sugrīva to search for Sītā, made a search in this mountain also. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Kiṣkindhā Kāṇḍa, Sarga 40, Stanza 50).

JAṬĀSURA I. A King, who was a member of Dharmaputra's assembly. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 24).

JAṬĀSURA II. A Rākṣasa, Jaṭāsura, disguised as a brahmin lived with the Pāṇḍavas in the forest. His aim was to carry off Pāñcālī and the arrows of the Pāṇḍavas as and when he got an opportunity for it. One day taking advantage of Arjuna's absence Bhīma was out ahunting) Jaṭāsura caught hold of the others as also the arrows and ran away with them. Sahadeva alone managed to slip away from his clutches. Dharmaputra pledged his word that Jaṭāsura would be killed before the sunset. Hearing all the hubbub (Bhīma hurried to the scene, killed the Asura and saved his brothers and Pāñcālī from difficulties and danger. (Vana Parva, Chapter 157).

JAṬĀSURA III. This Jaṭāsura had a son called Alambuṣa who was killed by Ghaṭotkaca in the great war. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 174).

JAṬĀSURA PARVA. A sub-Parva of Mahābhārata. (See under Mahābhārata).

JĀTAVEDA (S). Three sons of Purūravas, born from Agni (fire). They are called the Jātavedas. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

JAṬĀYU. A bird famous in the Purāṇas.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu as follows, Brahmā—Marīci—Kaśyapa—Aruṇa—Jaṭāyu.

2) Birth. Two sons called Sampāti and Jaṭāyu were born to Aruṇa. Their mother, a bird, was Śyenī. Śyenī, wife of Aruṇa, delivered two children, Sampāti and the great Jaṭāyu (Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 71). "Know that I am the son of Aruṇa and Sampāti is my elder brother. My name is Jaṭāyu, and I am the son of Śyenī." (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Canto 14, Verse 32).

But, according to Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, the name of the mother of Sampāti and Jaṭāyu was Mahāśvetā. (Kiṣkindhā Kāṇḍa). Perhaps, Śyenī was also known as Mahāśvetā.

3) Jaṭāyu flies towards Sūrya. Sampāti and Jaṭāyu, once under a bet flew up towards the sun. Jaṭāyu outflew Sampāti, and in the exuberance of youth entered Sūrya's orbit at noon time with the result that, due to the excessive heat his wings were scorched. At this Sampāti, to save his brother, flew up higher than Jaṭāyu and spread out his wings like an umbrella over Jaṭāyu with the result that Sampāti's wings were burnt, and he fell down somewhere on the Vindhya mountains. He spent the rest of his life under the protection of a sage called Niśākara who was performing penance on the mountains. After their tragic meeting in Sūryamaṇḍala Sampāti and Jaṭāyu never again met in their life. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Kiṣkindhā Kāṇḍa, Chapter 58; Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Kiṣkindhā Kāṇḍa).

4) Fought with Rāvaṇa. Jaṭāyu clashed with Rāvaṇa, who was carrying away Sītādevī in his vimāna, and in the fierce fight that they fought in the air, Rāvaṇa cut off Jaṭāyu's wings and thus felled him on the earth, almost dead. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇya Kāṇḍa, Chapter 51).

5) Death. Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa during their search in the forest for Sītā came upon Jaṭāyu lying without wings almost dead and reciting Rāma's name. Jaṭāyu described to Rāma how Rāvaṇa had carried away Sītā and how he had tried to stop him and fought with him. After giving this account he died. Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa lit a fire and cremated Jaṭāyu. The great bird's soul attained salvation. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa).

JAṬĪ. A warrior of Subrahmaṇya. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 61).

JĀTI. See under Cāturvarṇya.

JAṬILA. The name assumed by Śiva when he played the part of a Brahmacārin. Pārvatī began rigorous penance to obtain Śiva as her husband, and Śiva visited her disguised as Jaṭila, a brahmacārin to test her. (Śiva Purāṇa, Śatarudrasaṁhitā).

JAṬILĀ. A righteous and generous woman who was born in the Gautama dynasty. She once sought the help of the saptarṣis. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 195; also See under Gautamī II).

JĀTISMARA. A holy bath. It is mentioned in the Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 128 that the body and mind of the person who bathes in this tīrtha (bath) will become pure.

JĀTISMARAHRADA. A holy place. In the Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Stanza 3, mention is made that if a man gives alms at this holy place, he will be able to remember his previous birth and life.

JĀTISMARAKĪṬA. A worm which got emancipation through the advice of Vyāsa. Once while Vyāsa was roaming about in the country, by chance he saw this worm. It was running through the road, seeing a cart coming very fast. Vyāsa stopped it and asked, "What are you running from ?" The worm replied that he was running in fear that the wheel of the cart coming from behind might crush him. In the previous birth this worm was a Śūdra. Jealousy, resentment, arrogance, selfishness etc. were the traits of his character in his previous life. Only twice in his life had he done good deeds. Once he honoured his mother and on another occasion he respected a Brāhmaṇa. Because of these two good deeds, in his present life as worm he had the remembrance of his previous life. Vyāsa gave the worm necessary advice. Instantly the worm was crushed under the wheel of the cart.

In the next rebirth this Jātismarakīṭa was born as a Kṣatriya King. As he was leading the life of a powerful King he met with Vyāsa. He received advice from the hermit. In his next life he became a Brāhmaṇa and finally he attained bliss. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, 3 Chapters from 117).

JAṬHARA I. A very erudite brahmin scholar in Vedic lore. Jaṭhara was a prominent figure at the serpent yajña held by Janamejaya. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 53, Verse 8).

JAṬHARA II. A mountain within the ranges of Mahāmeru. On the eastern side of Mahāmeru there exist two mountains called Jaṭhara and Devakūṭa, 18, 000 yojanas in extent and 2000 yojanas high. On the western side of Meru are the mountains called Pavamāna and Pāriyātra, on the southern side Kailāsa and Karavīra, and on the northern side Triśṛṅga and Makaragiri. (Devī Bhāgavata, 8th Skandha).

JAṬHARA III. An urban region in ancient India.

JĀṬHARA. A warrior of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 128).

JATUGṚHAM. See under Arakkillam (lac palace).

JATUGṚHAPARVA. A particular section of Ādi Parva.

JĀTUKARṆA. An ancient hermit with control over his senses. He was a member of the council of Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 14).

JAVA. A warrior of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 75).

JAYA I. A son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 63, Stanza 119). He fought with Arjuna at the time of the stealing of cows. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 54). This Jaya fought with Nīla and Bhīma in the battle of Bhārata. Bhīma killed him. (Droṇa Parva, Chapters 25 and 135).

JAYA II. A deva (god). At the time of the burning of the forest Khāṇḍava, this deva came with an iron pestle to fight with Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 226 Stanza 34).

JAYA III. A King in ancient India. He sits in the Durbar of Yama (God of death) and worships him. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 3, Stanza 15).

JAYA IV. A synonym of the Sun. (M.B. Parva, Chapter 3, Stanza 24).

JAYA V. The pseudo name taken by Yudhiṣṭhira at the time of the pseudonymity of the Pāṇḍavas in the country of Virāṭa. Bhīma was known as Jayanta, Arjuna by the name Vijaya, Nakula by the name Jayatsena and Sahadeva by the name Jayadbala at that time. (Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 5, Stanza 35). At that time Pāñcālī addressed all her five husbands by the name Jaya. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 23, Stanza 12).

JAYA VI. A nāga (serpent) born in the family of Kaśyapa. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 103, Stanza 16).

JAYA VII. A warrior who fought on the side of the Kauravas. It is mentioned in the Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 156, that both Śakuni and this warrior fought with Arjuna.

JAYA VIII. A warrior of the country of Pāñcāla. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Karṇa Parva, Chapter 56, Stanza 44 that this warrior fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas and that Karṇa wounded him in the battle.

JAYA IX. One of the attendants given to Subrahmaṇya by Vāsuki, the King of the Nāgas (serpents). Vāsuki gave Subrahmaṇya two attendants named Jaya and Mahājaya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 52).

JAYA X. A synonym of Mahāviṣṇu. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 149, Stanza 67).

JAYA XI. (JAYAVIJAYAS). They were gate-keepers of Vaikuṇṭha. As these two sons of devas were engaged in the service of Mahāviṣṇu guarding the gate, the hermits Sanaka and others came to see Mahāviṣṇu to pay him homage. Jaya and Vijaya stopped them at the gate. Sanaka got angry and cursed them to take three births on the earth as Asuras (demons). The sorrowful Jaya and Vijaya requested for absolution from the curse. The hermit said that they had to take three births as Asuras and that they would be redeemed by the weapon of Mahāviṣṇu. Accordingly Jaya and Vijaya were born in the earth as Hiraṇyākṣa and Hiraṇyakaśipu. They were killed by Mahāviṣṇu. n the second birth they were Rāvaṇa and Kumbhakarṇa. Mahāviṣṇu incarnated as Śrī Rāma killed them. In the third birth they were Śiśupāla and Dantavaktra. They were killed by Śrī Kṛṣṇa, an incarnation of Bhagavān Viṣṇu. For further details see under Hiraṇyākṣa. Hiraṇyakaśipu, Rāvaṇa; Kumbhakarṇa, Śiśupāla and Dantavaktra. After three births Jaya and Vijaya returned to Vaikuṇṭha. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 7).

JAYA XII. Father of the Rākṣasa (giant) Virādha, who was killed by Śrī Rāma at the forest Daṇḍaka. Virādha was born to the giant Jaya by his wife Śatahradā. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇya Kāṇḍa, Sarga 3).

JAYA XIII. The original name of the Mahābhārata written by Vyāsa. Many of the scholars are of opinion that Vyāsa was not the author of the whole of the Mahābhārata that we see in its present form now. They say that the Bhārata written by Vyāsa consisted only of eight thousand and eight hundred stanzas. That work was named Jaya. To those eight thousand and eight hundred stanzas Vaiśampāyana added fifteen thousand, two hundred stanzas and this great book was given the name Bhārata or Bhārata saṁhitā (Bhārata collection). When Sūta recited this book to other hermits in Naimiśāraṇya the book had a lakh of stanzas. Henceforward the book was called Mahābhārata, (History of classical Sanskrit Literature; Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 62, Stanza 20).

JAYĀ. I. A daughter of the hermit Gautama. Gautama had two daughters by his wife Ahalyā named Jayantī and Aparājitā besides Jayā. While Dakṣa was performing a yāga, (sacrifice) this Jayā informed Pārvatī of it. Pārvatī fell down when she heard that Dakṣa had not invited Śiva to the sacrifice. Śiva got angry at Dakṣa's negligence and from his wrath the Bhūtagaṇas such as Vīrabhadra and others (attendants of Śiva) arose. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 4).

JAYĀ. II. Wife of Puṣpadanta, a gaṇa (attendant of Śiva). See under Puṣpadanta.

JAYĀ. III. Another name of Pārvatī. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 6, Stanza 16).

JAYĀ IV. A daughter of Dakṣa. Two daughters named Jayā and Suprabhā were born to Dakṣa. To Suprabhā and Jayā fifty sons each were born. These hundred sons wore various kinds of arrows and such other weapons. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Sarga 21).

JAYĀ V. A maid of Pārvatī. It is seen in Skanda Purāṇa that this Jayā was the daughter of Prajāpati Kṛśāśva.

JĀYĀ. Wife. The husband enters the wife in the form of semen and takes birth as the foetus and then is born from her as son and so the wife is called Jāyā.

"Patirbhāryāṁ sampraviśya
Garbho bhūtveha jāyate /
Jāyāyāstaddhi jāyātvaṁ
Yadasyāṁ jāyate punaḥ" // (Manusmṛti, Chapter 9, Stanza 8).

JAYA (M) I. The name of an auspicious moment. This has the name Vijayam also. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 6, Stanza 17).

JAYA (M) II. The name given to the story of Vidulā. See under Vidulā.

JAYADBALA. The false name assumed by Sahadeva at the time of the incognito life of the Pāṇḍavas in the city of Virāṭa. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 5, Stanza 35).

JAYADEVA I. A Sanskrit poet who lived in the 13th century A.D. He is the author of the play 'Prasannarāghavam'. As far as the story of Śrī Rāma is concerned, some changes have been made in this play from that given by Bhavabhūti in his 'Mahāvīracarita'. According to this play Śrī Rāma and Bāṇāsura both were lovers of Sītā. The famous work 'Candrāloka', a treatise on rhetorical figures, was written by this poet Jayadeva. His most important work is 'Gītagovinda', the theme of which is the early life of Śrī Kṛṣṇa, especially the love between Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Rādhā, which is very touchingly described. This book consists of 12 sargas and each sarga contains 24 octaves. This poet was a devotee of Kṛṣṇa. He used to sing lyrics before the image of Kṛṣṇa while his wife danced according to the beat.

JAYADEVA II. See under Duśśāsana II.

JAYADHVAJA. The fifth of the hundred sons of Kārtavīryārjuna. It is stated in Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 46 that, of the hundred sons of Kārtavīryārjuna, Śūra, Śūrasena, Dhiṣaṇa, Madhu and Jayadhvaja were the mightiest warriors. This Jayadhvaja was the father of Tālajaṅgha.

JAYADRATHA I. A mighty warrior King who ruled over the kingdom of Sindhu.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu in the following order: Brahmā—Atri—Candra—Budha—Purūravas—Āyus—Nahuṣa—Yayāti—Pūru—Janamejaya—Prācinvān—Pravīra—Namasyu—Vītabhaya—Śuṇḍu—Bahuvidha—Saṁyāti—Rahovādi—Raudrāśva—Matināra—Santurodha—Duṣyanta—Bharata—Suhotra—Suhotā—Gala—Gardda—Suketu—Bṛhatkṣatra—Hasti—Ajamīḍha—Bṛhadiṣu—Bṛhaddhanu—Bṛhatkāya—Jayadratha[1]

2) Birth and attainment of Boon. Jayadratha was born as a result of severe fasts and vows taken by his father. There was an ethereal voice at the birth of Jayadratha, "This child would become a very famous King. The head of him, who puts down the head of this child on the earth would break into a hundred pieces within a moment" His father was filled with joy when he heard this ethereal voice, and so he made Jayadratha King at a very young age and went to Samantapañcaka to perform penance. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 146).

3) Marriage. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 116, Stanza 17, that Jayadratha married the princess Duśśalā.

4) Jayadratha and Pāñcālī. From the very beginning Jayadratha was a bitter enemy of the Pāṇḍavas. It is not difficult to find out the root of this enmity. It is stated in Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Stanza 21 that Jayadratha was present at the svayaṁvara of Pāñcālī. The fact that he did not get Pāñcālī, might have laid the foundation of this enmity.

From this moment Jayadratha was looking forward to a chance to carry off Pāñcālī.

The forest life of the Pāṇḍavas began. They wandered through many forests and finally reached the forest, Kāmyaka. Once the Pāṇḍavas left Pāñcālī alone in the hut and went to the forest for hunting. Jayadratha came to know of this. He came with his men to the place where the hut stood. At the very first sight of Pāñcālī, he fell in love with her. He sent Koṭikāsya, the King of Trigarta, who was the son of Suratha as a messenger to Pāñcālī. Koṭikāsya told Pāñcālī about the superior qualities of Jayadratha and requested her to accept Jayadratha, leaving the Pāṇḍavas. But she rejected his request. The messenger returned to Jayadratha and told him what had happened. Jayadratha himself came in a chariot and tried to entice her. Pāñcālī did not yield. Jayadratha caught her by force and took her away in his chariot. Dhaumya the priest of the Pāṇḍavas followed them with tears. Shortly afterwards, the Pāṇḍavas returned to the hut. They searched for Pāñcālī here and there. They heard everything from a maid, and instantly followed Jayadratha, whose army confronted the Pāṇḍavas. The heads of almost all the warriors of Jayadratha fell on the ground. Jayadratha fled from the battlefield. The Pāṇḍavas followed him and caught him and scourged him. Bhīma shaved his head letting only five hairs to stand on the head. They took him as a prisoner before Dharmaputra. Finally at the instruction of Yudhiṣṭhira and Pāñcālī, he was released. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapters 264 to 272).

5) Other details.

(1) In the sacrifice of Rājasūya (imperial consecration) performed by Yudhiṣṭhira, Jayadratha took part as a tributary King. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 34, Stanza 8).

(2) Jayadratha was present at the game of dice between Duryodhana and Yudhiṣṭhira. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 58, Stanza 28).

(3) It was while going to Sālva to marry a damsel that Jayadratha attacked Pāñcālī at the forest of Kāmyaka. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 264).

(4) Feeling ashamed at the result of his attempt to carry off Pāñcālī, Jayadratha went direct to Gaṅgādvāra and pleased Śiva by penance. Śiva gave him the boon that he would be able to defeat all the Pāṇḍavas except Arjuna. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 272).

6) Jayadratha in the battle of Bhārata.

In the battle of Bhārata, which lasted for eighteen days between the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas, Jayadratha

1. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 67 that Jayadratha was the son of Bṛhatkṣatra. After Bharata, Bṛhatkṣatra was the only famous and mighty emperor. Really speaking Jayadratha was the grandson of Bṛhatkṣatra. The statement that Jayadratha was the son of Bṛhatkṣatra only means that he was a descendant of that king.

took the side of the Kauravas and fought against the Pāṇḍavas. The part played by him in the battle is given below:—

(1) On the first day there was a combat between Jayadratha and Drupada. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Stanzas 55 to 57).

(2) Attacked Bhīmasena. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 79, Stanzas 17 to 20).

(3) Fought with Arjuna and Bhīmasena. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapters 113 and 115).

(4) Engaged in a combat with the King Virāṭa. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 116, Stanzas 42 to 44).

(5) Jayadratha and Abhimanyu fought with each other. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 14, Stanzas 64 to 74).

(6) Fought with Kṣatravarman. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 25, Stanzas 10 to 12).

(7) Arjuna vowed that he would kill Jayadratha, who tried to flee from the battle-field when he came to know of this. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 74, Stanzas 4 to 12).

(8) He began to combat with Arjuna. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter, 145).

7) The death of Jayadratha. When a fierce fight began between Arjuna and Jayadratha, Śrī Kṛṣṇa came to Arjuna and said, "Arjuna, there was an ethereal voice at the birth of Jayadratha. The head of the person who puts down the head of Jayadratha on the earth, would be broken into a hundred pieces. So send an arrow in such a way that his head falls on the lap of his father." Hearing this, Arjuna sent an arrow which cut off the head of Jayadratha and the head fell in the lap of Jayadratha's father who had been sitting in deep penance and meditation in Samantapañcaka. Instantly the father awoke from meditation and stood up and the head of his beloved son, with ear-rings on both ears fell on the earth and the head of the father was broken into a hundred pieces and he died. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 146, Stanzas 104 to 130).

8) The names of Jayadratha. Saindhavaka, Saindhava, Sauvīra, Sauvīraja, Sauvīrarāja, Sindhupati Sindhurāja, Sindhurāṭ, Sindhusauvīrabhartā, Suvīra, Suvīrarāṣṭrapa, Vārdhakṣatri and such other names are used as synonyms of Jayadratha in the Mahābhārata.

JAYADRATHA II. In Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Stanza 36 we see another Jayadratha who sits in the durbar of yama (the death-god) and meditates upon him.

JAYADRATHAVADHAPARVA. A sub section of Droṇa Parva in Mahā Bhārata. This consists of Chapters 85 to 152 of Droṇa Parva.

JAYADRATHAVIMOKṢAṆA PARVA. A sub section of the Vana Parva, in Mahābhārata. Chapter 272 is in this section.

JAYĀNĪKA I. A grandson of Drupada. Mention is made in the Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 156 Stanza 18, that this Jayānīka was killed by Aśvatthāmā.

JAYĀNĪKA II. A brother of the King of Virāṭa. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 158, Stanza 42).

JAYANTA I. Son of Indra.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu in the following order: Brahmā — Marīci — Kaśyapa—Indra—Jayanta. Jayanta was the son born to Indra by his wife Śacīdevī. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 112, Stanzas 3 and 4).

2) Jayanta lost one eye. During his forest life, Śrī Rāma lived with Sītā and Lakṣmaṇa on the mountain Citrakūṭa for some days. Once Śrī Rāma, being very tired of walking in the forest fell asleep with his head in the lap of Sītā. Taking this chance Jayanta came in the shape of a crow and scratched the breast of Sītā with his claws. Sītā cried and Śrī Rāma woke up and saw Jayanta in the shape of a crow. Rāma got angry and shot the Brahmāstra (a divine arrow) against Jayanta. Fear of life made him fly throughout the whole of the three worlds. Even Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Maheśvara were unable to protect him, All the while the divine arrow followed him. Finally having no go he came and fell at the feet of Śrī Rāma. Śrī Rāma said that the Brahmāstra could never become futile and so the arrow must hit his right eye. Accordingly the arrow struck at his right eye and thus Jayanta lost his right eye. In Adhyātma Rāmāyaṇa this story is stated with some slight changes. According to Adhyātma Rāmāyaṇa, this incident took place when Sītā had been drying raw flesh. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Sundara Kāṇḍa, Sarga 38).

3) Jayanta hidden in the ocean. After getting the boons Rāvaṇa became arrogant and with a big army went to the realm of the gods. Rāvaṇa engaged Indra in a fierce battle. In that fight Meghanāda the son of Rāvaṇa attacked Jayanta, who swooned and fell down. Immediately Pulomā, the father of Śacīdevī, gathered Jayanta in his hands unseen by anybody and hid him in the sea. After the disappearance of Jayanta the battle entered the second stage. Thinking that his son Jayanta had been killed, Indra began to fight with Rāvaṇa with more vigour than before. In the battle which followed Meghanāda subdued Indra and made him a captive. Taking Indra and the celestial maids as captives, Rāvaṇa and his men went to Laṅkā. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

4) Jayanta became Bamboo. Once Agastya came to Indra's durbar. Indra arranged for the dance of Urvaśī in honour of Agastya's visit. In the midst of the dance Urvaśī saw Jayanta before her and she fell in love with him. Consequently her steps went out of beat. Nārada who was playing his lute called Mahatī went wrong. Agastya got angry and cursed Jayanta and changed him to a bamboo. Urvaśī was cursed to become a woman with the name Mādhavī. Agastya cursed Nārada that his lute Mahatī would become the lute of the people of the world. (Vāyu Purāṇa).

5) Other information.

(1) In the stealing of the Pārijātapuṣpa (the flower of a paradise tree) Jayanta fought with Pradyumna the son of Śrī Kṛṣṇa and was defeated. (Viṣṇu Parva Chapter 73).

(2) Jayanta was defeated by Śūrapadma, an Asura, in a battle. (Skanda Purāṇa, Asura Kāṇḍa).

JAYANTA II. During the time of his life incognito in Virāṭa the name assumed by Bhīmasena was Jayanta. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 5, Stanza 35).

JAYANTA III. In Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 171, Stanza 11, mention is made about one Jayanta of Pāñcāla.

JAYANTA IV. One of the eleven Rudras. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 208, Stanza 20).

JAYANTA V. A synonym of Mahāviṣṇu (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 149, Stanza 98).

JAYANTA VI. One of the twelve Ādityas. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 150, Stanza 15).

JAYANTA VII. One of the ministers of Daśaratha. The eight ministers of Daśaratha were Jayanta, Dhṛṣṭi, Vijaya, Asiddhārtha, Arthasādhaka, Aśoka, Mantrapālaka and Sumantra. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Sarga 7).

JAYANTĪ I. A holy place on the bank of the river Sarasvatī. There is a tīrtha (bath) here known as Somatīrtha. It is mentioned in the Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 19 that those who bathe in this tīrtha would obtain the fruits of the sacrifice of Rājasūya. (Imperial consecration).

JAYANTĪ II. Daughter of Indra and sister of Jayanta. In Bhāgavata, Skandha 4, there is a story stating how Jayantī was the wife of Śukra for ten years.

Śukrācārya was the teacher-priest of the Asuras (demons). Once the devas (gods) had completely defeated the Asuras. With the intention of procuring new powers from Śrī Parameśvara, Śukrācārya went to Kailāsa. When the penance of Śukra became more and more severe the gods and Indra began to be flurried. Indra told his daughter Jayantī to become the servant of Śukra and to break his penance somehow or other. Jayantī did not like this procedure of her father. Still she did not like to disobey her father. So she went to Kailāsa and became the attendant of Śukra and stayed with him. She served him dutifully and with chastity. She would fan him with plantain leaf. She would prepare cold and fragrant water for him to drink. When the Sun became hotter she would hold her upper garment as an umbrella so that he should be in the shade. She would gather fully ripened good fruits for him to eat. She would gather good variety of darbha grass, cut them into the length of a span and with good flowers she would give them to the hermit for his morning oblations. She would gather soft sprouts and make bed for him and would stand near him fanning till he slept. She would get water ready for him to rinse his mouth when he woke up. Thus she did the work of a dutiful disciple. She did not, in any way by speech or action, try to entice him so that his vow of penance might be broken. She spoke only words which would be pleasing and helpful to him. This continued for thousand years and then Paramaśiva appeared before him and gave the boons he requested for. After that Śukrācārya talked with her. In accordance with her request the hermit Śukra allowed her to live with him for ten years as his wife. He gave her a boon that during that period of ten years they both would be invisible to the world. Thus Śukrācārya married Jayantī and they lived in the house very happily for ten years

JAYANTĪ III. The queen of the King Ṛṣabha who was born in the dynasty of King Agnīdhra. Hundred children were born to Ṛṣabha of Jayantī (See under Ṛṣabha II).

JAYAPRIYĀ. A female attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 12).

JAYARĀTA. A warrior who fought on the side of the Kauravas. Bhīmasena killed this warrior, who was a prince of Kaliṅga, in the battle of Bhārata. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 155, Stanza 28).

JAYARATHA. A Sanskrit poet who lived in Kāśmīra in the 12th century. He was a Śaivite. His important work is Haracaritacintāmaṇi'. (History of classical Sanskrit literature).

JAYAŚARMAN. A Brāhmaṇa who became wealthy by taking the vow of Kamalā (Kamalāvrata). Kamalā is the eleventh day of 'Adhimāsa'.

It is believed that this day is better than other days. If a man fasts on that day Goddess Kamalā will be pleased with him.

The devotee should awake in the Brāhma muhūrta (fortyeight minutes before sunrise) and take bath thinking of Puruṣottama and begin the fast. If the prayer and meditation is conducted at the house he will get double the fruits. If it is at a river it will yield four times the fruits. If it is at a cow-shed the fruits will be thousandfold and if it is conducted at a fireshed or Śaivite temple, at a holy bath or in the presence of God the fruits will be a thousand and one hundredfold and if it is near a tulasī (holy basil) the fruits will be a lakhfold and if it is done in the presence of Viṣṇu the fruits obtained will be unlimited.

This Jayaśarman who took the fast was the son of a noble Brāhmaṇa named Śivaśarman of Avantī. He was the youngest of five sons. He became a wicked man. So he was avoided by his relatives. Being driven away from home, he went to a distant forest and lived there. Once, by luck, he happened to reach the holy place of Triveṇī Mahātīrtha. He was very tired of hunger and thirst. So he bathed in the tīrtha and searched for some hermitage. By chance he saw the hermitage of Harimitra As it was the month of Puruṣottama many people had gathered there. Brāhmaṇas were telling stories of mitigation of sins. He heard the story of the vow called Kamalāvrata and its fruits. So Jayaśarman stayed in that hermitage with them and took the vow of Kamalāvrata. That night Devī appeared before him and said : "I have come from Vaikuṇṭha, because I am greatly pleased with you. Since you have taken the vow of Kamalāvrata on the eleventh day of the dark lunar fortnight called Kamalā of the month of Puruṣottama I will grant you boons. Because you have taken the vow at Triveṇī, I am immensely pleased with you. The noble Brāhmaṇas of your future generations also will be blessed by me". Saying these words the Devī gave him boons and disappeared. From that day onwards Jayaśarmā became a great wealthy man and he returned to his father's house (Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 64).

JAYASENA I. Father of the famous Caṇḍamahāsena. (See under Caṇḍamahāsena).

JAYASENA II. A prince of Magadha. He was a member of the council of Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Sabhā Parva Chapter. 4, Stanza 26).

JAYASENA III. A King of Avanti. To this King was born a son named Vindānuvinda and a daughter named Mitravindā by his chief wife Rājādhidevī. Mitravindā was married by Śrī Kṛṣṇa.

JAYĀŚVA I. A son of King Drupada. It is mentioned in Mahā Bhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 156, Stanza 181 that Jayāśva was killed by Aśvatthāmā in the battle of Bhārata.

JAYĀŚVA II. A brother of the King of Virāṭa. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 158, Stanza 42).

JAYATSENA I. A King of the kingdom of Magadha. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 67 that this King, who was the son of Jarāsandha, belonged to the family of Kālakeya. This King was a friend of the Pāṇḍavas. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Stanza 8, that Jayatsena was present at the svayamvara (marriage) of Draupadī. Towards the end of the battle of Bhārata, the Pāṇḍavas sent a letter of invitation to this King and accordingly he came to the help of the Pāṇḍavas with an akṣauhiṇī of army (21870 Chariots, 21870 elephants, 65610 horses and 109350 infantry). (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 19, Stanza 8).

JAYATSENA II. A King of the Pūru dynasty. His father was Sārvabhauma and his mother was the princess Sunandā of Kekaya. Jayatsena married Suśravas, the princess of Vidarbha. A son named Arvācīna was born to them. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 35).

JAYATSENA III. The name assumed by Nakula in his life incognito. (Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 5, Stanza 35).

JAYATSENA IV. A King who took the side of the Kauravas. He was son of Jarāsandha. This King came with an akṣauhiṇī of army and helped the Kauravas in the battle of Bhārata. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 16, Stanza 16). It is mentioned in Karṇa Parva, Chapter 5, Stanza 30 that this King was killed by Abhimanyu.[1]

JAYATSENA V. A son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 69, that this Jayatsena was defeated by Śatānīka and in Śalya Parva, Chapter 26 that he was killed by Bhīmasena.

JAYATSENĀ. An attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva. Chapter 46, Stanza 12).

JAYAVIJAYAS. See under Jaya XI.

JHA. This syllable means 'famous'. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).

JHAJHA. The father of Sunda an Asura who was the father of Mārīca, whose mother was Tāṭakā. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Sarga 25).

JHILLI. A Yādava of the house of Vṛṣṇi. He was one of the seven chief ministers of Śrī Kṛṣṇa in Dvārakā. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 14, Dākṣinātya pāṭha).

JHILLĪ I. Jhillīpiṇḍāraka). A warrior of the Vṛṣṇis. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Stanza 20, that this warrior was present at the svayamvara (marriage) of Draupadī. It is also seen that this Yādava carried the dowry of Subhadrā to Khāṇḍavaprastha from Dvārakā. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 120, Stanza 32). This warrior took part in the Bhārata battle. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 28 that this warrior played a laudable part in the battle of Kurukṣetra.

JHILLĪ II. (Jhillīpiṇḍārakam) (Jhillika). A worm. This worm has another name Jhīṅku. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 64, Stanza 1).

JHĪLLIKA(M). An ancient town in South India. Mention is made about this town in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 59.

JHĪṄKU. See under Jhilli II.

JIHVĀ. A servant woman who stole ornaments from the palace. For the detailed story of how she was caught with stolen goods see under Hariśarman.

JĪMŪTA I. A King born of the family of Yayāti. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

JĪMŪTA. II. A wrestler (Pahalvān). While the Pāṇḍavas were living incognito in the city of Virāṭa, once Brahmotsava (Brahmā festival) was celebrated all over the country. Wrestling was an important item of the Brahmā festival. Jīmūta was the most famous of the wrestlers who took part in the festival. He struck several wrestlers down. At last King Virāṭa asked Bhīma to wrestle with Jīmūta. Bhīmasena accepted the invitation.In the wrestling Jīmūta was killed. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 16).

JĪMŪTA III. A hermit. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 111, Stanza 23 that this hermit got a treasure of gold called Jaimūta from the Himālayas.

JĪMŪTA IV. The horse of the King Vasumanas. See under Vasumanas.

JĪMŪTAKETU I. A synonym of Śiva. There is a story in the Purāṇas about how Śiva got the name Jīmūtaketu.

When summer season began Pārvatī told her husband Śiva: "My Lord, Summer has set in. What are we to do without a house to protect us from the hot sun and the strong wind?" Śiva replied. "Dear ! It is because I have no house that I walk about in the forest always."

Because Śiva said so, the loyal wife Satīdevī spent the summer with her husband in the shade of trees. When the summer was over rainy season began. People stopped walking about. The sky became black with clouds. The roaring sound of thunder was heard everywhere. Seeing that the rainy season had begun Pārvatī again requested her husband to erect a house. Hearing her request Śiva replied. "I have no wealth at all to build a house. You see that I am wearing the hide of a leopard. The serpent Śeṣa is my Brāhma-string. Padma and Piṅgala are my ear-rings. One of my bracelets for the upper arm is Kambala and the other one is the nāga (serpent) Dhanañjaya. My bracelet on the right hand is Aśvatara and on the left hand is Takṣaka. The string that I wear round my waist is Nīla, as black as antimony. So let us go above the clouds and spend the rainy season there. Then rain will not fall on your body."

Saying thus, Śiva got into a lofty cloud with Pārvatī and sat there. That cloud looked like the flag of Śiva. Thenceforward Śiva came to be known by the name Jīmūtaketu. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter).

JĪMŪTAKETU II. See under Jīmūtavāhana.

JĪMŪTAVĀHANA. A Vidyādhara. (demi-god). He was the son of Jīmūtaketu, who was the ruler of a city named Kāñcanapura in a valley of the Himālayas. Being childless he had been sad for a long time. At last he approached the divine tree Kalpaka (a heavenly tree that yields every wish) that stood in his garden and requested it to bless him with a child. Thus a son was born to him. The famous Jīmūtavāhana was that son.

When Jīmūtavāhana came to know of the divine powers of the Kalpaka tree, from the ministers, with the permission of his father he went to the Kalpaka tree, bowed before it and said to it, "Oh noble tree! You have granted all the wishes of my forefathers. But I have one wish. No body should be miserable in the world. So I wish to give you to the world with that purpose in view". Instantly an ethereal voice said from the tree. "If you are forsaking me I am going away. But I will fulfil your wish." Thus according to the wish of Jīmūtavāhana the Kalpaka tree shed gold everywhere in the world and then went to heaven and disappeared. The earth became wealthy and prosperous. The fame of Jīmūtavāhana spread throughout the three worlds, and all the Vidyādharas grew jealous of him. As the heavenly tree Kalpaka, which yielded all the wishes, had returned to heaven, they thought it the most propitious time and arrayed their army against Jīmūtavāhana. His father Jīmūtaketu had completed all preparations to meet the enemy. But Jīmūtavāhana approached his father and said, "Father ! I am perfectly sure that no body could defeat you in battle. But see how mean it is to destroy so many lives and win the country merely for the pleasures of this fragile body. So let us go away from here. Leave the kingdom to them."

1. The Mahābhārata mentions two princes of Magadha, bearing the same name 'Jayatsena'. The fathers of both of them happen to be Jarāsandhas. But it is said that after the death of the famous Jarāsandha his son Sahadeva became king. This Sahadeva, with his brother Jayatsena took the side of the Pāṇḍavas and fought against the Kauravas. Hence the King Jayatsena mentioned here must be the son of some other Jarāsandha of the Kingdom of Magadha.

Jīmūtaketu, who was pleased at this generous nature of his son, respected his wish and went with his family to the Malaya mountain and lived there. Mitrāvasu, the son of Viśvāvasu, the King of the Siddhas and Jīmūtavāhana became close friends. One day Jīmūtavāhana was wandering about in the forest when he saw in the middle of a garden a temple dedicated to Devī and a young woman of exquisite beauty, surrounded by her maids, singing hymns and worshipping Devī. Jīmūtavāhana was attracted by her extra-ordinary beauty. Love budded in her heart also. On enquiry it was understood that she was Malayavatī, the sister of Mitrāvasu. After that both of them engaged in a little talk of love-making. Hearing her mother calling, Malayavatī instantly went home. Being fallen head-long in love, Jīmūtavāhana spent the night somehow or other and at dawn reached the temple with a hermit boy. While the hermit boy was consoling Jīmūtavāhana Malayavatī also came there. Jīmūtavāhana and his friend hid behind a tree. She was alone, and since she could not bear separation from her lover she decided to commit suicide and standing at the steps, she said "Devi ! If it is impossible to get that Jīmūtavāhana as my husband in this birth, let it be so. But bless me that I may have my wish granted in the next birth at least". Saying this she tied one end of her upper garment on the tree and tried to commit suicide. Instantly there was an ethereal voice which said, "Daughter, don't do such rash things. Jīmūtavāhana will become your husband. He will become the emperor of the Vidyādharas also." Jīmūtavāhana came and untied the knot of the upper garment with his own hands and saved her from death. Her maid appeared and said with delight. "Friend ! you are very lucky. Today I heard what prince Mitrāvasu said to his father Viśvāvasu. Thus he said 'Father ! Jīmūtavāhana who gave away his own Kalpaka tree for the welfare of others has come to this place. It will bring prosperity to us, if we show our hospitality to this noble guest by giving our Malayavatī to him. It is very difficult to get such a noble man for my sister anywhere else." The father consented. The prince instantly went to the abode of this gentleman. I think the marriage will take place today. So come, let us go home."

With his heart overflowing with joy, Jīmūtavāhana went to his house. Mitrāvasu was there. He revealed the purpose of his coming. Jīmūtavāhana, who had the remembrance of his previous births told Mitrāvasu that in the previous birth also they had been friends and that Malayavatī had been his wife. Thus their marriage took place. Delightful days of the married life passed one by one. One day Jīmūtavāhana and Mitrāvasu went for a walk. They reached a forest on the seashore. Seeing some bones there Jīmūtavāhana asked Mitrāvasu about them. Mitrāvasu said : "In ancient days Kadrū, the mother of Nāgas (serpents) made Vinatā, the mother of Garuḍa, her slave by some trick. Garuḍa liberated his mother from slavery. But the hatred increased day by day and Garuḍa began to eat serpents, the children of Kadrū. Seeing this, Vāsuki the King of Nāgas entered into a contract with Garuḍa, so as to prevent the nāgas from being destroyed altogether. The arrangement was that Vāsuki would send a serpent everyday to Garuḍa. Garuḍa ate all those serpents sent by Vāsuki in this place. These are the bones of those poor snakes."

When Jīmūtavāhana heard this story his heart was filled with pity. He decided to save the life of at least one serpent by giving his body instead. But the presence of Mitrāvasu was an obstacle to carry out his wish. At that particular moment a minister of Viśvāvasu appeared there and took away Mitrāvasu saying that he was wanted by his father. Left alone, Jīmūtavāhana stood there when he saw a young man coming with an old woman who was crying bitterly. On enquiry Jtmūtavāhana learned that in accordance with the agreement with Garuḍa, the old woman was bringing her only son Śaṅkhacūḍa to give him as food to Garuḍa. Jīmūtavāhana told them that he would take the place of Śaṅkhacūḍa that day. The mother and the son reluctantly agreed to his desire. The old woman went away crying and Śaṅkhacūḍa went to the temple.

Hearing the sound of Garuḍa's wings Jīmūtavāhana laid himself on a stone and Garuḍa taking him in his beaks flew to the top of the Malaya Mountain. On the way the jewel of Jīmūtavāhana known as 'Cūḍāratna', which was soaked in blood fell down, in front of Malayavatī. Knowing that it was the jewel of her husband, with a terrible cry she ran to her father. Because of his knowledge of arts and sciences, Jīmūtaketu also knew everything and with his wife and daughter he went to the top of the Malaya mountain.

In the meanwhile, Śaṅkhacūḍa, having done obeisance to 'Gokarṇanātha' (God), came back to the stone where he had left Jīmūtavāhana and seeing a pool of fresh blood, became sad and silent. Then determining that he would save Jīmūtavāhana at any cost, he went up the mountain following the track of the blood drops.

Garuḍa took Jīmūtavāhana to the peak of the mountain and began to peck at him. Jīmūtavāhana grew more and more delightful as the pecking became harder. Garuḍa looked at him with wonder and thought, "Surely, this is not a nāga. It must be a Gandharva or somebody else." Not knowing what to do he sat looking at his prey, who invited him to finish off his meal. By this time Śaṅkhacūḍa had reached the spot. Soon Jīmūtaketu with his wife and Malayavatī also arrived.

They all cried aloud. Garuḍa was in great confusion. When he knew that he was about to eat the famous Jīmūtavāhana, who had given away even the Kalpaka tree for the good of others, Garuḍa was filled with remorse. Instantly Jīmūtavāhana died. The parents and Śaṅkhacūḍa cried beating their breasts. Malayavatī fell on the ground and cried. Then looking up she called out with tears. "Ha ! Devi ! Jagadambikā ! you have told me that my husband would become the emperor of the Vidyādharas. Has your boon become futile because of my misfortune ?" Devī appeared and said "Daughter ! My words will not become futile." Then Devī sprinkled Amṛta (ambrosia) on Jīmūtavāhana and brought him to life. He sprang up more radiant than before, and was anointed as emperor of the Vidyādharas by Devī. When Devī disappeared Garuḍa who was much pleased, told Jīmūtavāhana to ask for any boon.

Jīmūtavāhana requested for the boon that Garuḍa should stop eating the Nāgas and that all the serpents who had been reduced to bones should be brought to life again. Garuḍa granted him that boon. All the serpents which had been killed by Garuḍa came to life again. All the gods and hermits came there with joy. After all had gone, Jīmūtavāhana went with his relatives to the Himālayas as the emperor of Vidyādharas.[1] (Kathāsaritsāgara, Saśāṅkavatī Lambaka, Taraṅga 23).

JĪRṆODDHĀRA. Erection and consecration of images fixed in temples which have fallen into dilapidation, is called Jīrṇoddhāra. Mention is made in Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 67, about the principles of Jīrṇoddhāra, as follows :

The priest should adorn the image with ornaments and perform 'Stavana'. If the idol is very badly ruined by age it must be abandoned. Broken image and that with any part of the body severed or disfigured should also be abandoned, even if it is made of stone or any other material. When the image is renovated the priest should make burnt offerings thousand times with Narasiṁhamantra (spell or incantation). If the ruined image is made of wood it should be burned. If it is made of stone it should be placed at the bottom of deep water, either in the sea or anywhere else. If it is made of metals or jewels, it must be put into water. The ruined image should be placed in a carriage and covered with a cloth. With instrumental music and so forth the image should be taken to water in a procession and then submerged in water. After this the priest must be given a gift. Only after this should the new image be erected and consecrated. On a good day in an auspicious moment a new image of the same material and measurement as of the old image should be erected and consecrated by the priest.

JITĀRI. Son of Avīkṣit born of the family of Pūru. Avīkṣit was the son of King Kuru. Mention is made about Jitāri in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva Chapter 94, Stanzā 53.

JITĀTMĀ. A Viśvadeva (A class of gods) concerned with Śrāddha (offerings to the Manes). (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 31).

JITAVATĪ. A daughter of King Uśīnara. She was the most beautiful woman in the world. She was the friend of the wife of a Vasu named Dyau. It was because of the words of this Jitavatī that the Aṣṭavasus (the eight Vasus) stole the cow Nandinī of Vasiṣṭha, and by the curse of Vasiṣṭha had to take birth in the womb of women on earth. (See under Gaṅgā, Para 7).

JIṢṆU I. A name of Arjuna. (See under Arjuna).

JIṢṆU II. A synonym of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. As Śrī Kṛṣṇa had won all the battles he fought, he got the name Jiṣṇu. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 70, Stanza 13).

JIṢṆU III. A warrior who fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas against the Kauravas. This warrior who was a native of Cedi, was killed by Karṇa (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 56, Stanza 48).

JIṢṆUKARMAN. A warrior who stood on the side of the Pāṇḍavas and fought against the Kauravas. He was a native of the country of Cedi. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 56, Stanza 48).

JĪVAJĪVAKA. A King of birds. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 139, Stanza 6, about this bird.

JĪVALA. A charioteer of Ṛtuparṇa, the King of Ayodhyā. Nala who had been living there under the name Bāhuka had accepted Jīvala as his friend. (See under Nala).

JĪVĀTMAN (The induvidual life or soul). The Aparabrahman (which is next to the highest Brahman) that is so minute and subtle is called Jīvātman. Parabrahman is God almighty. It is mentioned in Taittirīyopaniṣad about this aparabrahman as follows :

"Tasmād vā etasmādātmana ākāśaḥ sambhūtaḥ, ākāśād vāyuḥ vāyoragniḥ, agnerāpaḥ adbhyaḥ pṛthvī pṛthivyā oṣadhayaḥ oṣadhibhyo annam annāt puruṣaḥ sa vā eṣa puruṣo annamayaḥ."

'From this Ātman came into existence ether possessing the quality of sound. From ether air, possessing the qualities of sound and touch, came into existence. Fire with the qualities of sound, touch and colour came into being from air. From fire, water having the qualities of sound touch, colour and taste came into being. From water earth with the qualities of sound, touch, colour, taste and smell came into existence. Vegetation grew from earth, and from vegetation food, from food semen, and from semen Puruṣa came into existence. The materialized form of aparabrahman is the body. Its subtle form is the soul. Jīvātmā or the individual soul is the subtle form of soul dwelling in the materialized form of the aparabrahman. This soul sits in the miniature lotus of heart in the miniature ether. The body which is made of the five elements is the dwelling place of this Jīvātmā. The individual life exists in every living being. The body originated from food is the outer covering of the Jīvātmā. This materialized body is also called Annamayakośa (the cask of food). Inside this annamayakośa there is the Prāṇamayakośa (the chest of the life breaths). It is stated in the Taittirīyopaniṣad that this Prāṇamayakośa is separate from and existing inside the annamayakośa. The Prāṇamayakośa which exists inside the annamayakośa has the shape of man. The life breath which appears as the inhaling and exhaling breath is the head of the Prāṇamayakośa. The life breath Vyāna is the right wing and Apāna is the left wing, ether its soul and Pṛthvi (the earth) its tail.[2] Inside the Prāṇamayakośa, there exists the Manomayakośa (the chest of mind), but it fills the entire interior of the Prāṇamayakośa. The Vijñānamayakośa (the chest of knowledge or understanding) exists inside the Manomayakośa. The Jīvātmā or the individual life dwells inside this Vijñānamayakośa and pervades the entire body. It is by the activity of Vijñānamayakośa that the Jīvātmā feels its individuality. Inside the Vijñānamayakośa there exists a fifth kośa (chest) called the Ānandamayakośa, which is the immediate covering of Jīvātmā, and which has no sense of individuality. The three Kośas, Ānandakośa, Vijñānakośa and Prāṇamayakośa together is called Sūkṣmaśarīra (the subtle body). It must be remembered that Sūkṣmaśarīra is different from Susūkṣmaśarīra (the minute subtle body).

1 This story is told to the king Trivikramasena by Vetāla. See under Trivikramasena.

2 Tasya prāṇa eva śiraḥ vyāno dakṣiṇaḥ pakṣaḥ apānaḥ uttaraḥ pakṣaḥ ākāśa ātmā, Pṛthivī puccham. (Taittirīya).

Heart is the abode of the Jīvātmā. Hṛdi (in heart) ayam (this being—Jīvātmā exists). So the name 'Hṛdaya' (heart) is meaningful.[1] The Puruṣa (male being), which sits inside the heart or the Jīvātmā is as big as the toe according to the Kaṭhopaniṣad.

The Jīvātmā or the Aparabrahman is without beginning. Even from the past which is beyond our thinking crores and crores of Jīvātmans had got into individuals and when the Annamayakośas of the individuals decayed due to death, they abandoned them and entered into new individuals. The author of the Bṛhadāraṇyaka gives an explanation to the question why this Jīvātmā which is as free as air enters the body of man, beast, bird, tree, rock etc. and subjects itself to misery and hardship. "Where does the Jīvātmā originate from? how does it enter this body?" Jīvātmā originates from Paramātmā (the soul of the universe). As the shadow pervades the body of a man this Jīvātmā overshadows this body." Śrī Śaṅkarācārya expounds it in another way; he says that the Jīvātmā is tied to the body by the imagination or desires of the mind.

JÑĀNAPĀVANATĪRTHA. An ancient holy bath. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter, 84, Stanza 3 that those who visit this holy place will attain the fruits of performing the sacrifice of Agniṣṭoma.

JṚMBHĀDEVĪ. See under Koṭṭuvā (Gape).

JṚMBHIKĀ. Yawning or gaping. For the Purāṇic story of how gape came into existence in the world, see under Koṭṭuvā (Gape).

JUHU. A King of the family of Yayāti. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

JVĀLĀ I. A daughter of Takṣaka. The King Ṛkṣa married her. Matināra was the son born to the couple. (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 95. Stanza 25).

JVĀLĀ II. The wife of Nīladhvaja. There is a story about this Jvālā in the "Jaimini Aśvamedha Parva", Chapter 15, as follows :

The Pāṇḍavas began the sacrifice of Aśvamedha. Arjuna led the sacrificial horse. He continued his victorious march defeating all Kings and reached the city of Nīladhvaja. Nīladhvaja was not prepared for a fight. Seeing this his wife Jvālā tried various ways to push her husband to war. Seeing them to be futile she approached her brother Unmūka and asked him to fight with Arjuna. He also was not prepared to fight with Arjuna.

Jvālā became very angry and walked to the bank of the Ganges. When the Ganges-water touched her feet she stopped and said, "Dear me ! I am become sinful by the touch of Ganges-water." The amazed Gaṅgā took the form of Sumaṅgalādevī and stood before Jvālā and aked her the reason for saying so. Jvālā said "Gaṅgādevī submerged her seven sons and killed them. After that she took the eighth son from Śantanu. That son too was killed by Arjuna in the Bhārata-battle. Thus Gaṅgā is childless and sinful." Hearing this Gaṅgā Devī cursed Arjuna "Let his head be cut off in six months' time." Jvālā was satisfied. (For the result of the curse see under Arjuna, Para 28).

JVĀLĀJIHVA I. One of the two attendants given to Subrahmaṇya by Agnideva. (Fire god). Jyoti was the other attendant. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 33).

JVĀLĀJIHVA II. A warrior of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 61).

JVĀLEŚVARA. See under Tripura.

JVARA. (Jvaram) (Fever).

1) General information. A fearful being. It is stated in the Purāṇas that living beings catch fever owing to the activities of this monster.

2) The origin of jvara. Once Śiva and Pārvatī were talking with each other in the Holy Bath called Jyotiṣkam on mount Mahāmeru. On that day Dakṣa had performed a sacrifice at Gaṅgādvāra. Śiva alone was not invited. Seeing the Gods Brahmā and the others going to that place through the sky, Pārvatī asked Śiva what the matter was. Śiva explained everything to Pārvatī, who became very sorry because her husband had not been invited. Śiva grew uneasy at the sorrow of his wife. A drop of sweat fell down from his third eye. A fearful monster with the lustre of fire arose from that drop of sweat. That figure is described as follows :

"A terrible monster, with dwarfish figure, staring eyes, green moustaches, hair standing erect on head and body covered with hair all over, looking like a combination of hawk and owl, with jet-black colour, wearing a blood-coloured cloth." (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 283).

"With three legs, three heads, six hands and nine eyes, comes Jvara the terrible monster, as fierce as Yama the god of death and fearful like a thousand clouds with thunderbolt, gaping and sighing, with tight body and horrible face, rendered so by many eyes." (M.B. Viṣṇu Parva, Chapter 122).

To this uncouth figure Śiva gave the name Jvara, who dashed away and entered into all devas (gods). Brahmā and the others caught fever and were laid up. At last they all came to Śiva. Hearing their request Śiva divided Jvara into several parts and separated them from devas and entered them into other living beings, and ordered that, headache for elephants, green coverings for water, shedding of skin for snakes, hoof-rot for cows, sore-throat for horses, feather-sprouting for peacocks, sore-eye for cuckoo, hiccough for parrot, weariness for tigers and fever for men will be caused by Jvara.

It was the time of the terrorization of Vṛtrāsura. Jvara caught hold of that Asura also. It was at this time that Indra used his thunderbolt and killed Vṛtrāsura. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 283 ; M.B. Viṣṇu Parva, Chapter 122).

1 Ayaṁ puruṣaḥ bhāḥ satyaḥ tasmin antarhṛdaye yathā vrīhir vā, yavo vā, sa eṣa sarvasyeśānaḥ sarvasyādhipatiḥ. (Bṛhadāraṇyaka)

JYĀMAGHA. A King born in the dynasty of Ikṣvāku. (Harivaṁśa, Chapter 36).

Five sons, who were equal to gods, named Sahasrada, Payoda, Kroṣṭā, Nīla and Ājika were born to Yadu of the family of Ikṣvāku. Several noble persons were born in the family of Kroṣṭā. A noble and broadminded son named Vṛjinīvān was born to Kroṣṭā. Śvāhi was born to Vṛjinīvān, Ruśeku to Śvāhi, Citraratha to Ruśeku and Śaśabindu to Citraratha. Thousand sons were born to Śaśabindu who was an emperor. Important among those thousand who were blessed with radiance, fame, wealth and beauty, were Pṛthuśravas, Pṛthuyaśas, Pṛthutejas, Pṛthubhava, Pṛthukīrti and Pṛthumati. Uśanas was the son of Pṛthuśravas, Śineyu was the son of Uśanas and Rukmakavaca the son of Śineyu. Rukmakavaca killed all the archers and conquered the countries and performing aśvamedha (horse sacrifice) gave away all the countries he conquered, as gift to Brāhmaṇas. Five sons were born to Rukmakavaca. Jyāmagha was one of them. His brothers were Rukmeṣu, Pṛthurukma, Parigha and Hari. Of them Parigha and Hari were made Kings of foreign countries. Rukmeṣu was given the country ruled by his father. Pṛthurukma served Rukmeṣu. They drove Jyāmagha away from the country.

Jyāmagha went to the forest and erected a hermitage for him. Then according to the advice of a Brahmin, he who was an old man took bow and arrow and got into a chariot flying a flag and went to the bank of the river Narmadā. He had neither wealth nor attendants. He stayed on the mountain Ṛkṣavān eating fruits and roots. His wife Śaibyā also had become old. They had no children. Still Jyāmagha did not marry anybody else. Once Jyāmagha came out victorious in a fight in which he got a girl. Jyāmagha took the girl to his wife and told her, "This girl shall be the wife of your son." She asked him how that could be wl en she had no son. He said, "She will become the wife of the son who is going to be born to you." As a result of severe penance a son named Vidarbha was born to Śaibyā. The damsel who became the wife of Vidarbha gave birth to two sons named Kratha and Kaiśika. (Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 13).

JYEṢṬHĀ I. A deity of inauspicious things. In Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa, it is observed that Jyeṣṭhā was a goddess obtained by churning the Sea of Milk. As soon as she came up from the sea of Milk, the Trimūrtis (Viṣṇu, Brahmā and Śiva) found her and sent her away ordering her to sit in inauspicious places. The Goddess Jyeṣṭhā came out of the Milk-Sea before the goddess Lakṣmī. So this deity is considered the elder sister of Lakṣmī. As she is the elder she is also called Mūdhevī (Mūdevī). The mode of worshipping this goddess is given in Bodhāyana Sūtra. Tondiraṭipotiālvār, who was a Vaiṣṇava Ālvār, who lived in 7th century A.D. said that it was useless to worship this Goddess. Ancient images of this Goddess have been found. But worship of Jyeṣṭhā was completely discontinued after the 10th century.

In Śaiva Purāṇas it is mentioned that this Goddess is one of the eight portions of Parāśakti. It was believed that the powers of this Goddess regulated human lives in various ways.

JYEṢṬHĀ II. A star. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 64, Stanza 24 that if Brāhmaṇas are given greens on the day of this star it will bring good to the giver.

JYEṢṬHA. A hermit who was well-versed in the Sāma-Veda. This ancient hermit once received valuable advice from the Sātvatas called Barhiṣads. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 348, Stanza 46).

JYEṢṬHAPUṢKARA. A holy place. Those who visit this holy place will get the fruits of performing the sacrifice of Agniṣṭoma. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 200, Stanza 66).

JYEṢṬHASĀMA. A Sāma meditated upon by the hermit Jyeṣṭha. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 348, Stanza 46).

JYEṢṬHILĀ. A river. This river stays in the palace of Varuṇa worshipping him. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 21).

JYEṢṬHILA. A holy place. He who stays in this holy place for a night will get the fruits of giving a thousand cows as gift. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 164).

JYOTI I. Son of the Vasu named Aha. Mention is made about him in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Stanza 23.

JYOTI II. One of the two attendants given to Subrahmaṇya by the God Agni (fire). The second one was Jvālājihva. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 33).

JYOTIKA. A famous serpent. This serpent was born to Kaśyapa by his wife Kadrū. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 35, Stanza 13).

JYOTIRATHĀ. A famous river. The people of India used to drink water from this river. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 26).

JYOTIRATHYĀ. A river. He who bathes in this river in the particular place where it merges with the river Śoṇabhadrā, would obtain the fruits of performing the sacrifice of Agniṣṭoma. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 8).

JYOTIRVASU. A King born in the family of Purūravas. He was the son of Sumati and the father of Pratīka. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

JYOTIṢA(M). (Astronomy and astrology). Jyotiṣa is the science about the stars and heavenly bodies. The heavenly bodies are the sun, the moon, the other planets and the stars etc. From the very ancient days men believed that these planets and stars in the sky played an important part in controlling the growth and activities of all the living and non-living things in the world.

Astrology has been a recognized science in Egypt, China and India from very ancient days. History tells us that 3000 years before Christ there were astronomers in Babylon. But even before that time astronomy had fully expanded and grown in Bhārata.

The Vedas are supposed to have six Aṅgas (ancillaries) They are Śikṣā (Phonetics), Kalpa (ritual), Vyākaraṇa (Grammar), Jyotiṣa (astronomy) Chandas (metrics), and Nirukta (etymology). From this it can be said that the Indians had acknowledged Astronomy as an ancillary of the Vedas. The expounders of the Vedas say that Astronomy is the eye of the Vedas.

Astronomy has two sides, the doctrinal side (Pramāṇabhāga) and the result-side (Phalabhāga). The Calendar is reckoned in accordance with the Pramāṇa-bhāga. Prediction and casting horoscopes of living beings is the Phala-bhāga.

The astronomers have divided the sky that surrounds the earth into twelve parts called rāśis (zodiacs). All the stars of the first zodiac appear in the shape of a goat (Meṣa) so that zodiac was called Meṣa. Thus the zodiac in which the stars took the shape of an ox was called Ṛṣabha (ox). In the zodiac Mithuna the stars took the shape of a young couple. Karkaṭaka means crab. In that zodiac the stars appear in the shape of a crab. In the same way Siṁha means lion and Kanyā means a damsel. Tulā means balance and Vṛścika means scorpion; Dhanus means bow and Makara means Makara matsya (horned shark). Kumbha is a water pot and Mīna means fish. The name of the zodiac is according to the sign of the zodiac. That is, in what shape the stars in that particular zodiac appear to the people of the earth. The figure of the twelve zodiacs with the earth as centre is given below:—

Mīna	Meṣa	Ṛṣabha	Mithuna
Kumbha			Karkaṭaka
Makara			Siṁha
Dhanus	Vṛścika	Tulā	Kanyā

In Kerala and some other places the zodiacs are marked to the right in order beginning with Meṣa, whereas it is marked to the left in the same order in some of the other parts of India.

The earth completes one rotation in 60 Nāḍikās (24 minutes) i.e. 24 hours. In each rotation these twelve zodiacs face the earth. For a man standing at a particular point on the earth it will take 60%12 i.e. 5 nāḍikās (two hours) on an average, for a zodiac to pass him. But it may vary in different places according to the difference of the shape of the earth. A month is the time the sun remains in a zodiac. The planet Jupiter takes a year and Saturn two years and a half on an average to pass a zodiac. The calendar shows which are the planets standing in each zodiac and how far they have travelled at a particular time in that particular zodiac. When a particular zodiac is in a particular region of the earth, a man born in that region is said to be born in that zodiac. When a particular place faces the zodiac of Meṣa the child which takes birth in that place is said to be born in the zodiac of Meṣa. The zodiac of birth is given the name Lagna by astronomers. Those who are well-versed in the result-side of astronomy are of opinion that the life, fortune etc. of living beings depend upon the position of the planets in relation to their lagnas.

JYOTIṢKA. A famous serpent born to Kaśyapa by his wife Kadrū. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 203, Stanza 15).

JYOTIṢKA(M). A peak of mount Sumeru. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 283, Stanza 5).

JYOTIṢMĀN. An ancient King of Kuśadvīpa. This King had seven sons, called Udbhida, Veṇumān, Vairatha, Lambana, Dhṛti, Prabhākara and Kapila. Each division of that country is given the name of each of these sons. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 2, Chapter 4).

JYOTSNĀKĀLĪ. The second daughter of Candra. In Mahā Bhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 98, Stanza 13, it is mentioned that this daughter was extremely beautiful and that the Sun married her.

K

KA. This letter has the following meanings:

(i) Prajāpati. (Śloka 32, Chapter 1, Ādi Parva, M.B.)

(ii) A name of Dakṣaprajāpati. (Śloka 7, Chapter 208, Śānti Parva, M.B.).

(iii) A name of Viṣṇu. (Śloka 91, Chapter 149, Anuśāsana Parva, M,B.)

(iv) Brahmā (Viṣṇu, Maheśvara). (Chapter 348, Agni Purāṇa, M.B.).

KABALABARHIṢA. A King of Vṛṣṇivaṁśa. (See under VṚṢṆIVAṀŚA).

KABANDHA.

1) General information. The demon who attacked Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa while they were wandering in Daṇḍakāraṇya after the abduction of Sītā by Rāvaṇa.

2) Previous history of Kabandha. There was a King of Gandharvas called Śrī. He had a son named Danu. Danu was known as Viśvāvasu also. Viśvāvasu once performed a penance to propitiate Brahmā for long life and Brahmā appeared before him and blessed him with immortality. Arrogant of this acquisition he roamed about as he pleased.

One day he attacked Indra and the latter furious at his impudence used the Vajrāyudha on him and the head and thighs of Viśvāvasu were squeezed into his body. Viśvāvasu pleaded that he should be given some way to take his food. Indra then granted him two very long hands and a mouth on his belly. Then Viśvāvasu spent his days in a forest near the Mataṅgāśrama in Krauñcāraṇya bearing the name Kabandha (Headless trunk). Indra added that he would attain his real form when Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa cut his hands.[1]

A favourite pastime of Kabandha was to frighten the sages. One day he attacked a sage called Sthūlaśiras and that sage cursed him saying that he would retain his ugly figure for ever. The demon pleaded for relief and the sage said that he would regain his original figure when Rāma cut his hands and left him in the desolate forest. From that day onwards Kabandha lived there waiting for Śrī Rāma. (Sarga 70, Araṇya Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

3). Kabandha meets Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa. Jaṭāyu was lying half dead by a blow from the sword of Rāvaṇa and Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa went to him and talked to him. He gave them some information regarding Sītā before he died. After burning the body of Jaṭāyu in a funeral pyre Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa went westwards. They entered the Krauñcāraṇya and reached Mataṅgavana. There they saw a great cave. A huge demoness attacked them near that cave and seeing the beautiful form of Lakṣmaṇa she invited him for amorous plays. Lakṣmaṇa cut off her ear, nose and breasts. Then they entered deep into the forests. Bad omens greeted them.

1. "I am the son of Śrī named Danu" says Kabandha to Lakṣmaṇa in Śloka 8, Chapter 71, of the Araṇya Kāṇḍa of Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa. In Śloka 42, Chapter 279 of Araṇya Kāṇḍa, Kabandha says, "I am a gandharva, Viśvāvasu and came to be born in a demonaic womb by the curse of a brahmin."

Before long they saw Kabandha rushing towards them. He is described thus in the Mahābhārata :

"He was as big as a mountain, dark as a black cloud, with pointed hairs all over his body and looked fierce with a voice as loud as thunder. He had an eye on his stomach, round and yellow, emitting a glare like a fire-flame. Looking wicked he thrust his big tongue out of his huge mouth licking the sides."

The demon stretched out his big hands and caught hold of Śrī Rāma in his right hand and Lakṣmaṇa in his left hand. Finding themselves helpless in his hands Lakṣmaṇa implored Rāma to flee away from the demon leaving him alone. Śrī Rāma cut off Kabandha's right hand and Lakṣmaṇa cut off the left hand. Kabandha then asked them who they were. Kabandha told Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa his previous story and then fell dead. Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa burnt the dead body in a funeral pyre. He rose up in the air as the Gandharva King of old and advised Śrī Rāma to go to Sugrīva for knowing more about Sītā. (Sargas 70 to 72, Araṇya Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

KACA. The first son of Bṛhaspati. That extremely beautiful boy was a great favourite of the devas.

1) Genealogy. Descending in order from Viṣṇu—Brahmā—Aṅgiras—Bṛhaspati—Kaca.

2) How he studied the secret of Mṛtasañjīvanī. The Devas and Asuras always quarrelled with each other. Devas accepted Bṛhaspati as their guru and the asuras made Śukrācārya their guru. Śukrācārya knew an art which Bṛhaspati did not know, the secret of Mṛtasañjīvanī. When the devas cut the Asuras to pieces, Śukrācārya used to bring them back to life by his knowledge of Mṛtasañjīvanī. Mṛtasañjīvanī is the art of reviving the dead.

Devas were at a loss to know what to do. They wanted to learn the secret of Mṛtasañjīvanī from Śukrācārya somehow. It was imperative that they should learn it. Then they found out a way. They sent Kaca, son of Bṛhaspati, to Śukrācārya.

Kaca went to Śukrācārya and told him that he was the son of Bṛhaspati and had come to him to be his disciple for a period of a thousand years doing service to him. The modesty of the boy appealed to Śukrācārya and he accepted Kaca as his disciple.

Devayānī, daughter of Śukrācārya, fell in love with Kaca. They were always together as an inseparable couple. Asuras did not like the advent of Kaca to the Āśrama of Śukrācārya. They knew that he had come to study the secrets of the Asuras. Once Kaca went alone to look after the cows and the Asuras followed him stealthily. When Kaca entered deep into the forest the Asuras killed him and gave him to the wolves.

It became dusk. The cows returned to the Āśrama without the cowherd. Devayānī waited for a long time for Kaca to come. Not seeing him Devayānī went weeping to her father and said, "Oh, father, the sun has set. You have performed your nightly fire sacrifice. The cattle have come back by themselves and still Kaca has not returned home. I fear he is dead or has been killed. I cannot live without him."

The affectionate Śukrācārya could not bear the sight of his dear daughter weeping and so he went to the forest with Devayānī and employing the art of Sañjīvanī he invoked the dead youth to appear. At once Kaca came back to life and stood before them. All the three then returned to the āśrama happily.

The anger of the Asuras against Kaca knew no bounds. On another occasion the Asuras seized him and after killing him pounded his body into a paste and mixed it up in sea-water. This time also, at the request of Devayānī, Śukrācārya brought him back to life.

The third time the Asuras burnt the body of Kaca and mixed the ashes in wine and served it to Śukrācārya to drink. The disciple thus went inside the belly of the guru. Dusk came, the cattle came and still Kaca did not return and Devayānī reported the matter to her father. Śukrācārya sat for some time in meditation and then he knew that Kaca was in his own stomach. If he got Kaca out, he would burst his stomach and Śukra would die and if he did not get him out his daughter would burst her heart and die. Śukrācārya was in a fix. He asked Kaca how he got in and he replied that it was through the wine. Śukra imparted to Kaca the art of Mṛtasañjīvanī and Kaca lying within the stomach repeated it. Then Śukrācārya called Kaca by name and Kaca came out bursting the stomach of his guru. The preceptor lay dead and by employing the art of Mṛtasañjīvanī he had learnt, Kaca brought his guru to life. Śukrācārya eschewed wine from that day onwards and declared it as a forbidden drink to brahmins. Śukrācārya said that because Kaca was reborn from his stomach he must be deemed his son.

3) Kaca was cursed. Kaca remained for some more time under the tutelage of Śukrācārya and when his education became complete he took leave of his preceptor and also Devayānī. Devayānī followed him for a long distance from the hermitage and requested him to marry her. Kaca replied he could not do so because he had become a brother to Devayānī. Devayānī got angry and cursed him saying that he would not be able to use the art of Mṛtasañjīvanī he had learnt from her father. Kaca cursed her back saying that none of the sons of sages would marry her. Kaca however felt relieved that though he would not be able to practise the art, his disciples would be able to do so. He went back to Devaloka and was heartily welcomed by all the Devas. He then imparted the art of Mṛtasañjīvanī to the devas. (Chapters 76 and 77, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

4) Kaca visits Bhīṣma. Kaca was also one among the several people who visited Bhīṣma while the latter was lying on a bed of arrows awaiting death. (Śloka 9, Chapter 47, Śānti Parva, M.B.).

KACCHAM. An ancient place of habitation. (Śloka 19, Chapter 54, Śalya Parva).

KACCHAPAM. One of the nine treasures of Kubera.

KACCHAPĪ. Name of the harp of Nārada. (Śloka, 19, Chapter 54, Śalya Parva, M.B.).

KADALĪGARBHĀ. Daughter of the great sage Maṅkaṇaka. There is a story about her in Kathāsaritsāgara.

There was once a city called Ikṣumatī. It was on the banks of the river Ikṣumatī. It was Viśvāmitra who set up that river and city. In a hermitage in the thick forest on the shores of Ikṣumatī lived a sage, Maṅkaṇaka performing penance. One day the beautiful nymph Menakā, came there from above. As a wind blew, her upper garment was displaced. Seeing her bare body, Maṅkaṇaka had emission. The semen of the sage fell into a Kadalī (plantain) tree and from there arose a maiden, extremely beautiful. Because she was born from Kadalī she was called Kadalīgarbhā. Kadalīgarbhā grew up into a beautiful lady and one day a King named Dṛḍhavarmā came that way while hunting and seeing Kadalīgarbhā he fell in love with her and married her with the permission of Maṅkaṇaka. The Devas advised her to scatter mustard seeds on the way to her husband's house and in case her husband abandoned her she should be guided by the mustard plants to return home. She did so.

One day by the evil advice of a barber the King divorced her and she returned to the Āśrama by following the young mustard plants. But Maṅkaṇaka took her back to the King. (Taraṅga 6, Madanamañjukālambaka, Kathāsaritsāgara).

KADALĪVANA. This grove is situated on the banks of Kuberapuṣkariṇī which abounded in Saugandhika flowers. There were different kinds of plantain fruits of golden hue in this grove. Hanūmān resided in it. (chapter 146, Vana Parva, M.B.).

KĀDAMBARĪ I. A river flowing westwards in Jambūdvīpa. In Bhāgavata 5th Skandha it is said that this river got its name "Kādambarī" because it had the hollow trunk of a Kadamba tree as its source.

KĀDAMBARĪ II. An excellent story book in prose written in Sanskrit by the great Sanskrit poet Bāṇabhaṭṭa. Kādambarī is the heroine of the story.

KADHMOR. A saintly King. He is worthy of being remembered in the morning. (Chapter 165, Anuśāsana Parva).

KADRŪ. Wife of Kaśyapa and daughter of Dakṣaprajāpati.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu thus:—Viṣṇu—Brahmā—Dakṣa—Kadrū.

2) Kadrū—Wife or daughter of Kaśyapa? Whether Kadrū was the wife or daughter of Kaśyapa is a question which remains unanswered still in the Purāṇas. Chapter 65 of Bhāṣā Bhārata states like this.

The six spiritual sons of Brahmā are : Marīci, Aṅgiras, Atri, Pulastya, Pulaha and Kratu. Marīci got a son named Kaśyapa and he married the thirteen daughters of Dakṣa, namely, Aditi, Diti, Kalā, Danāyus, Danu, Siṁhikā, Krodhā, Pradhā, Viśvā, Vinatā, Kapilā, Muni and Kadrū. So according to this, Kadrū was the wife of Kaśyapa.

But the 14th Sarga of Araṇya Kāṇḍa of Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa states :

Dakṣaprajāpati got sixty illustrious daughters and of these Kaśyapa married—Aditi, Diti, Danu, Kālikā Tāmrā, Krodhavaśā, Muni and Surasā. Krodhavaśā gave birth to eight daughters. They were: Mṛgī, Mṛgamandā, Harī, Bhadramatā, Mātaṅgī, Śārdūlī, Śvetā; Śurabhi, Surasā and Kadrū.

Tāmrā another wife of Kaśyapa gave birth to five daughters, namely, Krauñcī, Bhāsī, Śyenī, Dhṛtarāṣṭrī and Śukī. Krauñcī gave birth to owls, Bhāsī to Bhāsas, Śyenī to eagles and vultures, Dhṛtarāṣṭrī to swans and Śukī to Natā. Natā gave birth to Vinatā.

Thus, according to the Rāmāyaṇa Kadrū was the daughter of Kaśyapa born of his wife Krodhavaśā. Again Vinatā who is spoken of as the elder sister of Kadrū in Mahābhārata is the daughter of the granddaughter of Kaśyapa. This means that Kadrū's mother and Vinatā's grand mother's mother were sisters. But both of them looked after Kaśyapa as if they were direct sisters.

3) Kadrū, mother of serpents. Kadrū and Vinatā lived serving Kaśyapa. Kaśyapa was pleased with them and asked them what boon they wanted. Kadrū asked for a thousand serpents to be born of her and Vinatā asked for two sons who would be braver and more brilliant than the sons of Kadrū. Kaśyapa granted them what they asked for and when Kadrū and Vinatā became pregnant he left for the forest.

After some time Kadrū delivered a thousand eggs and Vinatā two eggs. Both of them kept the eggs in warm jars and after five hundred years the thousand eggs of Kadrū burst letting out a thousand serpents. Vinatā became impatient and broke open an egg of hers. Out came from it a half developed being and that was Aruṇa. Aruṇa cursed her for being impatient and said "You let me out half developed because of your over-anxiety and you will, therefore, become a servant of Kadrū. Keep the other egg for another five hundred years. Then a very powerful son will come out of it and that son will relieve you of your servitude to Kadrū". So saying he rose up in the air and became the charioteer of the sun. After five hundred years the other egg of Vinatā broke and Garuḍa came out. (Chapter 16, Ādi Parva, M.B.)

4) Sons of Kadrū. Names of the prominent sons of Kadrū are given below:

Śeṣa, Purāṇanāga, Āryaka, Vāsuki, Kapiñjara, Ugraka, Airāvata, Elāputra, Kalaśapotaka, Takṣaka, Savāma, Sumanas, Kārkoṭaka, Nīla, Dadhimukha, Dhanañjaya, Anila, Vimala, Kāliya, Kalmāṣa, Piṇḍaka, Maṇināga, Śabala, Āpta, Śākha, Piṇḍāraka, Hastipiṇḍa, Vāli, Karavīra, Pīṭharaka, Śikha, Puṣpadaṁṣṭra, Sumukha, Niṣṭhānaka, Vilvaka, Kauṇapāśana, Hemaguha, Bilvapāṇḍura, Kuṭhara, Nahuṣa, Mṛṣṇāda, Kuñjara, Piṅgala, Śaṁkha, Prabhākara, Bāhyakarṇa, Śirāpūrṇa, Kumuda, Hastipada, Haridraka, Kumudākṣa, Mudgara, Aparājita, Tittiri, Kambala, Jyotika, Halika, Aśvatara, Pannaga, Kardama, Kālīkaka, Śrīvaha, Bahumūlaka, Vṛtta, Kauravya, Karkara, Saṁvṛtta, Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Arkara, Patta, Śaṁkhapiṇḍa, Kuṇḍodara, Śaṅkhamukha, Subāhu, Mahodara. Kūśmāṇḍaka, Virajas, Kṣemaka, Śālipiṇḍa

All the serpents in the world have been born from these prominent serpents. (Chapter 35, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

5) Kadrū curses her sons. Once Kadrū called Vinatā to her side and asked her the colour of Uccaiśśravas, the horse of Indra. It was purely a white horse and Vinatā told so. But Kadrū said its tail was black. Each stood firm in her statement and then Kadrū made a bet. She who was defeated in the bet should serve the other as her slave. Vinatā agreed. Kadrū wanted to cheat Vinatā and so asked her sons to remain suspended from the tail of the horse in such an artful way that the tail would look black from a distance. Some of her sons refused to be a party to this deceit and Kadrū cursed them saying that they would all be burnt in the Sarpasattra of Janamejaya. Kaśyapa did not like the curse. But Brahmā came there and said that the serpents as a class were injurious to society and as such a curse of that nature was necessary. Brahmā then taught him Viṣasaṁhāravidyā (Treatment of snake-poisoning). (Chapter 20, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

6) Kadrū and children go to Rāmaṇīyaka. Once Kadrū told Vinatā. "Vinatā, take me to the island of Rāmaṇīyaka in the middle of the ocean. It is a beautiful place to stay. Let your son, Garuḍa, take my sons to that place." Vinatā took Kadrū and Garuḍa took her children during the journey. Garuḍa rose high up in the air nearing the sun and the serpents began to feel the heat unbearable and began to get charred. Kadrū then prayed to Indra and the latter then sent a heavy downpour of rains. This saved the serpents from being burnt to death and they reached the island of Rāmaṇīyaka safe. (Chapters 25 and 26, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

7) Other deta l .

(i) Kadrū lives in the court of Brahmā worshipping him. (Chapter 11, Sabhā Parva, M.B.).

(ii) Kadrū taking the form of Skanda—graha in an infinitely minute size enters the wombs of women and eats the embryo. (Chapter 230, Vana Parva, M.B.).

KAHOḌA (KAHOḌAKA — KHAGODAKA). A sage the disciple and son-in-law of Uddālaka. He was the father of the sage Aṣṭāvakra.

Uddālaka had another name "Śvetaketu". He was a sage who had personally seen and talked to the goddess Sarasvatī. It was at that time that Kahoḍaka became his disciple. Kahoḍaka who was of a gentle nature served his preceptor for a long time and won his favour. He was immensely pleased and after teaching the necessary things gave his daughter Sujātā in marriage to Kahoḍaka. In due course, Sujātā became pregnant. One day, the child in the womb cried out that there was a mistake in his father's recitation of the Vedas. Kahoḍaka was displeased at this. He cursed the child that he would be born with a body having eight bends (curves). So the boy was named "Aṣṭāvakra" (one who has eight bends). Sujātā who was poor, once sent Kahoḍaka to King Janaka for some money. Kahoḍaka who was defeated in a disputation was immersed in water. Aṣṭāvakra rescued his father. (See under Aṣṭāvakra).

KAHOLA. An ancient sage who flourished in Indra's assembly. (Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7).

KAIKASĪ. Mother of Rāvaṇa.

1) Birth. From the wrath of Brahmā the giant Praheti was born and from Brahmā's hunger the demigod Heti was born. The son Vidyutkeśa was born to Heti, of Bhayā the sister of Kāla (God of death—Time). Vidyutkeśa married Sālakaṭaṅkā the daughter of Sandhyā. A son named Sukeśa was born to them. Sukeśa married Devavatī daughter of Maṇimaya, a Gandharva. Three sons Mālyavān, Sumālī and Mālī were born to them. The three brothers Mālyavān, Sumālī and Mālī married Sundarī, Ketumatī and Vasudhā respectively, the three daughters of Narmadā, a gandharva woman. To Sumālī, by his wife Ketumatī, were born the ten sons, Prahasta, Akampana, Vikaṭa, Kālakāmukha, Dhūmrākṣa, Daṇḍa, Supārśva, Saṁhrāda, Prākvāta and Bhāsakarṇa and four daughters Vekā (Bṛhā), Puṣpotkaṭā, Kaikasī and Kumbhīnasī.

2) Marriage. As Sumālī was walking through forests with his wives and daughters, he saw so many Yakṣas (demi-gods) going in planes to pay homage to Vaiśravaṇa. Sumālī understood that Vaiśravaṇa became worthy of homage because he was the son of Viśravas. So he took his daughter Kaikasī and left her in the house of Viśravas. After a while, being pleased with her services, Viśravas took her as his wife. Once she requested her husband for children. Accordingly she got Rāvaṇa, Kumbhakarṇa and Vibhīṣaṇa as sons.

KAIKEYĪ I.

1) General information. One of the wives of Daśaratha, who had three wives, Kausalyā, Kaikeyī and Sumitrā. It is mentioned in Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Ayodhyā Kāṇḍa, Sarga 70, Stanza 28 that Kaikeyī was the sister of Yudhājit, the King of Kekaya. Kekaya was seven days' journey away from Ayodhyā.

2) Getting boons. In days of old there was a battle between the devas and the asuras and Daśaratha went to the world of Devas, with Kaikeyī, in a chariot to help Indra against the Asuras. The devas were in a sorry plight due to the illusive and sorcerous mode of fighting of Śambara the Asura and his men. Daśaratha faced the Asuras in ten directions at the same time and fought with them. In this fight his chariot had to be turned to every direction and up and down so swiftly that the bolt of the wheel slipped out and the wheel was about to come off when Kaikeyī inserted her thumb in the hole of the bolt and kept the chariot safe and steady. The King was not aware of this bravery on the part of his wife. At last when he came to know of this he promised to give her two boons. The queen said that she would ask for those two boons later. as she didn't want anything then. After this the King and the queen returned to their country. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Sarga 9; Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa).

3) Request for the boons and the forest life of Śrī Rāma. As the celebration of anointing Śrī Rāma as the Heir apparent in Ayodhyā was going on, the humpy Mantharā approached Kaikeyī and advised her on the ways of making her son Bharata King and sending Śrī Rāma to forest. At first Kaikeyī refused to agree to this, but at last she succumbed to the repeated advice of Mantharā. Daśaratha came to see Kaikeyī who was lying in grief. Making use of this opportunity Kaikeyī requested for the granting of the two boons promised earlier. One boon was that Bharata should be anointed as heir apparent making use of the preparations made for Śrī Rāma and the other boon was that Śrī Rāma should live in forest, wearing bark of trees and matted hair for fourteen years. When Daśaratha heard these requests he became unconscious. But he granted her wishes.

KAIKEYĪ II. Wife of Ajamīḍha, a King of the Pūru dynasty. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Stanza 37).

KAIKEYĪ III. Sudeṣṇā, the wife of the King of Virāṭa was known by the name Kaikeyī also. She was the daughter of Kekaya, the King of Sūta, born of his wife Mālavī. As she was the daughter of Kekaya, she got the name Kaikeyī. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 16). Besides, it is stated in the Purāṇas that all the princesses of the kingdom of Kekaya were called by the name Kaikeyī.

KAILĀSA (KAILĀSAKA). A serpent belonging to the Kaśyapa family. Mention is made about this serpent in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 103, Stanza 11.

KAILĀSA

1) General information. The mount Mahāmeru has an area of eighteen thousand nāzhikas (Indian mile of $\frac{1}{4}$ Kośa) and a height of two thousand nāzhikas. On the eastern side of this mount there are two mountains called Jaṭhara and Devakūṭa. Pavamāna and Pāriyātra are the two mountains on the western side. On the south there are the two mountains of Kailāsa and Karavīra. The two mountains on the north are called Triśṛṅga and Makaragiri. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapters 109 and 141 that the abodes of Śiva and Kubera are on the mount Kailāsa. Once, to please Śiva, Mahāviṣṇu performed penance on Kailāsa. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 222, Stanzas 33 to 40). It is mentioned in Mahā Bhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 3 that the mountain Maināka stands to the north of Kailāsa. Once Vyāsa went to Kailāsa. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 43, Stanza 17). In Vana Parva, Chapter 106, mention is made that the King Sagara, with his two queens, once went to Kailāsa for penance. It was on the Kailāsa that Bhagīratha performed penance to propitiate Śiva to bring down Gaṅgā. Kailāsa is hundred yojanas high. The devas come to this place daily and return. It is mentioned in Sabhā Parva, Chapter 141, that in the place where Kubera lives on Kailāsa there live a large number of Yakṣas (demi-gods), Rākṣasas (giants) Kinnaras (heavenly musicians), Garuḍas (hawks) Mātaṅgas (elephants) and Gandharvas (semi-gods). The lake of lotus of Kubera which was reached by Bhīmasena once, was in Kailāsa. In Vana Parva, it is mentioned that the Pāṇḍavas visited Kailāsa during their forest life. It could be understood from Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 83 that Kāmadhenu performed penance on the Kailāsa, once.

KAIRĀTA PARVA. A sub section of Vana Parva in Mahābhārata.

KAIŚIKA. See under Jyāmagha.

KAIŚIKA (M). An ancient country in Bhārata. It is mentioned in Mahā Bhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 14 that Bhīṣmaka the King of Vidarbha conquered this country.

KAIṬABHA.

1) General information. Kaiṭabha was the brother of Madhu, an Asura (demon). These two brothers are known in the Purāṇas as Madhu-Kaiṭabhas.

2) Origin. In the Purāṇas, two stories slightly different from each other, occur about the birth of Madhu and Kaiṭabha. One story occurs in Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 10 and the other in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva. In Devī Purāṇa, Chapter 1, it is stated as follows :—

In the beginning there was no earth or any other planet. There was only water. Mahāviṣṇu slept on the surface of the water. From the navel of Mahāviṣṇu the stalk of a lotus grew up and there was a lotus flower at the end of the stalk. Brahmā was born in the lotus flower. Brahmā stayed in the flower in deep meditation reciting the Vedas. Ear-wax flowed out from both the ears of Mahāviṣṇu. From the ear-wax two Asuras Madhu and Kaiṭabha were born.

The following occurs in the Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 348 about the birth of Madhu-Kaiṭabhas.

A lotus flower grew up from the navel of Mahāviṣṇu and Brahmā was born in the flower. In the flower there were two drops of water created by Mahāviṣṇu. One drop was as sweet as honey and from that drop was born the Asura Madhu with the attributes of tamas (darkness). The other drop was hard and from it Kaiṭabha was born with the attribute of Rajas (activity).

3) Madhu-Kaiṭabhas' acquiring boons. Madhu-Kaiṭabhas were born in water, grew up in water and walked on the surface of water, haughty and arrogant. They began to think about how the big flood of water came into existence. Then Devī appeared before them and taught them the mantra or incantation of Vāgbīja (origin of logos). Reciting this mantra, Madhu and Kaiṭabha worshipped Devī for thousand years. Devī appeared and asked them what they wished. They wanted the boon that death should befall them only as they desired. Devī granted them the boon. After this they became haughtier because of the boon, and lived in the water playing with the creatures in water having nobody to confront them (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 1).

4) The theft of the Vedas. Madhu Kaiṭabhas saw Brahmā lying in the lotus flower reciting the four Vedas which he had created. They caught hold of all the Vedas and went to Pātāla, (the nether world) and hid themselves there. Brahmā grew sad at the loss of the Vedas and followed Madhu-Kaiṭabhas, who began to attack Brahmā. At this Brahmā became terribly afraid of the Asuras and ran to Mahāviṣṇu who was lying in a deep sleep of contemplation. Brahmā praised him. Mahāviṣṇu woke up. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

5) The death of Madhu and Kaiṭabha. According to the request of Brahmā, Mahāviṣṇu confronted Madhu and Kaiṭabha. Madhu engaged Viṣṇu in fighting while Kaiṭabha took rest and when Madhu became tired, Kaiṭabha engaged Viṣṇu in fighting. Thus the fight went on for a long time and Viṣṇu became tired of continuous fight. Viṣṇu understood that owing to the boon given by Devī the Asuras would die only if they wished for death, and that no body could kill them. So Viṣṇu began to meditate on Devī, who said "It would never be possible for you to kill Madhu and Kaiṭabha because of my boon. They could be killed only by deceit. So you may kill them deceitfully".

Hearing these words Mahāviṣṇu approached the Asuras and said to them. "I am much pleased with you. So you may ask for any boon." Hearing this they laughed and said that they were more powerful than Viṣṇu and that he might ask of them any boon. Taking that opportunity Mahāviṣṇu said "Oh ! powerful persons. I ask you to grant me this boon. Give me the boon to kill you." This request shook them. They were willing to be killed at any place except water. They thought that Viṣṇu would not be powerful enough to kill them. Mahāviṣṇu instantly raised his thighs which were enlarged to a great extent over the water as solid earth seeing which the Asuras enlarged their bodies to the extent of a thousand yojanas. But Mahāviṣṇu enlarged his thighs further, caught hold of Madhu and Kaiṭabha, laid them on his thighs and cut off their heads with his discus. All the surface of the sea was covered with the medas (fat) of these Asuras. This medas of Madhu and Kaiṭabha collected itself into a lump and became the earth. So the earth got the name 'Medinī'. As the earth was the fat of the Asuras it was not fit for food. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 1).

6) The so of Madhu-Kaiṭabhas. A horrible son named Dhundhu was born to Madhu-Kaiṭabhas. He lived under the sand in a wilderness called Ujjālakam. A King of the Ikṣvāku family named Kuvalayāśva killed Dhundhu. So Kuvalayāśva got the name Dhundhumāra. See under Dhundhu. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 202). (Khara and Atikāya are the rebirths of Madhu and Kaiṭabha. See under Atikāya).

KAITAVA. Another name of Ulūka, the son of Śakuni.

KAITAVA (M). A country in ancient Bhārata. Mention is made about this country in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 18, Stanza 13).

KĀKA A son of Kaṁsa (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

KĀKAM. A town in ancient India. (M.B. Bhīṣma, Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 64, contains a reference to this).

KĀKĪ I. Original mother of the crows. (See under CROW).

KĀKĪ II. One of the seven mothers who suckled Subrahmaṇya at his birth. The seven mothers were—Kākī, Halimā, Brahmikā, Mālinī, Palālā, Āryā and Mitrā. (M.B. Araṇya Parva, Chapter 228, Verse 10).

KĀKA (CROW).

1) Origin. Kaśyapa was the son of Marīci, who was the son of Brahmā. Kaśyapa's wife Tāmrā had many daughters like Kākī, Śyenī, Bhāsī, Gṛdhrkā, Śukī and Grīvā. From Kākī were born the crows in the world. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 19).

2) Crows—the symbol of sin. There is a reference in Śiva Purāṇa to this. Long ago the King of Kāśī had a daughter named Kalāvatī. Even in her youth, she received the "Śaiva pañcākṣara mantra." After that, she was married by Dāśārha, King of Mathurā, who was a sinner. When he touched Kalāvatī who was a holy woman, he experienced unbearable heat. Kalāvatī said that it was because of the King's sin. So she took Dāśārha to the sage Garga, who purified Dāśārha with his mantras (incantations) and made him stand in water. At once the King's sins came out of his body in the shape of crows. Some of them flew away. Many of them fell down with their wings burnt. Seeing this, the sage Garga said that all those crows were the volume of sins accumulated in the course of the innumerable births through which he had passed. (Śiva Purāṇa, Pañcākṣara Māhātmya).

3) T e Crow and Rice-offerings. In Uttara Rāmāyaṇa there is a story about the crow's right to eat the offering of rice to Pitṛs. Once a King named Marutta performed a Maheśvara sattra. Indra and other gods attended the sattra. Hearing about this, Rāvaṇa came that way. The frightened gods fled away assuming the forms of different birds. Yama escaped in the form of a crow. From that time, Yama was pleased with crows. He gave a blessing that in future, when human beings worship the pitṛs by offering rice to them, the crows will have the right to eat that rice. Thus the right of the crows to eat offerings of rice, originated from that time. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

KAKṢA. A place of habitation of ancient Bhārata. (Śloka 49, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

KAKṢAKA. A serpent born of the family of Vāsuki. This serpent was burnt to death at the Sarpasattra of Janamejaya. (Śloka 6, Chapter 57, Ādi Parva).

KAKṢASENA I.

1) General information. (i) A King who was the grandson of Avīkṣit and son of Parīkṣit. For genealogy see 'Parīkṣit'.

(ii) Ugrasena, Citrasena, Indrasena, Suṣeṇa and Bhīmasena were his brothers. (Chapter 94, Ādi Parva).

2) Other details.

(i) Kakṣasena was a member of the court of Yama. (Chapter 8, Sabhā Parva).

(ii) Kakṣasena was considered to be one among the pious souls, like Śibi, Pratardana, Rantideva, Ambarīṣa, Janamejaya, Vṛṣādarbhi, Paraśurāma, Śrī Rāma, Karandhama and Mitrasaha who had attained salvation by their charity and righteousness. Mahābhārata states that Kakṣasena the saintly king attained salvation by presenting gifts to the great Vasiṣṭha. (Śloka 14, Chapter 137, Anuśāsana Parva).

KAKṢASENA II. There was another King called Kakṣasena in the court of Dharmaputra. (Śloka 22, Chapter 4, Sabhā Parva).

KAKṢASENĀŚRAMA. An Āśrama situated on the top of the mountain, Asita. Perhaps this was constructed by Kakṣasena. (Śloka 12, Chapter 89, Vana Parva).

KAKṢEYU (KṚṢEYU). Son of Raudrāśva born of a nymph called Miśrakeśī. He had nine brothers, named Ṛkṣeyu, Sannateyu, Ghṛteyu (Kṛteyu), Citeyu. Sthaṇḍileyu, Dharmeyu, Sammiteyu, Ṛteyu and Matināra. For genealogy see under 'Pūruvaṁśa'. (Śloka 10, Chapter 94, Ādi Parva).

KAKṢĪVĀN I. This was a Ṛṣi well praised in the Ṛgveda.

1) Birth. King Kaliṅga did not have children for a long time. The King, therefore requested the sage Dīrghatamas (Gautama) to get a son for him by his queen. The sage consented. But the queen did not like to sleep with the old sage. She therefore requested her servant maid, Uśī, to lie with the sage. Kakṣīvān was the son born to Dīrghatamas of Uśī. (Sūkta 125, Anuvāka 18, Maṇḍala 1, Ṛgveda).

2) Other details.

(i) He was of the family of Aṅgiras and he lived in a hermitage in the east. (Chapter 208, Śānti Parva, and Chapter 135, Anuśāsana Parva).

(ii) He praised Viṣṇu by reciting the Ṛks with deep concentration and acquired many virtues. (Chapter 292, Śānti Parva).

(iii) Mahābhārata states that Kakṣīvān was the preceptor of Indra and also the creator of the world with Rudratejas (majesty equal to that of Śiva). Yavakrīta, Raibhya, Arvāvasu, Parāvasu, Kakṣīvan, Aṅgiras and Kaṇva are seven Barhiṣads (a set of manes born of Brahmā) who are also gurus of Indra living in the east. (Chapter 150, Anuśāsana Parva).

(iv) Kakṣīvān was famous among the Yajvans. (Sūkta 18, Anuvāka 5, Maṇḍala 1, Ṛgveda).

(v) To test the strength of Kakṣīvān he was once given a hundred pitchers of liquor by the Aśvins. (Sūkta 116, Anuvāka 17, Maṇḍala 1, Ṛgveda).

(vi) Kakṣīvān who was returning home from the āśrama of the preceptor after completing his education spent one night at a place on the way. In the morning when he awoke he saw Svanaya son of King Bhāvayavya before him. The beautiful boy had strayed to that place by accident while playing with his friends nearby. Kakṣīvān was attracted by the enchanting features of the boy and decided to make him the husband of his daughter. Svanaya on knowing the details regarding Kakṣīvān took him to his father's palace and the King received the sage with respect and gave him many presents. (Sūkta 125, Anuvāka 18, Maṇḍala 1, Ṛgveda).

KAKṢĪVĀN II. A King of ancient India. He was the father of Bhadrā, wife of Ṛṣitāśva. (Śloka 17, Chapter 120, Ādi Parva).

KĀKṢĪVĀN. A son of Maharṣi Gautama. Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 21, Verse 3 states that at the time when Gautama was living in Girivraja, he had connection with a Śūdra woman of Uśīnara land and as a result of it Kākṣīvān was born to her. This Gautama was not the husband of Ahalyā.[1]

Kākṣīvān had a son named Caṇḍakauśika and two daughters named Bhadrā and Ghoṣā. Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 17 states that Kākṣīvān flourished in Yudhiṣṭhira's assembly.

KĀKṢĪVATASUTĀ. A female sage named Ghoṣā who was the daughter of the sage Kākṣīvān. As she was suffering from the disease of leprosy, no one was prepared to marry her. She composed a mantra in praise of the Aśvinīdevas. They cured her of her disease. After that she got married. Besides Ghoṣā, Kākṣīvān had another daughter named Bhadrā. (See under Bhadrā).

KAKUTSTHA. A son of Śaśāda, a King of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. He was the father of Anenas. (See under Kākutstha).

KĀKUTSTHA. Śrī Rāma got the name Kākutstha because he was born in the dynasty of Kakutstha. (See under Kakutstha).

KALĀ I. A measure of time. See under Kālamāna.

KALĀ II. Art. The sixtyfour arts are as under ;—

(1) Gīta (music). (2) Vādya (instrumental music). (3) Nṛtya (Dancing). (4) Nāṭya (histrionics). (5) Citra (painting). (6) Accunirmāṇa (making of types). (7) Puṣpanirmāṇa (flower-gardening). (8) Pūmettaracanā (artistic flower laying). (9) Dehālaṅkaraṇa (Dressing). (10) Gṛhālaṅkaraṇa (furnishing of houses). (11) Śayyānirmāṇa (making of beds). (12) Jalataraṅga (music with water). (13) Jalavādya (music on water). (14) Vividhaveṣadhāraṇa (wearing different kinds of dresses). (15) Mālānirmāṇa (making of flower garlands). (16) Keśālaṅkāra (hair dressing). (17) Vastradhāraṇa (wearing of dresses). (18) Karṇabhūṣaṇanirmāṇa (making of ear-ornaments). (19) Sugandhapuṣpasañcayana (collection of sweet-smelling flowers). (20) Alaṁkṛtāhāra (decorating food articles). (21) Indrajāla (magic). (22) Bhaṅgīkaraṇa (beautification). (23) Karaśucīkaraṇa (cleaning of the hands). (24) Modakanirmāṇa (making of sweet-meats). (25) Pānīyanirmāṇa (making of drinks). (26) Tailoring. (27) Jālanirmāṇa (making of nets). (28). Riddle. (29) Akṣaraśloka (competition in the reciting of poems according to certain rules). (30) Arthaviśadīkaraṇa (clarification of meaning). (31) Granthapārāyaṇa (reading of books). (32) Nāṭakadarśana (enacting of plays). (33) Samasyā pūraṇa (part of a verse, generally the last line, proposed by one person to be completed by another as a trial of skill). (34) Nirmāṇa (making of cots of canes). (35) Carpentry. (36) Logic. (37) Vāstuvidyā (science of building homes). (38) Svarṇaratnapariśodhana (connoisseurship of gold and diamonds). (39) Dhātusaṁskaraṇa (purification of metals). (40) Skill in distinguishing the colours of diamonds. (41) Khaniparīkṣana (finding out of mines). (42) Understanding trees and their value (Vṛkṣāyurvedayoga). (43) Cockfight. (44) Understanding the language of birds like Mainā. (45) Massaging. (46) Keśaprakṣālana. (47) Akṣara muṣṭikā kathana. (48) Videśabhāṣāpaṭhana (Learning of foreign languages). (49) Deśabhāṣā-jñāna. (knowledge of the language of one's own country). (50) Bhāvikālapravacana (fortune-telling). (51) Yantranirmāṇa (making of machines). (52) Smaraṇaśaktipoṣaṇa (increasing memory power). (53) Śravaṇapāṭha (studying by hearing). (54) Nimiṣakavana (Instant poetry-making). (55) Kriyāvikalpa. (56) Kapaṭabhāva (False poses), (57) Chandojñāna (knowledge of different metres). (58) Vastragopana. (59) Game of dice. (60) Another gambling game. (61) Bālalīlā (entertainment of children). (62) Vinayācārakrama (etiquette). (63) Vaitālikavidyājñāna (panegyrics). (64) Kāryagrahaṇa (comprehension of facts). (Śabdasāgara).

KĀLA I.[2] (YAMA). The god of Death. When the life span of each living being allotted by Brahmā is at an end, Yama sends his agents and takes the soul to Yamapurī (the city of Yama). From there, the holy souls are sent to Vaikuṇṭha (Heaven, the abode of Viṣṇu) and the sinful souls to Hell.

1) Genealogy and birth of Yama. From Mahāviṣṇu were descended in the following order—Brahmā, Marīci, Kaśyapa, Sūrya (Sun), Yama (Kāla).

Sūrya married Saṁjñā, daughter of Viśvakarmā. They had three children, Manu, Yama and Yamī. Of them, Yama has the task of taking away the souls of those whose life-span is at an end. Once Saṁjñā who was unable to bear the dazzling brilliance of Sūrya, ordered her maid Chhāyā to attend on him and went to the forest for performing penance. Mistaking her for his wife Saṁjñā, Sūrya begot of her three sons namely, Śaniścara, Manu and Tapatī. Once Chhāyā cursed Yama for disobedience. Then Sūrya and Yama understood that she was not Saṁjñā. After that the Aśvinīkumāras, Revanta and Bhayā were born to Sūrya and Saṁjñā. Thus Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part III, Chapter 2 says that Yama was the brother of Manu, Yamī, the Aśvinī Kumāras, Tapatī, Śanaiścara and Bhayā. Yama's sister Bhayā was married by the Asura, Heti. Sunīthā was the eldest daughter of Yama. Aṁga married her. The famous King Vena was her son. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part I, Chapter 13).

2) Yama is a Dikpālaka. Once Kubera offered penance to Brahmā for ten thousand years in water, head downwards and in the middle of Pañcāgni. Brahmā who was pleased, appeared before him and Kubera prayed to him that he should be made one of the Lokapālakas. Accordingly Brahmā ordered that thenceforth, Indra should rule in the East, Yama in the South, Varuṇa in the West and Kubera in the North. Yama's city is called Saṁyaminī. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

3) Curse on Yama. Yama was once cursed by the sage Aṇi Māṇḍavya. It was as a result of it that Yama was born as Vidura. (For details see under Aṇimāṇḍavya).

4) Yama became Maharṣi. Śrī Rāma who returned after his forest life became king of Ayodhyā. He ruled over

1. It is also stated elsewhere that Kākṣīvān was the son of Dīrghatamas, the father of Gautama. See under Dīrghatamas.
2. Kāla and Dharma are not the same person. See under Dharma.

the country for 11,000 years. Then it was time to recall Mahāviṣṇu who had incarnated as Śrī Rāma, to Vaikuṇṭha. Brahmā sent Yama to the earth to bring back Śrī Rāma. Yama who assumed the guise of a young Maharṣi, went to Ayodhyā and visited Śrī Rāma. He said that he was the disciple of the sage Atibala and had come to tell him a secret. So Lakṣmaṇa was posted at the entrance to prevent anyone from entering the room. It was announced that anyone who tried to enter would be slaughtered. After that, while Śrī Rāma and Yama were having their secret talk, Durvāsas, the sage, who was hungry after a fast of 1,000 years, arrived at the door, asking for food. Lakṣmaṇa told him humbly that he could not be allowed to enter just then. Durvāsas, who became furious, was about to curse the whole race of Kings. So Lakṣmaṇa entered the room and informed Śrī Rāma of the arrival of Durvāsas. At the same time, in fulfilment of the order, he was ready to be slaughtered. Vasiṣṭha suggested that it would be enough if Lakṣmaṇa was banished from the palace. Accordingly he was expelled and he went and drowned himself in the depths of the river Sarayū. Śrī Rāma who was broken-hearted at his separation from Lakṣmaṇa went to the same river and drowned himself there shortly after. Yama then took their souls to Vaikuṇṭha. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

5) Yama became crow. In Uttara Rāmāyaṇa there is a story that at Marutta's Yāga, Yama who was frightened at the sight of Rāvaṇa, escaped in the form of a crow. (For details, see under Crow).

6) An Age without Yama. In the Purāṇas there are references to three periods when there was no Yama.

(1) One such period was in Kṛtayuga. At that time there was no death on earth which became overcrowded with living beings. Unable to bear their weight, the earth sank down to a depth of 100 yojanas. The goddess of Earth offered tearful prayers to Mahāviṣṇu, who incarnated as Varāha (pig) and lifted up the earth 100 yojanas. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 142).

(2) When Mārkaṇḍeya reached the age of sixteen, Yama went to him to take away his life. Mārkaṇḍeya hid himself behind the idol of Śiva. Yama threw his noose at him but it fell round Śiva's neck. Śiva opened his third eye and glared at Yama who was burnt to ashes in its fire. (See under Mārkaṇḍeya).

(3) See under Pāñcālī, Para 1, Sub Para 2.

7) Yama returned Satyavān's Life. (See under Satyavān).

8) Yama and King Nṛga. See under Nṛga.

9) Yamapurī (the city of Yama). Yamapurī is thousand yojanas in extent. There is an entrance on each of the four sides. On one side of the city stands Citragupta's mansion. The fort surrounding the city is made of iron. There are a hundred streets in Yamapurī. They are all decorated with banners and festoons. There is a group of people in Citragupta's mansion. They are engaged in calculating the life-span of living beings. They take into account the vices and virtues of human beings. To the south of Citragupta's residence is situated "Jvaramandira" (the abode of diseases). Adjacent to it are the abodes of all kinds of diseases, each disease having its own abode. Yama's home is situated at a distance of twenty yojanas from the abode of Citragupta. It has an area of two hundred yojanas and a height of fifty yojanas. It is supported by one thousand columns. On one side of it there is an extensive assembly hall. It is here that those who have led virtuous lives in the world, find their abode after death. They lead a life of eternal heavenly bliss there. (Garuḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 14).

(10) Naraka (Hell). There is a world called Pitṛloka in the middle of the three worlds, on their southern side below the earth and above the Atala loka. The Agniṣvāttas and other pitṛs stay there in meditative trance for securing prosperity to those who come to pitṛloka. Yama is the ruler of pitṛloka. Since he is scrupulous in imparting justice, Yama is also called Yamadharma. He administers justice with an even hand to all living beings brought there by his agents, according to their virtues and vices during their earthly lives. He has power to assess the virtues and vices of people and to assign suitable punishments to them, but not to alter the laws or methods of punishment. Sinners are sent to the different Narakas by Yamadharma according to the nature and seriousness of their sins. The Purāṇas refer to twentyeight Narakas in all. They are:—

(1) Tāmisram. Those who rob others of their wealth, wives, children etc, are bound with ropes by Yama's servants and cast into the Naraka known as Tāmisram. There, they are given sound beating until they faint. After they recover their senses, the beating is repeated and those who try to escape are bound hand and foot and pushed again into this hell. This is repeated as long as Fate has ordained.

(2) Andhatāmisram. This hell is intended for the wife who takes food after deceiving the husband or the husband who takes food after deceiving his wife. The punishmen there is the same as that of Tāmisram except the beating. But the excruciating pain suffered by the victims on being tied fast with Yama's rope by his servants, makes them fall down senseless.

(3) Rauravam. This is the hell into which those who have persecuted other living beings are cast. Those who seize and enjoy another man's property or resources, also come under 'Persecution'. When such people are thrown into this hell, those whom they had persecuted or cheated while on earth, assume the shape of "ruru" and torment them severely. "Ruru" is a kind of dreadful serpent. This hell is known as "Rauravam" because of the abundance of rurus there.

(4) Mahārauravam. Here also there are ruru serpents. Only they are of a fiercer type. Those who deny the legitimate heirs, their inheritance and possess and enjoy others' property, are squeezed to death by these terrible serpents coiling round them.

(5) Kumbhīpākam. This is the hell for the punishment of those who kill and eat birds and animals. Here, oil is kept boiled in huge vessels. Yama's servants plunge sinners into this oil. The period of their torture extends to as many years as there were hairs on the bodies of the birds or animals which they killed and ate.

(6) Kālasūtram (Yamasūtra). This hell is terribly hot. It is here that those who do not respect their father, mother, elders, etc. are cast. They rush about in the unbearable heat of this hell and drop down exhausted, from time to time.

(7) Asi(ta)patram. This is the hell in which those sinners who abandon svadharma (one's own duty) and accept Paradharma (others' duty) are flogged by Yama's servants with whips made of asipatra (sharp-edged sword-shaped leaves). When they run about under the flogging they trip over stones and thorns and fall on their faces. Then they are stabbed with knives made of asipatra. They drop down unconscious and when they recover their senses, the same process is repeated.

(8) Sūkaramukham. Kings who neglect their duties and oppress their subjects by misrule, are punished in this hell. They are crushed to a pulp by beating until they fall down unconscious and when they recover, they are again subjected to the same treatment.

(9) Andhakūpam. This is the hell for punishing those who oppress Brāhmaṇas, gods and the poor. In this Kūpa (well) there are wild beasts like tiger, bear etc. carnivorous birds like eagle, kite etc. venomous creatures like snakes and scorpions and insects like bugs, mosquitoes, etc. The sinners have to endure the constant attacks of these creatures, until the expiry of the period of their punishment.

(10) Kṛmibhojanam (Food for worms). Depraved Brāhmaṇas who take their food without worshipping gods and honouring guests, are thrown into this "Kṛmibhojana" Naraka which is one lakh yojanas in extent. Worms, insects and serpents sting them and eat them up. Once their bodies are completely eaten up by these creatures, they are provided with new bodies, which are also eaten up in the above manner. They have to continue there in this manner, till the end of their term of punishment.

(11) Taptamūrti. Those who plunder or steal other people's gold, jewels, ornaments or money are cast into the furnaces of this Naraka, which is built of iron and always remains red hot with blazing fire.

(12) Śālmali. This Naraka is intended for men and women who have committed adultery. A figure made of iron, heated red-hot is placed there. The victim is urged to embrace it. Yama's servants flog the victim from behind.

(13) Vajrakaṇṭakaśāli. This Naraka is for the punishment of those who have unnatural intercourse with cows and other animals. Here, the guilty people are made to embrace iron images full of diamond needles.

(14) Vaitaraṇī. This is the Naraka for Kings who have violated all ordinances of Śāstras and for adulterers. It is the most terrible place of punishment. Vaitaraṇī is a river filled with human excreta, urine, blood, hair, bones, nails, flesh, fat and all kinds of dirty substances. There are various kinds of ferocious beasts in it. Those who are cast into it are attacked and mauled by these creatures from all sides. The sinners have to spend the term of their punishment, feeding upon the contents of this river.

(15) Pūyodakam. This is a well, filled with excreta, urine, blood, phlegm etc. Brāhmaṇas and others who have intercourse with women of low caste against customs, ordinances etc. vagabonds who wander about irresponsibly like animals and birds and other such sinners are cast into this Naraka.

(16) Prāṇarodham. This Naraka is for the punishment of Brāhmaṇas who keep dogs, asses and other mean animals and constantly hunt and kill animals for food. Here the servants of Yama gather round the sinners and cut them limb by limb with their arrows and subject them to constant insult.

(17) Viśasanam. This Naraka is for the torture of those who perform Yāga by killing cows to display their wealth and splendour. They will have to remain there during the whole term of their punishment under the constant flogging of Yama's servants.

(18) Lālābhakṣam. This is the Naraka for lustful people. The lascivious fellow who makes his wife swallow semen, is cast into this hell. Lālābhakṣam is a sea of semen. The sinner lies in it feeding upon semen alone.

(19) Sārameyāśanam. Those guilty of unsocial acts like incendiarism, poisoning food, mass slaughter, ruining the country, etc. are cast into the Naraka called Sārameyāśana. There, nothing but the flesh of dogs is available for food. There are 700 dogs in that Naraka and all of them are as ferocious as leopards. They attack the sinners who come there from all sides and tear their flesh from their bodies with their teeth.

(20) Avīci. This Naraka is for those guilty of bearing false witness, false swearing or assuming false names. They are hurled into Avīci from a mountain which is 100 yojanas in height. The whole region of Avīci is always shaken like an ocean with turbulent waves. As soon as the sinners fall into it they are utterly smashed into dust. They are again restored to life and the punishment is repeated.

(21) Ayaḥpānam. Those who belong to the first three castes—viz. Brāhmaṇas, Kṣatriyas and Vaiśyas—who indulge in drinking Soma, Surā etc. are bound and thrown into this hell. They are forced to drink melted iron in liquid form.

(22) Kshārakardamam. Braggarts and those who insult people of noble birth are cast into this hell. Here, Yama's servants keep the sinners upside down and torture them in various ways.

(23) Rakṣobhakṣam. This Naraka is for the punishment of meat-eaters. There are separate compartments in this hell for those who perform human sacrifice, eat human flesh or the flesh of other creatures. All the living beings they had killed before, would have arrived here in advance. They would all join together in attacking, biting and mauling these sinners. Their shrieks and complaints would be of no avail there.

(24) Śūlaprotam. People who take the life of others who have done no harm to them, by deceiving them or by treachery, with weapons like the trident, are thrown into the "Śūlaprotam" hell. Yama's servants fix each of the sinners of the above class, on the top of a trident. They are forced to spend the whole term of their punishment in that position, suffering intense thirst and hunger, enduring all the tortures inflicted on them by Yama's servants.

(25) Dandaśūkam. Sinners who persecute fellow creatures like venomous serpents are cast into this Naraka. There are many wild beasts and many hooded serpents here. They eat alive, the sinners who fall into this hell.

(26) Vaṭarodham. This hell is for those who persecute the creatures living on mountain-peaks, dense forests, hollow trunks of trees, etc. It resembles mountains, caves, forests etc. After throwing them into this hell the sinners are tortured with fire, snake, poison and weapons, just as they had tortured other creatures, while on earth.

(27) Paryāvartanakam. One who denies food to a person who happens to come at meal-time and abuses him, is thrown into this Naraka. The moment he falls into it, his eyes are put out by being pierced with the beaks of cruel birds like the crow, eagle etc. It is the most painful experience for them.

(28) Sūcīmukham. Proud and miserly people who refuse to spend money even for the bare necessities of life, find their place in this hell. Those who do not repay the money they have borrowed, will also be cast into this hell. Here, their bodies will be continually pricked and pierced with needles. (Devī Bhāgavata, 8th Skandha; Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 2, Chapter 6).

12) Mantra (incantation) to invoke Yama.

"Mahiṣastha Yamāgaccha daṇḍahasta mahābala /
rakṣa tvaṁ dakṣiṇadvāraṁ
Vaivasvata namoṣ stu te". //

After invoking Yama with this mantra, one should worship with the mantra "Vaivasvataṁ Saṁgamanam". (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 56).

13) Yama Defeated by Rāvaṇa. Once the sage Nārada went to Rāvaṇa and expatiated on the glory and splendour of Yama. Immediately Rāvaṇa set out to Saṁyamanī with the intention of subduing Yama. Accepting Rāvaṇa's challenge, Yama came out. After a terrible battle between them, which lasted for seven days neither of them was able to defeat the other. Both of them had received Brahmā's boon. In the night of the seventh day, Yama rushed forth with his staff to beat Rāvaṇa to death. Then Rāvaṇa took his Brahmāstra. At that critical moment, Brahmā came to the battlefield and persuaded Yama to withdraw from the fight. Yama retreated to his city and closed the gate. Rāvaṇa went back with a triumphant shout. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

14) Other details concerning Yama.

(i) Yama attended Draupadī's Svayaṁvara. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 186, Verse 6).

(ii) It was Yama who performed "Śāmitra" (killing of animals) at the yāga done by devas in the Naimiśāraṇya. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 196, Verse 1).

(iii) In the fight between Indra and Arjuna in Khāṇḍavadāha, Yama joined the side of Indra. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 226, Verse 32).

(iv) Once in a thousand years, Yama comes to Bindusarovara and performs a yāga. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 3, Verse 15).

(v) Yama is a member of Brahmā's assembly. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 51).

(vi) When Arjuna performed tapas and received Pāśupatāstra from Śiva, Yama was pleased and presented Daṇḍāstra to Arjuna. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 41, Verse 25).

(vii) Yama was one of the devas who tested and then blessed Nala who went to Damayantī's Svayaṁvara. (See under NALA).

(viii) Indra made Yama, the King of Pitṛs. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 16, Verse 14).

(ix) Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 69, Verse 26 says that when Devas milked Bhūmidevī, Yama took the form of a calf. (See under Vena).

(x) In Tripuradahana (burning of Tripura) Yama remained in Śaivabāṇa (the arrow of Śiva, (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 202, Verse 77. See also under TRIPURA).

(xi) Yama presented two warriors, Unmātha and Pramātha to god Skanda). (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 30).

(xii) Once Yama gave advice to the sage Gautama on the subject of Dharma. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 192).

(xiii) Yama once gave a boon to a Brāhmaṇa named Jāpaka. (See under JĀPAKA. M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 199).

(xiv) Once Mahāviṣṇu taught Yama, Śiva-Sahasranāma. Yama taught it to Nāciketa. (See under ŚIVA and NĀCIKETA. Also M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 17).

(xv) Yama sent his special agents to bring a Brāhmaṇa named Śarmi. (See under ŚARMI. Also M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 68).

(xvi) Yama once lectured on the efficacy of giving "tila" (gingelly seed) "jala" (water) and anna (rice) to a Brāhmaṇa. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 68).

(xvii) Yama once explained the secrets of Dharma. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 130).

(xviii) Yama used to worship Śiva on the mountain Muñjavān. (M.B. Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 8).

(xix) Dhūmorṇā is the name of Yama's wife. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 117, Verse 9).

(xx) There is a story in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva about the condition of the world in the absence of Yama. Once Yama started a prolonged yāga at Naimiṣāraṇya. At that time there was no death in the world. All living beings continued to live indefinitely. The Devas all joined together and approached Yama with a request to solve the problem. Yama concluded his yāga and resumed his duties and death came to the world again. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 199).

KĀLA II. A Maharṣi. Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 14, refers to this sage as offering worship to Indra, in Indra's assembly.

KĀLĀ. A daughter of Dakṣaprajāpati. (See under Kālikā).

KĀLA. See under the word Kālamāna.

KALA (S) A group of Manes. This group lives in the Brahmasabhā. (Chapter 11, Śānti Parva).

KĀLABANDHAKA. An adviser of Mahiṣāsura. Cikṣura was his war-minister, Tāmra his finance minister, Asiloman, Prime Minister, and Udarka, Chief of the army. Kālabandhaka, Bāṣkala and Trinetra were the advisers of Mahiṣāsura. (Devī Bhāgavata 5th Skandha).

KĀLABHĪTI. A devotee of Śiva. As his father Māṁṭi performed penance for the sake of a son for a thousand years his wife conceived, but did not deliver. Māṁṭi asked the child in his mother's womb why he did not come out to which the latter replied that he did not come out as he feared the Asura called Kālamārga. (As the child feared Kālamārga it came to be called Kālabhīti). As advised by Śiva, Māṁṭi created in the child knowledge about dharma, renunciation etc. and thus made him conscious about higher knowledge. The child came out of the mother's womb. In due course of time Kālabhīti took to the worship of Śiva, who blessed him as follows : "Since you have outlived Kālamārga, in future you will become famous as Mahākāla." (Skanda Purāṇa).

KĀLABRĀHMAṆA. A brahmin, who defeated Kāla. A great effulgence that emanated from his head two hundred years after his continuous Japa (Chanting of mantras) blocked the passage of sky-walkers (Devas) and spread to the three worlds. When Brahmā and others asked him to choose any boon, he said that he wanted nothing but chanting the Lord's name and mantras. Again, Brahmā insisted on the brahmin's choosing some boon or other, and then he removed himself to the northern planes of the Himālayas, where also he continued chanting mantras. There too his effulgence became so powerful that Indra deputed celestial women to obstruct his Japa, but they could do nothing in the matter. Then Indra deputed Kāla to end the brahmin's life, but he failed in the attempt. Ultimately King Ikṣvāku came to the brahmin and asked for half the power he had earned by his tapas, which the brahmin readily granted. And, Ikṣvāku became thus famous all over the worlds. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Sūryaprabhālambaka).

KĀLADA. An urban region in ancient India. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9).

KĀLADANTAKA (KĀLADANTA). A serpent born in Vāsuki's dynasty. It was burnt to death at the serpent yajña of Janamejaya. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 57).

KĀLADVIJA. A serpent, which attained salvation. The story of this nāga, which was at first a Śūdra is told in chapter 16 of the Padma Purāṇa as follows:—

Once upon a time there lived in Karavīrapura a very selfish Śūdra called Kāladvija, who was sentenced by Kāla to live in hell for four Manvantaras. After living in hell the whole of the period, he was born as a nāga and suffered much in the crevices of a stone. While living thus, on an Āśvina pūrṇimā (Full moon day in the month of Āśvina), it threw out some fried paddy and Kauḍī (shells) which fell before Viṣṇu. At once the Lord redeemed it from all its sins, and on its death, in due course, the attendants of Viṣṇu took him in a divine chariot to the Lord.

KĀLAGHAṬA. A brahmin scholar in the Vedas. He was a member of the assembly at the serpent yajña conducted by Janamejaya. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 53).

KALAHĀ. Wife of a brāhmaṇa named Bhikṣu who was an inhabitant of the city of Saurāṣṭra. This woman used to do only just the opposite of what her husband asked her to do and so Bhikṣu kept it a rule to ask her to do the opposite of what he wanted her to do. But one day he asked her to float the śrāddha piṇḍa in the river Gaṅgā, and she threw it in Śaucyakūpa. As a result of that she was born in a demoniac womb. But Dharmadatta got her purified by the Dvādaśākṣarī mantra and giving her half the virtue accrued by him. By virtue of this they were reborn as Daśaratha and Kausalyā. (Ānanda Rāmāyaṇa, Sārakāṇḍa ; Uttarakhaṇḍa,Padma Purāṇa). See also under Dharmadatta.

KĀLAJÑA(S). A synonym of the Kālakeyas. (See under Kālakeya).

KĀLAKĀ (KĀLIKĀ). One of the daughters of Dakṣa. Kaśyapa married her. Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 183 states that Kālakeya and Narakāsura were born to Kālakā by Kaśyapa. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇya Kāṇḍa, Chapter 14). In Mahābhārata Araṇya Parva, Chapter 174 we find that Kālakā once received from Brahmā, a boon that her sons would never be killed.

KĀLAKA. An Asura born to Kālikā by Kaśyapa. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇya Kāṇḍa, Chapter 14).

KĀLAKAKṢA. A warrior of Skanda deva. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 69).

KĀLAKĀKṢA. An Asura. He was killed by Garuḍa. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 105).

KĀLAKĀMUKHA (KĀLAKĀMMUKA). A Rākṣasa. He was the brother of Prahasta, Rāvaṇa's Minister. (For Genealogy, see under Prahasta). During Śrī Rāma's life in the forest Kālakāmukha was also among Khara, Dūṣaṇa and others. The other eleven members of that group were—Śyenagāmī, Pṛthugrīva, Yajñaśatru, Vihaṅgama, Durjaya, Karavīrākṣa, Paruṣa, Meghamālī, Mahāmālī, Sarpāsya and Rudhirāśana. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇya Kāṇḍa, 26th Sarga).

KĀLAKANYĀ. Daughter of Kāla (Yama). (See under Purañjana).

KĀLAKAVṚKṢĪYA. An ancient Saint. During the reign of the King Kṣemadarśin in the country of Kosala, his subjects were put to great sufferings under the misrule and corruption of his courtiers. At that time, Kālakavṛkṣīya who was a friend of Kṣemadarśin and a reputed sage, came to Kosala with a caged crow. The sage went about the country claiming to know Kākavidyā" (Vāyasī vidyā) by which a crow could be made to tell past events. Actually, the sage was going round the country in order to gather first-hand information about the corrupt practices of the King's men. After acquiring knowledge of the exact state of affairs in the country, Kālakavṛkṣīya reached the palace. Under the cloak of the crow's words he exposed some of the improprieties of the King's Minister. Naturally, the Minister was furious and by his secret instructions his servants shot the crow to death that same night. On the next day, the sage himself went to the King and convinced him of the Minister's guilt. The King accepted the sage's suggestions and brought about a thorough overhaul of the administration by punishing or dismissing the culprits. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 82).

In Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 106 we find that this sage once advised Drupada to make a treaty with King Kṣemadarśin. Kālakavṛkṣīya was a sage who flourished in Indra's assembly. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7).

KĀLAKETU. A renowned Asura Emperor who was the son of Danu, the wife of Kaśyapa. Once he abducted Ekāvalī, the wife of Ekavīra and went to Pātāla (underworld). Ekavīra fought a fierce battle with Kālaketu and recovered Ekāvalī. (See under Ekavīra).

KĀLAKEYA(S). (KĀLAKHAÑJAS).

1) Birth. The Asuras who were born to Kālā (Kālikā) by Kaśyapa Prajāpati, the son of Marīci and Brahmā's grandson.

2) General. "Kālakeya" is not the proper name of a particular Asura. The sons of Kālā (Kālikā) are all collectively called Kālakeyas. They number about 60,000. Sometimes they fought under the leadership of Vṛtrāsura and at other times under other Asura leaders.

3) Agastya and the Kālakeyas. Once the Kālakeyas started a campaign of hatred against Brāhmaṇas. At nightfall they used to enter Brāhmaṇa premises and commit murders, disturb their yāgas, etc. The Brāhmaṇas complained to the sage Agastya. Agastya set out to capture the Kālakeyas, who were alarmed and hid themselves in the ocean. Agastya dried up the ocean by drinking it. But some of the Kālakeyas escaped and fled to Pātāla. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 101).

4) Arjuna and the Kālakeyas. The headquarters of the Asuras was Hiraṇyapura, situated near Devaloka. Once they allied themselves with thousands of other Asuras called "Nivātakavacas" and launched an attack on Devaloka. Indra sent his charioteer Mātali and brought Arjuna to Devaloka. Arjuna defeated the Nivātakavacas and Kālakeyas in battle. A large number of Kālakeyas were killed in the battle. (M.B. Vana Parva Chapters 172-175).

KĀLAKĪRTI. A Kṣatriya King. Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 67 says that this King was born from the limb of Suparṇa, the younger brother of the Asura, Mayūra.

KĀLAKOṬI. A sacred place in Naimiṣāraṇya. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 3).

KĀLAKŪṬA. The virulent poison that came up during the churning of the Ocean of Milk. Śiva swallowed and retained it in his throat, and so he came to be called Nīlakaṇṭha.

"And Kālakūṭa arose like fire burning all the worlds. The smell of it sent the three worlds into a swoon. At the request of Brahmā Śiva swallowed the poison to save the world from absolute destruction. And, he (Śiva) retained it in his throat". (Ādi Parva, Chapter 18).

KĀLAMĀNA. (Calculating time). In ancient days in India time was calculated in the following manner.

Time taken (needed) to pierce a leaf with a needle	—	Alpakāla
30 Alpakālas	—	1 Truṭi
30 Truṭis	—	1 Kalā
30 Kalās	—	1 Kāṣṭhā
30 Kāṣṭhās	—	1 Nimiṣa (mātrā)
4 Nimiṣas	—	1 Gaṇita
10 Gaṇitas	—	1 Neṭuvīrpu (time for a deep sigh)
6 Neṭuvīrpus	—	1 Vināzhikā
6 Vināzhikās	—	1 Ghaṭikā
60 Ghaṭikās	—	1 Day (Ahorātra)
15 Ahorātras	—	1 Pakṣa (Fortnight)
2 Pakṣas	—	1 Cāndramāsa (A day for the Pitṛs)
2 Māsas (months)	—	1 Ṛtu.
6 Ṛtus	—	1 year for men (A day for the Devas)
300 Years (Men's)	—	1 Divyavarṣa (Divine year)
4800 Divyavarṣas	—	1 Kṛtayuga
3600 Divyavarṣas	—	1 Tretāyuga
2400 Divyavarṣas	—	1 Dvāparayuga
1200 Divyavarṣas	—	1 Kaliyuga
12000 Divyavarṣas	—	1 Caturyuga
71 Caturyugas	—	1 Manvantara
14 Manvantaras	—	1 Pralaya (Kalpa)
1 Pralaya	—	Brahmā's one day. (Bhāgavata Tṛtīya skandha)
$7\frac{1}{2}$ Nāzhikās (Ghaṭikās)	—	1 Yāma
4 Yāmas	—	1 day time
8 Yāmas	—	1 day (day and night).

(Devī Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

The 'Kālamāna' according to the Viṣṇu Purāṇa differs in certain respects from the calculations given above. Chapter 3, Part 1 of Viṣṇu Purāṇa says :— Fifteen Nimiṣas make one Kāṣṭhā. Thirty Kāṣṭhās make one Kalā and thirty Kalās make one Muhūrta. Thirty Muhūrtas make one day (man's) and thirty such days, divided into two fortnights form a Māsa (month). Six months form an Ayana; there are two ayanas called Dakṣiṇa and Uttara. Dakṣiṇāyana is night, and Uttarāyaṇa is day for the Devas. 12,000 Divyavarṣas—Deva varṣas—form a Caturyuga consisting of the Kṛta—Tretā—Dvāpara and Kali yugas, consisting respectively of 4000, 3000, 2000 and 1000 Divyavarṣas. Before the commencement and after the end of every one of the above four yugas there is an interval respectively of 400, 300, 200, and 100 years. The interval before the commencement is called Sandhyā and that at the end is called Sandhyāṁśa. The period between Sandhyā and Sandhhyāṁśa is called Kṛta yuga etc. One thousand Caturyugas form one day for Brahmā, and it (Brahmā's one day) has 14 Manus.

Again, Chapter 8, Part 2 of the Viṣṇu Purāṇa has the following to say about Kālamāna.

Fifteen nimiṣas make one Kāṣṭhā, thirty Kāṣṭhās one Kalā, thirty Kalās one muhūrta and thirty muhūrtas one day and night. Day is long or short according to the length or shortness of parts of the day, like morning, noon and evening. Despite the above variation evening or dusk time is always (2 nāzhikās) the same. The three muhūrtas from the sun's ardhodaya (when half of the sun has arisen) is called Prātaḥkāla, (morning) and it is 1/5th of day time. The three muhūrtas following are known as saṁgava. Madhyāhna (noon) is the three muhūrtas after saṁgava. The time after madhyāhna is aparāhna (afternoon). Aparāhna lasts for three muhūrtas. The time after this is dusk. Thus, a day-time of fifteen muhūrtas is divided into five parts of three muhūrtas each. On Viṣuvat day the day will have full fifteen muhūrtas. Then during Uttarāyaṇa and Dakṣiṇāyana the day will be longer or shorter. During Uttarāyaṇa the day will be longer than night, and during Dakṣiṇāyana vice versa. Viṣuvat occurs when the sun enters the Tulā (Libra) and Meṣa (Aries) houses. Dakṣiṇāyana is when the sun enters Cancer, and Uttarāyana when it enters Capricorn.

Fifteen days and nights constitute a Pakṣa (fortnight). and two Pakṣas one month. Two solar months constitute a Ṛtu (season), three ṛtus one ayana and two ayanas one year. Since there are four kinds of months, i.e. Saura, Sāvana, Cāndra and Nākṣatra, years are considered to be of five different kinds. The first is called Saṁvatsara; the second parivatsara; the third iḍvatsara; the fourth, anuvatsara and the fifth, vatsara. This period of five years is called a yuga. In a yuga of five years there are 60 saura months. 61 sāvana months, 62 Cāndra months and 67 nākṣatra months. At the beginning of the sixth year the sun and moon meet in the same house and that period of five years also is called yuga. (Śrīdharīyam).

KĀLĀMRA. See under BHADRAŚĀLA.

KĀLAMUKHA (S) A hybrid race born from the union of men and Rākṣasas. Sahadeva defeated the Kālamukhas also during his conquest of the southern region. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 67).

KĀLANEMI I. A great Asura. In later years he was born as Kaṁsa, the son of Ugrasena. (See under Kaṁsa).

KĀLANEMI II. A brahmin from Mālava. His father was called Yajñasena. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Kathāmukhalambaka).

KĀLANEMI III. A Rākṣasa. During the Rāma-Rāvaṇa war, when Lakṣmaṇa swooned, Hanūmān started for Droṇa mountain for medicine. Rāvaṇa deputed Kālanemi to obstruct the path of Hanūmān. Well acquainted with the trickeries of the Rākṣasas Hanūmān killed Kālanemi who appeared before him disguised as a sage. (Adhyātma Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa, Canto 67).

KĀLANIRṆAYA. (Calculating time). See under Kālamāna.

KĀLAÑJARAGIRI. A famous mountain at Medhāvika tīrtha. He who bathes in Vedīhrada on this mountain will get the benefits of gifting away 1000 cows. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25). Spread on the four sides of mount Mahāmeru are twenty mountains. They are :— Kuraṅga, Karaga, Kuśumbha, Vikaṅkata, Trikūṭa, Śiśira, Pataṅga, Rucaka, Nīla, Niṣadha, Śītivāsa, Kapila, Śaṅkha, Vaiḍūrya, Cārudhi, Haṁsa, Ṛṣabha, Nāga, Kālañjara and Nārada. (Devī Bhāgavata, 8th Skandha).

KALĀPA. A powerful sage of great majesty. Yudhiṣṭhira worshipped this sage at the end of the Rājasūyayajña. (Chapter 85, Sabhā Parva).

KĀLĀPA. A great sage, who was a member of Yudhiṣṭhira's assembly. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4).

KĀLAPARVATA I. A mountain on the sea coast near Laṅkā. (Vana Parva, Chapter 277).

KĀLAPARVATA II. A mountain seen by Arjuna on his way to Śiva with Śrī Kṛṣṇa during their dream-journey. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 80).

KĀLAPATHA. A son of Viśvāmitra. He was a scholar in philosophy and a Brahmavādī. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4).

KALAPIṄGA I. A holy place. (Śloka 43, Chapter 25, Anuśāsana Parva).

KALAPIṄGA II. A kind of bird. See under Kapiñjala.

KĀLAPṚṢṬHA. A serpent. It was with this serpent that the hair on the necks of horses attached to the chariot of Śiva at the burning of the Tripuras, was tied. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 34).

KĀLARĀTRI. The Devatā presiding over the night on the eve of death. The fierce aspect of the Devatā is described in the Mahābhārata as follows :—

Coal-black in colour, with swollen mouth and eyes and wearing red garlands and clothings—thus appeared the woman (Devatā) presiding over the death-night. With the fierce cord in her hand she drags away the souls of the dead. (Sauptika Parva, Chapter 9).

KALAŚA. A serpent born of the family of Kaśyapa. (Śloka 11, Chapter 103, Udyoga Parva).

KĀLAŚAILA. A range of mountains in Uttarakhaṇḍa in ancient India. (Vana Parva, Chapter 139).

KALAŚAPOTAKA. A serpent. (Śloka 7, Chapter 35, Ādi Parva).

KALAŚĪ. A holy place. If one sips water from a pond in that place one will acquire the benefit of conducting an Agniṣṭoma Sacrifice. (Śloka 80, Chapter 83, Vana Parva.

KALAŚODARA. A soldier of Skanda. (Śloka 72, Chapter 85, Śalya Parva).

KĀLASŪTRA. A hell. (See under Kāla).

KĀLATĪRTHA. A sacred place in Ayodhyā. A bath here is as good as making a gift of eleven cows. (Vana Parva, Chapter 85).

KĀLATOYAKA. An urban region in ancient India. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9).

KALĀVATĪ I. A daughter of the King of Kāśī. This gem of a woman worshipped the sage Durvāsas and became a saint by obtaining the Śaiva Pañcākṣara (five letters pertaining to Śiva—Sivāya namaḥ). Afterwards Dāśārha, King of Mathurā, married her. The King felt very hot whenever he approached her and he questioned her about it. She said she had received the Pañcākṣara Mantra even from childhood and sinners would feel the heat if they touched her. The King was greatly disappointed and Kalāvatī took him to Sage Garga to redeem him from all his sins. The sage dipped the King in the river Kālindī and when the King rose up all his sins flew away from his body as tiny birds. The King reaching the palace, embraced Kalāvatī and then he felt her body very cool and pleasant. They got a son also. (Pañcākṣaramāhātmya, Śiva Purāṇa).

KALĀVATĪ II. Mother of Mṛgāvatī, a queen. Mṛgāvatī was the mother of Udayana. See under Mṛgāvatī).

KALĀVATĪ III. A nymph. See under Ṭhiṇṭhākarāla.

KĀLAVEGA. A serpent born in the Vāsuki dynasty. It was burnt to ashes during the serpent yajña of Janamejaya. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 7).

KĀLAYAVANA. A powerful Asura born out of the effulgence of Gargācārya. He was killed by Śri Kṛṣṇa. (See under Kṛṣṇa).

KĀLEHIKĀ. A female attendant of Skandadeva. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 46).

KĀLEYA(S). A set of Asuras born to the great sage Kaśyapa of his wife Kālā. Some scholars hold the view that the Kālakeyas and the Kāleyas are one and the same. Kāleyas destroyed the Āśramas of sages like Vasiṣṭha, Cyavana and Bharadvāja. (Vana Parva, Chapter 102). Devas killed some of the Kāleyas; the others ran away to Pātāla.

KALI I. Incarnation of sin, the Sin-god.

1) Birth. Kaśyapaprajāpati, son of Brahmā, begot of his wife Muni sixteen sons and Kali was the fifteenth son. He was a deva-gandharva. The other sons of Kaśyapa were: Bhīmasena, Ugrasena, Suparṇa, Varuṇa Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Gopati, Suvarcas, Satyavāk, Arkaparṇa, Prayuta, Viśruta, Citraratha, Śāliśiras, Parjanya and Nārada. (4 Ślokas from verse 43, Chapter 65, Ādi Parva).

2) How Parīkṣit controlled Kali. When Śrī Kṛṣṇa went to Vaikuṇṭha, the Pāṇḍavas entrusted the administration of the state to Parīkṣit, son of Abhimanyu and started for the Mahāprasthāna. King Parīkṣit was travelling the continent conquering places when he saw Kali in the garb of a Śūdra King teasing a cow and bull couple. Parīkṣit aimed an arrow at him and then Kali came and bowed down before the King. The King did not kill him. He let him go free but ordered him to go away from his state. Kali was nonplussed because all the land belonged to Parīkṣit and there was no place for him to go. So Kali begged of the King to give him some space to live. Parīkṣit then declared that Kal i could live in the following five places: Gambling, Drinking, Woman, Murder and Gold. From that day onwards the free movements of Kali were thus restricted (Chapter 17, 1st Skandha, Bhāgavata).

3) Kali, Lord of Kaliyuga. There are fourteen Manvantaras during the life of Brahmā. The life time of a Manu is a Manvantara. This present period is the seventh Manvantara. In each Manvantara there are four yugas, Kṛta, Tretā, Dvāpara and Kali. Kṛtayuga consists of 17,28000 years, Tretāyuga consists of 12,-96000 years, Dvāparayuga 8,64000 years and Kaliyuga 4,32,000 years. The christian era started in the Kali era 3102 and after another 4,26926 years Kaliyuga will come to an end and the present universe will enter the eighth Manvantara. From the beginning of the Kaliyuga acts of sin predominate and Kali, sin-god, will lord over the world.

Kali was born on the day Śrī Kṛṣṇa ascended heaven. When Bhagavān Mukunda abandoned his body and went to his place in Vaikuṇṭha. Kali came into being binding all on earth. (Śloka 66, Chapter 1, Bhāgavata Māhātmya).

4) Kali and Nala. Kali and Dvāpara were going to the Svayaṁvara of Damayantī when they met Indra and others returning from the Svayaṁvara. They told Kali and Dvāpara that Damayantī was married to Nala. Kali and Dvāpara felt it an outrage that Damayantī should have married a man of the earth and not a deva. Kali decided that Nala should be sent out of his country and his matrimonial life made most unhappy. Dvāpara consented to be his accomplice in this attempt. Kali followed Nala waiting for an opportunity to enter his body. One day, by an oversight Nala, without doing the ācamana after passing urine, performed his sandhyāvandana. Taking that opportunity Kali entered the body of Nala. Kali went to Puṣkara, brother of Nala in the guise of a bullock and made Nala challenge his brother to a game of dice putting that bullock as a wager. Puṣkara accepted the challenge. Nala wagered and lost all his movable and immovable possessions and went to the forests with Damayantī. Nala, prompted by Kali, abandoned Damayantī in the forests and went his way. Damayantī cursed Kali.

It was at this time that the great serpent Karkoṭaka was entrapped in a wild fire. Nala saved him from the fire but in return the cobra bit him turning Nala into one of blue hue and said "Oh Nala, let Kali who cheated you and is now inside your body suffer with the poison I have injected into your body."

Nala roamed about and reached Ayodhyā and there became the charioteer of Ṛtuparṇa, King of Ayodhyā. When Ṛtuparṇa went to the second marriage of Damayantī to Vidarbha, Nala went with him as his charioteer. On the way Nala taught Ṛtuparṇa the science of Aśvahṛdaya and Ṛtuparṇa in return taught him the science of Akṣahṛdaya. When Nala learnt the secret of Akṣahṛdaya he vomited all the poison inside him and Kali left him. Nala was about to curse Kali but refrained from it at the request of Kali. At once Kali climbed on a Tānni tree (Beleric Myrobalan) and went down from the tree when Nala left the place. Tānni is from that day onwards considered a cursed tree. (Chapter 58, Vana Parva).

5) The world in Kaliyuga. The celebrated sage Mārkaṇḍeya had prophesied about the happenings in Kaliyuga thus: In Kaliyuga all will be dishonest. Charity and Sacrifices will be only for a name. Brāhmaṇas would do the duties of Śūdras. Śūdras will become prosperous. There will be sinners as kings. People will be short-lived and the stature of the people also will diminish. Beastly type of men will be on the increase. Taste and smell will vanish. Women will be 'Mukhebhagās'. Men will sell rice and brāhmaṇas, the Vedas. Women will sell their vaginas. The yield of milk from cows will decrease. Flowers and fruits will become less. Crows will be on the increase. Brāhmaṇas would become beggars. Sages will be merchants. Brāhmaṇas would without any reason grow hairs and nails. None will observe the four āśramas correctly. Students will defile the bed of their preceptors. Rains will be in and out of season. Trees and plants will refuse to grow in many places. There will be murder of people everywhere. Merchants will be cheats and they will use false measures. Righteous persons will decrease and sinners will increase. Girls of seven or eight years will become pregnant and boys will become fathers. Young men at the age of sixteen would be grey-haired. Old men will continue practising the habits of young men. Wives will lie with their servants. Wives will be prostitutes even while their husbands are alive. People will die in lots of hunger." (Chapter 188. Vana Parva).

6) Kaliyugatīrtha. The greatest tīrtha of Kaliyuga is the river Gaṅgā. (Chapter 85, Vana Parva).

7) Duryodhana was the incarnation of Kali and Śakuni, that of Dvāpara. (Chāpter 31, Āśrama Parva).

KALI II. A synonym of Sūrya. (Sloka 20, Chapter 3, Vana Parva).

KALI III. A synonym of Śiva. (Śloka 79, Chapter 17, Anuśāsana Parva).

KĀLĪ I. A synonym of Satyavatī, mother of Vyāsa. (See under Adrikā and Satyavatī).

KĀLĪ II. An aspect or form of Pārvatī. (See under Pārvatī).

KĀLIDĀSA. The greatest poet and dramatist in Sanskrit. Some scholars opine that Kālidāsa flourished in the 8th Century B.C. while others place his date upto the period 11th Century A.D. At any rate most of the scholars consider the period between 1st Century B.C. and 5th Century A.D. as the most probable date of the great poet. Some of the main theories in this regard are as follows;—

(1) Eighth century B.C. Towards the close of Raghuvaṁśa Mahākāvya Kālidāsa has referred to the son of King Agnimitra. Therefore the poet must have lived in the 8th Century B.C. This is the view of the scholar Hippolyte Fanche.

(2) Second Century B.C. According to Dr. Kuñjan Rājā Kālidāsa lived in the second Century B.C., the reasons for the belief being as follows. The poet was a contemporary of King Agnimitra of the Śuṅga dynasty. This Agnimitra is eulogised in Kālidāsa's Mālavikāgnimitra. Agnimitra is referred to in the Bharatavākya (epilogue) of the drama also.

(3) First Century B.C. The traditional belief is that Kālidāsa was a member in the assembly of poets and scholars of the court of emperor Vikramāditya, who started the Vikrama era in B.C. 56.

> Dhanvantarikṣapaṇakāmarasiṁha-Śaṅku—
> Vetāla-Bhaṭṭa-Ghaṭakarpara-Kālidāsāḥ /
> Khyato Varāhamihiro nṛpateḥ sabhāyāṁ
> Ratnāni vai vararucir nava vikramasya.

4) Fifth Century A.D. According to Dr. Keith, Kālidāsa lived in the fifth Century A.D. One Candra-gupta II, who defeated the Śakas in 339 A.D. was King of Ujjain. He was known as Vikramāditya also. Dr. Keith thinks that the great poet might have been a member of this King's court. Perhaps Kālidāsa had remembered his royal patron Vikramāditya in his drama called Vikramorvaśīya. Dr. Keith is further of the view that Kālidāsa composed Kumārasambhava after attending the birth celebrations of Kumāragupta, son of King Vikramāditya.

(5) Sixth Century A.D. Three scholars, Fergusson, Max Muller and Kern have opined that Kālidāsa lived in the sixth Century A.D.

Whichever be the date of Kālidāsa it could be known from his works that he spent the major part of his life in Ujjain, and was inextricably indebted to the city in many ways. Raghuvaṁśa and Kumārasambhava are his two mahākāvyas. He had also written three dramas, Abhijñānaśākuntala, Vikramorvaśīya and Mālavikāgnimitra and a lyric called Ṛtusaṁhāra. He wrote also a world-famous poem called Meghasandeśa.

KĀLIKĀ. A female attendant of Skanda. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 14).

KĀLIKA. One of the attendants given to Skanda by Pūṣan, the other being Pāṇītaka. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 43).

KĀLIKĀSAṄGA A holy place. Bathing here is as good as that at Kālikāśrama.

KĀLIKĀŚRAMA. A holy place. If one bathes and spends three nights here one will be released from the sorrows of life and death. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25).

KĀLIKEYA. A son of King Subala. He was killed by Abhimanyu. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 49).

KĀLINDĪ (YAMUNĀ).

1) General. Kālindī alias Yamunā is one of the holy rivers in India. The presiding deity of the river is Kālindīdevī. Kālindī, the daughter of the sun has her source in Kalinda mountain, and hence the name Kālindī for the river. Kālindī joins the Gaṅgā at Prayāga, and this confluence of the two rivers is called Saṅgama, which is a sacred place.

2) Gave way for Śrī Kṛṣṇa. As soon as Kṛṣṇa was born Vasudeva stealthily removed the child to Ambāḍi. Due to heavy rains the Kālindī was overflowing, and Vasudeva begged Kālindī for a passage, and the river gave way for Vasudeva to take Kṛṣṇa to Ambāḍi. (Bhāgavata 10th Skandha).

3) Balabhadra dragged Kālindī. Balabhadrarāma once stayed in Ambāḍi for two months. One day he was picnicking on the banks of Kālindī with the Gopīs. Under the influence of liquor he desired to play with his companions in the waters of Kālindī. He called Kālindī to his side, but the chaste Kālindī refused to oblige him. So he dragged her by his plough hooking her to it. In great fear Kālindī saluted him, and he enjoyed with the gopīs for some time on its waters. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

4) Kālindī, Śrī Kṛṣṇa's wife. After Maya had built Indraprastha for the Pāṇḍavas, Śrī Kṛṣṇa spent a few days there with them. And, one day while Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna were strolling on the banks of Kālindī the latter saw there a beautiful woman performing penance and he approached her. She told Arjuna that the object of her penance was to get Kṛṣṇa as husband, and when Arjuna passed on the information to Kṛṣṇa he took her in his chariot to Dvārakā and duly married her. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

5) Sons of Kālindī. Ten sons, were born to Kālindī by Kṛṣṇa. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

6) Haṁsa and his son in Kālindī. Once Kṛṣṇa attacked Jarāsandha and the son of his minister, Haṁsa, being told that his father had been killed, committed suicide by jumping into Kālindī. But, Haṁsa had not been killed, and when he returned from the battlefield and knew about the death of his son, he too jumped into Kālindī and committed suicide. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 14).

7). Other information.

(i) Kālindī is one of the seven tributaries of the Gaṅgā. One who drinks its water will be released from all sins. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 139, Verse 19).

(ii) The Pāṇḍavas, during their life in exile in the forest drank Yamunā water, got over their weariness and continued their sojourn. (Vana Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 2).

(iii) Sahadeva, son of Sṛñjaya, gave Agni Deva 1000 golden emblems on the banks of the Yamunā. (Vana Parva Chapter 90, Verse 7).

(iv) Bharata performed thirty-three Aśvamedhas on the banks of the Yamunā (Vana Parva, Chapter 90, Verse 8). On another occasion he conducted six Aśvamedhas at the same spot. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 68). On yet another occasion he conducted three hundred Aśvamedhas. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 29).

(v) Ambarīṣa, the son of Nābhāga conducted a yajña on the planes of Kālindī. (Vana Parva, Chapter 129).

(vi) Agastya the great sage performed penance on the planes of Kālindī. (Vana Parva, Chapter 161).

(vii) King Śantanu conducted seven yajñas on the banks of the Kālindī. (Vana Parva, Chapter 162).

(viii) The colour of Kālindī is black. Kāma (Cupid) shot arrows of flower at Śiva, who was lamenting over the death of Satī, and he (Śiva) thus excited to a condition of insanity jumped into Kālindī with the result that its water turned black in colour. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 6 and also see under Yamunā).

KĀLINDĪDVĪPA. It was on this island that Vyāsa was born as the result of the intercourse between Parāśara and Satyavatī. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 60).

KALIṄGA I. Ṛtāyu, King of Kaliṅga was present at the svayaṁvara of Draupadī. (Śloka 13, Chapter 185 Ādi Parva). Rukmī played a game of dice with Balabhadra with the help of Kaliṅga (for details see under Rukmī). The sage Dīrghatamas begot a son of the wife of the aged and senile Kaliṅga and the boy was named Kakṣīvān (Sūkta 125, Anuvāka 18, Maṇḍala 1, Ṛgveda).

KALIṄGA II. A warrior of the god Skandha. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 64).

KALIṄGA III. A Daitya who lived in Kṛtayuga. In Skanda Purāṇa there is a story that he conquered heaven, drove away the Dikpālakas, posted his own forces in their place and was finally killed by Devī.

KĀLIṄGA. Śrutāyus, King of Kaliṅga, and a member of Yudhiṣṭhira's assembly. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4).

KALIṄGA(M) (KĀLIṄGA). An ancient place in the south of Bhārata.

Other details.

(1) Arjuna visited this place while he was on a pilgrimage. (Śloka 9, Chapter 214, Ādi Parva).

(2) Kaliṅga was also included in the countries conquered by Sahadeva while he was on his victory march. (Chapter 31, Sabhā Parva).

(3) People from Kaliṅga presented Yudhiṣṭhira with gifts for the Rājasūya. (Śloka 18, Chapter 52. Sabhā Parva).

(4) Yudhiṣṭhira visited Kaliṅga while he was on a pilgrimage. (Śloka 4, Chapter 114, Vana Parva).

(5) Karṇa conquered Kaliṅga while he was on a victory march. (Śloka 8, Chapter 254, Vana Parva).

(6) Sahadeva defeated the King of Kaliṅga. (Śloka 24, Chapter 23, Udyoga Parva).

(7) Śrī Kṛṣṇa slaughtered the people of Kaliṅga. (Śloka 76, Chapter 48, Udyoga Parva).

(8) The people of Kaliṅga took part in the war between the Pāṇḍavas and Kauravas. (Śloka 6, Chapter 20, Droṇa Parva).

(9) Paraśurāma conquered this place. (Śloka 12, Chapter 70, Droṇa Parva).

KALIṄGADATTA. See under Dharmadatta.

KALIṄGASENA. See under Madanamañjukā.

KALIPRIYĀ. A prostitute. She attained svarga by observing the Kārttikavrata. (Chapter 21, Brahmakhaṇḍa, Padma Purāṇa).

KĀLIYA.

1) Birth. Kaśyapa, grandson of Brahmā and son of Marīci begot of his wife Kadrū powerful nāgas like Śeṣa, Airāvata, Takṣaka, Kārkoṭaka, Kāliya, Maṇināga, Purāṇanāga etc. and from them were born all kinds of nāgas on earth. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 35). Kāliya possessed one thousand heads. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

2) Kāliya taok his abode in Kālindī. Vinatā and Kadrū were wives of Kaśyapa. The former was the mother of Garuḍa and the latter of the nāgas. In a wager Vinatā was defeated and had to become the slave of Kadrū. Garuḍa brought Amṛta from Devaloka and redeemed his mother from slavery. Yet Garuḍa and the nāgas continued to be enemies, Garuḍa killing and eating nāgas whenever he got a chance for it. At last the nāgas entered into an understanding with Garuḍa agreeing to give him the havis (offering) which they got on certain days, and thus Garuḍa stopped eating the nāgas. But Kāliya did not subscribe to the above agreement ; he treated Garuḍa with contempt. But, in an encounter with Garuḍa Kāliya was put to so much of hardships that he, along with his family, shifted his residence to a particular sector in Kālindī.

3) Admission denied to Garuḍa. Owing to the curse of a sage called Saubhari, who was performing penance on the banks of Kālindī, that Garuḍa would die broken-headed if he entered Kālindī, it was a prohibited area to Garuḍa.

4) Suppression of Kāliya. Owing to the virulent poison of Kāliya the waters of Kālindī became poisonous and the trees on its banks dried up. Once, while Kṛṣṇa and his companions, the Gopālas came to the banks of the river grazing their cows. The Gopālas drank water from the river and fell down dead. Then Kṛṣṇa jumped into the river from the top of a tree on its bank and danced upon the hoods of Kāliya who had rushed to attack him. Kāliya vomited blood and saluted Kṛṣṇa. His wives and children also saluted the Lord. Kṛṣṇa sent all of them away to Ramaṇaka island assuring Kāliya that Garuḍa would not attack him on seeing the marks of his (Kṛṣṇa's) feet on Kāliya. Thus did Kāliya and his family shift their residence to Ramaṇaka island. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

KALIYUGA. See under Manvantara.

KALKI. The tenth avatāra (incarnation) of Mahāviṣṇu. The ten avatāras are called Daśāvatāras. Kalki is the last of them. Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 16 says as follows about the incarnation of Kalki :—

Towards the end of Kaliyuga, all people will lose their faith in God and become irreligious. They will accept presents from the wicked. At that time, there will be intermixture of castes. People will become thieves and evil doers. Fifteen divisions of the Veda Vājasaneya alone will become the authoritative document. People, wearing the garb of righteousness, will indulge in unrighteousness. Mlecchas (lowest class of people) assuming the form of Kings will begin feeding upon human beings. At that time Lord Viṣṇu will incarnate as Kalki, the son of Viṣṇuyaśas and the priest of Yājñavalkya and exterminate all mlecchas. He will restore people to cāturvarṇya and the four āśramas and maintain proper standards of conduct. Afterwards the Lord will renounce the form of Kalki and ascend Heaven. Then Kṛtayuga will begin again.

Chapter 190 of Bhāṣā Bhārata supports almost all the above statements. In the light of them, we can gather certain features of Kalki's incarnation when Kaliyuga reaches its zenith. Mahāviṣṇu will be born as a Brāhmaṇa with the name Viṣṇuyaśas, in the village called Śāmbhala. Viṣṇuyaśaṣ will become famous under the name Kalki. He will be the priest of Yājñavalkya. He will create arms and soldiers by his will itself and destroy the wicked. With that Kṛtayuga will commence.

There is difference of opinion as to whether Kalki's incarnation has passed or is yet to come. But in the light of the statements in the Purāṇas, Kalki has not yet come. Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, says that Kaliyuga extends over a period of 4, 32, 000 years. It is now only a little over 5,000 years since it began. Still, more than 4, 26, 900 years have to pass before the end of Kaliyuga. Therefore lakhs of years have still to pass before the incarnation of Kalki.

KALMĀṢĀṄGHRI. See under the word KALMĀṢAPĀDA.

KALMĀṢAPĀDA. (KALMĀṢĀṄGHRI, MITRASAHA, SAUDĀSA). A famous king of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. He wandered about in the forest as a Rākṣasa for twelve years.

1) Genealogy. From Viṣṇu were descended in the following order —Brahmā—Marīci—Kaśyapa—Vivasvān—Vaivasvata Manu—Ikṣvāku—Vikukṣi—Śaśāda —Purañjaya—Kakutstha—Anenas—Pṛthulāśva—Prasenajit—Yuvanāśva—Māndhātā—Purukutsa—Trasadasyu—Anaraṇya—Aryaśva—Vasumanas— Sutanvā — Trayyāruṇa—Satyavrata—(Triśaṅku)—Hariścandra— Rohitāśva— Harita—Cuñcu—Śudeva—Bharuka—Bāhuka—Sagara—Asamañjasa—Aṁśumān—Bhagīratha—Śrutanābha—Sindhudvīpa—Ayutāyus—Ṛtuparṇa—Sarvakāma Sudāsa (Sudhāśana)—Mitrasaha (Kalmāṣapāda).

2) Name. His actual name was Mitrasaha. Since he was the son of Sudāsa, he was called Saudāsa also.

(M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 78). Kalmāṣāṅghri and Kalmāṣapāda were names which he got as a result of Vasiṣṭha's curse.

3) Mitrasaha became a Rākṣasa. Mitrasaha was a reputed and glorious king belonging to the solar dynasty of kings who ruled over Ayodhyā. He had a queen named Madayantī. While they were leading a happy and enviable married life, Mitrasaha was forced to lead the life of a Rākṣasa in the forest for a period of 12 years, as the result of a curse. The story of this curse is given in different Purāṇas in different versions and they are given below;—

4) Śakti Cursed Mitrasaha. One day Mitrasaha went to the forest for hunting. Viśvāmitra wished to get this mighty King as his disciple. While the King was passing through the forest, he saw Śakti, Vasiṣṭha's son, coming towards him. The King was a Kṣatriya and Śakti was a Brāhmaṇa. They were faced with the problem of whether the Kṣatriya should make way for the Brāhmaṇa or vice versa. Neither of them made way for the other. At last, Mitrasaha struck Sakti with his whip. In his anger Śakti cursed Mitrasaha that he should become a Rākṣasa and roam about in the forest for 16 years. Viśvāmitra who was standing nearby at the time introduced a devil into the body of the King and from that day Mitrasaha wandered about in the forest in the form of a Rākṣasa. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 176).

5) Vasiṣṭh cursed Mitrasaha. Mitrasaha once went to hunt in the forest. While hunting he came across two tiger cubs. Actually, they were two Rākṣasas in disguise. The King who was unaware of it, killed one of them with an arrow. The other cub suddenly assumed his own form as a Rākṣasa and after giving Mitrasaha a warning that he would take revenge on him at the proper time, vanished.

After the hunt the King returned to his palace. He informed Vasiṣṭha that he wished to perform Aśvamedhayāga like his ancestors. The sage offered to assist him in it. Shortly after, one day, the old Rākṣasa-tiger, disguising himself as the sage Vasiṣṭha, came to Mitrasaha and said;— "Oh King! I will tell you a secret. Don't tell anyone else. I have a great desire to eat meat food. Please send some cooked meat to my Āśrama without anyone knowing about it." After saying this, the disguised Rākṣasa-sage left the place.

The King told this secret to his wife Madayantī. They prepared the meat-food secretly and took it to Vasiṣṭha's Āśrama. When Vasiṣṭha saw the meat food, he took it as a personal insult and transformed the King into a Rākṣasa. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

6) Another story of Vasiṣṭha's curse on Mitrasah. Once while Mitrasaha was hunting in the forest, he happened to kill a Rākṣasa by accident. The dead Rākṣasa's younger brother swore to avenge his death. He went to the King in the disguise of a young Brāhmaṇa cook. Mitrasaha appointed him as a cook in the royal kitchen.

At about that time, one day, Vasiṣṭha came to Ayodhyā, on the invitation of Mitrasaha for a Śrāddha. Mitrasaha, accompanied by his queen, greeted the sage with honour. He ordered the cook to prepare food for the guest at once. The Rākṣasa disguised as cook, decided to make the best of this opportunity. In a short time he cooked some human flesh and offered it as food for Vasiṣṭha. The enraged sage cursed the King to become a man-eating Rākṣasa who would roam about for twelve years in the woods. Thus Mitrasaha became a Rākṣasa. (Śiva Purāṇa, Śivarātri Māhātmya).

7) How Mitrasaha got the name "Kalmāṣapāda." Mitrasaha became very angry whan he was cursed by Vasiṣṭha. He decided to pay back in the same coin by cursing Vasiṣṭha also. He took water in his hand and was about to throw it down with the words of curse. But his queen Madayantī stopped him. She reminded him that it was not right to curse a Brāhmaṇa and requested him to sprinkle that water on his own feet. The King's anger cooled down and he sprinkled the water on his own feet. Since his feet were polluted by the water of sin Mitrasaha came to be called "Kalmāṣapāda", and Kalmāṣāṅghri" from that day. (Śiva Purāṇa, Śivarātri Māhātmya).

8) Kalmāṣapāda's life as Rākṣasa. The curse-ridden Kanmāṣapāda began to look upon Vasiṣṭha and his sons with inveterate hatred. He roamed the countrysides and forests in the form of a Rākṣasa. He started man-eating by feeding upon Śakti, the eldest son of Vasiṣṭha. After that he ate all the remaining 99 sons of Vasiṣṭha. Distreseed at the loss of his children, Vasiṣṭha left his Āśrama, bent on committing suicide. He tied his own hands and feet securely with a rope and jumped into the river to drown himself. This attempt, like several other attempts to commit suicide, failed and he did not die. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 177). In the Mahābhārata there is a story which says that once Uttaṅka, a disciple of the sage Gautama went to beg the Kuṇḍalas (ear ornaments) worn by Kanmāṣapāda's (Saudāsa's) queen, for the sake of Gautama's wife. (For details, see under the word "Uttaṅka").

9) Brāhmaṇī's curse on Kalmāṣapāda. In the course of his wanderings through the forest as a Rākṣasa, Kalmāṣapāda happened to come across a Brāhmaṇa youth engaged in amorous pleasures with his wife Āṅgirasī. The King caught hold of the youth and killed him. His wife, the Brāhmaṇī wept loudly and after cremating her husband's body in a funeral pyre, jumped into it and burnt herself to death. Just before her death she pronounced a curse on Kalmāṣapāda that if he touched any woman in future he would die immediately.

After the death of the Brāhmaṇa couple, the sin of Brahmahatyā (killing of Brāhmaṇa) continued to pursue Kalmāṣapāda in the form of a terrible monster. He fled for life from it and at last reached the presence of King Janaka. There, he happened to see the sage Gautama who taught Kalmāṣapāda Divyajñana (Divine wisdom). As advised by the sage, he went to the temple at Gokarṇa and spent some years in deep meditation. (Śiva Purāṇa, Śivarātri Māhātmya).

10) Śāpamokṣa. (Liberation from Curse). Towards the close of the twelve years which Mitrasha (Kalmāṣapāda) spent as a Rākṣasa, Vasiṣṭha saw him. The sage sprinkled holy water on Mitrasha and at once the Rākṣasa (the spirit of the Rākṣasa) left his body and he resumed his original figure of the King. He accepted Vasiṣṭha as his preceptor. They went back together to Ayodhyā.

Although Madayantī, queen of Mitrasaha was there, the King was not able to touch her owing to the Brāhmaṇī's curse. So he requested Vasiṣṭha to beget children by her. Accordingly Madayantī became pregnant by Vasiṣṭha. But she did not deliver the child even after twelve years. At last she hit the embryo in her womb with a stone and the child was born. Since he was born with the help of a stone (Aśman), the child was named "Aśmaka". (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 167).

KALMĀṢĪ. A river. It was while travelling by the side of this river, that King Drupada reached a Brāhmaṇa village where he happened to meet Upayāja. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 166). Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 78, Verse 16 says that it was on the bank of this river that the sage Bhṛgu blessed Yudhiṣṭhira. (Modern scholars believe that Kanmāṣī. is the same as the present river Yamunā).

KĀLODAKA. A sacred place. The sin of causing abortion of those who bathe in the tīrtha here will be washed away. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 60 and Śānti Parva, Chapter 152, Verse 12).

KALPA I. A son of Dhruva. See under DHRUVA.

KALPA II. A period of one thousand Yugas or fourteen Manvantaras. See under MANVANTARA.

KALPA III. The customary proceedings of Yāgas. These proceedings are made in the form of Sūtras. The Sūtras describe how the Brāhmaṇas and mantras are to be used. For each Saṁhitā there are separate Śrauta Sūtras. The Śrauta Sūtras for Ṛgveda Saṁhitā are Āśvalāyana, Śāṁkhāyana and Śaunaka. Those for Sāmaveda are Maśaka, Lāṭyāyana and Drāhyāyaṇa. Those for Kṛṣṇa Yajurveda are Āpastamba Bauddhāyana, Satyāṣāḍha, Hiraṇyakeśī, Mānava, Bhāradvāja, Vādhūla, Vaikhānasa, Laugākṣi, Maitra, Kaṭha and Vārāha. For Śuklayajurveda it is Kātyāyana Srauta Sūtra. For Atharvaveda it is Kauśika Śrauta Sūtra. All these Sūtras contain only brief symbolic words and are difficult to understand without explanation.

KALPAKA. Śiva's garden. It is situated in Kailāsa. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Kathāpīṭhakalambaka, Part I).

KALPAVṚKṢA. A tree in Devaloka. It has the power of giving any object that one wishes to get. There are five Kalpavṛkṣas in Devaloka. Their names are : Mandāra, Pārijāta, Santāna, Kalpavṛkṣa and Haricandana.

Agni Purāṇa, third Chapter mentions that among the wonderful things obtained by the churning of the ocean of milk, there was Kalpavṛkṣa also. So Kalpavṛkṣa was born from the ocean of milk.

KĀLYĀ (KĀLĪ). Mother of Vyāsa. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

KALYĀṆA. A sage. Once certain Aṅgirases including this sage observed sattra (sacrifice) for the attainment of Heaven. But nobody was sure about the Devayāna path which leads to Heaven. So they selected Kalyāṇa to find out the path. He went in search of the Devayāna path and on the way he met Ūrṇāyu, a Gandharva who was in the company of some apsarā women. The gandharva disclosed the Sāma which would enable Kalyāṇa to find out the Devayāna path. On his return, Kalyāṇa told the other Ṛṣis that he had received the Sāma, but he refused to disclose from whom he obtained it. With the help of that Sāma known as Aurṇāyuva, the Aṅgirases attained Heaven, but because of his failure to disclose the whole truth, Kalyāṇa was denied access to Heaven. Besides that, he became a victim to the disease of leprosy. (Pañcaviṁśa Brāhmaṇam).

KALYĀṆĪ. A female follower of Skandadeva. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 6).

KĀMA I. God of beauty in Indian mythology.

1) General. A Prajāpati named Dharma was born from the right breast of Brahmā. Dharma was very handsome. Three sons, Śama, Kāma and Harṣa who were exceedingly handsome, were born to him. Of them, Kāma became the god of beauty. His wife was Rati. Śama became the husband of Prāpti. Harṣa had Nandā for his wife. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Verses 31-33).

In Kālikā Purāṇa we see another story about Kāma's birth. Brahmā created ten Prajāpatis. After that, the woman Sandhyā was created. At the very moment of her birth, Brahmā and the Prajāpatis were irresistibly fascinated by her charm and they sprang up from their seats. All their thoughts converged on the same object. At this time a handsome youth emerged from Brahmā's mind with a floral bow in his hands. Immediately after his birth, he asked Brahmā "Kaṁ darpayāmi" (Whom should I make proud ?) Brahmā replied—Let the minds of living beings be the aim of your arrows". He suggested Rati the daughter of Dakṣa, to be Kāma's wife. Since he stirred the mind of Brahmā, he got the name "MANMATHA", and since he was extremely attractive in appearance he came to be called "KĀMA". (For further details, see under "RATI."

2) How Kāmadeva got the name "KANDARPA". As soon as Kāma was born, he went to Brahmā and asked him "Kaṁ darpayāmi ?" (Whom should I make proud ?). Therefore he got the name "KANDARPA". (Kathāsaritsāgara).

3) Brahmā cursed Kāma. Once Brahmā was meditating upon Para Brahman for the purpose of creation. He felt carnal thoughts rising in his mind. At once a girl was born from his mind. She appeared before him and did obeisance to him. This girl was Sarasvatī. Brahmā fell in love with her. He declared that she should stay in the tongues of all living beings, and particularly at the tip of the tongues of all scholars. After that he made Sarasvatī his wife. Soon he felt repentant for his weakness of mind. His anger blazed at Kāma who was the cause of all this. He cursed that Kāma would be burnt to ashes in the fire from Śiva's third eye. After that Brahmā gave his carnal desire to the great sage Atri who transferred it to his wife Anasūyā. It hardened itself within her and took the form of Candra, who was thus born to her. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 43).

4) Kāma was burnt up in fire. Long ago an Asura named Tāraka, who was proud of his invincible might, was causing much havoc and terror in the whole world. Even the gods were afraid of him because he had received a boon that Śiva's son alone was capable of killing him. It was the time when Pārvatī, the daughter of Himavān, was performing a penance praying that Parameśvara should become her husband. Taking advantage of this opportunity, Indra sent Kāma to rouse the passion of love in Śiva's mind. Kāma reached Śiva's seat and tried to stir up his passions. Śiva who was enraged at this, opened his third eye blazing with fire. Kāma was burnt to ashes in that fire. The place where Kāma's body (Aṅga) fell, came to be called "Aṅgarājya". Since he lost his body, Kāmadeva got another name "Anaṅga". (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa. Bāla Kāṇḍa, Chapter 23).

5) Kāma's Next Birth. When Śiva burnt up Kāma, the latter's wife Rati prayed to Śiva to restore her husband to life. Śiva was pleased and said that Rati would be born in the world and Kāma would take birth as her son." (Kathāsaritsāgara).

According to Śiva's blessing Rati was born in the world under the name of Māyāvatī. She became the kitchen-maid of an Asura named Śambara. At that time Śrī Kṛṣṇa approached Śiva with a request that he should be blessed with a son. Śiva blessed him saying that Kāma who was burnt up in the fire of his eye would be born as the son of Rukmiṇī, Śrī Kṛṣṇa's wife. Accordingly, Rukmiṇī, conceived and a handsome child was born to her.

Śambara, who employed Māyāvatī as his kitchen-maid had received a boon from Śiva. A condition laid down in it was that Śambara would die not long after Kāmadeva's birth in the world. So Śambara was making careful enquiries to ascertain whether Kāma was born anywhere in the world. It was during this period that Śambara received the news that Kāma had been reborn as Śrī Kṛṣṇa's son. At once he went secretly to Rukmiṇī's house and stole the little baby and threw it into the sea. A sea-fish swallowed the child and a fisherman who caught it presented it to Śambara. When Śambara cut it open, he saw a lovely baby inside the fish. He entrusted the child to Māyāvatī to be brought up.

At this stage, the sage Nārada happened to come there and he explained to Māyāvatī in secret, that the baby was Kāmadeva and she was Rati. From that time, she brought up the child with great affection and tenderness. As years passed and Kāma grew up into a youth, Māyāvatī began to make amorous advances towards him. Looking upon her with regard due to a mother, Kāma was displeased with these advances. Then she told him what Nārada had disclosed to her about their relations in the past life. She advised him to kill Śambara and to leave the place for Dvārakā as soon as possible.

As advised by her, Kāma killed Śambara and both he and Māyāvatī went to Dvārakā in a Vimāna and paid their respects to their parents there. In the presence of a large number of sages, Kāma was christened "Pradyumna". Aniruddha, the husband of Uṣā, was the son of Pradyumna. Besides Aniruddha, Pradyumna had a daughter Tṛṣā.[1]

6) Other names of Kāma. The following names have been used for Kāma in the Purāṇas:—Madana, Manmatha, Māra, Pradyumna, Mīnaketana, Kandarpa, Darpaka, Anaṅga, Kāma, Pañcaśara, Śambarāri, Manasija, Kusumeṣu, Ananyaja, Puṣpadhanvā, Ratipati, Makaradhvaja, Ātmabhū, Irāja, Iṣma, Kiṅkira, Abhirūpa, Gṛdhukalākeli, Kañjana, Ramaṇa, Dīpaka, Madhudīpa, Śamāntaka, Muhira, Rūpāstra, Vāma, Puṣpaketana. Makaraketu, Ratināyaka, Rāgavṛnta, Saṁsāraguru, Gadayitnu, Māpatya, Māyī.

7) Kāma's weapons. Kāma has a bow made of sugar-cane, its string is made up of beetles, and the tips of his arrows are flowers. His vehicle is the parrot and the sign on his banner is fish. The five flowers of his arrows are:—Aravinda, Aśoka, Cūta, Navamālikā, Nīlotpala. Besides these, he has five more arrows which are—Unmādana, Tāpana, Śoṣaṇa, Stambhana and Sammohana. (Amara Kośa).

KĀMA II. An Agni who was the son of Svāhādevī. Mahābhārata, Vana Parva. Chapter 219, Verse 23 says that this agni was of inimitable beauty.

KĀMA III. Another name for Parameśvara. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 42).

KĀMA IV. Another name for Mahāviṣṇu. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 149, Verse 45).

KĀMA V. A great sage. There is a reference to this sage in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 150, Verse 41.

KĀMĀ. Daughter of Pṛthuśravas. She was the wife of Ayutanāyi, a king of the Pūru dynasty and mother of Akrodhana. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 177).

KĀMAṬHA (KĀMAṬHAKA). A serpent born in Dhṛtarāṣṭra's family. This serpent was burnt up in Janamejaya's sarpasattra. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 16).

KĀMACARĪ. A woman follower of Skandadeva. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 23).

KĀMADĀ. Another woman follower of Skandadeva. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 27).

KĀMADEVA. See under Kāma.

KĀMADHENU. (SURABHI—NANDINĪ).

1) General. She is the first mother of cattle. She is a goddess with marvellous powers and attainments who gives milk whenever needed by gods and sages. The Purāṇas declare that all the cattle in the world today are descended from Kāmadhenu.

2) Three different names. This sacred cow is sometimes called "Kāmadhenu", at other times, "Surabhi" and also "Nandinī". They are not three different cows, as some people suppose. See Bhāṣā Bhārata, Araṇya Parva Chapter 9, Verses 7 and 17. There Surabhi and Kāmadhenu are names used for referring to the same cow. Again, in the Bhāṣā Bhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 99, Verse 14, we find the name Nandinī applied to Kāmadhenu. Thus we may conclude that Kāmadhenu had two other names, viz. Surabhi and Nandinī. But since the term "Surabhirgavi" occurs in Amarakośa, it follows that even ordinary cows may be called "Surabhi".

3) Birth and Family. In the Purāṇas Surabhi is described variously as Dakṣa's daughter, Kaśyapa's wife, Kaśyapa's daughter, etc. Although at first sight there may appear some discrepancy in these statements, in the light of them we may clearly arrive at the ancestry and birth of Surabhi. Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇya Kāṇḍa, 14th Sarga says that Kaśyapa, the son of Marīci and the grandson of Brahmā married Dakṣa Prajāpati's daughters—Aditi, Diti, Danu, Kālikā, Tāmrā, Krodhavaśā, Manu and Analā. From verses 20 and 21 in the same Sarga we understand that Surabhi was the daughter of Krodhavaśā, Dakṣa's daughter, by Kaśyapa. In the same Sarga we find that two daughters, Rohiṇī and Gandharvī were born to this Surabhi and from Rohiṇī were born all the cows in the world that we see today and from Gandharvī were born all the horses. It was by her own father Kaśyapa himself that Surabhi's offsprings were born. Therefore, the reference to Surabhi as the wife of Kaśyapa may also be justified.[2] Since Krodhavaśā, the daughter of Dakṣa was the mother of Surabhi, actually Surabhi was the grand-daughter of Dakṣa, But in a broad sense, a grand-daughter may be considered as a daughter. So the reference to Surabhi in Bhāṣā Bhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 28 as Dakṣa's daughter is correct in that sense.

1. From Kathāsaritsāgara we find that Udayana and Vāsavadattā were the rebirths of Kāma and Rati.

4) How Kāmadhenu Received Divine Powers. Long ago Aditi, wife of Kaśyapa, conceived Mahāviṣṇu in her womb and began an austere penance standing on one leg. At that time Surabhi went to Kailāsa and offered worship to Brahmā for ten thousand years. The gods who were pleased, came to Surabhi taking Brahmā with them. Brahmā said to her:—'Surabhi I have made you a goddess. You are now above the three worlds—Heaven Earth and Hell. Your world, "Goloka" will become famous. All people will worship you and the cows who are your off spring."

From that day on which Brahmā blessed her, Surabhi became a goddess with marvellous spiritual powers. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 83).

5) More than one Kāmadhenu? There are references to several Kāmadhenus in the Purāṇas. There is one Kāmadhenu in Vāsiṣṭha's Āśrama. At Varuṇa's yāga we see another Kāmadhenu. There is no ground for believing that there is only one Kāmadhenu and that it was borrowed by each Deva in turn for some particular occasion. It is possible that there were many Kāmadhenus in the family of Kāmadhenu and they were owned by different Devas. Moreover it is stated that several Kāmadhenus take their origin from sources other than the family of Kaśyapa. One of them is from the ocean of milk. In Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 18, we find that when the Devas and Asuras churned the ocean of milk, along with many other precious things, Kāmadhenu also came up to the surface.

There is a reference to another Kāmadhenu in Bhāṣā Bhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 102, There, it is said, Brahmā who got Amṛta swallowed it beyond limit in his avidity and when he vomited, a Kāmadhenu came out from his mouth. That Kāmadhenu is said to be living in the world known as Rasātala. The abovementioned passage also says that there are four other Kāmadhenus living on the four sides of the Kāmadhenu which lives in Rasātala. They are Saurabhī in the east Haṁsikā in the south, Subhadrā in the west and Dhenu in the north.

The next Kāmadhenu is the one which was born from the side of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Once Śrī Kṛṣṇa and his consort Rādhā were amusing themselves by amorous pleasures in a remote and secluded place. When they were tired they wished to drink some milk. At that time, Śrī Kṛṣṇa created by his will power, the cow Surabhi and the calf Manoratha, from the left side of his body. Śrīdāman milked that cow into a new earthen pot and when Śrī Kṛṣna was drinking it, the pot fell down and the milk was spilt all over the floor. The milk which spread over an area of 100 yojanas, became a lake called "Kṣīrasāgara" for Rādhā and her maids to bathe and enjoy water-sports. Numerous cows were born from the pores of Surabhi and they were presented to the Gopas by Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (Devī Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha). Like this, several Kāmadhenus are seen in the Purāṇas. Therefore there is no discrepancy or contradiction in statements declaring that there were many Kāmadhenus in different Āśramas. But since Kāmadhenu had achieved divine powers by Brahmā's grace, it is but reasonable to believe that the different Kāmadhenus are really the different forms of the original Kāmadhenu, the daughter of Kaśyapa.

6) Theft of Kāmadhenu by Satyavrata (Triśaṅku). Satyavrata (Triśaṅku) was the son of Aruṇa, a King of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. He was a vicious and immoral fellow. Once he abducted a Brāhmaṇa girl just at the time of her marriage in her bridal dress. Enraged at this his father drove him away from his palace. Satyavrata wandered about aimlessly in the country and in the forests.

Soon after this there was a famine in the land. Human beings and animals began to die of starvation. At that time Viśvāmitra was performing penance in the forest after leaving behind his wife and children in the country. When he saw that the whole family was in danger of death by starvation, he decided to make some money by selling one of the sons, in order to save the lives of the rest of the family. Satyavrata who came to know of this, met Viśvāmitra and dissuaded him from selling his son. He promised to supply some flesh every day to the family by hunting animals in the forest and keeping the flesh suspended from the branch of a near-by tree. Accordingly, he began leaving the flesh regularly hanging from the branch of the tree. One day he could not get any flesh by hunting. That night he went to Vasiṣṭha's āśrama and stole Kāmadhenu. He killed the cow and ate some of its flesh. The rest he gave to Viśvāmitra's family.

The next morning when Vasiṣṭha woke up, he did not see his cow. But he came to know of the whole affair by his intuition. In his fury he cursed Satyavrata and said that the world would brand him with the name "Triśaṅku" because he had committed three heinous sins viz. killing of cows, abducting another man's wife and incurring his father's displeasure. After that Vasiṣṭha restored Kāmadhenu to life. (Devī Bhāgavata, 7th Skandha).

7) Viśvāmitra attacked Kāmadhenu. Once while Viśvāmitra was a ruling King, he went into a forest to hunt. In the course of his rambles through the forest, he happened to arrive at Vasiṣṭha's Āśrama with his retinue. Vasiṣṭha called Kāmadhenu and ordered her to provide food for Viśvāmitra and his party. Kāmadhenu, by her divine powers, prepared food within a short time and gave them a sumptuous meal; Viśvāmitra was greatly pleased with this amazing feat of Kāmadhenu and he asked Vasiṣṭha to give her to him. He even offered to give crores of cows in return for her. But Vasiṣṭha refused to comply with his request. Then Viśvāmitra tried to seize and take her away by force.

At once Kāmadhenu assumed the form of a terrible monster of destruction. From the different parts of her body emerged fierce warriors who clashed with Viśvāmitra's followers. All the arrows shot by Viśvāmitra were caught by Vasiṣṭha with his hand. In the end Viśvāmitra admitted that the might of a Brāhmaṇa is superior to the might of a Kṣatriya. (Vasiṣṭha was a Brāhmaṇa and Viśvāmitra a Kṣatriya). Viśvāmitra, soon gave up his kingly duties and began penance, thus turning himself into a "Rājarṣi" (Royal saint). (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kāṇḍa, 52nd Sarga ; M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 40 ; M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 175).

2. In Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part I, Chapter 15, Surabhi is described as Kaśyapa's wife.

8) Kāmadhenu was attacked by the Aṣṭa Vasus. (See under the word "Aṣṭavasus", Para 2).

9) Kāmadhenu cried. (See under the word "Indra", Para 16).

10) Kāmadhenu revived King Baka. (See under the word "Gautama").

11) Other details.

(i) Kāmadhenu gave birth to Ajasa, Ekapāt, Ahirbudhnya, Tvaṣṭā and Rudra. Viśvarūpa was the son of Tvaṣṭā. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 18).

(ii) Kāmadhenu said that she had no part in the theft of Agastya's lotus. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 94).

(iii) Śrī Kṛṣṇa turned Govardhana mountain into an umbrella and defeated Indra when Kāmadhenu came to Gokula and bathed Śrī Kṛṣṇa with her milk according to Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha.

(iv) Once the sage Jamadagni went to Goloka and propitiated Kāmadhenu by his tapas. Kāmadhenu gave her sister Suśīlā to Jamadagni. The sage presented that cow to his wife Reṇukā. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 61).

KAMALĀ I. Mother of Prahlāda. (Padma Purāṇa).

KAMALĀ II. A follower of Skandadeva. (Śloka 9, Chapter 46, Śalya Parva, M.B.).

KAMALĀKṢA I. A great warrior who fought on the side of the Kauravas. Duryodhana sent this warrior along with Śakuni to attack Arjuna. (Chapter 156, Droṇa Parva. M.B.).

KAMALĀKṢA II. A son of Tārakāsura. He was one of the famous trio of demons. For details see under 'Tripura'.

KAMALĀKṢĪ. A follower of Skandadeva. (Chapter 46, Śalya Parva).

KAMALĀVRATA. See under "Jayaśarman".

KĀMANDAKA. A great sage of ancient times. (Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 123) states that this sage once taught Rājadharma (kingly duties) to King Aṅgirasa.

KĀMAPĀLA. A Yādava dependant of Śri Kṛṣṇa. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

KĀMAṬHA I. A King of a country called Kāmboja. This King was a prominent member of the court of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Śloka 22, Chapter 4, Sabhā Parva).

KĀMAṬHA II. A great sage. He became a realised soul by his penance. (Chapter 296, Śānti Parva, M.B.).

KĀMATĪRTHA. A sacred place. Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Verse 105 says that a man who takes his bath in this holy tīrtha will have all his wishes fulfilled.

KAMBALA. A prominent serpent of the family of Kaśyapa. (Chapter 35, Ādi Parva, M.B.). The Prayāga tīrtha was the abode of this serpent.

KAMBALA. A part of Kuśadvīpa. (Island of Kuśa). (Chapter 12, Bhīṣma Parva, M.B.)

KAMBAR. A celebrated Tamil poet. He was born in a poor family. At the orders of the King many poets wrote the story of Rāmāyaṇa in Tamil. But Kambar's work was accepted as the best. This is the renowned Kamba Rāmāyaṇa. Kambar has written many other poems of which the important ones are Sarasvatī Antādi and Kāñcī Purāṇa. It is said that unintelligent children of Tamil nādu are even now given sand from the burial ground of Kambar to induce intelligence into them. The (—r) suffix in Kambar is plural denoting respect. (See under 'Bhadrakālī').

KĀMBOJA I. Sudakṣiṇa, the King of the country, Kāmboja. He was present at Draupadī's svayaṁvara. In Mahābhārata, Karṇa Parva, Chapter 156 we read that his younger brother was killed by Arjuna. The Kings of Kāmboja were all known as Kāmbojas. Long ago, this country was ruled by a King named Kāmboja. In Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 166, Verse 77, we see that this Kāmboja was given a sword by the King Dhundhumāra. Perhaps it was from this King Kāmboja that the country came to be called 'Kāmboja'.

KĀMBOJA II. This kingdom was situated in the north western part of India. It is the modern Kabul. We get the following information from Mahābhārata.

(1) From Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 27, Verse 23, we see that Arjuna had subdued this Kingdom.

(2) The horses which were tied to Yudhiṣṭhira's chariot were brought from Kāmboja. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 52, Verse 5).

(3) The Mlecchas (a tribe of low-class people) of Kāmboja will become Kings in Kaliyuga. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 188, Verse 36).

(4) There were Kāmbojas in Duryodhana's army. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 160, Verse 130).

(5) At the time of Mahābhārata the King of Kāmboja was the brave and heroic Sudakṣiṇa. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 166, Verses 1-3).

(6) In the battle between Kauravas and Pāṇḍavas, the Kāmbojas took their position in some places in the "Garuḍa Vyūha", a phalanx in the shape of an eagle made by Bhīṣma. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 7).

(7) The horses of Kāmboja were beautiful in appearance and of the colour of parrots. The horses which were tied to Nakula's chariot, were of this kind. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 23, Verse 7).

(8) When the horses of Kāmboja ran, their tails and ears remained motionless. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 36, Verse 36).

KAMBUGRĪVA. Son of Sudhanvā, King of the country of Madra. Candrasena, King of Siṁhala, tried to get his daughter Mandodarī married to this King. But Mandodarī did not consent to it. (5th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata.)

KĀMODĀ. A goddess who came out of the churning of the ocean of milk. (For further details see under 'Vihuṇḍa').

KAMPA. A prince of Vṛṣṇivaṁśa. He became a Viśvadeva after his death. (Chapter 5, Svargārohaṇa Parva M.B.).

KAMPANA I. A mighty King. He was a prominent member of the court of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Chapter 4, Sabhā Parva, M.B.).

KAMPANA II. A demon. (See under Nahuṣa).

KAMPANĀ. A river. If one bathes in this river one will get the benefit of doing a Puṇḍarīka yajña. (Chapter 84, Vana Parva, M.B.).

KĀMPILYA. An ancient town in South Pāñcāla. It was the capital city of King Drupada. Śikhaṇḍī had come to this city after his marriage. Once the King Daśārṇa came near this place and sent a Brāhmaṇa messenger to Kāmpilya. In olden days, a King named Brahmadatta used to rule over this city. (M.B. Udyoga Parva). See under the word 'Brahmadatta'.

KAṀSA I. Son of Ugrasena, King of Mathurā, and an incarnation of an Asura called Kālanemi.

1) Genealogy. Descending in order from Viṣṇu : Brahmā-Atri - Candra - Budha-Purūravas-Āyus-Nahuṣa-Yayāti-Yadu-Sahasrajit-Śatajit-Hehaya-Dharma-Kunti (Kuni)-Bhadrasena-Dhanaka-Kṛtavīra-Kārtavīryārjuna-Madhu-Vṛṣṇi - Yudhājit - Śini-Satyaka-Sātyaki (Yuyudhāna)-Yaya-Kuni-Anamitra-Pṛśni-Citraratha - Kukura-Vahni-Viloma-Kapotaroman (Kapotaloman)-Tumburu - Dundubhi-Daridra-Vasu-Nāhuka-Āhuka-Ugrasena-Kaṁsa.

2) Kaṁsa, an incarnation of Kālanemi. In the svāyambhuvamanvantara Marīci had a wife named Ūrṇā and they had six mighty and powerful sons. One day they ridiculed Brahmā saying 'A father who has married his own daughter' (Brahmā married Sarasvatī, his own daughter). Brahmā became angry and cursed them to be born as demons on earth. All the six sons were, therefore, born as sons of a demon called Kālanemi on earth. In their next birth they were born as sons of Hiraṇyakaśipu. They led a pious life and pleased at this Brahmā asked them what boon they wanted and they demanded that they should not be killed by anybody. Their father, Hiraṇyakaśipu, did not like his sons getting a boon behind his back and so he cursed his sons "May you all six go to Pātāla (nether-world) and sleep there for a long time under the name of Ṣaḍarbhakas. The sons begged for relief and Hiraṇyakaśipu said that they would after sleeping for a long time be born to Devakī, wife of Vasudeva, as their children and that Kālanemi, their father in their previous birth would then be born as Kaṁsa and kill the children of Devakī by striking their heads on the ground.

Accordingly Kālanemi was born as Kaṁsa and he killed the six children of Devakī by striking them on the ground. (Skandha 4, Devī Bhāgavata).

The 10th Skandha of Bhāgavata states "killing Kālanemi born as Kaṁsa" when it refers to the killing of Kaṁsa.

3) Another story regarding the birth of Kaṁsa. Kaṁsa was not actually the son of Ugrasena. It was Nārada who revealed to Kaṁsa the story of his birth. It is as follows.

Once when the wife of Ugrasena was in her menses she went to the garden with her companions. Then a Gandharva named Dramila disguised as Ugrasena went to her but she knew the trick and cursed him that he would go to hell. But Dramila committed rape on her and then left the place making her pregnant. When the child was born Ugrasena's wife greatly hated the child got of an evil deed and cursed it saying that the child would be killed by a member of the family of Ugrasena. Thus Kaṁsa was the son born to the wife of Ugrasena by the Gandharva, Dramila. It was because Kaṁsa was aware of it that he behaved very badly to Ugrasena and Kṛṣṇa. (10th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

4) How Kaṁsa got Mathurāpurī. In olden times there was a famous place called Madhuvana in the river-base of Kālindī. The place got the name of Madhuvana because the demon Madhu was residing there. Madhu had a son named Lavaṇa. Lavaṇa was a very wicked demon always ill-treating the devas. Śatrughna, son of Daśaratha, killed him and lived there establishing a beautiful kingdom there. He named that place Mathurā. After the death of Śatrughna two of his sons ruled that country. Then when the Sūrya dynasty became extinct the city of Mathurā came into the possession of the Yadu dynasty. It was ruled then by a very brave and valiant ruler named Śūrasena. Vasudeva father of Śrī Kṛṣṇa was the son of Śūrasena. After the death of Śūrasena another King of the Yādava dynasty, Ugrasena, became the ruler of the place, Vasudeva accepting cow-rearing as his profession. Kaṁsa became King keeping Ugrasena as a prisoner. (Skandha 4, Devī Bhāgavata).

5) V sudeva and Devakī are imprisoned. Vasudeva married Devakī daughter of Ugrasena and sister of Kaṁsa. Kaṁsa pleased with his sister presented her with a chariot. Kaṁsa, Vasudeva and Devakī ascended the chariot and Kaṁsa himself drove the chariot. Then from an unknown source above came a voice which said "Oh King, know thou this and from this moment chalk out thy plans for the future. The eighth son of your sister will kill you for certain. You will be no match against him." (Chapter I. Bhāgavata 10th Skandha).

Hearing this voice from heaven Kaṁsa got furious and dragging his sister by the hair raised his sword to kill her. Vasudeva then pleaded weeping not to kill Devakī. Only the eighth child of Devakī was going to kill him. Vasudeva would hand over all the children to him as soon as they were born. Such arguments pacified Kaṁsa and he left off Devakī without hurting her.

Devakī delivered a son. He grew up under the name of Kīrtimān and one day Nārada visited Kaṁsa and told him that he was the incarnation of an Asura named Kālanemi and the son who would be born to Devakī to kill him was Nārāyaṇa. Kaṁsa, blind with fury, killed Kīrtimān by striking him on the earth and imprisoned both Devakī and Vasudeva.

6) Man-hunt of Kaṁsa. Pralamba, Cāṇūra, Tṛṇāvarta, Muṣṭika, Ariṣṭaka, Keśī, Dhenuka, Agha, Vivida and Pūtanā were born in the Asura family as servants of Kaṁsa. He sent them to different sides of the country to torment the Yādavas. Many Yādavas left the place. Even Kaṁsa's father Ugrasena, a great devotee of Viṣṇu was teased.

In the meantime Devakī delivered six sons including Kīrtimān and all of them were killed by Kaṁsa by smashing their heads against the ground below. The seventh foetus of Devakī was aborted. (Instructed by Mahāviṣṇu, Māyādevī invoked the seventh foetus of Devakī and transferred it to the womb of Rohiṇī another wife of Vasudeva. The child thus born to Rohiṇī was Saṅkarṣaṇa or Balabhadrarāmā. Mahāviṣṇu then entered the womb of Devakī instructing Māyādevī to enter that of Yaśodā, wife of Nandagopa of Ambāḍi at the same time. Śrī Kṛṣṇa was then born in the figure of Viṣṇu. The watchmen were sleeping. Following directions from the new-born child Vasudeva took the child to Gokula and leaving the child there brought back the child of Yaśodā and p'aced it near Devakī. When the watchmen awoke and knew about the delivery of Devakī they immediately ran to Kaṁsa to tell him. Boiling with rage Kaṁsa rushed to the side of Devakī and taking the child by the legs raised it for smashing it against the ground. The child to the frightened dis may of Kaṁsa slipped from his hand and rising up in the air said "Hi, ill-mannered wicked Kaṁsa, do not waste your valour on women. Your killer has already been born on earth. Do search for him quickly."

Kaṁsa went pale with fright on hearing this and went away to his palace.

7) Conspiracy of Kaṁsa. The thought that his killer was born somewhere made him restless. He let off Vasudeva and Devakī finding them innocent. Then he sat sadly pondering over the future. The courtiers then advised him to kill all the children who had been born within the past ten days and that would include the killer also. Kaṁsa accordingly sent to different parts of the country his secret agents to kill all children, ten days old.

During this campaign Pūtanā, Śakaṭa, Tṛṇāvarta, Ariṣṭaka and Keśī tried to kill Śrī Kṛṣṇa also but Kṛṣṇa killed them all easily. For details see under each head separately. (10th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

8) Kaṁsa is slain. Ariṣṭaka was one of the prominent Asuras sent to kill Kṛṣṇa. He attacked Kṛṣṇa in the form of an ox. Śrī Kṛṣṇa killed it without any difficulty. Nārada who saw this incident informed Kaṁsa about it adding that Kṛṣṇa and Balarāma were the sons of Vasudeva only and the child who slipped out of his hands was the child of Yasodā. Kaṁsa got furious and he again imprisoned Vasudeva and Devakī and brought to Mathurā Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Balabhadrarāma and started thinking of ways and means to kill them. Kaṁsa arranged to conduct a grand celebration of Āyudhapūjā (worship of the weapons) and invited Kṛṣṇa and Balarāma for the same among many other gopas from Ambāḍi. He sent his chariot with Akrūra to fetch Kṛṣṇa and Balarāma from Ambāḍi. Akrūra privately informed Kṛṣṇa of the bad intentions of Kaṁsa. Nandagopa and many others from Ambāḍi started for Mathurā. When Śrī Kṛṣna and Balabhadrarāma started their journey in the chariot the gopas and gopikās assembled there cried loudly. Some blamed Akrūra.

Kṛṣṇa and Balarāma reached Mathurā. There they slew a huge wild elephant and the five Asuras, Cāṇūra, Muṣṭika, Kūṭa, Śala and Kosala whom Kaṁsa had kept ready to kill Kṛṣṇa and Rāma. Sitting on a platform watching this, Kaṁsa became frightened and restless and roared with rage thus "The sons of Nandagopa should be instantly sent away from this palace. All their wealth and all that of the gopas should be confiscated. Bind with ropes the rogue Nandagopa, and kill the wicked Vasudeva. Throw my father, Ugrasena, into the river Kālindī bound hand and foot. Even a father should be killed if he was a relative of one's enemy."

Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Balarāma boiled with rage when they heard the orders of Kaṁsa and Kṛṣṇa, jumping on to the platform pushed Kaṁsa down and jumping down along with him killed him. (10th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

9) Other details.

(i) Kaṁsa had married the two daughters of Jarāsandha named Asti and Prāpti. (10th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

(ii) Kaṁsa was a fierce bow-man. All the kings hated him. Kaṁsa kept under him a crore of fighting men. He had eight lakhs of charioteers and an equal number of elephants. His army contained thirtytwo lakhs of horses. (Dākṣiṇātyapāṭha; M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 38).

KAṀSA II. Mahābhārata mentions another Kaṁsa who was also killed by Kṛṣṇa. But he was not the son of Ugrasena. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Dākṣiṇātyapāṭha, Page 825).

KĀMYĀ. A celestial woman. In Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, it is said that she took part in the celebrations at the birth of Arjuna.

KĀMYAKAVANA. The Pāṇḍavas lived in this forest for a long time, during their forest life. At that time, several sages were performing penance in Kāmyakavana. Vidura who went out in search of the Pāṇḍavas met them in this forest. After that Sañjaya went to Kāmyakavana and took Vidura with him. It was in this forest that the Pāṇḍavas met sages Mārkaṇḍeya and Nārada. (M.B. Vana Parva).

KAN. Dakṣa. (See under DAKṢA).

KĀṆABHŪTI. A devil. His name in the previous life was "Supratīka". Once he made friends with the devil Sthūlaśiras. Kubera who became angry at this, cursed Supratīka and turned him into a devil. Supratīka settled down in the Vindhya mountain, assuming the new name "Kāṇabhūti". After narrating Bṛhatkathā to Guṇāḍhya, Kāṇabhūti assumed his former form. (For further details, see under the word GUṆĀḌHYA).

KA . ĀDA. A famous sage of ancient India. He was the founder of the Vaiśeṣika system. The word means one who eats Kaṇa (atom). His foes gave him this name to ridicule him. He is also called Kaṇabhakṣaka. Kaṇāda is known as Pippalāda also. (He got that name because he used to eat Pippalī (long pepper) in large quantities). (See under PIPPALĀDA).

KANAKA. A big forest on the southern base of Mahāmeru. Añjanādevī gave birth to Hanūmān in this forest. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

KANAKADHVAJA. (KANAKĀṄGADA). A son of King Dhṛtarāṣṭra. He was slain by Bhīmasena). (Śloka 27, Chapter 96, Bhīṣma Parva).

KANAKĀKṢA. A soldier of Skandadeva. (Śloka 74, Chapter 45, Śalya Parva).

KANAKĀṄGADA. See under KANAKADHVAJA.

KANAKAREKHĀ. Daughter of the King of the island of Kanakapurī. By a curse she was born as the daughter of Paropakārī, King of the city of Vardhamāna. A brahmin named Śaktideva married her. (Caturdārikālambaka, Kathāsaritsāgara, Taraṅga 1).

KANAKAVARṢA. A King who ruled the country of Kanakapurī on the banks of the river Gaṅgā. (Kathāsaritsāgara).

KANAKĀVATĪ. A follower of Skandadeva. (Chapter 618) Śalya Parva).

KANAKĀYUS. A son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. He had another name, Karakāyus. This prince was present at the svayaṁvara of Draupadī. (Śloka 185, Chapter 67, Ādi Parva).

KANAKHALA I. The place where the Dakṣayāga was conducted. (Chapter 4, Vāmana Purāṇa).

KANAKHALA II. A holy place on the shores of the river Gaṅgā. If one bathes in this river one gets the benefit of performing an Aśvamedha sacrifice. (Śloka 30, Chapter 84, Vana Parva). Kālidāsa speaks about this place in his famous work 'Meghadūta'. At the behest of Vasiṣṭha, Takṣaka, son of Lakṣmana, conquered the foresters of Kanakhala and then established a city there called Agatī. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

KĀÑCANA I. One of the two warriors given to Skandadeva by Mahāmeru. The other warrior was named Meghamālī. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 47).

KĀÑCANA II. A King of the Pūru dynasty. See under the word PŪRUVAMŚA.

KĀÑCANĀKṢA. A warrior of Skandadeva. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 57).

KĀÑCANĀKṢĪ. A river which flows through Naimiśāraṇya. This is a part of the river Sarasvatī. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 38, Verse 19).

KĀÑCANAMĀLĀ. A lady attendant of Vāsavadattā, wife of Udayana.

KĀÑCĪ (KĀNCĪPURA). This was the capital city of the Cola Kings. This city was also called "Kāñcīvaram". It is mentioned among the holy cities. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 161, Verse 21).

KANDARĀ. A follower of Skandadeva. (Chapter 46, Śalya Parva).

KANDARPA. Another name for Kāmadeva. Kāmadeva was born of the mind of Brahmā and as soon as he was born he turned to Brahmā and asked "Kaṁ darpayāmi ?" (Whom should I make proud ?) So Brahmā gave him the name Kaṁdarpa alias Kandarpa. (Lāvāṇakalambaka, Kathāsaritsāgara, Taraṅga 6).

KAṆḌU. A great sage of ancient Bhārata. He was the father of Māriṣā (Vārkṣī) wife of the Pracetas.

1) Birth of Māriṣā. Māriṣā, daughter of Kaṇḍu, took her birth from a tree. There is an interesting story about this in Viṣṇu Purāṇa.

Sage Kaṇḍu, chief of the devajñas, was performing penance in a hermitage on the banks of the river Gomatī. Devendra sent Pramlocā, an enchanting nymph, to Kaṇḍu to distract him from his penance. Pramlocā by her sweet words and enticing manners won the heart of the sage and Kaṇḍu accepting her as his wife went to the valley of Mandara and lived there happily for a hundred years.

One day Pramlocā went and bowed before her husband and sought his permission to go back to Devaloka. "Dear, stay here for some time more" replied the sage. Another hundred years went by. Again one day she went and sought permission to go home. Again the sage asked her to stay for a while more. Centuries passed without the sage losing even a little of his amour. On the other hand every day it found different channels of expression. One evening the sage stepped out of his Āśrama and on seeing that Pramlocā enquired where he was going.

Sage : The sun is going to set. I am going to do my sandhyāvandana. I do not want to bring a break in my daily ablutions and duties.

Pramlocā : Oh, Righteous one, did the sun set for you only today ? The Sunset of hundreds of years has gone by without your knowing.

Sage : Dear, you came to this holy river-shore only this morning. It was only this morning that I saw you coming to my Āśrama for the first time. Now the day is over and dusk is coming. Why this ridicule ? Please do tell me the truth.

Pramlocā : That I came to you one fine morning is quite true. But since that several centuries have elapsed.

Sage : How many years have gone by since I started enjoying with you ?

Pramlocā : Nine hundred years, six months and three days have passed since I came to you.

The great sage became very angry and scolded Pramlocā much. That beautiful maiden heard it all standing bathed in perspiration. The sage in rage commanded the trembling nymph to go away from his presence. Pramlocā, thus reprimanded and sent away, rose up in the air and travelled by it. As she flew, the perspiration of her body was absorbed by the tender leaves of trees on the way. She was pregnant at that time and the embryo which went forth along with her perspiration was absorbed in bits by the tender leaves and sprouts. Wind gathered them from the different trees and made everything into one. Moonlight gave it development and gave it the form of a woman. She was named Māriṣā. That was how Māriṣā was born of trees (Chapter 15, Aṁśa 1. Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

2) Curse of Kaṇḍu. Kaṇḍu's dear son aged sixteen died in a forest. Grief-stricken, the sage cursed that forest and made it a desert. There was no water there and all the trees became dried and dead. Hanūmān and party who went in search of Sītā came to this place. (Chapter 48, Kiṣkindhā Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

3) Kaṇḍu in the presence of Śrī Rāma. When Śrī Rāma returned to Ayodhyā after his exile many sages from all the four different parts came to visit him. Those who came from the south were Kaṇḍu, Dattātreya Namuci, Pramuci, Vālmīki, Soma and Agastya. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

KAṆḌŪTI. A follower of Skandadeva. (Śloka 14, Chapter 46, Śalya Parva).

KAṆIKA I.

1) General information. One of the ministers of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. He was a brahmin well-learned in Kūṭanīti (Diplomacy). The bad advice he gave to Dhṛtarāṣṭra became well-known as "Kaṇika's Kūṭanīti".

2) Kaṇika's Kūṭanīti. Once Dhṛtarāṣṭra asked Kaṇika how to conquer one's enemies by using the four methods of Sāma, Dāna, Bheda and Daṇḍa. Kaṇika replied : "Threaten the timid ones. Give respect to the brave and kill them by trickery. Give gifts to the greedy ones. If any one becomes your enemy kill him even if it be your father, preceptor, son, brother or friend. Never speak insulting words about others even when you are extremely angry. Never believe the faithful and unfaithful alike."

3) Kaṇika's story. Kaṇika justified his policy by means of the story of a fox who put into practice the four tricks to gain his end.

Once there was a very selfish fox in a forest. He felt a desire to eat the flesh of a lion. For that end he made friends with a tiger, a rat and a mongoose. The fox advised the rat to gnaw the paws of the lion and make it lame. The tiger should then kill the lion. The lion was killed and the fox suggested that they could have a hearty meal of the lion after a bath. Everybody excepting the fox went for his bath and the fox stood watch over the carcass of the lion. First came the tiger after his bath. The fox looked worried and the tiger asked him the reason why. The fox said "Comrade, the rat says with arrogance that he it was that killed the lion. My pride does not allow me to eat what the rat claims to be his kill." Hearing this the proud tiger left the place saying "Let me see whether I can kill my prey without the help of anybody."

Sometime later the rat came after its bath. The sly fox said "My friend, the mongoose says that the flesh of a lion is poison. It says "Let the rat eat it and die." Hearing this the rat went its way.

Then came the mongoose. The fox threatened it and it went away. The fox then ate the flesh of the lion by himself and was contented.

Kaṇika then said that the Kings should use such tricks against their enemies. (Chapter 139, Ādi Parva).

KAṆIKA II. There is a statement in Mahābhārata about another brahmin of the Bharadvāja family who was also well-versed in Kūṭanīti. He was an adviser to Śatruñjaya, King of Sauvīra. (Chapter 140, Śānti Parva).

KĀNĪNA. A child born to an unmarried woman. Vyāsa, Karṇa, Śibi, Aṣṭaka, Pratardana, and Vasumān were Kānīnas.

KAÑJALA. See under Dharmaśarmā.

KAṄKA I. One of the seven famous archers of the Vṛṣṇi dynasty. The seven are : Kṛtavarmā, Anādhṛṣṭi, Samīka, Samitiñjaya, Kaṅka, Śaṅku and Kunti. (Chapter 14, Sabhā Parva).

KAṄKA II. A King of ancient India. (Śloka 233, Chapter 1, Ādi Parva).

KAṄKA III. A bird, son of Surasā. (Śloka 69, Chapter 66, Ādi Parva).

KAṄKA IV. The name which Dharmaputra bore when he spent his life incognito at the palace of the King of Virāṭa. (See under Dharmaputra).

KAṄKA V. A place of habitation of ancient India. This place was given to Dharmaputra as a gift by the inhabitants of the place. (Chapter 51, Sabhā Parva).

KAṄKAṆA. A follower of Skandadeva. (Śloka 16, Chapter 46, Śalya Parva).

KAṆṬAKINĪ. A follower of Skandadeva. (Śloka 16, Chapter 46, Śalya Parva).

KĀNTĀRAKA. A city in South India. There is a reference in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 16, about the conquest of this place by Sahadeva. Modern scholars are of the opinion that Kāntāraka is situated on the banks of the river Venā.

KAṆṬARĪKA. An ancient sage. He was a worker of his gotra. It was in this family that the pre-eminent Brahmadatta was born. (Chapter 342, Śānti Parva).

KĀNTI. A city in ancient India. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 40).

KĀNTIVRATA. A Vrata observed in the month of Kārttika. It consists in offering worship to Balarāma and Śrī Kṛṣṇa and taking food only at night. By observing this Vrata for one year, beauty, longevity and health can be obtained. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 177).

KAṆVA I. (KĀŚYAPA).

1) General information. Kaṇva attained Purāṇic fame as the father who brought up Śakuntalā. From Ṛgveda it can be gathered that the Kaṇva family was very prominent among the Ṛṣi families of ancient India. Because he was born in the family of sage Kaśyapa, son of Brahmā, Kaṇva was known as Kāśyapa also. Kaṇva's father was Medhātithi as could be seen by a reference to him in Śloka 27, Chapter 208 of Śānti Parva as Medhātithisuta. Kaṇva was staying in a hermitage on the banks of the river Mālinī, with a number of disciples.

2) Kaṇvāśrama. Vana Parva of Mahābhārata states that Kaṇvāśrama was on the northern shore of the river Praveṇī. According to certain critics Kaṇvāśrama was situated on the banks of the river Cambal, four miles to the south of 'Kota' in Rājputānā.

3) How Kaṇva got Śakuntalā. Once Viśvāmitra started a severe penance and Indra desiring to obstruct the attempt sent the enchanting Menakā to entice him. They fell in love with each other and soon Menakā bore a girl. The parents left the child in the forest and went their way. Birds (Śakuntas) looked after her for some time and so she was named Śakuntalā. Accidentally Kaṇva came that way and took the child to his Āśrama.

4) The Yāga of Bharata. Bharata, son of Duṣyanta, performed a peculiar type of Yāga called 'Govitata' with Kaṇva as the chief preceptor to officiate. (Śloka 130, Chapter 74, Ādi Parva).

5. Kaṇva and Duryodhana. Once Kaṇva narrated to Duryodhana how Mātali and his wife Sudharmā went to him in search of a suitable husband to their daughter Guṇakeśī. (Chapter 97, Udyoga Parva, M.B.).

6) Kaṇva, a sage of the east. When Śrī Rāma returned to Ayodhyā after his exile many sages from many different parts came to visit him. Kaṇva was one of those who came from the east. The others who came along with him were, Vasiṣṭha, Atri, Viśvāmitra, Gautama, Jamadagni, Bharadvāja, Sanaka, Śarabhaṅga Durvāsas, Mataṅga, Vibhāṇḍaka and Tumburu.

7) Kaṇva and Ṛgveda.

(i) There are ten Maṇḍalas in Ṛgveda. The Maṇḍalas from two to seven are written by different Ṛṣi families. The second Maṇḍala was written by the Bhārgava family of ṛṣis, the third by the Viśvāmitra family, the fourth by that of Vāmadeva, the fifth by Atri, the sixth by that of Bharadvāja and the seventh by the family of Vasiṣṭha. Fifty Sūktas of the first Maṇḍala and the whole of the eighth Maṇḍala were written by Kaṇva.

(ii) Kaṇva had a son named Medhātithi. Sūkta twelve of Anuvāka four in the first Maṇḍala of Ṛgveda is written making Medhātithi a sage.

(iii) Kaṇva had a daughter named Indīvaraprabhā by Menakā. (Kathāsaritsāgara). (See under Candrāvaloka and Kasyapa I).

KAṆVA II. A King of Pūruvaṁśa. (Pūru dynasty). He was the son of the brother of Santurodha, father of Duṣyanta. His father was Prītiratha and he also had a son named Medhātithi. (Agni Purāṇa).

KĀṆVAŚIRAS. A caste. Originally they were Kṣatriyas. In Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 17 we find that they were reduced to low caste because of their being jealous of the superiority of the Brāhmaṇas.

KANYĀHRADA. A sacred place. If one stayed in this place for a while one would attain Devaloka. (Chapter 25, Anuśāsana Parva).

KANYAKĀGUṆA. A place of habitation of ancient India. (Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

KANYAKUBJA. (KĀNYAKUBJA).

1) General information. A city of Purāṇic fame on the banks of the river Gaṅgā. This is the same place which is now known as Kanauj. Viśvāmitra was the son of Gādhi, King of Kanyākubja.

2) Origin of this city. Once there was a great sage named Kuśa who was the son of Brahmā. He had of his wife Vaidarbhī four sons named Kuśāmba, Kuśanābha, Asūrtarajasa and Vasu. Kuśa asked them each to rule a country and so each of them built a city of his own. Kuśāmba named his city Kauśāmbī, Kuśanābha gave his city the name of Mahodayapura, Asūrtarajasa called his city Dharmāraṇya and Vasu called his city Girivraja. Of these Mahodayapura, city of Kuśanābha, became later famous as Kanyākubja. (Bāla Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

3) How Mahodayapura became Kanyākubja. Kuśanābha begot a hundred daughters of the nymph Ghṛtācī. Those beautiful girls were once playing in the forests when the wind-god fell in love with them. The girls rejected his love and Vāyu getting angry with them cursed them and made them hunchbacks. Because the hundred Kanyakās (girls) became Kubjās (hunchbacks) at that place, the place became known as Kanyākubja.

When the daughters returned to the palace as hunchbacks Kuśanābha was greatly distressed. Weeping, the girls told him what had happened. At that time a sage named Cūlī was performing penance in a forest nearby. Somadā, daughter of Ūrmilā, a gandharva lady, married Cūlī and they got a son named Brahmadatta. This Brahmadatta married the hundred hunchbacks of Kuśanābha and the very touch of Brahmadatta transformed the hunchbacks into beautiful girls.

After having given his daughters in marriage Kuśanābha conducted a Putrakāmeṣṭi yāga to get a son. In that Yāga Brahmā appeared in person and blessed Kuśanābha and he got a son. The son was named Gādhi.[1] Gādhi got a son and a daughter. The son was named Viśvāmitra and the daughter, Satyavatī. Ṛcīka married Satyavatī. Gādhi and Viśvāmitra were the rulers of Kanyākubja. See under 'Ṛcīka, Viśvāmitra'—(Sargas 32 to 34, Bālakāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

4) Nārada and Kanyākubja. There was a very big lake in Kanyākubja. Mahāviṣṇu once showed Māyā to Nārada at that place. (See under 'Nārada').

5) Viśvāmitra and Indra take wine together. Viśvāmitra and Indra took wine together at Kanyākubja. (Śloka 17, Chapter 87, Vana Parva).

KANYĀKUMĀRĪ (KANYAKŪPA; KANYĀTĪRTHA)

1) General information. Mahābhārata makes references in many places to Kanyākumārī, the southern extremity of former Kerala and Gokarṇa, the northern boundary. It must, therefore, be surmised that these two holy places were very ancient ones. Vana Parva, praises Kanyākumārī at many places. If any one bathes at this place one will become very famous. (Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).

Chapter eightyfive of Araṇya Parva, of Bhāṣā Bhārata speaks praisingly of Kanyākumārī and Gokarṇa among other places. It says thus:

"If you visit Ṛṣabhācala of Pāṇḍyadeśa you will get the benefit of conducting an Aśvamedhayāga. Then you must go farther south and take a dip in Kanyātīrtha. The touch of that water absolves you of all sins. Then visit Gokarṇa situated in the ocean famous in all the three worlds and worshipped by all."

From this it is to be understood that ot the time of Mahābhārata Kanyākumārī was part of Pāṇḍyadeśa and that Gokarṇa was an island.

2) Purāṇic stories about Kanyākumārī. There are several stories regarding the origin and renown of Kanyākumārī in the Purāṇas. The most important ones are given below.

(1) Absolver of sins. The wife of a brahmin named Apañcika living in Kāśī became unchaste and to wash away her sin she came to Kanyākumārī walking all the way and did penance there, daily bathing in its waters. She attained Salvation and it is believed that a bath in its waters would absolve anybody of all his sins. (Maṇimekhala).

(2) Cakra tīrtha of Kanyākumārī. Puṇyakāśī, daughter of Mayāsura, once went to Kailāsa and worshipped Śiva. After three yugas Śiva appeared before her and asked her what she wanted. She replied that she wanted to be merged in Śiva always. Śiva then said 'Three hundred and sixtyfive days would make a year. Four lakhs and thirtythree years would make a Kali Yuga. Kṛta, Tretā, Dvāpara and Kali are four Yugas and when two thousand such Yugas are over Brahmā finishes a day. Such thirty days make one month and twelve months, a year for Brahmā. When such hundred years of Brahmā are over the great deluge comes. Such ten deluges make a nāzhikā (twentyfour minutes) of Viṣṇu. Counting thus when you pass ten Viṣṇu deluges Śiva passes a second. Then is the time for the fulfilment of your desire. Till that time you sit in meditation on the shores of the south seas. Your hermitage would be known as Kanyākṣetra or Tapaḥ Sthala. During your stay there you must kill all the wicked people like Bāṇāsura and give relief to the people. I will also come and stay with you there then."

Puṇyakāśī after prostrating before Śiva went to the south seas. Taking a Japamālā (necklace for prayer) in her hands she assumed the name Kanyākumārī, and started her penance. After conquering all the three worlds demon Bāṇa was having a wicked rule over his people when he saw Kanyākumārī and asked her to be his wife. He approached her with his wicked servants Durmukha and Durdarśana. But Kanyākumārī flatly refused and in the battle that ensued, Bāṇāsura fell dead by the Cakrāyudha (Discus) of Devī and at that spot is the Cakratīrtha. (Skanda Purāṇa).

(3) The phantom child which escaped from the hands of Kaṁsa at the time of the birth of Śrī Kṛṣṇa was that divine lady, Kanyākumārī. (Padma Purāṇa).

3) The Geographical view. It is said that there was an extension of the present continent to the south and that expansive land called Lamūria was later submerged in waters. There is a description of such an extended land in some of the old literature like Cilappadikāram."

Kanyākumārī which was called 'Kumāri-ambādi' also was the first setu; Dhanuṣkoṭi the middle setu; and Koṭikkara, last setu. (Setu Purāṇa)

1 Gādhi—This is found as 'Gādhi' in Mahābhārata and 'Gādha' in Rāmāyaṇa.

4) In History. Kanyākumārī had attracted the attention of foreigners long before Christ. Herodotus who lived in the third century B.C. has written about Kanyākumārī in one of his books.

In the book 'Periplus' written in 60 A.D. there is a mention of Kanyākumārī. It says: "Pious persons at the fag end of their lives dedicate their lives to God and go to Kanyākumārī on a pilgrimage and stay there accepting an ascetic life. A divine lady bathed in the holy waters there grants you 'darśana'."

Ptolemy another traveller who lived two thousand years ago refers to Kanyākumārī in his book as 'Komaria Akron'. He had bathed in those waters and worshipped in the Kanyākumārī temple.

Marco Polo of Venice who had travelled these parts in 1243 A.D. has written of his worshipping in the Kanyākumārī temple. He has also recorded having seen thirty miles from Kanyākumārī a glittering figure like that of the Pole-star.

Ibn Batūtā who lived in 1203 A.D. has referred to Kanyākumārī in his book as Rāskumhari.

KANYĀSAMVEDYATĪRTHA. An ancient holy place. It is believed that those who visit this place will attain the world of Prajāpatimanu. (Chapter 84, Vana Parva).

KANYĀŚRAMA. A holy place. If a man spends three nights at this place he would attain Svarga. (Chapter 83, Vana Parva).

KAPA(S). A company of Asuras. The Mahābhārata gives a story of how the brahmins killed these demons. The Aśvinīdevas once came to the earth and gave eyesight to the blind sage Cyavana. It was the time when Indra had denied Soma juice to the Aśvinīdevas. Sage Cyavana got back his eyesight and promised the Aśvinīdevas that he would lift the ban on wine for them. Cyavana conducted a Yāga to which the Aśvinīdevas were also invited. Indra and the other devas refused to take the sacrificial wine and butter along with the Aśvinīdevas. Cyavana got angry and he produced from the sacrificial fire an Asura named Mada. With a huge mouth and long teeth the demon went round eating all the Devas. All at once Cyavana conquered the earth and the Kapas subjugated heaven. When they lost both heaven and earth the Devas approached the brahmins for help. The brahmins started a war against the Kapas. The Kapas sent Dhani to the brahmins for peace-talks. Dhani said "The Kapas are equal to you, Oh brahmins, and so why do you fight them?They are well-versed in Vedas and are very wise men who are entitled to conduct Yāgas. They are righteous persons similar to Brahmarṣis. Prosperity lives in them. They never keep unchaste wives nor do they eat stale meat. It is not proper to fight against such virtuous persons."

But the brahmins did not pay heed to what Dhani said and they killed all the Kapas in bulk. The Kapas, though they were born Asuras, were good-natured persons. (Chapter 157, Anuśāsana Parva)

KAPĀLA. See under Brahmā, 5th Para.

KAPĀLAMOCANA. A holy place on the shores of the river Sarasvatī, in Kurukṣetra. (Chapter 88, Vana Parva; See under Rahodara and Śiva).

KAPĀLĪ I. One of the eleven Rudras. This Rudra was the son of Sthāṇu, son of Brahmā. (Chapter 66, Ādi Parva). According to the Mahābhārata the eleven Rudras are the following: Mṛgavyādha, Sarpa, Nirṛti, Ajaikapāt, Ahirbudhnya, Pinākī, Īśvara, Kapālī, Sthāṇu, Bharga and Dahana. (See under Kapardī). The eleven Rudras are referred to in different ways in Agni Purāṇa and Viṣṇu Purāṇa.

KAPĀLĪ II. Śiva. The Mahābhārata gives the following story regarding the reason for Śiva's getting the name of Kapālī.

Once a great controversy arose regarding the supreme sovereignty of the three worlds between Brahmā and Viṣṇu. Then there came to their midst an effulgence of Śiva and a voice from heaven said "He who finds the source of this brilliance is the real sovereign of the three worlds". Brahmā went up to find the upper end and Viṣṇu went down to find the lower end. They travelled for a very long time without finding the end when Brahmā saw a Ketakī flower coming down. On enquiry the flower said it was coming from the origin of the brilliance and that three Brahmā deluges had elapsed since its starting from there. Brahmā took that flower and went to Viṣṇu. Viṣṇu asked Brahmā whether he had seen the end of the effulgence and Brahmā said 'yes'. Immediately the flower in the hand of Brahmā turned into the figure of Śiva and cut off one of the heads of Brahmā making five-headed Brahmā into four-headed. The angered Brahmā cursed Śiva "May you go begging with a Kapāla (human skull) in your hand." Thus Śiva became a Kapālī. Śiva cursed Brahmā back saying "You will not be worshipped by anyone" (See under Śiva, Brahmā).

KAPARDĪ. One of the eleven Rudras. According to Agni Purāṇa the Ekādaśa Rudras (eleven Rudras) are the following : Hara, Bahurūpa, Tryambaka, Aparājita, Vṛṣākapi, Śambhu, Kapardī, Raivata, Mṛgavyādha, Sarpa and Kapālī. (Chapter 18, Agni Purāṇa).

KAPAṬA. A demon. He was Kaśyapa's son born of his wife Danu. (Chapter 65, Bhīṣma Parva).

KAPAṬABHIKṢU. A false sage. To illustrate the fact that if a man fails in his deceit he will be subjected to ridicule, a story of a false sage occurs in Kathāsaritsāgara. Since this Character has earned a place in the Indian literature his story is given below :

There was once a city called Mākandī on the banks of the river Gaṅgā. In that city lived a sage who observed silence as a Vrata. One day when he went begging he saw a beautiful girl in a Vaiśya's house and the false ascetic was attracted by her. Breaking his silence he said "What a pity!" and left the place. The Vaiśya was worried why the sage said so and approached him and asked why he broke his silence to say so. The sage said : "Your daughter is ill-omened. If you give her in marriage all of you remaining will perish. So pack her in a box and with a torch burning on the top of it set it afloat on the river." The Vaiśya did so.

The sage coming to his Āśrama called his disciples to his side and said "To-night a box with a torch burning on the top of it will come floating on the river. You must take it and bring it to me without opening it."

The disciples went to the river and seeing the box coming floating caught it and took it to their preceptor. But from a point high up in the river a prince had seen the box coming floating and had opened it. He had then released the girl from the box and had floated the box again filling it with a black monkey. When the disciples got the box to the guru he said "Take it upstairs and keep it there. There is a Pūjā to be conducted with the recital of sacred verses. It should not be seen by others. You can all go to sleep."

The false sage went up eager to enjoy the girl in the box and opened the box with pleasant thoughts. But to his utter horror there jumped from the box a ferocious black monkey who mauled him terribly. The Kapaṭabhikṣu was fooled. (Taraṅga 1. Lāvāṇakalambaka, Kathāsaritsāgara).

KĀPĪ. A river. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 24).

KAPIDHVAJA. Arjuna.

KAPILA I. A fierce sage.

1) Genealogy and birth. Kapila was the son of Kardamaprajāpati, son of Brahmā, born to him of his wife Devahūti, grand-daughter of Brahmā and daughter of Svāyambhuva Manu.

Svāyambhuva Manu got two sons named Priyavrata and Uttānapāda and three daughters named Ākūti, Devahūti and Prasūti. The daughters were married to Ruci, Kardama and Dakṣa respectively. To Ruci was born of Ākūti a boy named Yajña. He was a partial incarnation of Viṣṇu. To Kardama was born of his wife Devahūti Kapilācārya, a great sage and the celebrated exponent of the Sāṅkhya philosophy. Prasūti got many daughters (8th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

Sage Kapila was known as Cakradhanus also. (Śloka 17 Chapter 109, Udyoga Parva).

Kardama married the daughter of Vaivasvata Manu called Devahūti. They spent their honeymoon in the air travelling throughout the world. Devahūti delivered nine daughters and a son named Kapila. Kardamaprajāpati gave his daughters in marriage to Marīci and the other sages.

2) Kapila—incarnation of Viṣṇu. The Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa states that Kapila was the incarnation of Viṣṇu. In Chapter 93 there is this statement : "Bhagavān Nārāyaṇa will protect us all. The Lord of the universe has now been born in the world as Kapilācārya."

3) Kapila imparts spiritual knowledge to his mother. Kapila started a severe penance. At that time Kardamaprajāpati died and Devahūti wife of Kardama and mother of Kapila approached Kapila and asked him to instruct her on the path of Bhakti Yoga. Kapila imparted to her spiritual knowledge and gave her instructions to follow the path of Bhakti Yoga for Salvation. She entered into a life of austerities and attained Samādhi. (3rd Skandha, Bhāgavata).

4) How Kapila burnt to ashes the Sagaraputras. Once there was a king called Sagara in the Solar dynasty. He had two wives named Keśinī and Sumati. Keśinī got a son named Asamañjasa and Sumati got sixtythousand sons. Once Sagara conducted an Aśvamedha Yāga at a place where the rivers Sindhu and Gaṅgā meet. Aṁśumān, son of Asamañjasa led the sacrificial horse. Indra disguised as a demon stole the horse when it came to a mountain side and hid it in the nether worlds.

Sagara sent his sixtythousand sons in search of the horse. They dug the whole continent of Jambūdvīpa surrounded by mountains. Devas, gandharvas and bhujaṅgas complained to Brahmā. Then Brahmā said: "The whole of this world belongs to Viṣṇu. He has incarnated himself as sage Kapila to kill the sons of Sagara and is now in the nether-world bearing this world. In the fire of his anger the Sagaraputras will be burnt to death". On hearing this all of them came back.

The Sagaraputras returned to their father when they could not find the horse. But Sagara ordered "Go and dig again till you find it". They went to the nether world. After circling the eight elephants who carry the world they dropped down to the nether world through the north-east corner of the earth. There they saw sage Kapila engaged in penance and the sacrificial horse grazing by his side. The sons of Sagara made a great hubbub there and Kapila produced a big sound of rebuke and stared at them. All the sixtythousand sons of Sagara were reduced to ashes. For more details see under Bhagīratha. (Sargas 39 and 40, Bālakāṇḍa. Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

5) Kapilayogaśāstra. Kapila made the renowned Kapilaśāstra sitting in his Āśrama and taught it to his mother Devahūti. Kapila was a great yogin. The yoga Śāstra itself is based on the Sāṅkhya philosophy of Kapila. His Sāṅkhya Śāstra, known as Kāpila Śāstra also, contains the distinctive yoga of meditation and it creates in you spiritual knowledge removing your ignorance totally. After teaching his mother his 'Kāpila' he went to the Āśrama of Pulaha and lived there. (8th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

6) Other details regarding Kapila.

(i) Kapila was the preceptor of the King of Sindhu. 5th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

(ii) Kapila visited Bhīṣma while the latter was lying on his bed of arrows before his death. (Śloka 8, Śānti Parva, M.B.).

(iii) There occurred a discussion once between Kapila and a Sage named 'Gau' on the subject whether Gṛhasthadharma (doing one's duty as a house-holder) or yogadharma (doing yoga practices) was superior. (Chapter 286, Śānti Parva).

(iv) Kapila was a sage of great brilliance of body. When the sons of Sagara went to the nether world in search of the horse they saw the sage Kapila sitting there radiating a brightness equal to that of fire. (Chapter 107, Araṇya Parva).

(v) Kapila was an authority on Sāṅkhya and Veda and was a worshipper of Śiva. (Śloka 4, Chapter 18, Anuśāsana Parva).

(vi) He has written two books, namely, Sāṅkhyapravacana and Tattvasamāsa.

KAPILA II. Another name of Sūrya. (Śloka 24, Chapter 3, Vana Parva, M.B.).

KAPILA III. A serpent king. It is believed that Kapila is one of the seven serpent Kings who hold the earth in its position. The others are: Dharma, Kāma, Kāla, Vasu, Vāsuki and Ananta. (Śloka 41, Chapter 150, Anuśāsana Parva).

KAPILA IV. Son of an Agni named Bhānu. He was his fourth son and was believed to be another incarnation of sage Kapila (Śloka 21, Chapter 221, Vana Parva).

KAPILA V. Another sage who was the father of Śālihotra. He officiated in a yajña conducted by Uparicaravasu. (Chapter 336, Śānti Parva).

KAPILA VI. A son of Viśvāmitra who was a brahmavādī. (Chapter 4, Anuśāsana Parva).

KAPILA VII. A synonym of Śiva. (Chapter 17, Anuśāsana Parva).

KAPILA VIII. A synonym of Viṣṇu. (Chapter 149, Anuśāsana Parva).

KAPILĀ I. Daughter of Dakṣaprajāpati. Kaśyapa married Kapilā. (Śloka 12, Chapter 65, Ādi Parva M.B.).

KAPILĀ II. A holy place of Kurukṣetra. If one bathes in a sacred pond there one will get the benefit of making a thousand Godānas (giving away cows as gifts). (Chapter 83, Vana Parva).

KAPILĀ III. A river. (Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

KAPILĀ IV. The mother of Pañcaśikha. (Chapter 218, Śānti Parva).

KĀPILA (M). Seventh division of Kuśadvīpa. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 14).

KAPILAHRADA. A sacred place in Kāśī. If one bathes there one will get the benefit of performing a Rājasūya yajña.

KAPILAKEDĀRATĪRTHA. A holy place of ancient India. Sage Kapila stayed here for some time. If one bathes in a pond there one will acquire the art of becoming invisible to others (Chapter 83, Vana Parva, M.B.).

KĀPILAŚĀSTRA. The Śāstra made by Kapila, the sage. After making this Śāstra Kapila communicated it to his mother Devahūti. (Devī Bhāgavata 8th Skandha).

KAPILĀŚVA. Son of a King called Kuvalāśva. A sage named Dhandhu destroyed him. (Śloka, 40 Chapter 204, Vana Parva)

KAPILA TĪRTHA. A sacred pond owned by a King called Kapila. (Śloka 32, Chapter 84, Vana Parva).

KAPILĀVAṬA. A sacred place. If you stay there and observe fasting you will get the benefit of giving away in charity a thousand cows. (Chapter 84, Vana Parva).

KĀPILEYA. Son of Viśvāmitra. After saving Śunaśśepha from death, Viśvāmitra was fondling the child on his lap. At that time, the child's father Ajīgarta came to him and wanted Viśvāmitra to return the child to him. Viśvāmitra then told him "Like Kāpileya and Bābhravya, this is also my son." From this we may infer that Kāpileya must have been Viśvāmitra's son. (Aitareya Brāhmaṇa).

KAPIÑJALĀ. A river of ancient India. (Śloka 26, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

KAPIÑJARA. (KAPIÑJALA). A bird. There is a story about the origin of this bird in the Mahābhārata. Once Tvaṣṭā created Triśiras to kill Indra. Triśiras had three heads. When by one head he recited the Vedas by another head he drank wine and by the third he looked at the world wickedly. Indra envious of the growing strength of Triśiras felled him down by his Vajrāyudha. A person called Takṣaka carrying an axe came that way then and by orders from Indra he cut off the heads of Triśiras. When the heads fell down there emerged from them birds called Kapiñjala, Tittiri and Kalapiṅgala. From the head which recited the Vedas came the birds Kapiñjalas; from the head that drank the wine came the birds Kalapiṅgalas; and from the head that looked at the world with wickedness came the birds Tittiris. (Chapter 9, Udyoga Parva).

KAPISKANDHA. A soldier of Skandadeva. (Śloka 57, Chapter 45, Śalya Parva.)

KAPOTA. A son of Garuḍa. (Chapter 101, Udyoga Parva).

KĀPOTA. A sage. Citrāṅgadā, the daughter of Kakutstha and Urvaśī, was his wife. She had two sons named Tumburu and Suvarcas. Kāpota received much wealth from Kubera and gave it to his sons. Once Kāpota cursed Tārāvatī, the queen of Candraśekhara, that she would bring forth two sons with monkey-faces. (Kālikā Purāṇa, Chapter 56).

KAPOTAROMĀ (KAPOTALOMĀ). Son of the emperor Śibi who was greatly devoted to his dependants, (For genealogy see under Śibi). He had another name Audbhida. (Chapter 197, Vana Parva). He was a prominent member of the court of Varuṇa. (Śanti Parva).

KARABHA. A King who bowed before Jarāsandha, King of Magadha. (Śloka 13, Chapter 14, Sabhā Parva, M.B.).

KARABHĀJANA I. A King of ancient India.

KARABHĀJANA II. One of the nine celebrated sons of Ṛṣabhadeva. He was a yogin of divine wisdom. He imparted spiritual knowledge to these present at the yajña of the King of Videha. (Skandhas 4 and 5, Bhāgavata).

KARABHAÑJAKA. A place of habitation in ancient India. (Śloka 69, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

KARABHI. Son of Śakuni. (Matsya Purāṇa).

KARAHĀṬAKA. A country of south India. Sahadeva conquered this country. (Chapter 31, Sabhā Parva, M.B.).

KARAKA. A place of habitation in ancient India. Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

KARAKARṢAKA. A brother of the Rājā of Cedi. Śarabha is the other brother. The Rājā of Cedi along with his brothers, Karakarṣaka and Śarabha, helped the Pāṇḍavas in the great battle. (Śloka 47, Chapter 50, Udyoga Parva).

KARAKĀŚA. A soldier who fought on the side of the Kauravas. He stood and fought at a strategic point in the Garuḍa Vyūha formed by Droṇa. (Śloka 6, Chapter 20, Droṇa Parva).

KARĀLA. A Deva Gandharva. He took part in the birthday celebrations of Arjuna. (Chapter 122, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

KARĀLADANTA. A great Sage. He was a bright member of the court of Indra. (Chapter 7, Sabhā Parva, M.B.).

KARĀLAJANAKA. A King of Mithilā. Vasiṣṭha imparted to him spiritual knowledge. (Śānti Parva).

KARĀLĀKṢA. A soldier of Skandadeva. (Chapter 45, Śalya Parva).

KARAMĀLĀSAMPRADĀYA. The method of counting the number of recitals of a prayer by using the fingers of the hand. (See under Gāyatrī).

KARAMBHA. Brother of Rambha, father of Mahiṣāsura. See under Mahiṣa.

KARAMBHĀ. A princess of Kaliṅgadeśa. She was married to Akrodha, a King of the Pūruvaṁśa. She was the mother of Devātithi. (Śloka 22, Chapter 95, Ādi Parva).

KARAṆA. Another name of Yuyutsu. See under Yuyutsu and Varṇa.

KARANDHAMA.

1) General information. A King of Ikṣvāku Vaṁśa. Descending in order from Ikṣvāku came Viṁśa—Kalyāṇa—Khanīnetra—Suvarcas. Suvarcas later on became famous as Karandhama.

2) How he got his name Karandhama. Once there came a famine in the country of Suvarcas. The treasury became empty. Taking that opportunity the enemies attacked his country. There was no army for him to fight against his enemies. Meditating upon God he blew his hands and then an army sufficient to fight his enemies appeared before him and using that he defeated them. Because he arranged an army by Karadhamana (blowing of hands) he was given the name of Karandhamana also.

3) Other details.

(i) The celebrated King Avikṣit was the son of Karandhama. (Chapter 4, Aśvamedha Parva).

(ii) Karandhama was a prominent member of the court of Yama. (Śloka 16, Chapter 8, Sabhā Parva).

KARANDHAMANA. See under the word Karandhama.

KĀRANDHAMANA (M). A tīrtha situated near the southern ocean. The five holy places in the southern ocean, viz. Agastya tīrtha, Saubhadra tīrtha, Pauloma tīrtha, Kārandhamana tīrtha and Bhāradvāja tīrtha were called Pañca tīrthas. In the course of Arjuna's pilgrimage, he visited these Pañca tīrthas. At that time, the Sages never used to go there. There was a special reason for it. The five celestial women, Vargā, Saurabheyī, Samīcī, Budbudā and Latā used to live in them in the form of crocodiles as a result of a sage's curse. Arjuna liberated all of them. (For details see under the word "Vargā").

KARAÑJANILAYĀ. Analā, the mother of all trees. She was the daughter of Dakṣa and the wife of Kaśyapa. She is known as Vīrudhā also. That was how Vīrut became a synonym of tree. It is believed that Analā stays in the tree Karañja. To obtain blessings from Analā people worship the Karañja tree. (Ślokas 35 to 36, Chapter 230, Vana Parva).

KĀRAPARVAN. A holy place in the Sarasvatī river valley. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 54).

KĀRASKARA. A despised country of ancient times. There is a reference to this country in the Mahābhārata, Karṇa Parva, Chapter 44.

KARAṬA. A place of habitation of ancient India. (Śloka 63, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

KARATOYĀ. A holy river. This river worships Varuṇa sitting in his court. (Śloka 22, Chapter 9, Sabhā Parva). If one stays on the shores of this river and observes fasting for three days one would get the benefit of performing an Aśvamedha yāga. (Chapter 85, Vana Parva).

KARAVĪRA I. A prominent serpent. (Śloka 12, Chapter 35, Ādi Parva).

KARAVĪRA II. A mountain on the southern side of Mahāmeru. See under Mahāmeru.

KARAVĪRA III. There was once a country named Karavīra on the base of the mountain Gomanta. That country was being ruled by a King called Sṛgālavāsudeva. He was killed by Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Balarāma together as per instructions from Paraśurāma. (10th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

KARAVĪRA IV. A forest in the neighbourhood of Dvārakā. (Chapter 38, Sabhā Parva).

KARAVĪRĀKṢA. A demon. He fought against Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa along with Khara, Dūṣaṇa and Triśiras. (Śloka 24, Chapter 26, Araṇya Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

KARAVĪRAPURA. A holy place. If one bathes in this place one will attain the form of Brahmā. (Chapter 25, Anuśāsana Parva).

KARDAMA I. A Prajāpati. Pulaha, son of Brahmā, begot of his wife Kṣamā three sons named Kardama, Urvarīyān and Sahiṣṇu. (Chapter 10, Aṁśa 1, Viṣṇu Purāṇa). Of these three Kardama married Devahūti. Devahūti was the daughter of Svāyambhuva Manu and sister of Ākūti and Prasūti. (8th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

Devahūti was an ideal wife and served her husband with great devotion. Kardama was pleased with his wife and presented her with an aeroplane. Kardama and Devahūti conducted then a tour of the worlds in that plane. Devahūti delivered nine daughters and a son. The daughters were married to Marīci and other sages and the son grew into the celebrated Sage Kapilācārya. Kardama then entered into Samādhi. (Sitting in yoga and courting death of one's own accord). (3rd Skandha, Bhāgavata).

KARDAMA II. A virtuous serpent. (Chapter 35, Ādi Parva).

KARDAMA III. This Sage sits in the court of Brahmā and worships him. (Śloka 19, Chapter 11, Sabhā Parva, M.B.).

KARDAMA IV. A celebrated sage who was the grandson of Viraja. He had a son named Anaṅga. (Śloka 90, Chapter 59, Śānti Parva).

KARDAMILAKṢETRA. A temple near the mountain of Samaṅga. Bharata was crowned King at this temple (Śloka 9, Chapter 135, Vana Parva).

KAREṆUMATĪ. Daughter of Śiśupāla, King of Cedi. Nakula married her and they got a child named Niramitra. (Śloka 79, Chapter 95, Ādi Parva).

KĀRĪṢA. A son of Viśvāmitra. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 55).

KARĪṢAKA. A place of habitation in ancient India. (Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva, M.B.).

KARĪṢIṆĪ. A river. (Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

KARĪTI. A place of habitation in ancient India. (Chapter 9. Bhīṣma Parva).

KARKAKHAṆḌA. A place of habitation in ancient India. This place was conquered by Karṇa for Duryodhana. (Vana Parva).

KARKAṆḌU. A saintly King mentioned in Sūkta 112, Anuvāka 16, Maṇḍala 1 of Ṛgveda.

KARKARA. A prominent serpent. See under Kadrū.

KARKAṬĪ. See para 12 under Brahmā.

KĀRKI. The son of the sage Āpastamba by his wife Akṣasūtrā.

KARKOṬAKA. A terrible serpent.

1) Birth. This serpent was born to Kaśyapa, by his wife Kadrū.

2) The curse. Once Karkoṭaka cheated the sage Nārada. The angry sage cursed him and said that he would have to remain without the power of movements in the forest till Nala came to rescue him. From that day Karkoṭaka lived in that forest, awaiting the arrival of Nala.

3) Nala and Karkoṭaka. Once a wild fire spread all over the forest. Karkoṭaka whose power of movement was destroyed by Nārada's curse, cried aloud, calling upon Nala to come and save him. It was at this time that Nala arrived at the spot after leaving Damayantī in the forest. Nala came to him, on hearing his cries. The serpent informed Nala about the story of Nārada's curse and reducing himself to the size of a thumb sat on the ground. Nala removed him to a safe spot away from the fire. The serpent asked Nala to walk a few steps counting his footsteps. Nala did so and at the tenth step, Karkoṭaka stung him and his whole body was turned blue. Suddenly Karkoṭaka assumed his own original shape and spoke to Nala as follows:—"I have changed your appearance so that people may not be able to recognize you. Kali who is troubling you, still lives within you. It is he who is affected by my poison. You need not fear danger from poison any more. You will never be defeated in battle. Go and engage yourself as the charioteer of Ṛtuparṇa, King of Ayodhyā. You will teach him Aśvahṛdaya mantra. In return for it he will teach you Akṣahṛdaya mantra. Here are two garments which I give you. If you put them on, you will be restored to your own shape. May you be blessed again with a happy family life."

After saying this, Karkoṭaka vanished. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 66).

KĀRKOṬAKA. A land beyond the eastern ocean. It is not far from there to the river Śītodā. The Udaya mountain is just across it. (Kathāsaritsāgara).

KARMABHŪMI. The land of Bhārata. How this continent got the name of Karmabhūmi is given below. All those born in this land enjoy a life in Svarga, on earth or in hell according to the class to which their actions belong namely Sāttvic, Rājasic or Tāmasic. It is possible for only this land to obtain for its people life in other worlds.[1] Therefore this land got the name Karmabhūmi. (8th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

KARMAJIT. A King of the family of Arjuna. He was the son of Bṛhatsena and the father of Śrutañjaya. (9th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

KARṆA I. The eldest son of Kuntī. Though he was the brother of the Pāṇḍavas he joined sides with the Kauravas and became the King of Aṅga. So the name of Karṇa comes in the genealogy of the Aṅga royal family.

1) Genealogy. Descending in order from Viṣṇu:—Brahmā-Atri-Candra-Budha-Purūravas-Āyus - Nahuṣa-Yayāti-Turvasu-Vahni-Bharga-Bhānu-Tribhānu-Karandhama-Marutta - (Marutta had no son and he adopted Duṣyanta) - Duṣyanta - Varūtha - Gāṇḍīra - Gāndhāra-Kola-Druhyu-Babhrusetu - Purovasu - Gharma - Ghṛta-Viduṣa-Pracetas-Sabhānara-Kālanara - Sṛñjaya - Purañjaya-Janamejaya-Mahāsāla-Mahāmanas-Uśīnara - Titikṣu-Ruṣadratha-Paila-Sutapas-Bali-Aṅga - (The Aṅga dynasty begins) - Dadhivāhana - Dravīratha - Dharmaratha-Citraratha- Satyaratha - Lomapāda - Caturaṅga-Pṛthulākṣa-Campa-Haryaṅga-Bhadraratha-Bṛhatkarmā-Bṛhadbhānu-Bṛhadātmā-Jayadratha-Bṛhadratha- Viśvajit-Karṇa.

2) Birth of Karṇa. Pāṇḍu, a King of Candravaṁśa, married Kuntī, daughter of King Śūrasena. This girl was brought up even from childhood by a King called Kuntibhoja. She grew up in the palace of the King. She was once put in charge of attending to the welfare of those engaged in religious duties. The sage Durvāsas came there then and stayed for four months as the king's guest. Kuntī served the sage during his stay there with so much care, patience and devotion that the sage was immensely pleased and gave her at the time of his departure a divine mantra. If she called upon any god repeating that mantra once, that god would manifest himself to her and bless her with a son equal to him in glory. The mantra was to be used only five times.

Kuntī was young and wanted to test the power of the mantra. So she recited the mantra meditating on the Sun. Instantly she felt she saw a divine person coming to her from the sun. She was perplexed. But the divine form embraced her and consoled her saying that she would never lose her virginity even if she bore a son from him. None excepting her step-mother knew about this. In due course Kuntī delivered a male child and with the help of her step-mother she put that child in a box and floated it on the river Aśvā.

That box leaving the river Aśvā entered the Yamunā river and leaving Yamunā it entered the river Gaṅgā. Drifting slowly the box reached Campāpurī, a country of Sūtas. Adhiratha born of the Sūtavaṁśa and an ally of the Kauravas, saw a box floating on the river while he went for his bath and took it home. Rādhā, wife of Adhiratha, who was childless was greatly pleased to see a babe inside the box and they adopted it and brought it up. The boy was named Vasuṣeṇa. It was this babe that became the celebrated Karṇa afterwards. (Four chapters from 305, Vana Parva).

3) Education of Karṇa. Karṇa grew up in the house of Adhiratha in the country of Aṅga bearing the names Vasuṣeṇa and Vṛṣa. Kuntī knew this through spies. When the time came for imparting education to Karṇa Adhiratha sent him to Hastināpura to the presence of Droṇa for teaching him archery. Karṇa studied under Kṛpa and Paraśurāma also. After his education he entered into a treaty with Duryodhana. (Chapter 309, Vana Parva).

4) Karṇa is cursed. Karṇa was cursed by a brahmin and Paraśurāma. The story is given below.

Even while they were studying archery Arjuna and Karṇa vied with each other. Karṇa once requested Droṇa to teach him in private the secret of the Brahmā missile to fight against Arjuna. But Droṇa did not accede to his request.

Karṇa then went to Mahendragiri and bowed before Paraśurāma and represented himself as a member of the Bhṛgu family. He said he had come to him to be his disciple and learn the secret of the Brahmā missile from him. Paraśurāma believed him and accepting him as his disciple taught him many new techniques in archery. Once Karṇa was wandering in the vicinity of the āśrama when he saw a lonely cow grazing there and Karṇa without knowing that it belonged to a brahmin sent an arrow and killed it. The brahmin got furious and cursed Karṇa thus "Oh, sinner, the wheel of your chariot would go down in the mud when you face the enemy to fight against whom you are now taking training. Then, when you stand perplexed, your opponent would cut off your head." Karṇa requested for a removal of the curse but the brahmin refused to show any mercy.

Paraśurāma taught Karṇa the secret of the Brahmā missile. One day tired after a day's fast and a walk around the āśrama with his disciples Paraśurāma slept resting his head on the lap of Karṇa. Then a beetle named Alarka attacked Karṇa and started sucking blood from his thigh. Blood was oozing from his thigh and still Karṇa did not stir from his position lest it should disturb his guru in his nap. Suddenly Paraśurāma awoke and stared at the beetle and the beetle fell dead. It then took the form of a demon and rising up in the air said "Svāmin ! I was once a demon called Daṁśa. Once I carried away by force the wife of the sage Bhṛgu and the angered sage cursed me and made me a beetle. When I craved for pardon he said that I would be given my original form by Paraśurāma."

When the demon disappeared saying so much Paraśurāma turned to Karṇa who stood with respect, his dress all covered with blood. Paraśurāma said : "No brahmin can bear so much pain with such patience. Surely, you are not a brahmin. Let me know the truth." Trembling with fear Karṇa revealed his identity and then Paraśurāma cursed him saying "You will forget the secret of the Brahmā missile at the time when you want to use it against your enemy." (Chapters 2 and 3, Śānti Parva).

5) How Karṇa became the King of Aṅga. The Pāṇḍavas and Kauravas were studying archery under Droṇācārya together and Karṇa also was among them. When their education was complete a day was fixed to exhibit the skill of the students. The public also was invited to see the skill of the princes. Everybody showed his best and Arjuna displayed super-human skill so that the vast assemblage was lost in wonder and admiration. Then strode Karṇa to the scene and not only did he duplicate with ease Arjuna's feats but he did show something more. The assemblage was dumbfounded. Arjuna turnned pale. At this moment Kṛpa stood up and questioned the right of Karṇa to compete with those with royal blood in them. Then rose Duryodhana and said : "If the combat is not in order simply because Karṇa is not a prince it is easily remedied. I crown Karṇa as the King of Aṅga". Then there came to the scene the aged Adhiratha, the foster-father of Karṇa, and as Karṇa saw him coming he went and bowed before him and Adhiratha embraced him with tears in his eyes. (Chapters 134 to 136, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

6) Karṇa's armour and ear-rings. Karṇa was born with an armour on his body and rings in his ears. Chapter 99 of Ādi Parva says thus : "To Kuntī was born of Sūrya the mighty Karṇa. Even at his birth he was adorned with an armour over his body and rings in his ears."
Sūrya had ordained that as long as Karṇa wore the armour and ear-rings he would be unconquerable. Indra knew this and wanted to get Karṇa rid of these so that Arjuna, his son, might gain a victory over Karṇa. Karṇa was reputed for his charity and Indra under the garb of a brahmin went to Karṇa and begged of him his ear-rings and armour. The Sun god had already warned him in a dream that Indra would thus try to deceive him. Still Karṇa could not bring himself to refuse any gift that was asked of him and so he cut off the ear-rings and armour with which he was born and gave them to the Brāhmaṇa. The only request that the noble Karṇa did make was that in separating the ornaments from his body no wound should be made. Indra did it with great skill neither hurting him nor making even a scratch on this body. Indra bade Karṇa ask for any boon he wanted. The Sun god had also advised him to ask for a good weapon in return in case he gave away his assets and so he requested Indra the best of the weapons he possessed. Indra gave him his weapon, the Śakti, called Vaijayantī also. Karṇa had to use that weapon to kill the great Ghaṭotkaca in the Mahābhārata battle.

7) Other details.

(x) Kāṇḍapṛṣṭham is the name of Karṇa's bow.

8) Karṇa and the Kurukṣetra battle. The great battle of Mahābhārata lasted for eighteen days and some of the incidents touching Karṇa during that period are given below :

(i) Before the great war started Kuntī went alone to the shores of Gaṅgā and met Karṇa. She then confessed to him that she was his mother and that the Pāṇḍavas were his brothers. She advised Karṇa to join sides with the Pāṇḍavas and the Sun god approved of it. But Karṇa refused to do so. He said he would never forsake Duryodhana who had brought him up from his childhood at a time when he was in peril. But he promised his mother that he would never kill any of her other four sons but would kill Arjuna in the battle-field. (Chapter 146 Udyoga Parva).
(ii) Karṇa started his fight against the Pāṇḍavas after taking blessings from Bhīṣma. (Chapter 3, Droṇa Parva).
(iii) Karṇa fought against the princes of Kekaya, Arjuna, Bhīma, Dhṛṣṭadyumna and Śātyaki in single combat. (Chapter 32, Droṇa Parva).
(iv) Abhimanyu defeated Karṇa in a single combat. (Chapter 40, Droṇa Parva).
(v) Karṇa made Bhīma unconscious. (Chapter 139, Droṇa Parva).
(vi) Karṇa once withdrew a bit when hit by the arrow of Arjuna. (Chapter 139, Droṇa Parva).
(vii) Karṇa insulted Kṛpācārya at one time. (Chapter 158, Droṇa Parva).
(viii) Karṇa killed Ghaṭotkaca with the weapon Śakti which Indra had given him in exchange for the armour and ear-rings which he had given Indra. (Chapter 180, Droṇa Parva).
(ix) Karṇa ran away from the battlefield when he heard that Droṇa was dead. (Chapter 193, Karṇa Parva).
(x) Karṇa was made the Generalissimo of the Kaurava army when Droṇa died. (Chapter 10, Karṇa Parva).
(xi) Śalya became the charioteer of Karṇa (Chapter 86, Karṇa Parva).
(xii) The beautiful headwear of Arjuna fell down to the ground by the snake-faced arrow of Karṇa. (Chapter 90, Karṇa Parva).

(xiii) When Arjuna was fighting against Karṇa the chariot-wheels of Karṇa sank into the ground. (Chapter 90, Karṇa Parva).

(xiv) Arjuna slew Karṇa. (Śloka 50, Chapter 91, Karṇa Parva).

(xv) Karṇa had three sons named Citrasena, Satyasena and Suṣeṇa. All the three were killed at Kurukṣetra by Nakula. (Ślokas 19 to 50, Chapter 10, Śalya Parva).

9) Karṇa goes to heaven. After his death Karṇa went to heaven and merged with his father, the Sun god. (Śloka 20, Chapter 5, Svargārohaṇa Parva).

10) Names of Karṇa.

(i) Because Karṇa was born with an effulgence (Vasu) he was first given the name Vasuṣeṇa.

(ii) Because he was born with Kuṇḍalas (ear-rings) in his Karṇas (ears) he was called Karṇa. (Chapter 302. Araṇya Parva).

(iii) Besides these two he had many other names. A few are given below:

Ādhirathi, Ādityanandana. Ādityatanaya, Aṅgarāja, Aṅgeśvara, Arkaputra, Bharatarṣabha, Goputra, Kaunteya. Kuntīsuta, Kurūdvaha, Kurupṛtanāpati, Kuruvīra, Kuruyodha, Pārtha, Vṛṣātmaja, Rādhāsuta, Rādhātmaja, Rādheya, Ravisūnu, Sauti, Sāvitra, Sūryaja, Sūryaputra, Sūryasambhava, Sūta, Sūtanandana, Sūtaputra, Sūtasūnu, Sūtasuta, Sūtatanaya. Vaikartana, Vaivasvata and Vṛṣa.

KARṆA II. A son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Bhīmasena killed this Karṇa. (Chapter 67, Bhīṣma Parva).

KARṆA III. Younger brother of Ghaṇṭa. See under Ghaṇṭākarṇa.

KARṆAKA. A barber who lived in Kāśī. (Chapter 29, Harivaṁśa).

KARṆANIRVĀHA. A sage who attained Svarga after observing correctly the duties of Vānaprastha. (Śloka 18, Chapter 244, Śānti Parva).

KARṆAPARVA. One of the Parvans of Mahābhārata. See under Mahābhārata.

KARṆAPRĀVARAṆA. A country of South India. The army of Duryodhana contained soldiers from this country. (Śloka 13, Chapter 51. Bhīṣma Parva).

KARṆAPRĀVARAṆA(S). An ancient tribe of people who inhabited the shores of the sea in the south. The one distinctive feature of this tribe was that their ears were extraordinarily long, drooping down to the feet. Sahadeva conquered and subdued this tribe. (Śloka 67, Chapter 31, Sabhā Parva). They once brought to Yudhiṣṭhira many valuable presents and paid their respects to him. (Śloka 19, Chapter 52, Sabhā Parva).

KARṆAPRĀVARAṆĀ. A follower of Skandadeva, (Chapter 46, Śloka 25, Śalya Parva).

KARṆAŚRAVAS. A sage who was a member of the court of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Śloka 23, Chapter 26, Vana Parva).

KARṆĀṬAKA. A country of South India. Mahābhārata says like this: "There are a few more countries to the south and they are: Drāviḍa, Kerala, Prācya, Muṣika, Vanavāsika, Karṇāṭaka, Māhiṣaka, Vikalpa and Mūṣaka." (Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

KARṆAVEṢṬA. A Kṣatriya King. He was the incarnation of an Asura named Krodhavaśa. (Chapter 67, Ādi Parva).

KARṆIKĀ. One of the eleven Devakanyakās who sang and danced in the Janmotsava of Arjuna. The others are: Menakā, Sahajanyā, Puñjikasthalā, Ṛtusthalā, Ghṛtācī, Viśvācī, Pūrvacitti, Ullocā, Pramlocā and Urvaśī. (Chapter 123, Ādi Parva).

KARṆIKĀRAVANA. A forest to the north of the mountain Sumeru. All the six seasons appear there at the same time and so this forest is always filled with flowers. (Chapter 6, Śloka 24, Bhīṣma Parva).

KARPARA, See under Ghaṭa.

KĀRPĀSIKA. A country in ancient India. The maids of this country served in the Rājasūya of Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 51, Verse 8).

KĀRṢĀPAṆA(M). (KĀRṢIKAM). A measure of weight for gold and silver in ancient India.

KĀRṢṆI. A Deva Gandharva. Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 56 says that he participated in the celebrations connected with Arjuna's birth.

KARTĀ. A Viśvadeva, (Śloka 35, Chapter 91, Anuśāsana Parva).

KĀRTASVARA. An Asura. Once this Asura became world emperor. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 227, Verse 52).

KĀRTAVĪRYĀRJUNA (KĀRTAVĪRYA). A renowned King of the Hehaya dynasty.

1) Genealogy. From Mahāviṣṇu were descended in the following order: Brahmā—Atri—Candra—Budha—Purūravas — Āyus— Yayāti—Yadu—Sahasrajit— Śatajit—Ekavīra—(Hehaya)—Dharma—Kaṇi — Bhadrasena — Dhanaka—Kṛtavīrya—Kārtavīryārjuna.

2) Hehaya Dynasty and Bhārgava Dynasty. The Hehayas were Kṣatriyas and the Bhārgavas were Brāhmaṇas. The Bhārgava sages were the family preceptors of the Hehaya Kings. The Hehayas who were generous and charitable, used to give plenty of wealth to the Bhārgavas. Consequently in course of time, the Bhārgavas grew wealthy while the Hehayas gradually declined. In order to tide over their difficulty, the Hehayas decided to borrow some money from the Bhārgavas. But the Bhārgavas refused to oblige, on the plea that they had no money. The enraged Kṣatriyas (Hehayas) began to persecute the Bhṛgus (Bhārgavas). The Bhṛgus left for the Himālayas after burying all their treasures under the floor of their Āśramas. The Kṣatriyas pursued them and hunted them even there. At last a Brāhmaṇī who belonged to the Bhārgava race, gave birth to a sage named Aurva through her thigh. With his birth the Hehayas began to lead a less aggressive life. After the lapse of many years, the mighty Kārtavīryārjuna was born in the Hehaya dynasty and the mighty sage Jamadagni was born in the Bhṛgu dynasty. Both of them nourished their hereditary feud. With his capital in the city of Māhiṣmatī on the banks of the river Narmadā, Kārtavīryārjuna began his reign. (See under Aurva I).

3) Thousand Hands of Kārtavīryārjuna. Once when Kārtavīryārjuna was living in his capital Māhiṣmatī, the sage Nārada happened to come there. The King greeted him with due reverence and asked him what course of action was to be followed for attaining mokṣa (salvation) and at the same time for enjoying worldly pleasures. Nārada replied that by performing the rite known as "Bhadradīpa Pratiṣṭhā", both these objects could be achieved. Accordingly, Kārtavīrya went to the banks of the river Narmadā with his wife and began the observance of Bhadradīpa Pratiṣṭhā. Kārtavīrya's guru was Dattātreya, the son of Atri. At the conclusion of the Yāga rites, Dattātreya who was pleased, asked Kārtavīryārjuna what boons he wished to have. Kārtavīrya with joined palms asked him many boons one of which was that he should have a thousand arms. Dattātreya granted him the boons, and Kārtavīrya who became proud of his new possession, ruled at Māhiṣmatī for 86,000 years. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 44).

4) Vāyu's Warning. Kārtavīryārjuna who returned triumphant after receiving the boon from Dattātreya heard a mysterious voice warning him in the following words :—"You fool ! Don't you know that a Brāhmaṇa is superior to a Kṣatriya ? A Kṣatriya governs his subjects in alliance with the Brāhmaṇa". On hearing this, Kārtavīrya became angry. He understood that Vāyu, the divine messenger was behind the mysterious voice. He despised Vāyu and argued that a Kṣatriya was superior to a Brāhmaṇa. Vāyu gave him a warning that a Brāhmaṇa would curse Kārtavīrya. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 152).

5) Kārtavīrya cursed by the sage. Once Agni (fire-god) approached Kārtavīrya and begged for food. The King allowed him to feed upon mountains and trees from any part of his Kingdom. So Agni began to devour the woods and hills. This led to the burning down of an Āśrama owned by a sage called Āpava. The enraged Sage came to know that Kārtavīryārjuna was responsible for the havoc and pronounced a curse that Paraśurāma would chop off all the thousand hands of Kārtavīryārjuna.

6) Kārtavīryārjuna and Rāvaṇa. In the course of his triumphal march, after conquering the whole world, Rāvaṇa once arrived with his forces on the bank of the river Narmadā. Enjoying the smooth flow of the crystal clear stream of the Narmadā and the pleasant sand banks in the river-bed, he spent a night there with his followers. Early next morning he took his bath in the river and setting up the idol of Śiva on the sand bank, began to worship it.

Just then Kārtavīryārjuna and his wives came to the place and began their water sports, a few yards down the river from the place where Rāvaṇa was sitting. As part of his amusements, Kārtavīrya stopped the flow of the river by making a dam with his thousand arms. This caused the level of the water to rise and Rāvaṇa with his materials of worship was submerged in the flood. Enraged at this disturbance to his worship, he sent two of his men down the river bank to find out what was happening. They traced the source of the trouble to Kārtavīryārjuna and his water-sports and reported the matter to their master. At once Rāvaṇa armed himself with his bow rushed to Kārtavīryārjuna and began a fierce fight. At last Rāvaṇa fell down under the heavy stroke of Kārtavīrya's mace and was bound in chains and imprisoned. He lay there for one year. Rāvaṇa's father sage Pulastya came to know of this and he went to Kārtavīrya's palace. He was received with due respect and at his request, Kārtavīrya released Rāvaṇa and after that they remained friends for life. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

7) Kārtavīrya and Reṇukā's Death. One day when Paraśurāma was fourteen years old, his father sage Jamadagni went to the forest to fetch some Samits (sacrificial twigs). Jamadagni's wife, Reṇukā swept and cleaned the Āśrama and went to the river Revā to fetch water and Paraśurāma was left behind in the Āśrama. When she reached the river bank, she saw Kārtavīryārjuna indulging in amorous pleasures with his wives in the water. She waited unobserved on the bank for some time and after they had left the place, she stepped into the river. But since the water was muddy, she had to go to another place in the river to get clear water. There also she lingered for a few minutes, looking at the amorous amusements of Citraratha, King of Sālva, with his wives. It was only after they had departed that she was able to return to the Āśrama with water. Meanwhile Jamadagni who had returned to the Āśrama earlier was angry at her delay and was waiting impatiently for her arrival. As soon as she reached the Āśrama, the sage, in a fit of fury, ordered Paraśurāma to cut off her head and the latter obeyed him. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 58).

8) The Triumphal March of Kārtavīrya. All the Kings in the world acknowledged the supremacy of Kārtavīrya. In Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 16, we find that Kings of the Solar dynasty like Trayyāruṇa, Hariścandra, Rohitāśva and Cuñcu were defeated by Kārtavīryārjuna. In his golden chariot he went about defeating Devas, Yakṣas, Ṛṣis and others. He challenged even Viṣṇu. He insulted Indra in the company of Indrāṇī. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 115).

Intoxicated by his successes, Kārtavīrya went to the sea-shore and challenged the ocean and began to destroy the animals in the sea by shooting them with his arrows. God Varuṇa appeared before him and asked him what he wanted. Kārtavīrya asked the god to name a man who had the capacity to fight with him. Varuṇa answered that Jamadagni's son Paraśurāma was the person who satisfied that condition. Kārtavīrya accepted the challenge and went in search of Paraśurāma. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 29).

9) Killing of Jamadagni. Once Kārtavīrya went to hunt in the forest with his followers. They were roaming in the Vindhya forests in search of game. At noon after a refreshing bath in the clear waters of the river Narmadā when they were preparing to return, they saw Jamadagni's Āśrama. After asking his men to wait at the river-bank, Kārtavīrya went alone to the Āśrama. He paid his respects to the sage and after their usual greetings, Jamadagni asked him to call his followers also to the Āśrama. When all of them arrived the sage gave them a sumptuous feast. Kārtavīrya wondered how the sage managed to do it. They spent the night there and when they returned home next morning Kārtavīrya's minister Candragupta told him that he saw a cow in Jamadagni's Āśrama and that it was from that divine cow that the sage was able to get all the rare articles of food which he supplied to the guests. He also offered to get the cow from the sage. So the King sent Candragupta to the Āśrama to beg the cow from the sage for him. Candragupta accordingly went with a few followers to the Āśrama and begged for the cow. At that time Paraśurāma was not in the Āśrama. Jamadagni told them that the cow was Kāmadhenu's sister, Suśīlā and that it was not possible to give her. Candragupta tried to seize the cow by force but she suddenly vanished into the sky. The King's men tried to capture her calf. Jamadagni who came forward to prevent them, was beaten to death by Candragupta. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapters 67 to 70).

10) Jamadagni's Restoration to Life. Paraśurāma returned soon to the Āśrama with the disciple Akṛtavraṇa. At the sight of his father lying dead on the floor, Paraśurāma cried aloud. Reṇukā beat her breast twentyone times. Seeing this, Paraśurāma took a solemn vow that he would go round the world twenty-one times and extirpate the Kṣatriya Kings. The sage Śukra appeared there with Suśīlā who had vanished. After restoring Jamadagni to life Śukra went back.

11) Death of Kārtavīryārjuna. Paraśu Rāma who had turned himself into the very embodiment of Revenge, accompanied by Akṛtavraṇa, took his stand at the gates of the city of Māhiṣmatī and challenged Kārtavīryārjuna to a fight. Kārtavīrya came out with a huge army. In the terrible fight that followed, Paraśurāma himself with his axe (paraśu) chopped off all the thousand arms of Kārtavīryārjuna. All his sons were killed. Kārtavīrya himself fell down beheaded. This was the end of the pillar of Hehaya dynasty. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 81).

12) Kārtavīrya's sons. Kārtavīrya had one hundred sons. All of them were killed in the battle by Paraśurāma. Their names, as given in Chapter 76 of Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, are given below :—

Nirmada, Rocana, Śaṅku, Ugrada, Dundubhi, Dhruva, Supārśī, Śatrujit, Krauñca, Śānta, Nirdaya, Antaka, Ākṛti, Vimala, Dhīra, Nīroga, Bāhuti, Dama, Adhari, Vidhura, Saumya, Manasvī, Puṣkala, Buśa, Taruṇa, Ṛṣabha, Ṛkṣa, Satyaka, Subala, Balī, Ugreṣṭa, Ugrakarmā, Satyasena, Durāsada, Vīradhanvā, Dīrghabāhu, Akampana, Subāhu, Dīrghākṣa, Vartulākṣa, Cārudaṁṣṭra, Gotravān, Manojava, Ūrdhvabāhu, Krodha, Satyakīrti, Duṣpradharṣaṇa, Satyasandha, Mahāsena, Sulocana, Raktanetra, Vakradaṁṣṭra, Sudaṁṣṭra, Kṣatravarmā, Manonuga, Dhūmrakeśa, Piṅgalocana, Avyaṅga, Jaṭila, Veṇumān, Sānu, Pāśapāṇi, Anuddhata, Duranta, Kapila, Śambhu, Ananta, Viśvaga, Udāra, Kṛti, Kṣatrajit, Dharmī, Vyāghra, Ghoṣa, Adbhuta, Purañjaya, Cāraṇa. Vāgmī, Vīra, Rathī, Govihvala, Saṅgrāmajit, Suparvā, Nārada, Satyaketu, Śatānīka, Dṛḍhāyudha, Citradhanvā, Jayatsena, Virūpākṣa, Bhīmakarmā, Śatrutāpana, Citrasena, Durādharṣa Vidūratha, Śūra, Śūrasena, Dhiṣaṇa, Madhu, and Jayadhvaja.

KĀRTTIKEYA. Skanda, the son of Śiva. For details see under Skanda.

KARUṆA. See under Dhanañjaya.

KARŪṢA I. A King of Kārūṣa. A lady of name Bhadrā was performing penance to get this King as her husband when Śiśupāla carried her away. (Śloka 11, Chapter 45, Sabhā Parva).

KARŪṢA II. One of the nine sons of Vaivasvata Manu. The other sons are : Ikṣvāku, Nābhāga, Dṛṣṭa, Śaryāti, Nariṣyanta, Prāṁśunāga, Diṣṭa and Pṛṣadhra. (7th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

KARŪṢA. III. A Yakṣa. This Yakṣa accompanied by his brothers performed penance on the shores of the river Kālindī, to propitiate Devī, taking in only air. Devī was pleased and appearing before him in person said "You will become the lord of Manvantara". (Skandhas 10 and 13, Devī Bhāgavata).

KĀRŪṢA I. The sixth son of Vaivasvata Manu. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 75).

KĀRŪṢA. II. An ancient land. (The King of this land used to suppress robbers and plunderers. He was present at Draupadī's Svayaṁvara. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 185).

KARŪṢA (M). A place in ancient India. Historians are of opinion that it is the Bundelkhaṇḍa of modern India. The sin of Brahmahatyā (killing of brahmins) of Indra was washed away by brahmins at this place. The place where Karīṣa (cowdung) from Indra fell was called Karīṣa and it gradually became Karūṣa. (See under Aṅgamalaja).

KARVAṬA. An ancient country of India. The King of this land was slain by Bhīmasena. (Chapter 30, Sabhā Parva).

KAŚERAKA. A Yakṣa. Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 15 says that Kaśeraka continues to attend on Kubera as a member of his assembly.

KAŚERU. A lovely daughter of Tvaṣṭā, the Prajāpati. Narakāsura abducted Kaśeru when she was fourteen years old. She was one of the virgins married by Śrī Kṛṣṇa who won a victory over Narakāsura. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 38, Dākṣiṇātya Pāṭha).

KAŚERUMĀN (KASERUMĀN). An Asura who was a Yavana. He was slain by Śrī Kṛṣṇa according to Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 32.

KĀŚĪ I. (VĀRĀṆASĪ. BANARAS). (See under Divodāsa also).

1) General. One of the oldest and most popular sacred centres in India, Kāśī is reputed for its Viśvanātha temple of hoary traditions, according to one of which the Śivaliṅga in the temple was installed by Brahmā himself. (Hālāsya Māhātmya).

2) Pilgrimage on foot to Kāśī. Devotees from many parts of India go on pilgrimage to Kāśī on foot, bathe in the holy waters of the Gaṅgā and thus earn spiritual satisfaction and release from worldly attachments. The reason for the above is stated in the Agni Purāṇa as follows :—Once, at Kailāsa Śiva told Pārvatī that the temple at Kāśī was called 'Avimukta' (unreleased) as it never perished, and all Japa, tapa, homa and dāna made there never cease to give auspicious results. One should walk on foot to Kāśī and live there. Having gone there one should never leave the place. There are eight great tīrthas at Avimukta, i.e. Hariścandra tīrtha, Āvrātakeśvara tīrtha, Japyeśvara tīrtha, Śrī Parvatīrtha, Mahālayatīrtha, Bhṛgu tīrtha, Caṇḍeśvara tīrtha and Kedāratīrtha. These tīrthas extend to two yojanas to the east of the Kāśī temple and half-a-yojana to the west of it. The river Varaṇā is also there, and Vārāṇasī is at the centre of all these. Whatever is done at Vārāṇasī like bath, Japa, homa, worship of Devas, dāna, obsequies for the dead, oneself living there etc. is productive of devotion and salvation. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 112).

3) References to Kāśī in the Mahābhārata.

(i) Pāṇḍu once conquered Kāśī. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9).

(ii) Bhīma married Balandharā, daughter of the King of Kāśī. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 77).

(iii) Bhīmasena conquered Kāśī. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 6).

(iv) Sahadeva conquered Kāśī. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 50, Verse 31).

(v) In the war between the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas, the King of Kāśī fought on the side of the former. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 196, Verse 2).

(vi) Arjuna conquered Kāśī. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 40).

(vii) Śrī Kṛṣṇa conquered Kāśī. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 15).

(viii) Karṇa once conquered Kāśī on behalf of Duryodhana. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 19).

(ix) Kāśī had been ruled by the Kings called Haryaśva. Sudeva, and Divodāsa. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 30, Verses 12 to 15).

(x) King Vṛṣadarbha and Uśīnara had ruled over Kāśī. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 9).

(xi) Bhīṣma conquered Kāśī during the Svayaṁvara of Ambā. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 44, Verse 38).

(xii) The horse sent out in connection with Yudhiṣṭhira's Aśvamedha passed through Kāśī also. (Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 14).

(xiii) For the origin of the name Kāśī see under Divodāsa.

KĀŚĪ II. An inhabitant-citizen-of Kāśī. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 106, Verse 18).

KĀŚĪ III. A son of Kaviprajāpati. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 133).

KĀŚIKA. A famous charioteer on the Pāṇḍava side (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 171, Verse 15).

KĀŚĪŚVARA TĪRTHA. A sacred place on the banks of river Ambumatī on the borders of Kurukṣetra. A bath in the river redeems one from all sins and raises one to Brahmaloka. (Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 57).

KAŚMĪRA (KAŚMĪRAKAM). A state in North India, Kaśmīra was famous during the Mahābhārata period also. Once Arjuna conquered this state (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 27). People from the state had attended Yudhiṣṭhira's Rājasūya with many articles of presentation. Śrī Kṛṣṇa once defeated its ruler. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 16). Paraśurāma also once defeated its ruler. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 70, Verse 11).

KAŚMĪRAMAṆḌALAM. A particular place in Kaśmīra where once a conference of sages was held. (Vana Parva, Chapter 203). Besides all the prominent sages of North India, distinguished persons like Nahuṣa, Yayāti, Asi and Kaśyapa attended the conference. Rivers Jhelam and Chenab flow through this place, and it is a holy centre. Those who bathe here will become like sages.

KASTŪRĪGANDHĪ. Another name for Kālī (Matsyagandhī) or Satyavatī, the mother of Vyāsa. To know how she got this name, see under Satyavatī.

KĀŚYA I. A famous King of Kāśī ; father of Ambā, Ambikā and Ambālikā. He was also called Krodhavaśa. According to Chapter 171 of Udyoga Parva, Kaśya's real name was Senābindu.

KĀŚYA II. One of the great sages who visited Bhīṣma on his bed of arrows. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 47, Verse 10).

KAŚYAPA I. Chief among the Prajāpatis.

1) Kaśyapa—Son or Grandson of Brahmā ? It is impossible to give a definite answer to this question. In Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, we see that six spiritual sons—Marīci, Aṅgiras, Atri, Pulastya, Pulaha and Kratu—were born to Brahmā. Kaśyapa was born as the son of Marīci and that all living beings in the world took their origin from Kaśyapa. According to this statement, Kaśyapa is the grandson of Brahmā. But in the 14th Sarga of Araṇyakāṇḍa in Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa there is an account of the creation of all animate and inanimate objects in this world. According to a statement in that passage, we find that Kaśyapa was the youngest brother of Marīci, Atri, Pulastya and others. This means that Kaśyapa was the son of Brahmā. Therefore there is nothing wrong in regarding him either as the son or as the grandson of Brahmā. In the Purāṇas we find references to him in both ways.

2) Original Gotra or Clan. Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 297, verse 17 says that all living beings belong to the four original Gotras — the gotra of Aṅgiras, Kaśyapa gotra, Bhṛgu gotra and Vasiṣṭha gotra and that all the other gotras came into existence subsequently.

3) Kaśyapa's wives. Kaśyapa had 21 wives who were:— Aditi, Diti, Danu, Ariṣṭā, Surasā. Khaśā, Surabhi, Vinatā, Tāmrā, Krodhavaśā, Irā, Kadrū, Muni, Pulomā, Kālakā, Natā, Danāyus, Siṁhikā, Pradhā, Viśvā, and Kapilā. Of these, the 13 wives, Aditi, Diti, Kālakā, Danāyus, Danu, Siṁhikā, Krodhā, Pradhā, Viśvā, Vinatā, Kapilā, Muni and Kadrū, were the daughters of Dakṣa.

Of these the first wife Aditi had 12 sons. These 12 sons namely Viṣṇu, Śakra, Aryamā, Dhātā, Tvaṣṭā, Pūṣā, Vivasvān, Savitā, Mitra, Varuṇa, Aṁśa and Bhaga are called Ādityas (sons of Aditi). In the sixth Manvantara these 12 Ādityas belonged to the tribe known as Tuṣitas. (The present Manvantara is the seventh one). The 33 crores of Devas came into being from the twelve Ādityas.

The Daityas were born from Kaśyapa's second wife Diti. The chief Daityas are Hiraṇyakaśipu, Hiraṇyākṣa and Siṁhikā. All the other Daityas were born from them.

The Dānavas were the children of Danu, another wife of Kaśyapa. Dvimūrdhā, Śambara, Ayomukha, Śaṅkuśiras, Kapila, Śaṅkara, Ekacakra, Mahābāhu, Tāraka, Mahābala, Svarbhānu, Vṛṣaparvā, Pulomā, and Vipracitti are the famous Dānavas. The other Dānavas were the children of the people mentioned above.

Another wife of Kaśyapa, Surabhi gave birth to Aja, Ekapād, Ahirbuddhnya, Tvaṣṭā and Rudra and also the Ekādaśa Rudras namely:—Hara, Bahurūpa, Tryambaka, Aparājita, Vṛṣākapi, Śambhu, Kapardī ,Raivata, Mṛgavyādha, Sarpa, and Kapālī. Vinatā gave birth to Garuḍa and Kadrū was the mother of the nāgas. The Purāṇas proclaim that all living beings that we see in the world today, sprang from Kaśyapa's offsprings by his different wives. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Chapter 29; Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part I, Chapters 15-21; Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapters 16 and 65 and Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 18).

4) Brahmā taught Kaśyapa cure for snake poison. The serpents (Nāgas) were born to Kadrū, one of the wives of Kaśyapa. Once Kadrū asked her children to hang down like hair from the tail of Uccaiśśravas. They refused to do so. Kadrū became angry and cursed them that they would be burnt alive at Janamejaya's Sarpa Sattra (snake-sacrifice). After the curse, the Nāgas became dangerously venomous. At this stage, Brahmā taught Kaśyapa the art of curing snake-poison to protect other creatures that might be bitten by the Nāgas. Cure of snake-bite in this world dates from that time. (M.B. Ādi Parva. Chapter 20).

5) Kaśy pa and Garuḍa. Garuḍa is a mighty son of Kaśyapa by his wife Vinatā. Vinatā made a bet with her sister Kadrū. Kadrū won the bet. Vinatā became Kadrū's maid-servant as a result of the bet. To be relieved of this bondage Vinatā's son Garuḍa had to bring Amṛta from Devaloka and give it to Kadrū and her Nāga-sons. Garuḍa agreed and flew up to Heaven to fetch Amṛta.

On the way, he visited his father Kaśyapa who was performing penance on the Gandhamādana mountain. He asked his father to give him some food, as he was very hungry. Kaśyapa told him the following story:—"Long ago a sage named Vibhāvasu lived near this place. He and his younger brother named Supratīka began to quarrel over the sharing of their father's wealth. The elder brother transformed the younger brother into an elephant by a curse and the younger brother turned the elder into a tortoise by his curse. They are still living in yonder lake as elephant and tortoise and continue like enemies. If you eat both of them, you will be strong enough to fight against the Devas and get possession of Amṛta for yourself."

On hearing this, Garuḍa went to the lake and caught the elephant and tortoise in his claws and flew up into the sky. The mountains began to tremble and a whirl-wind swept the Heavens when Garuḍa beat with his wings. He flew about here and there unable to find a convenient place to sit and enjoy his meal. On the way, his eye caught sight of a huge banyan tree spreading its branches far and wide, to a distance of 100 yojanas around it. When he perched on one of its branches with the elephant and tortoise, the branch broke and fell down. From that branch certain sages known as Bālakhilyas were hanging with their heads downwards. So, to prevent them from falling to the ground, Garuḍa lifted it in his beak and began to fly up again. Unable to find a suitable spot where he could deposit the branch with the sages, Garuḍa returned to his father again. At the request of Kaśyapa, the Bālakhilyas went to the Himālayas. He showed Garuḍa a vast, snow-clad mountain on which he could deposit the broken branch he was carrying. Garuḍa flew to that mountain and ate up the elephant and tortoise and thus gained strength to fight with the Devas for Amṛta. After that he proceeded to Heaven. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapters 29-31).

6) Other Birth of Kaśyapa. In Cākṣuṣa Manvantara, the sage Sutapas performed a penance along with his wife Pṛśni for 12,000 years. Lord Viṣṇu appeared to them and asked what boon they wished to ask. They prayed that the Lord should take birth as their son. Viṣṇu granted their prayer and was born as their son.

In the next Manvantara (the period of Vaivasvata Manu) Sutapas and Pṛśni were re-born as Kaśyapa and Aditi respectively. At that time also Mahāviṣṇu was born to Aditi as Vāmana. (See under Vāmana). In this birth, Kaśyapa had many other wives besides Aditi. Surasā was one of those wives. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

It was this Kaśyapa himself who was reborn as Vasu-deva and Aditi became Devakī. Surasā was born as Rohiṇī, another wife. There is another reason for Kaśyapa and Aditi to take birth for the third time. Once Kaśyapa had prepared to perform a Yāga. All arrangements were complete. But the sacrificial cow alone was not available. Kaśyapa solved the problem by stealing a cow from Varuṇa's cattle-shed. Aditi and Surasā concealed it in the Āśrama. Enraged at the theft of his cow, Varuṇa complained to Brahmā. A curse was pronounced by Brahmā and Varuṇa that as a punishment for stealing and hiding the cow, Kaśyapa should be reborn as a cowherd and Aditi and Surasā should be reborn as the cowherd's wives. It was by this curse that Kaśyapa, Aditi and Surasā were reborn as Vasudeva Devakī and Rohiṇī respectively. (Devī Bhāgavata, 4th Skandha).

7) Paraśurāma's gift of land to Kaśyapa. Paraśurāma performed a Yāga after exterminating all Kṣatriya Kings. At that Yāga he gifted all the lands he had conquered till then to Kaśyapa. In Mahābhārata, Araṇya Parva, Chapter 117, there is a reference to this gift.

8) Kaśyapa and Kerala. After Paraśurāma went round the world eighteen times and exterminated the Kṣatriya Kings he performed a Yāga. At that Yāga he gave the whole earth as dakṣiṇā to Kaśyapa. After that, Kaśyapa drove away Paraśurāma from the earth to the south. Taking pity on Paraśurāma, the ocean gave him the region known as "Śūrpāraka". Kaśyapa seized Śūrpāraka also from Paraśurāma and gave it to Brāhmaṇas. Paraśurāma went to the forests after it. Later on, intermixture of castes took place in this region and anarchy prevailed there. At one time, Śūrpāraka sank down into Pātāla (lower world). Kaśyapa who saw this held the earth up, brought Kṣatriyas from the north and made them rulers of the country. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 49). This "Śūrpāraka" is believed to be Kerala.

9) Other Details about Kaśyapa.

(i) Kaśyapa arrived at the place of Arjuna's birth accompanied by other sages. (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 122).

(ii) Kaśyapa flourished in Brahmā's assembly. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 11).

(iii) Once there was a dispute between Virocana, the son of Prahlāda and Sudhanvā, the son of Aṅgiras. It was Kaśyapa who settled this dispute. (See the 5th Para under the word Aṅgiras).

(iv) Once Kaśyapa went on a pilgrimage in the company of Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 85).

(v) Once Brahmā gifted the entire earth to Kaśyapa at a Yajña. Bhūmidevī (Goddess of the earth) who was distressed at it, went to Pātāla and began to lament. At that time Kaśyapa propitiated the goddess by his austere penance. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 114).

(vi) After Paraśurāma had given the entire earth to Kaśyapa, Kaśyapa drove away Paraśurāma from the earth. Paraśurāma then shot an arrow into the sea and converted that portion of the sea into land. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 70, Verses 18 and 19).

(vii) When the war between Kauravas and Pāṇḍavas was in progress, Kaśyapa approached Droṇa and wanted him to bring the battle to a close. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 190).

(viii) Kaśyapa was also present with other sages at the time of Skanda's birth. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45).

(ix) Kaśyapa once gave some pieces of advice to Purūravas. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 73).
(x) In the 8th verse of Chapter 208 of Śānti Parva, in Mahābhārata, we find that Kaśyapa had another name Ariṣṭanemi.
(xi) Kaśyapa once related to Bhīṣma, the story of Mahāviṣṇu's Varāhāvatāra. (Incarnation as Boar). (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 209, Verse 6).
(xii) Bhāṣā Bhārata says that gingelly seeds were first introduced into this world from sage Kaśyapa's body. (M. B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 10).
(xiii) Kaśyapa explained to Vṛṣādarbhi, the evil of receiving pratigraha (presents). (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 93).
(xiv) Kaśyapa once spoke to Arundhatī about the weakness of his body. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 93, Verse 65).
(xv) At another time, Agastya suspected that Kaśyapa had stolen his lotus. But Kaśyapa swore that he was innocent. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 94).
(xvi) In Bhāṣā Bhārata it is said that Kaśyapa was one of the Sapta Gurus (seven Preceptors) of Kubera. The other six Gurus were—Vasiṣṭha, Atri, Gautama, Bharadvāja, Viśvāmitra and Jamadagni. M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 150).
(xvii) In Bhāgavata we see that Kaśyapa and other sages were instrumental in bringing about the destruction of Yadu Vaṁśa. (For further details see under SĀMBA).

KAŚYAPA II. A serpent. In Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, we read that this serpent was present at the time of Arjuna's birth.

KĀŚYAPA I. (KAṆVA).

1) General. Two sages Kaśyapa and Kāśyapa are mentioned in the Purāṇas, and due to the close similarity in the names in some Purāṇas the two names are used one for the other. There is, therefore, considerable difficulty in distinguishing the one from the other and unerringly hitting upon the right person in certain contexts.

There is a very ancient sage the first cause or the original father of all living beings in the universe. He is described, in most of the Purāṇas, as the grandson of Brahmā and the son of Marīci. He was the husband of the original or first mothers of living beings, called Diti and Aditi. The interpretation that he was called Kaśyapa as he used to drink Kaśyam (liquor) is not founded on facts. No Purāṇa refers to him as a drunkard.

The sage called Kāśyapa was the foster father of Śakuntalā. The statement that he was called Kāśyapa as he was born in the dynasty of Kaśyapa is also not correct. Kaṇva was not born in the dynasty of Kaśyapa. The genealogy of Kāśyapa is as follows:

2). Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu thus: Brahmā—Atri — Candra—Budha—Purūravas—Āyus—Nahuṣa—Yayāti—Puru—Janamejaya — Prācinvān — Pravīra — Namasyu—Vītabhaya—Śuṇḍu— Bahuvidha — Saṁyāti — Rahovādī — Raudrāśva — Matināra—Prītiratha—Medhātithi—Kaṇva (Kāśyapa).

Medhātithi was Kaṇva's father. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 208, Verse 27). According to the Agni Purāṇa a son called Kaṇva was born (Kāśyapa) to Medhātithi, son of King Prītiratha of the Puru dynasty. But, nothing about the family matters of Kaṇva is mentioned therein. In the Mahābhārata itself the name Kāśyapa is often used instead of Kaṇva. From the above facts it may be understood that Kaṇva was born as a prince, and that later on, he became a sage. Moreover, the Agni Purāṇa says that Santurodha, the brother of Kaṇva's father, was the father of Duṣyanta. According to that Kāśyapa and Duṣyanta were the sons of brothers, Kāśyapa being that of the elder one. For the time being the above are the only reasonable inferences, and the truth has to be found out by further researches. But, one thing is certain according to the genealogy, that Kāśyapa was born twenty generations after Kaśyapa.

3). Kāśyapa and Takṣaka. The story is told in the 2nd Skandha of Devī Bhāgavata and in the Ādi Parva of Bhārata that Takṣaka set out to bite King Parīkṣit and Kāśyapa to cure him of Takṣaka's poison, but that Takṣaka bribed Kāśyapa off his mission to save the King. But, the story as such is unfounded. It was Kaśyapa and not Kāśyapa whom Brahmā had taught the science of the treatment and cure of poison (see under Kaśyapa) and, therefore, it should be Kaśyapa whom Takṣaka bribed.

4). Kaśyapa and Śakuntalā. See under KAṆVA.

5). Kāśyapa and Ṛṣyaśṛṅga. Father of Ṛṣyaśṛṅga was one Kāśyapa; may be Kaśyapa or Kāśyapa. The greater possibility is for Kāśyapa to be the father. (See under ṚṢYAŚṚṄGA).

6). After a Yajña Viśvakarman made a land-gift to Kāśyapa once. (See under KAṆVA).

KĀŚYAPA II. Priest of Vasudeva; this Kāśyapa lived for years as a good friend of the Pāṇḍavas. He is considered to be a very distinguished ascetic. (Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 16).

KĀŚYAPA III. Son of Sage Kaśyapa. This Kāśyapa was member of Indra's assembly. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7). He was present at the Yajña conducted by emperor Pṛthu.

KĀŚYAPA IV. An Agni, the son of Kaśyapa. Pāñcajanya was born from the five Agnis, Kāśyapa, Vasiṣṭha, Prāṇa, Aṅgiras and Cyavana, all of whom were sons of Kaśyapa. (Vana Parva, Chapter 220).

KĀŚYAPA V. A haughty Vaiśya once felled to the ground a brahmin youth called Kāśyapa by hitting him with his chariot. (See under Indra, Para 38).

KĀŚYAPA VI. Sons of Kaśyapa like Vibhāṇḍaka. Rājadharman, Viśvāvasu, Indra, Āditya and Vasu, other Devas and other living beings born in Kaśyapa's dynasty—all these are also called Kāśyapas.

KĀŚYAPADVĪPA (ISLAND). An island in the shape of a hare visible in the moon. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 55).

KĀŚYAPĪ. (Earth). The earth came to be known as Kāśyapī as it had been given as a gift to Kaśyapa by Paraśurāma.

"The whole of the earth was given to Kaśyapa and thus it came to be called Kāśyapī". (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 89).

KATHAKA. A soldier of Skanda. (Śloka 67, Chapter 45, Śalya Parva).

KATHĀSARITSĀGARA. See under BṚHATKATHĀ.

KAṬHOPANIṢAD. See under NACIKETAS.

KAṬVĀKU (KHAṬVĀKU). A son of Vaivasvata Manu. Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa states that he was an ancestor of Ikṣvāku.

In the beginning Manu, alias Vaivasvata, had a son named Kaṭvāku. He was the first of kings and he ruled the world for a long time. On the banks of the river Sarayū he constructed a city called Ayodhyā. Ayodhyā was celebrated for its beauty and wise men proclaimed that it was more beautiful than the cities of the eight guards of the universe or the city of even Brahmā, the Creator.

KĀTYĀYANA I. A grammarian who wrote a commentary on Pāṇini's grammatical work entitled Aṣṭādhyāyī. He has also written Śrauta Sūtras and a book on "Dharma Śāstra".

KĀTYĀYANA. II. Kathāsaritsāgara says that "Kātyāyana" was another name of Vararuci.

KĀTYĀYANA. III. A great sage who flourished in Indra's assembly. We see a reference to him in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 19).

KĀTYĀYANĪ. One of the two wives of Yājñavalkya. After withdrawing completely from worldly activities, Yājñavalkya asked his wives to divide his worldly assets equally between them. But Maitreyī the other wife, being of a deeply spiritual nature, Kātyāyanī herself had to undertake the burden of all the material affairs. (Bṛhadāraṇyakopaniṣad).

KAUKUHAKA. An ancient country in South India. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 60).

KAUKULIKĀ. An attendant of Skandadeva. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 15).

KAUMODAKĪ. The club of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 224, Stanza 23, that this club was given to Śrī Kṛṣṇa by Varuṇa the god of water, at the time of the burning of the forest Khāṇḍava.

KAUṆAPA. A serpent born in the family of Vāsuki. This serpent was burnt to death in the Sarpa Sattra (sacrificial fire to kill serpents) of Janamejaya. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Stanza 6).

KAUṆAPĀŚANA. A famous serpent born in the family of Kaurava. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 35, Stanza 14).

KAUṆḌINYA I. See under Mitrabheda.

KAUṆḌINYA II. A hermit who lived in the Palace of Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 16). See under Dhṛṣṭabuddhi.

KAUṆḌINYA III. A hermit. This hermit had erected his hermitage in Hastimatīsabhramatīsaṅgama and lived there. Once due to excess of rain the river flooded and his hermitage was washed away. So the hermit cursed the river. "Let the river be dried up". Then he went to the realm of Vaikuṇṭha. (Padma Purāṇa, Uttara Khaṇḍa, Chapter 145).

KAUṆIKUTSYA. A noble Brahmin. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 8, Stanza 25, that this Brahmin visited Pramadvarā who died of snake-bite.

KAURAVA(S).

1) General Information. Those who were born in the family of the famous King Kuru. Descended in the following order from Viṣṇu :— Brahmā—Atri—Candra Budha—Purūravas —Āyus —Nahuṣa —Yayāti—Pūru—Janamejaya—Prācinvān —Pravīra—Namasyu —Vītabhaya—Śuṇḍu—Bahuvidha—Saṁyāti —Rahovādī—Raudrāśva—Matināra—Santurodha —Duṣyanta—Bharata—Suhotra—Suhotā — Gala —Garda — Suketu — Bṛhatkṣetra—Hasti—Ajamīḍha—Ṛkṣa—Saṁvaraṇa — Kuru. This is the genealogy of Kuru. From Kuru the genealogy continues as follows :— Jahnu—Suratha — Vidūratha—Sārvabhauma —Jayatsena —Ravaya —Bhāvuka—Cakroddhata —Devātithi —Ṛkṣa —Bharata —Pratīca—Śantanu. Śantanu had two wives Gaṅgā and Satyavatī. Bhīṣma was born of Gaṅgā. Vyāsa was born to Satyavatī before her marriage, from the hermit Parāśara. After the marriage, from Śantanu, two sons Citrāṅgada and Vicitravīrya were born to her. A Gandharva killed Citrāṅgada. Bhīṣma brought the three daughters of the King of Kāśī, Ambā, Ambikā and Ambālikā as wives of Vicitravīrya, but on the way knowing that Ambā was in love with the King of Śālva, she was sent back. Ambikā and Ambālikā became the wives of Vicitravīrya. Shortly Vicitravīrya also died. With a view to continue the royal family, Satyavatī sent for Vyāsa, so that he might beget children of Ambikā and Ambālikā. At the time of coition Ambīkā closed her eyes to avoid seeing the uncouth face of Vyāsa. So she got as son Dhṛtarāṣṭra who was blind from birth. Seeing the ugly figure of Vyāsa Ambālikā turned pale and so the son born to her was pale in colour. He was called Pāṇḍu. From Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Duryodhana and his brothers were born and from Pāṇḍu were born the Pāṇḍavas. All members born in the family of Kuru were known as Kauravas. But later, the sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra came to be known by the name 'Kauravas'.

2) The origin of Kauravas. (Duryodhana and his brothers). Dhṛtarāṣṭra married Gāndhārī the daughter of Subala the King of Gāndhāra. Once Vyāsa reached the palace weary with hunger and thirst. Gāndhārī gave Vyāsa food and drink. Vyāsa was pleased with her and told her that she might ask for any boon. She said that she wanted to get hundred sons from Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Vyāsa granted the boon. Gāndhārī became pregnant. Even after two years she did not deliver. She heard that Kuntī, the wife of Pāṇḍu had given birth to a child. Gāndhārī became sad. She crushed her womb and gave birth to a lump of flesh. Understanding this, Vyāsa came there and cutting the lump into hundred and one pieces kept them in ghee-pots. Advising Gāndhārī to keep the pots in secret, Vyāsa went to the Himālayas. The pots were broken at the proper time and hundred sons and a daughter came out. Besides them Dhṛtarāṣṭra had another son named Yuyutsu by a Vaiśya woman.

The hundred and one sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra beginning with Duryodhana are the Kauravas.

3) Names of the Kauravas.

Apramāthin, Dīrgharoman, Suvīryavān, Dīrghabāhu, Suvarmā, Kāñcanadhvaja, Kuṇḍāśin, Virajas, and Yuyutsu. Duśśalā (daughter). (Mahābhārata. Ādi Parva, Chapters 67 and 117). (For further details about the Kauravas see under Duryodhana and Duśśāsana).

KAURAVYA. A noble serpent which was born of Airāvata. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 218, Stanza 18).

KAUSALA (KAUŚALA). Skandadeva once changed the shape of his face to that of the face of goat. Then he got the name Kausala. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 228, Stanza 4).

KAUSALYĀ I. A queen of King Daśaratha and mother of Śrī Rāma. Daśaratha had three wives Kausalyā, Kaikeyī and Sumitrā. Kausalyā gave birth to Śrī Rāma, Kaikeyī to Bharata and Sumitrā to Lakṣmaṇa and Śatrughna. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Sarga 16).

KAUSALYĀ II. Queen of the King of Kāśī. Ambā, Ambikā, and Ambālikā were daughters of this Kausalyā. Of these daughters Ambālikā also was called Kausalyā. After the death of Pāṇḍu she went to the forest with Ambikā. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 129).

KAUSALYĀ III. The queen of a Yādava King. She was the mother of the Yādava named Keśin. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

KAUSALYĀ IV. Wife of Puru, the son of King Yayāti. Janamejaya was born to Puru of his wife Kausalyā. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Stanza 11).

KAUSALYĀ V. The queen of Janaka, the King of Mithilā. Once King Janaka decided to sell his palace and everything he possessed and to go abegging for alms. But his brave wife Kausalyā convinced her husband by her reasonable arguments that he should not venture to do so. Thus she prevented her husband from carrying out his decision.

KAUSALYA. A teacher, who belonged to the line of disciples of Vyāsa. Jaimini was the disciple of Vyāsa. Sumantu was the son of Jaimini. A son named Sutvā, was born to Sumantu. Sukarman was the son of Sutvā. Sukarman had two disciples Hiraṇyanābha. and Pauṣpiñji. Kausalya was another name of Hiraṇyanābha. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśā 3, Chapter 6).

KAUŚĀMBĪ. Four sons, Kuśāmba, Kuśanābha, Asūrtarajas and Vasu were born to Kuśa, the son of Brahmā, of his wife the princess of Vidarbha. According to the order of their father each prince built a city and began to rule over it. Kauśāmbī is the city built by Kuśāmba. Kuśanābha built the city of Mahodayapura; Asūrtarajas, the city of Dharmāraṇya and Vasu the city of Girivraja. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Sarga 32). It is mentioned in Kathāsaritsāgara that the city of Kauśāmbī stood in the middle of the kingdom of Vatsa and that Udayana born of the family of the Pāṇḍavas had once ruled this country with Kauśāmbī as his capital.

KAUŚIKA I. (Viśvāmitra). See under Viśvāmitra.

KAUŚIKA II. A hermit who lived in the palace of Yudhiṣṭhira. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 83, that while going to Hastināpura, Śrī Kṛṣṇa met this hermit on the way.

KAUŚIKA III. A minister of Jarāsandha. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Stanza 22, that he had another name Haṁsa also.

KAUŚIKA IV. While the Pāṇḍavas were leading forest life, the hermit Mārkaṇḍeya told the story of a noble Brahmin named Kauśika, to Dharmaputra. Once this Brahmin sat under a tree and performed penance. A small crane which sat on a branch of the tree passed excreta on the head of the Brahmin. He became angry and looked at the bird. Instantly the bird was reduced to ashes. The Brahmin sincerely repented and went to the countryside to live on alms. Once he reached the house of a Brahmin. The wife of the Brahmin came to the door and requested him to wait a bit. Immediately her husband arrived, and she, being engaged in looking after the needs of her husband forgot the Brahmin Kauśika, who became angry and spoke cruel words to her. She argued that the noblest deed was looking after one's husband and that it was not meet and right for Brahmins to get angry. She advised Kauśika to go to Mithilāpurī and to receive advice from the famous Dharmavyādha. Kauśika repented his rash nature, went to Dharmavyādha and received advice from him. He returned home and lived peacefully with his parents. (M.B. Vana Parva, ten chapters from 206).

Though a man of veracity, he finally had to go to hell, for the following reason. While he was engaged in penance in the forest some thieves came by that way with some stolen goods. The owners of the goods were chasing the thieves. Kauśika told them the way by which the thieves had gone. So at the end Kauśika was thrown into hell. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 69).

KAUŚIKA V. A King of the Puru dynasty. Kapila was his father and Gṛtsapati was his brother. The four castes Brāhmaṇa, Kṣatriya, Vaiśya and Śūdra originated from Gṛtsapati. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

KAUŚIKA VI. A hermit. This ancient hermit lived in Kurukṣetra. His sons Svasṛpa, Krodhana, Hiṁsra, Piśuna, Kavi, Vāgduṣṭa, and Pitṛvarttī lived with hermit Garga for learning under him. Their names indicated their character. Their father died. The sons were in poverty. At this time rain ceased altogether. Garga asked his disciples to take his milch cow to the forest for grazing. Owing to hunger the brothers decided to kill and eat the cow. But the youngest said: "If you are bent on killing the cow, we had better make use of it as an offering to the Manes, and no sin will visit us."

All agreed to this and Pitṛvarttī killed the cow and began the sacrifice. Two elder brothers were employed in worshipping the gods and three were detailed to give offerings to the manes. One was asked to be the guest. Pitṛvarttī was the sacrificer. Remembering the ancestors with reverence he began the sacrifice in accordance with the rites. Thus the seven hermits ate the cow and told Garga that the cow was caught by a tiger.

In due course the seven of them died, and took rebirth as rude low-caste people in Dāśapura. Because of the sacrifice and offerings to the Manes they had the remembrance of their previous birth. So they feared god and took fast and vow at a holy bath and in the presence of a multitude cast off their lives and were born again as animals in Kālañjara hills. Because of their abstinence due to knowledge they cast off their lives by Prapatana (jumping down from the top of the mountain) and were born again as Ruddy geese, in the Mānasasaras when their names were Sumanas, Kusuma, Vasu, Citradarśī, Sudarśī, Jñātā and Jñānapāraga—names conforming to their character. The seven brothers became pure and sinless by their union with God the Supreme Spirit. But three of them fell out of the union because of their desire. They saw the pleasurable life led by Aṇuha the King of Pāñcāla who was immensely wealthy with many beautiful wives. At the sight of this, one of the geese—the Brahmin Pitṛvartti, who performed the sacrifice of offering to the Manes because of his love for his father—wished to become a king. Seeing the two wealthy ministers who led luxurious lives, two of the ruddy geese wanted to become ministers. Accordingly Pitṛvartti was born as Brahmadatta the son of Vaibhrāja and the other two as sons of ministers with names Puṇḍarīka and Subālaka. Brahmadatta was anointed as King of Pāñcāla in the great city of Kāmpilya. That King was mighty, loving his father well, always desirous of giving offerings to Manes and harmonious with God, having the ability to read the hearts of every living being. He married Sannati the daughter of Sudeva. This woman in her previous birth was the cow of Garga. As this cow was used as offering to the Manes she got rebirth as a religious-minded woman and became the queen of Brahmadatta, who ruled over the kingdom well for a long time.

Once the King and the queen were walking in the garden when they saw two ants which were quarrelling with each other. They were husband and wife. After a time the quarrel ended and they grew more loving than before and the she-ant pressed closely against her husband. Brahmadatta hearing their conversation stood smiling. He could understand the language of every living being because of the merits of his previous births. When the King smiled his wife asked him for the reason. He described to his wife the quarrel of the ant-couple. The queen did not believe his words. She thought that the King had been making fun of her. She asked him how he learned the language of birds and beasts. But the King could not give an answer and he became thoughtful. The remaining four of the ruddy geese took rebirth as the sons of a poor Brahmin in the same city of Kāmpilya. They had the remembrance of previous births. Their names were Dhṛtimān, Sarvadarśī, Vidyācandra and Tapodhika, names befitting their character. They decided to perform severe penance to attain Supreme bliss, and were about to get away from the house when their father, the poor Brahmin cried bitterly, being helpless. They taught their father the following poem and advised him to recite the poem before the King the next morning, in order to get plenty of wealth.

"Noble Brahmins in Kurukṣetra
The seven foresters in Dāśapura
Deer in Kālañjara and in Mānasa
Ruddy geese, the same now are men."

Brahmadatta who was not able to give answer to the question of his wife, was about to go out from the palace for a walk with his wife and ministers, when the old brahmin made his appearance and recited the poem taught by his sons, to the King. When the King heard the stanza he remembered the previous births and fainted and fell down. The two ministers, Subālaka son of Bābhravya the author of the science of love and Puṇḍarīka son of Pāñcāla the author of the science of medicine and treatment, also remembered about their previous births and fell down with grief. The three of them lamented about their fall from the union with the Supreme Spirit. Brahmadatta gave that old Brahmin plenty of wealth and villages and sent him away contented. After anointing his son Viṣvaksena as King, Brahmadatta and his retinue went to Mānasasaras for penance. For a while they lived in the forest engaged in penance and then cast off their lives and entered the world of Supreme bliss. (Padma Purāṇa, Part 3, Chapter 10).

KAUŚIKA VII. A King. This king became a cock at night. His wife Viśālā was filled with grief at this transfiguration of her husband in the night. She told her grief to the hermit Gālava who told the queen about the previous birth of her husband as follows :— "In the previous birth he used to eat cocks to get strength. Knowing this Tāmracūḍa the king of fowls cursed him. "You shall become a cock during nights." That is why your husband has become a cock."
According to the advice of the hermit the King began to worship Lord Śiva and he was liberated from the curse. (Skanda Purāṇa).

KAUŚIKĀ. (GOMATĪ). A river. The hermitage of Viśvāmitra stood on the bank of this river. The modern name of river Kauśikā is Kosī. The river Kosī flows through Bihar. Those who bathe in this river will obtain remission of sins. See under Gomatī. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 84).

KAUŚIKĀCĀRYA. The king Ākṛti. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 21, that this King ruled over Saurāṣṭra and was known also by the name Kauśikācārya.

KAUŚIKAKUṆḌA. A holy place. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 142 that Viśvāmitra got his attainments in this place.

KAUŚIKĀŚRAMA. A holy place. It was at this place that Ambā, the daughter of King of Kāśī performed a severe penance. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 156, Stanza 27).

KAUŚIKYARUṆĀSAṄGAMA. A holy place. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 84 that if a man fasts in this place, the confluence of Kauśikī and Aruṇā rivers he will be absolved of all his sins.

KAUSTUBHA. A brilliant precious stone. It is mentioned in Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 3; Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa Bālakāṇḍa Sarga 45, Stanza 39 and Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva that this precious stone floated up at the time of the churning of the sea of Milk. This jewel which originated from the ghee in the sea of Milk, was worn on the breast by Viṣṇu.
"This divine jewel called Kaustubha came up in the middle of ghee and stayed in the breast of Viṣṇu, spreading its rays everywhere." (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 18, Stanza 37).

KAUTHUMI. Son of a Brahmin named Hiraṇyanābha. Once this Brahmin youth went to the hermitage of King Janaka and entered into a controversy with the Brahmins there. In the argument Kauthumi became angry and killed a Brahmin. From that day he became a leper. The sin of Brahmahatyā (murder of Brahmin) also followed him. Finally according to the advice of his father he worshipped the sun God, with Śrāvyasaṁjñakasūkta (a spell or incantation) and by the blessing of the Sun God he got deliverance from the sin of Brahmahatyā and the disease of leprosy. (Bhaviṣya Purāṇa, Brāhma Parva).

KAUṬILYA. See under Cāṇakya.

KAUTSA. A noble Brahmin scholar. He was present at the sarpa-sattra (sacrificial fire to kill serpents) of Janamejaya. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 53, Stanza 6).

KAUTSYA (KAUTSA). A hermit who was the disciple of Varatantu. When he had completed his education he asked his teacher what gift he desired. The teacher said that he wanted fourteen crores of gold coins as gift. Kautsya approached the emperor Raghu. The emperor had just finished a sacrifice called Viśvajit and had emptied his treasury by giving away all the wealth he had as alms. Only pots made of wood were left as his wealth. When the emperor heard about the need of Kautsya he decided to conquer the capital city of Kubera. That night Kubera filled the treasury of Raghu by a shower of gold. The emperor Raghu gave Kautsya fourteen crores of gold coins. (Raghuvaṁśa).

KAVACA. A sage in the assembly of Indra. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7). He was one of the sages of the western part. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 208, Verse 30).

KAVACĪ. One of the sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 103). In Mahābhārata, Karṇa Parva, Chapter 84, it is said that he was killed by Bhīmasena.

KĀVERĪ. A holy river in South India. Famous sacred places like Śrīraṅga and Kumbhakoṇa are on its banks. The Devī of the river lives in Varuṇa's assembly worshipping him. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 20). The Skanda Purāṇa has the following story as to how Kāverī came down to earth :

Once Agastya propitiated Śiva at Kailāsa and sought the boon of some water for him to found a sacred place on earth. At the same time Kāverī also was worshipping Śiva. Śiva filled Agastya's bowl with Kāverī water. Agastya, on his way back from Kailāsa cursed the Rākṣasa called Krauñca and kicked the Vindhya mountain down. (See under Agastya). After overcoming various difficulties Agastya at last reached South India. He sat in meditation with the bowl of Kāverī water before him, and then, at the request of Indra, Gaṇapati, in the guise of a crow came and sat on the brink of the bowl and upset it. The water in the bowl flowed as a river, and that river is the present Kāverī. (Asurakāṇḍa, Skanda Purāṇa).

KAVI. I. A son of Vaivasvata Manu. Vivasvān was the son of Kaśyapa and Aditi. Vaivasvata Manu was the son of Vivasvān. Manu had sixteen sons who were—Manu, Yama, Yamī, Aśvinīkumāras, Revanta, Sudyumna, Ikṣvāku, Nṛga, Śaryāti, Diṣta, Dhṛṣta, Karūṣa, Nariṣyanta, Nābhāga, Pṛṣadhra and Kavi.

KAVI II. There is a reference to a sage named Kavi who was the son of the sage Bhṛgu, in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 42,. He was among the sages who stole the lotus of Agastya. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 32).

KAVI III. An agni who was the fifth son of Bṛhaspati, is named Kavi. This agni is situated in the sea in the form of Baḍavāgni. This agni has two other names also—Udāha and Ūrddhvabhāk. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 219, Verse 20).

KAVI IV. In Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Verse 132, Chapter 85, we find that three persons, namely, Kavi, Bhṛgu and Aṅgiras took their birth from the sacrificial fire at the famous Yāga of Brahmā. Of them Brahmā made Kavi his own son. This Kavi had eight sons known as the Varuṇas. One of them was named Kavi and another was named Kāvya.

KAVI V. Ṛgveda, 1st Maṇḍala, 17th Anuvāka. 116th Sūkta refers to a blind sage named Kavi.

KAVIRĀJA. A Sanskrit poet who lived in India in the 12th Century A.D. His chief works are "Rāghavapāṇḍavīya" and "Pārijātaharaṇa". His real name was Mādhavabhaṭṭa.

KAVIṢA. A sage. There was a person named Kaviṣa among the sages who came to visit Śrī Rāma when he returned after his life in the forest. The sages who came there from the western country were, Vṛṣaṅgu, Kaviṣa, Dhaumya, Raudreya, Nārada, Vāmadeva, Saubhari, Aṣṭāvakra, Śuka, Bhṛgu, Lomaśa, and Maudgalya. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

KĀVYA. Son of Kavi, one of the Prajāpatis. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 85). Also, a synonym of Śukra.

KĀVYA (M). Agni Purāṇa, Chapters 390 to 400 contain a discussion on poetry, which is the basis for literary criticism in India. The above discussion in Agni Purāṇa, comprehends the forms and features of poetry, rasa (sentiment), style, the art of acting and the drama, and other matters related to poetry and art.

KĀVYAMĀTĀ. Mother of Śukra, the preceptor of the Daityas.[1] Kāvyamātā possessed extraordinary powers of penance. In the Devī Bhāgavata the following story is given; how she cursed Viṣṇu and how she made Viṣṇu and Indra powerless.

Once a fierce war was fought by the Devas and the Asuras in which the latter got defeated, and they sought the help of Śukrācārya. But, as the Devas enjoyed the support of Viṣṇu, Śukra could not do anything for the asuras, and he therefore advised them to get on somehow or other for some time. After that Śukra went to Kailāsa and performed penance, hanging head downwards, for a thousand years to secure rare and exceptional mantras. During this period the Devas again attacked the Asuras, who ran up to Kāvyamātā for succour, and she, by one glance, sent the Devas to long sleep. She reduced Viṣṇu and Indra also to a state of paralysis. Then Viṣṇu meditated upon the Sudarśana Cakra, which arrived immediately and with the Cakra he cut off Kāvyamātā's head. Sage Bhṛgu then appeared on the scene and brought back Kāvyamātā to life, and she, in furious rage cursed that Viṣṇu should take many births. As a result of the curse Mahāviṣṇu had to incarnate himself on earth many times. (Devī Bhāgavata, 4th Skandha).

KAVYAVĀHA (S). A group of Pitṛs. The Devī Bhāgavata, Skandhas 11 and 15 state that this group of Pitṛs were born from the drops of sweat which came out of the bodies of Dakṣa and others when they were fascinated by the charm of Sandhyā, the spiritual daughter of Brahmā.

KAYĀDHŪ. Wife of Hiraṇyakaśipu. Prahlāda was born to her.

KĀYAŚODHANATĪRTHA. A holy place in Kurukṣetra. According to Mahābhārata, Vana Parva,

1 Śukra is also known as Kāvya. Certain Purāṇas claim Śukra as the son of Bhṛgu, while certain others refer to him as the son of Kavi son of Bhṛgu. Pulomā was Bhṛgu's wife. But, the Purāṇas call the mother of Śukra Kāvyamātā. No mention is made about the wife of Kavi the son of Bhṛgu. Pulomā and Kāvyamātā are different persons. Therefore, Śukra might be the son of Bhṛgu by another wife, or he might be the son of Kavi.

Chapter 86, by taking a bath at this place the body would be purified.

KĀYAVYA. A Caṇḍāla. He was born to a Caṇḍāla woman as the son of a Kṣatriya. But the Caṇḍālas who were impressed by Kāyavya's moral conduct, made him the headman of the village. He taught others that all people should honour Brāhmaṇas and love their country. His political creed was that those who prospered by the ruin of a country were just like the worms living on a dead body. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 135).

KEDĀRA. A holy place in the interior of Kurukṣetra. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, that those who bathe in this holy Bath would obtain the fruits of good actions. One of the twelve Liṅgas consecrated in important places, is in Kedāra.

KEKARALOHITA. A great serpent which once took sage Cyavana to Pātāla. Cyavana, after worshipping Śiva at Nakuleśvara tīrtha got into river Narmadā to take his bath when the nāga called Kekaralohita caught hold of him, dragged him and bit him. As the sage meditated upon Viṣṇu the poison did not affect him. The serpent released him from Pātāla as he was unaffected by poison. Cyavana went to the palace of Prahlāda accompanied by nāga damsels. On the request of Prahlāda Cyavana described to him the holy places on earth, and without any delay Prahlāda came to earth for hunting during which sojourn on earth he visited Naimiṣāraṇya. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 8).

KEKAYA. The Mahābhārata mentions another Kekaya, a King of the solar dynasty. He wedded two Mālava princesses from the elder of whom were born Kīcaka and Upakīcaka, and from the younger was born Sudeṣṇā, also called Kaikeyī. This Sudeṣṇā married Mātsya, the Virāṭa King. (Virāṭa Parva, Southern text, Chapter 16).

KEKAYA(M).

1) General. A Kingdom in ancient India. Kaikeyī, one of Daśaratha's wives, was a daughter of a Kekaya King.

2) Origin. The country got the name 'Kekaya' as it was ruled by King Kekaya. His genealogy is as follows. Descended from Viṣṇu thus :—Brahmā—Atri—Candra—Budha—Purūravas—Āyus—Nahuṣa — Yayāti — Anudruhyu—Sabhānara—Kālanara— Sṛñjaya — Uśīnara — Śibi—Kekaya. Śibi had four sons called Bhadra, Suvīra, Kekaya and Vṛṣādarpa. (Bhāgavata 9th Skandha).

Other details. (1) The King and the people of Kekaya were called the Kekayas.

(2) Five heroic Kekaya princes met with their death in fighting Droṇa. (Strī Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 25).

(3) Two Kekaya Princes, Vinda and Anuvinda fought on the Kaurava side. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 13).

KERAKA. People of an ancient country in South India. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhāparva, Chapter 31 that Sahadeva the son of Mādrī conquered the Kerakas and Kerala.

KERALA.

1) General information. A small country lying in the south-west corner of India. From the Purāṇas it could be understood that this country lying to the south of Gokarṇa upto Cape Comorin and to the west of Western Ghats had a very ancient history and civilization of its own.

2) Origin of Kerala. There are two statements, slightly different from each other, in the Purāṇas, about the origin of Kerala.

(1) For performing the funeral ceremony of the sons of Sagara whose ashes were lying in Pātāla (Nether world), Bhagīratha performed penance and brought the heavenly river Gaṅgā to the earth. (See under Gaṅgā). The river fell in North India and flowed in torrents to the sea and the surrounding regions were submerged in water. Among the places submerged, there was the important holy place and Bath of Gokarṇa also, lying on the west coast of India. Those hermits who lived in the vicinity of the temple at Gokarṇa, escaped from the flood and went to Mahendragiri and informed Paraśurāma of the calamity of the flood. Paraśurāma went with them to the sea-shore. Varuṇa did not make his appearance. The angry Paraśurāma stood in deep meditation for a little while. The weapons came to his hands. Varuṇa was filled with fear and he instantly appeared before Paraśurāma, who asked him to release the land swallowed by the sea. Varuṇa agreed. Paraśurāma sent his bow and arrow back to the sky. Then he took a winnowing basket (Śūrpa) and threw it at the sea. The sea retreated from the place up to the spot where the winnowing basket fell, and the portion of land including Gokarṇa which had been swallowed by sea was recovered. This land is called Kerala, which is known by the name 'Śūrpāraka' also. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapters 98 and 99).

(2) Paraśurāma went round the world eighteen times and killed all the Kṣatriya Kings. After that he performed the sacrifice of Aśvamedha (horse sacrifice). In the sacrifice he gave all the lands as alms to Brahmins. Kaśyapa received all the lands for the Brahmins. After that he requested Paraśurāma to vacate the land. Accordingly Paraśurāma created new land by shooting an arrow at the sea, for his own use. "At the words of Kaśyapa, he made the sea retreat by shooting an arrow, thereby creating dry land." This land was Kerala. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 70).

3) Kerala and Pātāla (Nether world). The ancient sages of the Purāṇas have grouped the worlds into three, the Svarga (heaven), Bhūmi (the earth) and the Pātāla (the nether world). The three worlds taken as a whole were divided into fourteen worlds. It does not appear that this grouping was merely imaginary. A keen observation of the Purāṇas would lead one to infer that the Himālayan plateau was considered as Devaloka-Svarga (heaven), the planes between the Himālaya and the Vindhya as Bhūloka (the earth) and the regions to the south of the Vindhya as Pātāla (the nether world), by the ancient people of India. The seven worlds of Pātāla such as Atala, Vitala, Sutala, Talātala, Mahātala, Rasātala and Pātāla might have been seven countries in this region. The following description which occurs in Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 8, would substantiate this inference.

"Pātāla is below the earth. This Pātāla is a group of seven worlds one below the other, with names, Atala, Vitala, Sutala, Talātala, Rasātala and Mahātala. In all those worlds, there are several beautiful cities and houses, palaces and castles, parks, gardens, open temples and halls, natural arbours etc. made by Maya. There live the Asuras, the Dānavas (a class of Asuras-demons) the nāgas (serpents) and others, with their families, with happiness and comfort. Chirping birds, pigeons, parrots, docile parrots etc. always play there with their inseparable mates. Trees bearing sweet fruits, plants covered with fragrant flowers, arbours with creepers growing thick, beautiful houses floored with white marble, and so many other things giving pleasure and comfort are seen there in plenty. In these things the Pātāla surpasses heaven. Daityas, Dānavas and the Nāgas (the Asuras and the serpents) are the dwellers of these worlds. They lead a happy and pleasant life with their families enjoying all sorts of comfort and luxury."

Pātāla, one of the seven divisions of the world is described as follows :

"This is the region of the Nāgas (the serpents). At the root-place of this region there is a particular place having an area of thirty thousand yojanas. Viṣṇu Kalā who has the attribute of 'tāmasa' (darkness) lives there under the name 'Ananta'. The real Ananta or Ādiśeṣa is the radiant embodiment of this Kalā. The daughters of the Nāga Kings are of fair complexion and very beautiful, with clean body. They use perfumeries such as sandalwood, aloewood, saffron, etc."

In this description, the words Daityas, Nāgas, Ananta, Sandalwood, aloewood etc. and the mention of natural beauty should be paid particular attention to. From the Rāmāyaṇa we can understand that the Āryas referred to the Drāviḍas as Asuras, Rākṣasas (Giants) etc. History says that the Nāgas were the early inhabitants of Kerala. The ancient word 'Ananta' denotes Trivandrum (Tiru-Ananta-puram). The temple of Śrī Padmanābha at Trivandrum answers to this description. The perfumeries such as sandalwood, aloewood (cidar) etc. are the wealth of Kerala. On the whole the description of Pātāla fits well with that of Kerala. So it is not wrong to infer that the description of Pātāla in the Purāṇas is entirely about Kerala in all its aspects.

4) The Primitiveness of Kerala. From the portions of Purāṇas given below it could be ascertained that Kerala had an independence of its own from the very ancient days.

(1) Among the Kings who attended the Svayaṁvara (marriage) of Śaśikalā, the daughter of the King of Kāśī, such as, the King of Kuru, King of Mādra, King of Sindhu, King of Pāñcāla, Kings of Karṇāṭaka, Cola and Vidarbha, there was the King of Kerala also. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 3).

(2) When describing the various places in the Southern part of Bhārata, names such as Dramiḍa, Kerala, Mūṣika, Karṇāṭaka etc. occur in the Mahābhārata. So it is to be understood that when Vyāsa wrote Bhārata, there was the kingdom of Kerala and that it was separate from the country of Drāviḍa. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9).

(3) "Kārtavīryārjuna took his majestic seat in the midst of Cola, Kerala, Pāṇḍya and other Kings of the countries under the sea, who were standing round him to pay homage to him." (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 54).

(4) It is mentioned in Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 277, that a King named Gāndhāra was born in the dynasty of Turvasu the brother of Yadu, and that from Gāndhāra were born the powerful families of the Gāndhāras the Keralas, the Colas, the Pāṇḍyas and the Kolas.

(5) In Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 175, it is mentioned that the people of Kerala were considered as barbarians by the North Indians.

(6) In Bhāgavata, Skandha 10, it is mentioned that the Kings of Cola, Pāṇḍya and Kerala, from South India, had reached the capital city of Vidarbha to take part in the Svayaṁvara (marriage) of Rukmiṇī.

(7) Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 254, Stanza 15, that in his conquest of the countries, Karṇa had conquered Kerala also.

(8) It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 31, that Sahadeva, one of the Pāṇḍavas, conquered the Keralas and the Kerakas. It may be noted that the Kerakas are different from Keralas.

(9) Vālmīki mentions the countries which could be seen by the monkeys who were sent to the South by Sugrīva to search for Sītā.

Nadīṁ Godāvarīṁ caiva
Sarvamevānupaśyata /
Tathaivāndhrān ca Pauṇḍrān ca
Colān Pāṇḍyān ca Keralān. //

"You could see the river Godāvarī and beyond it the countries of Āndhra, Pauṇḍra, Cola, Pāṇḍya and Kerala."

This is a proof of the primitiveness of Kerala.

(10) The King of Kerala had given Yudhiṣṭhira, as presents, sandalwood, pearls, Lapis Lazuli etc. (M.B. Dākṣiṇātyapāṭha, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 51).

In several other Purāṇas also, mention about Kerala occurs.

5) The ancient administration of Kerala. Parimelazhakar, a Saṅga poet who was a great expounder of "Tirukkural", has stated that from the beginning of the world the three kingdoms, Cera, Cola and Pāṇḍya had existed. Though there is a bit of exaggeration in this statement, there are enough proofs to say that a long time before the birth of Christ, Kerala was under a systematic rule. In 'Tolkāppiyam' the first grammatical work in Tamil mention is made about the administration of Kerala. Megasthenes, a traveller of 4th century B.C. has stated about the rule of Kerala :

There were five councils called the Pañcamahāsabhās (the five great councils) to help the Cera Kings. It is stated that these councils were formed by the King Utiyan Cera of the Tṛkkaṇā fort. Besides these five councils there was an advisory Committee, of which, the priest of the King, the Chief Minister, Chief of the spies and the Chief Revenue officer (Kāviṭi) were members. For convenience of administration the country was divided into tarakkūṭṭas (groups of houses—villages) and and Nāṭṭukkūṭṭas (Districts—group of villages). Taras (villages) were ruled by four elders (Kāraṇavas). Four villages formed a Nālpāḍu (group) of four. Four Nālpādus formed a Kazhaka (a division of the country with a chief temple within it) and four Kazhakas formed a Peruṁkazhaka (greater Kazhaka). Peruṁkazhaka was also known as Tṛkkala. The assembly hall of tṛkkūṭṭa is called Koṭṭil. This hall was erected generally beside the temple. The chief officer of the temple was the chairman of the tṛkkūṭṭa (assembly of the people). When a tṛkkūṭṭa is assembled, sixtyfour elders of the "taras", the "accas" (officers) of Kazhakas, the sixtyfour Taṇḍāns and sixteen Nālpādies had to be present. The Nālpādies were the chiefs of four taras. The accas, who were the Presidents, had to come clad in variegated silk, with waist-band of long cloth and wearing a small sword (Churikā). Till recently the Kazhakas of Aṇḍallūr, Rāmpallya, Kurvantaṭṭa, Turutti etc., and so many Nālpādus and taras and the elders thereof had been retaining and enjoying titles and distinctions of rank.

The Namboothiris (Brahmins) entered Kerala before the beginning of the Malayāla Era. With that, changes took place in the administration of Kerala. Certain edicts help us to ascertain the changes that took place in the administration. The edict of Vāzhappally of the 9th century by Rājaśekhara is an important one in this connection. This emperor of the Ceras who is considered to be a contemporary of Śrī Śaṅkarācārya had the title beginning with "Rājādhirāja Parameśvara Bhaṭṭāraka". (T.A.S. Vol. II, P. 8-14). The subject dealt with in the edict is the 'daily worship and settlement', in the temple of Tiruvoṭṭiyūr. It is stated in this edict that the people of Vāzhappally and the representatives of 18 Nādus or divisions had met in the temple and taken certain decisions.

The next one is the Kottayam Copper edicts known as the 'Tarisa Church Edicts.' This is a document granting the Tarisa Church in Quilon, the adjoining lands and some other institutions. This edict was granted by Ayyanaṭi tiruvaṭikal the ruler of the Nāṭu (division), for the Cera emperor. It is mentioned as "including the Temple Officer Vijayarākatevar", which means that Vijayarāka had been present on the occasion of granting the edict, as the representative of Emperor Sthāṇuravi. The Nāduvāzhis (local chiefs or rulers of division) were not empowered to take decision in very important matters. Titles, rights distinctions of rank etc. were granted by a council of Chief minister, Officers, Punnattalappati and Polakkūṭippati (two high officials). Vijayarākatevar, the Koil adhikāri, was the representative of the emperor at Mahodayapura. The supervising officials of temples were generally called the 'Koil adhikāri'. Normally the younger brothers of the Kings were appointed in this rank. These temple-officers were helped in their duties by the Division-rulers, people of the locality and the inferior officers in the temple. When the empire of Kulaśekhara declined, the family of Perumpaḍappu got this position of 'Koil adhikāri'. So the title 'Koil adhikāri' is added to the names of the princes of Cochin.

Another one is the Mampally Edicts. This is a deed of granting some lands free to the temple of Airūr, in the name of Ādiccan Umayamma of Tṛkkalayapuram, by Veṇāṭṭu Śrī Vallabhankota in M.E. 149. Even such an unimportant thing as the granting of free lands, had to be effected with the permission of Cera kings and their councils. (T.A.S. Vol IV, Page 9).

From these edicts it is clear that the administration of the temples was carried out by representatives elected by people. For each village temple there was an administrative council. These councils were controlled by Nāduvāzhis and Deśavāzhis (Divisional and Sub Divisional rulers who had Nair infantry (big or small as the case may be) at their disposal. The administrative assembly met either in the open hall at the main gate of the temple or on the stage for performances. The rights and authorities were in the hands of the general assembly of the people called Nāṭṭukkūṭṭa and the council of the temple officials. When the Namboothiris became powerful they became members of the council. With this change the Kings and Koil adhikāris became puppets in the hands of the Namboothiris. In the Rāmeśvaram edict of M.E. 278 it is mentioned that King Rāmavarma Kulaśekhara was punished with retribution for his 'hatred' of the Āryas. Finally the Nambūthiris (Malayāla Brahmins) became the landlords of the country.

6) The people af ancient Kerala. It is assumed that the ancient inhabitants of Kerala were Drāviḍas. But some historians have mentioned about the 'Proto Dravidians and the Pre Dravidians. The hill tribes such as Kāṇikkārs, Mutuvas, Mala Veṭas, Pulayas, Kuravas, Nāyāṭis, Malayarayas, Malayaṭis, Malappaṇḍāras, Malayūrālis, Mutuvans Pullāṭis etc. are said to have belonged to this group. They worshipped several things such as stone, banyan tree, elenji tree, Asclapia tree, Nīm tree Terminatia Bellarica, Borassus flabelliformis, cassia fistula, Ghosts, thunder, rain, the sun etc. They worshipped good ghosts for welfare, and bad ghosts to avoid misfortunes. They had images of Māṭa, Cātta, Cāvu, Maruta, Pettucāvu, Arukula, Preta, Vazhipiṇakki, Āyiramilli, Parakkuṭṭi, Kāttujāti, Malavāzhi, Māriṇi, Nāyāṭṭu Pe Maṅkāṭṭamma, Muniyappa, Veṭṭakkāran and so on. They worshipped in small bushes, open grounds or houses. They knew black magic such as cursing, giving poison in meals etc. These uncivilized people were very particular about cleanliness on the occasions of delivery, menstruation, death etc. They pleased bad ghosts by offering liquor, flesh and blood, and good ghosts with milk, ghee, honey etc. They buried dead bodies with a little raw rice meant for food at the time of entering the other world. They had collective worship. They sang songs at the time of worship using some primitive musical instruments. For each village there were elders who were priests and rulers. They erected stone huts in the burial place and buried the dead inside these in graves. These graves were called 'Pāṇḍukuzhy'. The Ūrālis, continue the custom of posting two stones at either end of the grave. The custom of burial prevailed more than cremation.

Nair, Nambūtiri, Īzhava, Christians, Muslims and such other castes came to Kerala from other places later.

7) Ibn Batuta and Kerala. Ibn Batuta who was born in the town of Ṭānjīr in Morocco in Africa in A.D. 1304 had travelled all over the Eastern countries then known. He had started from his house on a Haj Pilgrimage at the age of 22. He returned home only after 29 years, having travelled all over the known countries. He has written a book in Arabic about his travels of 29 years. One third of this thick volume is devoted for descriptions of his travels in India alone. Its name is 'Tuh Phattunannār'. He passed over the Hindu Kush in A.D. 1333 and entered India. In the midst of his travels throughout the length and breadth of India, he came to Kerala also. He says as follows about Kerala in his book:—

"Malabar is the country of Pepper. This country's length from Gokarṇa to Quilon is two months' journey. All the roads in this country are rendered cool and shady by asclapia trees. On the roads at intervals of half an hour there are inns. Near the inn there will be a well and a person to give water. The non-Muslims are given water in pots. But water is poured into the hands of Muslims. Rice is served in plantain leaf and sauces are also served in the same leaf. Uncultivated and uninhabited land is not to be seen. Each house is situated in the centre of a cultivated area. The people of this country do not use animals to carry goods. Travelling is on foot. Only Kings use horses. There is a conveyance called mañcal (Palanquin). Slaves are used as Palanquin bearers. I have seen roads which could be used so fearlessly, only in Kerala and, no where else in the world. Capital punishment is given to one who steals even a coconut. The people of this country respect Muslims.

There are twelve kings in Malabar. None of them are Muslims. Many of them are powerful having an army of more than fifty-thousand soldiers. But there are no quarrels or clashes among them. The powerful do not have the desire to subjugate the less powerful. The inheritants of these kings are not sons, but nephews (sons of sisters). Besides the people of Kerala I have seen only the Muslims of the country of Salam on the banks of the Niger in Africa who have adopted the system of inheritance in the female line."

Ibn Batuta has given some minor descriptions about the towns of Maṅgalāpuram, Ezhumala, Kaṇṇūr Calicut, Pāliyam, Crāṅganūr and Quilon.

KESARA. A Mountain in Śākadvīpa (Śāka island). The air on this mountain was always filled with fragrance. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 23).

KESARĪ. A forest King who lived in the Mahā Meru. While Kesarī was living in the Mahāmeru, Brahmā cursed a celestial maid named Mānagarvā and changed her into a female monkey. She became the wife of Kesarī, under the name Añjanā. For a long time the couple had no children. Añjaña worshipped Vāyu Bhagavān (Wind-God) for a child.

Once during this period the gods and hermits went to Parama Śiva and requested him to beget a son to help Mahāviṣṇu who was about to incarnate as Śrī Rāma to kill Rāvaṇa. Śiva and Pārvatī instantly took the form of monkeys and entered the forest for play. They having not returned for a long time, the gods asked the wind-god to go in search of them. The wind god came in the form of a great storm and shook the whole of the forest. Still they did not come out. Pārvatī who was pregnant was ashamed to come out. With Śiva she got on an Aśoka tree and sat there. Seeing that tree alone standing motionless in the big storm Vāyu god approached the tree and looked up. Śiva and Pārvatī appeared before Vāyu. Pārvatī refused to take the foetus in the form of monkey to Kailāsa. As Śiva had instructed, Pārvatī gave the child in the womb to the wind-god. It was at this time that Añjanā had prayed to Vāyu for a child. Vāyu gave that child to Añjanā, who gave birth to it. That child was Hanūmān. Thus Hanūmān got the names, Añjanāputra (son of Añjanā), Vāyuputra (son of Vāyu), Kesariputra (Son of Kesarī) etc. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 417).

KEŚAVA. See under Kṛṣṇa.

KEŚAYANTRĪ. An attendant of Skandadeva. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46).

KEŚĪ I.

1). General information. An Asura. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 65 that forty Asuras or Dānavas were born to Kaśyapa, the son of Marīci, and the grandson of Brahmā, by his wife Danu, and that Keśī was one of them.

2). Keśī and Indra. Once a war broke out between the Devas and the Asuras. Disasters befell the Devas. Daityasenā and Devasenā, the daughters of Prajāpati were about to be carried away by Keśī. Daityasenā agreed to accompany him of her own accord, but Devasenā cried aloud. Hearing her cry Devendra reached the spot. A terrible fight ensued and finally the defeated Keśī ran away. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 223).

3). Keśī and Viṣṇu. Once there was a fight which lasted for thirteen days, between Keśī and Viṣṇu. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 134, Stanza 20).

KEŚĪ II. A follower of Kaṁsa. This Asura, on the instruction of Kaṁsa, went to Ambāḍi (Gokula) taking the form of a horse, to kill Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Śrī Kṛṣṇa killed Keśī. It is seen in the Bhāgavata (Malayālam) that Śrī Kṛṣṇa got the name Keśava because he had killed Keśī. (Skandha 10, Keśivadha).

KEŚĪ III. In Bhāgavata there is another Keśī who was the son of Vasudeva.

"Pauravī Rohiṇī Bhadrā
Madirā Rocanā Ilā /
Devakīpramukhā āsan
Patnya Ānakadundubheḥ."

Pauravī, Rohiṇī, Bhadrā, Madirā, Rocanā, Ilā and Devakī were the wives of Vasudeva.

From this statement made in Bhāgavata, Skandha 9, Chapter 24, it is clear that Vasudeva had a number of wives. Kausalyā, who was one of them, was the mother of Keśī. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9, Chapter 24, Stanza 48).

KEŚINĪ I. A celestial woman. In Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva Chapter 65 it is stated that the twelve celestial maids, Alambuṣā, Miśrakeśī, Vidyutparṇā, Tilottamā, Aruṇā, Rakṣitā, Rambhā, Manoramā, Keśinī, Suratā, Surajā and Supriyā were born to Kaśyapa of his wife Pradhā.

KEŚINĪ II. The wife of Ajamīḍha, a King of the Puru dynasty. The three sons Jahnu, Vraja and Rūpiṇa were born to Ajamīḍha of his wife Keśinī. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

KEŚINĪ III. A maid of Damayantī. When Nala reached Kuṇḍinapurī, as Bāhuka the charioteer of Ṛtuparṇa, Keśinī approached Bāhuka at the request of Damayantī and by various tests found out that Bāhuka was Nala. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapters 74 and 75).

KEŚINĪ IV. A servant of Pārvatī. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 231, Stanza 48 that once Pārvatī with her servant Keśinī praised Śiva.

KEŚINĪ V. Once there arose a quarrel between Sudhanvā, the son of Aṅgiras, and Virocana the son of Prahlāda, because both wanted to marry the same girl named Keśinī. Sudhanvā was a Brahmin whereas Virocana was an Asura, who argued that Asura was nobler than Brahmin and Sudhanvā said that it was the other way. Both wagered their lives and accepted Prahlāda as their judge. The decision of Prahlāda was that the Brahmin was the nobler of the two. Because Prahlāda said the truth Sudhanvā did not kill Virocana. But Virocana had to wash the lfeet of Sudhanvā in the presence of Keśinī, feet Sudhanvā married Keśinī in the presence of Virocana. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 35).

KEŚINĪ. VI. A wife of King Sagara. This Keśinī was the daughter of the King of Vidarbha. The son Asamañjasa was born to Sagara of Keśinī. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Sarga 38).

KETAKĪ. (A flower). [Pandarnus odoratissimus] Though Ketakī is a flower which had been worn on Śiva's head, it is not worshipped for the following reason.

In Satyayuga Mahāviṣṇu performed intense penance on the Śveta island for the attainment of eternal happiness. Brahmā also performed penance at a beautiful place for the annihilation of desires. During their tapas Viṣṇu and Brahmā, for a rest, left their seats and walked about in the forest when they met each other. There arose a controversy between them about their respective greatness when Śiva, in the form of a Liṅga, appeared between the two contestants and told them that he, who first found out his (Śiva's) head or feet was greater than the other. Accordingly Viṣṇu went down and Brahmā went up on a tour of enquiry.

Though Viṣṇu went down deeper and deeper for a long time to find out Śiva's feet he failed in the attempt and so returned and sat at the place whence he started for the search. Brahmā went up a very long distance when he saw a Ketakī flower falling down from the sky. He took the flower in his hands and went to Viṣṇu and told him that he had found out Śiva's head and showed the Ketakī flower as proof of his discovery claiming that it was taken from Śiva's head. But Viṣṇu did not believe Brahmā and asked the Ketakī flower to bear witness to Brahmā's claim. The flower gave false evidence in favour of Brahmā. Śiva got angry at this false evidence of Ketakī and cursed it. The Ketakī lost its place among the best flowers from that day onwards.

KETU I. (KETUMĀN). A Dānava. He was the son of Kaśyapa (grandson of Brahmā and son of Marīci) by his wife Danu. This Asura, who exists in the shape of a planet had thirtythree brothers, i.e. Vipracitti, Śambara, Namuci, Pulomā, Asilomā, Keśī, Durjaya, Ayaśśiras, Aśvaśiras, Aśva, Śaṅku, Mahābala, Garga, Amūrdhan, Vegavān, Mānavān, Svarbhānu, Aśvapati, Vṛṣaparvan, Ajaka, Aśvagrīva, Sūkṣma, Tuhuṇḍa, Ekapāt, Ekacakra, Virūpākṣa, Harāhara, Nikumbha, Kapaṭa, Śarabha, Śalabha, Sūrya and Candramas. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 65).

But Ketu maintained closer relationship with Rāhu, a step-brother of his, being the son of Kaśyapa by another wife called Siṁhikā. Rāhu and Ketu are even today considered as inauspicious planets. Rāhu wears a half-moon and Ketu holds in his hands a sword and lamp. Amitaujas was Ketu reborn. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 11).

KETU II. A great sage of ancient India. He attained salvation by self-study. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 7).

KETU III. A synonym of Śiva. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 38).

KETU IV. A King born in Bharata's dynasty. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

KETU V. (DHŪMAKETU). The following story is told in Viṣṇudharmottara Purāṇa about the birth of Dhūmaketu.

Noting that the population on earth had increased abnormally Brahmā created a damsel called Mṛtyu and asked her to kill people. At this command of Brahmā she began crying, and from her tear drops various kinds of diseases originated at the sight of which she took to penance. Then Brahmā appeared and blessed her saying that no one would die because of her at which she heaved a great sigh of relief from which was born Ketu or Dhūmaketu.

KETUMĀLA I. The grandson of Priyavrata, the son of Manu. Agnīdhra, a son of Priyavrata married Pūrvacitti. Nine sons were born to Agnīdhra of his wife Pūrvacitti. Ketumāla was one of them. His brothers were Nābhi, Kimpuruṣa, Hari, Ilāvṛta, Ramyaka, Hiraṇmaya. Kuru and Bhadrāśva.

In old age Agnīdhra divided his kingdom among his sons. Later, the portion given to Ketumāla came to be known as Ketumāla. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 5).

KETUMĀLA II. A holy place in Jambūdvīpa. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 89).

KETUMĀLA III. (See under Ketumāla I). Ketumāla is the ninth division of Jambūdvīpa. The people of this part of the earth are equal to gods (Devas). The women are very beautiful. In Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva it is stated that Arjuna conquered this land. Ketumāla is situated on the east of Mount Meru. In Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 6, there is the description of Ketumāla.

KETUMĀN I. Ketu the Asura (demon). (See under Ketu I).

KETUMĀN II. A King who was a luminary in the council of Yudhiṣṭhira. He was a warrior on the side of the Kauravas and a friend of Śrutāyudha, the King of Kaliṅga. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 54, Stanza 77, that Bhīmasena killed this warrior in the battle of Bhārata.

KETUMĀN III. In the Mahābhārata, another Ketumān who had fought on the side of Pāṇḍavas, is stated. Dhṛtarāṣṭra had praised the valour of this warrior. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 10, Stanza 44).

KETUMĀN IV. A palace in Dvārakā. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Dākṣiṇātya-pāṭha, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 38, that Sudattā, the wife of Śrī Kṛṣṇa lived in this palace.

KETUMĀN V. Antapāla (the guard of the boundary) of the west. At the beginning of the creation of the world Brahmā had appointed as guards of the boundaries, Sudhanvan in the east, Śaṅkhapāda in the south, Ketumān in the West and Hiraṇyaromaka in the North. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 19).

KETUMĀN VI. A King of the Puru dynasty. (See under Vaṁśāvalī).

KETUMĀN VII. In Bhāgavata we see a Ketumān who was the son of Dhanvantari, who gave Āyurveda to the world.

"Who was the deva who made the Āyurveda in days of old ? His son was Ketumān whose son was Bhīmaratha." (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

KETUMĀN VIII. Son of Ekalavya. In Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva it is mentioned that this King of the forest tribes fought on the side of Duryodhana and was killed by Bhīma.

KETUMATĪ. Mother of Prahasta, a minister of Rāvaṇa. Ketumatī had two sisters Sundarī and Vasudhā. These three were daughters of a Gandharva woman.

Giant Heti, the son of Brahmā married Bhayā and Vidyutkeśa was born to the couple. Sukeśa was born to Vidyutkeśa by his wife Sālakaṭaṅkā. Three sons Mālyavān, Sumālī and Mālī were born to Sukeśa by his wife Daivavatī. Sundarī, Ketumatī and Vasudhā the three beautiful sisters mentioned above, were married by the giants Mālyavān, Sumālī and Mālī respectively. Thus Ketumatī became the wife of Sumālī. To Sumālī and Ketumatī were born ten sons, Prahasta, Akampana, Vikaṭa, Kālakāmukha, Dhūmrākṣa, Daṇḍa, Supārśva, Saṁhrāda, Prakvāta and Bhāsakarṇa and four daughters Vekā, Puṣpotkaṭā, Kaikasī and Kumbhīnasī. Most of the sons were ministers of Rāvaṇa. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

KETUŚṚṄGA. A King of ancient India. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 1).

KETUVARMAN. A prince of the country of Trigarta. He was the youngest brother of Sūryavarmā, the King of Trigarta. When Arjuna led the sacrificial horse of the horse-sacrifice of the Pāṇḍavas, Ketuvarman accompanied Arjuna as a helper. (M.B. Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 74).

KEVALA. A city of ancient India. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 254, Stanzas 10 and 11 that Karṇa conquered this city.

KHA. This syllable has the meanings 'empty' and 'organ of sense'. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).

KHAḌGA. A warrior of Skandadeva. (Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 67).

KHAḌGABĀHU. See under Duśśāsana II.

KHAḌGĪ. See under Kalki.

KHAGA I. A nāga (serpent) born in the family of Kaśyapa. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 103).

KHAGA II. A synonym of Śiva. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 17, Stanza 67).

KHAGAMA. A Brāhmaṇa. In Mahābhārata, there is a story which describes how this Brahmin Khagama changed another Brahmin to a serpent by cursing him. The Brahmin Khagama and Sahasrapāt were friends. Once Sahasrapāt made a snake of grass and terrified Khagama at Agnihotra (Burnt offering in the holy fire) Khagama instantly cursed Sahasrapāt to become a serpent. Sahasrapāt requested for liberation from the curse. Khagama said that he would resume his original form on the day he saw Ruru the son of Pramati. From that day onwards Sahasrapāt roamed about in several countries in the form of a serpent.

Once Pramadvarā the wife of Ruru, died by snake-bite. Ruru cried over the death of his wife for a long time. According to the advice of a messenger from the Devas Ruru gave half of his life-time to his wife and she came to life again. But Ruru felt a bitter hatred against serpents and began their extermination. Once he met with Sahasrapāt. Instantly at the sight of Ruru, Sahasrapāt obtained his original form. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 11).

KHAGAṆA. A King born in the family of Śrī Rāma. He was the son of Vajranābha and the father of Vidhṛti. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

KHAGODARA. See under Kahoḍa.

KHALĪ I. A synonym of Mahāviṣṇu. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 17, Stanza 43).

KHALĪ II. An Asura dynasty. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 155, Stanza 22, that Vasiṣṭha once destroyed an Asura dynasty called Khalī, with his effulgence.

KHALU. A river of ancient India. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 28).

KHANAKA. A messenger sent by Vidura, secretly to the Pāṇḍavas who were living in the wax-house. Vidura sent a message through Khanaka to the effect that Duryodhana had decided to set fire to the wax-house employing Purocana to do it on the 14th night of the dark lunar fortnight. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 147).

KHAṆḌAKHAṆḌĀ. A female attendant of Skanda. In Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 20, mention is made about this woman.

KHAṆḌAPARAŚU. Śiva. A story occurs in Mahābhārata stating how Śiva got this name. The famous Dakṣa-yāga (sacrifice performed by Dakṣa) was performed at a time when the Nara Nārāyaṇas were engaged in penance in Badaryāśrama. Dakṣa did not invite his son-in-law Śiva. The angry Śiva sent his trident against Dakṣa. The trident destroyed the sacrifice of Dakṣa and then flew against the breast of Nārāyaṇa who was sitting in penance in Badaryāśrama. By the power of the trident the hair of Nārāyaṇa became of muñja (a grass) colour. From that day onwards Nārāyaṇa came to be known by the name Muñjakeśa. By a sound "hum", the hermit Nārāyaṇa deviated the trident, which reached the hands of Śiva, who got angry and approached Nārāyaṇa to kill him. Nara, who was close by took an arrow and reciting spells over it, released it to kill Śiva. Immediately the arrow changed to an axe. Śiva broke the axe. After this the axe became the weapon of Śiva. In Mahābhārata Śānti Parva, Chapter 49, Stanza 33, it is mentioned that this axe was given to Paraśurāma the disciple of Śiva. Thenceforward Śiva got the name Khaṇḍaparaśu. (Paraśu means axe). (Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 343. Stanzas 150-59, 167).

KHĀṆḌAVADĀHA.

1) Introduction. Long ago a King named Śvetakī began to perform a sacrifice of duration of 100 years. Many Brahmins took part in the sacrifice as priests conducting the rituals and ceremonies. These Brahmin priests began to depart after a few years turning blind due to the smoke coming out of the sacrificial fire. Thus the sacrifice was stopped for want of priests. Śvetakī was grieved at this and performed penance to Śiva for getting a priest. Śiva appeared before him and pointed out hermit Durvāsas as the priest. Śvetakī recommenced the sacrifice and under the supervision of Durvāsas the sacrifice was completed. But Fire god caught dysentery due to the continuous eating of oblations offered in the sacrificial fire for a long period. His face became pale, body became lean, and he had no taste for food. At last Fire-God went to Brahmā and complained about his disease. Brahmā said that in the forest of Khāṇḍava there lived so many creatures which were enemies of the devas (gods) and that by eating their fat the disease of Agni would be cured. Accordingly Agni came to the Khāṇḍava forest.

The serpent Takṣaka, a friend of Indra, lived in this forest with his wife and children. Indra knew that Agni had come to burn the Khāṇḍava forest and resolved to save Takṣaka at any cost. When Agni (fire) began to catch the forest, Indra had already begun rain. So it was not possible for Agni to consume the forest. Agni tried seven times to consume the forest and in all these seven attempts he failed. Agni again approached Brahmā, who told him that the Nara-Nārāyaṇas would take birth in the earth as Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna and that at that time it would be possible for fire to consume the forest Khāṇḍava.

2) Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna in the forest of Khāṇḍava. While the Pāṇḍavas were living in Indraprastha, once the hot season became so unbearable that Arjuna took Kṛṣṇa with him and went to the forest of Khāṇḍava. While they were playing in the river Yamunā with their wives Agni came there in the guise of an old Bráhmin and told them all that had happened and requested their help for eating the Khāṇḍava forest. Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna promised to help him in this affair.

3) Preparation of weapons. For the time being Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna were not having sufficient weapons. Agni (fire-god) thought of Varuṇa (the God of water) who instantly appeared. At the request of Agni Varuṇa gave Arjuna the famous bow 'Candradhanus' (Gāṇḍīva), a quiver which would never become empty of arrows and a chariot having a flag with the sign of monkey and to Śrī Kṛṣṇa the weapon of the discus. Varuṇa gave four white horses also with gold chains round their necks for drawing the chariot of Arjuna. With these weapons Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna got ready to help Agni. Śrī Kṛṣṇa became the charioteer of Arjuna.

4) Burning the forest. When Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna stood ready Agni began to consume the forest. Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna guarded the boundaries of the forest so that the inmates of the forest might not escape. The living creatures ran hither and thither finding no way to escape. Many died of suffocation. At that time the hermits who were dwellers of that forest ran to Indra and informed him of the great calamity. Indra instantly got ready to fight and save the forest. He covered the whole of the sky with clouds and a heavy rain was showered on the forest. Arjuna created a covering of arrows like an umbrella over the fire and saved him from the rain.

5) The family of Takṣaka. At this particular time Takṣaka had been away at Kurukṣetra. Aśvasena the son of Takṣaka was writhing with heat and pain. Seeing this his mother (wife of Takṣaka) swallowed him from tail to head. Then she ran to the boundary to throw the child into the outer region. Seeing this Arjuna got angry and cut at the head of Aśvasena. But at the nick of time Indra sent a storm and made Arjuna swoon and Aśvasena was saved. So Arjuna became furious and began to cut down every creature he saw. Arjuna, Kṛṣṇa and Agni together cursed Aśvasena that he would get refuge nowhere.

Aśvasena kept up his hatred of Arjuna. In the Bhārata battle, Aśvasena got on an arrow sent by Karṇa at Arjuna and knocked off the crown of Arjuna and returned. But due to the curse Karṇa did not receive him back.

6) Deadly fight. The serpents and hawks confronted Arjuna, who cut off their heads. Kṛṣṇa killed the Asuras with the weapon discus. Indra came to the battle-field riding on his elephant Airāvata. Kāla (Time), Kubera, Skanda, Aśvinīdevas and all the other Devas (gods), and Asuras (demons) helped Indra in the fight. But Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna came out victorious.

7) The advent of Maya. Meanwhile Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna called Indra and told him who they were and informed him that Takṣaka had gone to Kurukṣetra. Hearing this Indra blessed Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna and retreated from the battlefield. Agni began to consume the forest more vigorously than before. Because of the unbearable heat, Maya, the architect of the Asuras, came out of the house of Takṣaka and ran to Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna and entreated them to save him. Accordingly Arjuna saved him from the fire.

8) The story of four birds which escaped from the fire. In that forest a hermit named Mandapāla had erected his hermitage and lived there performing penance. He died and went to the world of ancestors. But there, the hermit did not attain any fruit of the penance he had performed. The hermit asked the Devas for the reason. They replied that it was because the hermit had no sons. The hermit came to the forest again to marry and beget sons. Mandapāla married a bird called Jaritā. Four sons named Jaritāri, Sārisṛkka, Stambamitra and Droṇa, were born to them. After this Mandapāla left Jaritā and her sons and went after another woman Lapitā.

Feathers were not yet grown on the body of Jaritā's four sons. The burning of the forest began before it. Jaritā and her sons were in a sorry plight. The mother could fly. But she did not think of leaving her young ones in danger. She decided to die in the fire folding the young ones under her wings. But her sons did not agree to it. They entreated her to fly away. Thus moments of tears passed by. At last Jaritā told them crying, "There is the hole of a rat closeby. The rat had been taken away by a kite. I will take you to that hole and close it. Then I shall go away and return when the fire is abated."

But the young ones did not agree to this. They loved to be killed by fire, rather than to be killed by rat. Finally at their request Jaritā flew away.

Mandapāla thought of his sons. He separated from Lapitā, and came to Agni and requested him to save his sons and Jaritā. Agni consumed the forest and neared the birds. The young birds requested Agni to save them. Agni Deva saved them. Mandapāla and Jaritā returned. That family lived for a long time in joy and happiness and finally attained the world of the gods. Agni returned to heaven after the burning of the forest of Khāṇḍava. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapters 233 to 346).

KHĀṆḌAVAPRASTHA. See under Indraprastha.

KHĀṆḌAVĀYANA. Paraśurāma gave all the countries conquered by him to Kaśyapa. Along with the lands he gave a golden dais also. The group of hermits called Khāṇḍavāyanas cut the dais into pieces and shared them with the permission of Kaśyapa. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 117, Stanza 13).

KHĀṆḌIKYA. A Kṣatriya King. Keśidhvaja was the son of his paternal uncle. Both had learned well the ways of union with the divine life. Khāṇḍikya had become an expert in Karmayoga (the path of action) for becoming one with the divine life whereas Keśidhvaja tried to achieve oneness with divine life by Jñāna

Yoga (the path of knowledge or spiritual attainment). Each desired to subdue the other. Consequently Khāṇḍikya lost his kingdom and had to live in a forest with his priest and minister. (Bhāgavata, Skandhas 9 and 13).

Keśidhvaja who tried the path of knowledge to attain Absolution performed several sacrifices for that purpose and cut himself asunder from the bonds of action. Once, while he was performing a sacrifice, a tiger came to the place of sacrifice and killed the sacrificial cow. Then Keśidhvaja asked the priests who were conducting the sacrifice, what the atonement was for the death of the sacrificial cow. The priests sent the King to the hermit Kaśeru, who sent the King to the hermit Bhṛgu. Hermit Bhṛgu in his turn sent the King to the hermit Śunaka. But the matter did not end there. The hermit Śunaka could not dictate the atonement for the death of the sacrificial cow. So he sent the King to Khāṇḍikya who was living in the forest. The moment Khāṇḍikya saw Keśidhvaja he stood ready to kill him. But Keśidhvaja revealed everything to Khāṇḍikya, When he understood the situation Khāṇḍikya told him with sincerity the rites given in the Śāstras (Vedāṅgas) to atone the death of the sacrificial cow.

Keśidhvaja returned and completed the sacrifice. The one item of 'gift to the teacher' alone remained. So Keśīdhvaja came to the forest again. Khāṇḍikya raised the sword to cut him. Keśidhvaja said that he had come to give Gurudakṣiṇā to the teacher. Khāṇḍikya repented his rashness and requested Keśidhvaja to tell him the ways of cutting himself asunder from the bonds of sorrow and grief. Keśidhvaja advised him the ways to obtain eternal bliss. (Nārada Purāṇa).

KHANĪNETRA. The eldest son of Vivaṁśa, a King of the solar dynasty. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata. Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 4, that this King was driven away from the country as he harassed the people.

KHARA I. A giant (Rākṣasa). Khara and Atikāya were the rebirths of Madhu and Kaiṭabha. For details see under Kaiṭabha and Atikāya.

1) Birth and genealogy. Mahābhārata mentions as follows about the birth of this giant:—Viśravas was born from Pulastya the son of Brahmā. Kubera was born from Viśravas. Kubera ruled over Laṅkā. Viśravas who had no one to help him once looked with anger at Kubera, who, understanding the wish of his father gave him three giantesses named Puṣpotkaṭā, Rākā and Mālinī as attendants. They attended on him faithfully and Viśravas was pleased with them. To Viśravas two sons named Rāvaṇa and Kumbhakarṇa were born by Puṣpot'aṭā, Vibhīṣaṇa was born by Mālinī and the twin sister and brother Śūrpaṇakhā and Khara were born by Rākā. By and by Khara became a famous archer. Rāvaṇa, Kumbhakarṇa and Vibhīṣaṇa performed penance to obtain boons and Khara and Śūrpaṇakhā stayed with them to serve them. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 275).

2) Other brothers. Khara had two other brothers Dūṣaṇa and Triśiras. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

3) The slaughter of Khara. While Śrī Rāma, Sītā and Lakṣmaṇa were staying in the forest of Daṇḍakāraṇya Śūrpaṇakhā the sister of Khara came there once and tried to get one of the brothers Śrī Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa as her husband. Lakṣmaṇa cut off her nose and ears. She went to Khara, Dūṣaṇa and Triśiras and lamented before them. The three of them immediately started with an army of fourteen thousand giants and fought with Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa, who killed every one of them. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇyakāṇḍa, Sargas 19 to 30).

KHARA II. Another giant who helped Rāvaṇa in the battle between Rāma and Rāvaṇa.

In Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 285, Stanza 2, it is said that "Parvaṇa, Patana, Jambha, Khara, Krodhavaśa, Hari, Praruja, Aruja, Praghasa and others fought with Rāma.

KHARAJAṄGHĀ. A female attendant of Skanda. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 22).

KHARAKARMĪ. A female attendant of Skanda. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 26).

KHARĪ. A female attendant of Skanda. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 22).

KHAŚĀ. A wife of Kaśyapa Prajāpati. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa Aṁśa I, Chapter 15).

KHASA(M). A country in ancient India. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 41).

KHĀŚĪRA. A place situated on the North East corner of Ancient India. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 68).

KHAṬVĀṄGA.

1) General Information. A King of the Ikṣvāku dynasty, known by the name Dilīpa also. Bhāgavata Skandha 9, states that Khaṭvāṅga was the son of the grandson of Kalmāṣapāda. Aśmaka was the son of Kalmāṣapāda, Mūlaka the son of Aśmaka and Khaṭvāṅga the son of Mūlaka.

Khaṭvāṅga who was a royal hermit once pleased God and understood how long he would live. From that day onwards he left all the work of administration in the hands of ministers and spent the remaining days in devotion and meditation. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 2).

2) Particular details. In Mahābhārata it is mentioned that Khaṭvāṅga was the son of the woman called Ilibilā and that he had the name Dilīpa also. Khaṭvāṅga was one of the sixteen famous Kings of Bhārata. The sixteen Kings were Marutta, Suhotra, Paurava, Śibi, Śrī Rāma, Bhagīratha, Khaṭvāṅga, (Dilīpa) Māndhātā, Yayāti, Ambarīṣa, Śaśabindu, Gaya, Rantideva, Bharata, Pṛthu and Paraśurāma. Khaṭvāṅga performed one hundred sacrifices. At the time of sacrifice he made golden roads. Even Indra came to the sacrifice. The Devas blessed Khaṭvāṅga on that day. See under Dilīpa. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 61).

KHILA. There is an appendix to Mahābhārata called Khila. This Khila is known as Harivaṁśa also. This portion too was written by Vyāsa.

KHYĀTĀ. An attendant of Skanda. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 20).

KHYĀTI I. A daughter of Prajāpati Dakṣa. The hermit Bhṛgu married her. A daughter named Lakṣmī and two sons named Dhātā and Vidhātā were born to Bhṛgu by Khyāti. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 20).

KHYĀTI II. Daughter of Kuru, who was born of the family of Dhruva. Six sons, Aṅga, Sumanas, Svāti, Kratu, Aṅgiras, and Śibi were born to Kuru by his wife Āgneyī. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa I, Chapter 13). Khyāti was a daughter born to them.

KĪCAKA. Brother-in-law of Mātsya, king of Virāṭa and son of Kekaya, king of the Sūtas,

1)General information. To Kekaya, king of the Sūtas was born of queen Mālavī, Kīcaka and other 105 sons younger to him called Upa-Kīcakas. Their only sister was called Sudeṣṇā. (Bhārata, Southern text, Page 1898). Kīcaka and Upa-Kīcakas took their birth from an aspect of Bāṇa, the eldest of the Asuras known as the Kālakeyas. (See Bhārata, Page 1893). Mātsya, the Virāṭa king wedded Sudeṣṇā; and from that day onwards, the brothers too lived in the Virāṭa palace. Kīcaka was the chieftain of Virāṭa's army, and he had, many a time, defeated in war King Suśarman of Trigarta. (Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 30).

2) Kīcaka and Pāñcālī. During their life incognito, the Pāṇḍavas lived in the Virāṭa palace after taking up various jobs. Pāñcālī, under the assumed name Mālinī, served Sudeṣṇā and her daughter Uttarā as their chaperon. Kīcaka fell in love with Pāñcālī at first sight. But, Pāñcālī resisted all his advances. Then, he sought the help of his sister Sudeṣṇā to bring round Pāñcālī to him somehow. Sudeṣṇā asked Kīcaka to be ready on the New Moon day with liquor and rice and promised to send Mālinī (Pāñcālī) to him. Ordered by Sudeṣṇā, she went to Kīcaka with his plate of food much against her will. Kīcaka caught hold of her, but she ran when the former caught her by the hair, felled her on the floor and kicked her. A Rākṣasa, who was deputed for Pāñcālī's security appeared on the scene in a trice and felled Kīcaka.

3). Kīcaka's Death. The very same night with tears in her eyes, Pāñcālī told Bhīma all about the indecent behaviour. He asked Pāñcālī to invite Kīcaka to a secret meeting at a specified place the next night, and promised her that he would remain concealed there and kill Kīcaka. Accordingly Bhīma concealed himself the next night in the dancing hall and, as requested by Pāñcālī, Kīcaka came to the hall at midnight to spend a few hours with Pāñcālī. Bhīma was lying there on a cot, and Kīcaka, mistaking him for Pāñcālī kissed him. Bhīma caught him in his iron grips and crushed him to death. The next morning, it was the fate of Kīcaka's brothers to lament over his death. The story also was spread that Kīcaka was killed by some Gandharva, the husband of Pāñcālī.

The Upa-Kīcakas removed the dead body of their brother to the burning ghat. Proclaiming that Pāñcālī, who was responsible for the death of their brother would also be burnt to death on the same pyre, the Upa-Kīcakas forcibly took her with them. Hearing the heart-rending cries of Pāñcālī Bhīma rushed to the spot and killed all the Upa-Kīcakas and saved Pāñcālī from death. In the presence of the Virāṭa king the cremation of Kīcaka and the Upa-Kīcakas took place. (Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 13 et seq).

KĪKAṬA. A King born in the dynasty of Priyavrata, son of Manu. He was one of the nineteen sons of King Bharata, the other eighteen being Kuśavarman, Ilāvarta, Brahmāvarta, Āryāvarta, Malaya, Bhadraketu, Sena, Indraspṛk, Vidarbha, Kapi, Hari, Antarīkṣa, Prabuddha, Pippalāyana, Āvirhotra, Dramiḍa, Camasa and Karabhājana. (Bhāgavata, 5th Skandha).

KĪKAṬA (M). The country ruled by King Kīkaṭa. The following story is told in Devī Bhāgavata as to how an ass in this kingdom attained heaven.

There was once in Kīkaṭa a merchant who had an ass to carry his merchandise. Once the merchant was returning home from Bhadrācala with his ass loaded with bundles of costly Rudrākṣas. The old ass fell down dead on the way, the weight of the Rudrākṣa bundles having been too much for it, and immediately it assumed the form of Śiva and went to Kailāsa. Even if a man does not know what he is carrying, if he carries sacred things he will certainly attain salvation, like the ass that attained salvation in this case. (Devī Bhāgavata, 11th Skandha).

KILI (PARROT).

1) Origin. About the origin of Kilis (parrots) the following is stated in Canto 14, Araṇya Kāṇḍa of the Rāmāyaṇa.

Kaśyapa, the grandson of Brahmā and son of Marīci married the eight daughters of Dakṣaprajāpati, one of them being called Tāmrā. Tāmrā had five daughters called Krauñcī, Bhāsī, Śyenī, Dhṛtarāṣṭrī and Śukī. Śukas or Kilis (parrots) are the offsprings of Śukī.

2) Parrots acquire talking faculty. Lord Śiva agreed to beget a son to kill Tārakāsura, at the request of the Devas. The coitus between Śiva and Pārvatī for the purpose did not end even after a hundred years. Due to the pressure of the process the whole world shook, and when the world appeared to get destroyed the Devas asked Agnideva to persuade Śiva to stop. But, afraid of approaching Śiva Agni ran off and hid himself in the ocean. The Devas followed him, and animals in the water which were burning with the heat of Agni, told the Devas that Agni was hiding in the sea. But, Agni cursed them all to dumbness, and leaving the ocean hid himself on mount Mandara. The parrots revealed this secret, when Agni cursed them also and made their tongues fold inwards. The Devas and the parrots requested for redemption from the curse. Redemption was granted thus : "Though the tongue be turned inwards your sound will be melodious. Just like the voice of a child your (parrots') sound also will be sweet and wonderful."

From that day onwards parrots began talking and singing. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Lāvāṇakalambaka, Taraṅga 6 and Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 85).

KIMPUNĀ. A river in Devaloka. It worships Varuṇa in his assembly. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 20).

KIMPURUṢA.

1) General. A King called Agnīdhra was born in the dynasty of Priyavrata, son of Manu. He became lord of the Jambū island, and married an apsarā woman named Pūrvacitti. To them were born nine sons called Nābhi, Kimpuruṣa, Hari, Ilāvṛta, Ramyaka, Hiraṇmaya, Kalva, Bhadrāśva and Ketumāla. Agnīdhra partitioned the kingdom among the nine sons. The land Kimpuruṣa ruled over was known as Kimpuruṣa or Kimpuruṣavarṣa. It lay to the south of Hemakūṭa mountain. It was here that Hanūmān spent his last days worshipping Śrī Rāma.

"The son of the wind God (Hanūmān) lives in the country called Kimpuruṣavarṣa in the worship of Śrī Rāma." (Bhāgavata, 5th Skandha).

According to the Sabhā Parva (Chapter 23, Verses 1,2) Kimpuruṣavarṣa guarded by the sons of Druma is situated to the north of the Himālayas facing the Dhavala mountain, and this country was once conquered by Arjuna.

2) Other information.

(i) Kimpuruṣas were the sons of Pulaha Prajāpati. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 8).

(ii) They witnessed Agastya drinking up the ocean dry. (Vana Parva, Chapter 104, Verse 21).

(iii) They guard the lotus ponds kept by Kubera to sport with his beloved ones. (Vana Parva, Chapter 15?, Verse 9).

(iv) In his conflict with Rāvaṇa, Kubera left behind him Laṅkā and his Puṣpaka Vimāna, escaped towards the north and settled down on mount Gandhamādana with the help of the Kimpuruṣas. (Vana Parva, Chapter 275, Verse 33).

(v) Yakṣa women were their mothers. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 207, Verse 25).

(vi) They were present at the aśvamedha of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 88, Verse 37).

(vii) Śuka Brahmarṣi reached Bhārata, crossing Kimpuruṣavarṣa. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 325).

KINDAMA. A great sage. Once sage Kindama and his wife were roaming in the forest in the form of deer. While hunting, King Pāṇḍu discharged his arrow against the he-deer. It assumed its original form as sage Kindama and told the King that it was wrong on his part to have hit him (the sage) while he was engaged in love play. "I am dying, but in future if you physically contact your wife you too will die." After saying so the sage fell down dead. Pāṇḍu could never have children of his own from his wives due to this curse. He forgot all about the curse once, embraced Mādrī and fell down dead. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 117).

KINDĀNA (M). A sacred place in Kurukṣetra. A holy dip here is productive of innumerable auspicious results.

KINDATTAKŪPA. A holy pond. He who sows gingelly seeds in the pond is redeemed from the three Ṛṇas (debts) i.e. Ṛṣi-Ṛṇa Pitṛ-Ṛṇa and Deva-ṛṇa. The first is to be redeemed by Brahmacarya (celibacy). the second by house-holder's life and the third by yajñas. (Vana Parva, Chapter 88).

KIÑJAPYA. A particular holy place in Kurukṣetra. A bath here is productive of innumerable auspicious results.

KIṄKAṆA. A King born in the lunar dynasty. Namroci, Kiṅkaṇa and Vṛṣṇi were the three sons of King Mahābhoja. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

KIṄKARA I. A Rākṣasa. Śakti, the son of Vasiṣṭha and King Kalmāṣapāda of the solar dynasty once quarrelled with each other, and the King cursed and turned Śakti into a Rākṣasa. At this juncture Viśvāmitra invoked Kiṅkara, a Rākṣasa attendant of his, into the body of Kalmāṣapāda, and induced by Kiṅkara, Kalmāṣapāda killed all the sons of Vasiṣṭha. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 175).

KIṄKARA II. Name of Kāla's stick. It is with this stick that Kāla kills living beings. "Like Kāla who holds the stick Kiṅkara". (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 122).

KIṄKARA (S). A race of Rākṣasas. After building the palace at Indraprastha for the Pāṇḍavas Mayāsura put 8000 Kiṅkaras for guarding the palace (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 3). These guards were able to remove the palace from one place to another. Yudhiṣṭhira, who started for the north to collect money is said to have met the Kiṅkaras on the Himālayas. (Aśvamedhika Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 6).

KIṄKIṆĪKĀŚRAMA. A holy place. A bath here will lift one to heaven. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 23).

KINNARA(S). A sect of Devas all of whom hold Vīṇās in their hands. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 51).

KIRĀTA. An urban region in ancient India. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 2, Verse 51).

KIRĀTĀRJUNĪYA. During the life in exile in the forest of the Pāṇḍavas, Arjuna performed penance to propitiate Śiva in the Himālayas. Disguised as a forest-hunter Śiva appeared on the scene and tested Arjuna's valour. Arjuna won in the test and was presented the Pāśupatāstra by Śiva. The story is told in Chapter 167 of the Vana Parva. (See under Arjuna).

KIRĪṬĪ I. A warrior of Skanda deva. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 71).

KIRĪṬĪ II. A synonym of Arjuna. (See under Arjuna).

KIRMĪRA. A fierce Rākṣasa, brother of Baka and friend of Hiḍimba. Having heard about the death of Baka at the hands of Bhīma, Kirmīra who was living in Kāmyaka forest planned a revenge against Bhīma. After being defeated in the game of dice the Pāṇḍavas came to the forest, and they confronted Kirmīra. In the duel with Bhīma, Kirmīra fell down dead. (Vana Parva, Chapter 11).

KĪRTI I. Daughter of Śuka Brahmarṣi, son of Vyāsa. Śuka wedded Pīvarī, the beautiful daughter of the Pitṛs. Four sons named Kṛṣṇa, Gauraprabha, Bhūri and Devaśruta and a daughter Kīrti were born to Śuka and Pīvarī. Kīrti was wedded by Prince Aṇu, son of King Vibhrama, and a son called Brahmadatta was born to them, who grew up to become a great scholar and an ascetic. On the advice of Nārada, King Brahmadatta ultimately abdicated the throne in favour of his son, performed penance at Badaryāśrama and attained salvation. (Devī Bhāgavata, 1st Skandha).

KĪRTI II. A daughter of Dakṣaprajāpati. Svāyambhuva Manu wedded his own sister Śatarūpā, and to them were born two sons called Priyavrata and Uttānapāda and two daughters called Prasūti and Ākūti. Dakṣaprajāpati married Prasūti, and they had twenty-four daughters who were : Śraddhā, Lakṣmī, Dhṛti, Tuṣṭi, Medhā, Puṣṭi, Kriyā, Buddhi, Lajjā, Vapus, Śānti, Siddhi, Kīrti, Khyāti, Satī, Sambhūti, Smṛti, Prīti, Kṣamā, Sannati, Anasūya, Ūrjā, Svāhā, and Svadhā. The first thirteen of the above twentyfive girls were married by Dharmadeva. The other eleven girls were married respectively by Bhṛgu, Śiva, Marīci, Aṅgiras, Pulastya, Pulaha, Kratu, Atri, Vasiṣṭha, Agni and Pitṛs. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 7).

KĪRTI III. The Devī who is the basis and cause of all fame and reputation. (Vana Parva, Chapter 37, Verse 38).

KĪRTIDHARMA. A Kṣatriya hero, who was a supporter of Dharmaputra. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 158, Verse 39).

KĪRTIMĀN I. The first son born to Vasudeva and Devakī. As a celestial voice had warned Kaṁsa that the eighth son of Devakī would kill him he had ordered that every child born to her should be taken to him. Accordingly the first-born son of Devakī was taken to him, but was returned to the parents as Kaṁsa thought that he was not his enemy. He was brought up under the name Kīrtimān. Afterwards Nārada visited Kaṁsa and explained to him about his former birth, the object of Kṛṣṇa's incarnation etc. This information so angered Kaṁsa that he got Vasudeva and Devakī chained in prison. Moreover he brought back the first-born son of Devakī and dashed him to death on a stone. Thus ended the life of Kīrtimān.

KĪRTIMĀN II. Mahāviṣṇu mentally created a son called Virajas, and Kīrtimān was his son. A son called Kardama was born to Kīrtimān. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 59, Verse 90).

KĪRTIMĀN III. A Viśvadeva (universal deva). (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 31).

KĪRTIMUKHA. A Śiva gaṇa born out of the matted hair of Śiva with three faces, three tails, three legs and seven hands. The Lord at first asked him to live on corpses, but later on, in appreciation of his valour granted him the boon that if anyone saw the Lord without thinking first about Kīrtimukha, he would meet with his down-fall. (Padma Purāṇa, Uttara Khaṇḍa, Chapter 50).

KĪRTISENA. Son of the brother of the Nāga chief Vāsuki. He made a love-marriage with Śrutārthā daughter of a brahmin, and a child was born to them. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Kathāpīṭhakalambaka).

KĪRTISENĀ. A heroine who has firmly established her reputation in Sanskrit literature. An exceptionally good woman, Kīrtisenā was the daughter of a merchant called Dhanapāla in Pāṭalīputra, and was married by another merchant called Devasena. Once Devasena left the country for purposes of trade, and during his absence from home the mother-in-law of Kīrtisenā shut her up in a dark room. But, with the help of an iron rod, which fortunately came to her hands she made a hole in the room at night, and through it escaped from captivity. Hungry and thirsty, Kīrtisenā travelled a long distance in the forest, and at night climbed a tree and rested thereon. Presently a Rākṣasa woman with her children came to the foot of the tree.

During this period the King of Vasudattapura was suffering from pain in the head because a bug entered his ear and multiplied there in numbers. All the physicians gave up the case as incurable. But, the Rākṣasī at the foot of the tree advised the following cure for the King's illness to her children :—"Anoint the King's head with ghee and make him lie in the sun at noon. After that insert a small tube into his ear, and keep the other end of the tube in a pot full of water. Then the bugs will come out from the ear into the water, and the King will be cured of his illness.

Kīrtisenā, who heard this medical advice from her seat on top of the tree disguised herself as a physician, went to the palace and cured the King of his troubles. In her disguise, she continued to live in the palace as a friend of the King. Shortly, her husband Devasena, came there and they were happily reunited. The King gave them costly presents. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Madanamañjukālambaka, Taraṅga 3).

KIṢKINDHĀ. An ancient kingdom of the monkeys in South India. This kingdom is mentioned both in the Rāmāyaṇa and the Mahābhārata.

During the Rāmāyaṇa period a monkey King called Ṛkṣarāja was the ruler of Kiṣkindhā. He was childless. Once upon a time a son called Bāli was born to Aruṇīdevī by Indra, and another son called Sugrīva was born to her by Sūrya. (See under Aruṇa). Both the boys were brought up in the Āśrama of sage Gautama. When they grew up, Indra handed them over to Ṛkṣarāja, and thus Bāli and Sugrīva came to Kiṣkindhā. After the death of Ṛkṣarāja, Bāli became King of Kiṣkindhā and Sugrīva lived in the service of his brother. At that time there was a very mighty Asura called Dundubhi. Finding no one fit to fight with, he challenged Varuṇa. Varuṇa directed him to Himavān, whose peaks he rent asunder, and played with. Then Himavān told Dundubhi that he was of a peaceful nature and that Bāli would be a match for him (Dundubhi). Accordingly Dundubhi fought with Bāli and got killed. Bāli cast away the corpse of Dundubhi. The blood oozing out from the nose of Dundubhi fell on the body of sage Mataṅga who was engaged in penance on the peak Ṛṣyamūka. By means of his divine powers, the sage found out the origin of the blood contaminating his body, and cursed that Bāli would die the moment he set foot on the mountain.

Dundubhi's son Māyāvī was enraged at the death of his father. He went to Kiṣkindhā to take revenge on Bāli, but got defeated by the latter in fighting. Māyāvī took to his heels; Bāli followed him, and Sugrīva followed his brother. Māyāvī took refuge in a cave followed by Bāli, and Sugrīva waited at the mouth of cave. Even after one year neither Bāli nor Māyāvī emerged out of the cave, but Sugrīva saw blood coming out of the cave and heard Māyāvī roaring. Taking it for granted that Bāli was killed, Sugrīva closed the mouth of the cave, returned to Kiṣkindhā, and at the instance of his subjects assumed kingship.

But, Bāli forced open the cave, hurried back to his kingdom, and interpreting the action of Sugrīva as one purposely done to usurp the throne. drove Sugrīva away and took for himself Sugrīva's wife. Thus Bāli became again King of Kiṣkindhā.

There is a mountain called "Bāli-kerā-mala"—mountain prohibited to Bāli—in the eastern region of the former princely kingdom of Travancore. Is it in any way connected with Ṛṣyamūkācala ?

Sugrīva founded a new kingdom at Ṛṣyamūka mountain. Mainda, Dvivida, Hanūmān and Jāmbavān were the ministers of Sugrīva. It was while Sugrīva was thus living on Ṛṣyamūkācala that Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa came that way in the course of their search for Sītā. In accordance with the agreement made between Sugrīva and Rāma, the latter killed Bāli and crowned Sugrīva as the King of Kiṣkindhā. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Kiṣkindhā Kāṇḍa, and Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 280).

During the triumphal tour of Sahadeva in the South he fought against Kiṣkindhā, and after seven days' fighting the monkeys saw Sahadeva off with a present of costly gems.

"Sahadeva fought against the monkey chiefs like Mainda, Dvivida etc. for seven days, but neither of them got exhausted, and the monkey chiefs, with affection and gratitude asked Sahadeva to depart with gems." (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 31).

During this period nothing was heard of Sugrīva, Hanūmān and Jāmbavān in Kiṣkindhā. Might be Sugrīva was no more. Hanūmān, after the death of Śrī Rāma, lived in Gandhamādana in Kimpuruṣavarṣa. (Bhārata and Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha). From the story of Prasena it may be seen that Jāmbavan left Kiṣkindhā and lived in another cave with his sons and other relations. It was the other two ministers of Sugrīva, Mainda and Dvivida, who were ruling Kiṣkindhā when Sahadeva went there. The power and prestige of Kiṣkindhā had begun to set by then, and in course of time Kiṣkindhā ceased to exist but in name.

KIṢKINDHĀGUHĀ. A mountainous region in Dhavaḍ district in South India. Certain scholars hold the view that this was the actual Kiṣkindhā.

KĪṬAKA. A King born from an aspect of the Asura called Krodhavaśa. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 60).

KITAVA(S). An ancient tribe of people. They once visited Yudhiṣṭhira with many presents. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 51, Verse 12).

KOHALA. A Brahmin scholar. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 53, Stanza 4, that this Brahmin was present at the 'Sarpa Sattra' (sacrifice to kill serpents) of Janamejaya. Once Bhagīratha gave this hermit as alms one lakh of cows with calves. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 138, Stanza 27).

KOKA. (Cakravāka bird). Ruddy Goose. To know the Purāṇic story about the origin of this bird (Ruddy goose) see under 'Arayanna' (Swan).

KOKĀMUKHA. A holy place. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 153, that those who bathe in this holy bath will get the faculty of remembering their previous births.

KOKANADA I. A Kṣatriya King of ancient India. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, that at the time of the regional conquest of Arjuna, this King fell at his feet and sought refuge.

KOKANADA II. A warrior of Skanda. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 27).

KOKAVAKA. A country in ancient India. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9).

KOKILA. See under Diṇḍika.

KOKILAKA. A warrior of Skanda. (Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 73).

KOLAGIRI. A mountain of South India. (Mahābhārata Sabhā Parva). Sahadeva conquered the people of this mountain.

KOLĀHALA A famous Asura. In the battle between the Devas and the Asuras carried on by Subrahmaṇya, this Asura confronted Mālyavān and was killed. (Padma Purāṇa; Part IV, Chapter 13).

KOLAŚVRŪPA (KOLATTUNĀḌU). After the decline of the second Cera empire in Kerala, several royal families such as Perumpaṭappu, Neḍuvirippu, Kolasvarūpa, Veṇāṭu etc. came into power. Some details regarding the family of Kolasvarūpa are given below.

In 'Kerala Māhātmya', it is given that Paraśurāma had made a Soma-Kṣatriya, as King of Cirakkal or Kolattunāḍu. According to 'Keralotpatti' it was Ceramān Perumāl who did this. Logan says that Kolasvarūpa came into being from the children born to the last Perumāl of the Veṇāṭu family. In the edicts Vīrarāghavapaṭṭaya or Jūtaśāsana no mention is made about Kolattunāḍu. Both the families of Veṇāṭu and Kolattunāḍu, from very early times had observed the customary rites of taint, pollution, defilement etc. It is said in 'Keralamāhātmya' that Paraśurāma had enthroned the sons of two sisters in both the kingdoms. But no documents are available to prove that there was any connection between the two families till the 5th century M.E. (Malayālam Era). i.e.14th century A.D. See under Kollavarṣa.

KOLIKA (KOKILA). This is the name of a rat. Kokila is a character in the story known as Biḍālopākhyāna, told by Nārada to Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Once a cat began to perform penance holding up both of its hands, on the bank of the Gaṅgā. After a long time birds and rats began to come very close to it believing that it would not hurt them. They made the cat their leader. The wicked cat daily ate a rat secretly. Thus the body of the cat grew stronger day by day and there appeared a steady decrease in the number of the rats. Among them there was a wise rat called Kokila. He understood the deceit played by the cat. So proclaiming independence he and his fellows ran away and saved themselves. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 160).

KOLISARPA. A tribe. Formerly this tribe was of Kṣatriya Caste. A Brahmin once cursed them and made them Śūdras. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 33, Stanza 22).

KOLLAGIREYA. An ancient country in South India. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 83, that Arjuna conquered this country.

KOLLAVARṢA. (MALAYĀLAM ERA). Several opinions have been brought forward about the starting of the Malayālam Era. There is great controversy as to the causes of starting this new era. The opinion of Śaṅkuṇṇi Menon is as follows. The King Udayamārtaṇḍavarmā called together at Quilon, an assembly of the learned men and astronomers of the time, in Kalivarṣa 3926 (A.D. 825) and made astronomical researches and taking into account the movements and positions of the various planets in the solar system, started a new era beginning with the month of Ciṅṅam (August-September). This new era commenced on the 15th of August 825 A.D. All the learned men and scholars of the time welcomed this Malayālam era. The neighbouring kingdoms also recognized this new era. Reckoning of dates based on this Malayālam Era is seen in the 'Madura and Tinnevelly Stone-edicts and copper edicts.' On the fifth day of Ciṅṅaṁ of the first year of M.E., five royal families of Travancore met together and took a decision that the festival days of the temples should be reckoned according to the Malayālam Era. The controversy is not about the starting of the new Era, but the reasons for starting the new era.

Logan says that the Malayālam Era was started in commemoration of the conversion of Ceramān Perumāl to Islam and his pilgrimage to Mecca. But there is impropriety in thinking that the Hindu subjects of a King would commemorate the conversion of their King into Islam religion. Some say that the new era was started to commemorate the erection of a Śaivite temple. Another argument is that a new era was started in memory of the exhortation of Śrī Śaṅkarācārya to the Brahmins of Quilon, to do away with the irregularities seen in the Hindu religion. The period of Śaṅkarācārya has not yet been decided definitely. The opinion accepted by scholars on this subject is that of K.B. Pathak, according to whom Śaṅkarācārya lived from 787 to 819 A.D. If this is accepted as true, the exhortation made in 825 A.D. should be by somebody else and the Malayālam Era should have been established for some ot her reasons.

Another opinion is that the new era was established to commemorate the independence given to the two Kolattiri Kings (North and South) by the Perumāl. The North Kolattiri family should have begun the new era on the first day of Kanni (the second month) and the South Kolattiri family on the first day of Ciṅṅaṁ (the first month). (Because in Malabar area, the era commences on the first day of Kanni.). Another opinion that is prevalent is that Kollavarṣa was started to commemorate the erection of the two towns of Quilon (North and South). But even two centuries before A.D. 825 the town of South Quilon had become famous. So it is an objection to this argument. Some are of opinion that a new era was started in commemoration of Śaṅkaravijaya (the victory of Śaṅkara) due to the fact that the Brahmins of the north and the south alike accepted the teachings of Śaṅkarācārya. But it is difficult to believe that the northerners and the southerners accepted the teachings of Śaṅkarācārya on a particular date and issued a declaration to that effect and started a new era. Some connect the starting of the New Era with the 'Tiruvoṇam' a grand festival of the Malayālees. But it cannot be believed that a national festival was started by a single man. According to Logan it would appear that the grand festival of Tiruvoṇam was started to commemorate the journey of Perumāl to Mecca. But the conversion episode is more likely to be considered as a blasphemy and the Kings and people of Malayāla land are not likely to commemorate it. Prof. Sundaran Pillai has cut all the arguments given above and brought forward a new theory. His inference is that the new Era is the transformation of an old era known as Saptarṣivatsara (year of the seven sages) or Śāstrasaṁvatsara (scientific year) which prevailed throughout India and is still in force in Kaśmīra. In A.D. 897 Saptarṣi-Vatsara was 4972 and it was known as merely 72, and that if all the hundreds are taken away, the remaining figure will be the same as that of the Kollavarṣa. That is, at the expiry of each century the Saptarṣivatsara begins as one, two and so on. But the Saptarṣivatsara begins in the month of Meṭam (9th month) whereas Kollavarṣa begins in Ciṅṅam. He explains this difference also. His opinion is that the Nambūtiri Brahmins took some time to reach the country of Malayāla from North Indian countries and they had been using their Saptarṣivatsara up to the time of their arrival in Malayāla and after their arrival they adopted some slight modifications in the era according to the requirements of the new settlement, and renewed the Saptarṣivatsara. Gopala Iyer, the great exponent of the Vedānta philosophy, says as follows about Kollavarṣa in his 'Chronology of Ancient India': "Kaliyuga and Kollavarṣa commenced in B.C. 1176." But Kollavarṣa is divided into groups of recurring thousands. This has a close connection with Saptarṣi Vatsara, which also might have commenced in B.C. 1176. The year mentioned above completed 2000 by A.D. 824. The third recurring thousand begins in A.D. 825, under the name Kollavarṣa.

Princent, Buchanan and Burnell are the three memorable western scholars who have expressed their opinions about Kollavarṣa. Princent connected Kollavarṣa with Paraśurāma. Buchanan said that the Malayālees have a recurring of every millennium. Burnell has stated in his book "South Indian Paleography", that the theory of recurring Millennium is wrong.

An astronomer who was a contemporary of the King who established the Malayālam era has stated in his work called 'Śaṅkaranārāyaṇīya' (a manuscript in Palm leaves) that an astronomical movement was reckoned and a new era was started at Quilon. This palm leaf manuscript is kept in the Manuscripts Library at Trivandrum.

KOṄKAṆA. An ancient country of South India. (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 60).

KOPAVEGA. A hermit. This hermit had served Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 16).

KOṢĀ. A river. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 27, that the water of this river was used for drinking by the ancient people of Bhārata.

KOŚAKĀRA. See under Niśākara II.

KOSALA I. The King and the people of the country of Kosala are called by the name Kosala.

KOSALA II. One of the wrestlers of Kaṁsa. The famous wrestlers of Kaṁsa were Cāṇūra, Muṣṭika, Kūṭa, Śala, Kosala and others.

KOSALA.

1) General information. A wealthy and prosperous country on the banks of the river Sarayū. Ayodhyā was the Capital of this kingdom. This city was built by Manu, the father of Ikṣvāku. This city was twelve yojanas long with a breadth of three yojanas. It is understood from Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Sarga 5 that during the time of Daśaratha this city was modified to such an extent as to be on a par with any modern city.

2) Other details. (1) Bhīmasena once conquered Uttara Kosala (north Kosala). (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 30).

(2) Sahadeva during his regional conquest, subdued Dakṣiṇa Kosala (South Kosala). (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 31, Stanza 12).

(3) Śrī Kṛṣṇa once conquered the country of Kosala. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 21, Stanza 15).

(4) Abhimanyu, the son of Arjuna, killed the King of Kosala in the battle of Bhārata.

(5) Karṇa once conquered this country for Duryodhana. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 8, Stanza 19).

(6) During the time of the battle of Bhārata a King named Kṣemadarśī ruled over Kosala. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 82, Stanza 6).

(7) At the time of the Svayaṁvara (marriage) of Ambā, Bhīṣma defeated the King of Kosala. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 44, Stanza 38).

(8) Arjuna who led the horse for sacrifice conquered the country of Kosala. (M.B. Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 83).

(9) Those who bathe in the holy bath of Ṛṣabha tīrtha in Kosala, will obtain the fruits of giving one thousand cows as alms. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Stanza 10).

KOŚALA (S). The Kṣatriyas of the country of Kośala. These Kośalas once fled to the southern countries fearing Jarāsandha. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 14, Stanza 27).

KOṢṬHAVĀN. A mountain. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 43 that this mountain was the overlord of many other mountains.

KOṬARĀ. An attendant of Skanda. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 14).

KOṬARAKA. A serpent born in the family of Kaśyapa. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 103, Stanza 12).

KOṬIKĀSYA (KOṬIKA). A King who was the follower of J.yadrat a. While the Pāṇḍavas were living in the Kāmyaka forest once they went out leaving Pāñcālī ; lone in the hut. At that time Jayadratha the King of Sindhu, the son of Vṛddhakṣatra came there and saw Pāñcālī. He sent his follower Koṭikāsya to entice Pāñcālī, who did not succumb to temptation. At last Jayadratha carried Pāñcālī away by force.

This Koṭikāsya was the son of Suratha and was the King of Trigarta (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 265).

KOṬILIṄGA. This word was added to the names of the members of the Koṭuṅṅallur royal family. Especially, Kuñjikuṭṭan Tampurān is denoted by the name 'Koṭiliṅgeśvar ' in some of his poetic works. The word 'Koṭiliṅga' is the Sanskrit form of the Dravidian word Koṭuṅṅallūr. This city was the Capital of the Cera Kings.

KOṬĪŚA. A serpent born in the family of Vāsuki. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Stanza 5).

KOṬITĪRTHA. A holy bath. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 82, that those who bathe in this holy bath will get the fruits of performing the horse sacrifice.

KOṬṬUVĀ. (Yawning, Gape). In Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 6, there is a story explaining how the living beings began to ꞏawn. After getting boons from Brahmā, Vṛttrāsura swallowed Indra. The Devas were filled with fea and approaching Bṛhaspati they represented their grievance. According to the instruction of Bṛhaspati the Devas caused Vṛttrāsura to gape. After opening the mouth he found it difficult to shut, and the mouth remained open. In the meanwhile Indra jumped out of Vṛtra through the mouth. Gape came into existence from that time. (For details see under the word Vṛtra.

KRAMAJIT. A Kṣatriya King who was a constant follower of Dharmaputra. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 28).

KRAMAPA. A son born to Pulaha by his wife Kṣamā. Kramapa had a brother named Sahiṣṇu. (Agni Purāṇa Chapter 20).

KRAMAPĀṬHA. A method of teaching the Vedas. It is due to the insistence on strict adherence to this method of teaching that even after thousands of years variations have not crept into the original texts of the Vedas which form the earliest literature. There is a portion called 'word study' (Pada Pāṭha) in the Vedas (the scripture). Every word in the Veda is separated from its prefixes and suffixes. The second step is Kramapāṭha or the study of joining prefixes and suffixes to each word got by the first step. Next step is Jaṭāpāṭha in which words are combined with their prefixes and suffixes. To guard against the creeping in of mistakes in this step, the next step which is known as Ghanapāṭha is taught. In this step the first step of Padapāṭha and the second step of Krama pāṭha are mixed together and intermingled from beginning to end and end to beginning. There are rules to make combined words by using prefixes and suffixes. These rules are called Prātiśākhya. Because the Vedas are taught in this way with so much attention and care, their texts have never been subjected to changes and variations.

KRATHA I. A Kṣatriya King. He was the rebirth of an Asura called Krodhavaśa. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 61). See under Jyāmagha.

KRATHA II. A King defeated by Bhīmasena during his regional conquest. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 30, Stanza 7).

KRATHA III. A hermit. In Mahābhārata, Udyoga-Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 27 it is stated that this hermit visited Śrī Kṛṣṇa on his way to Hastināpura.

KRATHA IV. There was a warrior named Kratha on the side of the Kauravas. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 120, Stanza 10).

KRATHA V. A warrior of Skandadeva. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 70).

KRATHA VI. A Yakṣa. (Demi-God). When Garuḍa reached the world of Devas he had to fight with this Yakṣa. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 32, Stanza 18).

KRATHA VII. An Asura (demon). It is stated in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 67 Stanza 57 that this Asura was born as King Sūryākṣa on the earth in his re-birth.

KRATHA VIII. Name of a son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 116, Stanza 11).

KRĀTHA I. A f mous King in Ancient India. The following details about this King are found found in the Mahābhārata.

(1) He was the rebirth of an Asura called Rāhu, the son of Siṁhikā. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 40).

(2) Krātha attended the Svayaṁvara (marriage) of Draupadī. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 186, Stanza 15).

(3) Śrī Kṛṣṇa defeated Krātha at the city of Jāruthi. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 12, Stanza 30).

(4) In the battle of Bhārata this King attacked Abhimanyu. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 26).

(5) In the battle of Bhārata Krātha killed the prince of Kaliṅga, and a King from the mountain killed Krātha. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 85, Stanza 15).

KRĀTHA II. A King of the Puru dynasty. (M.B. Ādi Parva Chapter 94, Stanza 58).

KRĀTHA III. A captain of the army of monkeys. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 283, Stanza 19).

KRĀTHA IV. A warrior of Skanda. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 70).

KRĀTHA V. A famous serpent. At the time of the death of Balabhadra this serpent came there to lead his soul to Pātāla (nether world). (M.B. Mausala Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 16).

KRĀTHA(M). An ancient country in India. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 21 that Bhīṣmaka the King of Vidarbha had conquered this country.

KRATU.

1) General information. One of the six mental sons of Brahmā. Marīci, Aṅgiras, Atri, Pulastya, Pulaha and Kratu were the mental sons of Brahmā. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 65). Kratu is described as one of the 21 Prajāpatis (lords of emanation).

2) Some details. (1) It is stated in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 9, that the hermits called Bālakhilyas were the sons of Kratu.

(2) Kratu was present at the birth-celebration of Arjuna. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 52).

(3) Kratu came to save the Rākṣasas from the Rākṣasa sattra, (A great sacrificial fire meant for the Rākṣasas (giants) to jump into and die by themselves) performed by the hermit Parāśara. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 189, Stanza 9).

(4) Kratu was a luminary in the councils of Brahmā and Indra. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 17).

(5) Kratu was present at the Birth celebration of Skandadeva. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza10).

(6) There is a group of hermits called 'Citraśikhaṇḍins, of which Kratu is a member. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 335, Stanza 27).

(7) By the blessings of Śiva, Kratu got a thousand sons. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 14, Stanza 87).

(8) Kratu went to visit Bhīṣma who was lying on the bed of arrows awaiting death in the beginning of Uttarāyaṇa of the year. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 26, Stanza 4).

KRAUÑCA I. An Asura. In Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 57 it is mentioned that this Asura was killed by Subrahmaṇya.

KRAUÑCA II. A mountain. There is a story about this mountain. Long ago there lived an Asura named Krauñca. He was leading a wicked life and was haughty and arrogant. Once Agastya went to Kailāsa and worshipped Śiva. Kāverīdevī also was standing close by, worshipping Śiva. God Śiva appeared before Agastya and told him that he might ask for any boon. He requested for the power to push down Vindhya by kicking and to establish a holy Tīrtha (bath) on the earth. Śiva granted the boons. For making the tīrtha Śiva turned Kāverī into a river and placed her in the water-pot of Agastya. As Agastya was returning from Kailāsa with Kāverī in his water-pot, Krauñca the Asura took the shape of a mountain and hindered his way. The Asura caused a heavy rain too. Agastya wandered through the forest without finding the path for days. At last he realized the cause. He took a few drops of water from his waterpot and with chanting of Mantras and meditation threw the drops at the Asura with the curse that he would stand there for ever as a mountain. He said that he would be liberated from the curse when pierced by the arrow of Subrahmaṇya, the son of Śiva. From that day onwards Krauñca the Asura had been standing there as a mountain. That mountain was called 'The mountain of Krauñca.' (Skanda Purāṇa, Asura Kāṇḍa).

There is another statement in Harivaṁśa, Chapter 18, that the mountain Krauñca was the son of the mountain Maināka, the son of Menā.

Subrahmaṇya fought a terrible battle with the Asuras. Many died. Bāṇāsura, the son of Mahābali, fled from the battlefield and hid himself inside the mountain Krauñca. Subrahmaṇya cleft the mountain into two with the arrow given by Agni (Fire-god). Thus Krauñcāsura was liberated from the curse. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46).

In 'Meghadūta' Kālidāsa mentions about the cleavage in the mountain Krauñca. In Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 225, Stanza 33, mention is made that through this cleavage swans and vultures fly to Mahāmeru. (For the story of how Paraśurāma cleft the Krauñca mountain see under Paraśurāma).

KRAUÑCA III. (A kind of snipe). A bird.

KRAUÑCADVĪPA. (ISLAND OF KRAUÑCA). One of the Saptadvīpas (seven islands). The seven islands are Jambūdvīpa, Plakṣadvīpa, Śālmalīdvīpa, Kuśadvīpa, Krauñcadvīpa, Śākadvīpa and Puṣkaradvīpa. (Devī Bhāgavata Skandha 8). Krauñcadvīpa is described as follows in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 12:—In this island there are the mountains Krauñca, Vāmanaka, Andhakāra, Maināka, Govinda, Nibiḍa, and Viṣkambha. The various countries in this island are Kuśala, Manonuga, Uṣṇa, Prāvaraka, Andhakāraka, Munideśa, Dundubhisvana etc.

KRAUṀCANIṢŪDANA. A holy place on the banks of river Sarasvatī. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 160 that he who bathes in this place would get a Vimāna.

KRAUÑCAPADĪ. A holy place. He who makes oblations of balls of boiled rice in this place will obtain remission of sin of Brahmahatyā (sin incurred by killing a Brahmin). (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 42).

KRAUÑCĀRUṆAVYŪHA. Another name of Krauñcavyūha (strategic disposition of an army). Dhṛṣṭadyumna formed the Krauñcāruṇavyūha. (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 50).

KRAUÑCAVYŪHA. A strategic formation of the army in the shape of Krauñca bird (snipe). In the battle of Bhārata, Bhīṣma made the formation of Krauñca. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 75). The Krauñca disposition has eight strategical positions, the face, eyes, head, neck, stomach, left flank, right flank and thighs. In the disposition formed by Bhīṣma, Droṇa stood at the face, Aśvatthāmā and Kṛpa stood at the eyes, Hārdikya at the head and Śūrasena at the neck. The King of Prāgjyotiṣa stood at the stomach of the formation. The Tuṣāras, Yavanas, Śakas and Cūpuvas guarded the right flank. Śṛtāyus and Bhūriśravas kept the thighs.

KRAUÑCĪ. A daughter born to Kaśyapaprajāpati by his wife Tāmrā the daughter of Dakṣa. Five daughters, Krauñcī, Bhāsī, Śyenī, Dhṛtarāṣṭrī and Śukī were born of Tāmrā. From Krauñcī, were born the owls, the Bhāsas from Bhāsī, the hawks and vultures from Śyenī, the swans and ruddy geese from Dhṛtarāṣṭrī and Narā, the mother of Vinatā from Śukī. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Sarga 14).

KRAVYĀDA (S). A particular group of the Manes or the deified ancestors that receive the souls of the deceased. Mention is made about the Kravyādas in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 269, Stanza 15.

KRIYĀ. One of the daughters of Dakṣa. Dharmadeva married her and three sons Daṇḍa, Naya and Vinaya were born to him of Kriyā. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa I, Chapter 7).

KṚKAṆEYU. (KAKṢEYU). One of the ten sons whom King Raudrāśva of the Puru dynasty begot of the Apsaras called Miśrakeśī. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 10).

KṚMI I. A King of the royal dynasty of Aṅga. King Uśīnara had five wives named Nṛgā, Narā, Kṛmī, Daśā and Dṛṣadvatī, and of them were born respectively the sons Nṛga, Nara, Kṛmi, Suvrata and Śibi. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 227).

KṚMĪ II. A wife of Uśīnara. (See under Kṛmi I).

KṚMI III. A Kṣatriya dynasty. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 74, Verse 13).

KṚMI IV. A river. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 17).

KṚMIBHOJANA (M). One of the twentyeight hells. (See Naraka under Kāla I).

KṚMILA. A king born in the Puru dynasty. There was a king in the dynasty called Bāhyāśva, who had five sons called Sṛñjaya, Bṛhadiṣu, Mukula, Kṛmila and Yavīnara. In later years they became famous as Pāñcālas. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

KṚMĪŚA. A hell known as Kṛmibhojana also. (See under Kāla I.)

KRODHA I. A famous Asura born to Kaśyapa by his wife Kālā. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 35).

KRODHA II. It is stated in Bhāgavata that Krodha was born from the eye-brow of Brahmā. There is a story about this Krodha in the 'Jaimini-Aśvamedha Parva'. Once, while the hermit Jamadagni was performing sacrificial offerings to the Manes, Krodha came there and secretly put poison in the pudding prepared from the milk of the sacrificial cow. Even though the hermit knew this he did not get angry. Seeing this, Krodha became afraid of the hermit and approaching him said "Oh, hermit ! I thought that the Bhārgavas (those born of the family of Bhṛgu) would get angry quickly. Now I understand that it is wrong." Jamadagni pardoned him and said : "But you have to appease the anger of the Manes". The Manes cursed him that he would have to take birth as a mongoose. But he was given remissiom that he would be liberated from the curse, when he narrated the story of the Brahmin Uñcchavṛtti at the palace of Dharma in the presence of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Thus Krodha regained his former form.

KRODHAHANTĀ. A famous Asura. He was born to Prajāpati Kaśyapa by his wife Kālā. The notorious Vṛtrāsura was the brother of Krodhahantā. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 65).

KRODHANĀ. An attendant of Skanda. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 6).

KRODHANA. A hermit of great importance in the palace of Indra. (Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 11).

KRODHAŚATRU. A famous Asura who was born to Prajāpati Kaśyapa of his wife Kālā. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 35).

KRODHAVARDHANA. An Asura. In Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 46, it is mentioned that in later ages this Asura was reborn under the name Daṇḍadhara.

KRODHAVAŚA. A follower of Indrajit. In the battle between Rāvaṇa and Śrī Rāma this Asura made himself invisible and attacked the monkeys. By the help of Vibhīṣaṇa, who was an expert in the art of vanishing, the monkeys killed Krodhavaśa in the battle. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 269).

KRODHAVAŚĀ. Wife of Prajāpati Kaśyapa. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇya Kāṇḍa, Sarga 14). The Asuras who were born to Krodhavaśā are also called Krodhavaśas. Most of these Krodhavaśas were employed to guard the lotus-lake of Kubera. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 154). Bhīmasena once entered the lotus-lake of Kubera and plucked the "Saugandhika" flower. The Krodhavaśas ran to Kubera to inform him of this theft. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 285, Stanza 2 that these Krodhavaśas were present in the army of Rāvaṇa.

KROŚANĀ. A female attendant of Skanda. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 17).

KROṢṬĀ. A son of Yadu. Sahasrada, Payoda, Kroṣṭā, Nīla and Ājika were the five sons of Yadu. (Harivaṁśa, Chapter 38).

KṚPA I. A King in ancient India. He never ate flesh. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 115, Verse 64).

KṚPA II. (KṚPĀCĀRYA).

1). Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu thus : Brahmā-Atri—Candra —Budha —Purūravas —Āyus—Nahuṣa—Yayāti —Puru —Janamejaya —Prācinvān —Pravīra—Namasyu—Vītabhaya—Śuṇḍu—Bahuvidha—Saṁyāti—Rahovādī —Raudrāśva —Matināra —Santurodha—Duṣyanta—Bharata—Suhotā—Gala—Garda—Suketu—Bṛhatkṣetra—Hasti—Ajamīḍha—Nīla—Śānti—Suśānti—Puruja—Arka—Bhavyāśva—Pāñcāla—Mudgala. A daughter called Ahalyā was born to Mudgala. Maharṣi Gautama married her. To Gautama was born Śatānanda, to him Satyadhṛti, to him Śaradvān and to Śaradvān was born Kṛpācārya. The Purāṇas refer to the generation preceding Gautama only in the maternal line. It is said in verse 2, Chapter 130 of the Ādi Parva, that Śaradvān was the son of Gautama. According to Agni Purāṇa, Bhāgavata etc. Śaradvān, father of Kṛpa was the son of the great-grand son of Gautama and grandson of Śatānanda. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

2) Birth of Kṛpa. Though born in a family of Sages Śaradvān evinced more interest in Dhanurveda. He performed penance in the forest, with bow and arrows deposited by his side. As his penance gathered intensity the Devas got alarmed. To break his penance Indra deputed the Devatā called Jānapadī to the earth and she appeared before Śaradvān and danced, dressed only in one piece of cloth. Emission occurred to him. But, wisdom dawned on him immediately and leaving behind him the bow, arrows and deer skin he quitted the place.

The semen discharged by him fell on the arrow which broke into two giving birth to a male child and a female one.

3) Kṛpa in the Palace. One of the attendants of King Śantanu, who had come to the forest to hunt, saw the children and took them to the King. The King felt Kṛpā (pity) for them and brought them up in the palace and as they were thus brought up due to his Kṛpā they came to be called Kṛpa and Kṛpī. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 130).

4) Kṛpa's mastery of Dhanurveda. While living in the forest engaged in penance Śaradvān, with his divine power understood that the two children forsaken by him were growing up in the palace. He went to the palace and told the king details about the children. He also lived there in secret and taught Kṛpa everything contained in the four branches of Dhanurveda and the various usages in archery. Gradually Kṛpa became an ācārya (master) in Dhanurveda. Not only the Pāṇḍavas the Kauravas, the Yādavas and the Vṛṣṇis but also kings, who came from various regions of the country learned archery at the feet of Kṛpa. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 130, Verse 23).

5) Kṛpa at the trial of skill in archery of the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas. When the training of the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas in archery was over, a test was arranged for them. Spectators crowded to see it. Droṇa, Kṛpa, Somadatta, Bālhīka, Bhīṣma and Vidura and other great ones took their seats in the stadium. Arjuna and Karṇa entered the arena for contest when Kṛpa intervened and said that Arjuna was the youngest son of Kuntī but Karṇa should specify his parentage. At this Karṇa stood stunned, and it was then that Duryodhana declared Karṇa to be the King of Aṅga. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 136).

6) Activities of Kṛpa upto the great war. (i) He attended the Rājasūya yajña of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 8).

There he acted as the custodian of money and distributed dakṣiṇās (monetary presents). (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 7).

(ii) It was he who instructed the spies deputed by Duryodhana as to how to detect the Pāṇḍavas during their life incognito. (Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 29). He also detailed to Duryodhana the various aspects of politics.

(iii) Kṛpa once told Duryodhana that he was powerful enough to annihilate the Pāṇḍava army within two months. (Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 193).

7) Kṛpa in the war. (i) On the first day of the war he fought with Bṛhatkṣetra. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45).

(ii) In the fight with Cekitāna he fell down and fainted. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 31).

(iii) He wounded Sātyaki. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 101, Verse 40).

(iv) Fought a duel with Sahadeva. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 110, Verse 12).

(v) He fought with Arjuna and Bhīma. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 113, Verse 114).

(vi) Fought with Dhṛṣṭaketu. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 33).

(vii) Fought with Vārdhakṣemi. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 41).

(viii) His flag floated in the air and could be seen from anywhere in the battlefield. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 105).

(ix) He killed the body-guards of Abhimanyu. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 42, Verse 38).

(x) Fighting with Arjuna he fainted and fell down. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 147 Verse 9).

(xi) During the fight he ridiculed Karṇa. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 158, Verse 13).

(xii) He advised Aśvatthāmā to prevent Duryodhana from confronting Arjuna. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 150, Verse 77).

(xiii) In the battle that ensued he defeated Śikhaṇḍī. (Droṇa Parva Chapter 169, Verse 39).

(xiv) When Droṇa fell down dead he fled from the battle-field. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 193, Verse 12).

(xv) He was defeated by Sātyaki. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 20 Verse 53).

(xvi) He killed Suketu, son of Citraketu. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 54, Verse 28).

(xvii) Defeated Yudhāmanyu. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 61, Verse 55).

(xviii) He killed the Kalinda prince. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 6).

(xix) He advised Karṇa to enter into a compromise with the Pāṇḍavas. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 4).

(xx) He ran away from the battlefield to Dvaipāyana lake (Śalya Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 9).

(xxi) Yudhiṣṭhira came to the lake with an army and Kṛpa ran away from there. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 60).

(xxii) He appointed Aśvatthāmā chief of the army on the suggestion of Duryodhana. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 43).

(xxiii) He fought during the night along with Aśvatthāmā. (Sauptika Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 35).

(xxiv) He killed the soldiers who ran away from the Pāṇḍava camp. (Sauptika Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 106).

(xxv) He set fire to the camp of the Pāṇḍavas. (Sauptika Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 109).

(xxvi) He cried at the pitiable condition of Duryodhana. (Sauptika Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 10).

(xxvii) He went to Hastināpura after telling Dhṛtarāṣṭra and Gāndhārī that both the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas would be ruined. (Strī Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 21).

8). End of Kṛpa. The great war ended. Duryodhana and others were killed and, when Dhṛtarāṣṭra left for the forest with Gāndhārī, Kṛpa desired to accompany them. But, Dhṛtarāṣṭra did not permit it. Yudhiṣṭhira, as advised by Dhṛtarāṣṭra, put up Kṛpa with him. (Āśramavāsika Parva, Chapter 16, Verse 5). Before the Pāṇḍavas set out on their great journey Yudhiṣṭhira appointed Kṛpa as the preceptor of Parīkṣit, the son of Arjuna. (Mahāprasthāna Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 4). During his last days Kṛpa went into the forest for penance and there he breathed his last. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 296, Verse 14).

9) Synonyms for Kṛpa. Ācārya, Ācāryasattama, Bharatācārya. Brahmarṣi, Śāradvata, Śāradvataputra, Gautama, Kṛpa.

KṚPĪ. (See Para 2 under Kṛpa II).

Later history. Kṛpī was brought up in the palace of King Śantanu. She was duly married by Droṇācārya and a son called Aśvatthāmā was born to them. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 130). Kṛpī lamented very much over the death of Droṇa in the great war. (Strī Parva, Chapter 23, Verse 33).

The terms Śāradvatī and Gautamī are used as synonyms of Kṛpī in the Mahābhārata.

KṚŚA. I. A friend of sage Śṛṅgī. Since Kṛśa underwent a lot of sacrifices for the protection of dharma (righteousness) his body became very Kṛśa (lean). Hence he was called Kṛśa. It was Kṛśa, who told Śṛṅgī about King Parīkṣit who had once thrown a dead snake round his (Śṛṅgī's) father's neck. (Ādi Parva, Chapters 41 and 42).

KṚŚA II. A prominent serpent born in the Airāvata family. The serpent was reduced to ashes at the serpent yajña of Janamejaya. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 11).

KṚŚA III. A great sage endowed with divine powers. He was also present in the company of sages who visited Bhīṣma on his arrow-bed. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 7).

KṚŚADRATHA. Son of Titikṣa, brother of the famous emperor Śibi. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

KṚŚAKA. A nāga born in the Kaśyapa dynasty. (Udyogaparva, Chapter 106, Verse 15).

KṚŚĀNU. The sage who stood guard over Soma at the Yajña conducted by sage Kutsa. (Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 16, Sūkta 112).

KṚŚĀŚVA I. The Prajāpati called Kṛśāśva married Jayā and Suprabhā the daughters of Dakṣaprajāpati and to both were born fifty sons each. All the sons were really arrows called Saṁhāra. Viśvāmitra, by the power of penance made these hundred sons (arrows) of Kṛśāśva his own. It was these arrows, which Viśvāmitra gave to Śrī Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Cantos 21 and 26).

KṚŚĀŚVA II. A king of the solar dynasty. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

KṚŚĀŚVA III. A King who served Yama in his court. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 17).

Once he came down to earth in Indra's Vimāna to witness Arjuna, in the company of Uttara, the Virāṭa prince, fight during the lifting of cows. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 56).

KṚṢEYU. A King born in the Puru dynasty. (See under PURUVAṀŚA).

KṚṢĪVALA. An ancient sage who lived in Indra's court. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 13).

KṚṢṆA (ŚRĪ KṚṢṆA). Born in the Yādava dynasty as the son of Vasudeva and Devakī, Śrī Kṛṣṇa was the ninth of the ten incarnations of Mahāviṣṇu.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu thus :—Brahmā —Atri—Candra—Budha—Purūravas—Āyus—Nahuṣa— — Yayāti— Yadu— Sahasrajit — Śatajit — Hehaya— Dharma—Kunti— Bhadrasena—Dhanaka — Kṛtavīrya — Kārtavīryārjuna – Jayadhvaja — Tālajaṅgha — Vītihotra— Ananta — Durjaya — Yudhājit — Śini — Satyaka—Sātyaki (Yuyudhāna)—Jaya—Kuṇi—Anamitra—Pṛśni — Citraratha — Vidūratha — Śūra — Śinibhoja—Hṛdīka—Śūrasena—Vasudeva—Śrī Kṛṣṇa.

Ten sons called Vasudeva, Devabhāga, Devaśravas, Ānaka, Sṛñjaya, Kākānīka, Śyāmaka, Vatsa, Kāvūka and Vasu were born to King Śūrasena by his wife Māriṣā. Of those ten sons Vasudeva married Devakī, the sister of Kaṁsa. He had also a second wife called Rohiṇī and she was the mother of Balabhadrarāma.

2) Śrī Kṛṣṇa's former births. Owing to a curse of Varuṇa, Kaśyapaprajāpati was born on earth as Vasudeva and his (Kaśyapa) wives Aditi and Surasā were born as Devakī and Rohiṇī. (See under Kaśyapa and Aditi). Like this Śrī Kṛṣṇa also had previous births. Once upon a time from the heart of Brahmā was born the Prajāpati called Dharma, who was very truthful and wedded to righteous living according to the injunctions of the Vedas. He wedded the ten daughters of Dakṣaprajāpati, and four sons called Hari, Kṛṣṇa Nara and Nārāyaṇa were born to him. Hari and Kṛṣṇa turned out to be great Yogins, and Nara and Nārāyaṇa ascetics. Naranārāyaṇas performed penance to please Brahmā for a thousand years at Badarikāśrama in the valley of the Himālayas. Celestial women, whom Indra had deputed to break their penance, approached them and requested them to take them (celestial women) as their wives. Ascetic Nārāyaṇa who got angry at the celestial women's request was about to curse them when sage Nara intervened and pacified him. Then sage Nārāyaṇa told them thus :—"You must protect my Vrata (penance) in this life. In that case, in the next birth I shall satisfy your desire. In the 28th Dvāparayuga I will be incarnating on earth on behalf of the Devas. Then you also may be born as princesses. I shall incarnate as Kṛṣṇa in the Yadu dynasty and marry all of you. (Bhāgavata, 4th Skandha).

Accordingly sage Nārāyaṇa was born as Śrī Kṛṣṇa in the Yadu dynasty, and sage Nara was born as Arjuna to be his companion.

The curse of Bhṛgu the great sage also contributed to Mahāviṣṇu's incarnating himself as Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Once in a war which lasted for 100 years between the Devas and the Asuras most of the latter were killed. Then Śukra, preceptor of the Asuras went to Mount Kailāsa to secure exceptional weapons, and the Asuras took refuge under Kāvyamātā, the mother of Śukra. Devendra sought Mahāviṣṇu's aid, and he cut off Kāvyamātā's head with his Cakra (discus). Bhṛgu was enraged at this killing of a woman. He cursed that Mahāviṣṇu should be born as man. Owing to various reasons like the above Mahāviṣṇu happened to be born as man in the Yādava dynasty, as the son of Vasudeva. (Devī Bhāgavata, 5th Skandha).

3) Vasudeva's wedding. To Śūrasena, the Yādava King of Mathurāpurī was born a son called Vasudeva, and Devakī was born as the grand-daughter of Devaka, the brother of Ugrasena, another Yādava King. Devakī was the sister of Kaṁsa. Devakī was given in marriage to Vasudeva with a dowry of twelve bhāras (a particular weight) of gold and a chariot. Kaṁsa acted as charioteer in the wedding procession during which a celestial voice addressed Kaṁsa as follows :— 'Asyāḥ tvām aṣṭamagarbho hantā' (Her eighth son will kill you). As soon as he heard the celestial voice Kaṁsa stood up in the chariot ablaze with rage. He caught hold of Devakī by her hair and raised his sword to cut her throat. All the conciliatory words of Vasudeva failed to pacify Kaṁsa. Then Vasudeva promised to hand over to Kaṁsa all the children born to Devakī immediately after their birth. Accordingly Kaṁsa left them alone.

4) First-born son of Vasudeva. The first-born child of Vasudeva was duly handed over to Kaṁsa. But, he returned the child to its parents as, according to the celestial voice the first-born child was not to be his enemy. Vasudeva and Devakī brought it up under the name Kīrtimān. On one of those days Nārada visited Kaṁsa and told him about his previous life, the object of Kṛṣṇa's incarnation etc. Then it was that Kaṁsa realised how fatal to him was the existence of Vasudeva and Devakī, and he hurried up to them and killed the child by dashing its head against a rock. He also kept them chained in prison.

5) Kaṁsa's excitement. The information imparted by Nārada upset Kaṁsa much. He shut his father Ugrasena in prison and himself became King. He deputed Asuras like Pralamba, Cāṇūra, Tṛṇāvarta, Muṣṭika, Ariṣṭa, Keśī, Dhenuka, Agha, Vivida and Pūtanā to harass the Yādavas, the Andhakas and the Vṛṣṇis. After the death of Kīrtimān, Devakī, in the prison, delivered five sons. (See under Kaṁsa. Para 2 for the previous history of the first six sons of Devakī). Kaṁsa killed all the five children also as soon as they were born.

6) Birth of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. The Asuras killed in the old Devāsura war were later born as cruel and evil Kings on earth. The burden of such Kings having become too much for her, goddess Earth, in the guise of a cow complained about it to Brahmā who took her to Śiva who too could not find a solution to the problem posed by Bhūmidevī. So, all of them accompanied by the Devas approached Mahāviṣṇu and prayed for the redress of their grievance. Mahāviṣṇu sent them back comforted by the assurance that he would be born as the son of Vasudeva and Devakī to solve the problem. He also arranged the Devas to be born as Gopas and the Apsarā women as Gopikās on earth for his assistance.

Devakī conceived for the 7th time, and it was an aspect of Ananta. Mahāviṣṇu instructed Māyādevī thus : "You go to the earth and transfer the child in Devakī's womb to that of Rohiṇī, the second wife of Vasudeva and after that, at the very time of my birth you should be born as daughter of Yaśodā, wife of Nandagopa. You would be worshipped by the world in various names like Ambikā, Nārāyaṇī, Caṇḍikā, Durgā, Bhadrakālī etc. The child transferred by you to the womb of Rohiṇī will become known as Saṅkarṣaṇa, Balabhadra and Rāma.

Accordingly Māyādevī transferred the child in Devakī's womb to that of Rohiṇī, and it was given out that the seventh child of Devakī was aborted in the womb.

Devakī conceived for the eighth time, and on Aṣṭamī day in the month of Siṁha (Leo, August-September) when the Brāhma stars were collected on the same day was Śrī Kṛṣṇa born. Mahāviṣṇu incarnated himself as Kṛṣṇa with the conch, the discus, the club and the lotus flower in his four hands. Vasudeva saluted the marvellous child, and the chain that bound himself and Devakī broke asunder, and the new-born child spoke thus to Vasudeva :—"In Svāyambhuva Manvantara the Prajāpati called Sutapas with his wife Pṛśni meditated upon me for 12,000 years, and when I appeared to them and asked them to choose any boon they prayed for my being born as their son. In the next life Sutapas was born as Kaśyapa and Pṛśni as Aditi, and I incarnated in the form of Vāmana (Dwarf) as their son. Afterwards Kaśyapa and Aditi took various births, and I too took various births as their son. Now also, Kaśyapa and Aditi, are born as Vasudeva and Devakī. Just at this time a daughter has been born to Nandagopa and Yaśodā at Gokula. You shall take me over there and replace me with the child born at Gokula." After having told Vasudeva the above facts Kṛṣṇa assumed the form of an ordinary child and lay by the side of its mother. At mid-night when the guards at the prison house were deep in sleep the doors of the prison opened by themselves. Vasudeva with the child Kṛṣṇa, started for Gokula and on his way the river Yamunā changed its course for him to proceed. The doors of Yaśodā's house were open. Owing to the divine prowess of Māyādevī, the child of Yaśodā, everybody in the house went into deep sleep. Vasudeva placed Kṛṣṇa by the side of Yśodaā and returned home with her child. As soon as he had thus returned the prison-guards woke up and reported to Kaṁsa about the delivery of a child by Devakī. Kaṁsa rushed to the house, caught hold of the child and was about to dash it against the rock when lo ! the child slipped free of his hands and rose in the sky wherefrom it spoke as follows :—

Oh ! unrighteous and cruel Kaṁsa ! thy prowess is not to be exhibited against women. Thy killer is born on earth, and search for him everywhere. (Śiva Purāṇa, Chapter 1).

7) Colour of Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Balabhadrarāma. Śrī Kṛṣṇa was dark in colour and Balabhadra white. There is a story in the Mahābhārata to explain this difference in their colour. The Devas informed Mahāviṣṇu of their decision to incarnate themselves on earth for the annihilation of the evil and cruel people. Pleased at their decision Viṣṇu plucked from his head a black hair and also a white hair and threw them on the ground, and he said that the black hair would enter Devakī and be born as Kṛṣṇa while the white one would enter Rohiṇī and be born as Balabhadra. Accordingly Kṛṣṇa became of the colour of the cloud (black) and Balabhadra white in colour. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 199, Verse 31).

8) The incidents during the childhood of Śrī Kṛṣṇa.

(1) Pūtanāmokṣa (Salvation to Pūtanā). Pūtanā, a Rākṣasī and one of the assassins deputed by Kaṁsa to search out and kill Kṛṣṇa, went to Kṛṣṇa's house disguised as a Gopa woman and fed him on her breasts. But the child extracted her life also with her breast-milk, and she assumed her original form and fell down dead.

(2) Śakaṭāsura killed. Kaṁsa next deputed the Asura called Śakaṭa to kill Kṛṣṇa. He approached the sleeping Kṛṣṇa in the form of a cart and raised great sound. Kṛṣṇa jumped awake and kicked the cart into hundreds of pieces. (See under Śakaṭa).

(3) Killed Tṛṇāvartāsura. Tṛṇāvarta, son of Tārakāsura, at the behest of Kaṁsa went to Ambāḍi in an invisible (formless) manner. Yaśodā was then breast-feeding child Kṛṣṇa, and the child appeared to gradually increase in weight. Yaśodā tried to lay the child on the bed, but had to lay him on the ground as it was too heavy for her to lift up to the bed. At once, Tṛṇāvarta, in the form of a whirl-wind, rose up to the sky carrying Kṛṣṇa along with him. Ambāḍi (Gokula) was chokingly filled with clouds of dust : the Gopālas cried out. But, Śrī Kṛṣṇa clasped round the Asura's neck and rested, and on account of the child's weight he could not rise any more. The child hardened its hands around the Asura's throat and he got killed and fell down with a thud on a rock. Yaśodā hurriedly took the child in her hands and covered it with kisses. (See under Tṛṇāvarta).

(4) Naming. During this period the famous sage Garga visited Kṛṣṇa at Ambāḍi, and he informed Vasudeva and Devakī of the actual facts relating to Kṛṣṇa. The son of Rohiṇī was brought there, and the sage named him Rāma, and Yaśodā's child Kṛṣṇa, and blessed them. Thenceforth Rāma and Kṛṣṇa grew up in Ambāḍi as the apple of the people's eyes. (See under Garga).

(5) All the worlds in Kṛṣṇa's mouth. The Gopikās once saw Kṛṣṇa eating mud and informed Yaśodā of it, and she, in great anger, opened the child's mouth to look for the sand when she saw there all the worlds including herself and she closed her eyes in great alarm. (Bhāgavata 10th Skandha).

(6) Kṛṣṇa drags Ulūkhala. (Mortar). Yaśodā was once breast-feeding Kṛṣṇa when she noticed milk flowing out of the boiling pan, and she put the child on the floor and went to attend to the boiling milk. Angry at this Kṛṣṇa broke the milk-pot by throwing a stone at it. Yaśodā then tried to bind the child to the mortar with a cord. But, any number of cords could not reach round the child's waist. At this trouble of his mother Kṛṣṇa decided to oblige her and then the first cord itself sufficed to bind him round the mortar. But, Kṛṣṇa then began running, dragging the mortar behind him. Dragging the Ulūkhala behind him he passed through a narrow gap between two trees. The trees were shaken and at once the trees rose up in the sky as two Devas. The two trees were actually Nalakūbara and Maṇigrīva, the sons of Vaiśravaṇa, both of whom had been cursed into the form of trees by Nārada. (See under Nalakūbara).

(7) Vatsāsura killed. Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Balabhadrarāma were one day, engaged in sports along with the Gopālas on the banks of river Kālindī. At that time an Asura sent by Kaṁsa got into the ranks of the cows disguised as a cow. Śrī Kṛṣṇa understood it; Balabhadra also pointed out the new 'cow' to him. Then Kṛṣṇa leisurely went towards the herd of cattle, lifted the new 'cow' by its legs and tail and dashed it against a peepal tree. The peepal tree and the one next to it were broken, and thus ended the life of Vatsāsura.

(8) Baka killed. On another occasion Kaṁsa deputed Bakāsura, brother of Pūtanā to kill Kṛṣṇa. He assumed the form of a bird, and lay there on the road with his fierce mouth wide open. The Gopālas were terror-stricken. But, Kṛṣṇa entered the cave-like mouth of the bird leaving his companions behind. The Asura closed his mouth, and the Gopālas cried out in fear and agony. But, Śrī Kṛṣṇa stirred round and round within Baka's stomach and he was forced to vomit Kṛṣṇa out. Along with Kṛṣṇa he vomited blood and died. (See under Baka).

(9) Killed Aghāsura. Aghāsura, brother of Baka and Pūtanā, deputed by Kaṁsa to kill Kṛṣṇa assumed the form of a serpent and with its mouth opened like a cave lay on the road used by the Gopālas. The stench that emanated from its mouth vitiated the atmosphere. The Gopālas including Kṛṣṇa and Balabhadra entered the serpent's mouth, and immediately its entire body shook and it vomited blood. Life escaped through its broken stomach. The Gopālas came out of it and fell down unconscious. But, at the very sight of Kṛṣṇa they regained consciousness. (See under Agha).

(10) Brahmā placed in ridiculous situation. On another occasion Brahmā saw Mahāviṣṇu, in the assumed form of man, playing on the banks of the Kālindī along with Balabhadra and his companions. To test whether God possessed powers in the assumed form of man also Brahmā carried away the cattle of the Gopālas. The Gopālas were naturally upset at the disappearance of their cows. After consoling them Kṛṣṇa searched for the cattle on the heights of mount Govardhana and in the forest. But, the cattle were to be found nowhere, and when Kṛṣṇa returned to the banks of the Kālindī the Gopālas too had disappeared. Divining the reason for the whole affair by his divine powers, Kṛṣṇa created both the Gopālas and the cows with his divine powers. One year passed by thus, and one day Kṛṣṇa and his companions with their cattle went to the top of Govardhana. Brahmā was alarmed to find Kṛṣṇa with the artificially created Gopālas and the cattle, and while he was looking at them the colour of all of them began changing and within minutes they put on the form of Viṣṇu. Moreover, he saw another Brahmā and Brahmaloka. Upset and alarmed by the whole phenomenon he sang the praises of Mahāviṣṇu at which his illusion was lifted and he saw the actual Kṛṣṇa, the Gopālas and the cattle.

(11) Dhenukāsura killed. There lived in the Kadalī forest on the banks of the Kālindī an Asura called Dhenuka with his followers. The forest was thick with palm trees. Out of fear of the Asura nobody dared to travel in the forest. Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Balabhadra having heard the story about Dhenuka one day went to the forest with their companions. Balabhadra shook down a lot of the palm fruits ; the Gopālas loudly cheered him. The Asura rushed forth challenging them when Kṛṣṇa and Balabhadra thrashed him to death.

(12) Suppressed Kāliya. There lived in Kālindī a fierce serpent called Kāliya with his wife and relations. The trees on the banks of the river were withered and had dried up on account of the poisonous breath emitted by the serpent. One day the Gopālas and their cattle drank water in the Kālindī and fell down dead. Then Kṛṣṇa climbed a tree on the banks of the river and jumped into its waters and Kāliya rushed forward to him with his hoods spread out. Kṛṣṇa stepped on the hoods and danced thereon. Kāliya vomited blood, got exhausted and prayed to Kṛṣṇa for mercy. At the instance of Kṛṣṇa the serpent with its family emigrated to the Ramaṇaka island. (See under Kāliya).

(13) Kṛṣṇa swallows fire. When Kṛṣṇa came out of the waters after having suppressed Kāliya and taking with him the gem presented by Kāliya, the Gopālas covered Kṛṣṇa with embraces. People of Ambāḍi came to the banks of the Kālindī looking out for the children. As the sun had set by now the Yādavas spent the night there, when a wild fire enveloped them, and they cried out to Kṛṣṇa. Kṛṣṇa swallowed the entire fire. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

(14) Killed Pralamba. While the Gopālas were playing once under the shade of a giant peepal tree called Bhāṇḍīraka an Asura known as Pralamba joined their games disguised as a Gopāla. Kṛṣṇa and Balabhadra understood the trick. They made all the others take the following pledge, i.e. that all of them would beat one another, and the vanquished should carry about the victor on his head. The beating began, and the Gopa called Śrīdāman defeated Kṛṣṇa. Vṛṣabha defeated Bhadrasena and Balabhadra defeated Pralamba. According to the pledge Śrī Kṛṣṇa carried on his shoulders Śrīdāman, Bhadrasena carried Vṛṣabha and Pralamba carried Balabhadra. But, Pralamba rose up to the skies with Balabhadra, who broke the former's head, and Pralamba fell down dead in his actual form as an Asura.

(15) Again in wild fire. The Gopālas were once again caught in wild fire at the Muñja forest on the banks of the Kālindī. They cried out in great fear when Kṛṣṇa went to them and asked them to remain standing with eyes closed. They obeyed him, and he swallowed the fire as though it were nectar. The Gopālas were astonished to find themselves safe when they opened their eyes. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

(16) Blessed the wives of Brahmins. Kṛṣṇa and his companions one day travelled a long way along the banks of the Kālindī. They felt very hungry and Kṛṣṇa advised them to request for food at brahmin houses. They begged for food the wives of brahmins, and the wives happy at Kṛṣṇa's presence there, came with food. Kṛṣṇa blessed them. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

(17) Theft of clothes. Kṛṣṇa once picked up the clothes of the Gopa women who were bathing in the Kālindī and climbed to the top of a tree with the clothes and played on his flute. The Gopa women came out of the river and saluted Kṛṣṇa with folded hands. He then returned the clothes to them. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

(18) Mount Govardhana used as Umbrella. Indra is the rain-God. The people of Ambāḍi used to perform yajña every year in favour of Indra for rain-fall. Kṛṣṇa opposed the custom saying that Mount Govardhana was the house-hold deity of the people of Ambāḍi and it was enough for them to worship the mountain. The people of Ambāḍi, therefore, offered the Yajña they had arranged that year for Indra to Govardhana. Angered at this Indra let loose heavy rains on Ambāḍi. Kṛṣṇa uprooted and held Mount Govardhana like an umbrella lest the people should suffer from the heavy rains, and they took shelter under it. The rain did not stop even after seven days. Yet, due to Kṛṣṇa's kindness the people did not suffer any hardships. Beaten at his own game, Indra sang the praises of Kṛṣṇa. Devasurabhi (cow of the Devas) came and saluted Kṛṣṇa and anointed him, as the Indra of the Gopālas. The Devas addressed him 'Govinda' meaning, he who protects the cattle. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

(19) Nandagopa abducted by Varuṇa. Once after having observed Ekādaśīvrata Nanda bathed in the river Kālindī. At the instance of Varuṇa a Deva abducted and took him to the abode of Varuṇa. People of Ambāḍi were distressed at the disappearance of Nandagopa. Kṛṣṇa and Balabhadra dived into the Kālindī and rose up at Varuṇālaya. Varuṇa told them that he had abducted Nandagopa so that he might see Viṣṇu in person, and requested to be pardoned. Meanwhile the people of Ambāḍi, who came to Kālindī saw all the worlds reflected in it. Kṛṣṇa and Rāma returned to Ambāḍi with their father, Nandagopa. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

(20) Rāsakrīḍā. At the advent of the spring the melody of Kṛṣṇa's flute rendered the Gopa women love-lorn. He went to Vṛndāvana with his flute, and all the Gopa women, both married and unmarried followed him. Kṛṣṇa made a futile attempt to send them back to their houses. But, the love-sick Gopa women did not. Suddenly Kṛṣṇa disappeared from among them, and the Gopa women mad with love roamed about Vṛndāvana with Rādhā calling "O Kṛṣṇa ! Kṛṣṇa !" Suddenly Kṛṣṇa appeared before them. He entered the waters of the Kālindī with them and satisfied them. Śrī Kṛṣṇa thus explained Bhaktiyoga to the world. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

(21) Python swallowed Nandagopa. One day the Gopas performed Maheśvara Pūjā (worship) in Devī forest, and they spent the night without going to sleep on the banks of the Kālindī. A python from somewhere began swallowing Nandagopa. Though the Gopas tried their best the snake did not loosen its grip on Nandagopa. Then Kṛṣṇa gave it a kick and the snake transformed itself into a Deva called Sudarśana. He was a Vidyādhara, who had been converted into a python by the curse of sage Aṅgiras. (See under Sudarśana).

(22) Killed Ariṣṭāsura. (Vṛṣāsura). During this period Ariṣṭāsura, a follower of Kaṁsa, came to Ambāḍi disguised as an ox, and people got terror-stricken at the sight of the fierce ox. Kṛṣṇa engaged himself in a duel with the ox (Ariṣṭa) and killed it. (See under Ariṣṭa).

(23) Killed Keśī. Kaṁsa then sent an Asura called Keśī to Ambāḍi. He approached Kṛṣṇa in the guise of a horse into whose mouth the latter thrust his hand, which began growing in size with the result that the Asura vomited blood and expired ; Kṛṣṇa got the name Keśava as he killed Keśī. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

(24) Killed Vyomāsura. Vyomāsura, son of Mayāsura was the last of the Asuras deputed by Kaṁsa to kill Kṛṣṇa. He joined the company of the Gopas disguised as a goat. Kṛṣṇa dragged him into a cave and killed him there. (Bhāgavata 10th Skandha).

9) Śrī Kṛṣṇa quits Ambāḍi. When all the attempts of Kaṁsa to do away with Kṛṣṇa failed he resorted to another trick. Kaṁsa invited Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Balabhadra, feigning great affection, to witness the dhanur yajña (worshipping the bow) being held at Mathurāpurī, the capital of the country. The invitation was sent through Akrūra, a great devotee of Kṛṣṇa. He went to Ambāḍi with a chariot and delivered to Kṛṣṇa and Balabhadra Kaṁsa's invitation to them for the fourteen days' dhanur yajña. The Gopas and Gopīs shed tears at the prospect of Kṛṣṇa leaving Ambāḍi. But, Kṛṣṇa and Balabhadra took leave of them and started for Mathurāpurī in the chariot brought by Akrūra. On their way to Mathurā they bathed in the Kālindī and when they dived in its waters Akrūra saw the Viśvarūpa (Cosmic form of Kṛṣṇa). After the bath they continued their journey when Akrūra informed Kṛṣṇa in secret, about all the evil tactics of Kaṁsa and requested him to kill the latter. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

10). Rāma and Kṛṣṇa in Mathurāpurī.

(1) Rajakavadha (the washerman is slain). Rāma and Kṛṣṇa duly reached Mathurāpurī, and in the evening they went out for a stroll in the city to view its beauties when they saw a washerman carrying the washed clothes of Kaṁsa. They asked him for some of the clothes but the washerman not only refused them the clothes but also ridiculed them calling them cattle-breeders. Śrī Kṛṣṇa thrashed the washerman on the spot and distributed the clothes among the children who had gathered there, himself wearing a yellow cloth from the stock and giving a blue one to Balabhadra.

(2) Kañcukakāra (tailor) given salvation. Next, they saw a tailor who used to stitch shirts, turbans etc. for Kaṁsa. He presented costly shirts and turbans to Rāma and Kṛṣṇa. Kṛṣṇa gave him salvation and distributed the clothes to the Gopas with him.

(3) Sudāman presents garlands. Then Kṛṣṇa and Rāma entered the house of Sudāman who gave them each a garland. Kṛṣṇa blessed him.

(4) Straightened the hunch-back Trivakrā. Rāma and Kṛṣṇa continued their walk when they saw a female hunch-back coming opposite to them with a beautiful vessel filled with aṅgarāga (fragrant things like sandalwood, musk etc. reduced into a paste to be smeared on the body). She told them that she was the maid-in-attendance of Kaṁsa ; her name was Trivakrā and the aṅgarāga in the vessel was for the use of Kaṁsa. She felt pure love for Kṛṣṇa and gave him the aṅgarāga along with the vessel. Rāma and Kṛṣṇa smeared their bodies with it. Kṛṣṇa stepped on her feet and with his right hand raised her chin upwards and she was cured of her hunch. Her love for Kṛṣṇa knew no bounds and she begged him to spend the night in her house. Kṛṣṇa promised to oblige her on another occasion and continued the walk.

(5) Kṛṣṇa broke the bow. Rāma and Kṛṣṇa continued their walk into the Yajña hall of Kaṁsa. A big bow was seen there, and Kṛṣṇa broke it with his left hand before the guards could approach him. With the broken pieces of the bow he killed the soldiers sent by Kaṁsa to take him and Rāma into custody. They again continued their walk. The sun set, and though they lay down to sleep thoughts about the underhand dealings of Kaṁsa kept them sleepless.

(6) Kṛṣṇa killed the fierce elephant. That night Kṛṣṇa dreamt many an inauspicious dream. The next morning Kaṁsa set up an arena for pugilistic combats. Yādava chiefs like Nandagopa, many other important persons in Mathurā and Kaṁsa took their seats on the dais. Famous pugilists like Cāṇūra, Muṣṭika, Kūṭa, Śala and Kosala also entered the scene. Kaṁsa had stationed a fierce elephant called Kuvalayāpīḍa on the way Rāma and Kṛṣṇa had to take to enter the arena for pugilistic competition. The mahout prompted the elephant to catch hold of Kṛṣṇa, and in the fight that ensued with the animal Kṛṣṇa killed it and gave one tusk of it to Rāma. Kṛṣṇa beat the mahout also to death with the tusk. After this they entered the scene.

(7) Kaṁsa killed. The pugilistic competition started. Cāṇūra fought against Kṛṣṇa and Muṣṭika against Rāma and both Cāṇūra and Muṣṭika were killed. Rāma and Kṛṣṇa killed three other famous pugilists too, who confronted them following the death of Cāṇūra and Muṣṭika. Thereupon the remaining pugilists ran away into the forest. Kaṁsa, burning with anger, jumped up from his seat roaring, "Annihilate the Gopālas, kill Nandgopa, drown Ugrasena, the friend of our enemies, in the Kālindī" etc. Responding to Kaṁsa's war-cry Śrī Kṛṣṇa jumped into the former's sofa and pushed him down. Kṛṣṇa jumped on to the back of Kaṁsa and killed him. Balabhadra killed with his iron club the eight brothers of Kaṁsa who rushed against Kṛṣṇa. After consoling the women, who lamented over the death of Kaṁsa and others Śrī Kṛṣṇa got their dead bodies duly cremated. Rāma and Kṛṣṇa released Vasudeva and Devakī and Ugrasena immediately from prison. Ugrasena was crowned King of Mathurā.

(8) Farewell to the people of Ambāḍi. Rāma and Kṛṣṇa saluted Nandagopa and Yaśodā, and entrusted to them their clothes and bows for safe custody. Then saying that they would return after strengthening the Yadu dynasty, Rāma and Kṛṣṇa sent their parents and the other Gopas home. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

11) Education of Rāma and Kṛṣṇa.

(1) After bidding adieu to the people of Ambāḍi, Vasudeva, on the advice of sage Garga sent Rāma and Kṛṣṇa for their studies to the Āśrama of the great sage Sāndīpani. During their education at the Āśrama Kṛṣṇa and Kucela became intimate friends. One day, at the instance of the wife of their preceptor, Kṛṣṇa and Kucela went into the forest to gather firewood. In the heavy rain and storm that followed they lost their track and wandered about in the forest. The next day the preceptor brought them back from the forest. Kṛṣṇa learned the sixty-four arts and dhanurveda (science of archery) at the feet of Sāndīpani. (Bhārata, Southern Text, Page 802 ; Sabhā Parva, Chapter 38).

(2) Gurudakṣiṇā (Preceptor's fees). When Rāma and Kṛṣṇa completed their studies they asked the preceptor as to what he wanted by way of tuition fee, and the guru wanted to get back his son, who was, years ago, drowned in Prabhāsa tīrtha. Accordingly Rāma and Kṛṣṇa went in their chariot to Varuṇa at the sea coast. Varuṇa told them that it was the Asura called Pañcajana, who lived in the sea in the form of a conch, who had killed their preceptor's son. Śrī Kṛṣṇa entered the sea and killed the Asura. But, the child was not to be seen inside the conch. Blowing this conch, which in later years became famous as Pāñcajanya, Rāma and Kṛṣṇa went to Yama's abode, who on being told about the object of their visit returned the child to Rāma and Kṛṣṇa. They presented the child to their preceptor. He blessed them and they returned to Mathurāpurī.

12) Upto Kṛṣṇa's return to Dvārakā.

(1) Message through Uddhava. Rāma and Kṛṣṇa who returned to Mathurāpurī after their studies at Sāndīpani's Āśrama thought about the people of Ambāḍi. It was a long time since they had heard about them. So Kṛṣṇa sent a massage to Ambāḍi by his minister Uddhava. After duly delivering the message Uddhava stayed at Ambāḍi four or five months after which he returned to Mathurā with the presents given to Kṛṣṇa by Nandagopa, Yaśodā and the other Gopas.

(2) Visited Trivakrā. Kṛṣṇa had promised to visit the house of Trivakrā at the time he cured her of her hunch, and she had been for long awaiting Kṛṣṇa. But only now he got the opportunity to fulfil his promise. He accepted her hospitality at her house and thus ended her grief.

(3) Interested himself in the Pāṇḍavas. By this time Pāṇḍu had died. The Pāṇḍavas and Kuntī, sister of Kṛṣṇa's father were living at Hastināpura along with the Kauravas. They were victims to all sorts of miseries. Hearing about the sad plight of the Pāṇḍavas Kṛṣṇa deputed Akrūra to Hastināpura to enquire about them. Kuntīdevī, with tears in her eyes, told Akrūra about the injustice being done against the Pāṇḍavas by the Kauravas and the continuous attempts being made to kill Bhīma. Akrūra visited important persons like Vidura, Dhṛtarāṣṭra etc. Akrūra exhorted Dhṛtarāṣṭra, who had succeeded Pāṇḍu as King, to mete out equal justice to Kauravas as well as to the Pāṇḍavas. Akrūra returned to Mathurā and gave a report to Kṛṣṇa about his visit to the Pāṇḍavas.

(4) The Jarāsandha war. Asti and Prāpti, wives of Kaṁsa complained about the killing of their husband by Kṛṣṇa to their father Jarāsandha, King of Magadha. Jarāsandha, aided by such famous Kings as Sālva, Kaliṅga, Cedirāja, Dantavaktra and Śiśupāla besieged Mathurāpurī with a big army. Yādava leaders like Kṛṣṇa, Balabhadra, Uddhava, Akrūra and Kṛtavarman met the enemies in battle in which many kings got killed. Balabhadra met Jarāsandha in duel, but let him off on the request of Kṛṣṇa. But, Jarāsandha, supported by Bāṇāsura and others besieged Mathurā again and again. When Balabhadra attempted to kill Jarāsandha, a celestial voice declared that it was not possible for the former to kill Jarāsandha, and the war, therefore, ended for the time being.

(5) Kṛṣṇa and Balabhadra meet Paraśurāma. The continuous war with Jarāsandha reduced the financial resources of the Yādavas and to replenish their treasury Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Balabhadra started for mount Gomantaka the repository of gems and on their way they saw Paraśurāma engaged in penance under a peepal tree. Paraśurāma told them that there was a kingdom at the foot of the Gomantaka called Karavīra ruled by King Sṛgālavāsudeva and advised them to kill him and collect enough money and gems. Kṛṣṇa and Balabhadra did so and reached Pravarṣaṇagiri with money and gems so collected. There Garuḍa brought back to Kṛṣṇa his crown which had been, sometime back, stolen away by Bāṇāsura. Kṛṣṇa and Rāma returned to Mathurāpurī.

Since Sṛgālavāsudeva had been killed by Kṛṣṇa and Rāma, Jarāsandha attacked Mathurāpurī again, for the eighteenth time. Though during all the wars Jarāsandha was defeated, by that time the Yādava power had been weakened much and so Kṛṣṇa ultimately decided to leave Mathurā and found another kingdom somewhere else. Kṛṣṇa had two reasons to come to this decision. Firstly, Jarāsandha was the father-in-law of his uncle Kaṁsa. Next, it was Jarāsandha's object to conquer Mathurāpurī for Kaṁsa's sons. Taking into consideration the above two objects of Jarāsandha, Kṛṣṇa and Rāma voluntarily quitted Mathurā with the Yādavas and went and lived in the city built for them by Viśvakarman on an island called Dvārakā in the western sea. (See under Kuśasthalī). (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

13) Kṛṣṇa killed Kālayavana. King Kālayavana wanted to conquer Mathurāpurī for which purpose he performed penance and secured from Śiva the boon that none of the Yādavas would be able to kill him. Kṛṣṇa had shifted to Dvārakā, somewhat dejected by the thought that Kālayavana could not be killed because of the protection accorded by Śiva's boon.

Another thing also happened at this juncture. King Mucukunda, son of Māndhātā had on the request of Indra gone to Devaloka and defeated the Asuras in war. Indra asked him to choose his reward for this service and Mucukunda wanted to be shown a place for him to sleep as he had not slept for a long time. Indra, accordingly showed him a cave on earth and told him that he who disturbed him in sleep would be reduced to ashes by his very look. Mucukunda went to sleep in that cave.

Kālayavana approached Kṛṣṇa to kill him and the latter, pretending to be in fear of Kālayavana, ran before him. Kālayavana followed Kṛṣṇa, who entered the cave where Mucukunda was sleeping and he followed Kṛṣṇa into the cave also. Kālayavana, mistaking Mucukunda for Kṛṣṇa, kicked him violently whereupon he jumped up from sleep and looked at Kālayavana, who was reduced to ashes. Then Kṛṣṇa appeared before Mucukunda. who praised the former. On the advice of Kṛṣṇa he performed penance at Badarikāśrama and attained salvation. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

14) Śrī Kṛṣṇa escaped from fire. Balabhadra and Kṛṣṇa started for Dvārakā carrying all the riches of Kālayavana. They met Jarāsandha on their way and took to their heels. Jarāsandha followed them to the heights of Mount Pravarṣaṇa where they disappeared. Jarāsandha set fire to the four sides of the mountain when Rāma and Kṛṣṇa escaped secretly from the fire to Dvārakā. Jarāsandha returned to Magadha believing that both his antagonists were burned to death. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

15) Wedding of Rāma and Kṛṣṇa.

(1) Balabhadra-Revatī. Balabhadra married Revatī, daughter of King Ānarta of Kuśasthalī, former name of Dvārakā.

(2) Kṛṣṇa-Rukmiṇī. King Bhīṣmaka of Vidarbha had five sons the eldest of whom was Rukmī. His sixth child was a daughter and she was named Rukmiṇī. Stories about Kṛṣṇa kindled in Rukmiṇī love for him. Rukmī, who hated Kṛṣṇa, wanted to give his sister in marriage to Śiśupāla. Rukmiṇī sent through a brahmin a message about the affair to Dvārakā. On the day of Rukmiṇī's Svayaṁvara Rāma and Kṛṣṇa also went to Kuṇḍinapurī, capital of Vidarbha. and Kṛṣṇa. in the presence of all Kings, carried Rukmiṇī away in his chariot. The Kings who, under the leadership of Rukmī, attacked Kṛṣṇa were routed. A son called Pradyumna was born to Kṛṣṇa by Rukmiṇī. (See under Pradyumna).

(3) Kṛṣṇa-Jāmbavatī. Prasena, brother of the Yādava King Satrājit, went ahunting wearing on him the gem called Syamantaka presented to the latter by the Sun-god. Jāmbavān saw a lion carrying off the gem after killing Prasena. He killed the lion, recovered the gem from it and gave it to his children to play with. A rumour was spread that it was Kṛṣṇa who had killed and stolen the gem. Kṛṣṇa searched for the gem in the forest and found it out in the cave of Jāmbavān. In the duel that ensued between Jāmbavān and Kṛṣṇa the former was defeated. He recognised Kṛṣṇa to be the Lord, and presented Syamantaka and also his daughter Jāmbavatī to Kṛṣṇa and Jāmbavatī thus became Kṛṣṇa's wife. (See under Syamantaka).

(4) Śrī Kṛṣṇa-Satyabhāmā. Śrī Kṛṣṇa returned Syamantaka to Satrājit and he, in return, gave his daughter Satyabhāmā in marriage to Kṛṣṇa. Though Syamantaka was given to Kṛṣṇa by way of dowry he did not accept it. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

(5) Śrī Kṛṣṇa-Kālindī. The happy news that the Pāṇḍavas had escaped from the lac palace and were living at Khāṇḍavaprastha took some time to reach Kṛṣṇa, who had been pained to know that they were burned to death in the palace. As soon as Kṛṣṇa knew that the Pāṇḍavas were safe at Khāṇḍavaprastha he went to them along with Yādava chiefs like Sātyaki and others. It was then that the fire-god Vahni, requested Arjuna for the Khāṇḍava forest for his food and Arjuna consented to it. It was Kṛṣṇa who drove Arjuna's chariot in his fight with Indra at the burning of the forest by Agnideva. (See under Khāṇḍavadāha). Arjuna saved Maya from the Khāṇḍava fire and Maya, in return for the kindness, built a palace for the Pāṇḍavas at Indraprastha. Kṛṣṇa also lived there for a few days. One day while Kṛṣṇa was strolling on the banks of the Kālindī in the company of Arjuna they saw a woman, who told them that her name was Kālindī and that she would marry none but Kṛṣṇa. Kṛṣṇa then took her as his wife. (See under Kālindī). After staying at Indraprastha for three or four months Kṛṣṇa returned to Dvārakā with Kālindī. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

(6) Śrī Kṛṣṇa-Mitravindā. The King of Avantī had married Rājādhidevī, sister of Kṛṣṇa's father and they had two sons called Vinda and Anuvinda and a daughter Mitravindā, who had fixed in her mind Kṛṣṇa as her husband. Kṛṣṇa, who was present at her Svayaṁvara carried her off on his chariot to Dvārakā.
(7) Śrī Kṛṣṇa-Satyā. King Nagnajit of Kosala, father of Satyā, had seven oxen like elephants in strength. The King proclaimed that his daughter would be married to the person who would tie down the oxen. Various Kings attempted the task but failed. Ultimately Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa went to Kosala and Kṛṣṇa assumed seven forms and tied down the oxen with cords. The seven oxen at once fell down. Kṛṣṇa took Satyā for his wife.
(8) Śrī Kṛṣṇa-Kaikeyī (Bhadrā). Kṛṣṇa married Kaikeyī, the daughter of Śrutakīrti, sister of Kṛṣṇa's father.
(9) Śrī Kṛṣṇa-Lakṣmaṇā. Lakṣmaṇā, daughter of King of Madra chose Kṛṣṇa at her Svayaṁvara and she became Kṛṣṇa's wife.
(10) *Kṛṣṇa-*16000 women. Brahmā had given the boon to the 16000 daughters of Narakāsura in their previous birth that Viṣṇu would marry them in their next birth. While even the Devas were suffering on account of Narakāsura, Śrī Kṛṣṇa along with Satyabhāmā mounted Garuḍa, went to Prāgjyotiṣa, the kingdom of Narakāsura, defeated him in fight and released his 16000 daughters from captivity. He returned with them to Dvārakā, assumed the guise of 16000 men and married those 16000 girls. He built a palace for each of his 16000 wives. (For details see under Narakāsura).
16) Kṛṣṇa's 16008 wives. The eight women, i.e. Rukmiṇī, Jāmbavatī, Satyabhāmā, Kālindī, Mitravindā, Satyā, Kaikeyī (Bhadrā) Lakṣmaṇā and the 16000 daughters of Narakāsura constituted Kṛṣṇa's harem. (The 16000 daughters of Narakāsura are not mentioned by name in the Purāṇas). (See under Sudattā and Ketumān IV.)
17) Gave Salvation to Ghaṇṭākarṇas. Ghaṇṭa and Karṇa were two demon brothers. Kṛṣṇa met them at Badarikāśrama where he had gone after his marriage with Rukmiṇī, to perform penance to Śiva for a child. Kṛṣṇa offered salvation to the two demon brothers, Ghaṇṭa and Karṇa.
18) Fight between Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna. (See under Gālava).
19) Killed Murāsura. (See under Mura).
20) Killed Narakāsura. (See under Naraka).
21) Plucked away Pārijāta. During the period when Narakāsura was having his own ways on the earth and when he took away by force Indra's royal umbrella and the ear-rings of Aditi, the Devamātā, Indra sought Kṛṣṇa's help to suppress the Asura. Kṛṣṇa along with Satyabhāmā, mounted Garuḍa, went and killed the Asura and restored the royal umbrella to Indra and the ear-rings to Aditi. On their way back home Kṛṣṇa, as desired by Satyabhāmā, plucked by its roots the Pārijāta from Devaloka at which Indra fought Kṛṣṇa, but got defeated. The Pārijāta was brought to Dvārakā and planted in front of Satyabhāmā's palace. It is stated that Pārijāta was thus brought and planted by Kṛṣṇa to alleviate the grief caused to Satyabhāmā by the return by Kṛṣṇa of Syamantaka to Satrājit. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).
22) Kṛṣṇa's sons and grand-children. Ten sons were born to each of the eight chief wives—from Rukmiṇī to Lakṣmaṇā—of Kṛṣṇa. Names of the chief among those eighty sons are given below.
(1) Of Rukmiṇī—Pradyumna, Cārudekṣṇa, Sudekṣṇa, Cārudeha, Sucāru, Cārugupta, Bhadracāru, Cārucandra, Aticāru, Cāru.
(2) Of Jāmbavatī—Sāmba, Sumitra.
(3) Of Satyabhāmā — Bhānu, Subhānu, Svarbhānu, Prabhānu, Bhānumān, Candrabhānu, Bṛhadbhānu, Havirbhānu, Śrībhānu, Pratibhānu.
(4) Of Kālindī—Śruta.
(5) Of Mitravindā—Vṛkahaṁsa.
(6) Of Satyā—Bhānucandra.
(7) Of Bhadrā—Saṅgrāmacitta.
(8) Of Lakṣmaṇā—Praghoṣa.
A daughter called Rukmāvatī was born to Rukmī, brother of Rukmiṇī. Pradyumna married Rukmāvatī and Aniruddha was their son. It was this Aniruddha, who wedded Uṣā. Cārumatī, the daughter of Rukmiṇī was married by the son of Kṛtavarman. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).
23) Kṛṣṇa tested Rukmiṇī While Śrī Kṛṣṇa was once having a chat with Rukmiṇī he wanted to test her love for him. So he told her that he was penniless and helpless and was hiding from his enemies there at Dvārakā and that he would only be really glad if she married some other powerful King. Kṛṣṇa had not completed his sentences when Rukmiṇī fell down unconscious. Kṛṣṇa then consoled her. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).
24) Kṛṣṇa fought with Bāṇa. See under Bāṇa
25) Kṛṣṇa killed Pauṇḍraka. See under Pauṇḍraka.
26) Nṛga given salvation. See under Nṛga.
27) Śrīkṛṣṇa blessed Pāñcālī at the time of her Svayaṁvara (See under Pāñcālī).
28) Subhadrā given in marriage to Arjuna. Arjuna had to go on a pilgrimage for one year as atonement for having got into the palace where Yudhiṣṭhira was spending the days with Pāñcālī. It was during this period of his pilgrimage that Arjuna married Subhadrā, who was the younger sister of Kṛṣṇa due to whose cleverness alone Arjuna got her as his wife. (For details see under Subhadrā).
29) Kṛṣṇa got the club called Kaumodakī and he saved Maya. See under Khāṇḍavadāha.
30) Kṛṣṇa with the Pāṇḍavas. The rest of Kṛṣṇa's life was intimately connected with the history of the Pāṇḍavas. Important roles played by Kṛṣṇa during the period up to the great war, are summarised below.
(1) He conducted Yajña continuously for many years for the protection of Dharma (righteousness). (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 16).
(2) Permitted Yudhiṣṭhira to perform Rājasūya yajña. (Chapter 14, Sabhā Parva, M.B.).
(3) Along with Bhīma and Arjuna, he went to Mathurā in the guise of a brahmin and killed Jarāsandha. (See under Jarāsandha).
(4) He crowned Sahadeva, son of Jarāsandha, as King of Mathurā. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 24, Verse 43).
(5) He gave a lot of money as donation at the Rājasūya Yajña of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 33, Verse 13).

(6) He was presented with ear-rings by Bhūmidevī (goddess Earth). (Sabhā Parva, Page 808, Southern text).
(7) He killed Śiśupāla. (See under Śiśupāla).
(8) He made the clothes of Pāñcālī unending when Duryodhana tried to strip her naked in the royal assembly. (See under Pāñcālī).
(9) He fought Sālva and Saubha. (See under Sālva and Saubha).
(10) He once took Subhadrā and Arjuna to Dvārakā. (Vana Parva, Chapter 22; Verses 47, 48).
(11) He consoled the Pāṇḍavas at the Kāmyaka forest. (Vana Parva, Chapter 183, Verse 16).
(12) He ate the bit of a leaf of greens from Pāñcālī's vessel and was pleased with her. (See under Pāñcālī).
(13) Attended the wedding of Abhimanyu at Upaplavyanagara and gave a lot of money to Dharmaputra. (Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 72, Verse 24).
(14) He sent to the court of King Virāṭa a messenger, who explained to him the corrupt ways of the Kauravas and the righteousness of the Pāṇḍavas. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 1).
31) Tested by Nārada. Nārada wanted to know how Kṛṣṇa managed to satisfy all his 16008 wives. For this purpose he visited their houses and Nārada was wonder-struck to find Kṛṣṇa engaged in conversation with his wives in all the houses he visited. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).
32) Kṛṣṇa blessed Kucela. See under Kucela.
33) The story of Santānagopālam. See para 7 (d) under Arjuna.
34) Kṛṣṇa feigned sleep. The Kauravas refused to part with half the kingdom to the Pāṇḍavas, who had returned from their exile in the forest. Both the sides began preparations for war. Duryodhana went to Dvārakā to invite Kṛṣṇa to his side, and seeing him at a distance Kṛṣṇa feigned sleep and lay down there. Duryodhana occupied a stool at the head of Kṛṣṇa's bed. Arjuna, who also came to seek his help, stood with folded hands at Kṛṣṇa's feet. It was Arjuna whom Kṛṣṇa first saw on waking up. But Duryodhana told him that it was he who had come first. Kṛṣṇa was in a fix, and he had to promise to help both the sides. He promised his entire army to one side and his personal help, himself without any weapons with him, to the other side, and Arjuna was asked to make his choice first as he was younger than Duryodhana. Arjuna chose Kṛṣṇa without arms and Duryodhana with his infantry. Kṛṣṇa agreed to act as Arjuna's charioteer.
35) As messenger of peace in Kaurava assembly. Dharmaputra requested Kṛṣṇa to find out means to avoid war somehow or other and Kṛṣṇa sent a message to Dhṛtarāṣṭra through Sañjaya but nothing came out of it. Ultimately Kṛṣṇa himself decided to visit the Kauravas for which purpose he went first to Dvārakā in his chariot with Sātyaki. On his way Kṛṣṇa held talks with many a great sage. From Dvārakā he returned to Hastināpura where he visited and consoled Kuntī at Vidura's house. He had his supper also there. The next day he attended Duryodhana's court and strongly pleaded for the Pāṇḍavas. But Duryodhana and others ridiculed him and even attempted to take him captive. Śrī Kṛṣṇa at once exhibited his Viśva-rūpa (Cosmic form). The Kauravas were frightened to witness Brahmā on Kṛṣṇa's forehead, Śiva on his chest, Āditya-Vasu-Rudras in his mouth etc. Śrī Kṛṣṇa granted the blind Dhṛtarāṣṭra divine eyes to see this Viśvarūpa and he sang the praise of Kṛṣṇa. Kṛṣṇa returned to the Pāṇḍavas after advising Karṇa to fight on the Pāṇḍava side in the impending war. (Udyoga Parva).
36) Kṛṣṇa in the great war. The parts Kṛṣṇa played during the Kuru-Pāṇḍava war are briefly given below.
(1) The Kaurava and the Pāṇḍava armies were gathered at Kurukṣetra in full battle array and Arjuna, at the sight of the thousands of relations in the opposite camp, became a prey to a great delusion and sat down. Kṛṣṇa then enthused him to fight by giving him advice, which came later to be known as the great Gītā. The Gītā contains the Sāṅkhya, Yoga, the characteristics of the wise people and the unwise, description about yajñas, greatness of knowledge, characteristics of Sāṁkhya and niṣkāmakarma, yogins, jñānayoga etc. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapters 26-42).
(2) At the commencement of the battle, Kṛṣṇa blew aloud his conch Pāñcajanya. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 15).
(3) Kṛṣṇa rushed forward with his Cakrāyudha to kill Bhīṣma, who then praised Kṛṣṇa. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 65).
(4) He prompted Arjuna to kill Bhīṣma. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 106, Verse 33).
(5) He received on his chest the Vaiṣṇavāstra shot by Bhagadatta against Arjuna. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 29, Verse 13).
(6) Consoled Arjuna, who was lamenting over the death of Abhimanyu. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 72).
(7) Consoled Subhadrā, who was sunk in sorrow at the loss of her son. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 77).
(8) Consoled the crying Pāñcālī and Uttarā. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 78).
(9) Took Arjuna in a dream to Śiva and got Śiva's blessing for him. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 80).
(10) He looked after the horses in the battle-field. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 100).
(11) Prompted Arjuna to kill Duryodhana. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 102).
(12) Kṛṣṇa created illusory darkness and prompted Arjuna to kill Jayadratha. (See under Jayadratha).
(13) He lifted the darkness after Jayadratha was killed by Arjuna. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 146).
(14) As it was not proper for Arjuna and Karṇa to be fighting with each other at mid-night he deputed Ghaṭotkaca to fight Karṇa. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 173).
(15) He consoled Dharmaputra, who was grieving over the death of Ghaṭotkaca. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 153).
(16) He prompted Arjuna to kill Karṇa. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 60).
(17) Withdrew Arjuna from confrontation with Karṇa on the pretext of attending to Dharmaputra, who had been wounded. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 64).
(18) A sudden dispute arose between Dharmaputra and Arjuna, who drew his sword to kill the former. And Kṛṣṇa reconciled them by relating the story of Vyādha and Kauśika (For the story see under Valāka).

(19) Arjuna got ready to commit suicide: Kṛṣṇa dissuaded him from the attempt. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 70).
(20) Kṛṣṇa again prompted Arjuna to kill Karṇa.
(21) In the fierce battle that ensued between Arjuna and Karṇa, Kṛṣṇa pressed down the platform of the chariot when the latter shot the nāgāstra (the serpent arrow). The arrow flew off with Arjuna's crown. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 90).
(22) Arjuna killed Karṇa after which Kṛṣṇa prompted Dharmaputra to kill Śalya. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 7).
(23) Kṛṣṇa prompted Bhīma to kill Duryodhana in an illusory battle. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 58).
(24) As requested by Yudhiṣṭhira Kṛṣṇa left the battle-field for Hastināpura and returned after consoling Dhṛtarāṣṭra and Gāndhārī. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 62).
(25) Kṛṣṇa cursed Aśvatthāmā who released arrows against pregnant women. (See under Aśvatthāmā).
(26) Asked Bhīṣma to instruct Yudhiṣṭhira on dharma (righteousness). (Śānti Parva, Chapter 51).
(27) He granted the boon to Bhīṣma lying on the bed of arrows that he would not feel hunger and thirst and that his intellect would function powerfully as long as he was discoursing on dharma. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 52).
(28) He related to Arjuna the root meaning of his various names. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 341).
(29) He explained to sages and Bhūmidevī some profound doctrines about God and the world. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 167).
(30) He gave permission to Bhīṣma to die. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 167).
(31) Consoled Gaṅgādevī who grieved over the death of Bhīṣma. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 168).
(32) He once again revealed the doctrine of the Gītā in the form of discussions between Siddhamaharṣis and Kaśyapa. (Āśramavāsika Parva, Chapter 16).
(33) After the great war was over he went to Dvārakā with Subhadrā and Sātyaki with the consent of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Āśramavāsika Parva, Chapter 57, Verses 54-58).

37) Śrī Kṛṣṇa again at Dvārakā. When Kṛṣṇa returned to Dvārakā, Sage Uttaṅka visited him. The sage was told details about the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas by Kṛṣṇa. He detailed to the sage spiritual principles too and showed him his Viśvarūpa (Cosmic form). Kṛṣṇa participated in festival held by the Yādavas on the Raivata mountain. Afterwards when he went to Dvārakā he told his father Vasudeva details about the war. He himself performed the obsequies of Abhimanyu. (Aśvamedha Parva).

38) Killed Haṁsaḍibhakas. See under Ḍibhaka.

39) Kṛṣṇa brought back Parīkṣit to life. Kṛṣṇa again went to Hastināpura. There Uttarā, wife of Abhimanyu, delivered, but the child was born dead as the arrow of Aśvatthāmā had hit her womb. Kṛṣṇa brought the dead child back to life on the request of Kuntī. It was this child, who became later famous as Parīkṣit. (Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 66).

40) The evening of Kṛṣṇa's life.

(1) The curse of Gāndhārī. Most of the heroes and distinguished archers like Duryodhana had been killed in the great war, and Gāndhārī overwhelmed with grief and anger at the death of her sons lamented over them loudly. She realised that Kṛṣṇa was the cause of all the destruction and cursed him as follows:—
"If I have gained any powers by my loyal and devout service to my husband, O ! Kṛṣṇa I curse you on the strength of that power. Since you forsook relations like the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas who quarrelled with each other, you also will have to witness the killing of relations. Thirtysix years from today your relations, ministers and sons will be killed, and you too will be killed by a hunter in the forest. Your women-folk also will cry as we women cry now." (Strī Parva, Chapter 25).
The curse of Gāndhārī that the Yādava dynasty would be annihilated after thirtysix years was fulfilled. In the thirtysixth year another curse also befell the dynasty which contributed further to its annihilation.

(2) Curse of the sages. The sages Viśvāmitra, Kaṇva and Nārada came to Dvārakā once. Some Yādavas brought Sāmba dressed as a pregnant woman before the sages and asked them derisively what child, whether male or female, would Sāmba give birth to. Angry at this insult, the sages said that the 'pregnant woman' would deliver an iron rod, which would become instrumental for the destruction of the Yādava dynasty. Kṛṣṇa who was told about the curse said that it was as it was destined to be. Next day Sāmba delivered an iron rod. The Yādavas filed it into powder and threw the powder into the sea. Śrī Kṛṣṇa enforced prohibition of liquors in Dvārakā with the object of avoiding any untoward incidents in Dvārakā. It was declared that those who produced liquor would be hanged to death along with their families. (Mausala Parva, Chapter 1).

(3) Evil omens. Signs of the destruction of the Yādavas began appearing. Agents of Kāla visited house after house. Rats multiplied in numbers everywhere in the land, and they began gnawing the nails and hairs of people enjoying sleep. Sheep howled like jackals. Asses were born from cows and cats from mules. Dogs cohabited with rats. The Cakrāyudha (Discus) given to Kṛṣṇa by Agnideva at the time of Khāṇḍavadāha disappeared into the sky while the Yādavas were looking on. Thus symptoms of an all-round destruction were witnessed.

(4) Destruction of the Yādavas. Śrī Kṛṣṇa, Balabhadra, Uddhava and others were about to go on a pilgrimage, and the Yadus, the Vṛṣṇis and the Andhakas began manufacturing and drinking liquor. They also began to quarrel with one another. The powder of the iron rod thrown into the sea was washed ashore and it grew up like arrow-like grass. The Yādavas fought with one another and many were killed. Kṛṣṇa got terribly angry at the death of Sātyaki, Pradyumna and others. He plucked a handful of grass and it transformed itself into an iron rod with which he beat to death those around him. Then all the people plucked up the grass which turned into iron rods. They fought amongst themselves with the iron rods and all of them got killed.

(5) Death of Rāma aad Kṛṣṇa. During this period Balabhadra went and seated himself under a tree in deep meditation. Kṛṣṇa stood near him. Dāruka and Babhru also arrived there. Kṛṣṇa deputed Dāruka to Hastināpura to inform Arjuna about the annihilation of the Yādava race. Then Kṛṣṇa went to the palace and consoled the women-folk there. When he told them that Arjuna would come and take care of them, his wives shed tears. Kṛṣṇa then took leave of Vasudeva and returned to Balabhadra. Kṛṣṇa saw even at a distance a white serpent coming out of Balabhadra's mouth and moving away to Pātāla through the sea. The serpent which was the soul of Balabhadra was duly received by the prominent Nāgas in Pātāla. Kṛṣṇa roamed about the forest for some time and then lay down on the ground immersed in Yoga with his feet raised up. An Asura called Jara, who saw Kṛṣṇa's raised feet from a distance mistook the same for a deer and shot it with his arrows. Kṛṣṇa expired at once and rose up in the guise of Viṣṇu to Vaikuṇṭha. (Mausala Parva).

(6) Reason for Kṛṣṇa's foot being hit by arrow. Durvāsas once went to Dvārakā and enquired who was there to put him up as a guest. Kṛṣṇa invited him to his palace and treated him as a very honoured guest. He began creating trouble there by breaking vessels, eating only very sparsely at times but eating all that he saw at other times. Kṛṣṇa and Rukmiṇī put up with the vagaries of the sage quite patiently. One day the sage expressed a desire to taste pudding, and accordingly Kṛṣṇa and Rukmiṇī cooked it and served it to the sage. After tasting some pudding he asked Kṛṣṇa to smear his whole body with the balance of it and Kṛṣṇa did so except the bottom of his feet. The sage asked him why he did not smear the nether surface of his feet with the pudding to which Kṛṣṇa humbly answered that he did not like doing so. Durvāsas smeared Rukmiṇī's body with what remained of the pudding. He yoked Rukmiṇī to the chariot and rode off swiftly in it. On the way he whipped Rukmiṇī. Kṛṣṇa ran after the chariot so that he might be of service to the sage. After he had gone some distance the sage jumped out of the chariot and ran through the forest. Ultimately he turned round to Kṛṣṇa and told him as follows :— "Oh ! Kṛṣṇa ! I am pleased with your service. Let Rukmiṇī have the first place among your wives. She will not be affected by old age. And, you will never meet with death by being hit at those parts of your body which have been smeared with the pudding."

When Kṛṣṇa and Rukmiṇī returned to the palace the vessels which Durvāsas had broken were found to be in a more glittering condition than of old. Their welfare and happiness were also increased. Kṛṣṇa died hit by the arrow of the hunter on the lower surface of his feet as he had not smeared that part of the body with the pudding left over by Durvāsas. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 159), (There is another story to the effect that Jara, the hunter, was Bāli (whom Śrī Rāma had killed) reborn, and he killed Kṛṣṇa in retaliation for his former death).

(7) After Kṛṣṇa's death.

(i) Arjuna came to Dvārakā and cremated Kṛṣṇa. (Mausala Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 31).

(ii) After his death Kṛṣṇa, lives in the guise of Nārāyaṇa in the divine sphere. (Svargārohaṇa Parva, Chapter 5, Verses 24-26).

(iii) Anointed queens like Rukmiṇī and Jāmbavatī and some other wives of Kṛṣṇa entered his funeral pyre and ended their lives. (Mausala Parva, Chapter 7, Verses 73 and 74).

(iv) While Arjuna was leading the remaining wives of Kṛṣṇa away from Dvārakā forest-dwellers attacked them on the way. But the women, to escape from their clutches, ran off and jumped into the river Sarasvatī and died in its waters. Their souls entered heaven (Svargārohaṇa Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 25).

KṚṢṆAVARTMAN. Another name for Agni. Agni was addressed by this word at the serpent yajña by Āstīka. (M.B. Chapter 55, Verse 10).

KṚṢṆAVEṆĪ. A sacred river in South India. A bath in the Devakuṇḍa in this river (Jātismarahrada) will kindle in one remembrance about previous life. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 20). Agni is supposed to originate from this hrada. (Vana Parva, Chapter 222, Verse 26).

KṚTA. I. A King of Janaka's dynasty. He was the son of Vijaya and father of Śunaka. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha). Kṛta had seven beautiful daughters who, because of a sense of non-attachment and renunciation, forsook their father's home for the cremation ground even while they were mere children. They lay down there declaring that they had left their bodies as food for the birds; and birds and wild beasts ate up their beautiful bodies. Because of this life of renunciation, they attained salvation. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Madanamañjukālambaka, Taraṅga 2).

KṚTA II. A Viśvadeva (Universal Deva). (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 31).

KṚTADYUTI. Queen of King Citraketu. Though the King had many wives he had no children. He pleased Aṅgiras by means of his austerities and due to the latter's blessing Kṛtadyuti delivered a son. But, her co-wives poisoned the child to death at which both Citraketu and Kṛtadyuti fell down unconscious. Though Aṅgiras and Nārada appeared on the scene and tried their best to console the King and the queen they refused to be comforted. Then Aṅgiras returned to them the soul of the dead child. The soul saluted them and spoke as follows:— "Oh elders, during various births I had been the son of various parents. And, you please point out to me the particular parent as whose son I am to live just now." Nobody had any answer to this question, and the child went on its own way.

Afterwards Citraketu and Kṛtadyuti went round the earth as great devotees of the Almighty, and during this perambulation Citraketu came to the presence of Śiva on whose thigh Pārvatī was sitting then. Citraketu felt ashamed at the sight and questioned Pārvatī about her action whereupon she cursed and turned Citraketu into an Asura. The well known Vṛtrāsura was Citraketu thus reborn. Kṛtadyuti ended her life following the curse upon her husband. (Bhāgavata, 6th Skandha).

KṚTĀŚVA. A great sage of ancient days. He was the son-in-law of Dakṣaprajāpati. Dakṣa had sixty daughters by his wife Vīraṇī, thirteen of whom were wedded to Kaśyapa, ten to Dharma, twenty-seven to Candra, two to Bhṛgu, four to Ariṣṭanemi, two to Kṛtāśva and two to Aṅgiras. (Devī Bhāgavata, 7th Skandha).

KṚTAUJAS. See under KṚTĀGNI.

KṚTAVĀK. A great sage, who was an admirer of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Vana Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 24).

KṚTAVARMĀ. A King of the Vṛṣṇi dynasty. In the previous generation of Vṛṣṇi also a Kṛtavarman is noticed. The genealogy of both is given below.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu thus: Brahmā Atri—Candra—Budha —Purūravas—Āyus —Nahuṣa—Yayāti—Yadu—Sahasrajit—Śatajit—Hehaya—Dharma Kunti—Sadājit—Dhanaka.

Dhanaka had four sons called Kṛtavīrya, Kṛtāgni, Kṛtavarman and Kṛtaujas, and one of the four was the first Kṛtavarman.

The dynasty continues again fromKṛtavīrya--Kṛtavīrya-Kārtavīryārjuna —Madhu —Vṛṣṇi —Yudhājit—Śini—Satyaka—Sātyaki (Yuyudhāna) —Jaya—Kaṇi—Anamitra—Pṛśni—Citraratha — Vidūratha—Śūra—Śini—Bhoja—Hṛdīka—Kṛtavarman.

Hṛdīka had four sons, viz. Devavāha, Gadādhanvan, Kṛtavarman and Śūra. And, Sūra begot of his wife, Māriṣā ten sons, i.e. Vasu, Devabhāga, Devaśravas, Ānaka, Sṛñjaya, Kākānīka, Śyāmaka, Vatsa, Kavūka and Vasudeva. Śrī Kṛṣṇa was the son of Vasudeva. The Kṛtavarman referred to below was the brother of Kṛṣṇa's grand-father.

2) Kṛtavarman and Syamantaka. King Satrājit had in his possession the famous gem called Syamantaka. The King's brother Prasena, went for hunting with this jewel on him. A lion killed Prasena, and Jāmbavān killed the lion and got the gem. A scandal was circulated to the effect that Śrī Kṛṣṇa had stolen the gem. But, Kṛṣṇa got back the gem from Jāmbavān and handed it over to Satrājit, who in turn, gave his daughter Satyabhāmā in marriage to Kṛṣṇa. Though Satrājit wanted to give the gem—Syamantaka—to Kṛṣṇa as dowry, the latter did not accept it.

Akrūra and Kṛtavarman were bosom friends, and they incited another Yādava King Śatadhanvā, to grab the Syamantaka. Śatadhanvā killed Satrājit and took possession of the gem. Hearing about this murder Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Balabhadrarāma set out to kill Śatadhanvā, who, in great alarm, started for north after entrusting the gem to Akrūra and Kṛtavarman. His horse died at Mithilāpurī and he began running. Balabhadra and Kṛṣṇa ran after him, caught and killed him. But, they did not get the Syamantaka.

Now Akrūra and Kṛtavarman began their penance at Kāśī. Seven years passed thus when famine broke out in Dvārakā. When once upon a time famine stalked Kāśī the king had brought Śvaphalka, father of Akrūra, over to Kāśī, and there was no more famine in the country. Therefore, when famine broke out in Dvārakā the Yadavas thought the presence of Śvaphalka's son, Akrūra would dispel the famine. Accordingly Akrūra was recalled to Dvārakā, and along with him returned Kṛtavarman also. Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Balabhadra decided that Syamantaka should be kept by Akrūra himself.

3) Other information relating to Kṛtavarman.

(i) He was a very famous archer. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 81).

(ii) He was a great devotee of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 63, Verse 105).

(iii) He was present at the Svayaṁvara of Pāñcālī. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 18).

(xxix) He was killed in the club-fight by the Yādavas. Mausala Parva, Chapter 3, Verse 28).

(xxx) After death he joined the Marudgaṇa and secured eternal fame. (Svargārohaṇa Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 13.)

4) Synonyms for Kṛtavarman. Ānartavāsī, Bhoja, Bhojarāja, Hārdikya, Hṛdīkātmaja, Mādhava, Sātvata, Vārṣṇeya, Vṛṣṇisiṁha.

KṚTAVEGA. A very holy Rājarṣi. He was a member in the court of Yama. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 89).

KṚTAVĪRYA I. Father of the famous Kārtavīryārjuna (For genealogy see under Kārtavīrya). He got a Soma Yajña conducted by the sages of the family of Bhṛgu and gave away a lot of wealth to people of Bhṛgu's family (Ādi Parva, Chapter 177, Verse 18). Kṛtavīrya was a member of the court of Yamarāja. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 9).

KṚTAVĪRYA II. Father-in-law of king Ahaṁyāti of the solar dynasty. He had a daughter called Bhānumatī. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 15).

KṚTAYUGA. There are four Yugas (Eras) called Kṛta, Tretā, Dvāpara and Kali yugas. (For the set up etc. of the Yugas see under Manvantara).

In the first Yuga, i.e. Kṛta yuga, people will be quite righteous. As the Yugas change righteousness will fade out in increasing measure till the world will be filled with unrighteousness and evil by the time it is Kaliyuga. When Kaliyuga is completed Mahāviṣṇu will incarnate himself as Kalki and wipe out unrighteousness and establish Kṛtayuga once again.

KṚTĀYUS (KṚTAUJAS). A brother of Kṛtāgni. (See under KṚTĀGNI).

KṚTEYU. A king born in the Aṅga dynasty.

KṚTI I. A Sage who belonged to the order of the disciple of Vedavyāsa. Jaimini was the disciple of Vyāsa, and Sumantu the son of Jaimini. Sumantu had a son called Sutvā, and Sukarmā was the son of the latter. He had two disciples called Hiraṇyanābha alias Kausalya and Pauṣpiñji. Kṛti was a disciple of Hiraṇyanābha, and he composed twentyfour Saṁhitās for the Sāmaveda and taught them to his disciples. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 3, Chapter 6).

KṚTI II. A saintly King who flourished in the court of Yamarāja. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 9).

KṚTI III. A Viśvadeva (universal deva). (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 35).

KṚTI IV. A synonym of Mahāviṣṇu. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 149, Verse 22).

KṚTI V. A King of Sūkaradeśa. He presented hundred elephants to Yudhiṣṭhira. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 52, Verse 25).

KṚTI VI. A son of Nahuṣa. Nahuṣa had five other sons called Yati, Yayāti, Saṁyāti, Āyati and Viyati. Kṛti was the sixth son and the youngest of the lot.

KṚTTIKĀ I. When Subrahmaṇya was born the Devas deputed six mothers to breast-feed him, and they are called Kṛttikās. Certain Purāṇas hold the view that six faces were caused to Subrahmaṇya as he had to feed on six breasts at the same time while others opine that six mothers were deputed to feed him as he was born with six faces. Again, according to certain Purāṇas it was Pārvatī, who deputed the Kṛttikās. The child came to be known as Kārttikeya also as it was fed by the Kṛttikās. (Skanda Purāṇa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Canto 37 and Kathāsaritsāgara Lāvāṇakalambaka, Taraṅga 6).

After having fed Skanda the Kṛttikās entered into the sphere of the stars. (Vana Parva, Chapter 236, Verse 11). The star into which the Kṛttikās entered is called the Kṛttikā star. Nārada said once that if one feeds brahmins with ghee and pudding on Kārttika day one may ascend to Devaloka. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 64, Verse 5).

KṚTTIKĀ II. A holy place. He who bathes here will derive the benefits of performing an Atirātra Yajña. (Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 51).

KṚTTIKĀṄGĀRAKA. A holy centre. He who bathes here and observes fast for two weeks will be absolved from sins. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 22).

KṚTTIKĀŚRAMA. A holy centre. One who bathes here and worships the Pitṛs will be absolved from sins. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 22).

KṚTTIVĀSEŚVARA. See under Śiva.

KṚTVĪ. Kṛtvī alias Kīrtimatī was the daughter of sage Śuka. Aṇuha, born in the family of Ajamīḍha, married Kṛtvī, and Brahmadatta was their son.

KṚTYĀ (KṚTYAKĀ) I. A Rākṣasī who is born when the black arts as enunciated in the Atharvaveda are practised to annihilate enemies. Kṛtyā may appear in male form too. Some of the activities of Kṛtyā are given below.

(1) Carried off Duryodhana. While the Pāṇḍavas were living in exile in the forest, Duryodhana and others went in a procession to the forest. Though Duryodhana was taken into captivity in the forest by a Gandharva, Arjuna saved him out of fraternal consideration for him. Duryodhana returned to Hastināpura. Now the question was whether half of the kingdom should be given to the Pāṇḍavas or not. Śakuni and others advised Duryodhana to give it, but the latter remained adamant against it. Dhṛtarāṣṭra decided to end his life and for the purpose spread darbha grass on earth and sat thereon. The Asuras heard about these developments and created a Kṛtyā by mantras. The Kṛtyā took Duryodhana to Pātāla where the Asuras advised him against any compromise with the Pāṇḍavas. On the other hand they wanted him to intensify his hatred against the Pāṇḍavas, and they assured him all support. After that Kṛtyā took Duryodhana back to Hastināpura. (Vana Parva, Chapter 252).

(2) Kṛtyā born under the name Madana. Devendra once prevented the Aśvinīdevas from drinking Soma juice. (Devas drink a liquid-liqueur extracted from the soma creeper, during yajñas, and that is called Somapāna). Aggrieved at the orders of Indra the Aśvinīdevas wandered about the world in the course of which they approached sage Cyavana of the Bhārgava family. They restored sight to the blind Cyavana, who, in return, assured them that he would see to it that they got the right of drinking soma juice. Cyavana began a Yajña and Indra came for Somapāna. The sage invited the Aśvinīdevas also for Somapāna. Indra prevented them from doing so, and the sage opposed him. Then Indra drew his Vajrāyudha against Cyavana. The sage made Indra's hands paralysed. Further, he raised from the Yājñic fire a Kṛtyā which appeared in male form under the name Madana. Sharp molar teeth hundred yojanas long, other teeth each ten yojanas long, hands ten thousand yojanas long and as big as mountains, round eyes like the Sun and Moon, mouth spitting fire—such was Madana, the Kṛtyā, a really terrible being. Frightened at the sight of the terrible being Indra permitted the Aśvinīdevas to drink Soma.

(3) Kṛtyā against Ambarīṣa. Ambarīṣa once began the Ekādaśī Vrata and the Devas deputed Durvāsas to obstruct it somehow or other. Durvāsas came to Ambarīṣa, who requested him to return after bath. But, though the vrata was over the sage did not return and Ambarīṣa fed the Devas with the offerings (havis). Immediately after that Durvāsas returned and complained that what he was given was the left-overs of the havis. By means of black art he created a Kṛtyā, who charged against Ambarīṣa's throat. Ambarīṣa prayed and the Sudarśana Cakra of Viṣṇu appeared and killed the Kṛtyā and drove Durvāsas round the three worlds. At last the sage sought refuge with Ambarīṣa himself and thus saved himself. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

(4) Kṛtyā opposed Śrī Kṛṣṇa. While Kṛṣṇa was ruling Dvārakā, Pauṇḍrakavāsudeva was the King of Kārūṣa. Once he sent a messenger to ask Kṛṣṇa to go and bow down before him as he was the real Vāsudeva. Enraged at this insolent demand Kṛṣṇa cut off Pauṇḍraka's head with the Sudarśana Cakra. The dead King's son, Sudakṣiṇa, to gather power enough to fight Kṛṣṇa went to Kāśī and performed penance to please Śiva. Śiva appeared and taught him the method of creating Kṛtyā. Accordingly he created from fire, a Kṛtyā, who dashed against Kṛṣṇa roaring like hell. Kṛṣṇa used the Sudarśana Cakra, which burnt to death not only the Kṛtyā, but also Sudakṣiṇa.

(5) Kṛtyā against Prahlāda. To change the nature of Prahlāda, a great devotee of Viṣṇu, his father Hiraṇyakaśipu deputed Asura preceptors. But, severe punishments like poisoning, throwing into fire etc. did not succeed in changing the devotee's character. At last, the preceptors raised Kṛtyā from fire. The Śūlam, which Kṛtyā thrust against the throat of Prahlāda was broken into hundreds of pieces. Kṛtyā then got angry and turned against the preceptors, who had sent her against Prahlāda. The preceptors fell down unconscious on the verge of death. But, Prahlāda touched their bodies and they became alive again. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 18).

KṚTYĀ II. A river. Indians used to drink water from this river. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9 Verse 18).

KRŪRĀ (KRODHĀ). A daughter of Prajāpati Dakṣa. She became the wife of Kaśyapa. A large number of Asuras were born to her. They all were very cruel and were called Krodhavaśas. (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 32).

KRŪRA. A country in Ancient India. (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 65).

KṢA (क्ष). This letter means (1) Kṣatriya (2) field (3) Narasiṁha (the lion-man incarnation of Viṣṇu) (4) Hari (Viṣṇu) (5) Protector of temples and gate keeper. (6) Lightning (7) Destruction (8) A demon.

KṢAMĀ. Wife of Prajāpati Pulaha. Three sons Kardama, Urvarīyān and Sahiṣṇu were born to Pulaha of his wife Kṣamā. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1, Stanza 10).

KṢAMAKA. A King of the Puru dynasty. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

KṢATRADEVA. The son of Śikhaṇḍī. He was a famous archer. Bhagadatta wounded the right hand of Kṣatradeva in the Bhārata-battle. He fought with Lakṣmaṇa and Droṇa. Lakṣmaṇa killed him. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapters 57 and 171; Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 95; Droṇa Parva, Chapters 14, 21 and 23; Karṇa Parva, Chapter 6).

KṢATRADHARMAN. A son of Dhṛṣṭadyumna. The teacher Droṇa killed him. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 125, Stanza 66).

KṢATRAÑJAYA. A son of Dhṛṣṭadyumna. Droṇa killed him. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 10, Stanza 53).

KṢATRAVARMAN. A son of Dhṛṣṭadyumna. He fought with Jayadratha in the battle of Bhārata. Droṇa killed him. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 186).

KṢATRIYA. See under Cāturvarṇya.

KṢATTĀ I. Vidura.

KṢATTĀ. II. See under the word Varṇa.

KṢEMĀ. A celestial maid. This celestial maid took part in the birth celebration of Arjuna. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 66).

KṢEMA. A King in Ancient India. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 65, that this King was the rebirth of the Asura Krodhavaśa. In the Bhārata-battle this King took the side of the Pāṇḍavas and was killed by Droṇa. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 21, Stanza 53).

KṢEMADARŚĪ. A King of Kosala. There is a story in the Mahābhārata stating how the hermit Kālakavṛkṣīya saved this King from the trap laid by his favourites. The treasury-keeper spent the money of the King lavishly on himself. The subjects began to consider how to inform the King about this. Finally the hermit Kālakavṛkṣīya began to travel throughout the country with a crow kept in a cage. As if the crow was speaking, the hermit began to tell the past, present and future fortunes of the people. The crow became famous and people began to have faith in the crow. Once Kālakavṛkṣīya and the crow reached the palace and under the pretence that the crow was speaking, the hermit disclosed all the secret dealings of the treasury-keeper. The servants of the King stealthily put the crow to death that night. When the King knew this he made Kālakavṛkṣīya the minister and the country began to prosper. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 82).

On another occasion the treasury of the King Kṣemadarśī became empty. At this time King Janaka had come to war with this King. According to the sincere advice of Kālakavṛkṣīya the King married the daughter of King Janaka. From that day onwards his country became prosperous. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 106).

KṢEMADHANVĀ. A famous archer who fought on the side of the Kauravas. This archer led Duryodhana in the battlefield. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 17, Stanza 27).

KṢEMADHŪRTI. I. A Kṣatriya King of Ancient India. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 64 that this King was born from a portion of the Asura called Krodhavaśa. The King ruled over the country called Kulūta. In the battle of Bhārata he fought on the side of the Kauravas and was killed by Bhīmasena. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 12, Stanza 44).

KṢEMADHŪRTI II. A King who took the side of the Kauravas. This King who was the brother of Bṛhantaka, fought with Sātyaki in the Bhārata battle. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 21, Stanza 8).

KṢEMADHŪRTI III. A warrior. He fought with Bṛhatkṣatra and died in the fight. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 107, Stanza 6).

KṢEMAGIRĪ. Another name of Bhadrakālī (a goddess). In Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 12, it is mentioned that Āryā, Durgā, Vedagarbhā, Ambikā, Bhadrakālī, Bhadrā, Kṣemyā and Naikabāhū are also synonyms of Bhadrakālī.

KṢEMAKA I. A Rākṣasa (giant). In Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 2, it is mentioned that this Rākṣasa had lived in Kāśī and that the King Divodāsa killed this Rākṣasa and built a city there.

KṢEMAKA II. A serpent (Nāga) born to Kaśyapaprajāpati of his wife Kadrū. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 53, Stanza 11).

KṢEMAKA III. A King who was a luminary in the palace of Yudhiṣṭhira. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 24, that the Pāṇḍavas had sent invitation to this King for the battle of Bhārata.

KṢEMAMŪRTI. A son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 100).

KṢEMAṄKARA. A King who was the friend of Jayadratha. This King ruled over the country of Trigarta. Nakula killed this King. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapters 265 and 275).

KṢEMAŚARMĀ. A warrior who fought on the side of the Kauravas. Kṣemaśarmā stood and fought at the neck of the Garuḍavyūha (the formation of the army into the shape of an eagle) made by Karṇa. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 20, Stanza 6).

KṢEMAVĀHA. A warrior of Skanda. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 66).

KṢEMAVṚDDHI. The minister of King Sālva. He was both minister and general of the army at the same time. Sāmba, the son of Śrī Kṛṣṇa defeated Kṣemavṛddhi. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 16).

KṢETRA (S). Sacred spots. In Malayālam it means Temples also.

1) General information. The temples of India are reflections of the outward form or body of man. As the soul lives in the body of man, God dwells in the temples. The stone, rock, marble, metals etc. are equal to the bones of the body of a man.

2) Two types of temples. Temples are of two types. One type is the Grāmadevatā temples. These are temples in which goddess Bhadrakālī is consecrated and worshipped for the protection of villages and cities. The second type is of special temples. These are temples specially meant for a particular god or goddess. Thus there are temples for Viṣṇu, Śiva, Gaṇapati and so on.

3) Grāmadevatā temples. Worship of Bhadrakālī existed in India from very early times. When Mohanjodaro and Harappa were excavated idols of Devī (goddess) more than 4000 years old, were obtained from there. During the prevalence of Buddhism in India the goddesses Yakṣī and Hāritī were worshipped in India. Later when Hinduism was revived these goddesses took their places in it as the goddesses of Hindu Purāṇas and epics. The Kālī temples of Ujjayinī and Calcutta are famous. In the Cidambara temple also the main deity is Kālī. The legend is that Paramaśiva defeated Kālī in a dance. In Mysore Cāmuṇḍī (Kālī) is worshipped as chief goddess or family goddess. Kāmākṣī in Kāñcī, Mīnākṣī in Madura (South India), Mūkāmbikā in North Karṇāṭaka and so on are the gentle and peaceful forms of Kālī.

4) Devas (gods). In many of the temples in South India, Munīśvaran and Karuppan are the grāmadevatās (village gods). In some places Bhairava also is worshipped as grāmadevatā. In certain other places Vīran, Irulan, Kāreṭṭi, Noṇḍi and Pañcaruli are worshipped. Śāstā or Ayyappan has a prominent place among the village gods. Importance is attached to Śāstā or Ayyappan mostly in Kerala and Tamil Nāḍu.

KṢETRAPĀLA. Kṣetrapāla is consecrated on the South East corner of the temple, for protecting the villages and cities. This is a large image with three eyes. There are figures which are Sāttvika, Rājasa and Tāmasa (having the attributes goodness, ostentatiousness and sloth). In some places figures having two or four or eight hands are seen. It is presumed that this deity is a portion of Śiva. It is stated in Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 51 that Kṣetrapālas should be figures having trident in the hand.

KṢĪRASĀGARA. Sea of Milk. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 102, that Brahmā drank too much of Amṛta and vomited. From the vomit the cow Surabhi came into being. The milk of Surabhi flowed and collected into a sea. This sea is called the milk-sea or Kṣīrasāgara.

KṢĪRAVATĪ. A holy bath. Those who bathe in this holy bath will obtain the fruits of performing the sacrifice of Vājapeya. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 84).

KṢĪRIN. A tree in the family of the Uttara Kurus. This tree has six tastes. Milk flows ceaselessly from this tree. It is said that from the fruit of this tree we could get cloth, ornaments etc. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 7).

KṢITIKAMPANA. A captain of the army of Skanda. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 59).

KṢUDRAKA. There was a country known as Kṣudraka in Ancient India. Those who inhabited this country were called Kṣudrakas. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 52 that the Kṣudrakas had brought gifts to Dharmaputra. In the battle of Bhārata Duryodhana protected Śakuni with the help of the Kṣudrakas. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 51, Stanza 16). It is stated in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 19 that the Kṣudrakas attacked Arjuna at the behest of Bhīṣma. Many Kṣudrakas were killed when Paraśurāma exterminated the Kṣatriyas. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 70).

KṢUPA I. A Prajāpati. There is a story about the birth of this Prajāpati in Mahābhārata. Once Brahmā wished to perform a sacrifice. But he could not get suitable priest as the performer of the sacrifice. So Brahmā decided to create a befitting person as Ṛtvik (the priest who does the rituals of the sacrifice) and he got pregnant in his head. After a thousand years he sneezed and a Prajāpati came out of the head of Brahmā. That Prajāpati was Kṣupa. He made Kṣupa his Ṛtvik. (Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 122). Rudra Bhagavān made him Prajāpati (the Lord of all subjects).

KṢUPA II. A King who was the son of Prasandhi, and the grandson of Vaivasvata Manu. He was the father of Ikṣvāku. In Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, it is mentioned that Kṣupa stayed in the Palace of Yama after his death. In Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 166 it is stated that this King had received a sword directly from Vaivasvata Manu. Kṣupa was not in the habit of eating flesh. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva. Chapter 159, Stanza 67).

KṢURAKARṆĪ. An attendant of Skanda. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 25).

KUBERA.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu thus : Brahmā—Pulastya—Viśravas—Kubera.

2) Birth. Pulastya Prajāpati wedded Māninī alias Havirbhū, daughter of sage Tṛṇabindu, and a son called Viśravas was born to them, Viśravas married Ilibilā alias Daivavarṇinī, daughter of Bharadvāja. Rāvaṇa Kumbhakarṇa and Vibhīṣaṇa were the sons of Viśravas by another wife. (Refer to the genealogy of Rāvaṇa). Viśravas was childless for long, and the above mentioned four sons were the fruits of the boon granted him by Brahmā, whom he pleased by austerities. (For details see under Viśravas, Para 1).

3) Kubera's attainment of eminence. Once during Kṛtayuga the Devas went to Varuṇa, and after performing a Yajña for Kubera they told him thus: "In future you live in the ocean itself as deva of all rivers, and let the ocean and the rivers obey you. As in the case of the moon you too will experience waxing and waning." From that day onwards Kubera became the lord of oceans, rivers, streams etc. and all of them together gave him immense wealth. Śiva became a particular friend of Kubera. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 47).

4) Kubera in Laṅkā. Afterwards Kubera performed penance for ten thousand years in water with head submerged, to please Brahmā. Yet, Brahmā did not appear. Then he performed penance standing on one foot in the centre of Pañcāgni. Brahmā appeared and asked him to choose any boon. Kubera requested that he might be made a lokapālaka (protector of the universe) and the custodian of wealth, and Brahmā responded by supplying Kubera the treasures Śaṅkha nidhi and Padmanidhi and also the Puṣpaka Vimāna as vehicle. He was also appointed one of the Aṣṭadikpālakas. (Indra, Agni, Yama, Nirṛti, Varuṇa, Vāyu, Kubera and Īśa are the eight protectors of the eight regions). Kubera's city is called Mahodaya.

Kubera felt really happy and told his father Viśravas about his new status and dignity. The father also blessed the son. Kubera requested his father to get a city built for him to live in, and his father asked him to settle down in Laṅkā built by Maya on top of the mountain Trikūṭa in the middle of the south sea. From that day onwards Kubera took his abode in Laṅkā. (It was originally built for Indra).

5) Old history of Laṅkā. Once upon a time when Brahmā was repeating the Vedas he felt hungry. He was annoyed that at that untimely hour he should have felt hungry, and from his angry face emerged the Rākṣasa called Heti. From his hunger emerged the Yakṣa called Praheti. The Rākṣasa turned out to be an unrighteous being, and the Yakṣa a righteous person. Heti married Bhayā, daugher of Kāla, and a son Vidyutkeśa was born to them, who wedded Sālakaṭaṅkā, daughter of Sandhyā. To them were born a child, whom they forsook in the valley of mountain Manthara and went their own. way. Śiva and Pārvatī came that way just then, saw the forsaken child and blessed it. At once the child became a youth. Śiva named him Sukeśa, and he married Devavatī, the daughter of a Gandharva called Maṇimaya. To them were born three sons called Mālyavān, Sumālī. and Mālī. Thanks to the blessings of Śiva all of them became youths as soon as they were born. By means of penances they secured from Brahmā the boon to conquer the three worlds.

They then returned to their father. They did not relish the advice of their father to lead a righteous life. They went round the three worlds harassing people. Maya built for them the city called Laṅkā on the top of the Mountain Trikūṭa.

There is a story about the origin of Trikūṭa. Once a controversy arose between Vāsuki and Vāyubhagavān as to who was the greater of the two. To prove that he was greater than Vāyu, Vāsuki enveloped with his body mountain Mahāmeru so that Vāyu (wind) could not enter it, and Vāyu tried to blow off the mountain with the result that a dust storm concealed the whole world from view. The Devas took refuge in Viṣṇu, who pacified Vāsuki, and he then unwound one coil round the mountain. Vāyu took advantage of the opportunity and swept off one peak of the mountain to the South into the sea, and that peak is Trikūṭa.

Mālyavān, Sumālī and Mālī settled down in Laṅkā, and they married Sundarī, Ketumatī and Vasudhā, the three daughters of Narmadā, a Gandharva woman. Seven sons called Vajramuṣṭi, Virūpākṣa, Durmukha, Suptaghna Yajñakośa, Matta and Unmatta and a daughter called Nalā were born to Mālyavān and Sundarī. Ten sons called Prahasta, Akampa, Vikaṭa, Kālakāmukha, Dhūmrākṣa, Daṇḍa, Supārśva, Saṁhrāda, Prakvāta and Bhāsakarṇa and four daughters called Vekā, Puṣpotkaṭā, Kaikasī and Kumbhīnasī were born to Sumālī and Ketumatī. Four sons called Anala, Anila, Aha and Sampāti (these four were the ministers of Vibhīṣaṇa) were born to Mālī and Vasudhā.

When the harassments of the Rākṣasas became unbearable the Devas sought protection from Śiva, and Indra detailed to him about the unrighteous actions of Mālyavān, Sumālī and Mālī. Śiva directed the Devas to Viṣṇu, who set out, to fight against the Rākṣasas. Mālī cut at Garuḍa, and Viṣṇu killed him (Mālī) with his Sudarśana Cakra. The other Rākṣasas retreated to Laṅkā. As their presence in Laṅkā was dangerous to the Devas, Viṣṇu directed the Sudarśana Cakra to go to Laṅkā every day and kill the Rākṣasas in groups. The Cakra began its work, and the remaining Rākṣasas escaped to Pātāla. Laṅkā became thus deserted and Kubera took his abode there. The Yakṣas, born from the hunger of Brahmā roamed about without a leader and ultimately settled down in Laṅkā under the leadership of Kubera. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

6) Kubera left Laṅkā. The other sons of Viśravas like Rāvaṇa returned with boons from Brahmā for the conquest of the earth, and the first thing Rāvaṇa did was to drive away his brother Kubera from Laṅkā. He also took by force the Puṣpaka Vimāna of Kubera, who cursed Rāvaṇa thus: "This will never be your vehicle, but will become that of his, who kills you."

Kubera, with the Yakṣas, Kinnaras etc. went north and settled on mount Gandhamādana. (Vana Parva, Chapter 275).

7) Kubera's sabhā. The assembly hall of Kubera is 100 yojanas in length and 100 yojanas wide. High walls surround the city. In the centre of the city is a beautiful mansion studded with gems where Kubera sits surrounded by thousands of women. Māruta Deva carrying fragrance from Kalpavṛkṣa worships him. Gandharva and Apsarā women entertain Kubera with music. Miśrakeśī, Rambhā, Menakā, Urvaśī, Citrasenā, Śucismitā, Ghṛtācī, Puñjikasthalā, Viśvācī, Sahajanyā, Pramlocā, Vargā, Saurabheyī, Samīcī, Budbudā, and Latā are the chief among them. Maṇibhadra (Māṇibhadra), Dhanada, Āśveta, Bhadra, Guhyaka, Kaśeraka, Gaṇḍakaṇḍu, Pradyota, Mahābala, Ka, Tumburu, Piśāca, Gajakarṇa, Viśāla, Varāhakarṇa, Tāmroṣṭha, Halakakṣa, Halodaka Haṁsacūḍa, Śaṅkhāvarta, Hemanetra, Vibhīṣaṇa, Puṣpānana, Piṅgalaka, Śoṇitoda, Pravālaka, Vṛkṣabāṣpaniketa, Cīravāsas and Nalakūbara are the chief members in the court of Kubera. Śiva, a good friend of Kubera, very often visits him. Gandharvas and sages like Viśvāvasu, Hāhā, Hūhū, Parvata, Tumburu and Śailūṣa live in Kubera's assembly. Nārada told Dharmaputra that the Kuberasabhā was thus always sweet and pleasant. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10).

8) Fight between Kubera and Rāvaṇa. Kubera got secret information that the Devas and the brahmins had decided jointly to complain to Mahāviṣṇu about their unbearable harassment by Rāvaṇa. He sent a messenger to his brother Rāvaṇa warning him to lead a more righteous life. Rāvaṇa got so much enraged at the advice of his brother that he cut the messenger into pieces and served as food to the Rākṣasas.

Rāvaṇa mobilised his army against Kubera and the Devas, and decided first to attack Kubera. At the head of a huge army led by heroes like Mahodara, Prahasta, Mārīca, Śuka, Sāraṇa, Vajradaṁṣṭra, Dhūmrākṣa, Virūpākṣa, Yūpākṣa, Mahāpārśva, Matta, Unmatta, Vikaṭa, Suptaghna, Yajñāntaka, Makarākṣa, Kumbhakarṇa, Atikāya and Akṣakumāra, Rāvaṇa marched to Alakāpurī where a fierce battle ensued between Rāvaṇa's and Kubera's armies. Many Yakṣas were killed by Rāvaṇa's army, and the Yakṣa hero Maṇicara killed a large number of Rākṣasas. As a last resort Rāvaṇa thrashed Maṇicara on the head with a club and this turned the hair on his head to one side. From that day Maṇicara came to be known as Pārśvamauli (head turned to one side). In the fight that followed between Kubera and Rāvaṇa the former fell down unconscious. But, the Yakṣas brought two Vimānas and carried Kubera to the palace. Rāvaṇa plundered Kubera's palace and carried off to Laṅkā a lot of costly gems and other wealth. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa)

9) Kubera became a Chameleon. King Marutta once performed a Maheśvara yajña to which were invited Indra, Varuṇa, Kubera and Kāla. While the yajña was progressing Rāvaṇa came that way with his army. Indra and the others, in great fear, ran away and escaped disguised in various forms, Kubera assuming the form of a chameleon. After resuming his own form Kubera gave the Chameleon the gift to change its colour. It was further blessed that to the onlookers it would seem that there was gold on its cheeks. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

10) Kubera cursed Virūpākṣa. Kubera had a yakṣa called Virūpākṣa as Manager, and he was in charge of Kubera's treasures also. Virūpākṣa had employed a gigantic yakṣa to look after the treasures outside the capital. One day a brahmin called Pāśupata came in search of treasures to Alakāpurī. He knew a very peculiar art, viz. he would go about with a lamp lighted with 'the ghee of men' (oily substance extracted from human body) and the lamp would tumble down from his hands on earth exactly on spots where treasures lay hidden. Pāśupata tried to unearth Kubera's treasures by the above means, and Virūpākṣa who got scent of the brahmin's activities got him killed. Since a brahmin (Pāśupata) was killed the sin of brahmahatyā affected the Yakṣa community, and angered at this Kubera cursed Virūpākṣa into a man, and he was born on earth as the son of a brahmin. Virūpākṣa's wife complained about this curse to Kubera, who told her that she would be born as a daughter of the maid-servant of the brahmin as whose son her husband was born, and that he (son) would marry her. Kubera, further told her that association with her would redeem Virūpākṣa from the curse and that both of them would return to him. Accordingly she lay as a human child at the gates of a brahmin maid-servant, who took it to her master. The child and the brahmin's son grew up together in his father's house, and in due course they were wedded to each other. They felt so happy as though at a reunion after a long separation. First the brahmin boy and after him his wife expired, and they returned to Alakāpurī. (Kathāsaritsāgara)

11) Kubera and emperor Pṛthu. While emperor Pṛthu was ruling the land in the best interests of his subjects, mountains, trees, Devas, Asuras, Saptarṣis, Rākṣasas etc. came to the earth and sang his praises, and as ordered by the emperor the earth turned itself into a cow and they milked her. It was Kubera who served as calf when the Rākṣasas began to milk the cow. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 69, Verse 24).

The Devas crowned Pṛthu as emperor, and, on that occasion imperial symbols were presented to him. The throne was presented by Kubera; the royal umbrella by Varuṇa; the crown by Indra and the sceptre by Yama. (Bhāgavata, 4th Skandha Chapter 15, Verses 14 and15).

12) Kubera cursed Tumburu. The Yakṣa called Tumburu once displeased Kubera, who cursed him into a Rākṣasa. He was to be redeemed from the curse on his death at the hands of Śrī Rāma. Tumburu, who was born as Virādha, the Rākṣasa in Daṇḍakāraṇya attacked Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa during their stay in exile in the forest and was killed by them. He was cremated in the forest. He resumed his former form as Tuṁburu and returned to Kubera's palace. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇya Kāṇḍa, Canto 4).

13) Kubera became Piṅgalākṣa. Kubera once looked with jealousy at Pārvatī seated on the left thigh of Śiva, and therefore, he became blind in one eye. When Pārvatī regained her equanimity she turned that eye of Kubera into yellow in colour so that he might always remember the incident. Henceforth Kubera came to be known as Ekapiṅgala.

14) Agastya cursed Kubera. Kubera also was invited to the chanting of mantras held by the Devas at Kuśāvatī. Kubera was on his way to Kuśāvatī with Maṇimān when the latter spat on the head of Agastya, who was performing penance on the banks of river Kālindī. Agastya cursed them thus:—"Oh Kubera, your attendant Maṇimān has insulted me. Therefore, he himself and the army will be killed by a man. You will grieve over their death. But, you will be absolved from this curse at the sight of the man, who had killed Maṇimān and his army."

Bhīmasena, who went to mount Gandhamādana in search of the Saugandhika flower could kill Maṇimān and his soldiers because of this curse of Agastya. After killing Maṇimān, Bhīma saw Kubera in person, and the latter got absolved from the curse. (Vana Parva, Chapter 161).

15) Other information about Kubera. (i) He comforted the Pāṇḍavas once during their life in exile in the forest. (Vana Parva, Chapter 161, Verse 41).

(ii) During the war with Rāvaṇa when Śrī Rāma fainted on the field, it was the water, purified by mantras, which Kubera sent through the Yakṣa, Guhyaka, which brought Rāma back to consciousness. (Vana Parva, Chapter 289, Verse 9).

(iii) Kubera once cursed the Yakṣa called Sthūṇakarṇa. He went to live in forest. Ambā the woman became a male by getting the penis of Sthūṇakarṇa. (See under Ambā and Sthūṇakarṇa).

(iv) Śukrācārya once gave Kubera a lot of wealth. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 23).

(v) A King called Mucukunda once fought with Kubera. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 74, Verse 4). See under Mucukunda.

(vi) Śukra once carried off all the wealth of Kubera, who complained to Śiva about it. Śiva, in anger, raised his śūla, when Śukra stood on its top and pressed it down. Śiva threw Śukra off, but he fell into the palms of Śiva who threw him again. Śukra then entered the stomach of Śiva and roamed about there finding no path to get out. Śiva waited with the śula to kill Śukra the moment he came out of his (Śiva's) stomach. Śukra came out as Śiva's son, and Pārvatī prevented Śiva from killing Śukra on the plea that it was not proper to kill one's own son. Śukra thus escaped and Kubera lost some of his wealth. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 289).

(vii) On another occasion Kubera entertained sage Aṣṭāvakra. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 19, Verse 37).

(viii) Kubera should be installed in temples as seated on a goat with club in his hand. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 51).

(ix) The name of Kubera's wife was Bhadrā. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 198, Verse 6).

(x) Kubera is called Naravāhana also as he rides in a vehicle drawn by men. He is also called Rājarāja, as he is King of Kings. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 275, Verses 1-3).

(xi) Viśravas got angry with Kubera, and from that day he deputed three Rākṣasa girls to serve his father. (Vana Parva, Chapter 275, Verses 1-3).

xii) Synonyms for Kubera used in Mahābhārata. Alakādhipa, Dhanada, Dhanadeśvara, Dhanagoptā, Dhanādhipa, Dhanādhipati, Dhanādhyakṣa, Dhaneśvara, Dhanapati, Dhaneśa, Draviṇapati, Gadādhara, Guhyakādhipa, Guhyakādhipati, Kailāsanilaya, Naravāhana, Nidhipa, Paulastya, Rājarāja, Rājarāṭ, Rākṣasādhipati, Rākṣaseśvara, Vaiśravaṇa, Vittagoptā, Vittapati, Vitteśa, Yakṣādhipa, Yakṣādhipati, Yakṣapati, Yakṣapravara, Yakṣarāṭ, Yakṣarāja, Yakṣarākṣasabhartā, Yakṣarakṣodhipa.

xiii) Kubera's garden is called Caitraratha, his son Nalakūbara, his capital Alakā and his mountain-seat Kailāsa.

xiv) Kubera once did tapas for hundred years when Śiva appeared and granted him the boon that he would become King of the Yakṣas. (Padma Purāṇa, Ādikhaṇḍa Chapter 16).

KUBERATĪRTHA. A holy place on the banks of the river Sarasvatī. Once the Devas appeared to Kubera at this tīrtha and granted him overlordship of wealth, friendship of Śiva, Deva-hood and rulership of the world. The Marudgaṇas crowned him King. He got the son Nalakūbara also there. The place, thus important in many ways came to be reputed as Kuberatīrtha in later years. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 97).

KUBHĀ. A river mentioned in the Ṛgveda. Kubhā, Sindhu, Suvāstu, Vitastā, Asiknī, Paruṣṇī, Vipāśā, Śatadrū, Sarasvatī and Yamunā are the important rivers referred to in the Ṛgveda.

KUBJĀ. An ugly woman about whom the following story is told in Chapter 126, of Uttarakhaṇḍa in Padma Purāṇa.

Kubjā became a widow in her very childhood, and she spent eight years in observing auspicious ceremonies. As she took the 'Māgha bath' every year she attained salvation. This was the period when Sunda and Upasunda were harassing the world, and to destroy them Kubjā incarnated as Tilottamā and hooked them by her excellent beauty. They fought each other for her hand and got killed. Brahmā was pleased at this and granted Kubjā a place in Sūryaloka.

KUBJĀMRAKA. A holy place. A visit to this place is as good as offering a gift of a thousand cows. The visitor will also attain heaven. (Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 40).

KUCELA. Sudāman, better known as Kucela was a brahmin class-mate of Śrī Kṛṣṇa at the Āśrama of sage Sāndīpani. One day Sāndīpani's wife deputed Kucela and Kṛṣṇa to collect fire-wood from the forest, and they had to stay the whole night there as they could not find out the way back to the āśrama due to heavy rain, thunder etc. After their education was over these two thick friends left the āśrama and went their different ways in life.

Śrī Kṛṣṇa became the lord of Dvārakā, and Kucela a house-holder with many children, and starvation gripped the family. One day, at the instance of his wife, Kucela started for Dvārakā to visit Kṛṣṇa with a packet of rice flakes as a present to him. Kṛṣṇa received his old classmate most cordially, and ate one handful of rice flakes from the packet brought by Kucela. Rukmiṇī prevented him from a second helping of the flakes. After spending some time most happily with his old friend, Kucela started homewards. Only on his way back did he think that Kṛṣṇa had not given him any monetary help. But, by the time he reached home his old dilapidated house had converted itself into a beautiful mansion, and his wife and children were in great happiness. Śrī Kṛṣṇa's blessings thus converted poor Kucela into a very rich person. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

KUHA. A prince of the Sauvīra kingdom. He was a follower of Jayadratha. (Vana Parva, Chapter 265, Verse 11).

KUHARA. A King of Kaliṅga. He was born from an aspect of the Asura called Krodhavaśa. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 65).

KUHŪ. Daughter of Aṅgiras, one of the Prajāpatis. To Aṅgiras, by his wife Smṛti were born four daughters called Sinīvālī, Kuhū, Rākā and Anumati. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 10).

KUJA. Kuja is an individual belonging to the Devagaṇa. His weapon is called Śakti. He wears the akṣamālā. (Rudrākṣa garland).

KUJṚMBHA. A very powerful and valiant Rākṣasa who possessed an iron rod named Sunanda. He had earned the boon that the rod would lose its power only on contact with women. He lived underground in a thick forest on the banks of the river Nirvindhyā. Once he abducted Mudāvatī, the beautiful daughter of Vidūratha, King of Vaiśālī. At last Vatsapri, the son of Bhalandana made Mudāvatī touch the iron rod of the Asura, which became powerless because of the touch of a woman, and then he (Vatsapri) killed the Asura. Vatsapri then married Mudāvatī. (Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa, Chapter 116).

KUKARDAMA. A wicked monarch of Piṇḍārakadeśa. He had to be born in Pretayoni (womb of a ghostess) due to his many sins, and once he came to the āśrama of Kahoḍa, and the sage recognised him as his former disciple and absolved him from his ghosthood. (Padma Purāṇa, Uttara Khaṇḍa, Chapter 139).

KUKKURA I. A King of the Lunar dynasty, the founder of the Kukkura dynasty.

KUKKURA II. A noble sage who distinguished himself in Dharmaputra's court. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 19).

KUKKURA (M). An urban region in ancient India. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 42).

KUKKUṬIKĀ. A female attendant of Skanda. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 15).

KUKUDMIN. A son, Ānarta, was born to King Śaryāti, the son of Vaivasvata Manu. Revata, the famous Rājarṣi, who ruled from his capital at Kuśasthalī island, was the son of Ānarta. Ānarta had hundred sons, the eldest being Kukudmin, and also a daughter called Revatī. (Devī Bhāgavata, 7th Skandha).

KUKURA I. (KUKŪRA). A King of the Vṛṣṇi dynasty. From Vṛṣṇi the descendants are in the following order :—Yudhājit—Śini— Satyaka — Sātyaki (Yuyudhāna)—Jaya — Kuṇi — Anamitra — Pṛśni — Citraratha—Kukura. As Kukura was a very reputed King his successors were also called Kukuras. The Kṣatriyas of this dynasty were subject to the orders of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 28). Members of the Kukura and Andhaka dynasties became drunkards, and at last quarrelled with one another and died. (Mausala Parva, Chapter 3).

KUKURA II. A serpent born in the Kaśyapa dynasty. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 103, Verse 10).

KUKṢI I. To Svāyambhuva Manu the son of Brahmā were born two sons called Priyavrata and Uttānapāda by his wife Śatarūpā, and Kardama Prajāpati married the daughter of Priyavrata. And, to them were born three sons called Samrāṭ, Kukṣi and Virāṭ. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 18).

KUKṢI II. A well known Asura King. An aspect of this Asura was later reborn as King Pārvatīya. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 56).

KULĀCALA. (KULAPARVATA). Kulaparvatas are seven in number, Viz. Mahendra, Malaya, Sahya, Śuktimān, Ṛkṣavān, Vindhya, Pāriyātra. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 11).

KULADHARMA. The moral and ethical codes of conduct, especially with reference to family life. Arjuna told the following about Kuladharmas to Kṛṣṇa at Kurukṣetra.

In the decline of a family, its time-honoured usages perish; with the perishing of such rites impiety overtakes the entire family.

With the growth of impiety even the noble women become unchaste, and if women become corrupt, mixture of castes ensues.

Hell is verily the lot of the family and family-destroyers through caste admixture; for, their ancestors fall deprived of balls of rice and libations.

The ever-lasting caste virtues and the family merits get ruined because of the chaos in the caste system.

We have heard that hell is verily the long-lasting abode of the men whose family religious practices have been broken. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 25 and the Gītā).

KULAMPUNĀ. A river which ought to be daily remembered. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 165, Verse 20).

KULAMPUNA. A holy place. A bath here brings about sanctification of the entire family. (Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 104).

KULATTHA. A holy centre in ancient India. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 66).

KULIKA. A prominent serpent born of Kadrū. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 41).

KULYA. A Ṛṣi who belonged to the line of disciples of Vyāsa. (Bhāgavata, 12th Skandha).

KUMĀRA I. Skanda or Subrahmaṇya. (For details see under Skanda).

KUMĀRA II. A King in ancient India. He was invited by the Pāṇḍavas to help them in the great war. He was defeated by Droṇa. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 24).

KUMĀRA III. A sage reputed as Sanatkumāra. (For details see under Sanatkumāra).

KUMĀRA IV. One of the prominent sons of Garuḍa.

KUMĀRA V. An urban region in ancient India. King Śreṇimān of Kumāra was defeated by Bhīma during his triumphal tour. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 1).

KUMĀRA (S). Sanaka, Sanandana, Sanatkumāra and Sanatsujāta were the sons of Brahmā endowed with eternal youthfulness. They are known as the Kumāras.

KUMĀRADĀSA. A Sanskrit poet of the 7th century A.D. His chief work is the great poem called Jānakīharaṇam consisting of twenty cantos.

KUMĀRADATTA. Guardian of the mother of the Vaiśya called Mūṣika. (See under Mūṣika).

KUMĀRADHĀRĀ. A river which has its source in Brahmasaras. Those who bathe in the river will become intelligent and wealthy. (Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 149).

KUMĀRAKA. A prominent serpent born in the Kauravya dynasty. It was burnt to death at the serpent yajña of King Janamejaya. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 13).

KUMĀRAKOṬI. A holy place. A visit to the place is as good as offering a gift of a thousand cows. (Vana Parva, Chapter 2, Verse 117).

KUMĀRAVANA (M). The place where King Sudyumna got changed into a woman. When once Sanaka and other sages went to Kumāravana to see Śiva he was seated there with Pārvatī on his lap. Seeing the sages Pārvatī got angry and cursed that men who entered the forest in future would be turned into women. King Sudyumna went to hunt in the forest ignorant of this curse, and as soon as he set foot in the forest he was turned into a woman. Purūravas was the son born to this woman by Budha. (Devī Bhāgavata, 1st Skandha).

KUMĀRAVARṢA. A place near mount Raivataka. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 26).

KUMĀRĪ I. A princess of the Kekaya kingdom. She was the mother of Pratiśravas, and wife of Bhīmasena, a King of the Puru dynasty. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 43).

KUMĀRĪ II. In verse 31, Chapter 23 of the Vana Parva, it is stated that certain maidens were born from the body of Skanda. They were called Kumārīs and they used to eat unborn children in the womb of their mothers.

KUMĀRĪ III. Wife of the serpent called Dhanañjaya. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 117, Verse 17).

KUMĀRĪ IV. A river in ancient India. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 36).

KUMĀRĪ V. A river in the Śāka island. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 32).

KUMĀRĪPŪJĀ. It is a special item in Navarātripūjā. According to the definition 'Kumārikā tu sā proktā dvivarṣā yā bhavediha', Kumārī is a two-year old female child. To worship such a child is Kumarīpūjā, and it should be conducted accompanied by sumptuous feasts and presentation of clothes etc. There are no hard and fast rules as to how many Kumārīs should be worshipped and as to the manner and method of the worship. The same Kumārī may be worshipped during all the days of the Pūjā, or every day one more girl may be worshipped like this:—one girl on the first day, two on the second day and so on. Or it may be in the order 4, 6, 8 etc or 4, 8, 12, 16 etc. Even if the daily number be nine it is in order. There is no rule that Kumārīs alone should be worshipped; any one of the navakanyakās would do. A girl two years old is called Kumārī, three years old Trimūrti; four years old Kalyāṇī; five years old Rohiṇī; six years old Kālī; Seven years old Caṇḍikā; eight years old Śāmbhavī; nine years old Durgā and ten years old Subhadrā. These girls are called Navakanyakās. But, a child less than two years of age should not be worshipped, because it will not be fully sensitive to taste, smell etc. Also, age alone does not render Kumārīs suitable for worship. They should be absolutely free from ulcers, leprosy, ugliness, squint-eyes, dwarfishness, lameness, bad odour, stigma of low birth etc. For the achievement of special objects a Brahmin child should be worshipped; for victory, a Kṣatriya child and for profit, a Vaiśya or a Sūdra child should be worshipped. The Brahmin may worship brahmin children; the Kṣatriya, Brahmin and Kṣatriya children; the Vaiśya, Brahmin, Kṣatriya and Vaiśya children; and the Śūdra, Brahmin, Kṣatriya, Vaiśya and Śūdra children. (Devī Bhāgavata, 3rd Skandha).

KUMBHA I. One of the three sons of Prahlāda, the other two being Virocana and Nikumbha. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 19).

KUMBHA. II. Son of Kumbhakarṇa, whose wife Vajrajvālā bore him two sons called Kumbha and Nikumbha. Both of them were very powerful, and Kumbha, in the Rāma-Rāvaṇa war defeated the army of monkeys on various occasions. Many of the ministers of Sugrīva tried to defeat Kumbha. Aṅgada, son of Bāli also could not stand up to him. Then Sugrīva fought against Kumbha and flung him into the sea when the water in it rose up to the level of mount Vindhya. Kumbha came ashore from the sea roaring but was fisted to death by Sugrīva. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa, Canto 76).

KUMBHAKA I. A warrior of Skanda. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 75).

KUMBHAKA II. (Nikumbhaka). A very reputed sage. If he visited any place at dusk he left it only after a thousand years. He visited Kāśī once when King Divodāsa was ruling the state after having killed the Rākṣasa called Kṣemaka, who had lived like a king there. Kumbhaka lived in a forest in Kāśī with his disciples. Prosperity reigned supreme within a radius of three Yojanas from where the sage lived. Neither wild beasts nor famine infested the area.

Once a fierce famine broke out in Kāśī, and the failure of rain caused great havoc. Finding it impossible to feed the cows their keepers went with their live-stock every morning to Kumbhaka's place where summer had not yet even peeped in, and after feeding their cows there, they returned home in the evening. But, one evening they led back with them the cows used by the sage for his Pūjās. When the sun set, as usual the sage sat before the sacred fire for Pūjā. But, the cow had not come. With his divine vision he found out the reason for the absence of the cow. He cursed that the region where the keepers of the cows lived be turned into a desert, and the kingdom of Kāśī became a desert place, whereupon king Divodāsa went to the banks of the Gomatī and founded a new kingdom there. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa Chapter 2).

KUMBHAKARṆA.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu thus: Brahmā—Pulastya—Viśravas—Kumbhakarṇa.

2) Birth. Pulastya, one of the Prajāpatis married Havirbhū (Mānini) and a son called Viśravas was born to them.

Rāvaṇa and Kumbhakarṇa were born to Viśravas of Puṣpotkaṭā, and Vibhīṣaṇa was born to him of Rākā, and Khara and Śūrpaṇakhā were born to him of Mālinī. The above version is based on verses—1 to 8 in Chapter 275 of the Vana Parva. But, according to Uttara Rāmāyaṇa, Rāvaṇa, Vibhīṣaṇa and Kumbhakarṇa were born to Viśravas of his wife called Kaikasī. According to the Agni Purāṇa, Puṣpotkaṭā and Kaikaśi were one and the same.

3) Former births of Kumbhakarṇa. Rāvaṇa and Kumbhakarṇa were originally the two Devas called Jaya and Vijaya. Viṣṇu appointed them as gate-keepers at Vaikuṇṭha. Once they stopped sages like Sanaka and others at the gates, and the latter cursed Jaya and Vijaya into Rākṣasas. When they complained about the curse to Viṣṇu he promised to welcome them back to Vaikuṇṭha after they had lived three births as Rākṣasas. Accordingly Jaya was born as Hiraṇyākṣa and Vijaya as Hiraṇyakaśipu, both of them Asuras. Mahāviṣṇu incarnated himself as a Boar and killed Hiraṇyākṣa and as Narasiṁha he killed Hiraṇyakaśipu. Hiraṇyākṣa and Hiraṇyakaśipu were reborn as Rāvaṇa and Kumbhakarṇa respectively. Mahāviṣṇu, during his incarnation as Śrī Rāma killed both Rāvaṇa and Kumbhakarṇa. Rāvaṇa was reborn as Śiśupāla and Kumbhakarṇa as Dantavaktra. Both of them were killed by Mahāviṣṇu during his incarnation as Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Thus the Deva called Vijaya, on account of the curse of Sanaka and other sages, passed through three lives as Hiraṇyakaśipu, Kumbhakarṇa and Dantavaktra and finally reached Vaikuṇṭha. (Bhāgavata, 7th Skandha).

4) Kumbhakarṇa secured boons. Kumbhakarṇa spent his childhood with his brothers at the āśrama of his father on mount Gandhamādana. Kubera was at the zenith of his glory at that time, having been crowned king of the Yakṣas, and also having got the Puṣpaka Vimāna. The reputation of Kubera kindled jealousy in Kumbhakarṇa and his brothers. They too performed penance in the forest on one foot for a thousand years. But, Brahmā did not appear. They continued the penance without eating any food. Khara and Śūrpaṇakhā stayed there serving their brothers. Even after the second thousand years Brahmā did not appear. Then Rāvaṇa cut off his ten heads and made offerings of them to Brahmā. Then Brahmā appeared. Brahmā restored his heads to Rāvaṇa and he was granted the boon that he would not be killed by anybody but a man. The Devas shuddered at the gift to Rāvaṇa, and feared about the future in case Kumbhakarṇa too got such a boon. At their request Sarasvatī danced on his tongue at the time of Kumbhakarṇa's request for a boon. Kumbhakarṇa wanted NIRDEVATVAM (Absence of all Devas). But by a slip of the tongue (caused by Sarasvatī) what he asked for was nidrāvatvam (sleep). Brahmā granted him nidrāvatvam ; he said that Kumbhakarṇa would sleep for six months of the year continuously. Vibhīṣaṇa got the boon that he should remember righteousness in danger and use the Brahmāstra without any training in its use. The brothers returned home after securing the boons, and, after driving off Kubera, the lord of Laṅkā, Rāvaṇa and his brothers took their abode there. (Vana Parva, Chapter 275 and Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

5) Death of Kumbhakarṇa. Kumbhakarṇa played a very important part in the Rāma-Rāvaṇa war. Prominent warriors on the side of Rāma, like Sugrīva, his ministers and Lakṣmaṇa fought with him. But, none of them could kill him. At last, Śrī Rāma's arrows killed him. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa, Chapter 67).

Kumbhakarṇa is not to be viewed merely and purely as an evil character. His advice to Rāvaṇa on various occasions shows noble traits of his character. When Śrī Rāma with his army of monkeys appeared on the other side of the ocean Rāvaṇa held a conference of his brothers, ministers and others at which Kumbhakarṇa spoke as follows:—"You abducted Sītā without consulting us, and we would not therefore be responsible for the consequences of that action of yours. But, it is not proper that the younger brother should keep away when danger faces the elder one, and on that principle here I am ready to fight Rāma."

These weighty words of Kumbhakarṇa throw considerable light on the character of Kumbhakarṇa. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddhakāṇḍa, Chapter 12).

KUMBHAKARṆĀŚRAMA. A holy place. He who visits this place will enjoy the respect of others. (Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 157).

KUMBHĀṆḌA. Minister of Bāṇāsura. Citralekhā, companion of Uṣā, the daughter of Bāṇa was the daughter of Kumbhāṇḍa. (See under UṢĀ). (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

KUMBHĀṆḌAKODARA. A warrior of Skandadeva. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 69).

KUMBHARETAS (RATHAPRABHU, RATHADHVĀNA). Bharadvāja, the first son of Śaṁyu married Vīrā, and an Agnideva was born as their son. This Agni is known by the names Kumbharetas, Rathaprabhu and Rathadhvāna. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 220, Verse 9).

KUMBHAŚRAVAS. An attendant of Skandadeva. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 26).

KUMBHAVAKTRA. A warrior of Skandadeva. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 75).

KUMBHAYONI I. Agastya. (See under Agastya).

KUMBHAYONI II. A Deva woman who danced in Indrasabhā when Arjuna came to Indraloka. (Vana Parva, Chapter 43, Verse 30).

KUMBHĪNADĪ. Daughter of Sumālī the Rākṣasa, by Ketumatī. She was abducted by the King of Mathurā called Madhupa. Rāvaṇa killed him. (See under Madhupa).

KUMBHĪNASA. An asura and a notorious philanderer. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 39, Verse 7).

KUMBHĪNASĪ I. Wife of Aṅgāraparṇa, a great Gandharva. When Arjuna was about to kill Citraratha Kumbhīnasī requested Yudhiṣṭhira to save her husband, and he was accordingly set free. (For details see under Aṅgāraparṇa).

KUMBHĪNASĪ II. A daughter born to Viśvāvasu of Analā. A Rākṣasa called Madhu abducted and made her his wife. The famous Lavaṇāsura was their son.

KUMBHĪPĀKA (M). One of the twentyeight narakas (hells). It is intended for the cruel folk, who kill for food harmless animals and birds. Since such cruel folk are roasted in Kumbhī fire the hell came to be known by this name. Big vessels full of boiling oil are kept there and the servants of Yama push the sinners into them. One who had killed an animal will be kept in the boiling oil for as many years as the number of hairs the animal killed by him had on its body. (Devī Bhāgavata, 8th Skandha; also see under Pitṛtīrtha).

KUMUDA I. A prominent serpent. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 15).

KUMUDA II. A prominent monkey, who was an attendant of Sugrīva. (Vana Parva, Chapter 289, Verse 4).

KUMUDA III. A great elephant born in the dynasty of Supratīka. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 99, Verse 15).

KUMUDA IV. A son of Garuḍa. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Verse 12).

KUMUDA V. One of the five attendants given by Brahmā to Skanda. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 39).

KUMUDA VI. A warrior who fought with Skandadeva. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 56).

KUMUDA VII. A synonym of Mahāviṣṇu. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 149, Verse 76).

KUMUDA VIII. There are four mountains supporting Mahāmeru on its four sides, and Kumuda is one of those four mountains, Mandara, Merumandara and Supārśva being the other three. According to the 8th Skandha of the Devī Bhāgavata there are other tweny mountains on the four sides of Mahāmeru, viz. Kuraṅga, Kuraga, Kuśumbha, Vikaṅkata, Trikūṭa, Śiśira, Pataṅga, Rucaka, Nīla, Niṣadha, Śitivāsa, Kapila, Śaṅkha, Vaidūrya, Cārudhi, Haṁsa, Ṛṣabha, Nāga, Kālañjara and Nārada.

KUMUDĀDI. One of those Vedic scholars, who belonged to the line of Vyāsa's disciples. His forte was the Atharvaveda. Jaimini was a reputed disciple of Vyāsa. His son, Sumantu, taught his disciple Kabandha the Atharvaveda. Kabandha divided it into two between Devadarśa and Pathya. Medhā, Brahmabali, Śautkāyani and Pippalāda were the disciples of Devadarśa, and Jābāli, Kumudādi and Śaunaka were the disciples of Pathya. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 3, Chapter 6).

KUMUDĀKṢA. A prominent serpent. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 15).

KUMUDAMĀLĪ (KUMUDAMĀNĪ). One of the four attendants given by Brahmā to Skanda, the other three being Nandisena, Ghaṇṭākarṇa and Lohitākṣa. All the four were very powerful, as swift and speedy as wind and noted for their sexual energy. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 25).

KUMUDODARA. A particular region in the Śāka island. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 25).

KUMUDVATĪ I. Wife of King Vimarśana of Kirātadeśa. Kumudvatī requested him one day, to put a stop to his cruelties against the people. His reply was as follows :—"Oh ! dear wife, don't feel sorry. In my past life I was a dog and, starved almost to death. I went to the gates of the Śiva temple at Pampāpura. It was Caturdaśī day, and thousands of people had gathered there, and I stood there looking at the Śivaliṅga. Then someone cried out, 'Beat the dog to death', and though, in mortal terror, I ran thrice about the temple, people beat me to death. Since, although only by accident, I had run thrice around the temple, I was born as a King in the present life. I cherish the greatest devotion for Lord Śiva; but, as inherent tendencies do not die out so easily I possess certain characteristics of the dog and that is why I commit the present cruelties."

On hearing her husband's past history Kumudvatī wanted to know about her past also, and Vimarśana said thus : "In the past life you were a she-dove. Once you sat on the top of a Pārvatī temple with a piece of flesh in your beak. Then another dove tried to snatch it from you, and with it you flew thrice round the temple. But, the other dove killed you and flew away with the piece of flesh. Since you flew around the Pārvatī temple thrice you are now born as a queen." Vimarśana told her this also that in the next birth she would be born as the daughter of King Sṛñjaya, as the daughter of the King of Kaliṅga in her third rebirth, as the daughter of the King of Magadha in her fourth birth, as the daughter of King Daśārṇa in her fifth birth, as the daughter of Yayāti in her sixth birth, as the daughter named Vasumatī of the King of Vidarbha in her seventh birth, and that ultimately she would attain salvation. Vimarśana in his next birth would likewise be born as the Sindhu King, as the King of Saurāṣṭra in his third birth, as the King of Gāndhāra in his fourth birth, as King of Avantī in his fifth birth, as King Ānarta in his sixth birth, as King of the Pāṇḍyas in his seventh birth, and that ultimately he too would attain salvation. Thus Vimarśana taught his wife that both of them would ultimately attain salvation as they had gone round the temple. (Śiva Purāṇa, Caturdaśīmāhātmya).

KUMUDVATĪ II. Wife of Kuśa, son of Śrī Rāma. Kuśa lost the ornaments on his hands in water once while he was sporting in the river. Angry at the loss Kuśa was about to shoot his arrows at the Sarayū when the nāga called Kumuda not only returned to him his lost ornaments but also gave Kumudvatī as wife to him. (Ānanda Rāmāyaṇa).

KUNADĪKA. A warrior of Skanda deva. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 58).

KUṆḌA. A very erudite Brahmarṣi. He was present at the serpent yajña of Janamejaya. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 53, Verse 8).

KUṆḌA. One of the five attendants given by Dhātā to Skandadeva, the other four being Kusuma, Kumuda, Ḍambara and Āḍambara. (Śalya, Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 38).

KUṆḌABHEDĪ. A son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra; Bhīma killed him. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 127, Verse 60).

KUṆḌADANTA. A Videha brahmin, Kuṇḍadanta gave up his worldly possession for the attainment of spiritual knowledge, and sought the help of sage Kadamba. Finding that he had not yet completely mastered the senses Kadamba sent him to Ayodhyā, where he lived with Śrī Rāma, and Vasiṣṭha taught him the necessary texts on the subject so that he attained spiritual knowledge. (Yogavāsiṣṭha).

KUṆḌADHĀRA I. A son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. He is known as Kuṇḍodara also. Bhīmasena killed him. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 88, Verse 23).

KUṆḌADHĀRA II. A serpent worshipping Varuṇa in his court. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 9. Verse 9).

KUṆḌADHĀRA III. A cloud. None of the Devas condescended to bless a poor brahmin, who once performed penance in the forest when a cloud called Kuṇḍadhāra appeared and told him that, if the Devas would permit, he (cloud) would bless him. Immediately the Deva called Māṇibhadra requested the cloud to bless the brahmin. The cloud did so and the brahmin attained salvation. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 271).

KUṆḌAJA (KUṆḌABHEDĪ. A son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra; Bhīma killed him. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 96, Verse 26).

KUṆḌALA I. A serpent born in the Kaurava dynasty. It was burnt to death at the serpent yajña of Janamejaya. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 16).

KUṆḌALA II. An urban region in ancient India. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 63).

KUṆḌALAPURUṢA. See under Sāmudrika Śāstra.

KUṆḌALĪ II. A river the water of which was drunk by the Indians. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 21).

KUṆḌALĪ III. A son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra, also kuown as Kuṇḍāśī. He was killed by Bhīma. (Bhīṣma. Parva, Chapter 96, Verse 24).

KUṆḌALĪ IV. A synonym of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 149, Verse 110).

KUNDĀPARĀNTA. An urban area in ancient India. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 49).

KUṆḌĀRIKĀ. A female attendant of Skandadeva. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 15).

KUṆḌĀŚĪ. See under Kuṇḍalī III.

KUṆḌIKA. Great-grandson of King Kuru of the lunar dynasty, and son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 58).

KUṆḌINA. The capital of ancient Vidarbha. Damayantī was born and brought up in this city. (See under Damayantī).

KUṆḌĪVIṢA. An urban region in ancient India. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 50, Verse 50).

KUṆḌĪVṚṢA. An urban region in ancient India. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 9).

KUṆḌODARA I. A son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Bhīma killed him. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 88, Verse 23).

KUṆḌODARA II. A prominent serpent. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 16).

KUṆḌODARA III. Sixth son of King Janamejaya. The King had eight sons, Viz. Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Pāṇḍu, Bālhīka, Niṣadha, Jāmbūnada, Kuṇḍodara, Padāti and Vasāti. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 57).

KUṆIGARGA. A reputed sage. By severe austerities he increased his spiritual powers, created a girl by his mental power, and afterwards entered into Samādhi. The girl, who did not relish the idea of marriage, began penance in solitude, and she grew old. In the Mahābhārata she is known as Vṛddhakanyā (Old Virgin). In the evening of her life she longed to give up her material body and to attain salvation. At this juncture Nārada told her that salvation was not for unmarried women. She, therefore, gave half the power of her penance to a young man called Śṛṅgavān and lived as his wife for one single night. She thus attained salvation (Śalya Parva, Chapter 52).

KUṆINDA. A noble brahmin. He presented a divine conch to Yudhiṣṭhira at his Rājasūya Yajña. (Śabhā Parva, Chapter 51, Southern text).

KUÑJA. A reputed sage. Once he enjoyed the company of Pramlocā, the celestial woman. (See under Pramlocā).

KUÑJALA I. A warrior of Skanda. (Śalya Parva. Chapter 45).

KUÑJALA II. A wise parrot which lived on the banks of the river Narmadā. The Padma Purāṇa (Chapter 85, Bhūmikhaṇḍa) has the following to say about the parrot.

Kuñjala, the wise parrot, had a wife and four sons called Ujjvala, Samujjvala, Vijvala and Kapiñjala. These brothers used to feed themselves on sweet fruits etc. on the planes, mountains and other places. They also used to carry tasty fruits to their parents. The four brothers thus led a happy life in every way. (See under Subāhu).

KUÑJARA I. A great monkey. Añjanā mother of Hanūmān was the daughter of Kuñjara. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Kiṣkindhā Kāṇḍa; Canto 66, Verse 9).

KUÑJARA II. A well-known serpent. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 15).

KUÑJARA III. A prince of the Sauvīra country. He was a follower of Jayadratha, and was killed by Arjuna. (Vana Parva, Chapter 271).

KUNTAKA (KUNTALA). A Sanskrit poet who flourished in the eleventh century A.D. He was a contemporary of Abhinavagupta, and a critic who maintained that the 'life' of real poetry was Vakrokti (expressing ideas in an artistically round-about way instead of in a blunt and plain manner).

KUNTALA. The King of the country Kuntala. Kuntala was a Kingdom in ancient South India. The King of the country was called Kuntala and the people were known as Kuntalas. (Sabhā Parva, and Bhīṣma Parva).

KUNTĪ (PṚTHĀ). Wife of King Pāṇḍu and the mother of the Pāṇḍavas, Kuntī is a noble heroine in the Mahābhārata.

1) Birth. Kuntī was the sister of Śrī Kṛṣṇa's father Vasudeva. Her real name was Pṛthā. Vasudeva and Pṛthā were the children of King Śūrasena of the Yādava dynasty. King Kuntibhoja was the son of Śūrasena's sister. He had no issues. Śūrasena had promised to give the daughter first born to him as the adopted daughter of Kuntibhoja, and accordingly his first-born daughter Pṛthā was given to Kuntibhoja, and Kuntī was brought up in his palace. From that day onwards Pṛthā came to be known as Kuntī. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 111).

Kuntī, Mādrī and Gāndhārī were born from aspects respectively of the three celestial women Siddhi, Kṛti and Mati. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 160).

2) Kuntī and the mantra. To treat brahmins who came to the court of Kuntibhoja with worshipful offerings etc. was the duty of Kuntī. Once sage Durvāsas visited Kuntibhoja, and as he knew that the sage was easily annoyed Kuntī was specially deputed for his service, and she served him to the utmost. One day, to test Kuntī, he asked her to be ready with his food by the time he took his bath, and he took practically no time to return after bath and sit for meals. By that time Kuntī had managed to cook his food, which she placed before him in a plate. The food was too hot and steaming, and the sage meaningfully looked at the back of Kuntī. Realising the meaning of the look, Kuntī turned her back to the sage for him to place the plate of food thereon. The sage placed it accordingly on her back and began eating. Though her back was really burning she showed no sign of it. Pleased at her behaviour the sage taught her a mantra and blessed her to the following effect.

"Repeating this mantra you invoke whichever Deva you like and thanks to his favour you will get children. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Lāvāṇakalambaka, Taraṅga 2 and Bhārata (Malayālam) Chapter 111).

3) Kuntī tested the mantra. After the departure of Durvāsas from the palace, Kuntī developed an irresistible desire to test the efficacy of the mantra. and one day she invoked Sun-god with the mantra. Thereupon Sūrya approached her in the guise of a brahmin youth. Kuntī got alarmed. Owing to disinclination to become an unmarried mother Kuntī could not make up her mind to welcome the brahmin youth. But, Sūrya deva argued that his coming could not be in vain, and Kuntī had to yield. She requested Sūrya for a son adorned with helmet, ear-rings etc. (Vana Parva Chapter 207 Verse 17).

Sūrya assured Kuntī that even though a child was born to her from him, that will not affect her virginity and departed. Kuntī delivered a son in due course of time in secret. She locked up the child in a box and floated it in the Yamunā. An old charioteer called Adhiratha picked up the child from the river and brought it up as though it were his own son. That boy grew up to become the famous Karṇa. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 112).

4) Kuntī's wedding. In due course Kuntibhoja celebrated Kuntī's Svayaṁvara and she chose King Pāṇḍu of the lunar dynasty as her husband, and Pāṇḍu took her to Hastināpura in all pomp and glory. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 112).

5) Kuntī's wedded life. Pāṇḍu married another wife also called Mādrī, and all the three of them led a very happy life. During one of those days Pāṇḍu went a hunting in the forest and arrowed to death sage Kindama, who was making love with his wife in the forest, both of them having assumed the forms of deer. The sage cursed Pāṇḍu with death the moment he touched his wives, and grief-stricken at the curse he told his wives about it and decided to take to Sannyāsa. But, the wives told him that they would commit suicide in case he took to Sannyāsa. Ultimately Pāṇḍu went to Śataśṛṅga with his wives, and there he began the performance of penances.

After some time Pāṇḍu asked his wives to become mothers by some noble persons. But, Kuntī and Mādrī did not agree to it. Then Kuntī told Pāṇḍu about the boon she had got from Durvāsas, and with his permission she bore three sons called Dharmaputra, Bhīma and Arjuna respectively from the three Devas, Dharma, Vāyu and Indra. As it had been ordained that the fourth and fifth children would bring sorrows and pain to the parents Kuntī satisfied herself with three children (Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Verses 77, 78).

But, as Pāṇḍu desired that Mādrī also should have children by Kuntī's mantra she used the remaining mantra and two sons, Nakula and Sahadeva from the Aśvinīdevas were born to her.

6) Kuntī widowed. During a winter when the forest was fragrant with flowers, Pāṇḍu forgot all about the Sage's curse and indulged in sexual joys with Mādrī, and immediately he expired. Kuntī and Mādrī competed with each other to end their life in the funeral pyre of their husband. But, as the sages and other relations insisted that one of them should live to bring up the children, Mādrī alone ended her life, and Kuntī returned to Hastināpura with the five children. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 125).

7) Kuntī at Hastināpura. At Hastināpura differences cropped up between the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas. Kuntī and the five Pāṇḍavas removed themselves to the 'Lac palace' built at Vāraṇāvata. When the palace was gutted by fire Kuntī and her sons escaped through a secret tunnel to the forest, and Bhīma carried the worn out Kuntī on his shoulders. In the forest the Rākṣasa woman Hiḍimbī, requested Kuntī to permit Bhīma to become her husband, and Kuntī advised Bhīma to beget a child by Hiḍimbī, and thus was born Ghaṭotkaca. At the city named Ekacakrā, Vyāsa consoled Kuntī. There the brahmins complained to Kuntī about the depredations of Bakāsura. Kuntī got Baka killed by Bhīma and asked the brahmins to keep the matter secret. On the advice of a brahmin who came there accidentally Kuntī and others visited the Pāñcāla kingdom, and there Arjuna, having defeated all the Kings present at Pāñcālī's Svayaṁvara wedded her. The Pāṇḍavas who returned with Pāñcālī at dusk time were asked by Kuntī to enjoy that day's bhikṣā (Alms received) together among themselves. Accordingly Pāñcālī became the wife of all the five Pāṇḍavas. Vidura, at the court of the Pāñcāla King saluted Kuntī and presented to her various varieties of gems. Kuntī and Vidura talked about the painful incidents of the past, and Vidura escorted the Pāṇḍavas back to Hastināpura.

Arjuna led a solitary life in the forest for one year, and then returned to Hastināpura with Subhadrā whom he had married meanwhile. Kuntī received Subhadrā heartily. In the game of dice with Duryodhana, Dharmaputra was defeated, and the Pāṇḍavas again started for their life in the forest. During this period Kuntī lived in Vidura's house. Meanwhile Śrī Kṛṣṇa one day visited Kuntī, and she told Kṛṣṇa about the fate of her sons with tears in her eyes. Duryodhana refused to give half of the kingdom to the Pāṇḍavas, who returned after twelve years' life in exile in the forest and one year's life incognito. Śrī Kṛṣṇa prompted the Pāṇḍavas to war with the Kauravas, and both the parties began preparations for war. (Ādi Parva, from Chapter 135 to Sabhā and Vana Parvans and Udyoga Parva, upto Chapter 137).

8). Kuntī before Karṇa. War clouds grew thick and fast, and Kuntī at Vidura's house got restless. Her heart trembled at the disasters of war as described by Vidura. She went alone to the banks of the Gaṅgā where just then Karṇa was engaged in Japa with his hands raised and face turned to the east. Kuntī waited for some time after which they began to talk. With tears in her eyes Kuntī told Karṇa that he was her son and implored him to return to the Pāṇḍava side to which Karṇa replied as follows : "Oh ! noble lady, that is quite impossible. I have vowed to kill Arjuna. I will not kill the other four Pāṇḍavas. You shall always have five sons alive. If Arjuna were to be no more I would be there for you in his stead."

Kuntī shuddered at those terrible words of Karṇa, and thus did both of them part with each other. (Udyoga Parva, Chapters 145 and 146).

9) Last days of Kuntī. The great war ended. Thousands of warriors on the Kaurava side like the mighty Karṇa were no more. On the Pāṇḍava side also many were killed. Though the Pāṇḍavas won the war their hearts no more enjoyed peace or happiness. Kuntī suffered as though caught in a wild fire. She asked the Pāṇḍavas to perform the obsequies for Karṇa also. When she let out the secret that Karṇa was her first-born child Dharmaputra burst into tears. Kuntī consoled Subhadrā and Uttarā who were lamenting over the death of Abhimanyu. She requested Śrī Kṛṣṇa to cremate the dead son of Uttarā.

Then Kuntī went to Gāndhārī, who stood there bathed in tears. Grief-stricken, Dhṛtarāṣṭra and Gāndhārī started for the forest. Holding Gāndhārī's hand in hers Kuntī led the way. The Pāṇḍavas prevented their mother from going, but she did not yield. She advised Dharmaputra to have a special eye on Sahadeva, not to forget Karṇa's name and not to show any displeasure towards Bhīma and Pāñcālī. But, the Pāṇḍavas wanted to follow their beloved mother into the forest. Pāñcālī and Subhadrā stationed themselves behind Kuntī, who shed copious tears at the sight. Dhṛtarāṣṭra and Gāndhārī, who also felt deeply pained at the sight tried their best to dissuade Kuntī from following them to the forest. But, Kuntī consoled her sons and daughters-in-law by means of sympathetic words and followed Dhṛtarāṣṭra and Gāndhārī to the banks of the Gaṅgā, where all of them lived together. The Pāṇḍavas felt acutely the absence of their mother at home. They went to the forest and paid their respects to Kuntī on the banks of the Gaṅgā. Kuntī embraced Sahadeva with tears in her eyes. Though Yudhiṣṭhira and Sahadeva wanted to stay with Kuntī in her service she did not allow that. Kuntī, Dhṛtarāṣṭra and Gāndhārī performed penance in the forest near the Gaṅgā, taking food only once in a month. The three of them died there in a wild fire. (Āśramavāsika Parva, Chapter 37, Verse 31). Their relations inmersed their bones in the Gaṅgā and performed the necessary obsequies. (Strī, Śānti, Āśramavāsika and Āśvamedhika Parvans).

10) Kuntī in Devaloka. Kuntī, Mādrī and Pāṇḍu went to Devaloka. (Svargārohaṇa Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 15).

KUNTI II. A particular region in ancient India. The warriors there were known as Kuntis. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 11).

KUNTI III. An urban area in ancient India. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 27).

KUNTI IV. A King born in the Yayāti dynasty.

KUNTIBHOJA.

1) General. A King of the Yadu dynasty; son of the sister of Śūrasena, who was the father of Vasudeva and grandfather of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (For genealogy see under Śrī Kṛṣṇa). Kuntibhoja was also the foster-father of Kuntī, the daughter of Śūrasena. (See Para 1, under Kuntī 1).

2) Other information. (i) Sahadeva, during his triumphal march over the southern kingdoms subjugated Kuntibhoja. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 16).

(ii) He participated in the Rājasūya Yajña of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 12).

(iii) The son of Kuntibhoja also became famous under the same name, and Purujit was the son of this Kuntibhoja. Both of them were uncles of the Pāṇḍavas. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 22).

(iv) On the first day of the Kurukṣetra war Kuntibhoja and his sons fought with Vinda and Anuvinda. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 72),

(v) It was Kuntibhoja who occupied the netrasthāna (eye-position) of the Krauñcavyūha set up by Dhṛṣṭadyumna. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 50, Verse 47).

(vi) Kuntibhoja and Śatānīka occupied the Pādasthāna (foot position) of the Makaravyūha on the Pāṇḍava side. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 75, Verse 11).

(vii) He possessed a noble and high-bred horse. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 23, Verse 46).

(viii) In the great war he fought with Alambuṣa. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 16, Verse 183).

(ix) Ten of his children were killed by Aśvatthāmā. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 96, Verse 18).

KUPAṬA. An Asura son of Kaśyapa by Danu. (Adi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 26).

KURAṄGA. One of the mountains which encircle Mahāmeru. (Devī Bhāgavata, 8th Skandha).

KURAṄGAKṢETRA. A holy place. He who bathes here and observes fast for three nights will attain salvation. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25).

KURAÑÑU. (The Malayālam word for monkey). Kaśyapa, the grandson of Brahmā and son of Marīci married eight daughters of Dakṣaprajāpati and one of them Krodhavaśā delivered ten daughters. Monkeys and lions were born from Harī, one of those ten daughters. Thus they are brothers, and both are called 'hari'. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇya Kāṇḍa, Canto 14, Verse 24).

KURAPARVATA. One of the mountains which encircle Mahāmeru. (Devī Bhāgavata, 8th Skandha).

KŪRCĀMUKHA. One of the sons of Viśvāmitra. They were Brahmavādins, (expounders of Brahman) (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 53).

KŪRMA. I. A prominent serpent, son of Kadrū. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 41).

KŪRMA II. (Turtle). The second incarnation of Mahāviṣṇu. (See under Avatāras).

KŪRMAPURĀṆA. One of the eighteen Purāṇas. (See under Purāṇas).

KURU I. A King called Kuru was born in Dhruva's dynasty.

Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu thus : Brahmā — Svāyambhuva Manu—Uttānapāda—Dhruva— Śiṣṭi — Ripu—Cākṣuṣa (Cākṣuṣa Manu)—Kuru.

King Kuru was the grandfather of the reputed Vena and the great grandfather of emperor Pṛthu. Aṅga was the father of Vena. Not much is said about this Kuru in the Purāṇas. Kuru had ten brothers called Puru, Ūru, Śatadyumna, Tapasvī, Satyavāk, Śuci, Agniṣṭhu, Adhiratha, Sudyumna and Abhimanyu. Kuru had by his wife Ātreyī seven sons called Aṅga, Sumanas Svāti, Kratu, Aṅgiras, Gaya and Śibi, and to Aṅga was born by his wife Sunīthā the son, who became reputed as Vena. Pṛthu was Vena's son. Pṛthu had five sons called Antardhāna, Vādī, Sūta, Māgadha, Pālita. To Antardhāna was born of his wife Śikhaṇḍinī a son called Havirdhāna, to whom were born by his wife Dhiṣaṇā six sons called Prācīnabarhis, Śukra, Gaya, Kṛṣṇa, Vraja and Ajina. The above is the only information available about this Kuru dynasty in the Purāṇas. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 13), KURU II. Two sons, i.e. Uttānapāda and Priyavrata were born to Svāyambhuva Manu of his wife Śatarūpā. One King Kuru born in the dynasty of Uttānapāda has been referred to above, i.e. Kuru I. Another King Kuru is noticed in Priyavrata's dynasty. To Priyavrata were born of his wife Barhiṣmatī fourteen sons called Agnīdhra, Idhmajihva, Yajñabāhu, Mahāvīra, Ghṛtapṛṣṭha, Sava, Hiraṇyaretā, Medhātithi, Vītihotra, Kavi, Ūrjaspati, Uttama, Tāmasa and Raivata. To Agnīdhra by his wife Pūrvacitti were born nine sons called Nābhi, Kimpuruṣa, Hari, Ilāvṛta, Ramyaka, Hiraṇmaya, Kuru, Bhadrāśva and Ketumāla. One King Kuru appears among them; but nothing more than the fact that he married a woman called Nārī is known about him. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

KURU III. A King, the brother of Rantideva. (See under Rantideva).

KURU IV.

1) Genealogy and birth. The very famous King Kuru was born in the Puru dynasty. His genealogy is given hereunder. Descended from Viṣṇu thus : Brahmā - Atri - Candra - Budha - Purūravas - Āyus - Nahuṣa - Yayāti - Puru - Janamejaya - Prācinvān - Pravīra - Namasyu - Vītabhaya - Śuṇḍu - Bahuvidha - Saṁyāti-Rahovādī - Raudrāśva - Matināra - Santurodha - Duṣyanta - Bharata - Suhotra - Suhotā - Gala - Garda-Suketu - Bṛhatkṣatra - Hasti - Ajamīḍha - Ṛkṣa - Saṁvaraṇa - Kuru.

To Kuru were born four sons called Parīkṣit, Sudhanus, Jahnu and Niṣadhāśva. The genealogy of the Kuru Kings is as follows : Sudhanus-Cyavana - Kṛti - Uparicaravasu - Bṛhadratha - Kuśāgraja - Ṛṣabha - Puṣpavān - Juhu.

Jarāsandha was another son of Bṛhadratha. Jarāsandha had four sons called Soma, Sahadeva, Turya and Śrutaśru. From Jahnu, the following sons were born :—Suratha - Vidūratha - Sārvabhauma - Jayatsena, - Ravīya - Bhāvuka - Cakroddhata - Devātithi - Ṛkṣa - Bhīma and Pratīca. Pratīca had three sons called Devāpi, Śantanu and Bālhīka. Śantanu is known as Mahābhiṣak also. Dhṛtarāṣṭra and Pāṇḍu were the successors of Śantanu, and they came to be known as Kauravas also as they belonged to the dynasty of Kuru. But, since the sons of Pāṇḍu were born of Devas they may not be called Kauravas.

2) Other Information. (1) Kurukṣetra became holy and sanctified on account of Kuru's tapas. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 80).

(ii) While Kuru was once ploughing a land in Kurukṣetra Indra appeared there, and they had a talk. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 53 Verse 6).

(iii) While Kuru was once performing a yajña at Kurukṣetra, the river Sarasvatī went there under the name Sureṇu (Oghavatī) and watered the land. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 38, Verses 26 and 27).

KURU V. One of the sages who visited Bhīṣma on his bed of arrows. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 47, Verse 8).

KURU VI. A son born to Saṁvaraṇa of Tapatī. The boy, following his naming and other consecratory rites, grew up like fire in which was offered havis (ghee). At the age of ten he became omniscient. At the age of sixteen he married Saudāminī, daughter of Sudāman. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 21).

KURUJĀṄGALAM (KURU). A kingdom in ancient India of which Hastināpura was the capital. This kingdom acquired the name Kurujāṅgala from Kuru. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 49).

KURUJIT. A king born in King Janaka's dynasty. Aja was his father and Ariṣṭanemi his son. The genealogy from Janaka to Kurujit is as follows : Janaka—Vīrada—Nandivardhana — Suketu — Devarāta — Bṛhaddhṛta—Mahāvīra —Dhṛtaketu—Haryaśva—Maru—Pratisvaka-Kraturatha — Devamīḍha — Vidhṛta — Mahādhṛta—Kṛtirāta — Mahāromā—Svarṇaromā—Prastharomā — Sīradhvaja (Janaka, the father of Sītā)—Kurudhvaja —Dharmadhvaja—Kṛtadhvaja—Keśiketu— Bhānumān —Śakradyumna—Śuci—Vanadhvaja — Ūrjaketu—Aja —Kurujit. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

KURUKṢETRA.

1). General. Made famous by the Mahābhārata, Kurukṣetra is a sacred place situated to the south of the river Sarasvatī and north of Dṛṣadvatī. People who live in this region really live in heaven. (Araṇyakāṇḍa, Chapter 83, Verse 4).

According to Pulastya even those who come into contact with the dust blown by the wind from this place meet with auspicious end.

2). Other details. (i) Takṣaka lived on the banks of the river Ikṣumatī in Kurukṣetra (Ādi Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 139).

(ii) Kurukṣetra became a sacred place as king Kuru did tapas there. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 50).

(iii) Two sons called Citrāṅgada and Vicitravīrya were born to Śantanu of Satyavatī. Once while hunting in a forest Citrāṅgada met a Gandharva, whose name also was Citrāṅgada. The Gandharva got angry that a man bore his name and so he killed Citrāṅgada. The incident took place at Kurukṣetra (Ādi Parva, Chapter 101, Verses 8 and 9).

(iv) Sunda and Upasunda, who conquered all the worlds lived in Kurukṣetra (Ādi Parva, Chapter 209, Verse 27).

(v) Before the Khāṇḍava forest was burnt down Takṣaka left the place and went to Kurukṣetra and lived there. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 226, Verse 4).

(vi) During their life of exile in the forest the Pāṇḍavas visited Kurukṣetra (Vana Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 1).

(vii) King Māndhātā once conducted a yajña within the boundaries of Kurukṣetra. (Vana Parva, Chapter 126, Verse 45).

(viii) The reputed sage Mudgala lived here. (Vana Parva, Chapter 260, Verse 3).

(ix) Once a fierce fight took place here (Kurukṣetra) between Bhīṣma and Paraśurāma. Paraśurāma wanted Bhīṣma to accept Ambā, daughter of the King of Kāśī as his wife.

(See under AMBĀ).

(x) Bhīṣma lay wounded on the bed of arrows here. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 119, Verse 92).

(xi) Kurukṣetra had been formerly known as Samantapañcaka. Since King Kuru made this place holy it came to be known as Kurukṣetra thereafter.

(xii) It was at Kurukṣetra that the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas waged a fierce war and it was here that Śrī Kṛṣṇa taught Arjuna the Gītā. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 258, Verse 42).

(xiii) Emperor Sudarśana, son of Agni, who was famous for his hospitality, lived here. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 2, Verse 40).

KURUPĀÑCĀLA (M) The combined name for Kuru and Pāñcāla in ancient India. (Bhīṣma Parva Chapter 9, Verse 56).

KURUṬA. A Sage mentioned in Ṛgveda. He is also known as Ṛjrāśva. (For details see under Ṛjrāśva).

KURUTĪRTHA. A sacred place to the south of Taijasatīrtha in Kurukṣetra. He who takes a bath here will enter Brahmaloka. (Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 166).

KURUVAṀŚA. See under KURU.

KURUVARṆAKA. An urban area in ancient India. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 56).

KURUVARṢA (M) The country ruled over by Kuru came to be called Kuruvarṣam.

KURUVINDA. An urban area in ancient India. The people of Kuruvinda were called Kuruvindas. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 87, Verse 9).

KUŚA I. A great sage of ancient India. He was as effulgent as burning fire. The famous Sage Viśvāmitra was born in Kuśa's dynasty. (For genealogy etc see under Viśvāmitra).

KUŚA II. One of the two sons of Śrī Rāma, the other, being Lava.

1). Birth. To Sītā forsaken by Rāma a son called Lava was born while she was living at the āśrama of Vālmīki. One day Sītā took Lava to the stream to bathe him, and Vālmīki, who did not know about it was upset not to see the child in the āśrama. He feared that it might have been eaten up by some animal, and fearing that Sītā might die when she missed the child he created a child with Kuśa grass and laid it where Lava was lying before. When Sītā returned to the āśrama with Lava after their bath Vālmīki explained the whole situation to Sītā. Since the second child was created with Kuśa grass he was called Kuśa, and he was made the second son of Sītā (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa and Kathāsaritsāgara, Alaṅkāravatīlambaka, Taraṅga 1).

2) Kuśa went to Ayodhyā. Śrī Rāma decided to conduct an Aśvamedha yajña. It was ordained that the emperor, who conducted a yajña should have his wife. As Sītā had been abandoned, Rāma had no wife for the purposes of the yajña. It was laid down that in the absence of the wife a statue of hers may be made with palāśa wood. But, Vasiṣṭha decreed that a statue of Sītā might be made with gold. The yajña was to be held in the Naimiṣa forest. During the triumphal tour of Śatrughna with the yājñika horse he reached the banks of the river Tamasā near the āśrama of Vālmīki where Lava and Kuśa captured the horse. Śatrughna could not defeat Lava and Kuśa, and they routed the additional force also which arrived under the leadership of Lakṣmaṇa to help Śatrughna. Then Vālmīki intervened and the horse was returned to Śatrughna. Afterwards, Vālmīki, Sītā and Lavakuśas also attended Śrī Rāma's yajña where Lava and Kuśa recited the poem Rāmāyaṇa composed by Vālmīki. Rāma recognised the boys and they were made to live in Ayodhyā. Thus did Kuśa visit Ayodhyā.

The Kathāsaritsāgara tells the following story about Kuśa's visit to Ayodhyā.

Vālmīki duly performed the thread-wearing ceremony of Lava and Kuśa and taught them, even in their very childhood, all arts and sciences including the secrets about divine arrows. The boys one day killed a deer in the āśrama and worshipped with its flesh the liṅga, which Vālmīki used to worship daily, and as a result of that the sage became ill. Sītādevī requested for penance for the action of her children, and Vālmīki said that Lava should bring golden lotus flowers from Vaiśravaṇa's pond and flowers of Kalpakavṛkṣa from his garden, and that Lava and Kuśa together should worship the Śivaliṅga with those flowers. Lava then went to mount Kailāsa and after killing many yakṣas collected the flowers. On his way back he rested for some time at the foot of a tree. Just then Lakṣmaṇa, who was on the look-out for a human being for the naramedha (human sacrifice) of Śrī Rāma, also reached the spot. He decided to take Lava captive with him, and they fought with each other for some time. At last Lakṃaṇa took Lava captive by using mohanāstra (arrow which makes the opponent unconscious) and took him to Ayodhyā. Sītā was pained that Lava had not returned yet, and Vālmīki with his divine vision understood the reason for his absence. He deputed Kuśa to Ayodhyā to bring back with him Lava somehow or other. When Kuśa reached Ayodhyā, Śrī Rāma was conducting the Aśvamedha yajña, and Kuśa, successfully confronting a number of people, got into the yajña ground. In the combat that ensued between Kuśa and Lakṣmaṇa the latter was defeated, as he could not defeat Kuśa due to the greatness of Vālmīki. When Śrī Rāma asked Kuśa who he was he replied that he was the brother of Lava and that he had heard from his mother Sītā that both of them were the sons of Śrī Rāma. Rāma was overjoyed to hear that and he covered the boys with kisses. Sītā also was brought down from the āśrama of Vālmīki, and all of them lived very happily. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Alaṁkāravatīlambaka, Taraṅga 1).

3). Kuśa's reign. Following the demise of Lakṣmaṇa Śrī Rāma divided the country between Kuśa and Lava. A city called Kuśāvatī was built in the Kosala Kingdom and Kuśa was crowned King thereof. Thirtytwo out of the sixtyfour akṣauhiṇīs of the kings of the solar dynasty, four out of the eight ministers and half of the movable property were allotted to Kuśa. Lava was crowned king of north Kosala where a city called Śarāvatī was built for him, and the other half of the army, ministers etc. became his share. While Kuśa and Lava were ruling the country thus, Śrī Rāma immolated himself in the depths of the river Sarayū (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

4). Kuśa's successors. Descended from Śrī Rāma thus: Kuśa—Aditi—Niṣadha—Nabhas—Puṇḍarīka—Kṣemadhanvā — Devānīka — Ṛkṣa—Pāriyātra—Vindorala—Vajranābha — Khagaṇa — Vidhṛti — Hiraṇyanābha—Puṣya — Dhruva — Sudarśana— Agnipūrṇa—Śīghra—Maru. The solar dynasty was annihilated at the advent of Kaliyuga (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

KUŚA III. A king born in the Kuru dynasty. To Kuru, who built Kurukṣetra was born a son called Sudhanvā, and to him was born Suhotra, who became the father of Cyavana. Suhotra begot of another wife Girikā seven sons called Bṛhadratha, Kuśa, Yadu, Pratyagraha, Bala, Matsyakāla and Vīra. Kuśa was one of the seven sons. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 78).

KUŚABINDU. An urban region in ancient India. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 56).

KUŚACĪRĀ. A river the water of which Indians of ancient days used to drink. (Bhīṣma Parva. Chapter 9, Verse 24).

KUŚADHĀRĀ. A river the water from which Indians used to drink. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 24).

KUŚADHVAJA I. A brahmin, son of Bṛhaspati. Penniless and poor, the brahmin once sought the help of King Sālva. The miserly king did not give him anything. Thereafter he began worshipping Bhagavatī with the object of making some money. While meditating upon Bhagavatī a girl emerged out of his mouth. She was named Devavatī. When she came of age an asura called Śambhu desired to marry her; but Kuśadhvaja did not agree to the proposal. Enraged at the refusal Śambhu killed Kuśadhvaja while the latter was asleep one night. But Devavatī cursed and reduced the asura into ashes. Then she took herself to penance to secure Mahāviṣṇu as her husband when Rāvaṇa happened to come there, and he tried to make her his wife. But, she repelled all his attempts at which he caught hold of her by the hair. She escaped by cutting her hair. She then immolated herself in burning fire. It was this Devavatī, who was, in her next life, born as Sītā, daughter of King Janaka (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

KUŚADHVAJA II. Brother of King Janaka, father of Sītā. He lived on the banks of the river Ikṣumatī. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Canto 70). See under JANAKA I.

KUŚADHVAJA III. A King. The following story about him is quoted from the Skanda Purāṇa.

Kuśadhvaja was a monkey in his former birth, and as he had then performed the auspicious action of swinging Śiva in a cradle throughout day and night, in the next birth he was born as King Kuśadhvaja. One day the King abducted the daughter of the Sage Agniveśa when she was bathing. The Sage cursed the King into the form of a vulture. He was promised redemption from the curse that he would regain his human form on the day on which he helped Indradyumna.

KUŚADVĪPA. One of the the seven islands. Kuśa island is rich in pearls. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 13). Jambū, Plakṣa, Śālmalī, Kuśa, Krauñca, Śāka and Puṣkara are the seven islands (Saptadvīpas). Śālmalī island has double the area of Plakṣa. Each island, in this order, is twice as large as the preceding one. (Devī Bhāgavata, 8th Skandha).

Kuśa island encircles the sea of Surā (Wine.) Jyotiṣmān was the chief over the island. He had seven sons called Udbhida, Veṇumān, Vairatha, Lambana, Dhṛti, Prabhākara and Kapila. The Subcontinents, are called by their names. In Kuśa island, along with Daityas and Dānavas, Men, Devas, Gandharvas, Kinnaras and Kimpuruṣas live. There are four castes of people there called Damis, Śuṣmis, Snehas and Mandehas, all of them leading righteous lives. The above four castes form the Brahmin, Kṣatriya, Vaiśya and Sūdra people in the island. There are six mountains there called Vidruma, Hemaśaila, Dyutimān, Puṣpavān, Kuśeśaya and Harimandira. There are also seven rivers there called Dhūtapāpā, Śivā, Pavitrā, Sammati, Vidyut, Ambhā and Mahī. These rivers annihilate sins. There are also other small rivers there. There is a Kuśastamba (a cluster of Kuśa grass) in the island. The stamba which glows like fire illuminates the island by its light and lustre. (Bhāgavata). The Kuśa island is encircled by the Ghṛta ocean. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa Part II, Chapter 4).

KUŚĀDYA. A Kingdom in ancient India. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 44).

KUŚALA. A holy place near mount Krauñca. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 21).

KUŚALAVA(S). Kuśa and Lava, the two sons of Sītā. (For details see under Kuśa).

KUŚALYA. A holy place in ancient India. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 4).

KUŚĀMBA I. The third son of Uparicaravasu. Kuśāmba is also known of Maṇivāha. Vasu had five sons called Bṛhadratha, Kuśāmba, Māvella, Yadu and Rājanya.

KUŚĀMBA II.

1) General. A son of Kuśa. The city he built was called Kauśāmbī. (See under Kuśa).

2) Other information. (i) Kuśāmba had a daughter called Cārvaṅgī, who was married by Bhadraśreṇya, the solar King. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 2).

(ii) Two sons, Śakra and Gādhi were born to Kuśāmba and to Gādhi was born a daughter, Satyavatī. Viśvāmitra was Gādhi's son. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 57).

This statement is not quite correct. Certain other Purāṇas maintain that Gādhi, the father of Viśvāmitra was the son of Kuśanābha, who was the son of Kuśika and brother of Kuśāmba. (See under Kuśanābha).

KUŚANĀBHA. A son born to Kuśa of Vaidarbhī. (For Genealogy see under Viśvāmitra). Sage Kuśa had four sons, namely Kuśāmba, Kuśanābha, Asūrtarajasa and Vasu, and Kuśanābha built Mahodayapura and lived there. One hundred daughters were born to him of his wife Ghṛtācī. Vāyubhagavān once asked the girls to marry him at which proposal they laughed at him in derision. He cursed them and made them hunch-backed ugly women, and Kuśanābha felt very sorry about this cruel fate of his daughters.

To Somadā, daughter of a Gandharva woman called Ūrmilā, had been born a son, Brahmadatta, due to the mental power of the sage Cūli. Kuśanābha gave in marriage his hundred daughters to Brahmadatta, and they were cured of their hunch at the touch of Brahmadatta and became their previous beautiful selves.

Kuśanābha conducted the yajña called Putrakāmeṣṭi, and Kuśa, who was so pleased by the yajña blessed him to have a son called Gādhi. Viśvāmitra was the son of this Gādhi. Viśvāmitra had also a sister Satyavatī, whom Ṛcīka wedded. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Cantos 32-35).

KUŚAPLAVA (KUŚAPLAVANAM). A holy place. He who bathes and spends three nights there will derive the benefits of an aśvamedha yajña. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 21). It was here that Ditidevī, wife of Kaśyapa did tapas for a son who would be equal to Indra. Again it was here that Indra entered into the womb of Diti and cut into pieces the child in the womb. Kuśaplava became famous because of the above happenings. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Canto 46).

KUŚASTAMBA. A sacred centre in the Kuśa island. He who bathes here attains a place in heaven surrounded by Deva women. See under Kuśadvīpa. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 28).

KUŚASTHALĪ. The ancient name of Dvārakāpurī; an island. It was emperor Revata, son of Ānarta, the grandson of Vaivasvata Manu, who first built a city in Kuśasthalī and ruled the country. Their genealogy: Descended from Viṣṇu thus: Brahmā—Marīci—Kaśyapa—Vivasvān—Vaivasvata Manu—Śaryāti (Śayyāti)—Ānarta—Revata. Certain Purāṇas state that it was Ānarta, who first built forts at Kuśasthalī. It would not be incorrect to say that Ānarta built forts in this city first founded by his son Revata. The city was sunk in the sea after a few years. Afterwards the region remained as a forest for long years. It was later on that Śrī Kṛṣṇa built Dvārakā there. Following Kṛṣṇa's death the Yādava dynasty got annihilated and the region was again swallowed by the ocean. Dvārakā is believed to have been an island situated in the sea to the west of Gujarat. Even today there is a place called Dvārakā on the coast of India to the west of Gujarat. (Devī Bhāgavata, 7th Skandha and Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

KUŚĀŚVA. An Ikṣvāku King son of King Sahadeva and father of King Somadatta. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Canto 47).

KUŚAVĀN. A deep region in the lake called Ujjānaka near Mānasa lake. (Vana Parva, Chapter 130, Verse 18).

KUŚĀVARTA I. Son of King Ṛṣabha, Kuśāvarta had nineteen brothers, viz. Bharata, Ilāvarta, Brahmāvarta, Āryāvarta, Malaya, Bhadraketu, Sena, Indraspṛk, Vidarbha, Kīkaṭa, Kavi, Hari, Antarīkṣa, Prabuddha, Pippalāyana, Āvirhotra, Dramiḍa, Camasa and Karabhājana. (Bhāgavata, 5th Skandha).

KUŚĀVARTA II. A holy place in ancient India. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 13).

KUŚAVATĪ. A city in Devaloka, where the Devas once conducted a mantra yajña. It was on his way to participate in this yajña that Agastya cursed Kubera and his attendant Maṇimān. (Vana Parva, Chapter 161, Verse 54).

KUŚEŚAYA. One of six great mountains in the Kuśa island. Durdharṣa, Dyutimān, Puṣpavān, Kuśeśaya, Kumuda and Hari are the six mountains. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 12, Verses 10 and 11).

KUSĪDA I. A sage belonging to the order of Vyāsa's disciples. (Bhāgavata 12th Skandha).

KUSĪDA II. To live on the interest of money lent to others. Agriculture, breeding of cows, commerce and Kusīda are the professions ordained for brahmins in emergency. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 152).

KUŚIKA I. A very famous monarch in the Puru dynasty. He was the grandfather of Viśvāmitra and father of Gādhi.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Mahāviṣṇu thus; Brahmā - Atri - Candra - Budha - Purūravas - Āyus - Nahuṣa - Yayāti - Puru - Janamejaya - Prācinvān - Pravīra - Namasyu - Vītabhaya - Śuṇḍu - Bahuvidha-Saṁyāti - Rahovādī - Raudrāśva - Matināra - Santurodha - Duṣyanta - Bharata - Suhotra - Bṛhatputra - Ajamīḍha - Jahnu - Balākāśva - Kuśika.

2) Indra as son. Kuśika began tapas for a son who would be equal to Indra and could not be killed by others. Pleased with his tapas Indra voluntarily took birth as Kuśika's son. Gādhi was that son; in fact he was an incarnation of Indra. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 49).

KUŚIKA II. A sage who came to see Pramadvarā who died of snake poison (Ādi Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 25). On his way to Hastināpura he saw Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 27).

KUŚIKĀŚRAMA. A holy āśrama on the banks of the river Kosi where the sage called Kuśika is believed to have lived. (Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 131).

KŪṢMĀṆḌAKA. A prominent serpent. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 11).

KUSTUMBURU. A Rākṣasa in Kubera's court. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 16).

KUSUMA. One of the five attendants given to Skandadeva by Dhātā. Kunda, Kusuma, Kumuda, Ḍambara and Āḍambara were the five attendants. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 39).

KUŚUMBHAPARVATA. One of the mountains around Mahāmeru. (Devī Bhāgavata, 8th Skandha).

KUSUMBHI. A forest near Dvārakā. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 38).

KŪṬA. One of the pugilists deputed by Kaṁsa to kill Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Balarāma when they went to Mathurā to witness the dhanuryajña. Cāṇūra, Muṣṭika, Śala and Kosala were the other prominent pugilists deputed by Kaṁsa for the purpose. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

KUTAPA. After-noon, considered to be auspicious for performing obsequies. The offerings made to Pitṛs at Kutapa are the best. (Ādi Parva, Southern text, Chapter 93).

KUṬHARA. A prominent nāga. He was present among the nāgas, who went to receive Balabhadra when he went, in the form of nāga, into the sea. (Mausala Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 15).

KUṬHĀRA. A nāga born in Dhṛtarāṣṭra's family. It was burned to death at the serpent yajña of Janamejaya. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 15).

KUṬILĀ. See under Pārvatī.

KUTSA. Son of a Rājarṣi called Ruru. Kutsa is mentioned with reference to Indra in many places in the Ṛgveda.

KUṬṬĀLA (M). Seat of a famous Śiva temple in South India, originally a Viṣṇu temple. There is a story about its conversion into the present Śiva temple as follows :—

Agastya, on his journey to the south, reached Tirukkutralam (Kuṭṭālam) in the Tirunelveli Zilla on the southern borders of Tamil Nadu. The temple there was dedicated to Viṣṇu, and the Vaiṣṇavas (devotees of Viṣṇu) prevented Agastya from entering the temple with ashes on his forehead. At once he transformed himself into a devotee of Viṣṇu, and was permitted entry into the temple. As Viṣṇu wanted to show the world that he and Śiva were one and the same, and also the greatness of Agastya, the idol of Viṣṇu was all on a sudden changed into a Śiva Liṅga. Since then the temple has remained a Śiva Temple. (Skanda Purāṇa).

KUVALAYĀPĪḌA. Name of the elephant posted at the gates of Mathurāpurī to kill Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Balabhadrarāma, who went there to witness the dhanuryajña. But, they killed the elephant.

> Raṅgadvāraṁ samāsādya
> Tasmin nāgamavasthitam /
> Apaśyat Kuvalayāpīḍaṁ
> Kṛṣṇo ṣ mbaṣṭhapracoditam

(Bhāgavata, Daśama Skandha, Chapter 48, Verse 2).

KUVĪRĀ. A river. (Bhīṣma Parva Chapter 27).

KUYAVA. An asura referred to in the Ṛgveda. (Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 15, Sūkta 104).

L

LA (ल) This letter means the Creator. (Chapter 348, Agni Purāṇa).

LABDHANĀŚA. See under Pañcatantra.

LAGHUPATANA. A crow, a character of the story-book, 'Pañcatantra'. (See under Pañcatantra).

LAJJĀ. One of the thirteen daughters of Dakṣaprajāpati. The other daughters were, Śraddhā, Lakṣmī, etc. (Chapter 7, Aṁśa 1, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

LĀKṢĀGṚHA. The house of lac (a kind of red dye). (See for details under Arakkillam).

LAKṢAṆĀ I. Daughter of Duryodhana. Wife of Sāmba. (See for details under Sāmba).

LAKṢAṆĀ II. A celestial maiden. This maiden took part in the birth day celebrations of Arjuna. (Śloka 62, Chapter 122, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

LAKṢAṆĀ (LAKṢMAṆĀ) III. One of the eight queens of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Lakṣaṇā was the daughter of Bṛhatsena, King of Madra. (Sṛṣṭi Khaṇḍa, Padma Purāṇa). Śrī Kṛṣṇa got ten sons of her some of whom are Praghoṣa, Gātravān, Siṁha and Bala. (10th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

LAKṢMAṆA. Son born to Daśaratha of Sumitrā.

1) Short history. Since details about Lakṣmaṇa are included in the story under 'Rāma' only a short description is given below :

Daśaratha, King of Ayodhyā had three wives, Kausalyā, Kaikeyī and Sumitrā. To obtain children Daśaratha performed a sacrifice named Putrakāmeṣṭi requesting the great sage Ṛṣyaśṛṅga to officiate at the ceremony. At the close of the ceremony a divine person rose up from the sacrificial fire with a pot of pudding and all the three wives became pregnant by eating the same. Kausalyā gave birth to Śrī Rāma, Kaikeyī to Bharata and Sumitrā to Lakṣmaṇa and Śatrughna. Lakṣmaṇa was an incarnation of Ananta and so Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa had more attachment to each other.

Viśvāmitra once took Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa to the forests to give protection to the sages against the demons who gave them trouble. In the course of that Viśvāmitra took them to the Svayaṁvara held at the court of Janaka and Śrī Rāma married Sītā and Lakṣmaṇa married Ūrmilā.

When the coronation of Śrī Rāma was about to take place, Kaikeyī demanded of Daśaratha, on the strength of the two boons granted to her on a previous occasion, to send Śrī Rāma to the forests for fourteen years and crown Bharata her son as King. Daśaratha was compelled to accede to her request and so Śrī Rāma went to the forests. Sītā and Lakṣmaṇa accompanied him. Lakṣmaṇa during the fourteen years of their exile followed his brother Rāma like a shadow. Lakṣmaṇa cut off the breasts and nose of Śūrpaṇakhā, the demoness who made amorous overtures to them. Lakṣmaṇa acted promptly and bravely when the notorious trio, Khara, Dūṣaṇa and Triśiras attacked them and he was responsible for the slaughter of the three. Rāvaṇa, coming to know of that, carried away Sītā to Laṅkā.

Grief-stricken, Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa roamed about in the forests searching for Sītā. At last they came to Sugrīva with whom they made an alliance. Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa got back for Sugrīva his kingdom of Kiṣkindhā and Sugrīva in return helped Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa to fight Rāvaṇa. Accompanied by an army led by Sugrīva Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa went to Laṅkā and defeating Rāvaṇa took back Sītā to Ayodhyā. Śrī Rāma was crowned King and Lakṣmaṇa helped his brother in his duties. When there arose a scandal about Sītā from the people, Śrī Rāma asked Lakṣmaṇa to take Sītā away to the forest and leave her there. In the Aśvamedha conducted by Śrī Rāma, Lakṣmaṇa led the sacrificial horse and the horse was blocked and captured by Lava and Kuśa and Lakṣmaṇa fought against them.

When the purpose of the incarnation of Rāma was over, god of Death in the garb of a sage approached Śrī Rāma for a private talk. Rāma and the sage were closeted in a room and Lakṣmaṇa was asked to keep watch over the door with instructions not to allow anybody inside. After some time sage Durvāsas came there and Lakṣmaṇa entered the room to give his brother the information of his arrival. Rāma was angry and abandoned Lakṣmaṇa and, feeling repentant later, Śrī Rāma jumped into the river and drowned himself before a huge crowd of weeping subjects. Lakṣmaṇa immediately ended his life by drowning himself at the same place where his brother did so.

2) Birth. Lakṣmaṇa was born on the day of Āśleṣā in the lagna of Karkaṭaka. (Śloka 15, Chapter 18, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

LAKṢMAṆA II. A very brave son of Duryodhana. He was a great archer. The Mahābhārata gives the following information about him.

(i) In the great battle Abhimanyu defeated this Lakṣmaṇa. (Śloka 32, Chapter 73, Bhīṣma Parva).

(ii) Lakṣmaṇa fought against Kṣatradeva. (Śloka 49, Chapter 14, Droṇa Parva).

(iii) Abhimanyu killed him in the battle-field. (Śloka 17, Chapter 46, Droṇa Parva).

(iv) After the great war when once, at the request of Kuntī and Gāndhārī, Vyāsa by his yogic powers arrayed the dead warriors for Kuntī and Gāndhārī to see, this Lakṣmaṇa was also among them. (Śloka 11, Chapter 32, Āśramavāsika Parva).

LAKṢMAṆĀ. One of the queens of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (Chapter 33, Sabhā Parva, Dākṣiṇātyapāṭha).

LAKṢMĪ I. Consort of Mahāviṣṇu.

1) Origin. Devī originated from the left side of Paramātmā (Supreme Being). The beautiful Devī by a command from the Supreme Being divided herself into two enchanting damsels both equal in figure, splendour, age, majesty, adornment and love. One of these was Lakṣmīdevī and the other Rādhādevī. That born of the left was Ramā and that of the right, Rādhā. Rādhā wedded herself to the two-handed Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Lakṣmī also wanted the same person and so Bhagavān himself became two, Śri Kṛṣṇa from the left side as a two-handed person and as four-handed Viṣṇu from the right side. (9th Skandha. Devī Bhāgavata).

2) Different incarnations of Lakṣmī. Lakṣmī had many incarnations and she had been on earth in different forms at different times. They are given below:

(i) Birth from the ocean of milk. Once the Devas became aged and afflicted with rugosity and grey hairs by a curse of Durvāsas. Indra lost his majesty and was ousted from Svarga. Svargalakṣmī deserted Devaloka and went to Vaikuṇṭha and merged with Mahālakṣmī.

The Devas were greatly aggrieved on account of this plight of theirs and they went to Satyaloka and appealed to Brahmā to find a solution to their difficulties. Brahmā was helpless in the matter and so they all together went to Vaikuṇṭha and represented their grievances before Mahāviṣṇu. Viṣṇu smiled and told Mahālakṣmī thus : "You go and be born as Kṣīrasāgarakanyakā using a part of your inherent power and do give relief to the Devas." Accordingly when the Devas conducted the churning of the ocean of milk (Kṣīrābdhimathana) Mahālakṣmī, the goddess of beauty, wealth and prosperity arose from the ocean as Kṣīrasāgarakanyakā (Daughter of the ocean of milk) and blessed the Devas and put a Vanamālā (garland of wild flowers) on Mahāviṣṇu. The Devas got back all their lost wealth and prosperity and they, on going to Devaloka, worshipped Lakṣmīdevī properly. (9th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

(ii) Mahālakṣmī was born as a mare. (See under Ekavīra, Para 2).

(iii) Mahālakṣmī was born as the Tulasī plant (Holy Basil. (See under Tulasī.)

(iv) Mahālakṣmī was born as Sītā and Vedavatī. (See under Sītā).

(v) Other births : Mahālakṣmī was born as a daughter to the sage Bhṛgu of Khyāti. When Mahāviṣṇu incarnated as Sūrya, Lakṣmī rose up from the lotus. When Viṣṇu became Paraśurāma, Lakṣmī became the earth. When Mahāviṣṇu incarnated as Śrī Rāma, Lakṣmī became Sītā and when Viṣṇu was born as Kṛṣṇa Lakṣmī became Rādhā. Thus whenever and wherever Mahāviṣṇu changed his form, Mahālakṣmī also changed hers to form part of the changed life. (Chapter 9, Aṁśa 1, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

3) Mahālakṣmī cursed Viṣṇu. Once Mahālakṣmī cursed Mahāviṣṇu, her husband, that his head would drop off from his body. (See under Cital).

4) Two forms of Lakṣmī. Mahālakṣmī has two forms, Viṣṇu-priyā Lakṣmī and Rājyalakṣmī. The former is the embodiment of chastity and virtuousness. The latter goes about courting Kings. Rājyalakṣmī is fickle and unsteady. This Lakṣmī enters all places where virtue and charity are found and as soon as these two vanish from any place Rājyalakṣmī will also vanish from that place.

5) Lakṣmī in cow-dung. The people of Bhārata consider cow dung as very sacred and there is a story in the 82nd Chapter of Anuśāsana Parva as to how cow-dung became so sacred :

Once a herd of cows was grazing in a large grassy ground when Lakṣmī happened to pass that way. Mahālakṣmī was pleased at the cows and bade them ask for any boon they wanted. The cows were prosperity incarnate and contented and they rejected the offer of Lakṣmī and when pressed again by her, said that they would like to have prosperity deposited in their dung also. Mahālakṣmī did so and so even today it is believed that the cowdung is embedded with prosperity.

6). Other details :

(i) Lakṣmī stays in the court of Kubera. (Śloka 19, Chapter 10, Sabhā Parva).

(ii) Mahālakṣmī is installed in temples as an idol carrying a lotus in her right hand and a Bilva fruit in her left hand. (Chapter 50, Agni Purāṇa).

(iii) Lakṣmīdevī stays in the court of Brahmā also. (Śloka 41, Chapter 11, Sabhā Parva).

LAKṢMĪ II. A daughter of Dakṣaprajāpati. She was married to Dharmadeva. (Śloka 14, Chapter 66, Ādi Parva).

LAKṢMĪDĀSA. A Sanskrit poet who was the author of Śukasandeśa.

1). Birth. He was born in the former state of Cochin in Kariṅgāmpilly Mana. This Mana (house) was near the temple of Tṛppūtamaṅgala in Vellārappilly in Cochin (Kaṇayannūr taluk). The Kariṅgāmpilly Mana was bearing the position of Taliyātiri in the village of Irāṇikkula. It is over two hundred years since that Mana became extinct. (The houses of Namboothiri brahmins are called Manas).

2) It is believed that the famous 'Śukasandeśa' was written in 112 M.E. There is one set of historians who hold that it was written in 666 A.D. But the famous scholar and poet Ullūr states with authority that it was written in the 10th or 11th century A.D.

3) Stories about this poet. As usual there are legends regarding this poet also. That the poet was a very dull boy in his childhood and that he became bright and brilliant by the blessings of his guru is one legend. After writing his Śukasandeśa the poet went on a pilgrimage in South India. One night he came to a brahmin's house but was not given any food or a place to sleep. He slept in an open veranda on the outside. He was lying awake when he heard his 'Śukasandeśa' being read inside by a few people. At a stage they were not able to follow the import of a verse when Lakṣmīdāsa shouted the meaning from outside. A door opened and a voice enquired in Tamil "Are you Kariṅgāmpilly ?" When he said yes they were extremely happy and took him inside and treated him with respect.

4) Works. No major work other then Śukasandeśa has been found. Two small poems are available.

Śukasandeśa has been written on the model of the famous Meghasandeśa of Kālidāsa. Many commentaries on this have come to light; of these the one written by Mānavedan Rāja of Kozhikode Palace named Vilāsinī is the best. Other commentaries named Varavarṇinī, Cintātilaka and Vyākṛti are also worth mentioning.

LĀLĀBHAKṢAM. A hell. (See under Kāla I).

LALĀMA. A division among horses. The white patch on the forehead of a horse is also called Lalāma and so horses with lalāma are called Lalāmas. (Śloka 13, Chapter 13, Droṇa Parva).

LALĀṬĀKṢA. A country of ancient India. The King of this country was present at the yajña of Yudhiṣṭhira with very many valuable presents. (Śloka 17, Chapter 51, Sabhā Parva).

LALITĀ. See under PUNḌARĪKAMUKHA.

LALITA. A Gandharva. This Gandharva was born by a curse and by observing a vrata called Kāmadā Ekādaśī he obtained relief from the curse and became Gandharva again. (Uttara Khaṇḍa, Padma Purāṇa).

LALITAKA. An ancient holy place of Bhārata. If one bathes in a sacred pond there, one will be free from sins. (Śloka 34, Chapter 84, Vana Parva).

LALITTHA. A country of ancient Bhārata. The people of the place were called Lalitthas. They fought on the side of the Kauravas in the great battle. Lalitthas boasted that they would kill Arjuna in the big battle. The King of the Lalitthas attacked Abhimanyu. Arjuna killed them all in the battle. (Śloka 47, Chapter 5, Karṇa Parva).

LAMBĀ. A daughter of Dakṣaprajāpati. Asiknī wife of Dakṣaprajāpati got a hundred daughters and ten of them were married to Dharmadeva. Lambā was one of them. (Chapter 15, Aṁsa 1, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

LAMBANĪ. A follower of Subrahmaṇya. (Śloka 18, Chapter 46, Śalya Parva).

LAMBAPAYODHARĀ. A follower of Subrahmaṇya. (Śloka 21, Chapter 46, Śalya Parva)

LAMPĀKA. A place of Purāṇic fame. In the great epic battle the people of Lampāka fought on the side of the Kauravas. They attacked Sātyaki and he destroyed the Lampākas. (Śloka 42, Chapter 121, Droṇa Parva).

LAÑGALĪ. A celebrated river of Purāṇic fame. This river worships Varuṇa in the form of a Devī. (Śloka 22, Chapter 9, Sabhā Parva).

LAÑGHATĪ. A river of Purāṇic fame. This river sits in the court of Varuṇa and worships him.

LAÑKĀ. The kingdom of Rāvaṇa.

1) Origin. It is believed that the present island of Ceylon was the Laṅkā of the Purāṇas, the city of Rāvaṇa. This city of Laṅkā was situated on the top of the mountain Trikūṭa. This Trikūṭa was a peak of Mahāmeru. Because of a fight between Vāsuki and Vāyubhagavān this peak broke away from Mahāmeru and fell into the ocean. (See Para 5 under Kubera).

2) History. Viśvakarmā constructed a magnificent city on the top of the mountain Trikūṭa for the use of Kubera. Kubera lived there adored and worshipped by all. One day Kubera travelled by air in an aeroplane of his. Kaikasī, mother of Rāvaṇa saw that and she became jealous. She called her son to her side and said that at any cost the city of Laṅkā on the mount Trikūṭa should be captured and given to her. Rāvaṇa along with his brothers went to the Himālayas and performed penance there and obtained several boons from Śiva. Then Rāvaṇa conducted a victory march as an arch-opponen of all living forces and drove away Kubera from Laṅkā and took possession of Laṅkā as the place of his abode. He took along with him all the demons residing in Pātālaloka.

3). The design of Laṅkā. Viśvakarmā, the celebrated architect designed the beautiful Laṅkā and the supreme building ability of Maya brought into form the enchanting city. On the top of Trikūṭa was the all important Navaratnaśṛṅga and on a spacious plateau on its top stood the majestic city of Laṅkā. In the centre was the ten-storeyed palace of Rāvaṇa and around it in eight different places stood the nine-storeyed buildings of the great ministers of Rāvaṇa. The nine edifices were like the Navagrahas (nine planets) of Laṅkā. Each of the nine edifices was built with one of the nine gems and the royal palace in the centre was built by using all the nine gems. Even the sun avoided passing over these buildings and changed his path either a bit to the north or to the south making what is known as the Dakṣiṇāyana and Uttarāyaṇa. (Yuddha Kāṇḍa, Kamba Rāmāyaṇa).

4). No sand in Laṅkā. The ancient belief is that there is no sand in Laṅkā The fourth taraṅga of Kathāmukhalambaka of Kathāsaritsāgara gives a story relating to the reason for this belief.

Garuḍa flew to Devaloka to bring Amṛta (nectar) to redeem his mother from her servitude to his step-mother. On his way he took an elephant and tortoise from near the āśrama of Kaśyapa for his food. He sat on a huge banyan tree to eat them. On the ground below the Bālakhilyas were performing penance. The branch on which Garuḍa sat with his food sagged and before it broke Garuḍa took away the elephant and tortoise and deposited them on the mountain Gandhamādana near the ocean. The branch broke and fell into the ocean and the city of Laṅkā was built on the branch and that was why the ancient people believed there was no sand in Laṅkā.

5). Other details.

(i) Sahadeva sent Ghaṭotkaca to collect tribute from the King of Laṅkā for the Rājasūyayajña of Dharmaputra. (Chapter 31, Dākṣiṇātyapāṭha).

(ii) The people of Laṅkā attended the Rājasūyayajña of Dharmaputra and took charge of serving rice in the feast. (Śloka 23, Chapter 53, Vana Parva).

(iii) Hanūmān once burnt the city of Laṅkā with a fire from his tail. (See under RĀMA).

(iv) It was Brahmā who gave Laṅkā at first to Kubera. (Śloka 16, Chapter 274, Vana Parva).

(v) After the death of Rāvaṇa, Vibhīṣaṇa was crowned the King of Laṅkā (Śloka 5, Chapter 291, Vana Parva).

LAṄKĀLAKṢMĪ. A Devī who was relieved of her curse by a hard stroke of his hand by Hanūmān.

1). How she came to Laṅkā. Laṅkālakṣmī was Vijayalakṣmī in her previous birth. She was the watch-girl of the treasury of Brahmā and one day finding her negligent of her duties Brahmā cursed her "Go to the earth and be the watch-girl of the palace-gate tower of Rāvaṇa". She begged for relief and Brahmā said, "During the incarnation of Viṣṇu as Rāma his wife Sītā will be carried away by Rāvaṇa and Hanūmān will come in search of her to Laṅkā. You will then block the way of that mightly monkey and he will then strike you down by a fierce blow of his hand. You will be then released from the curse and come back to me."

Vijayalakṣmī accordingly was born in Laṅkā and became the watch-girl of Rāvaṇa's palace.

2) Release from the curse. Hanūmān coming to Laṅkā in search of Sītā tried to find an opening through which to enter Laṅkā. Then he saw a huge tower-gate on the northern side of the mountain Suvelagiri. When he reached the gate he found it closed. The mighty monkey beat hard on the door and the strong door burst into two and fell on to the floor. Instantly a ferocious woman of enormous size rushed to the gate with a piercing roar and blocked it. Hanūmān found the situation dangerous and so gave her a powerful blow and felled her. She then very politely asked Hanūmān who he was and Hanūmān revealed his identity and told her the purpose of his visit. Lankālakṣmī then took leave of Hanūmān and leaving Laṅkā went to Śrī Rāma and worshipped him. Rāma blessed her and she returned to Satyaloka and started doing her duties as before. (Sundara Kāṇḍa, Kamba Rāmāyaṇa).

LAPEṬIKĀ. A holy place. If a man visits this place he would get the benefit of conducting a Vājapeya yajña. (Śloka 15, Chapter 58, Vana Parva).

LAPITĀ. The second wife of a sage called Mandapāla. (See for details under Mandapāla).

LATĀ. A celestial maiden. She was the companion of another Devī of name Vargā. Though she became a crocodile by the curse of a brahmin she was set free by Arjuna. (See under Pañcatīrtha).

LĀṬA. A particular division of the Kṣatriyas. Because a set of the Kṣatriyas showed jealousy towards the Brahmins they became Lāṭas. (Śloka 17, Chapter 35, Anuśāsana Parva).

LATĀVEṢṬA. A mountain situated on the southern side of Dvārakā. It had five colours and so resembled the Indracāpa. (Chapter 33, Dākṣiṇātya Pāṭha, Sabhā Parva).

LAUHITYA I. A country of Purāṇic fame. This country of out-castes was conquered by Bhīma and he took from there different kinds of diamonds. (Śloka 26, Chapter 30, Sabhā Parva).

LAUHITYA II. A sacred place constructed by the powers of Śrī Rāma. If one bathes in a pond there one would become golden in colour. (Śloka 2, Chapter 85, Vana Parva and Chapter 25, Anuśāsana Parva).

LAVA. A son of Sītā. (See under Kuśa II for more details).

LAVAṆA(M). A hell. (See under Kāla I).

LAVAṆA I. A demon. He was the son of a demon called Madhu. Madhuvana on the banks of the river Kālindī was the abode of this demon. This demon was a great oppressor of the Devas and Śatrughna had to kill him. Śatrughna then constructed a beautiful city there and lived there. In recognition of the increasing prosperity of the city it was named Madhurā. After the death of Śatrughna his two sons lived there. (4th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

LAVAṆA II. A King who was a grandson of Hariścandra. He once conducted a Rājasūya in his imagination and became a Caṇḍāla. (story in Jñānavāsiṣṭha). This story was narrated to Śrī Rāma by Vasiṣṭha to teach him the truth that man does not realise that this whole universe is an illusion only because of his ignorance.

Lavaṇa was the King of Uttarapāṇḍava, a country of great fame. He was the grandson of Hariścandra and wished to earn fame by performing a Rājasūya yāga as Hariścandra had done. Lavaṇa decided to perform the yāga in his mind only. He made grand preparations for the yajña. He invited the Ṛtviks and after invoking the devas inflamed the sacrificial fire. For one year he observed yāga like that and in the end gave gifts to the brahmins and the poor. It was all an imaginary performance that the King had in the course of a single day when he indulged in a reverie. In the evening as usual he continued his day to day duties.

One who performs Rājasūya will have to bear woes and sorrows for a period of twelve years and since Lavaṇa had performed it mentally, Indra sent his agent to give Lavaṇa worries mentally. Indra's agent appeared in the court of King Lavaṇa in the guise of a magician. The magician bowing before the King with awe said, "Lord, I shall show you a magic. See it sitting on your throne. It will be as astounding as if seeing moon rise on the earth".

Saying this the magician took a bundle of peacock-feathers and waved it against the face of the King. That bundle was capable of producing different objects and visions. The King fixed his eyes on the several glittering spots on the feathers and soon he saw a relative of the Saindhava King approaching the court. Behind him was a beautiful horse. Holding the horse by the reins the new-comer addressed the King thus. "Lord, this horse is as good as Uccaiśśravas and it has been sent by the King of Sindhu to be presented to you. Best things should be given to the best people and only then the value of the thing would be correctly understood." The magician who was standing near-by supported the statement of the new-comer. He said "Lord, what he says is true. This horse has wonderful powers. Take a tour of all the worlds riding on this horse". The King sat staring at the horse and he sat thus for an hour and a half. The entire court was perplexed.

After some time the King awoke from his meditation and looking at his courtiers in wonder he said thus : "I shall tell you what happened to me during the short period I was sitting in meditation. While I was looking at the peacock feathers of the magician I felt a desire to go hunting riding on this horse. So I went to the forest alone riding on this horse. Very quickly the horse took me a long distance deviating from the main path and I soon found myself in the dark depths of a huge forest. By the time we reached that forest my mind and body were equally tired and still we went on moving till evening came. Somehow we crossed the forest and reached Jāṅgala. There I found a cluster of lemon trees and to ease my body I caught hold of a creeper hanging from one of the lemon trees. As I did so, to my horror, I found the horse running away from me and leaving me alone. Tired by the day's travel I sat at a place and dozed. Darkness was creeping in and soon the whole place was in complete darkness. It was very cold also. Somehow I spent the night and when morning came, with hopes I walked around the place. The place was still and no living thing was in sight. As I roamed about I saw a forest-girl coming with a pot of rice. I approached her and asked for some rice. She did not pay any attention to my request and moved on. I followed her and she said she would give me rice if I promised to marry her. In despair I agreed to her condition and she was pleased with my reply. She gave me half of the rice and curry she was carrying to her father and also some lemon-juice to drink. After taking that food I rested for a while.

Her name was Hārakeyūrī. As soon as her father came from the fields she told him everything. The caṇḍāla was immensely pleased to hear about our marriage and all of us went to their hut. The scene I saw at the hut was astonishing. At one place was the flesh of boars, horses, fowl and crows in a heap and on the intestines of animals hanging from ropes sat birds pecking at them. In the hands of children there were pieces of raw meat and flies hovered round them. The hut presented a disgusting atmosphere and yet I entered and sat on a leaf and my marriage with Hārakeyūrī was conducted there. The celebrations of the marriage lasted for seven days and all these days people danced and shouted amidst loud noises of drumming in a hilarious mood of drunkenness.

Eight months passed by very soon and Hārakeyūrī became pregnant. She delivered a girl first and soon we had two or three children more. I had to do many cruel and nasty deeds to feed my family and gradually I became old. My hair became grey.

At that time there occurred a great famine and those residing in the forests were put to great trouble. There was no water to drink as all ponds and lakes went dry. Some of us migrated to the vicinity of the Vindhya mountain where there were plenty of water-fountains. A few committed suicide. We also left the place and started walking, taking the children also along with us. After some time we sat under a palm tree completely exhausted. My wife began to weep profusely. She then kissed her children and lay down and started sleeping. Thirsty and hungry my children lay there awaiting death. Unable to witness the scene I jumped up from there deciding to commit suicide myself. Suddenly my vision faded and I was able to see this court and you all. This is the work of that magician".

The courtiers sat dumb-founded at the incredible story of the King. Suddenly the magician disappeared. The magician after making the King experience the woes of twelve years in a very short time left for the court of Indra.

Next morning King Lavaṇa in the hope of seeing the place and people of his dream in reality near the mountain Vindhya started with his retinue on the false pretext that he was going to conduct a victory march When he entered a big forest he met with many familiar places and hunters of his dream. Then he saw the hut where he had lived. The same men and women were there all around. Then he saw an old lady lamenting thus: "Oh my dear sons, where did you go from my lap ? My dear daughter, have you forsaken me ? Oh prince, you came here abandoning all luxury and the beautiful girls of your palace and married my daughter. But God did not allow even her to be your permanent wife. The river of life has to take worthless and mean paths forced by circumstances. A very virtuous King had to come and live with a caṇḍāla girl."

Hearing this the King went to her and asked her all details. When she repeated the story the king knew that the lady was the mother of his caṇḍāla wife. The King and ministers were surprised to find that his vision was real and within that short period of his meditation he had lived a life of years. This perplexed the King. He then gave the old lady whatever she wanted and after consoling her started for the palace thinking about the wonderful happenings and mysteries of life.

LAVAṆA III. A demon who lived in the island of Rāmaṇīyaka. He had come to the island long before the serpents came to that place. The serpents saw him when they went there to live. (Śloka 2, Chapter 27, Ādi Parva).

LAVAṆA IV. Another King of the family of Hariścandra. Yogavāsiṣṭha says that this King had participated in several Rājasūya yajñas.

LĀVĀNAKA (LĀVĀṆAKA). A place of Purāṇic fame near the country of Magadha. There are many forests in this place suitable for hunting and so several kings used to come and stay at Lāvānaka in times of old.

LAVAṆĀŚVA. A sage. This sage showed very high respect to Dharmaputra. (Śloka 23, Chapter 26, Vana Parva).

LAYA. A King of old. He was a member of the court of Yama. (Śloka 21, Chapter 8, Sabhā Parva).

LEKHA (S). A deva-gaṇa (set of celestial beings) of Raivata Manvantara. In this set there are eight Devas named Dhruva, Dhruvakṣiti, Praghāsa, Pracetas, Bṛhaspati, Manojava, Mahāyaśas and Yuvanas. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, 2, 36, 76).

LIKHITA I. An ancient sage. The King of that land cut off his hands on a charge of theft. But they grew into their original form by the power of the penance of his brother, (Chapter 23, Śānti Parva).

It was a time when the celebrated King Sudyumna was ruling over the country. On the banks of the river Bāhudā in that country there lived two sages, Śaṅkha and Likhita, in two separate hermitages of their own. Once Likhita went to the āśrama of his elder brother Śaṅkha and finding none but feeling hungry took some vegetables from there and started eating them. While he was eating his brother walked in and he deemed the action of his brother taking the vegetables without his permission as an act of theft. Cutting the hands of the culprit was the punishment accorded by the King at that time to the offender. Śaṅkha sent Likhita to the King. The King received the sage respecifully and gave him a seat. The sage then told him all that had happened and then Sudyumna ordered the hands of Likhita to be cut off. Blood was oozing from his hands when Likhita went and bowed before his brother. The brother congratulated him on his accepting the punishment for his crime and asked Likhita to go and take a dip in the Bāhudā river. Likhita bathed in that holy river and then he found both the hands growing like lotus-buds from his body. He rushed to his brother and showed him the hands and then Śaṅkha said that it was due to the power of his penance that Likhita got his hands. Then Likhita asked his brother why he did not purify him by his power before. Śaṅkha replied that the power of punishing was vested in the King and the King Sudyumna had become great by executing the law correctly.

LIKHITA II. An evil-natured priest of Haṁsadhvaja, the King of Campakapurī. Śaṅkha his brother also was the King's priest. Haṁsadhvaja blocked the sacrificial horse of the Aśvamedha yajña of Dharmaputra and Arjuna attacked the King to get the horse released. To mobilise an army the King announced that each and every soldier should assemble at the place by day-break the next morning and added that those who disobeyed would be put in burning oil.

By early morning the next day all the soldiers excepting the son of the King arrived at the palace. Sudhanvā, the King's son, was a general of the army and his absence annoyed the King. Haṁsadhvaja was hesitating whether his son should be punished when Likhita advised the King to execute the punishment.

The King put Sudhanvā into a big cauldron of boiling oil but Sudhanvā escaped from it unscathed to the surprise of all. Likhita and Śaṅkha said that Sudhanvā escaped because the boiling of the oil was incomplete and uneven. So they boiled the oil again and threw Sudhanvā into it. At this moment a huge palm tree split into two and fell on them and they were killed. (Jaimini Aśvamedhaparva).

LĪLĀḌHYA. A son of Viśvāmitra. He was a Brahmavādī (Śloka 53, Chapter 4, Anuśāsana Parva).

LĪLĀTILAKAM. The first book of Literary criticism in Malayālam. The author of the book is unknown. The book is divided into eight parts. Maṇipravāla, Malayālaśabdas, Alaṅkāra, Kāvyaguṇas, Kāvyadoṣas and Rasa are critically examined in this book.

LĪLĀVATĪ I. Wife of Dhruvasandhi, King of Kosala. (For details see under Dhruvasandhi)

LĪLĀVATĪ II. A prostitute who attained Svarga by simply observing the Śuklāṣṭamīvrata in the month of Proṣṭhapada in which was born Rādhādevī. Chapter seven, Brahmakhaṇḍa of Padma Purāṇa contains the following story.

In times of old in Kṛtayuga there was a beautiful prostitute of the name Līlāvatī. Once she went away from her own town to another in search of better prospects. There she saw a big assemblage of people in a temple. They were observing Rādhāṣṭamīvrata and worshipping their deity with scented flowers and incense of sweet fragrance. Some were reciting prayers, some were singing and yet others were dancing. The whole atmosphere was filled with devotion. Līlāvatī went to them and enquired about it. They told her that that day was the birthday of Rādhādevī, the Śuklāṣṭamī of the month of Proṣṭhapada, and if anyone observed Vrata on that day worshipping Rādhādevī he would be absolved of all sins.

On hearing that, Līlāvati decided to observe the Vrata. She joined the devotees of the temple and observed the Vrata with great devotion. Soon she died of snake-bite and the servants of Yama came to take her soul to hell because of the sins she had committed as a prostitute. But before the Yamadūtas could touch her, Pārṣadas of Mahāviṣṇu wearing the insignia of Śaṅkha, Cakra, Gadā and Padma came to her with a chariot drawn by kingly swans and took her to heaven.

LIPI (ALPHABET, SCRIPT).

1) Origin. Lipi is the record in writing of the utterances by mouth. There are scientific and non-scientific statements about the origin of lipi. In the beginning people used figures of objects to express their ideas. They were called pictorial writings and are found even now in caves in Spain and France where the aborigines lived. Gradually the pictures vanished and letters took their place.

2) Ancient conception. Purāṇas give a different version. People of Java believe that the script originated from Java. The voice of Indonesia, a government organ, published once a purāṇic story relating to the origin of the script. Lipi came into being in 78 A.D. Ajaśikha, a saint among the Buddhists, was the originator of the lipi. He had two disciples named Dora and Sempādā. All the three went and stayed in a village in the valley of the mountains of Konṭaṅg. The country of Menrāṅgkāmanāl was then ruled by a King called Baka. Ajaśikha heard about this wicked King who had ordered one of his subjects to go to him daily for his food. The people were worried. They tried in secret to find out someone to subdue this tyrant. One day they approached Ajaśikha and requested him to find out a way to get relief from this cruel King. Ajaśikha sent them back promising to do something to help them.

Ajaśikha sat in meditation for some time and then told his disciples thus:— "I have decided to help the people of Menrāṅgkāmanāl. Dora also should come with me. Sempādā should stay here keeping guard over my sword and clothes. Never give them to anybody but me. You should be prepared to give your life for it."

Ajaśikha and Dora went to see Baka. People discouraged them and advised them not to go to the King. But they did not heed that and straight away went to the presence of Baka. Baka started to kill them but then Ajaśikha said, "Oh King, you can eat me tomorrow. In return please give me today land as big as my headwear". Baka agreed to that and Ajaśikha spread his clothes on the ground. As Baka looked with wonder that small piece of headwear began to grow big and it grew in size to cover the whole of the country. Baka got furious at this and attacked Ajaśikha. But Baka was slain in the duel.

The people burst into joy and made Ajaśikha their King. Ajaśikha then sent Dora to his āśrama to fetch his sword and apparels, little thinking of the instructions he had given to Sempādā. Dora went and asked for the sword and apparel. But Sempādā did not give and a fight ensued in which both were killed.

Ajaśikha felt very sorry when he heard about the death of his disciples. He cursed himself for giving contradictory orders to his disciples and so wrote four lines, each containing five letters, to keep alive the memory of his dutiful disciples. Those twenty letters are the first ones written not only in Java but the whole world. They were the following:

He no co ro ko — There were two disciples.
Ṭo to so vo lo — They became enemies because they obeyed the orders of their guru.
Po dho jo yo ñjo — Both of them were brave men.
Mo go bo do ṅgo — Both of them died.

3) Bhārata lipis. Different kinds of lipis were prevalent in ancient Bhārata. Lalitavistara mentions about sixty-four kinds of lipis in Bhārata during the time of Buddha. From inscriptions on stones and other historical records it can be gathered that the basis of all the lipis had been two main lipis named Brāhmī and Kharoṣṭrī. Kharoṣṭrī was used in the northwest of Bhārata and became extinct by the 4th Century A.D. Brāhmī was the lipi universally used in Bhārata. This lipi had different forms in the north and south. The lipi in use in the south was called Drāviḍī.

Kharoṣṭī lipi was written from right to left and the Brāhmī from left to right. Even the Brāhmī was written first from right to left and gradually for the convenience of writing it was changed to one from left to right.

Linguists consider Brāhmī lipi as the base of all the lipis of Bhārata. It underwent changes in different parts and took different names. The scholars of Europe are of opinion that the Brāhmī lipi was borrowed from foreign traders in B.C. 800. Others say that the Brāhmī lipi was born out of the pictorial lipi of the Chinese. There are those who say that the Brāhmī lipi originated in Greece and Phoenicia. The great linguist Bulhar says that the Brāhmī lipi came from the Semitic languages. But Lassen and Cunningham refuted it.

There is a bundle of leaves in the hand of the idol of Brahmā in the temple of Bādāmi. Hindus believe that the Brāhmī lipi found in those leaves was written by Brahmā himself. The Aryans forgot that lipi and Vyāsa found it out. This is a statement by the Arab traveller Albarūni who came to India in the 11th century A.D.

4) Kerala Lipi. The Brāhmī lipi came to south India by the 3rd century A.D. Many scholars on languages say that 'Veṭṭeluttu' is a changed form of the Brāhmī lipi. The great lipi expert L.A. Ravi Varma says that 'Eluttu' has come from the word 'Elu' or 'Alu' meaning 'to mark by cuts'. The common method of writing in South India was to use a pointed stick, long metal nail or chisel to make marks on leaves, rocks or copper plates. Writing by making marks with the pointed stick (Kol) got the name 'Koleluttu'. Veṭṭeluttu, Koleluttu and Malayāṇma were the three lipis in use in Kerala. Veṭṭeluttu was in vogue in Tamilnāḍu also. But the Pallavas who were using Prākṛta language when they conquered the northern Tamilnad introduced Granthākṣara and Granthatamil there. T.K.Krishna Menon says that Granthākṣara was a false creation to write Sanskrit easily. In Pāṇḍyadeśa and Malanāḍu Veṭṭeluttu was in use even then.

The influence of the Pallavas began to wane and the Tamil lipi slowly rose into prominence. Even then Veṭṭeluttu was in vogue in the empire of Cera comprising of Malanāḍu, Mysore, Coimbatore, Salem and Toṇḍamaṇḍalam. When Tamilnadu came under the emperor of Vijayanagara those kings introduced Nāgarī lipi there.

Veṭṭeluttu was called Nānam Monam also. In the south instead of using 'Hari Śrī' people used to say 'Namonārāyaṇāya' and the first syllable 'Na' and the second one 'Mo' were used to name the language 'Nānam Monam'.

When the Malayālis started liking the Maṇipravāla they started using 'Ārya eluttu' a form of Granthalipi. This script was known as Tulu-Malayālam also. This was also born of the Brāhmīlipi. Gradually Veṭṭeluttu and Koleluttu was in use in the north of Kerala among Muslims. The Alphabets now in use by the different languages of south India took shape only about two centuries ago. The lipi of Malayālam now in use came into shape by the time of Eluttaśśan spreading the belief that it was Eluttaśśan who had made the alphabet. It is wise to believe that the Malayālam script came into use gradually from Ārya eluttu than to give credit to one individual for its origin.

LOBHA I. One of the spiritual sons of Brahmā. Matsya Purāṇa mentions that Lobha was born from the lip of Brahmā while Bhāgavata mentions that he was the son of Māyā.

LOHA I. An Asura. When the Pāṇḍavas were living incognito they kept their weapons in a secret place. Availing of this opportunity Loha made an attack on the Pāṇḍavas. At once the devas made him blind and thus helped the Pāṇḍavas. That place later became famous as Lohaṇāpura. (Skanda Purāṇa 1, 2, 65)

LOHA. II An ancient place of India. Arjuna conquered this place during his victory march. (Śloka 25, Chapter 27, Sabhā Parva).

LOHAJAṄGHA. See under MAKARADAṀṢṬRĀ.

LOHAMEKHALĀ. A follower of Subrahmaṇya. (Chapter 46, Śloka 18, Śalya Parva).

LOHAVAKTRA. A soldier of Subrahmaṇya. (Śloka 75, Chapter 45, Śalya Parva).

LOHITA I. (ROHITA). Son of Hariścandra. (For details see under HARIŚCANDRA).

LOHITA II. A king of ancient India. This king was conquered by Arjuna. (Śloka 17, Chapter 27, Vana Parva).

LOHITA III. A serpent. This serpent is a member of the court of Varuṇa. (Śloka 8, Chapter 9, Sabhā Parva).

LOHITAGAṄGĀ. A place of Purāṇic fame. Śrī Kṛṣṇa killed five notorious demons like Pañcaja and Virūpākṣa at this place. (Chapter 33, Dākṣiṇātya Pāṭha, Sabhā Parva).

LOHITĀKṢA I. One the four Pārṣadas given to Subrahmaṇya by Brahmā. The other three are Nandisena, Ghaṇṭākarṇa and Kumudamālī. (Śloka 24, Chapter 45, Śalya Parva).

LOHITĀKṢA II. A sage who was a Ṛtvik in the Sarpasatra of Janamejaya. It was this sage who prophesied through a brahmin that the Sarpasatra would never be complete. (Āśramavāsika Parva, Ch 45. Verse 15; Ch 51. Verse 6; Ch 53. Verse 12).

LOHITĀKṢĪ. A follower of Subrahmaṇya. (Śloka 22, Chapter 46, Śalya Parva).

LOHITĀRAṆĪ. A river of Purāṇic fame of ancient India (Śloka 18, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva, M.B.).

LOHITĀŚVA (ROHITĀŚVA). Son of Hariścandra. (See under HARIŚCANDRA).

LOHITĀYANĪ. Daughter of Red Sea and one of the foster-mothers of Subrahmaṇya. Lohitāyanī was a worshipper of the Kadamba tree. (Śloka 40, Chapter 280, Vana Parva).

LOHITYĀ. A great river. The present name of this river is Brahmaputra. The devī of this river sits in the court of Varuṇa and worships him. (Śloka 22, Chapter 9, Sabhā Parva).

LOKA.

(1) Origin of Loka. There are several views in the Purāṇas regarding the origin of Loka or the world (Universe).

(i) In the beginning of the universe Mahāviṣṇu alone stood as the Eternal, unseen, unheard, unknown entity. Then there was neither sky nor day nor night. When the time of creation came Prakṛti entered Viṣṇu as Puruṣa creating emotion. From emotion arose Mahat or the Great Principle and from Mahat arose cosmic egoism (Ahaṅkāra). Ahaṅkāra divided itself into Vaikārika, Taijasa and Tāmasa. From Ahaṅkāra arose Ākāśa with the quality of sound and from Ākāśa came the air having the quality of touch and from air came fire having the quality of colour and from fire came water having the quality of taste and from water came earth with the quality of smell. All these were born of tāmasic egoism. From taijasic egoism came into being the organs of sense. From the Vaikārika egoism came the ten Vaikārika devas and the eleventh organ of sense, the mind. After that Mahāviṣṇu discharged his virility into water and that virility is life. (Chapter 17, Agni Purāṇa).

(ii) Mahaviṣṇu with a view to creating many different kinds of living things created water first and threw his whole energy into it. That energy grew into a golden mass of an egg and Brahmā was born from that egg. Mahāviṣṇu broke that egg into two, making one half heaven and the other earth. Between the two halves he created the sky. The earth was floating on the waters and he fixed it by anchoring it at ten sides. Then he created Prajāpati, Kāla, Manas, Vāk, Kāma, Krodha and Rati. Then he created thunder, lightning, clouds, rainbows and birds. Then for yajñasiddhi he created from his face Ṛgveda, Yajurveda and Sāmaveda. He did sacrifices with them. From his hands he created the different Bhūtagrāmas and Sanatkumāras. He created Rudra out of Krodha. From his mind were born Marīci, Atri, Aṅgiras, Pulastya, Pulaha, Kratu and Vasiṣṭha. He made these seven Brahmarṣis. These seven Brahmarṣis and Rudra began to create the prajās. Then Prajāpati divided his body into two. One half of it became man and the other woman. Brahmā started creation through that woman. (Chapter 18; Agni Purāṇa).

(iii) In the beginning Mahāviṣṇu in the form of a child lay on a leaf of the Banyan tree. Lying there the Lord began to think like this, "Who am I? Who created me? Why was I created? What should I do here?" At once from the sky came a voice which said:—

Sarvaṁ khalvidamevāhaṁ
Nānyadasti sanātanam /

(All these am I. There is nothing eternal except me). The Lord was surprised by the voice and there appeared before him Mahādevī with four hands bearing the Śaṅkha, Cakra, Gadā and Padma one in each hand. She wore divine garments and ornaments and was accompanied by Prosperity as her maid. She was surrounded by such forces as Rati Bhūti, Buddhi, Mati, Kīrti, Smṛti, Dhṛti, Śraddhā, Medhā, Svadhā, Svāhā, Kṣudhā, Nidrā, Dayā, Gati, Tuṣṭi, Puṣṭi, Kṣamā, Lajjā, Jṛmbhā and Tandrī. Devī then addressed Mahāviṣṇu thus: "Why wonder? You have always come into being whenever creation was started by the greatness of great powers. The Supreme Being is without quality of any kind. We are all with quality. You have predominance of Sattvaguṇa. From your navel will arise Brahmā who will be dominated by Rajoguṇa and from the centre of the forehead of Brahmā will be born Rudra with Tamoguṇa predominant in him. Brahmā by the power of his penance will acquire the energy to create and he will then create the world. You will be the protector of this world which will in the end be destroyed by Rudra. I am the sāttvic power to help you in your work and I am always at your service."

Accordingly Brahmā and Rudra were born and Brahmā started his creation. (1st Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

(iv) In times of old during the great deluge everything in this universe became extinct. It went on like that for some time and then the five elements and Brahmā were born. Brahmā was born in a lotus. Brahmā decided there should be mud beneath the lotus. He went down through the stem of the lotus and travelled for a thousand years and yet did not find the earth. He came back and sitting inside the lotus started doing penance. After a thousand years Madhu-Kaiṭabhas rushed to attack Brahmā (See under Kaiṭabha). Fearing them Brahmā went under water again. As he went deep down he saw a great man sleeping there. It was Mahāviṣṇu and then only he knew he was sitting on the lotus originating from the navel of Mahāviṣṇu. Mahāviṣṇu killed Madhu Kaiṭabhas and gave permission to start creation and Brahmā started his work of creation.

(v) Before the origin of the Universe the shapeless qualityless Parāśakti permeated everything. From it there were born three powers: Jñānaśakti, Kriyāśakti and Arthaśakti. The power of Sattvaguṇa was Jñānaśakti, the power of Rajoguṇa was Kriyāśakti and the power of Tamoguṇa was Arthaśakti. From the divine power of Tāmasa came the five basic things, sound, colour, touch, taste and smell. The quality of the sky was sound, the quality of air was touch, the quality of fire was colour, the quality of water was taste and the quality of earth was smell.

Rajoguṇa was born of Kriyāśakti. The five organs of senses, ear, eye, nose, tongue and skin and the five organs of work, hand, leg, speech, organ of excretion and the organ of sex and the five breaths, Prāṇa, Apāna, Vyāna, Samāna and Udāna are the offsprings of Rājasa. These are the forms of Kriyāśakti. These are controlled by the favourable activity of Cicchakti. The five gods controlling the sense-organs like Vāyu, Sūrya, Pāśī and Aśvinīdevas and the four gods controlling intelligence, conscience etc. like Candra, Brahmā, Rudra, and Kṣetrajña and the mind are ten Tattvas (Principles) born of sāttvika empowered with Jñānaśakti. All the Tattvas were made into five basic elements through the process of Pañcīkaraṇa and the Brahmāṇḍa originated from it.

2) The constitution of Brahmāṇḍa. The Brahmāṇḍa is made up of seven Kośas (coverings). The one in the extreme interior is very small. The second Kośa originates from the centre of the first Kośa. The third Kośa also has its origin from the first one. Each of them envelops the one before it. The seventh Kośa thus originating from the first Kośa and bursting forth through the other six Kośas spreads out for millions of miles around. If you cut the Brahmāṇḍa longitudinally the one in the extreme interior is the earth. Then come Bhuvarloka, Svarloka, Maharloka, Janaloka, Tapoloka, and Satyaloka in succession. The worlds in the lower half are called Pātāla, Rasātala, Mahātala, Talātala Sutala, Vitala and Atala. From Satyaloka to Atala there are fourteen lokas. The Brahmāṇḍa consists of the Sūrya, Candra, Stars, Śukra, Budha, Aṅgāraka, Bṛhaspati, Śani, Saptarṣis, Dhruva, Śiṁśumāra and Rāhu, called the Jyotiścakra. Besides these there are twentyeight hells also. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1).

Rāhu is ten thousand yojanas below Sūrya. Ten thousand yojanas below Rāhu is the loka of Siddhavidyādharas. Below that up to the path of the clouds is the loka of the demons, genū and manes. Hundred yojanas below this is the Bhūloka (earth). Ten thousand yojanas below the earth and as many yojanas below the world above each are Atala, Vitala Sutala, Talātala, Mahātala Rasātala and Pātāla. (5th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

3) Origin of life. Brahmā originated from the navel of Mahāviṣṇu. Brahmā started creation after obtaining permission from Viṣṇu. In the beginning Brahmā created from the mind Marīci, Aṅgiras, Atri, Vasiṣṭha, Pulaha, Kratu, and Pulastya. They are therefore called the Mānasaputras of Brahmā. (Manas = mind, Putra, = son). From his wrath came Rudra, from his lap came Nārada, from his right thumb Dakṣa, from his mind Sanaka and others and from his left thumb, Vīraṇī. Dakṣa married Vīraṇī.

Dakṣa got five thousand sons of Vīraṇī. They also got sons. When the population began to increase thus Nārada intervened and questioned the advisability of increasing the population before knowing the capacity of the earth. The sons of Dakṣa realised the sense in it and started to have a survey of the earth. Dakṣa was disappointed that the children left him without showing any interest in the work of creation. So he produced another five thousand sons and asked them to start the work of creation. But they were also sent away as before by Nārada. Dakṣa became angry and he created sixty daughters.

He gave thirteen daughters to Kaśyapa, ten to Dharma, twentyseven to Candra, two to Bhṛgu, four to Ariṣṭanemi, two to Kṛtāśva, and two to Aṅgiras. Of these most of the living things in the world were born to Kaśyapa. (7th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

Kaśyapa was the last of the Prajāpatis. Kaśyapa married the daughters of Dakṣa named Aditi, Diti, Danu, Kālikā, Tāmrā, Krodhavaśā, Manu, and Analā. Aditi got thirtythree sons and their family consists of the thirtythree crores of Devas. From Diti were born the daityas or asuras. From Danu was born the dānava Hayagrīva. Kālikā got two sons, Naraka and Kālaka. Tāmrā got five daughters, Krauñcī, Bhāsī, Śyenī, Dhṛtarāṣṭrī and Śukī. Krauñcī gave birth to owls, Bhāsī to Bhāsas and Śyeni to Śyenas (Vultures, Kites etc.). Dhṛtarāṣṭrī gave birth to Haṁsas, Kalahaṁsas and Kokas. Śukī gave birth to Natā and Nāta in turn to Vinatā. Krodhavaśā gave birth to ten daughters; Mṛgī, Mṛgamandā, Harī, Bhadramadā, Mātaṅgī, Śārdūlī, Śvetā, Surabhi, Surasā and Kadrū. Of these Mṛgī gave birth to beasts, Mṛgamandā to trees and plants. Lions and monkeys are the children of Hari, Bhadramadā got a daughter named Irāvatī. Airāvata was the son of Irāvatī. From Mātaṅgī were born the elephants and from Śārdūlī the tigers. The Aṣṭadiggajas are the sons of Śvetā. Surabhi got two daughters named Rohiṇī and Gandharvī. Cows are the children of Rohiṇī and horses are the children of Gandharvī. Serpents are the sons of Surasā and Kadrū gave birth to snakes. From Manu were born men. Trees are the sons of Analā. Vinatā got two sons named Aruṇa and Garuḍa. To Aruṇa were born two sons, Jaṭāyu and Sampāti.

4) The end of the World—There are different views in the Purāṇas regarding the end of the world. The different Purāṇas give different views. For knowing the views of Agni Purāṇa on the subject see under the heading 'Pralaya'. The eleventh Skandha of Bhāgavata gives the following theory regarding the end of the world.

All the material objects of the world will become illusory. Fire will increase. There will be no rains for hundred years together. The World will be burnt by the heat. The heat will go down to the head of Ananta who holds this world on his head. The Saptameghas (Seven Clouds) will rise up in the sunshine infested with the poisonous breath of Ananta. Then rains will start pouring down in streams as thick as the trunk of an elephant. Everything will be drowned in that water. Viṣṇu alone will be left above the vast expanse of water. (See under Manvantara).

LOKĀLOKA. There is a mountain between Loka and Aloka. This is called Lokālokaparvata and the land beside it is called Lokāloka. The mountain is as long as the distance between Mānasottara and Mahāmeru. This place is golden in colour and as smooth as glass. Not a single being lives there. God has created this as a boundary to the three worlds. All the planets like the Sun get light from the brilliance of this mountain. Brahmā has posted four diggajas named Vṛṣabha, Puṣpacūḍa, Vāmana and Aparājita in the four corners of this mountain. (8th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

LOKAPĀLA. Indra, Agni, Yama and Varuṇa are called lokapālas. (Śloka 35, Chapter 57, Vana Parva).

LOKAPĀLASABHĀKHYĀNAPARVA. A sub-divisional Parva of Sabhā Parva. The chapters five to twelve are included in this.

LOKODDHĀRA. A sacred place of Purāṇic importance in India. Lord Viṣṇu raised all the worlds at this place. If anyone bathes in a pond there he will be able to liberate the souls of other people from sins. (Chapter 83, Vana Parva).

LOLA. Son of a great sage called Siddhavīra. Lola in his later birth was born of a queen named Utpalāvatī. His name then was Tāmasama. (Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa).

LOMAHARṢAṆA. Father of Sūta who told Purāṇic stories. (1st Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata). He was a member of the court of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Śloka 12, Chapter 4, Sabhā Parva).

LOMAPĀDA I. (ROMAPĀDA). A King of the country of Aṅga.

1) Genealogy. Descending in order from Viṣṇu: Brahmā—Atri— Candra —Budha —Purūravas—Āyus—Nahuṣa—Yayāti—Turvasu Vahni—Bharga- Bhānu - Tribhānu—Karandhama—Marutta—(Marutta adopted Duṣyanta) Duṣyanta - Varūtha — Gāṇḍīra —Gāndhāra—Kerala—Cola —Pāṇḍya —Kola —Druhyu —Babhrusetu—Purovasu—Gharma—Kṛta—Vidūṣa—Pracetas—Sabhānara—Kālānala—Śṛñjaya—Purañjaya—Janamejaya — Mahāśāla—Mahāmanas —Uśīnara —Titikṣu —Ruṣadratha—Paila —Sutapas —Bali —Aṅga —Dadhivāhana—Dravīratha—Dharmaratha—Citraratha—Satyaratha —Lomapāda.

2) Other details.

(i) He was a friend of Daśaratha. (Śloka 53, Chapter 110, Vana Parva).

(ii) Once there was no rain in the country of Lomapāda. It was due to a curse from the brahmins and to remove the curse Lomapāda brought Ṛṣyaśṛṅga to his country. Śāntā, daughter of Daśaratha was living with Lomapāda as his adopted daughter at that time. Lomapāda gave her in marriage to Ṛṣyaśṛṅga and made him live in his country. The country got rains from that time onwards. (See under Ṛṣyaśṛṅga and Śāntā).

(iii) Lomapāda constructed a new hermitage for Ṛṣyaśṛṅga. (Śloka 9, Chapter 113, Vana Parva).

LOMAPĀDA II. A King born of the Yadu dynasty.

1) Genealogy. Descending in order from Viṣṇu—Brahmā - Atri-Candra- Budha- Purūravas-Āyus-Nahuṣa-Yayāti-Yadu-Kroṣṭā-Vṛjivān-Śvāhi-Ruśeku- Citraratha-Śaśabindu-Pṛthuśravas - Gharma - Rucaka (Rukmakavaca)-Jyāmagha-Lomapāda.

2) Birth. Rukmakavaca, grandfather of Lomapāda conquered many countries and gave them all as gifts to those brahmins who participated in his Aśvamedhayajña. He got five brave sons, Rukmeṣu, Pṛthurukma, Jyāmagha, Parigha and Hari. Of them he made Parigha and Hari live and rule in Videha. Rukmeṣu ruled his father's country and Pṛthurukma helped his brother. Jyāmagha was sent out from his country and he lived quietly in a hermitage. One day as per the advice of a sage he left the place in a chariot with a flag flying to the shores of the river Narmadā. He had neither servants nor the means for his daily food. He lived on the mountain Ṛkṣavān eating only roots and fruits. He was very old and his wife Śaibyā also was getting old. They had no sons and still Jyāmagha did not marry again.

Once when Jyāmagha gained a victory in a fight, he brought a girl and entrusted the child to his wife saying "This child is your daughter-in-law." Śaibyā was surprised and enquired "How can that be when I have no son ?" Jyāmagha replied, "She is to be the wife of a son who will be born to you soon." By means of the hard penance of that girl, Śaibyā got a handsome son named Vidarbha. Vidarbha married her and got two wise sons, Kratha and Kaiśika and a third son Lomapāda, who was righteous, virtuous and wise. All the three were great warriors also. Descending in order from Lomapāda came Babhru-Heti-Kaiśika-Cidi. From this Cidi came the Cedi dynasty of Kings. (Sṛṣṭi Khaṇḍa, Padma Purāṇa, Bhīṣmapulastya Saṁvāda).

LOMAŚA I (ROMAŚA) I. A sage, who was a great story-teller. Many of the stories found as episodes in the Purāṇas were told by this sage. Mahābhārata gives the following details about him.

MADAYANTĪ. Wife of King Kalmāṣapāda. He was known as Mitrasaha and Saudāsa also. When Kalmāṣapāda lay cursed Vasiṣṭha begot a child of Madayantī named Aśmaka. Madayantī gave her ear-rings to the sage Uttaṅka. (For details see under Uttaṅka and Kalmāṣapāda).

MĀDHAVA I. A synonym of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Because Śrī Kṛṣṇa could be properly understood by Manana, Dhyāna and Yoga he got the name Mādhava. (Śloka 4, Chapter 7, Udyoga Parva).

MĀDHAVA II. Son of Vikrama, King of Tāladhvaja. The Kriyā Khaṇḍa of Padma Purāṇa gives the following story about him.

Mādhava desired to marry a beautiful and good-natured Kṣatriya girl named Candrakalā. She was not prepared for that and she informed Mādhava thus: "There is a princess in the island of Plakṣa named Sulocanā. She is far more beautiful than myself and is fit to be your consort. Do try to get her."

Mādhava accepted the advice of Candrakalā and started for the island of Plakṣa with a servant of his named Praceṣṭa. The news that welcomed him when he reached the island was that the marriage of Sulocanā had been fixed with one Vidyādhara. Undaunted Mādhava sent a love-letter to the princess mentioning his arrival in the city, seeking her hand in marriage. In reply to that Sulocanā wrote that if Mādhava appeared on the marriage-dais in time she would accept him as her husband.

The marriage day arrived and Mādhava waited for the time of the function. But when the auspicious hour came Mādhava was asleep. Praceṣṭa, his servant, took advantage of the opportunity and carried away Sulocanā. But Sulocanā was determined to marry only Mādhava and she escaped from the custody of Pracesṭa and reached the palace of a King called Suṣeṇa and stayed there as a servant wearing the robes of a male, calling himself Vīravara.

Vīravara, i e Sulocanā in disguise, saved Vidyādhara and Pracesṭa from committing suicide. At that time Mādhava also in despair was about to commit suicide when Sulocanā appeared before him in time and stopped him from doing it. Sulocanā then told him all that had happened and they were happily united as husband and wife.

MĀDHAVA III. A son born to Yadu of his Nāga wife Dhūmravarṇā. The renowned Yādava dynasty was established by this Yadu and his son Mādhava. (Harivaṁśa).

MĀDHAVA IV. A virtuous brahmin. Once when he was about to sacrifice a goat in the sacrificial fire the goat in human voice told the story of its previous birth and requested the brahmin to sacrifice it after reciting the ninth chapter of the Gītā. Mādhava did so and the goat got salvation. (Uttara Khaṇḍa, Padma Purāṇa).

MĀDHAVĪ I. Daughter of King Yayāti. A lady recluse she always wore deer-hide as her garment and went on observing a Vrata called Mṛgavrata: Yayāti gave this daughter in marriage to Gālava. (Śloka 12, Chapter 145, Udyoga Parva). Mādhavī bore a son named Vasumān alias Vasumanas to Haryaśva, King of Ayodhyā. She got of Divodāsa, King of Kāśī, another son named Pratardana; of the King of Uśīnara she got a son named Śibi. Besides these she got a son named Aṣṭaka of Viśvāmitra. (See under Gālava). When the accrued merit of Yayāti was exhausted and he fell down from heaven Mādhavī consented to part with half of her stock of merit to Yayāti. (See under Yayāti).

MĀDHAVĪ II. A follower of Subrahmaṇya. (Śloka 7, Chapter 46, Śalya Parva).

MĀDRAVATĪ II. Another name for Mādrī, wife of Pāṇḍu. (Śloka 56, Chapter 52, Sabhā Parva).

MĀDREYAJĀṄGALA. A place of habitation of ancient India. (Śloka 39, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

MĀDRĪ. Mādrī who was the second wife of Pāṇḍu was a daughter of the King of Madra. She was the sister of Śalya. Nakula and Sahadeva took birth from Mādrī. Pāṇḍu expired when he embraced his wife Mādrī. It was because of a curse of the hermit Kindama. Mādrī ended her life in the pyre with her husband. (For further details see under the word PĀṆḌU).

MADYA. Wine. There is a story in the seventh Skandha of Devī Bhāgavata showing how Madya happened to be an intoxicant. Once Indra sent out the Aśvinīdevas from Devaloka and banned wine to them. They took refuge in Cyavana a great sage. Cyavana conducted a special Yāga and invited the Aśvinīdevas to partake of the Yajñāṁśa. Indra objected to this and Cyavana had to face Indra in a fight. Then Cyavana produced from the sacrificial fire a demon named Mada and he rushed at Indra to kill him. Indra then bowed down before Cyavana and craved for pardon. Cyavana withdrew the demon and tearing him into four pieces put one each in dice, hunting, wine and women. That was how all the four became intoxicating.

In ancient India there were certain social conventions regarding drinking of alcoholic preparations. All those drinks which were intoxicants were not listed as 'Alcohol'. Wine, honey, toddy, juice of sugarcane, juice of Iruppa and Kuṭampuli, and sweet toddy of palm tree were not considered alcohol. Surā (liquor) chiefly meant Paiṣṭī (liquor made out of rice paste). Drinking of Surā was banned to the three castes, Brāhmaṇa, Kṣatriya and Vaiśya. If they drank Surā they had to perform a penance for a year drinking only water or eat long pepper for a year. To be free from the sin of drinking Surā one should wear dress made of animal hair. Even if one drinks water in a pot in which Surā was taken, one should observe Vrata for seven days. (Chapter 173, Agni Purāṇa).

MAGA (S). The brahmins residing in the island of Śāka are generally called Magas. The Brahmaparva of Bhaviṣya Purāṇa and the Sāmba Purāṇa speak about the Magas thus :

Sāmba, son of Kṛṣṇa, did severe penance to please Sūryadeva and pleased with the unwavering devotion of Sāmba, Sūrya gave him a luminous replica of himself for worship. Sāmba constructed a beautiful temple by the side of the Candrabhāgā river and installed the idol there. He then brought from Śākadvīpa the brahmins called Magas for conducting the ceremonies of the temple. All the eighteen families of Maga brahmins came and stayed near the temple at the request of Sāmba.

MAGADHA. A famous city of ancient India. Its present name is Rājagṛha. The Purāṇas mention many great Kings who had ruled Magadha. Bṛhadratha was once King of Magadha. (Śloka 30, Chapter 63, Ādi Parva) Jayatsena one of the Kālakeyas was once the King of Magadha. (Śloka 48, Chapter 67, Ādi Parva). Pāṇḍu father of the Pāṇḍavas once attacked Magadha and Dīrgha the then King of Magadha was killed by Pāṇḍu. (Chapter 112, Ādi Parva). While Bṛhadratha was ruling Magadha he passed an order that each and every house should worship the demoness Jarā as a house-goddess. (Śloka 10, Chapter 13, Sabhā Parva). During the time of the Mahābhārata Jarāsandha was the King of Magadha. Śrī Kṛṣṇa made Bhīmasena kill Jarāsandha. After his death Śrī Kṛṣṇa made Sahadeva brother of Jarāsandha the King of Magadha. (Śloka 43, Chapter 24, Sabhā Parva). Bhīmasena conquered this country during his victory march. The people of Magadha offered gifts to Yudhiṣṭhira at his Rājasūya. (Śloka 18, Chapter 52, Sabhā Parva). The King of Magadha and the people there fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas in the great battle. (Śloka 2, Chapter 53, Udyoga Parva).

MĀGADHAS. A particular tribe of people. If the work of Sūtas was to drive chariots and the work of Pulkasas to hunt, the work of the Māgadhas was that of an adulator. (Chapter 151, Agni Purāṇa). This work of a flatterer was given to them by Brahmā. When the emperor Pṛthu was born, Brahmā conducted a Yāga. On the day of sutyā at the place of Somābhiṣava of the Yāga a very intelligent Sūta was born. At the same yāga a Māgadha also was born. He was a great scholar. Then the sages told Māgadha and Sūta thus: "Praise this king Pṛthu, who is the valorous son of Vena. Praising is the fittest work suited to you both. Pṛthu deserves praise." Then the Sūta-Māgadhas placing their hands on their breasts with respect said, "What do we know of the qualities and capabilities of a king just born ? His fame is not known. Based on what should we sing praises of him ?" Hearing this the sages said that they should praise him for the qualities which he would be possessing in future. The king was pleased to hear that. Sūta-Māgadhas started singing eulogistic songs based on the qualities and exploits of a Pṛthu to be. Pṛthu then appointed Sūta as his charioteer and Māgadha as his adulator. From then onwards the Sūta family became charioteers and the Māgadha family flatterers. (Chapters 13—70 Aṁsa 1, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

MĀGADHĪ. A river which flows through the middle of five mountains. (Sarga 32, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

MAGHĀ I. A sacred place. If one visits this place one would get the benefit of performing the yajñas like Agniṣṭoma and Atirātra. (Śloka 51, Chapter 84, Vana Parva).

MAGHĀ II. One of the twentyseven constellations. The importance of this constellation is mentioned in the Mahābhārata in several places.

(i) When the planet Kuja (Mars), during its retrograde motion, comes near the constellation of Maghā many unhappy incidents occur in the world. (Śloka 14, Chapter 3, Bhīṣma Parva).

(ii) If Candra stays near Maghā it is an ill omen. (Śloka 2, Chapter 17, Bhīṣma Parva).

(iii) If one gives away land in charity on the day of Maghā one will be rich in children and cattle. (Śloka 12, Chapter 64, Anuśāsana Parva).

(iv) If one gives pudding to the poor on the day of Maghā which comes in the black half of the month of Tulā (October) the Manes will be pleased. (Śloka 7, Chapter 88, Anuśāsana Parva).

(v) If one worships the Manes on the day of Maghā sitting in the shade of an elephant, the manes will be satisfied. (Śloka 8, Chapter 88, Anuśāsana Parva).

(vi) If one conducts the obsequial rites and acts of charity on the day of Maghā one would become the most excellent member of the family. (Śloka 5. Chapter 89, Anuśāsana Parva).

MĀGHA. A Sanskrit poet who lived in the 7th Century A.D. The only work of his which has come to light is Śiśupālavadha known popularly as Māgha.

Upamā Kālidāsasya
Bhāraverarthagauravam /
Daṇḍinaḥ padalālityaṁ
Māghe santi trayo guṇāḥ //

This is a very famous verse meaning thus : "The simile of Kālidāsa, the depth of meaning of the words of Bhāravi and the simplicity of language of Daṇḍin are all present in Māgha". This indicates how great a poet Māgha was.

From the last part of this Kāvya it can be surmised that Māgha was the son of Dattaka and grandson of Suprabhadeva. Suprabhadeva was the minister of a King called Dharmadeva. Māgha was born in Gujarat. A literary critic named Jacobi fixes the period of Māgha as the 6th century A.D. while others fix it as the 8th century A.D. Māgha has made references to the drama 'Nāgānanda' written by Harṣa. Harṣa was a King during the period 606 to 649 and that is why the period of Māgha is fixed after that period.

MĀGHA. A month (February). This is so called because it is closely associated with the constellation Maghā. This month is between the months of Pauṣa and Phālguna. Mahābhārata makes some statements about the importance of the month of Māgha.

(i) He who bathes at Prayāga during this month will be free from all sins. (Śloka 37, Chapter 25, Anuśāsana Parva).

(ii) He who gives gingelly as gift to Brahmins during this month will never go to hell. (Śloka 8, Chapter 66, Anuśāsana Parva).

(iii) If one takes food only once a day during the whole of this month one will be born very rich in the next birth. (Śloka 31, Chapter 106, Anuśāsana Parva).

(iv) If one worships Śrī Kṛṣṇa fasting on the Dvādaśī day of Māgha one will get the benefit of conducting a Rājasūya yajña. (Śloka 5, Chapter 109, Anuśāsana Parva).

(v) Bhīṣma expressed his desire to Kṛṣṇa to end his life on the aṣṭamī day falling in the bright fortnight of the month of Māgha. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 167, Śloka 28).

MAHĀBĀHU. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Bhīmasena killed him in the Bhārata Yuddha. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 157, Verse 19).

MAHĀMĀLĪ. A Rākṣasa hero of Rāvaṇa's army. He was killed in the battle at Pañcavaṭī between Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa on one side and Khara, Dūṣaṇa and Triśiras on the other, over the affair of Śūrpaṇakhā. Mahāmālī appeared on the scene as a commander of Khara's army. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa. Araṇya Kāṇḍa, 26th Sarga).

MAHĀMANAS. Grandson of Janamejaya, a King of the Aṅga dynasty. Mahāśāla was the son of Janamejaya and Mahāmanas was the son of Mahāśāla. Uśīnara was the son of Mahāmanas. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 277).

MAHĀMATI. The seventh son of the sage Aṅgiras. There is a reference to him in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 218, Verse 7.

MAHĀMERU. The golden coloured peak of Himavān. The seat of Lord Śiva, according to the Purāṇas.

1) General features. Mahāmeru surpasses even the sun in its dazzling golden brilliance. Devas and Gandharvas attend on it on all sides. It is inaccessible to sinners. There are celestial herbs and serpents at its base. It is Mahāmeru that keeps Heaven in its place by supporting it. The atmosphere there, is always alive with the sweet songs of various kinds of birds. Precious stones are scattered all over its surface. All the 33 crores of gods dwell on the sides of this Mountain. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 17).

Saptarṣis like Vasiṣṭha rise and fall on Mahāmeru. Mahā Viṣṇu and Brahmā have their places in Mahāmeru. Viṣṇu's place is in the east. There is a special place there for the residence of Maharṣis. Those who go to Mahāmeru never return. The Sun and Moon go round Mahāmeru everyday. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 163).

There are twenty mountains surrounding Mahāmeru. On the eastern side there are two mountains, Jāra and Devakūṭa. On the western side there are two mountains, Pavamāna and Pāriyātra. On the southern side are the two mountains, Kailāsa and Karavīra and on the northern side, the two mountains, Triśṛṅga and Makaragiri. Thus Mahāmeru shines like the sun in the midst of eight mountains. In the middle of Mahāmeru is situated Brahmaloka, the abode of Brahmā in a square extending over 10,000 yojanas. This region is of inexpressible splendour. At eight places around this Brahmapurī, are situated the eight posts or abodes of the Aṣṭadikpālas, each of the abodes being 25000 yojanas in extent. Thus there are nine Purīs or Cities on the top of Mahāmeru. They are:— (1) Brahmā's Manovatī in the centre. (2) Due east of it, Indra's Amarāvatī. (3) In the south-east corner, Agni's Tejovatī. (4) On the southern side, Yama's Saṁyamanī. (5) In the south west corner, Nirṛti's Kṛṣṇāñjana, (6) On the western side, Varuṇa's Śraddhāvatī. (7) In the north-west corner, Vāyu's Gandhavatī. (8) On the northern side, Kubera's Mahodaya. (9) In the north east corner, Īśān'as Yaśovatī. (Devī Bhāgavata, 8th Skandha).

2) Mahāmeru and Laṅkā. Rāvaṇa's place of abode Laṅkā was really a peak of Mahāmeru. (For further details, see the previous history of Laṅkā in Para 5 under the word Kubera).

3) How Mahāmeru got its golden colour. The Purāṇas declare that the sun keeps going round Mahāmeru. Once, while the sun was thus going round, he wished to take a little rest. He asked permission to place the axle of his chariot for a short while on Mahāmeru. The mountain agreed to it. The grateful Sun-god (Sūrya) blessed Mahāmeru that it would thenceforth have golden colour. Until it received this blessing, Mahāmeru had the colour of ordinary mountains.

4) Other details.

(i) Two daughters named Āyati and Niyati were born to Mahāmeru. They were married by Dhātā and Vidhātā respectively. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part I, Chapter 10).

(ii) Vasiṣṭha had an āśrama near Mahāmeru. (M.B. Ādi Parva. Chapter 99, Verse 6).

(iii) Mahāmeru attends on Kubera in Kubera's assembly. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 73).

(iv) The extensive Jambū Vṛkṣa stands on the southern side of Mahāmeru. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 38).

(v) At the time of Emperor Pṛthu, the earth was turned into a cow and all living beings obtained all their necessaries by milking her. It was Mahāmeru who stood as milking man on behalf of the mountains. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 69, Verse 18).

(vi) In Tripuradahana, it was Mahāmeru which was erected as the flag-staff in Śiva's chariot. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 202, Verse 78).

(vii) Mahāmeru presented two Pārṣadas named Kāñcana and Meghamālī to Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 48).

(viii) Mahāmeru once presented heaps of gold to Emperor Pṛthu. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 59, Verse 1).

(ix) Mahāmeru is anointed as the King of mountains. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 222, Verse 18).

MAHARLOKA. A world which was believed by the ancient people to be situated one crore yojanas above the "Dhruvapada". Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part II, Chapter 7 says that it is there that sages like Bhṛgu live till the end of Kalpa.

MAHĀROMĀ. A King of the Solar dynasty. He was the son of Kṛtirāta and father of Svarṇaromā. (Bhāgavata. 9th Skandha).

MAHĀSĀLA. A King of the Aṅga dynasty. He was the son of Janamejaya and father of Mahāmanas. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 277).

MAHĀŚAṄKHA I. A crocodile celebrated in the Purāṇas. He had a wife named Śaṅkhinī. The seven children born to Śaṅkhinī became the Maruts in the Svārociṣa Manvantara. There is a story in Chapter 72, Vāmana Purāṇa about these children who became Maruts.

Ṛtadhvaja, son of Svārociṣa Manu had seven heroic sons. They went to Mahāmeru and began to worship Brahmā for gaining Indra's place. Indra was alarmed. He sent the Apsarā woman Pūtanā to the sons of Ṛtadhvaja to obstruct their tapas. There was a river flowing by the side of their āśrama. Ṛtadhvaja's sons came to the river to take their bath. Just at that time, Pūtanā also came there and began to take bath. At her sight, the young men had an involuntary emission of semen. Śaṅkhinī, wife of the crocodile Mahāśaṅkha swallowed it. The princes whose tapas was interrupted returned to the palace. Pūtanā returned to Indra and reported the matter.

After some years, Śaṅkhinī happened to be caught in a fisherman's net. The fisherman caught her and informed Ṛtadhvaja's sons about his catch. They took her to the palace and put her in a tank there. In due course Śaṅkhinī gave birth to seven children. Immediately after that she attained mokṣa. The children began to cry for mother's milk, moving about in the water. Then Brahmā appeared to them and told them not to cry and assured them that they would become the Devas of "Vāyu Skandha". He took them up to the sky and put them in Vāyuskandha. These children were the Maruts of the Svārociṣa Manvantara.

MAHĀŚAṄKHA II. A Nāga. Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha says that this Nāga revolves along with the sun in the month of Mārgaśīrṣa.

MAHĀSENA I. Another name for Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 225, Verse 27).

MAHĀVĪRA I. A son of Priyavrata. Svāyambhuva Manu had two famous sons named Priyavrata and Uttānapāda. Of them, Priyavrata married Surūpā and Barhiṣmatī, the two beautiful and virtuous daughters of Viśvakarma Prajāpati. By his first wife Surūpā, Priyavrata had ten sons, namely, Agnīdhra, Idhmajihva, Yajñabāhu, Mahāvīra, Rukmaśukra, Ghṛtapṛṣṭha, Savana, Medhātithi, Vītihotra and Kavi. The youngest of his children was a daughter named Ūrjjasvatī. (Devī Bhāgavata, 8th Skandha).

MAHĀVĪRA II. Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 68, refers to a Mahāvīra, who was the re-birth of the Asura Krodhavaśa.

MAHĀYAŚAS. A woman follower of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 28).

MAHENDRA I. Father of the princess Pāṭalī. (See under Pāṭalīputra).

MAHENDRA II. One of the holy mountains. This mountain has great Purāṇic importance.

(1) After slaughtering the Kṣatriyas to extinction sage Paraśurāma made Mahendra his place of abode. (Śloka 53, Chapter 129, Ādi Parva).

(2) Once Arjuna visited the mountain Mahendra. (Śloka 13, Chapter 214, Ādi Parva).

(3) The presiding deity of this mountain sits in the court of Kubera worshipping him. (Śloka 30, Chapter 10, Sabhā Parva).

(4) If one bathes in the pond of Rāmatīrtha on the top of this mountain one would get the benefit of performing an Aśvamedhayāga. (Śloka 16, Chapter 85, Vana Parva).

(5) Brahmā once went to this mountain and conducted a yāga there. (Śloka 22, Chapter 87, Vana Parva).

(6) Yudhiṣṭhira during his pilgrimage visited this mountain. (Śloka 30, Chapter 114, Vana Parva).

(7) Paraśurāma gave a darśana (Interview) to Yudhiṣṭhira on a Caturdaśī day on this mountain. (Śloka 16, Chapter 117, Vana Parva).

(8) Hanūmān when he was going in search of Sītā visited this mountain also along with the other monkeys. (Sundara Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

MAHENDRAVIKRAMAVARMĀ. A Sanskrit instructor in histrionics who lived in the 7th century A.D. He was a Pallava King and ruled his country during the period 600 to 630 A.D. He is the author of the drama Mattavilāsa. Many verses from Mattavilāsa have been quoted later in many other books. Kāñcī was the capital of Vikramavarmā.

MAHEŚA. An incarnation of Śiva. When once Vetāla, his gatekeeper was born on earth, Śiva and Pārvatī incarnated as Maheśa and Śāradā on earth. (Śatarudra Saṁhitā, Śiva Purāṇa).

MAHEŚVARA. Another name of Śiva.

MĀHEŚVARAPURA. A holy place. If one worships Śaṅkara (Śiva) at this place, all desires would be fulfilled. (Śloka 129, Chapter 84, Vana Parva).

MĀHEŚVARĪDHĀRĀ. A holy place. He who visits this place would have to his credit the benefit of doing an Aśvamedhayajña. (Śloka 117, Chapter 84, Vana Parva).

MĀHEYA. A place of habitation of ancient India. (Śloka 49, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

MAHĪDĀSA. An ācārya (Preceptor). He is believed to be the author of "Aitareya Brāhmaṇa" and "Aitareya Āraṇyaka".

According to Chāndogyopaniṣad and Jaiminīya Upaniṣad Brāhmaṇa, Mahīdāsa lived for 117 years. Although this ācārya was a victim of diseases he was quite indifferent to the painful sufferings caused by them. (Chāndogyopaniṣad 3; 16; 7—Jaiminīya Upaniṣad Brāhmaṇa, 4; 2; 11).

MAHĪJIT. A King of Māhiṣmatī who lived in Dvāpara Yuga. He was childless and got a son by observing Vrata on the Ekādaśī day falling in the bright lunar fortnight in the month of Śrāvaṇa (August). (Uttarakhaṇḍa, Padma Purāṇa).

MĀHIKA. A place of habitation of ancient India. (Śloka 46, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

MAHIMĀN. An Āditya. Bhāgavata 6th Skandha says that Mahimān was the son of Bhaga by Siddhi.

MAHIMABHAṬṬA. A Sanskrit critic who lived in India in the 11th century A.D. His chief work was entitled "Vyaktiviveka", a treatise on "Alaṅkāra". The book is divided into three parts. He was a scholar in logic also. He was the author of another book "Tattvoktikośa".

MAHĪRATHA. A King who earned great merit by observing Vrata in the month of Vaiśākha (May). This King gave to those in hell his one day's puṇya and all of them were released from hell.

Mahīratha was a King who became prosperous by accrued puṇya. Kaśyapa was his guru. The King entrusted the affairs of the state to his ministers and led a very immoral life. The country began to decay day by day and one day Kaśyapa gave Dharmopadeśa to Mahīratha. The Guru said : "Oh King, your body which was in a state of sinning has attained a state of virtue by your association with me. Those well-versed in the Vedas say that the body is of three different kinds. Firstly there is the one which is evil-natured without either virtue or knowledge. Secondly, there is the virtuous one with good conduct. Thirdly, there is the agonising body which hides both virtue and evil. The body without virtue and salvation is always a body of sins. Your body has now become virtuous by becoming devotional to your guru and attending to my words. You are now fit to do virtuous deeds and I shall now make you enjoy the benefits of Vaiśākhasnāna (a bath with religious rites in the month of Vaiśākha (May).

After that Kaśyapa made him take the bath and worship with proper Vedic rites in the month of Vaiśākha. The King became old and died. At once the servants of Kāla (King of Death) came to fetch the soul of Mahīratha. But angels from Mahāviṣṇu came and thrusting aside the agents of Kāla took charge of the soul of Mahīratha. Nymphs from above sang in praise of the King whose sin had waned because of Vaiśākhaprātassnāna (early morning bath in the month of Vaiśākha). The angels from Viṣṇu carrying the soul of the King to Svarga took him through hell. The King heard the agonising cries of those suffering from different kinds of torture in hell. The King made enquiries and feeling compassionate requested those in charge of the hell to release those there in hell then by accepting a portion of the puṇya acquired by him. The angels agreed to that and the King gave away the Puṇya he had acquired during one day by observing the Vaiśākhavrata. At once all those in hell were released from the agony and were sent to heaven. (Vaiśākhamāhātmyaprakaraṇa, Padma Purāṇa, Pātālakhaṇḍa).

MAHIṢA. An Asura.

1). Birth. Long ago there was a famous Asura King named Danu. Two sons named Rambha and Karambha were born to him. Having no issue, they decided to worship Mālavaṭa yakṣa, praying to be blessed with children. They started tapas, Karambha, in the middle of water and Rambha in the middle of Pañcāgni. Indra was alarmed at their tapas. He took the form of a crocodile and went into the water in which Karambha was standing and caught hold of his feet, pulling him down. Karambha was drowned. The mighty Rambha who was enraged at the death of his brother, decided to cut off his own head and offer it as sacrifice in the fire. He drew his sword and was about to cut off his head, when Agni, the god of fire, appeared before him and stopped him saying :—"Do not kill yourself. Killing another person itself is a sin. Suicide is a more serious sin. Ask for any boon you wish to have; I shall grant it. Do not put an end to your life."

Then Rambha replied :— "If you are prepared to grant me a boon, let me have a son who is more brilliant than yourself and who will be the conqueror of all the three worlds. He should not be defeated by Devas or Asuras, and he should be as mighty as the wind, handsome and an expert archer." Agni replied :- "You will have such a son by the woman who wins your heart".

When god Agni had left after saying this, Rambha went to visit Mālayakṣa, who was attended to by Yakṣas. There, they had a treasure known as Padma and numerous animals like elephants, horses, buffaloes, cows and sheep. Among them was a three-year-old she-buffalo of exceptional charm and Rambha fell in love with her. She was also irresistibly attracted by him. As fate would have it, a sexual union took place between them.

The she-buffalo became pregnant and Rambha took her with him to his own house in Pātāla. There, the other Dānavas, his kinsmen who came to know of his connection with the she-buffalo, expelled him from their midst as one who had committed a forbidden act. So he returned to Mālavaṭayakṣa. The pretty she-buffalo accompanied her husband to the holy Yakṣa-maṇḍala.

While they were living there, she gave birth to an attractive buffalo-calf. After that a he-buffalo came across her. But she remained loyal to her Dānava husband who drew his sword and rushed towards the he-buffalo. The terrible beast with his mighty horns attacked Rambha who fell dead on the ground. The widowed Mahiṣī (she-buffalo) sought the protection of the Yakṣas. They saved her from the Mahiṣa (He-buffalo). The disappointed and love-stricken Mahiṣa drowned himself in a holy lake and was reborn as a mighty and heroic Asura named Namara. The Mahiṣī spent some time under the protection of the Yakṣas. When they cremated Rambha's body, she jumped into the funeral pyre and burnt herself to death. At once from the middle of the fire there arose a monstrous being. That terrible monster, armed with a sword drove away the Yakṣas and killed all the Mahiṣas. Mahiṣa who was the son of Rambha alone was spared. He was the Asura named Raktabīja. He defeated all gods like Indra, Rudra, Sūrya, Vāyu and others.

Mahiṣāsura became the King of the Asuras. The alarmed Devas (gods) abandoned their posts of honour. All the worlds were plunged in darkness. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 17).

2) Mahiṣāsura's Reign. Mahiṣāsura who was intoxicated with pride on account of the boon he had received, became the undisputed and sole emperor of the three worlds. He formed a strong council of Ministers. Cikṣura who was puffed with pride and an expert in military Science, was installed as War-Minister and Tāmra, the gifted economist as Finance Minister. The Prime Minister was Asilomā. Biḍāla was Foreign Minister. Udarka became Military Commander. Bāṣkala, Trinetra and Kālabandhaka were assigned the posts of Members of the Executive Council. Śukrācārya was the Education Minister. Mahiṣa strengthened his army. The State Treasury overflowed with wealth. Kings of the neighbouring states paid tribute and bowed their heads to him. The Brāhmaṇas offered the share of yajña to Mahiṣāsura and prostrated before him. (Devī Bhāgavata, 5th Skandha).

3) Outbreak of War. After strengthening his position as Emperor of the world, Mahiṣa contemplated the conquest of Heaven. He sent a messenger to Indra. The messenger ordered Indra to surrender to Mahiṣāsura. Indra answered with utter contempt to the messenger and his master Mahiṣa. The messenger returned and reported the matter to Mahiṣāsura who began to tremble with anger.

Although Indra sent away the messenger with scorn, he had no peace of mind. He called together the Devas and discussed what was to be done. They decided to declare war on Mahiṣāsura. Brahmā and Indra, accompanied by the other Devas set out to Kailāsa. From there, taking Paramaśiva with them, they proceeded to Vaikuṇṭha. On arrival there, they offered prayers to Mahāviṣṇu who appeared before them. They submitted to him their grievances and sufferings under the rule of Mahiṣāsura. After deep deliberations, Mahāviṣṇu supported the proposal for war. Thus the war between Devas and Asuras started.

4) Devāsura Yuddha. It was a dreadful war. Mahiṣa himself appeared on the scene of battle. He struck at Indra with his mighty club. Before he received the blow, Indra broke the club with his Thunderbolt. The Asura named Andhaka encountered Mahāviṣṇu. The five arrows of that Asura were broken to pieces by Mahāviṣṇu in the sky itself. Then they started a terrible fight with various weapons such as sword, spear, axe, arrow, discus etc. It lasted for about 50 days without a break. Bāṣkala fought against Indra, Mahiṣa against Rudra, Trinetra against Yamadharma, Mahāhanu against Śrīda, and Asilomā against Pracetas. In the course of the battle, Andhaka, struck a blow at Garuḍa with his cudgel. Garuḍa, the vehicle of Viṣṇu was stunned by the blow, but Viṣṇu restored his energy by stroking him gently with his right hand. After that he took up his bow Śārṅga and tried to kill Andhaka with a shower of arrows. But the Daitya warrior countered all of them with 50 arrows which he shot at Viṣṇu. Viṣṇu smashed all of them and sent his destructive weapon "Sudarśana Cakra" against Andhaka. Without the slightest fear, Andhaka stopped it with his own Cakra weapon and kept Viṣṇu's weapon at bay and shouted in triumph. Finding that Viṣṇu's weapon had failed and hearing the scornful shout of Andhaka, the Devas were filled with panic. At this critical moment, Viṣṇu took up his club "Kaumodakī" and rushed into the midst of the Asuras and struck Andhaka with it. Under the blow, the Asura hero reeled and fell down unconscious. At his fall, Mahiṣa himself rushed forward to Viṣṇu with a terrible roar. Then there ensued a bitter fight between Viṣṇu and Mahiṣa. Each began a shower of arrows on the other. But not a single arrow injured either. In the thick of the battle Viṣṇu struck a blow on Mahiṣa's head and he dropped down unconscious. But ere long the Dānava rose up and taking up his iron pestle aimed a mighty blow at Viṣṇu's head and brought it down with deadly effect Under the blow, even Viṣṇu fell unconscious on Garuḍa's back. Viṣṇu's condition made Garuḍa withdraw from the scene of battle temporarily, with Viṣṇu on his back. Indra and the other gods began to cry aloud. Śiva, who saw this desperate plight of the Devas, at once came to the battlefield, carrying his trident, ready to fight against Mahiṣa. When he tried to pierce the Asura's chest with his trident, the latter thwarted the blow with his own lance and aimed it at Śiva's breast. Although it actually hit him, Śiva disregarded it and gave another thrust to Mahiṣa with his trident. By this time Mahāviṣṇu had recovered from his swoon. At once he returned to the field of battle and joined Śiva in his attack on Mahiṣa. When Mahiṣa saw that both Śiva and Viṣṇu were launching a combined attack against him, in his wild fury he assumed his own buffalo form and lifting up his tail and shaking his head rushed towards his mighty adversaries. With his terrible horns he lifted up mountain peaks and hurled them at the enemy. But the Deva leaders stopped them with their shower of arrows. Viṣṇu sent his Cakra against him and it made the Asura chief drop down senseless. But he soon recovered and rushed forward to renew his attack with a terrible roar. Viṣṇu then sounded his divine conch "Pāñcajanya" and drowned the sound of his roar. Just as the roaring of the asura frightened the Devas, the sound of Pāñcajanya struck terror in the minds of the Asuras.

5) Mahiṣa's Death. The Asuras were terrified at the sound of Pāñcajanya. In order to encourage them, Mahiṣa assumed the form of a lion and rushed into the midst of the army of Devas roaring. Even the Trimūrtis were alarmed for a short while when they saw the fierce beast advancing through their battle-array killing and mauling hundreds of the Devas on either side. Mahāviṣṇu at once sent his weapon Cakra against the lion. The lion was reduced to ashes by it, but Mahiṣa rose up again in the form of a buffalo and rushed forward. He gave a severe cut on Mahāviṣṇu's chest with his long and powerful horn. Mahāviṣṇu started fleeing to Vaikuṇṭha. At the sight of this, Śiva concluded that Mahiṣa was proof against killing and so he also fled to Kailāsa riding on his bull. When Viṣṇu and Śiva took to their heels, Brahmā also flew to Satyaloka, riding on this swan. Although the leaders left the field, the rest of the Devas under the leadership of Indra, encountered Mahiṣa again. Indra drew his Vajra. The Aṣṭadikpālakas assisted him. The battle raged fiercely again. The Devas began to flee for life. Taking this opportunity, Mahiṣāsura forced his way into Heaven. He planted his Daitya flag highly. He drove out all the remaining Devas. In this way the Asuras took possession of Devaloka. The Devas took shelter on the tops of mountains.

Several centuries passed. The Devas assembled and prayed to Brahmā. He took them again to Vaikuṇṭha. Śiva also arrived there. The Devas submitted their grievances to Viṣṇu. They prayed to him to devise some method by which Mahiṣa could be killed. Brahmā had given him a boon that no Man was capable of killing him.

Mahāviṣṇu said to them :—"By Virtue of the boon, Mahiṣa could be killed only by a woman. If we can create a woman who is part of the Devas with their power and glory, we could kill him with her help. So let us try to create such a mighty woman, concentrating all our powers on her. After her creation, we must give her all our weapons."

As soon as Mahāviṣṇu spoke these words, a figure with dazzling effulgence issued forth from Brahmā's face. Both Viṣṇu and Śiva were amazed at the sight of this figure radiating beams of light which were partly cool and partly warm. Similar figures, embodying the peculiar powers and qualities of Viṣṇu, Śiva, Indra, Kubera, Varuṇa and all other gods, emanated from them. In a moment all these figures merged into a single figure and transformed themselves into a single woman with celestial beauty and having eighteen arms. This woman of exquisite beauty combining all the powers and glories of all the Devas was Devī herself.

The devas supplied her with jewels and ornaments and gorgeous clothes. Decked in all glory and with fascinating beauty, riding on a lion. she took her stand at the entrance of Devaloka and challenged Mahiṣa. At the very first sight of Devī, Mahiṣa fell in love with her. She declared she would become the wife of the person who could defeat her in battle.

So Mahiṣa made up his mind to defeat her in a fight. It was a terrible battle. All the Ministers of Mahiṣa, like Bāṣkala, Durmukha, Tāmra, Cikṣura, Asilomā and Biḍāla were slain. At last Mahiṣa himself appeared on the scene to fight with Devī. Mahiṣa started with a shower of arrows and Devī countered them all with her own arrows. In the end she attacked him with Viṣṇu Cakra. The Cakra cut off his throat and he dropped down dead. The devas raised a thunderous shout of joy and triumph. (Devī Bhāgavata, 5th Skandha).

MAHIṢADĀ. A woman follower of Lord Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 28).

MAHIṢAKA. (MĀHIṢAKA): A special tribe. They were once Kṣatriyas but they became Śūdras by their evil mode of living. (Ślokas 22, 23, Chapter 33, Anuśāsana Parva). Arjuna during his victory march conquered this tribe in the south. (Chapter 83, Aśvamedha Parva).

MAHIṢAKA (M). The name given by the Ancient people to modern Mysore. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 59).

MAHIṢĀKṢA. An Asura who came into conflict with Subrahmaṇya. (Skanda Purāṇa).

MAHIṢĀNANĀ. A follower of Subrahmaṇya. (Śloka 25, Chapter 46, Śalya Parva).

MAHIṢMĀN I. A King of the Hehaya royal family. It was this King who constructed on the banks of the river Narmadā, Māhiṣmatī, the capital city of Kārtavīryārjuna. It got the name of Māhiṣmatī because it was constructed by Mahiṣmān (Chapter 2, Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa).

MAHIṢMĀN II. A King of the Vṛṣṇi dynasty. He was the son of a King called Kuṇi. (Kuṇi is called Kunti in some of the Purāṇas). Kuṇi had three other sons named Sabhājit, Bhadrasena and Durdama. (9th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

MAHIṢMATĪ. Sixth daughter of Aṅgiras. Mahiṣmatī was known as Anumatī also. (Śloka 6, Chapter 218, Vana Parva).

MĀHIṢMATĪ. An ancient city on the banks of river Narmadā. There is reference to this place in many places in the Purāṇas and a few of them are given below :

(i) King Nīla was reigning in a country with Māhiṣmatī as its capital. Sahadeva, one of the Pāṇḍavas during his victorious march to the south conquered this country. (Chapter 31, Sabhā Parva).

(ii) Daśāśva, tenth son of Ikṣvāku, had made this city his capital. (Śloka 6, Chapter 2, Anuśāsana Parva).

(iii) Kārtavīryārjuna who had made Māhiṣmatī the capital of his kingdom had subdued many kings. (Śloka 3, Chapter 152, Anuśāsana Parva). (See under Kārtavīryārjuna.)

MAHODARA I. A serpent born to Kaśyapa of his wife Kadrū. (Śloka 16, Chapter 35, Ādi Parva).

MAHODARA II. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Bhīmasena killed him in the great battle. (Śloka 19, Chapter 157, Droṇa Parva).

MAHODARA III. An ancient sage. (See under Kapālamocana).

MAHODARA IV. An army chief of Rāvaṇa. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

MAHODARA V. A friend of Ghaṭotkaca son of Bhīma. When Ghaṭotkaca started for Prāgjyotiṣapura to conquer Kāmakaṭaṅkaṭa, Mahodara also followed him. (Skanda Purāṇa).

MAHODARA VI. One of the sons of Rāvaṇa. In the Rāma-Rāvaṇa battle Mahodara fought first with Aṅgada and later in a combat with the monkey soldier Nīla, he was killed. (Sargas 70, 81, Yuddha Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

MAHODARA VII. The minister of Sumālī, grandfather (maternal), of Rāvaṇa. In the Rāma-Rāvaṇa battle Mahodara accompanied Sumālī when he came to help Rāvaṇa. (Uttara Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

MAHODARA VIII. One of the sons of Viśravas born of his wife Puṣpotkaṭā. Hanūmān killed this demon in the Rāma-Rāvaṇa battle. (Yuddha Kāṇḍa, Chapter 70, Verse 66, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

MAHODARYA. A King who is worthy of being thought of every morning. (Śloka 55, Chapter 155, Anuśāsana Parva).

MAHODAYA. One of the sons of Vasiṣṭha. Once Triśaṅku, King of Ayodhyā, conducted a yāga with Viśvāmitra as Ṛtvik and for that yāga Viśvāmitra invited Vasiṣṭha and his son Mahodaya also. But Mahodaya refused to respond to the invitation and sent a message picturing both Viśvāmitra and Triśaṅku as Caṇḍālas. Enraged at this insulting message Viśvāmitra cursed Mahodaya to become Śūdra. (Verses 20-21, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Chapter 59, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

MAHODAYAPURĪ. The capital city of Kubera. This is called Alakāpurī also. (8th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

MAHOTTHA. A Janapada of Purāṇic fame in Bhārata. The chief of this place, Akrośa was conquered by Nakula during his victory march. (Śloka 6, Chapter 32, Sabhā Parva.

MAINĀKA I.

1) General information. A mountain. This mountain was the son of Himavān and father of Krauñca. (Śloka 13, Chapter 18, Harivaṁśa).

2) How the mountain helped Hanūmān. There is an unbreakable tie between Maināka and the Kings of Ikṣvāku family. There is a story in Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa that the sāgara (ocean) was constructed by the sixty thousand sons of the King Sagara of Ikṣvāku family. This sāgara once gave refuge to Maināka and brought it up. There is a reason for that :—

In the early yugas mountains had wings and they used to fly and drop to the ground as they liked. People used to live in fright always and at the request of the people Indra made the mountains stand in a row and cut off their wings. At that time the god Vāyu (wind) took away his friend Maināka and put him in the ocean. From that day onwards Maināka and the ocean developed an intimacy which even death could not wipe off. Hanūmān was the son of Vāyu, the friend and saviour of Maināka. It was because of that that Maināka gave refuge for Hanūmān on his way to Laṅkā. Because the ocean gave refuge to Maināka after its escape from the sword of Indra and because the ocean (Sāgara) was the creation of the sons of Sagara, a King of the Ikṣvāku race, Maināka felt indebted to Sagara and the entire race to which he belonged. Maināka thus had great respect for Śrī Rāma who belonged to the Ikṣvāku race. This was also responsible for Maināka giving relief to Hanūmān on his way to Laṅkā. (See under Parvata).

2) Other details.

(i) This mountain is situated near the lake Bindusarovara which was to the north of Kailāsa. Bhagīratha did penance to bring Gaṅgā to the earth on this mountain. (Chapter 3, Sabhā Parva).

(ii) Pāṇḍavas who went to the north crossed the mountain Maināka and went further. (Śloka 1, Chapter 139, Vana Parva).

(iii) The mountain Maināka shines with golden peaks. (Śloka 44, Chapter 145, Vana Parva).

MAINĀKA II. A holy place on the west coast on the banks of the river Narmadā. This is also on a mountain. (Śloka 11, Chapter 89, Vana Parva).

MAINĀKA III. Another mountain. (This is in Krauñcadvīpa. (Śloka 18, Chapter 12, Bhīṣma Parva).

MAINDA. One of the monkeys who helped Śrī Rāma in the search for Sītā. Purāṇas give the following information regarding this monkey :

(i) Mainda lived in a cave in Kiṣkindhā. While he was living there Sahadeva one of the Pāṇḍavas came that way during his victory campaign in Dakṣiṇa Bhārata and fought with him. Sahadeva was defeated. But Mainda was pleased with him and gave him many valuable presents and advised him that no difficulties should be put against Dharmaputra achieving his object. (Śloka 18, Chapter 31, Sabhā Parva).

(ii) Mainda was the minister of Sugrīva, King of the monkeys. He was mighty, intelligent, and kind to others. (Śloka 23, Chapter 28, Vana Parva).

(iii) Mainda was one of the leaders who led the monkeys who went in search of Sītā. (Śloka 19, Chapter 283, Vana Parva).

(iv) In the Rāma-Rāvaṇa battle Mainda and others also fainted along with Lakṣmaṇa and others. It was only when they washed their faces with the water given by Kubera that they could see things clearly.

(v) Mainda was the son of Aśvinīdevas. (10th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

MAITRA I. A demon tribe. Once a sage named Lomaśa persuaded Dharmaputra to attack this tribe.

MAITRA II. An auspicious time (Muhūrta). Śrī Kṛṣṇa started on his historic journey to Hastināpura at Maitramuhūrta. (Śloka 6, Chapter 83, Udyoga Parva).

MAITRA III. A constellation. Kṛtavarmā joined the Kaurava side on the day of this constellation. (Śloka 14, Chapter 35, Śalya Parva).

MAITRĀVARUṆA. Another name for Vasiṣṭha. Agastya also is known by this name. Because they were born as the sons of Mitra and Varuṇa they got this name. How they came to be reborn as the sons of Mitrāvaruṇas is told in Devī Bhāgavata.

There was once a celebrated emperor named Nimi in the Ikṣvāku line of Kings. Nimi was the twelfth son of Ikṣvāku. The agrahāra found near the āśrama of Gautama Maharṣi, called Jayantapura was constructed by Nimi. Once Nimi decided to perform a big yāga and after taking the consent of his father made preparations for the same. He invited such great sages as Bhṛgu, Aṅgiras, Vāmadeva, Pulastya, Pulaha and Ṛcīka. He then went to their family preceptor Vasiṣṭha and requested him to be the chief priest. But Vasiṣṭha had already promised Indra to conduct a yāga for him and so advised Nimi to postpone his yāga to a later date. But Nimi was unwilling to postpone his yāga and so he performed it with Gautama Maharṣi as the chief priest. It took five hundred years for Nimi to complete the yāga. After five hundred years Vasiṣṭha after completing the yāga of Indra came to see Nimi and found that he had already conducted the yāga without him. Vasiṣṭha was angry and he cursed Nimi saying that Nimi would become bodiless. But powerful Nimi cursed Vasiṣṭha also and separated his soul from his body.

Griefstricken, Vasiṣṭha went to Brahmā and complained to him. Brahmā said, "Oh son, you go and merge with the brilliance of Mitrāvaruṇas and stay there. After some time you will be able to be born without being in a womb; you will then have a memory of the past and you will be very learned and will be worshipped by all".

Vasiṣṭha was pleased to hear that and he circumambulated Brahmā and prostrated before him and then went to the āśrama of Mitrāvaruṇas. He then abandoned his body there and merged with the brilliance of Mitrāvaruṇas. One day Urvaśī with her companions came to the āśrama of Mitrāvaruṇas and attracted by her charm they spent a night with her. Their semen at one time fell into a jar nearby and from it were born two people, Agastya and Vasiṣṭha, (Skandha 6, Devī Bhāgavata).

MAITREYA. A sage of great brilliance of ancient India.

1) Genealogy. Descending in order from Viṣṇu :— Brahmā—Atri—Candra—Budha—Purūravas — Āyus—Anenas—Pratikṣatra—Sṛñjaya—Jaya—Vijaya— Kṛti—Haryaśva—Sahadeva—Nadīna—Jayasena — Saṅkṛti — Kṣatradharmā—Sumagotra—Śala—Ārṣṭiṣena—Kośa—Dīrghatapas—Dhanvantari—Ketumān—Bhīmaratha—Divodāsa—Maitreya.

Somapa was born as the son of Maitreya.

2) Other details.

(i) Once Maitreya went to Hastināpura and told Duryodhana that he should behave kindly to the Pāṇḍavas. Duryodhana who did not much relish the advice sat tapping on his thighs with his hands, not seriously attending to the sage. Maitreya was displeased at the discourtesy and cursed that Bhīma would one day break Duryodhana's thighs. (See under Duryodhana).

(ii) Maitreya was a courtier of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Śloka 10, Chapter 4, Sabhā Parva).

(iii) Maitreya was one among the sages who visited Bhīṣma while he was lying on his bed of arrows. (Śloka 6, Chapter 47, Śānti Parva).

(iv) Once he discussed with Vyāsa topics on Dharma. (Chapter 120, Anuśāsana Parva).

(v) When Śrī Kṛṣṇa died, the spiritualistic ideology of Dharmaputra became more dominant and he approached Vidura for Dharmopadeśa. Vidura sent him to Maitreya. Dharmaputra went to the Āśrama of Maitreya on the banks of the river Gaṅgā and after paying respects to him accepted Dharmopadeśa (Instruction in law, duty and morals) from him. (3rd Skandha, Bhāgavata).

MAITREYĪ. Wife of the sage Yājñavalkya. She was one of the most learned and virtuous women in ancient India. There are innumerable references to her in the Purāṇas. (For details about her splendour see under Candrāṅgada).

MAITRĪ. Daughter of Dakṣa. Thirteen daughters of Dakṣa were married to Dharmadeva. Maitrī was one of them. Maitrī bore a son named Abhaya to Dharmadeva. (4th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

MAJJANA. A soldier of Subrahmaṇya. (Śloka 70, Chapter 45, Śalya Parva).

MĀKANDĪ. A city of the King Drupada. This city was on the banks of the river Gaṅgā. (Śloka 73, Chapter 137. Ādi Parva). See under KAPAṬABHIKṢU.

MAKARADAMṢṬRĀ. A prostitute of Mathurā, the birth place of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. The story of this woman who had made prostitution and cheating her aim in life was told to Vāsavadattā wife of Udayana by Vasantaka. The curbing of the arrogance of Makaradaṁṣṭrā by a poor brahmin of name Lohajaṅgha with the help of Vibhīṣaṇa, emperor of the demons, is the theme of the story.

Makaradaṁṣṭrā had a daughter named Rūpiṇikā. The mother tried to make the daughter also a prostitute. Once Rūpiṇikā went to a far-off temple for worship as instructed by her mother. There she met a poor brahmin named Lohajaṅgha and Rūpiṇikā was attracted to him by his handsome features. She sent word through her maid requesting Lohajaṅgha to come to her house. Rūpiṇikā came back and waited for her lover to come. After some time Lohajaṅgha came. Makaradaṁṣṭrā scrutinised the new-comer with suspicion but Rūpiṇikā took him to her bed-room. Both of them remained there making love. Makaradaṁṣṭrā finding her daughter going against the principles of a prostitute called her to her side and said: "Dear daughter, why do you keep this poor brahmin? Is this the duty of a prostitute? Love and prostitution never go together. We are like dusk. The twilight of love remains for a few seconds only. So do send away this brahmin who has no money."

Rūpiṇikā discarded the advice of her mother and Makaradaṁṣṭrā felt annoyed. She decided to send out Lohajaṅgha somehow. One day a prince came that way and Makaradaṁṣṭrā enticed him to her house and requested the prince to accept Rūpiṇikā and send Lohajaṅgha out of her house.

The prince accepted the request of the mother-prostitute. At that time Rūpiṇikā had gone to the temple and Lohajaṅgha for a walk. After some time Lohajaṅgha came as usual and entered the house and Makaradaṁṣṭrā introduced Lohajaṅgha to the prince. At once the servants of the prince beat Lohajaṅgha and carrying him away out of the house put him in an excrement pit. Lohajaṅgha somehow escaped from there and ran away. He was sorry to part with his love and he went on a pilgrimage. He walked for a long distance in the hot sun and feeling tired searched for a shady place to take some rest. Then he saw the carcass of an elephant. Jackals entering through the buttocks had eaten all flesh and the animal lay hollow inside with the skin in tact on the skeleton. Lohajaṅgha entered the inside of the elephant and slept there. That night it rained heavily and the hole at the buttocks contracted with little space for Lohajaṅgha to get out. The rains continued, the water-level in the river Gaṅgā rose and soon the carcass of the elephant was carried away to the river and it gradually reached the ocean. At that time a great kite taking it to be flesh for food drew it up and took it to the other side of the ocean. When it pecked it open it found a man inside and frightened left it there and flew away. By this time Lohajaṅgha awoke from his slumber and while he was looking around him in surprise he saw two demons approaching him. The demons thought he had come to the place crossing the ocean like Śrī Rāma to bring disaster to them and so they immediately ran up to Vibhīṣaṇa and told him of the incident. Vibhīṣaṇa asked his servants to bring Lohajaṅgha before him and when he was brought before him enquired very politely who he was and why he had come there and how he had come. In reply to the enquiries Lohajaṅgha said thus : "I am a brahmin from Mathurā. I did penance to please Viṣṇu to get relief from my poverty and one day Viṣṇu appeared before me in person and said, 'Go to my devotee Vibhīṣaṇa, and he will give you enough wealth to live happily'. It was in a dream and when I awoke I found myself on this shore. I do not know how it all happened."

Vibhīṣaṇa was immensely pleased to hear the story of Lohajaṅgha and gave him immense wealth including many precious diamonds, golden replica of the emblem of Viṣṇu consisting of Śaṅkha, Cakra, Gadā and Padma and a small kite from the mountain of Svarṇamūla. Accepting all these Lohajaṅgha flew on the back of the kite back to Mathurā and alighted at a deserted place there. Keeping all his valuable articles in a secret place he took one diamond and selling it acquired some cash and with that purchased some ornamental dress for himself. At dusk he dressed himself and holding the emblem of Viṣṇu flew on the back of the kite to the house of Rūpiṇikā and addressing Rūpiṇikā in private said, "I am Viṣṇu. I have come to you for a union because you are virtuous". Hearing that Rūpiṇikā respectully surrendered herself to him. Before dawn Lohajaṅgha left the house and flew back to the deserted place. Rūpiṇikā felt herself to be a goddess and did not speak to anybody in the morning. The mother was perplexed to find her daughter observing a vow of silence and questioned her. Rūpiṇikā then told her mother all that had happened on the previous night. Makaradaṁṣṭrā wanted to confirm the story of her daughter and so she kept awake that night to see what took place. She found Lohajaṅgha arriving as Viṣṇu on the back of Garuḍa and fully believing him to be Mahāviṣṇu was overjoyed at the fortune of her daughter and running to her the next morning said "Oh, dear daughter, by the grace of Śrī Nārāyaṇa you have become a goddess. How fortunate am I ? You should do one thing for me. You must send me to heaven with this body of mine along with your husband-god."

Rūpiṇikā agreed to do so. That night she told the fake Viṣṇu the desire of her mother. Then Lohajaṅgha said: "Your mother who is a great sinner is not eligible to go to Svarga in her present state. Day after tomorrow on the Dvādaśī day the gates of heaven will open. Early morning on that day the goblins of Śiva would enter Svarga. I shall then try to send your mother along with them. But your mother should then appear as a goblin. The hair on the head should be shaved at five places and the remaining hair locked to form five tufts of hair. She should wear a garland of bones and the body should be painted black on one side with charcoal and red on the other side with saffron. The painting should be in oil and she should not wear any clothes. This would make her appear like a goblin of Maheśvara (Śiva) and then there will be no difficulty for me to allow her to enter Svarga.

Lohajaṅgha left the place early in the morning and Rūpiṇikā told her mother all that her husband told her. Makaradaṁṣṭrā dressed herself as instructed by Lohajaṅgha and awaited the arrival of the fake Mahāviṣṇu. Lohajaṅgha came at night and Rūpiṇikā showed him her mother dressed as desired by her husband. Lohajaṅgha took Makaradaṁṣṭrā on the back of his kite and flew up. As he rose high he saw a tall flagstaff of a temple nearby. It had a wheel on its top. Lohajaṅgha placed her on the wheel and said, "Do sit here for a while. I shall soon come back to you and bless you". To the people assembled in the temple he spoke from the air, "Citizens, today the goddess 'Mārī', destroyer of everything, will fall on you. If you want to avoid that, remain in this temple and worship Viṣṇu".

People were frightened when they heard the warning from air and all remained in the temple chanting prayers and reciting devotional songs about Viṣṇu. Makaradaṁṣṭrā sat there for a while dreaming about the happiness in store for her in Svarga and awaiting her daughter's husband to come and take her. But Lohajaṅgha had come to the temple in an ordinary dress and was with the crowd in the temple. Time dragged on and it became midnight and Makaradaṁṣṭrā sitting on the wheel of the flagstaff felt uneasy. She could not sit there any longer and she cried aloud, "Oh, I am falling". People mistook her for Mārī and cried back, "Oh, goddess, do not fall". It became morning and in the sunlight they saw a figure sitting on the top of the flagstaff and were surprised. The King was informed and he came to the temple and so also all people from the place. When the people on scrutinising the figure knew it was Makaradaṁṣṭrā, they all clapped their hands laughing loudly. Hearing the news Rūpiṇikā also came to the temple and she somehow got her mother down from the flagstaff. The King then made the prostitute tell her story and when it was finished he declared thus: "Who has thus played fraud on this prostitute who had throughout her life cheated other people ? If he comes before me now I will give him my crown and Kingdom". Hearing that Lohajaṅgha appeared before the King and confessed that he had done the mischief. He then narrated his story to the king and placed before the king the golden Seal of Visnu's emblem which Vibhīṣaṇa had given him. The king as per his promise gave Lohajaṅgha his kingdom and Rūpiṇikā once more became his. The arrogance of Makaradaṁṣṭrā was thus curbed. (Kathāmukhalambaka, Kathāsaritsāgara).

MAKARAGIRI. A mountain near Mahāmeru. Mahāmeru is two thousand yojanas long and six hundred yojanas high and stands in the midst of eight mountains two on each of the four sides. Makaragiri and Triśṛṅga are on the north side. On the east are Jaṭhara and Devakūṭa, on the south are Kailāsa and Karavīra and on the west are Pavamāna and Pāriyātra. (8th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

MAKARĀKṢA. Son of the demon Khara. In the epic battle between Rāma and Rāvaṇa after the death of Kumbha and Nikumbha the most prominent fighter who entered the battle-field on the side of Rāvaṇa was Makarākṣa. He gave a great fight to Rāma but was in the end killed by him. (Sarga 79, Yuddha Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

MAKARADHVAJA I. A son of Hanūmān. He was born to a crocodile living in the ocean as the perspiration drops fell on her from Hanūmān. (Sārakāṇḍa, Ānanda Rāmāyaṇa).

MAKARADHVAJA II. One of the sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. He was killed in the great battle by Bhīmasena. (Chapter 92, Droṇa Parva).

MAKARĪ. A river of Purāṇic fame. (Śloka 23, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

MAKṢOPETA. A daitya. This daitya whirls round along with an Āditya, known as Viṣṇu in the month of Kārttika. (November) (12th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

MĀLA. A place of habitation of ancient India. (Śloka 39, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

MALADĀ. One of the wives of Sage Atri. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 38 Verses 74-87).

MALADA (S) A community of people who lived in ancient India. From Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 27, we learn that they were the partisans of the Kauravas.

MALAJA. An ancient town celebrated in the Purāṇas. It is also known as "Aṅgamalaja". (See under (AṄGAMALAJA).

MĀLATIKĀ. A follower of Subrahmaṇya. (Śloka 4, Chapter 46, Śalya Parva).

MĀLAVĀ. A Purāṇic river to be remembered. (Śloka 25, Chapter 165, Anuśāsana Parva).

MĀLAVA. An ancient country on the west coast of India. Mahābhārata contains the following statements regarding Mālava :

(i) The people of Mālava participated in the Rājasūya of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Śloka 11, Chapter 34, Sabhā Parva).

(ii) Armed young Kṣatriyas of Mālava presented Yudhiṣṭhira with great wealth. (Śloka 15, Chapter 52, Sabhā Parva).

(iii) Karṇa conquered Mālavadeśa. (Śloka 20, Chapter 254, Vana Parva).

(iv) Mālava was one of the prominent and renowned countries of ancient India (Śloka 60, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

(v) Obeying the order of Bhīṣma the people of Mālava attacked Arjuna. (Śloka 76, Chapter 59, Bhīṣma Parva).

(vi) Śrī Kṛṣṇa once conquered Mālavadeśa. (Śloka 16, Chapter 19, Droṇa Parva).

(vii) Paraśurāma exterminated the Kṣatriyas of Mālavadeśa. (Śloka 11, Chapter 70, Droṇa Parva).

MĀLAVA(S). The Kṣatriyas born to king Aśvapati of his wife Mālavī are known as Mālavas. (Śloka 49, Chapter 297, Vana Parva).

MĀLAVĪ. The queen of Aśvapati king of Madra. She was the mother of Sāvitrī. Aśvapati begot of Mālavī a hundred sons called Mālavas.

Yama took to Kālapurī the soul of Satyavān who was shortlived. Sāvitrī, wife of Satyavān, followed Yama. Yama blessed Sāvitrī and said she would have many children and gave life to Satyavān again. Yama said "Satyavān will live for four hundred years and you will get a hundred sons of him. Your father Aśvapati also will get a hundred sons of Mālavī and the earth will get the name of Sāvitrī also". Accordingly Mālavī got a hundred sons and they were called Mālavas. (Chapter 297, Vana Parva).

MALAYA I. A son of King Ṛṣabhadeva belonging to the Priyavrata dynasty. (Bhāgavata, 5th Skandha).

MALAYA II. A son of Garuḍa (M. B. Sabhā Parva Chapter 99, Verse 14).

MĀLAYA III. A son of Garuḍa. (Śloka 14, Chapter 101, Udyoga Parva).

MALAYA IV. A mountain in South India. The following pieces of information are gathered about this mountain from the Purāṇas:—

(1) The sovereign deity of this mountain attends on Kubera in Kubera's assembly. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 32)

(2) The Pāṇḍya and Cola Kings collected Sandal Paste essence from the Malaya and Dardura mountains, filled them in golden pots and presented them to Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 52, Verse 33).

(3) The monkeys who went in search of Sītā crossed this mountain. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 289, Verse 44).

(4) Malaya is considered as one of the seven chief mountains of India. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 11)

(5) Once Mṛtyu deity performed tapas on this mountain. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 54, Verse 26).

(6) In Tripuradahana, Śiva used this mountain as the flagstaff of his chariot. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 102, Verse 73).

MALAYA V. In Mahābhārata there is a description of another Malaya Mountain besides the Malaya mountain of South India. When the sage Śuka ascended Heaven, he saw a Malaya mountain on the way. The celestial women, Urvaśī and Vipracitti used to dance there daily. This Malaya is somewhere above Kailāsa. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 332, Verse 21).

MALAYADHVAJA (PĀṆḌYA). In Mahābhārata, Karṇa Parva, Chapter 20, we read about a Pāṇḍya King named Malayadhvaja who took part in the Kurukṣetra battle and was killed in the fight against Aśvatthāmā.

MALAYAPRABHA. A King celebrated in Purāṇas. He ruled over Kurukṣetra. Once when there was a famine in the land, King Malayaprabha exempted his subjects from all taxes. The greedy ministers did not like it and they advised him against it. The King yielded to the advice of his ministers. On one occasion Malayaprabha's son Induprabha pleaded with his father and told him that he should not oppress his subjects at the instigation of his evil ministers. He added that the King was their "Kalpavṛkṣa" and the subjects were his "Kāmadhenus." But the King did not heed the advice of his son. He jokingly said that Induprabha was also their "Kalpavṛkṣa". Stung by this taunt, Induprabha took a solemn oath that he would either become a "Kalpavṛkṣa" or lay down his life in the attempt. He left the palace at once and began an austere tapas. Indra was pleased and appeared before him. Receiving his blessing, Induprabha returned to his capital and stood there as a "Kalpavṛkṣa". He fulfilled the desires of the people. A few days later, Indra came to the tree to test Induprabha. He told Induprabha : "Your mission of service is over; now you may come to Heaven". But he insisted that his subjects also should be taken with him to Heaven. Indra was pleased at the devotion and love of Induprabha for his subjects and agreed to take all his subjects also with him. Induprabha gave up the form of the tree and resuming his own shape, accepted "Bodhisattvācārya". (Kathāsaritsāgara, Śaśāṅkavatī lambaka, 5th Taraṅga).

MĀLEYA(S). The collective name of the ministers of Vibhiṣaṇa The four ministers were : Anala, Anila, Hara and Sampāti. (Uttar Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa)

MĀLĪ. A demon of great valour.

1) Genealogy and birth. There were two very brave brothers in the demon tribe named Heti and Praheti. They were inseparable companions of Mahābali. Praheti was unmarried and spent his time in religious pursuits. Heti married Bhayā sister of Kāla and got a son named Vidyutkeśa. Vidyutkeśa married Sālakaṭaṅkā daughter of Sandhyā and got a son named Sukeśa. Sukeśa married Devavatī, daughter of Grāmaṇī, alias Maṇimāyā. Devavatī delivered three sons, Mālī Sumālī and Mālyavān.

2) Boon to Mālī. The three brothers, even while young decided to acquire great strength and started performing penance. When their penance became very fierce Brahmā appeared before them in person and asked them what boon they wanted. They said, ' We must be invincible, we must be destroyers of our enemies, we must have long life, we must become rich and powerful ever remaining friendly with each other". Brahmā granted the boon asked for.

3) Family life. After obtaining the boon they went to Viśvakarmā and asked him to construct a place of abode for them. Viśvakarmā was frightened and he hastened to suggest a beautiful place for them to live. He said, "There is a mountain named Trikūṭa on the shores of the southern sea. There is a mountain on it called Subala. Its main top grazes the sky. Its four sides have been beautifully chiselled. No birds fly to its top. I have constructed there at the request of Indra a beautiful city surrounded by walls of gold and adorned on all sides with festoons of gold. That city is called Laṅkā and you, demon-lords, can stay there. You will get glory and prestige which even Indra could not acquire in his Amarāvatī. If you live in Laṅkā with your followers you will be unconquerable".

The happy demons with their people went to Laṅkā. They married the daughters of a Gandharva woman named Narmadā. Mālī married Vasudhā ; Sumālī, Ketumatī ; and Mālyavān, Sundarī. Mālī begot of his wife Vasudhā four sons named Anila, Anala, Hara and Sampāti. Sumālī got of his wife Ketumatī ten sons named Prahasta, Akampana, Vikaṭa, Kālakāmukha, Dhūmrākṣa, Daṇḍa, Supārśva, Saṁhrāda, Prakvātā and Bhāsakarṇa and four daughters named Vekā, Puṣpotkaṭā, Kaikasī and Kumbhīnasī.

4) Death. The three brothers attacked Devaloka under the leadership of Mālī and a great fight ensued and Mālī died by the discus of Mahāviṣṇu. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

MĀLINĪ I. A river which flowed by the side of the āśrama of Kaṇva Muni. The river Cukka which flows through the district of Saharanpur today was the Mālinī of old. Some believe that Mālinī starts from the Himālayas. Śakuntalā was born on the shores of this river. (Śloka 10, Chapter 72, Ādi Parva).

MĀLINĪ II. One of the seven mothers of Subrahmaṇya. (Śloka 10, Chapter 228, Vana Parva).

MĀLINĪ III. A demoness. This maiden was sent to serve Viśravas, father of Rāvaṇa, by Kubera. Vibhīṣaṇa was the son born to Viśravas of Mālinī. (Śloka 3, Chapter 275, Vana Parva).

MĀLINĪ IV. A city of Purāṇic fame in the country of Aṅga. Jarāsandha gave this city to Karṇa. (Śloka 6, Chapter 5, Sabhā Parva).

MĀLINĪ V. The name of Śabarī in her previous birth. (See under Śabarī).

MĀLINĪ VI. A nymph born to Puṣkara of Pramlocā. (Chapter 8, Verse 14, Virāṭa Parva). King Ruci married this nymph and they got a son named Raucya. The lord of Raucyamanvantara was this Raucya. (Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa).

MĀLINĪ VII. A brahmin woman of very bad character. Because of her evil deeds she was born as a dog in her next birth. It observed then the Śukladvādaśī Vrata and so was born again as the nymph Urvaśī. (2. 7. 24, Skanda Purāṇa).

MALLARĀṢṬRA. A country in ancient India. The capital of Mallarāṣṭra was the present city of Kuśī. At the time of Mahābhārata, this country was ruled by a King named Pārthiva. There is a statement in the Mahābhārata that this King was defeated by Bhīmasena. When the Pāṇḍavas discussed the countries in which they were to live "incognito", the name of Mallarāṣṭra was also mentioned. (Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 3 ; Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 44; Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 13).

MĀLYAPIṆḌAKA. A serpent born in the family of Kaśyapa. (Śloka 13, Chapter 103, Udyoga Parva).

MĀLYAVĀN I. A Pārṣada of Śiva. The most intimate friend of Mālyavān was Puṣpadanta.

1) Curse of Mālyavān. Once Śiva was telling Pārvatī a story of the Gandharvas and Puṣpadanta heard it as he sat hiding in a place nearby. Pārvatī got angry and was about to curse when Mālyavān intervened and recommended for mercy. Pārvatī got angrier and cursed them both to be born on earth as men. They begged for relief and Pārvatī said : "In the deep depths of the forest of Vindhya mountains there lives a Yakṣa named Supratīka who has been turned into a devil called Kāṇabhūti by a curse. Puṣpadanta should narrate the story he has now heard to Kāṇabhūti and he will then be released from the curse. Kāṇabhūti would narrate to Mālyavān what he has heard from Puṣpadanta and Kāṇabhūti would then be released from his curse. Mālyavān should then make public the story he has heard and then he will also be released from the curse". Puṣpadanta was born as Vararuci in the city of Kauśāmbī and Mālyavān as Guṇāḍhya in the city of Supratiṣṭhita. (See under Guṇāḍhya).

2) Another curse to Mālyavān. By another curse Mālyavān was born as a spider and Puṣpadanta as an elephant in the south of Bhārata. (See under Puṣpadanta).

3) Part in Devāsura battle. Released from curses Mālyavān reached the presence of Śiva. It was the time of the Devāsura battle and Mālyavān fought on the side of the devas. Mālyavān played a prominent part in the battle. Mālyavān had to fight against a fierce archer named Kolāhala. Kolāhala sent three arrows one each on the forehead and the two shoulders. Mālyavān returned the fight with arrows. Then Kolāhala showing his swiftness of hand tormented him with several different weapons. Unmindful of this vehement attack Mālyavān plucked a hillock and threw it at Kolāhala. Then suddenly a fierce figure blazing with fire having nine pairs of hands and feet and three heads looking yellow in colour jumped out of the demon and made Mālyavān faint by the terrible heat it gave out. Mālyavān accepted defeat and ran away to the mountain. (Chapter 13, Part 4, Agni Purāṇa).

MĀLYAVĀN II. Son of the demon Sukeśa. He was the brother of Mālī and Sumālī.

This Mālyavān was the father of Rāvaṇa's mother. They were all living in Pātāla but when Rāvaṇa obtained his boon he sent away Kubera from Laṅkā and became the ruler of Laṅkā. Mālyavān and other demons followed Rāvaṇa to Laṅkā and stayed with him confirming his sovereignty over the place.

In the Rāma-Rāvaṇa battle Sugrīva stole the crown of Rāvaṇa and kicked him on his face. Ashamed of the insult Rāvaṇa went back to his palace and the first person he saw was Mālyavān. The old man had come to advise Rāvaṇa to give back Sītā to Śrī Rāma. But Rāvaṇa did not like the advice and tore to pieces the letter of advice. (For more details see under Mālī).

MĀLYAVĀN III. A mountain. This mountain is situated between the mountains of Meru and Mandara in the country of Ilāvṛta. This mountain shines like gold. (Chapter 7, Bhīṣma Parva).

MĀLYAVĀN IV. Another mountain near the Himālayas. The Pāṇḍavas visited this mountain on their way to the mountain Gandhamādana from the āśrama of Ārṣṭiṣeṇa. (Chapter 153, Vana Parva).

MĀLYAVĀN V. A mountain situated in the country of Kiṣkindhā. The fight between Bāli and Sugrīva took place near this mountain. This is on the banks of the river Tuṅgabhadrā. Uttara Rāmāyaṇa states that the palace of Sugrīva was on the top of this mountain. Śrī Rāma stayed on the beautiful peak of this mountain for four months. (Śloka 40, Chapter 280, Vana Parva).

MĀMĀṄKAM. Māmāṅkam was a very important national festival of Kerala. This festival used to be conducted on the sandy beach of Tirunāvāya. It represented the crowning ceremony of the sovereign of Kerala. There used to be a grand assembly of all the artistes of Kerala. There was an exhibition of the arts, trade and commerce of the land attracting a huge crowd of people from different parts of Bhārata. Scholars believe that the word Māmāṅkam is derived from the Sanskrit word "Mahāmaghā". Some say that it was so called because it was conducted on the day of Maghā in the month of Māgha.

The festival was conducted under the auspices of the supreme power in Malabar. For a long period Perumāls were in power in Malabar and so Māmāṅkam was conducted under the control of the Perumāls. The last of the line of Perumāls handed over the right to the then mighty chief, the King of Valluvanāḍ and for several years Māmāṅkam was conducted under his auspices. The foreign traders who came to Malabar, the Mohammadans and the Portuguese, persuaded Sāmūtiri (zamorin) to take control of this festival and with the help of the foreigners Sāmūtiri wrested from the King of Valluvanāḍ the right of conducting the Māmāṅkam. After some time the King of Valluvanāḍ made an attempt to get back the right from Sāmūtiri. This enraged Sāmūtiri and there ensued a fight between them resulting in much shedding of blood. An agreement was reached that after twelve years each would relinquish the right in favour of the other. So after twelve years Sāmūtiri was compelled to relinquish his right but by resorting to many sly tactics he retained the right. The strength of Sāmūtiri increased and he became a great power in Malabar. He was bold enough to send away the Portuguese from the coast and Sāmūtiri maintained his position till the advent of Tippu Sultan to Malabar in the year 1788 A.D. Every twelve years Sāmūtiri had to show his might to retain the right of the Māmāṅkam and those days of exhibiting strength were ghastly.

The place of this Māmāṅkam was at Tirunāvāya in Tirūr taluk. A Śiva temple of historic fame stands on the shores of the river Bhārata flowing through Tirūr taluk. There was an expansive sand beach on its shores, become famous by being the scene of many socio-political events there. It was the venue of the mighty Nambūdiris of Malabar to discuss matters of socio-political importance. Every year on the full-moon day in the month of Māgha all the ruling chiefs of Kerala would assemble there and on a special dais there Sāmūtiri would sit with royal robes and a sword in his right hand presiding over the assembly. The sword was given to the Sāmūtiris by Ceramān Perumāl and was considered the symbol of undisputed sovereignty of Kerala. It was also a sanction to conduct the Māmāṅkam. The Sāmūtiris came prepared to give a fight if their authority was challenged by anybody. The ruling Sāmūtiri would send an invitation to all chiefs of Kerala. On either side of Sāmūtiri would sit the relatives and friends of Sāmūtiri. There would be an army of Nairs and Tiyyas ready outside and only after defeating them could anybody approach the dais of Sāmūtiri. The dais was called Nilapāṭṭutara.

The whole atmosphere would resound with drummings and shots from pop-guns. Majestic elephants adorned with golden headdresses would be arrayed there. The conference of the chiefs would last for twelve days and the festival for twentyfour days. The Māmāṅkam attracted a huge crowd from far and wide because there were then many items of interest and information. The Māmāṅkam commenced on a fixed day at an auspicious hour in the morning when the caparisoned elephants started moving to the accompaniment of drums and pipes. The last Māmāṅkam was in 1755 A.D. By the time of Mārttaṇḍa Varmā the centre of power shifted from Malabar to the south. Even today the memories of the same are brightening spots in the history of Malabar.

MAMATĀ. Mother of the sage Dīrghatamas. (See under Dīrghatamas).

MAMMAṬA. An Indian scholar who lived about 1100 A.D. He was a great scholar and critic in Sanskrit and was born in Kashmir. His masterpiece was a great book "Kāvya Prakāśa". It is divided into ten chapters. Each chapter is entitled "Ullāsa". There is a view expressed by some people that Mammaṭa wrote only the first nine chapters of this book and the last chapter was written by another scholar named Alaka. Numerous commentaries on Mammaṭa's Kāvya Prakāśa have been published. It is said that Patañjali's commentator Kayyaṭa was the brother of Mammaṭa. "Śabda Vyāpāra Vicāra" is another book written by Mammaṭa.

MĀMTI I. The disciple of Gautama and the guru of Ātreya. (Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad).

MĀMTI II. A devotee of Śiva. He was the father of the famous Kālabhīti. (See under Kālabhīti).

MĀNAGARVĀ. A celestial maiden who was born as a she-monkey in the vicinity of the Himālayas by a curse of Brahmā. She became the wife of a monkey named Kesarī. She was named Añjanā and was the mother of Hanūmān. (For details see under Hanūmān).

MĀNASA I. A serpent born of the family of Vāsuki. This serpent was burnt to death at the Sarpasatra of Janamejaya. (Śloka 5, Chapter 57, Ādi Parva).

MĀNASA II. A serpent born of the family of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. This serpent was burnt to death at the Sarpasatra of Janamejaya. (Śloka 16, Chapter 57, Ādi Parva).

MĀNASA IV. (MĀNASASARAS). A lake on the peak of the Himālayas. Arjuna visited this lake once. (Śloka 4, Chapter 8, Sabhā Parva). In the precincts of this lake many devotees conduct Śiva-worship. They believe they would merge with Śiva at the end of the yuga. Those who bathe in that pond would acquire mokṣa. Mānasasaras is called Ujjānaka also. Vasiṣṭha and Arundhatī became realised souls at this place. (Śloka 14, Chapter 130, Vana Parva). A sage who lived in Mānasasaras in the form of a swan visited Bhīṣma while he was lying on his bed of arrows. (Śloka 98, Chapter 119, Bhīṣma Parva). Once a Devī named Upaśruti pointed out Indra who was hiding amongst the lotus stems in Mānasasaras. It was Brahmā who made this lotus lake and the river Sarayū starts from here. (Bālakāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

MĀNASĀDEVĪ. A devī born of the mind of Kaśyapa Prajāpati. She is known as Jaratkāru also. (For details see under Jaratkāru II).

MĀNASADVĀRA. A mountain near Mānasasaras. Because the entrance to the lake of Mānasasaras was through this mountain it got the name of Mānasadvāra. In the centre of this was an āśrama of Paraśurāma. (Śloka 12, Chapter 130, Vana Parva).

MĀNASAPUTRAS. The Prajāpatis created by Brahmā from his mind are called the Mānasaputras or spiritual sons of Brahmā. They are Bhṛgu, Pulastya, Pulaha, Kratu, Aṅgiras, Marīci, Dakṣa, Atri and Vasiṣṭha. They are nine in number. (Chapter 7, Aṁśa 1, Viṣṇu Purāṇa). They are all Prajāpatis and their wives are in order Khyāti, Bhūti, Sambhūti, Kṣamā, Prīti, Sannati, Ūrjjā, Anasūyā and Prasūti.

MANASVINĪ. A daughter of Dakṣaprajāpati. She became the wife of Dharmarāja. Candra was born of this Manasvinī. (Śloka 19, Chapter 66, Vana Parva).

MANASYU. A King of the Pūru dynasty. He was the grandson of Pūru and the son of Pravīra. His mother was Śūrasenī. Manasyu begot of his wife Sauvīrī three sons named Śakta, Saṁhana and Vāgmī. (Śloka 6, Chapter 94, Ādi Parva).

MĀNAVA. A scholar and an authority on Dharmaśāstra. He was the author of three books namely, Mānava Upapurāṇa, Mānavaśrautasūtra and Mānavavāstulakṣaṇa.

MĀNAVARĀ. She was the wife of Arthalobha who was the house-keeper of Bāhubala, King of Kāñcī. This Mānavarā divorced her husband to marry one who was more wealthy. (Kathāsaritsāgara).

MĀNAVARJAKA. A place of habitation of ancient India. (Śloka 50, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

MĀNAVĪ. A prominent river of ancient India. (Śloka 32, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

MANDAGĀ I. A river of Purāṇic fame. (Śloka 33, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

MANDAGA II. A place in the island of Śāka. The Śūdras who reside there are all virtuous people. (Śloka 38, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

MAṆḌAKA I. One of the sons born to the Yakṣa Maṇibhadra of his wife Puṇyajanī.

MAṆḌAKA II. A place of habitation of Purāṇic fame in ancient India. (Śloka 43, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

MĀṆḌAKARṆI (ŚĀTAKARṆI). A sage. Once this sage spent ten thousand years in a pond performing penance. Devas were bewildered and they sent five beautiful celestial maidens to divert the attention of the sage from his severe austerities. They enticed him and the sage constructed a grand and palatial house for them and stayed there with them. There was always music and dance there. The pond was thereafter known as 'Pañcāpsaras'. Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa during their exile in the forests with Sītā visited this place. (Sarga 11, Araṇyakāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

MANDĀKINĪ I. A maid who fell in love with Bhartṛhari. (See under Bhartṛhari).

MANDĀKINĪ II. A river which flows near the mountain of Citrakūṭa. If one bathes in this river one will have to one's credit the benefit of performing one Aśvamedha yajña. If one lives there bathing in that river daily, one will become possessed of Rājalakṣmī (wealth and majesty of a King). (Śloka 29, Chapter 25, Anuśāsana Parva).

MANDĀKINĪ III. A river celebrated in the Purāṇas, taking its source from the chain of Kedāra mountains in Uttarā khaṇḍa. It is also known as Mandāgni and Kālīgaṅgā. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 89, Verse 34).

MANDĀKINĪ IV. Kubera's park. Since this park is watered by Gaṅgā, it acquired the name Mandākinī. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 19, Verse 82).

MANDĀKINĪ V. Ākāśa Gaṅgā.

MANDĀKINĪ VI. One of the two wives of Viśravas, son of Pulastya. A son, Kubera was born to her by the blessing of Śiva. (Padma Purāṇa, Pātāla Khaṇḍa).

MAṆḌALAKA. A serpent born of the family of Takṣaka. This was burnt to death in the Sarpasatra of Janamejaya. (Śloka 8, Chapter 57, Ādi Parva).

MANDAPĀLA. A sage. This sage went to the land of the Manes by his powers of penance but returned to earth unable to obtain merit there. He then married a bird and led a family life. (For details see 8th para under Khāṇḍavadāha).

MANDARA I. A tortoise which is a character in the book Pañcatantra. (See under Pañcatantra).

MANDARA II. A brāhmaṇa who is greatly extolled in Śivapurāṇa. (See under Ṛṣabha).

MANDARĀ. One of the wives of Viśvakarmā. The monkey named Nala was the son of Mandarā. This monkey was the chief of those who helped Śrī Rāma to build a bridge to Laṅkā. Viśvakarmā had once blessed Mandarā saying that her son would one day become great. (Sarga 22, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

MANDĀRA I. Eldest son of Hiraṇyakaśipu. Receiving a boon from Śiva he fought with Indra for crores of years. Mahā Viṣṇu's weapon Cakra and Indra's weapon Vajra, were smashed to pieces when they hit his strong body. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 19, Verse 32).

MANDĀRA II. A son of the sage Dhaumya. He married Śamīkā, the virgin daughter of the Brāhmaṇa Aurva who was a native of Mālava land. (Gaṇeśa Purāṇa, 2. 34. 14).

MANDĀRALAKṢMĪ. Queen of the King named Siṁhadhvaja. (See under Siṁhadhvaja).

MANDARAPARVATA (MANDARĀCALA). A mountain of Purāṇic fame. The following information is gathered from Mahābhārata regarding this mountain :

(1) This mountain rises up to ten thousand yojanas and also goes down to ten thousand yojanas. (Chapter 18, Śloka 17, Ādi Parva).

(2) During the time of the churning of Kṣīrābdhi (ocean of Milk) the serpent Ananta brought this mountain as per instructions from Mahāviṣṇu. (Sloka 6, Chapter 18, Ādi Parva).

(3) It was this mountain that was used as the Mantha (churning stick) when the milk-ocean was churned. (Śloka 13, Chapter 18, Ādi Parva).

(4) During the time of churning the Milk-Ocean many inhabitants of Pātāla and animals in the ocean were killed because of the rubbing of this mountain. (Śloka 26, Chapter 18, Ādi Parva).

(5) This mountain resides in the court of Kubera as Devātmā. (Śloka 81, Chapter 10, Sabhā Parva).

(6) This mountain is situated near Kailāsa. Eighty-eight thousand Gandharvas and four times as much of Yakṣakinnaras reside on the top of this mountain. along with Kubera and a yakṣa named Maṇivara. (Śloka 5, Chapter 139, Vana Parva).

(7) Once in a dream Arjuna conducted a trip to Kailāsa accompanied by Śrī Kṛṣṇa and on his way he halted at this mountain. The mountain then shone with the presence of nymphs and heavenly songsters. (Śloka 33, Chapter 80, Droṇa Parva).

(8) In destroying the notorious demon trio called Tripuras, Śiva used this mountain as a bow. (Śloka 76, Chapter 202, Droṇa Parva).

(9) Once when the Sage Aṣṭāvakra was conducting a tour of the northern parts he stayed on this mountain for some time. (Śloka 54, Chapter 19, Anuśāsana Parva).

MANDĀRAVATĪ. A heroine in Kathāsaritsāgara. She is the heroine of the story told by the second Vetāla to King Trivikramasena. (See under Vetāla).

MĀṆḌAVĪ. Wife of Bharata. Rāma married Sītā; Bharata, Māṇḍavī; Lakṣmaṇa, Ūrmilā and Śatrughna, Śrutakīrti (Sarga 73, Bālakāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa). Māṇḍavī, Ūrmilā and Śrutakīrti were the daughters of Kuśadhvaja, brother of Janaka. (Bāla Kāṇḍa, Kamba Rāmāyaṇa). Bharata got two sons of Māṇḍavī named Subāhu and Śūrasena. Both of them defeated the Gandharvas and established cities one on each side of the river Sindhu. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

MANDAVISARPIṆĪ. A louse, a character in a story of Pañcatantra. (For details see under Pañcatantra).

MĀṆḌAVYA. A sage. He is known as Aṇīmāṇḍavya also. Once Rāvaṇa beat Māṇḍavya because of his not respecting Rāvaṇa. That day Māṇḍavya cursed him saying "You will also be beaten like this by a brave monkey". (Yuddha Kāṇḍa, Kamba Rāmāyaṇa). (More details can be had from the entry Aṇīmāṇḍavya). The āśrama of Māṇḍavya is considered a holy place. Once the King of Kāśī went to this āśrama and performed severe penance there. (Chapter 186, Udyoga Parva).

MANDEHA(S). See the 2nd para under Pakal.

MĀNDHĀTĀ. A King of pre-eminence in the dynasty of Ikṣvāku.

1) Genealogy. Descending in order from Viṣṇu were born — Brahmā — Marīci — Kaśyapa — Vivasvān — Ikṣvāku—Vikukṣi—Śaśāda—Purañjaya—Kakutstha — Anenas — Pṛthulāśva — Prasenajit — Yuvanāśva — Māndhātā.

2) Birth. Yuvanāśva, father of Māndhātā had a hundred wives. Still he had no children. Greatly griefstricken by the lack of a son he went to the forests to see people of virtue and piety. During his wandering in the forest he happened to reach a club of sages. Yuvanāśva went and sat in their midst. He was happy to be in their midst but was worried in his mind and so he sent up deep sighs as he sat there sad and silent. The sages asked him why he looked so sad and the King crying like a child told them the cause of his grief. The sages took pity on him and made him conduct the yāga 'Indradaivata'. They brought a jug of water made potent by recitals of mantras to be given to the queens to make them pregnant and placed the pot in the yāgaśālā. The yāga was coming to an end. One day the King felt unusually thirsty and unwilling to disturb the sages who were taking rest the King entered the yāgaśālā and finding a jug there full of water drank from it and quenched his thirst, little knowing that it contained the water made potent for a specific purpose by mantras. The next day when the sages went to the yāgaśālā they found the jug almost empty and were worried and started making enquiries. The King then confessed what he had done. The sages said that it was futile to fight against fate and somehow finished the yāga and went to their āśramas.

The King became pregnant and after ten months a child came out bursting open the right side of his stomach. The King consulted his ministers as to what should be done with the child and on their advice the child was taken to the forests and left there. But the child was protected by the Devas and they enquired among themselves as to whose breast-feeding it would get when Indra appeared and said "Māṁ Dhātā", meaning it would drink me. That was how the child got the name 'Māndhātā'. Indra thrust the child's big toe into its mouth and the child began to suck milk through it. Māndhātā who grew thus drinking its own toe became a mighty man of renown. (7th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

3) Administration of the state and marriage. When Māndhātā became a man of great strength his father died and he ascended the throne and became an Emperor of great fame. He conquered many kingdoms. He made his enemies flee from him. Because he intimidated the dasyus he got the name Trasadasyu. He married the perfect-figured chaste daughter Bindumatī of Śaśabindurāja. She got two sons named Purukutsa and Mucukunda.

The Purāṇas state that Māndhātā had another son named Ambarīṣa and fifty daughters who were all married to a sage named Saubhari.

4) How he caused rains in the country. Māndhātā ruled the country very virtuously without at any time going against truth and justice and his country became prosperous. Once it so happened that there were no rains for three successive years in the country and the greatly worried King went to the forests to know from the great sages there the reason for such a calamity. The sages told the King thus : "Oh King, of all yugas Kṛtayuga is the best. This yuga is a brahmin-predominant one and Dharma stands on four legs. Penance is for brahmins only and no man of any other caste can do penance in this yuga. But in your country a Śūdra is performing penance and that is why the clouds refuse to shower rains. Kill him and then the evil will go". Hearing this Māndhātā replied, "I will never kill an innocent ascetic. Teach me my duty at this time of peril". The sages were pleased at the reply of the King and advised him thus : "Oh King, start observing Vrata on the ekādaśī day. (Eleventh day in each half of a month). The ekādaśī which falls in the bright half of Bhādrapada is called 'Padmanābha', and if you observe it by its cogency you will get not only rains but prosperity and happiness free from misery of any kind. You must persuade your subjects also to observe this".

The King on returning to his palace started observing 'ekādaśī' along with his subjects of all the four castes and then it started to rain. Rains came in plenty and all the crops were rich. The subjects became happy. (Chapter 59, Padma Purāṇa).

5) Other details.

(i) Māndhātā had to fight once against Lavaṇāsura but had to accept defeat before the god-given spear which Lavaṇāsura possessed. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

(ii) Aśvinīdevas once helped Māndhātā in his work as an owner of land. (Sūkta 112, Anuvāka 16, Maṇḍala 1, Ṛgveda).

(iii) Māndhātā became pure by yajña and attained Svarga. (Śloka 5, Chapter 257, Vana Parva).

(iv) Once Nārada spoke to Sañjaya about the greatness of Māndhātā. (Chapter 62, Droṇa Parva).

(v) At another time Śrī Kṛṣṇa spoke in glowing terms about the yajña of Māndhātā. (Śloka 81, Chapter 29, Śānti Parva).

(vi) Once Mahāviṣṇu came to Māndhātā disguised as Indra and conversed with him on 'Rājadharma' (duties and responsibilities of a King.) (Śloka 16, Chapter 64, Śānti Parva).

(vii) Utatthya, son of Aṅgiras, once taught Māndhātā the outlines of Rājadharma. (Chapter 90, Śānti Parva).

(viii) Māndhātā conquered the whole world in one day. (Śloka 16, Chapter 124, Śānti Parva).

(ix) On another occasion Bṛhaspati conversed with him on the subject of Godāna. (The giving away of cows as gifts). (Śloka 4, Chapter 76, Anuśāsana Parva).

(x) Māndhātā gave away as gifts millions of cows. (Śloka 5, Chapter 85, Anuśāsana Parva).

(xi) Māndhātā hated non-vegetarian food. (Śloka 61, Chapter 115, Anuśāsana Parva).

MAṆḌODARĪ I. (MANDODARĪ). (In South India the name Maṇḍodarī is current). Wife of Rāvaṇa. The Uttara Rāmāyaṇa contains a story about the previous history of Mandodarī.

Maya, an asura, was born to Kaśyapaprajāpati of his wife Danu. Once Maya went to Devaloka to see the dances of the celestial maidens there. Devas came to know that Maya was in love with the nymph Hemā and they married her to Maya. Maya went to the southern valley of Himavān and lived there with Hemā constructing there a city called Hemapura. They got two sons Māyāvī and Dundubhi. But they grieved over the lack of a daughter and she went to a side of Himavān and started penance there to get the blessings of Śiva.

Once a celestial damsel named Madhurā after observing Somavāravrata went to Kailāsa to pay obeisance to Śiva. Pārvatī was absent from the place then, having gone to attend the birthday celebrations of one of her sons. So Madhurā met Śiva sitting lonely and this led to a clandestine sexual union between them. When Pārvatī returned she saw traces of the ashes from the body of Śiva on the naked breast of Madhurā and Pārvatī in her anger cursed Madhurā to live in a well for twelve years as a frog. Śiva was stupefied at the curse and he went to the well and consoled her by saying that she would after the twelve years of life as a frog become a very beautiful maiden and would be married by a man of great fame and valour. It was near this well that Maya and his wife were performing penance to get a daughter.

After twelve years the frog changed itself into a beautiful maiden and cried loudly from the well. Hearing the cry Maya and Hemā, who were nearby peeped into the well and seeing the young girl took her home and brought her up giving her the name Mandodarī. Rāvaṇa returning after his victory march by that way visited Maya and seeing the girl fell in love with her and married her according to Vedic rites and took her to Laṅkā. Rāvaṇa got three sons of her, Meghanāda, Atikāya and Akṣakumāra.

Mandodarī was a very beautiful woman. Hanūmān when he entered the bed-room of Rāvaṇa in search of Sītā was dumb-founded at the beauty of Mandodarī and mistook her for a second for Sītā. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

MANDODARĪ II. A virtuous princess of the kingdom of Siṁhala. She determined to live an unmarried life but was forced by destiny to marry a cruel and uncharitable husband. The story of this Mandodarī as related to Devī by Mahiṣāsura is given below.

Candrasena, King of Siṁhala, got of his wife Guṇavatī a very beautiful daughter named Mandodarī. Even when she was ten years old the King started searching for a suitable husband for her. He found out Kambugrīva son of Sudhanvā, King of Madradeśa and informed his daughter about his desire to make him his son-in-law. But Mandodarī replied that she never intended to marry and desired to spend her life worshipping God. Candrasena felt miserable at her reply.

Years went by and Mandodarī became a blooming lady and yet she remained firm in her determination. One day she was playing in the royal gardens with her companions when the prince of Kosala, Vīrasena came that way by mistake. The extraordinary beauty of the princess attracted him and he made a request to her through her companions to marry him. But Mandodarī refused.

Time rolled on and soon the marriage of her younger sister Indumatī came. Candrasena invited all the neighbouring Kings for that. The King of Madra Cārudeṣṇa was also present for the marriage. The King was very charming to look at but was very bad in character. Mandodarī was attracted by his external beauty and she expressed her willingness to marry him. Her father was immensely pleased and on the nearest auspicious day she was given in marriage to Cārudeṣṇa.

Mandodarī went to the palace of Cārudeṣṇa and they lived happily for some time. One day she saw her husband having sexual acts with the wife of one of the palace servants. She reproached her husband and yet two days later she saw her husband with another servant girl. She was greatly disappointed and she left the palace for the forests where she started performing penance.

MAṆḌŪKA. A class of horse. These highclass horses helped Arjuna in his campaign of victory. (Śloka 6, Chapter 28, Sabhā Parva).

MAṆḌŪKA(S). A tribe. The King of this tribe was Āyus. The daughter of Āyus, Suśobhā was married to Parīkṣit of Ikṣvāku dynasty. They had three sons, Śala, Dala and Bala. (Chapter 190, Vana Parva).

MAṄGALA. A deity in the form of Kuja or Planet Mars. There are different versions in the Purāṇas regarding the birth of Maṅgala.

(1) Satī committed suicide at the Dakṣayāga and Śiva greatly griefstricken at the loss of his wife started penance. A sweat drop fell from the forehead of Śiva doing severe penance and Maṅgala was the son born of that drop. Śiva then installed Maṅgala among the Navagrahas and according to the science of astrology this Graha is considered the protector of the landed property and the wife of a person. (Śiva Purāṇa, Rudra Saṁhitā 1-10 and Skanda Purāṇa 4-1-17).

(2) Śiva married Vikeśī daughter of Hiraṇyākṣa. One day while they were engaged in sexual plays Agni came to their presence. Enraged at this the eyes of Śiva blazed with anger and a drop of hot water from his eyes fell on the face of Vikeśī and she became pregnant. After some days Vikeśī found it impossible to bear the embryo of Śiva thus formed and she aborted it. A child was born and the goddess of earth took it and fed it with breast milk. It was that child who later on became Maṅgala. (Skanda Purāṇa).

(3) Maṅgala was born of the blood drops of Śiva. (Bhaviṣya Purāṇa).

(4) Maṅgala was the son of Bharadvāja. (Gaṇeśa Purāṇa).

(5) Maṅgala was the son of Bhūmidevī. Devas, sages, Brāhmaṇas, Manus and Gandharvas all worshipped Bhūmi at the time of Varāhakalpa. It is also said in the Vedas that Bhūmidevī is the wife of Mahāviṣṇu's incarnation as Varāha. Maṅgala alias the planet Mars was born to Bhūmidevī of Mahāviṣṇu as Varāha. (9th Skandha. Devī Bhāgavata).

MAṄGALACAṆḌIKĀ. A devī. Vedas and Vedavids alike praise this goddess who is always interested in granting the requests of her devotees. Because she showers prosperity on her devotees she became known as Maṅgalacaṇḍikā. There is another version that she got the name because she was worshipped by Maṅgala (Kuja) and because she grants the requests of Maṅgala. Yet another version is that she got the name because she was worshipped by the King Maṅgala chief of the seven islands. Born of the species of Durgādevī she is very kind and affectionate to her devotees. Paramaśiva worshipped this Devī before he went to destroy the demon-trio Tripuras. (9th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

MAṆI I. A serpent born of the family of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. This serpent was burnt to death in the Sarpasatra of Janamejaya. (Śloka 19, Chapter 57, Ādi Parva).

MAṆI II. A sage. This sage was a member of the Brahmasabhā. (Śloka 24, Chapter 11, Sabhā Parva).

MAṆI III. One of the two Pārṣadas given to Subrahmaṇya by Candra. The other one was named Sumaṇi. (Śloka 32, Chapter 45, Śalya Parva).

MAṆI IV. A son born to Kaśyapaprajāpati of his wife Kadrū. Maṇi lived near the city of Girivraja. This serpent did penance to please Śiva and obtained a boon that Garuḍa should give refuge to him. (31 : 6, Ādi Parva and Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa).

MAṆIBHADRA I. A Yakṣa. He who worships this Yakṣa would get his desire fulfilled. This Yakṣa is installed in a temple near the city of Tāmralipti. If anybody commits adultery in that place Maṇibhadra would take him to the temple and keep him there for the night. Next morning he would take the couple before the King and exposing the sin would get them killed by the King.

Once a Vaiśya named Samudradatta committed adultery and another house-holder found it out and took them to the temple of Maṇibhadra and kept them there. Śaktimatī, the virtuous wife of Samudradatta came to know of the mishap to her husband and the intelligent woman went to the temple with materials for worship and under the pretext of worshipping made the priest of the temple open the doors. When she entered Samudradatta felt ashamed and sat with his head bent down. Śaktimatī gave the other woman her own dress taking hers in return and sent her out as Śaktimatī without raising the least suspicion in the priest. Then she remained with Samudradatta, and when in the morning officers of the King came to take them they were surprised to find that the culprits were really husband and wife. The house-holder was punished for giving wrong information and Samudradatta was set free with his wife. (Kathāmukhalambaka, Kathāsaritsāgara).

MAṆIBHADRA II. A King of the Lunar dynasty. This King had many children of his wife Kavikā. Of these seven sons learned magic from Maya. The seven palm trees which Śrī Rāma broke by an arrow while on his search for Sītā were but the cursed forms of these seven sons. The Purāṇic story relating to Śrī Rāma giving them relief from the curse is narrated in the Kiṣkindhā Kāṇḍa of Kamba Rāmāyaṇa.

The seven sons of Maṇibhadra after learning magic from Maya created a huge cobra and travelled all over the world on it. One day they reached a mountain near Ṛṣyamūkācala. They saw the sage Agastya coming that way and just to tease him they coiled that cobra and hid it beneath the ground in the form of a circle and they themselves stood on it as seven palm trees in a circle and caused obstruction to the sage in his path. The sage as he came near the trees knew by his spiritual powers what trick had been played on him and said cursing, "May you stand like this for ever". The princes knew the hideousness of the curse and pleaded for redress and the sage said, "After centuries the incarnation of Viṣṇu as Śrī Rāma would come and give you salvation".

The princes stood there as trees grown to unusual heights with round black trunks casting shades all around. Underneath grew a shrubbage deep and thick and the seven trees stood' there presenting to the onlookers a sight of wonder.

Śrī Rāma and party reached the place of the seven trees. Suddenly Rāma took his bow and arrows and pressing his foot on a stone beneath sent an arrow and to the wonder of all, the seven trees standing in a circle fell all together and the arrow returned to his quiver.

When Rāma pressed the stone on the ground with his foot he was pressing on a vital point on the head of the cobra lying coiled in a circle under the ground bearing the seven trees. The cobra got a shock and instantly straightened itself for a second and the trees thus came in a row straight on the path of the arrow of Śrī Rāma. They were all cut at once and before they had time to fall down the serpent coiled itself again and regained his original position and so the trees fell down in the circle in which they stood. All these happened so quickly that nobody was able to see what happened and so every body was surprised to see all the seven trees in a circle falling down by a single arrow. The princes were thus relieved from the curse.

MAṆIBHADRA III.

1) General information. A Yakṣa. He was a deity of merchants and travellers. (Śloka 130, Chapter 64, Vana Parva).

2) Other details.

(i) He stays in the court of Kubera. (Śloka 15, Chapter 10, Sabhā Parva).

(ii) Once this Yakṣa on the request of a cloud named Kuṇḍadhāra gave a boon to a brahmin. (Śloka 21, Chapter 171, Śanti Parva).

(iii) The sage Aṣṭāvakra once welcomed this Yakṣa. (Śloka 33, Chapter 19, Anuśāsana Parva).

(iv) When Arjuna went to Marutta to bring his wealth Arjuna worshipped this Yakṣa and the Yakṣa blessed him. (Śloka 7, Chapter 65, Aśvamedha Parva).

MĀṆIBHADRA. A Pārṣada of Śiva. (See under Candrasena II).

MAṆICARA. A Yakṣa. In the fight between Rāvaṇa and Kubera this Yakṣa helping Kubera created great havoc in the army of Rāvaṇa. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

MAṆIDVĪPA. The abode of Devī. Devī resides in this island which is far beyond Kailāsa. (3rd Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

MAṆIGRĪVA. A brother of Nalakūbara. (See under Nalakūbara).

MAṆIJALĀ. A prominent river in Śākadvīpa. (Śloka 32, Chapter 11, Bhīṣma Parva).

MAṆIKĀÑCANA. A land portion of Śākadvīpa situated near Śyāmagiri. (Śloka 26, Chapter 11, Bhīṣma Parva).

MAṆIKUṬṬIKĀ. A follower of Subrahmaṇya. (Śloka 20 Chapter 46, Śalya Parva).

MĀṆIKYAVĀCAKAR (MĀṆIKKA-VĀŚAHAR). A devotee and poet who lived in Tamilnāḍu. He is believed to have lived during the period between the eighth and ninth centuries A.D. He was born in Tiruvādavūr in an Ādiśaiva brahmin family. Tiruvādavūr was a village near Madura, the capital of Pāṇḍya kingdom. His father was Śambhupādāśrita and mother Śivajñānavatī. The name given by his parents to Māṇikyavācakar is still unknown. Because he was born in Tiruvādavūr everybody called him Tiruvādavūrār. He became a scholar in his sixteenth year. The Pāṇḍya king called him to his palace and appointed him as his minister. He gave him the honour of the title 'Tennavar Brahmarāyar'. Māṇikyavācakar showed more interest in devotional matters than in matters of the state.

Once when the King was holding his durbar he got information that in one of the eastern ports had landed a set of good war-horses for sale. He sent Tiruvādavūrār to that place. The minister, when near the port of Tirupperundurai, heard a sound of Vedic utterances and he immediately went to the place from where the sound came. He saw Lord Śiva sitting under a tree in the guise of a Guru. Forgetting all state affairs he became engrossed in the meditation of Śiva. Suddenly he developed a talent for poetry and music and sweet attractive poems in praise of Śiva started flowing from his tongue. Śiva was immensely pleased and gave him the name Māṇikyavācakar meaning that every Vācaka (sentence) coming out of his tongue was equal in value to a māṇikya (Ruby). The guru gave him a ruby too. Māṇikyavācakar in the garb of a mendicant joined a troop of Śiva devotees and spent all the money he had for the service of the devotees of Śiva and also for the reconstruction of a dilapidated Śiva temple in Tirupperundurai.

Māṇikyavācakar reached Madura and informed the King that the horses would arrive at the palace on the day Āvaṇi-mūla (Mūla star in the month of Śrāvaṇa) and presented the king with the ruby which his Guru had given him. The king was not satisfied and he imprisoned him. On the Āvaṇi-mūla day at the stipulated time the horses arrived at the palace. The horses were led by strange foreigners. It was Śrī Parameśvara himself who had come as the chief of the horsemen. Māṇikyavācakar was released from jail and he also came to see the horses. The King gave the leader of the troopers a silk shawl as present. The head of the troopers received it by the end of his whip. The King resented this but the troopers went back without any trouble. The horses were put in stables and Māṇikyavācakar went to his āśrama.

At midnight all the new horses in the stables turned into jackals and roamed about in the streets howling loudly and disturbing everyone. After some time they all disappeared. The anger of the king knew no bounds. He imprisoned Māṇikyavācakar again. The servants of the king took him to river Vaigai. That day there was an unusual flood in the river and the city of Madura was submerged in waters. The king then realised his mistake and begged pardon of Māṇikyavācakar. Māṇikyavācakar asked the king to repair the dam in the Vaigai. The king assented to the proposal but to save money the work was entrusted to the citizens of Madura.

At that time there was an old woman in Madura called Vantī. She earned her livelihood by selling sweetmeats. The servants of the king ordered her also to join the work of the dam. She prayed to Paramaśiva and then a young man came to the old woman and offered to work for her in her stead. The young man representing Vantī went to Vaigai and started to work for her. When the king came to inspect the work he found the young man not doing his work satisfactorily and struck him on his back with a whip. A basketful of sand the young man was carrying fell down and the work of the dam was instantly completed. Not only that; all the persons including the king felt as though they were struck. Vantī attained Svarga and Māṇikyavācakar went to Cidambaram. The king repented.

Māṇikyavācakar saw Śiva in person several times. Many wonderful events happened at the Cidambaram temple after the arrival of Māṇikyavācakar there. The King of Laṅkā hearing about the greatness of Māṇikyavācakar brought his dumb daughter to him and she gained the power of speech. The Buddhist saints of Laṅkā came to Māṇikyavācakar and entered into philosophical discourse with him. They became dumb. The king of Laṅkā and his followers became devotees of Śiva.

Māṇikyavācakar sat in his āśrama and composed divine songs. Once Śiva in the guise of a brahmin came there and copied the songs written by him. Even while he was reciting his divine songs to the devotees his soul left his body and merged with that of Śiva.

The divine songs in praise of Śiva by Māṇikyavācakar constitute the eighth Khaṇḍa of Śaivite hymns by name "Tirumurai". They include "Tiruvācakam" and "Tirukkovaiyār". The Tiruvācakam contains 654 verses in 51 hymns and the Tirukkovaiyār contains 400 verses. All these are songs in praise of Śiva sung on different occasions. (Divyacaritam).

MAṆIMĀN I. A king. Mahābhārata gives the following details about him.

(i) Maṇimān was born of an aspect of Vṛtra, son of the asura Danāyu. (Śloka 44, Chapter 67, Ādi Parva).

(ii) This king was present at the marriage of Draupadī. (Śloka 22, Chapter 185, Ādi Parva).

(iii) Bhīmasena while on his early victory march defeated this king. (Śloka 11, Chapter 30, Sabhā Parva).

(iv) This king fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas during the great Kurukṣetra battle. (Śloka 20, Chapter 4, Udyoga Parva).

(v) Maṇimān was killed in the fight between Maṇimān and Bhūriśravas. (Śloka 53, Chapter 23, Droṇa Parva).

MAṆIMĀN II. A serpent. This serpent is a member of the court of Varuṇa. (Śloka 9, Chapter 9, Sabhā Parva).

MAṆIMĀN III. A sacred place. If one spends a night there one would get the benefit of performing an Agniṣṭoma yajña. (Śloka 101, Chapter 82, Vana Parva).

MAṆIMĀN IV. A Yakṣa who was a friend of Kubera. Once the sage Agastya cursed him that he would be killed by the hand of a man. The yakṣa was killed by Bhīmasena. (Śloka 59, Chapter 160, Vana Parva and see under AGASTYA, Para 10).

MAṆIMĀN V. A mountain. Once, when Arjuna went on a pilgrimage to Śiva's presence with Kṛṣṇa in a dream, he saw this mountain Maṇimān. (Śloka 24, Chapter 9, Droṇa Parva).

MAṆIMĀN VI. A pārṣada of Śiva. This pārṣada joined hands with Vīrabhadra to injure the sage Bhṛgu at the Dakṣayāga. (4th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

MAṆIMANTHA. A mountain. (Śrī Kṛṣṇa performed penance here to please Śiva for crores of years together. (Śloka 33, Chapter 18, Anuśāsana Parva).

MAṆIMATĪPURĪ (MAṆIMATPATTAṆAM). A meeting place of the asuras. The notorious asura Ilvala lived here for some time. (Śloka 4, Chapter 94, Vana Parva). The demons Nivātakavacas hid here in this city and Rāvaṇa challenged them to a fight after coming to the gates of the city. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

MAṆIMAYA. Father-in-law of a demon called Sukeśa. Sukeśa married Devavatī daughter of Maṇimaya and had three sons, Mālyavān, Sumālī and Mālī. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

MAṆINĀGA. I. A serpent born to Kaśyapa Prajāpati of his wife Kadrū. This serpent resides near Girivraja(Śloka 50, Chapter 21, Sabhā Parva).

MAṆINĀGA II. A sacred place. If one spends a night here one would get the benefit of making a thousand Godānas. If one eats from the offerings made to a deity there one would be free from the effects of any snake-poison. (Śloka 106, Chapter 84, Vana Parva).

MĀNINĪ. Mother of Viśravas, father of Rāvaṇa. She was the daughter of the sage Tṛṇabindu. (See under Tṛṇabindu).

MAṆIPARVATA. A mountain of Purāṇic fame. Narakāsura kept the sixteen thousand and one hundred maidens he had stolen in this mountain. (Dākṣiṇātya Pāṭha, Chapter 38, Sabhā Parva).

MAṆIPRAVĀLA. A kind of language formed by mixing Sanskrit and Malayālam together. "Bhāṣāsaṁskṛta-yogo maṇipravālam". This is its definition. A great many of the important literary works in Malayālam are in Maṇipravālam.

MAṆIPURA (MANIPUR). The birth place of Citrāṅgadā wife of Arjuna. Arjuna during his pilgrimage came to this place and after marrying Citrāṅgadā stayed there for three years. Babhruvāhana was the son of Citrāṅgadā. (See under Citrāṅgadā).

MAṆIPUṢPAKA. Sahadeva, one of the Pāṇḍavas, used to blow a conch named Maṇipuṣpaka. (Śloka 16, Chapter 25, Bhīṣma Parva).

MAṆISKANDHA. A serpent born of the family of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. This serpent was burnt to death in the Sarpasatra of Janamejaya. (Chapter 52, Ādi Parva).

MAṆIVĀHANA. Another name for King Kuśāmba. (Chapter 63, Ādi Parva).

MAṆIVAKRA. One of the sons of the Vasu, Āpa.

MAṆIVARA. One of the sons born to Rajatanātha of his wife Maṇivarā. This Yakṣa married Kratusthalā's daughter Devajanī. The sons born to them are called 'Guhyakas'. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, 3.7.127-131).

MĀṆIVARA. A Yakṣa. He lives on the mountain of Mandara. (Śloka 5, Chapter 139. Vana Parva).

MAṄIVAṬṬAPPĀRA. A rock of Purāṇic fame. Rāvaṇa spent one night on this rock with Rambhā. Rambhā was going to her lover Nalakūbara one night alone and Rāvaṇa seeing her on the way carried her away to this place. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

MAÑJULĀ. A river of Purāṇic fame. (Śloka 34. Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

MAÑJUGHOṢĀ. A nymph. The sage Medhāvī cursed this nymph and made her into a devil. (See under Medhāvī).

MAṄKA. A place of habitation in the island of Śāka. This place is inhabited mostly by dutiful brahmins. (Chapter 11, Bhīṣma Parva).

MAṄKAṆA (MAṄKANA). A barber of Vārāṇasī who was a great devotee of Gaṇeśa. During the time of King Divodāsa II Śiva wanted to destroy the city of Kāśī and deputed his son Gaṇeśa (Nikumbha) for the same.

Gaṇeśa came to Kāśī and appearing in person before his devotee Maṅkaṇa, asked him to build a temple on the outskirts of Kāśī. Maṅkaṇa completed the temple and Gaṇeśa (Nikumbha) installed himself in that temple getting for it the name Nikumbhamandira. Devotees began to flow into the temple and Nikumbha sitting there answered the prayers of all. But he never fulfilled the prayer of the King to have a son. This annoyed Divodāsa and he destroyed the temple and then Nikumbha cursed that the city of Kāśī would become desolate. Śiva's desire thus became fulfilled. (92. 33, Vāyu Purāṇa and 3; 67, 43, Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa).

MAṄKAṆAKA (MAṄKAṆA). A sage

1) General information. He was born to Vāyubhagavān of his wife Sukanyakā. (Śloka. 58, Chapter 38, Śalya Parva).

Vāmana Purāṇa, 38th Chapter states that Maṅkaṇa was one of the spiritual sons of Kaśyapaprajāpati.

2) Juice of potherb flows from finger. The sage was living in Saptasārasvatatīrtha and one day by accident his thumb was cut off from his hand by the sharp edge of Kuśa grass. But instead of blood, the juice of potherb began to flow from the thumb and the sage, overjoyed at this strange phenomenon, started dancing. Along with Maṅkaṇa the earth and the sky also started dancing and the dancing showed no signs of stopping. Śiva then appeared before Maṅkaṇa and asked him the cause of his non-stop dancing. Śiva was in disguise and Maṅkaṇa did not recognise the new-comer and the sage told him about the strange phenomenon. As they were talking Śiva touched the thumb of the sage with his little finger and lo! the flow from the finger changed from pot-herb juice to sugar-candy juice. Vāmana Purāṇa states that it was ashes which flowed from the finger. The hermit was ashamed. He understood that the guest was Śiva and he fell at his feet. Śiva blessed the hermit and granted him boons.

3) Maṅkaṇa falls in love with Sarasvatī Devī. One day Sarasvatīdevī came to the place of his residence in the guise of a very attractive woman. Maṅkaṇa had seminal emission on seeing her and the semen fell on the surface of the water. The sage stored the water with semen in a pot and soon seven sons were born from it. They all became sages named Vāyuvega, Vāyubala, Vāyuhā, Vāyumaṇḍala, Vāyujvāla, Vāyuretas and Vāyucakra. (Chapter 83, Vana Parva and Chapter 38, Śalya Parva).

4) Birth of Kadalīgarbhā. Besides the seven sons Maṅkaṇa got a daughter named Kadalīgarbhā. Menakā was her mother. (See under Kadalīgarbhā).

5) Maṅkaṇa diverts the river Sarasvatī. It was sage Maṅkaṇa who invoked the river Sarasvatī and made it flow through Kurukṣetra. Chapter 38, Vāmana Purāṇa).

MAṄKI I. A great sage. It was Bhīṣma, while he was lying on his bed of arrows who narrated the story of this sage. Maṅki was an aspirant of worldly things and once he got two bullocks. He was ploughing with them one day when a camel came and carried them away. Disappointed he came to the āśrama and lamented deeply over it. This lamentation became known later as the famous Maṅkigītā. By the time the gītā reached its end the mind of the sage was changed and he became one bereft of all worldly desires and he acquired mokṣa. (Chapter 177, Śānti Parva).

MAṄKI II. A sage who lived in Tretāyuga. He was the son of Kauṣītakibrāhmaṇa and was a Vaiṣṇavite of great virtue. This sage had two wives named Surūpā and Virūpā. Both had no sons and as per the advice of his guru he went to Sabarmatītaṭa and did penance there. After several years of rigorous austerities he got very many children. The place where Maṅkimaharṣi sat and did penance was known later as Maṅkitīrtha. It is also called Saptasārasvata. In Dvāparayuga the Pāṇḍavas visited the place and gave it the name Saptadhāra also. (Uttara Khaṇḍa, Padma Purāṇa).

MANMATHAKARA. A warrior of Subrahmaṇya. There is a reference to this warrior in Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 72.

MANODARĪ. Wife of Dārukāsura. (See under Ghaṇṭākarṇa).

MANOGUṆA. Man may do many things, right or wrong, good or bad, but it is the purity of your mind that matters. The following story is to illustrate how much your life depends on the quality of your thoughts (Manoguṇa).

Once on the shores of Gaṅgā a Brāhmaṇa and a Caṇḍāla sat side by side and performed penance. After some days of foodless penance the Brāhmaṇa felt hungry and his thoughts went to the fishermen he had seen earlier. He thought thus, "Oh how happy are these fishermen. They catch good fishes and eat to their heart's content and are happy. They are the luckiest people of this world". The thoughts of the Caṇḍāla also went to the fishermen. But he thought thus: "Oh how cruel are these fishermen! How many innocent lives do they destroy to fill their belly. They must be demons to do so." Both of them died after some days and the Brāhmaṇa was born as a fisherman and the Caṇḍāla a prince. Both of them were re-born near their abodes in their previous birth and both remembered their previous lives. The Caṇḍāla was happy but the Brāhmaṇa regretted his fault. (Taraṅga 1, Madanamañcukālambaka, Kathāsaritsāgara).

MANOHARĀ I. Wife of the Vasu, Soma. Varcas was born of her first. Then she had three more sons named Śiśira, Prāṇa and Ramaṇa. (Śloka 22, Chapter 66, Ādi Parva).

MANOHARĀ II. A nymph of Alakāpurī. Once when Aṣṭāvakra went to the court of Kubera this nymph gave a performance in dancing in honour of that sage. (Śloka 45, Chapter 19, Anuśāsana Parva).

MANOJAVA I. The eldest son of the Vasu Anila. Anila begot this son of his wife Śivā. (Śloka 25, Chapter 66, Ādi Parva).

MANOJAVA II. During the Manvantara of Cākṣuṣa, the sixth Manu, Indra was Manojava, the leader of the Devas. (Aṁśa 3, Chapter 160, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

MANOJAVA III. A follower of Subrahmaṇya. (Śloka 17, Chapter 46, Śalya Parva).

MANOJAVA IV. A sacred place situated in Vyāsavana in Kurukṣetra. If one bathes in a pond there one will have to one's credit the benefit of making a thousand Godānas. (Śloka 93, Chapter 88, Vana Parva).

MANONUGA. A place near the mountain Vāmana in the island of Krauñca. (Śloka 11, Chapter 12, Bhīṣma Parva).

MANORAMĀ I. Wife of Dhruvasandhi King of Kosala. (See under Dhruvasandhi for details).

MANORAMĀ II. A celestial woman. She was the daughter of Kaśyapa Prajāpati, born of his wife Pradhā. (Śloka 50, Chapter 65, Ādi Parva). She participated in the Janmotsava of Arjuna. (Śloka 62, Chapter 122, Ādi Parva).

MANORAMĀ III. Once by his spiritual powers the sage Uddālaka brought the river Sarasvatī to his place of yajña and that diversion was then known as Manoramā. (Śloka 25, Chapter 38, Śalya Parva).

MANORATHA. A calf once created by Śrī Kṛṣṇa by his spiritual powers. (See under Surabhi).

MANOVATĪ. The city of Brahmā. This city is situated in the centre of the nine cities on the top of the mountain Mahāmeru. Around it are the cities of the Aṣṭadikpālakas. (8th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

MANTHARĀ I. A maid of Kaikeyī the wife of Daśaratha. This hunchbacked woman was born of the species of a Gandharvī named Dundubhī. (Śloka 10, Chapter 276, Vana Parva). When everything was made ready to crown Śrī Rāma as the heir-apparent of Ayodhyā, it was Mantharā who persuaded Kaikeyī to go to Daśaratha and ask him to send Śrī Rāma to the forests. Had not the cruel tongue of Mantharā played like that, the history of the solar dynasty itself would have been different. (See under Kaikeyī).

MANTHARĀ II. Daughter of Virocana. (Sarga 25, Bālakāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa). Indra killed this Mantharā.

MANTHINĪ. A follower of Subrahmaṇya. (Śloka 28, Chapter 46, Śalya Parva).

MANTRA. See under Veda.

MANTRAPĀLA. One of the eight ministers of the great King Daśaratha. The other seven were : Jayanta, Dhṛṣṭi, Vijaya, Asiddhārtha, Arthasādhaka, Aśoka and Sumantra. (Sarga 7, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

MANU I. See under Manvantara.

MANU II. Son of the Agni Pāñcajanya. Pāñcajanya had three wives Suprajā, Bṛhadbhāsā and Niśā. He got of his first two wives six sons and of his third wife Niśā, a daughter and seven sons. (Chapter 223, Vana Parva).

MANU III. A celestial maiden born to Kaśyapa of Pradhā. (Chapter 59, Verse 44, Ādi Parva).

MĀNUṢATĪRTHA. A sacred pond lying on the outskirts of Kurukṣetra. There is a legend showing the origin of this pond. Once a hunter wounded a deer with his arrow and the deer ran and dropped itself into the pond. When it rose up from the water it became a man. From that day onwards the pond became holy and got the name Mānuṣatīrtha. (Śloka 65, Chapter 86, Vana Parva).

MANUSMṚTI. A code of conduct written by Manu alias Mānavācārya who was the father of man-kind for the harmonious existence of a social life. The book contains twelve chapters. The first chapter deals with the origin of the Smṛti and the origin of the world. No other Smṛti begins like this and so it is believed that this chapter must have been added to it later. The contents of each of the other eleven chapters are given below :

Second chapter. It deals with the sense organs and stresses the importance of conquering and controlling them. It describes the qualities of a brahmin.

Third chapter. It contains the duties of a householder after his course of study of the Vedas. Eight different kinds of marriages are described in it. It also deals with methods of giving protection to women and children.

Fourth chapter. Duties of a brāhmaṇa, study of the Vedas and responsibilities of a Snātaka are all described in this chapter.

Fifth chapter. This deals with pure and impure foods, impurity and methods of purification, women and their responsibilities.

Sixth Chapter. This contains the duties of those who have entered the āśrama of Vānaprastha and also of ascetics.

Seventh chapter. It deals with the duties of Kings and ministers.

Eighth chapter. It deals with law and justice. It contains laws for the proper conduct of justice and includes ways and means of settling disputes and handling cases of debts, sale without right, partnership, duels, theft, prostitution, boundary disputes and all such matters as are to be decided by a court of law.

Ninth chapter. It deals with the duties of a husband and wife. It also contains matters relating to property rights, partition and the duties of a King with regard to these.

Tenth chapter. It deals with the duties of the different castes, mixed castes and the duties of one in times of danger.

Eleventh chapter. It deals first with penance, observation of Vratas, Yāgas, Yajñas and fee to the priests. It then deals with punishments of crimes, expiation for murder, prostitution etc.

Twelfth chapter. It deals with the theory of births and describes how your deeds in the present life are directive of the nature of life of your next birth. What deeds would fetch you what life is also explained. It contains instructions on Ātmajñāna and the way to obtain mokṣa (absolute bliss).

The basis of the present Hindu Law is Manusmṛti and it is believed to have been written in B.C. 500.

MANUṢYA (MAN) The Purāṇas have not given a definite explanation regarding the origin of Man, the most important of all living beings. Many stories regarding the origin of Man were current among the ancient people. According to Hindu Purāṇas Man was born of Svāyambhuva Manu who in turn was born of Brahmā. According to Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa (Sarga 14, Araṇya Kāṇḍa) all the living beings including man were born to Kaśyapaprajāpati of his eight wives, Aditi, Diti, Danu, Kālikā, Tāmrā, Krodhavaśā, Manu and Analā. From Aditi were born the devas; from Diti, the daityas; from Danu, the dānavas; from Kālī, the asuras Kālaka and Naraka; from Tāmrā, the bird-flock Krauñcī, Bhāsī, Śyenī, Dhṛtarāṣṭrī and Sukī; from Krodhavaśā the animal flock, Mṛgī, Mṛgamandā, Harī, Bhadramadā, Mātaṅgī, Śārdūlī, Svetā and Surabhi; from Manu, mankind and from Analā, the flora.

There is basis to believe that the Greeks and the people of Bhārata accepted with slight modifications the theory of evolution. The Daśāvatāras of Viṣṇu almost represents the progressive changes in the form of a living thing from a fish into man. The theory of Darwin that life was first formed in water was current among the sages of ancient Bhārata, even from very early times.

Apa eva sasarjādau
Tāsu vīryamapāsṛjat //

(He created water first and cast virility therein).
In the Daśāvatāras (ten incarnations of Viṣṇu) the first avatāra is Matsya (Fish). The next one is Kūrma or Tortoise which is a progress in the form of fish. The third is Varāha or boar which is another step forward in evolution. The fourth is Narasiṁha (Man cum lion) which is the first step towards the formation of Man. That avatāra has got the traits of both man and animal. The next one is Vāmana or a small man. Then Śrī Rāma and Śrī Kṛṣṇa, both fully grown men but with different kinds of culture.

MANVANTARA(M).

1) Kalpa, Manvantara and Caturyuga. The Prapañca (universe) is perishable. At one time, it takes its origin, at another time it perishes. Brahmā, the creator of the universe has birth and death. The period between the birth and death of a Brahmā is known as a "Mahākalpa". The flood that comes at the death of a Brahmā is called "Mahāpralaya". One day of Brahmā is called Kalpakāla. In the Purāṇas one Kalpa or one day of Brahmā is divided into fourteen parts. The master or ruler of each of these divisions is a Manu. There are fourteen Manus. The life span of each Manu is called a "Manvantaram".

There are seventy one Caturyugas in each Manvantara. The four yugas namely Kṛtayuga, Tretāyuga, Dvāparayuga and Kaliyuga make np one Caturyuga. At the end of seventyone such Caturyugas, that is, at the end of every two hundred and eightyfour (71 × 4) yugas, a Manu completes his life-span. Along with, that, the Devas who were born at the time of the birth of that Manu, also come to the end of their lives. Fourteen such Manvantaras make one day of Brahmā. It is at the end of that day that the original universe perishes. Brahmā's life-span is 120 years. At the end of that period, that Brahmā perishes. That is to say, at the end of every 42,200 divine days (120 × 360) which is the life-span of a Brahmā, a deluge takes place. Thus in one Brahmā's time 42,200 Kalpas take place. A Brahmā's life span is known as "Mahākalpa" and the close of a Brahmā's period is called "Mahāpralaya".

2) Human year (Manuṣya varṣa) and Divine year (Deva varṣa). When two leaves are placed one over the other and they are pierced by a needle, the time required for the needle to pass from the first leaf to the second is called "Alpakāla". Thirty such alpakālas make one "Truṭi". Thirty truṭis make one "Kalā". Thirty Kalās make one "Kāṣṭhā", which is also known as "Nimiṣa" "Noṭi" or "Mātrā". Four "Nimiṣas" make one "Gaṇita". Ten Gaṇitas, one "Neṭuvīrppu". Six neṭuvīrppus, one "Vināzhikā". Sixty vināzhikās one "Ghaṭikā". Sixty ghaṭikās one day (day and night together). Fifteen days, one "Pakṣa". Two Pakṣas, one "Cāndra māsa" (lunar month). One Cāndramāsa for human beings is one "ahorātra" (one day and night making up one full day) for the pitṛs. Twelve Cāndra māsas make one year for human beings. One year for human beings is one ahorātra for the gods. Three hundred ahorātras of gods make one "Deva Vatsara" or "Divya vatsara". 4,800 divyavatsaras make one Kṛtayuga. 3,600 divyavatsaras make one Tretāyuga, 2,400 divyavatsaras make one Dvāparayuga. 1,200 divyavatsaras make one Kaliyuga. 12,000 divyavatsaras comprising a set of Kṛta, Tretā. Dvāpara and Kaliyugas make one Caturyuga. A Manu's period is completed at the end of 71 Caturyugas. With that, the first group of gods also comes to an end. At the end of fourteen such Manus, one "Kalpa" is over and a deluge takes place. The whole of this period comprises one night for Brahmā. Night is the time of complete inactivity. With the end of the night, creation is started again. When 360 such ahorātras of Brahmā are completed, he completes one year. After completing 120 such years, a Brahmā perishes. Again a period of absolute inactivity follows for the length of a Brahmā's life-span. After a period of 120 Brahma varṣas (the life-span of a Brahmā) another Brahmā comes into being.

The life-span of Brahmā is shown in the following tabular form :

360 days for gods	—One Deva vatsara.
12,000 Deva vatsaras	—1 caturyuga (36 lakhs years for human beings).
71 caturyugas	—1 Manvantaram (One Manu's life-span).
14 Manvantaras	—1 Kalpa (one day time for Brahmā)
2 Kalpas	—One day (and night) for Brahmā. (Ahorātra)
360 days of Brahmā	—1 Brahma Varṣa
120 Brahma Varṣas	—One Brahmā's life-span.

This life-span of one Brahmā is therefore 30 crores 9 lakhs 17 thousands 376 hundreds of years of human beings.

It is said that a Manu's period of reign is 4,32,000 Manuṣyarvarṣas. (Bhāgavata, 3rd Skandha).

3) The caturyuga scheme. A caturyuga consists of the four yugas, namely Kṛta, Tretā, Dvāpara and Kali yugas. At the end of each Caturyuga, the Vedas perish Then the "Saptarṣis" (seven sages) come down from heaven to the earth and restore them again. Manu who is the propounder of Dharma śāstra, is also born in every Kṛtayuga. The Devas of each Manvantaram feed upon the share of Havis (offerings at sacrifices) of the yāga till the end of that Manvantara. During the whole period of the Manvantara, the earth is protected and preserved by the sons of Manu and their descendants. Thus Manu, the Saptarṣis, Devas, Indra and the Kings who are the sons of Manu are the authorities of the Manvantara. After 14 Manvantaras a Kalpa of about 1,000 yugas, comes to an end. After that there is a night extending over the same period in duration. At that time Mahāviṣṇu sleeps on his bed Ananta in the ocean of deluge. After that, he wakes up again and performs creation. Manus, Kings, Indra, Devas and Saptarṣis are the Sāttvika aspects of Mahāviṣṇu, who performs the work of protecting the world. In Kṛta yuga, Mahāviṣṇu assumes the form of Kapila and others and preaches "Paramajñāna". In Tretā yuga he assumes the form of an emperor and destroys the wicked people. In Dvāpara yuga, he assumes the form of Vyāsa and after dividing the Veda into 4 sections, classifies each of the sections into the various branches. At the end of Kaliyuga, Mahāviṣṇu assumes the form of Kalki and restores the vicious to the path of righteousness. This is the "Caturyuga scheme" of Mahāviṣṇu. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa. Part III, Chapter 2).

4) The fourteen Manus. The names of the fourteen Manus of one Kalpa are given below :

(1) Svāyambhuva (2) Svārociṣa (3) Uttama (Auttami) (4) Tāmasa (5) Raivata (6) Cākṣuṣa (7) Vaivasvata (8) Sāvarṇi (9) Dakṣasāvarṇi (10) Brahmasāvarṇi (11) Dharmasāvarṇi (12) Rudrasāvarṇi (13) Raucyadevasāvarṇi (14) Indrasāvarṇi.

Each of the above Manus is described below :—

(1) Svāyambhuva.

(a) General. Svāyambhuva was born as the spiritual son of Brahmā. This Manu got his name because he was "Svāyambhuva" or born from Brahmā. He married the goddess Śatarūpā, the spiritual daughter of Brahmā. After that, he went to the shore of the ocean of milk, made an image of Mahādevī there and worshipped her by chanting Vāgbhava mantra and performed an austere penance. After a hundred years of such worship the goddess was pleased. She appeared before Svāyambhuva and granted him boons. She blessed him to attain the highest place in Heaven (Paramapada) after begetting vast progeny. Then the goddess went to Vindhya mountain and became the deity of Vindhya. Svāyambhuva returned and started his reign by worshipping the goddess.

This Svāyambhuva is regarded as the author of the famous work "Manusmṛti". Kālidāsa says that the Kings of the Raghu dynasty lived in strict obedience to the laws laid down by this Manu. (Devī Bhāgavata, Daśama Skandha).

(b) Other details.

(i) The Saptarṣis of first Manvantara were—Marīci, Aṅgiras, Atri, Pulaha, Kratu, Pulastya and Vasiṣtha. Devas are known as Yamas. The first Manu had ten sons namely Agnīdhra, Agnibāhu, Medhā, Medhātithi, Vasu, Jyotiṣmān, Dyutimān, Havya, Savana and Putra and they ruled over the country. (Harivaṁśa, Chapter 7).

(ii) Emperor Pṛthu turned Svāyambhuva Manu into a calf and obtained medicine from Bhūmi by milking her as a cow. (Bhāgavata, 4th Skandha).

(iii) Born from Virāṭ aṇḍa. (M.B. Ādi Parva Chapter 1, Verse 32).

(iv) Sage Cyavana married this Manu's daughter. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 46).

(v) This Manu taught Soma, the art of Cākṣuṣī. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 169, Verse 43).

(vi) Since this Manu had blessed the clouds of the Magadha country they sent periodical rains to that region. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 21, Verse 10).

(vii) Manu came to the world, riding in the chariot of the gods to see Arjuna's fight. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 10).

(viii) This Manu had a wife named Sarasvatī (Śatarūpā). (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 117, Verse 14).

(ix) This Manu lives in Bindusaras. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 46).

(x) He came at the time of Subrahmaṇya's birth. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 10).

(xi) Manu held discussions with Siddhas. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 36).

(xii) He was the King of men. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 21).

(xiii) This Manu is called "Prajāpati Manu". Once he had a talk with Bṛhaspati on the subject of Dharma. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 201).

(xiv) Upamanyu saw Svāyambhuva Manu sitting by the side of Śiva. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 280).

(xv) He talked with the sage Suparṇa about the greatness of flowers, fumes, lights, offerings and gifts. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 45).

(2) Svārociṣa.

(a) General. Svāyambhuva had two great sons Priyavrata and Uttānapāda. The second Manu was the son of Priyavrata and his name was Svārociṣa. He was a glorious and adventurous man. He went to the banks of the river Kālindī, made a hermitage there, installed an idol of Devī made of earth and offered worship most fervently. At the end of 12 years of tapas when he ate only dried leaves, Devī appeared before him in her dazzling brilliance and blessed him. The name of this Devī was "Dhāriṇīdevī". After a reign of many years this King went to Heaven. (Devī Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

(b) Other Details.

(i) Pārāvatas and Tuṣitas were the Devas in this Manvantara. The mighty Vipaścit was Devendra. The Saptarṣis were Ūrjja, Stambha, Prāṇa, Rāma, Ṛṣabha, Niraya, and Parīvān. Caitra, Kimpuruṣa and others were the sons of Svārociṣa Manu. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 3, Chapter 1).

(ii) In Harivaṁśa, Chapter 7 we read that the Saptarṣis of this Manvantaram were Aurva, Stambha, Kaśyapa, Prāṇa, Bṛhaspati, Datta and Niścyavana.

(iii) Brahmā taught this Manu, Sātvatadharma. Svārociṣa taught this dharma to his son Śaṅkhavadana. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 348, Verse 36).

(3) Auttami (Uttama).

(a) General. Uttama was also the son of Priyavrata. He went to Gaṅgā tīrtha and offered worship to Devī for three years with Vāgbīja mantra. At the end of it, Devī was pleased and blessed him with worthy sons and a kingdom without the threat of enemies. After a happy reign of many years, at the close of the Manvantara, he reached the highest place in Heaven. (Devī Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

(b) Other details. Suśānti was the name of the Devendra of this Manvantara. There were five groups of Devas, namely Sudhāmans, Satyas, Japas, Pratardanas and Śivas, each group consisting of twelve Devas. The seven sons of the sage Vasiṣṭha were the saptarṣis of this Manvantara. These seven sons of Vasiṣṭha by his wife Ūrjjā were Rajas, Gotra, Ūrdhvabāhu, Savana, Anagha, Sutapas and Śukra. Aja, Paraśudīpta and others were the sons of the Manu Uttama. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part I. Chapter 1).

(4) Tāmasa.

(a) General. The fourth Manu Tāmasa was the son of Priyavrata. That King performed penance to Devī on the northern bank of the river Narmadā with Kāmarāja mantra. As a result of Devī's blessing, he obtained a prosperous Kingdom and worthy sons. After a long reign he attained heaven. (Devī Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

(b) Other details. At the time of this Manu, there were four groups of Devas, namely—Supāras, Haris, Satyas, and Sudhīs. Each of these groups contained 27 Devas. Śibi who had performed a hundred yāgas was the Indra. The Saptarṣis of this Manvantara were Jyotirmān, Pṛthu, Kāvya, Caitra, Agnivanaka, and Pīvara and Nara. Khyāti, Keturūpa, Jānujaṅgha and others were the sons of Tāmasa Manu. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part I, Chapter 1).

(5) Raivata.

(a) General. The fifth Manu Raivata was the younger brother of Tāmasa. He worshipped Devī with Kāmabīja mantra on the banks of the river Kālindī. With the blessing of Devī he ruled for many years and then attained Heaven. (Devī Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

(b) Other details. The name of the Indra of this Manvantara was Vibhu. There were four groups of Devas—Amitābhas, Bhūtarayas, Vaikuṇṭhas and Sumedhas. Each of these groups contained fourteen Devas. The Saptarṣis of Raivata Manvantara were—Hiraṇyaromā, Vedasrī, Ūrdhvabāhu, Vedabāhu, Sudāmā, Parjanya and Mahāmuni. The sons of Raivata Manu, Balabandhu, Sambhāvya, Satyaka and others were mighty Kings. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 3, Chapter 1).

(6) Cākṣuṣa.

(a) General. This Manu was the son of Aṅga. Once he went to the Rājarṣi (royal saint) Pulaha and prayed for prosperity, mastery of the whole world, invincible power and profound scholarship. Pulaha sent him to Devī. The Rājarṣi taught him the worship of Devī. After acquiring the mantra Cākṣuṣa went to the banks of the river Virajā and offered worship to Devī. At the end of twelve years, Devī appeared before him and blessed him with "Manuhood", mastery of the Manu kingdom and brilliant sons After many years he distributed his kingdoms among his sons and at last attained "Devīpada". (Devī Bhāgavata, Daśama Skandha).

(b) Other details.

(i) The following account is given in Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part I, Chapter 13, about the birth of Cākṣuṣa Manu. Dhruva and his wife Śambhu had two sons, namely Śiṣṭi and Bhavya. Succhāyā, the wife of Śiṣṭi gave birth to five sons, Ripu, Ripuñjaya, Vipra, Vṛkala and Vṛkatejas, who were all sinless. Cākṣuṣa was born to Bṛhatī, the wife of Ripu. Cākṣuṣa begot Manu by Puṣkariṇī, daughter of Vīraṇa Prajāpati. This was the sixth Manu. By his wife Naḍvalā, the daughter of Vairāja Prajāpati, he had 10 sons, namely, Kuru, Puru, Śatadyumna, Tapasvī, Satyavān, Śuci, Agniṣṭoma, Atirātra, Sudyumna and Abhimanyu. Āgneyī, wife of Kuru, gave birth to six sons who were Aṅga, Sumanas, Khyāti, Kratu, Aṅgiras and Śibi. Sunīthā, wife of Aṁga, gave birth to Vena. Pṛthu was the son of Vena. He is also known as "Vainya".

(ii) The Indra of that period was Manojava. There were five groups of Devas—Ākhyas, Prasūtas, Bhavyas, Pṛthukas and Lekhas, each group consisting of eight Devas. The Saptarṣis of this Manvantara were—Sumedhas, Virajas, Haviṣmān, Uttama, Madhu, Atināman and Sahiṣṇu. Śatadyumna and other mighty Kings were the sons of Cākṣuṣa Manu. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part I, Chapter 3).

(iii) The sons of this Manu became famous under the name "Variṣṭhas" (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 18, Verse 20).

(7) Vaivasvata.

(a) General. He was born from Sūrya. It is this Manu who rules the world today. All living beings that we see today were born from him. Vaivasvata Manu is Satyavrata Manu who escaped from the last deluge. To save him Viṣṇu took up the incarnation of Matsya (fish). Vaivasvata Manu was also the first of the Kings of the Sūrya vaṁśa (Solar Dynasty) who ruled over Ayodhyā.

(b) Other details. (i) In Devī Bhāgavata, Saptama Skandha, we see that the sons of Vaivasvata namely Ikṣvāku, Nābhāga, Dhṛṣṭa, Śaryāti, Nariṣyanta, Prāṁśu, Nṛga, Diṣṭa, Karūṣa and Pṛṣadhra were also called Manus.

(ii) This Manu worshipped Devī and received her blessing and attained Heaven after a long reign. (Devī Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

(iii) Vaivasvata Manu had another name, "Śrāddhadeva." The Devas of this Manvantaram are Ādityas, Vasus and Rudras. The name of the Indra of this period is Purandara. The Saptarṣis are, Vasiṣṭha, Kaśyapa, Atri, Jamadagni, Gautama, Viśvāmitra and Bharadvāja. The nine Dhārmikas (virtuous ones), Ikṣvāku, Nṛga, Dhṛṣṭa, Śaryāti, Nariṣyanta, Nābhāga, Ariṣṭa, Karūṣa and Pṛṣadhra are the sons of Vaivasvata Manu. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 8, Chapter 1).

(iv) Ten sons were born to this Manu who were Vena, Dhṛṣṇu, Nariṣyanta, Nābhāga, Ikṣvāku, Kārūṣa, Śaryāti, Ila, Pṛṣadhra, and Nābhāgāriṣṭa. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 75, Verse 15).

(v) Mahāviṣṇu incarnated as Matsya for the sake of Vaivasvata Manu. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 187).

(vi) He received Yogavidyā from Sūrya and Ikṣvāku received it later from him. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 38).

(vii) At the beginning of Tretāyuga, Sūrya taught "Sātvata Dharma" to Manu and Manu taught it to Ikṣvāku for the protection of all creatures. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 348, Verse 51).

(viii) The sage Gautama taught Śivasahasranāma to Vaivasvata Manu. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 177).

(8) Sāvarṇi.
(a) General. Even in his previous birth he was a devotee of Devī. In his former birth (during the period of Svārociṣa Manvantara) Sāvarṇi was born as a King of Caitravaṁśa under the name Suratha. The origin of the dynasty known as Caitravaṁśa was as follows :—Atri, son of Brahmā had a son named Niśākara. This Niśākara became an emperor by performing Rājasūya. Emperor Niśākara had a son Budha and Budha had a son named Caitra, both of whom were greatly renowned. It was Caitra's family which later on became the reputed Caitra dynasty. The son of that Caitra was Viratha. Suratha was the son of Viratha. This was the previous birth of Sāvarṇi Manu. Suratha was a great hero and poet. Once another King besieged his city and defeated him. Suratha left his kingdom and went alone on horseback and took shelter in a dense forest. While wandering in the forest like a mad man with a broken heart, he happened to reach the āśrama of the sage Sumedhas. The sage advised him to worship Devī in order to retrieve his lost kingdom and prosperity. Accordingly the King worshipped Devī who was pleased and restored to him his kingdom and prosperity. Besides, she blessed him that in his next birth he would become Sāvarṇi, the King of the Solar dynasty and would be revered as the eighth Manu. Thus the eighth Manu Sāvarṇi will be the second birth of Suratha. (Devī Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).
(b) Other details. Sāvarṇi is also the son of Sūrya. How he came to be called Sāvarṇi is explained below:-- Sūrya had three children Manu, Yama and Yamī by Saṁjñā, the daughter of Viśvakarmā. This Manu was Vaivasvata Manu, the seventh Manu. Unable to bear the intense heat of Sūrya, Saṁjñā once sent her maid Chāyā to Sūrya in her own disguise and went to the forest for tapas. Sūrya had three children by Chāyā, Śanaiścara, another Manu and Tapatī. This Manu is known as Sāvarṇi who will become the eighth Manu. In his time there will be three groups of Devas—Sutapas, Amitābhas and Mukhyas. Each of these groups will consist of twelve persons. The Saptarṣis of the eighth Manvantara are Dīptimān, Gālava, Rāma, Kṛpa, Aśvatthāmā son of Droṇa, Vyāsa son of Parāśara and Ṛṣyaśṛṅga. Mahābali, son of Virocana will be the Indra. Virajas, Urvarīyān, Nirmoka and others are the Kings who are the sons of Sāvarṇi Manu. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part III, Chapter 2).
(9). Dakṣa Sāvarṇi.
General. At the time of this Manu there are three groups of Devas namely, Pāras, Marīcigarbhas and Sudharmans. Each of the groups contains 12 Devas. The Indra who is the king of those Devas, is the mighty Adbhuta. The Saptarṣis of this Manvantara are:—Savana, Dyutimān, Bhavya, Vasu, Medhātithi, Jyotiṣmān and Satya. Dhṛtaketu. Dīptiketu, Pañcahasta, Nirāmaya, Pṛthuśravas are the sons of Dakṣasāvarṇi Manu. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part III, Chapter 2).
(10). Brahma Sāvarṇi.
General. In this Manvantara, the Devas are Sudhāmans and Viśuddhas. Each of these groups will contain 100 Devas. Their Indra will be the heroic Śānti. The Saptarṣis will be Haviṣmān, Sukṛta, Satya, Tapomūrti, Nabhāga, Apratimaujas and Satyaketu. Brahma Sāvarṇi will have ten sons, three of whom are, Sukṣetra, Uttamaujas and Bhūtisena who will become Kings. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part III, Chapter 2).
(11). Dharma Sāvarṇi.
General. In this Manvantara there will be three groups of Devas namely, Vihaṅgamas, Kāmagas and Nirvāṇaratis, each of the groups consisting of 30 Devas. Vṛṣa, Agnitejas, Vapuṣmān, Ghṛṇī, Āruṇi, Haviṣmān, and Anagha will be the Saptarṣis. The sons of Dharma Sāvarṇi viz., Sarvatraga, Sudharmā, Devānīka and others will be the kings of that time.
(12). Rudra Sāvarṇi.
General. This Manu is the son of Rudra. The Indra of this Manvantara will be Ṛtudhāman. There will be five groups of Devas namely, Haritas, Rohitas, Sumanases, Sukarmans and Supāras. Each group will contain 10 Devas. Saptarṣis are Tapasvī, Sutapas, Tapomūrti, Taporati, Tapodhṛti, Tapodyuti and Tapodhana. The sons of this Manu, Devavān, Upadeva and Devaśreṣṭha will be mighty kings. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part III, Chapter 2).
(13). Raucyadeva Sāvarṇi. (Ruci).
General. There will be three groups of Devas during this period called Sutrāmans, Sukarmans and Sudharmans. Each of these groups will contain 33 Devas. The mighty Divaspati will be their Indra. Nirmoha, Tattvadarśī, Niṣprakampya, Nirutsuka, Dhṛtimān, Avyaya and Sutapas are the Saptarṣis of that period. Citrasena, Vicitra and other sons of this Manu will be kings. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part III, Chapter 2).
(14). Indra Sāvarṇi (Bhaumi).
General. The Indra of this Manvantara will be Śuci. Under his control there will be five groups of Devas. They are Cākṣuṣas, Pavitras, Kaniṣṭhas, Bhrājakas and Vācāvṛddhas. The Saptarṣis of this period are Agnibāhu, Śuci, Śukra, Māgadha, Agnīdhra, Yukta and Jita. At that time the sons of the Manu who would rule the earth will be Uru, Gambhīrabuddhi and others. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part III, Chapter 2).
5). Some more details. Fourteen Manus have been mentioned above. Of them, the seventh Manu, Vaivasvata Manu is the Head of the present Manvantrara. Some general facts about the Manus are given below:-
1) The six Manus after the eighth one namely, Dakṣasāvarṇi, Merusāvarṇi, Sūryasāvarṇi, Candrasāvarṇī, Rudrasāvarṇi and Viṣṇusāvarṇi are respectively the re-births of Karūṣa, Pṛṣadhra, Nābhāga, Diṣṭa, Śaryāti and Triśaṅku who were the sons of Vaivasvsata Manu. There is a story about their taking re-births. All the six persons mentioned above were once offering worship to the idol of Devī on the banks of the river Kālindī. After twelve years, Devī appeared, under the name of Bhramarāmbikā and blessed them that in their next births they would become rulers of Manvantaras. (Devī Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).
2) It is said that the four Manus, Svārociṣa, Uttama, Tāmasa and Raivata belonged to Priyavrata's family. It was because Priyavrata who was a Rājarṣi offered tapas to Viṣṇu that four Manus were born in his family. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa. Part III, Chapter 1).
3) It is the power of Viṣṇu that dominates all the Manvantaras as the basic divinity. In the first Svāyambhuva Manvantara it was a part of that power of Viṣṇu itself that originated as Yajñapuruṣa in Ābhūti. After that when Svārociṣa Manvantara came it was again that divinity that took its origin in Tuṣitā as Ajita among the Tuṣitas. In Uttama Manvantara that divinity Tuṣita him self was born again under the name of Satya as the son of Satyā in the group of Devas called Satyas. When Tāmasa Manvantara began, that divinity was born again as the son of Haryā as a Hari in the group of Devas called Haris. It was that divinity Hari himself who was born in Sambhūti under the name of Mānasa among the Devas called Raivatas in Raivata Manvantara. In Cākṣuṣa Manvantara that Viṣṇu Bhagavān took birth in Vikuṇṭhī as one of the Vaikuṇṭhas. In the present Vaivasvata Manvantara, Viṣṇu has incarnated in Aditi as Vāmana, the son of Kaśyapa. That great Vāmana conquered all the three worlds and presented them to Devendra. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part III, Chapter 2).

Besides the fourteen Manus mentioned above, certain other Manus are also referred to in the Purāṇas. Some details about them are given below:—

(1) It is seen from Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇya Kāṇḍa, 14th Sarga, verse 11, that Kaśyapa had a wife named Manu.

(2) There is a reference to a Rājarṣi (Saintly king) named Manu in Ṛgveda, first Maṇḍala, 16th Anuvāka, 112th Sūkta.

(3) A son named Manu was born to the Agni Tapa or Pāñcajanya. This Manu has another name Bhānu. He had three wives named Suprajā, Bṛhadbhāsā and Niśā. Six sons were born to him by the first two wives. By his third wife he had one daughter and seven sons. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 221, Verse 4).

(4) In Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 57, verse 43, we find a reference to another Manu named Pracetas.

MĀNYAVATĪ. Wife of Avikṣit, son of Karandhama. Mānyavatī daughter of Bhīmarāja was carried away by force by Avikṣit from the marriage hall on the marriage day. (Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa).

MANYU I. A Vedic god. The origin of this god is described in Brahma Purāna as follows :—

Once a terrible war broke out between Devas and Asuras. The Devas who were defeated, went to the Gautamī river valley and performed penance to Śiva praying for victory. Śiva produced Manyu from his third eye and presented him to the Devas. In the battle which followed they defeated the Asuras with the help of Manyu.

MANYU II. A king of the Pūru dynasty. Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha states that Manyu, the son of Bharadvāja, had five sons including Bṛhatkṣaya.

MANYUMĀN. Second son of the Agni Bhānu. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 221, Verse 11).

MARAṆA (M) (DEATH). Death is a goddess whose name is Mṛtyu. The Purāṇas state that there was no death in the world before the birth of this goddess. In Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 53 there is the following story about the circumstances in which Brahmā created Mṛtyu.

Living beings multiplied endlessly on earth. As they had no death, the goddess Earth found their weight too much for her to bear. She went weeping to Brahmā and prayed for his help. At that time, Rudra and Nārada were present in Brahmā's assembly. Brahmā said that he did not like destroying living beings. Because of the pressure of Rudra and Nārada, Brahmā created out of Viśvaprakāśa (Cosmic Light) a woman. She was born from the south and Brahmā gave her the name "Mṛtyu". He gave her permission to destroy human beings.

When she heard that she was to kill living beings, she shed tears and Brahmā gathered those tears. She went to Dhenukāśrama and other places and performed tapas. At last Brahmā called her back and assured her that it was not against Dharma to kill living beings. He changed the tears he had gathered from her face into the various diseases and returned them to her. He gave those diseases and the god Yama as her companions. Thus the goddess Mṛtyu started her dance of destruction. (See also under the word PUNARJANMA).

MĀRDAMAHARṢI. One of the sons of Viśvāmitra who was a Brahmavādī. (Śloka 57, Chapter 4, Anuśāsana Parva).

MĀRGAṆAPRIYĀ. A daughter born to Kaśyapa Prajāpati of his wife Pradhā. (Śloka 45, Chapter 65, Ādi Parva).

MĀRGAŚĪRṢAMĀSA. The month of Dhanu (December). The month has got great Purāṇic importance. If one lives taking food only once during the whole of this month one will be free from all sins and diseases. (Śloka 17, Chapter 106, Anuśāsana Parva). If on the Dvādaśī day in this month one fasts the whole day and night and worships Keśava one will get the benefit of conducting an Aśvamedha yajña. (Śloka 3, Chapter 109, Anuśāsana Parva).

MARĪCA. A Dānava. There is a reference to him in Uttara Rāmāyaṇa.

MĀRĪCA I. The uncle of Rāvaṇa.

1). Birth. On the banks of the river Sarayū, there were two states lying adjacent called Malada and Karūṣa. The great sages conducted Jaladhārā (showering of water) on the head of Indra to absolve him of his sin of killing Vṛtrāsura at this place. At that time Mala (excreta) and Karūṣa (spittings) of Indra fell at those places and so they got the name of Malada and Karūṣa. At that place was born after a few years a demoness named Tāṭakā who had the strength of a thousand elephants. A demon called Sunda married Tāṭakā and she got two sons named Mārīca and Subāhu. (Sarga 24, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa and Bāla Kāṇḍa, Kamba Rāmāyaṇa).

2) Mārīca in his previous birth. Mārīca was the servant of the gate-keepers of Vaikuṇṭha. One day Mahāviṣṇu was displeased by a conduct of his and he cursed him to be born as a demon on earth. But he added that Mārīcawould get salvation from the curse when he was killed by Śrī Rāma in which capacity Viṣṇu would incarnate soon. He would then return to Vaikuṇṭha to his original place. That was how Mārīca was born as the uncle of Rāvaṇa.

3) Āśrama life. Mārīca and Subāhu were two inseparable brothers. They learned all tactics of war and their hobby was to torment the innocent sages of the forests (Sarga 19, Bālakāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa). When the exploits of Mārīca became unbearable, Viśvāmitra brought Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa from Ayodhyā for help. The instant Mārīca heard the fierce twang of Rāma's bow he fled to the other shore of the sea. From that day onwards Mārīca grew matted hair and wore barks of trees and spent his life in an āśrama. (Sargas 35 and 36, Araṇyakāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

4) Death. When Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa were living in the Daṇḍakāraṇya with Sītā they were annoyed by a demoness named Śūrpaṇakhā. In the fight that ensued very many demons were killed. Śūrpaṇakhā complained to Rāvaṇa who decided to kill Rāma and carry away Sītā. For this he sought the help of his uncle Mārīca. Flying in his golden Vimāna and crossing mountains and oceans he approached Mārīca and told him of his plan. Mārīca who was aware of the force of Rāmabāṇa dissuaded Rāvaṇa from such a venture. But Rāvaṇa persisted in his plan and gave Mārīca the following instructions : "Become a golden deer with beautiful white spots all over the body and roam about near the āśrama of Rāma for his wife Sītā to see. I am sure Sītā will request her husband Rāma to catch hold of you. Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa will follow you and Sītā will be left alone. I will then carry away Sītā as Rāhu takes Candrikā (moonlight) and live happily with her. I will be contented if I can then tease Rāma who will be lamenting over his separation from his wife". Thinking that it would be better to die at the hands of Rāma than at the hands of Rāvaṇa, Mārīca agreed to do as his nephew desired.

Rāvaṇa and Mārīca came near the āśrama of Rāma in Rāvaṇa's aerial chariot. Mārīca on alighting from it took the form of a beautiful fawn and entered the precincts of the āśrama. The false fawn was capable of attracting the attention of anybody. It is described thus : "It appeared as a wonder to those who saw it. It was golden in colour with blue horns with white lines on it. The ears were like leaves of blue lotus and the face was of the colour of red lotus. The lips were like sapphire and the body beautifully shaped with sides like yellow flowers. The waist was thin and well-shaped and a rain-bow-coloured tail adorned its back. The whole body was silver-spotted and the deer was a feast for the eyes of anybody."

The deer went and grazed in places where it could be seen by Sītā. It would run away from the āśrama and graze hidden from Sītā but would come back again to the vision of Sītā. It would mix with the deer of the āśrama for some time and run away from them to distant places. Like a butterfly it flitted about always trying to attract the attention of Sītā. Other deer approached it but on getting its scent flew away from it. The false deer suppressing the demon-instinct in him to kill and eat the animals which came near it played well the role of a fawn.

Sītā was enamoured of the deer and expressed to Rāma her desire to get it. Rāma followed it and finding it keeping a distance always got suspicious and shot it down with an arrow. The deer cried "Hā Lakṣmaṇa" and fell down dead. The cry was intended to mislead Lakṣmaṇa and draw him also away from Sītā. (Chapters 43-44, Araṇya Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

MĀRĪCA II. Kaśyapaprajāpati. Marīci was the father of Kaśyapa and so Kaśyapa was known as Mārīca also. (Sarga 46, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

MARĪCI I. A Maharṣi (sage) born from Brahmā's mind.

1) Birth and Genealogy. The six great sages born from Brahmā's mind were :—Marīci, Aṅgiras, Atri, Pulastya, Pulaha and Kratu, according to Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva.

2) Domestic life. Marīci had several wives and children. He married Kalā, the daughter of Kardama Prajāpati by his wife Devahūti. Marīci had two sons Kaśyapa and Pūrṇiman by Kalā. This Kaśyapa was the original ancestor of all living beings. But Pūrṇiman's family did not become well-known. Pūrṇiman had two sons, Virajas and Viśvaga and a daughter Devakulyā. Devakulyā washed the feet of Mahāviṣṇu and merged with Ākāśa Gaṅgā.

Ūrṇā was another wife of Marīci. Six sons were born to Ūrṇā. Under a curse of Brahmā they were born first as the sons of Hiraṇyakaśipu and in their next birth as the sons of Vasudeva and Devakī. It was these six children who were born as Śrī Kṛṣṇa's elder brothers whom Kaṁsa killed immediately after their birth. (See under Kṛṣṇa).

Marīci had another wife named Sambhūti. She gave birth to Paurṇamāsa. In Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part I, Chapter 10, we see that Paurṇamāsa who was a Mahātmā had two sons Virajas and Parvata. Dharmavratā was yet another wife of Marīci. She was a daughter born to Dharmavatī by Dharmadeva.

3) Dharmavratā cursed. Marīci lived happily for long with his wife Dharmavratā. Once he returned from the forest, carrying darbha grass, flowers etc. He was tired after a long walk. After taking food, he wanted his wife to massage his legs. While she was massaging him Marīci fell asleep. Just then Brahmā happened to come there. Dharmavratā was in a fix. She had to attend to her husband and at the same time receive Brahmā with due respect. She could not leave her husband's guru (Sire). It was her duty to honour him properly.

At last she got up and welcomed Brahmā, offering him the customary honours. Meanwhile Marīci woke up and not finding his wife near him cursed her to be turned into a stone. Dharmavratā who was distressed at the curse pleaded innocence and explained to him that she had been honouring his guru. She warned him that he would incur the curse of Śiva.

Under Marīci's curse Dharmavratā was separated from him. She performed penance in the midst of fires. Mahāviṣṇu appeared before her and asked her what boon she wanted. She prayed that her curse might be lifted. Viṣṇu replied :—"It was Marīci who cursed you. That curse cannot be withdrawn. You will be turned into a sacred stone. Your name "Dharmavratā" will be changed into "Devavratā". In future, that stone will become famous under the name "Devavratā" or "Devaśilā". Brahmā, Viṣṇu, Maheśvara and goddesses like Lakṣmī will dwell in that stone."

After saying this, Mahāviṣṇu disappeared. Once Dharmadeva held this Devaśilā above the demon Gaya and the place became famous under the name of "Gayā tīrtha". (See under Gayātīrtha).

4) Other details.

(i) Marīci had participated in the celebration connected with Arjuna's birth. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 52).

(ii) Marīci was a member of Indra's assembly. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 17).

(iii) Marīci attended the celebration connected with Subrahmaṇya's birth. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 10).

(iv) After the Bhārata Yuddha, Marīci visited Bhīṣma who was lying on "Śara Śayyā" (bed of arrows). (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 47, Verse 10).

(v) Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 334, Verse 35, mentions that Marīci is a Prajāpati.

(vi) Marīci is one of the group of sages known as Citraśikhaṇḍins. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 335, Verse 29).

(vii) Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 340, Verse 44, describes Marīci as one of the Aṣṭaprakṛtis.

(viii) Marīci once visited Dhruva who was performing penance and gave him advice. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part I, Chapter 11).

MARĪCI II. A celestial woman. In Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 62 we find that she attended a dance at the celebrations at the time of Arjuna's birth.

MARĪCI III. An author of Dharmaśāstra. His statements are quoted in Aparārkā, Smṛticandrikā, Mitākṣarā and other works.

MĀRIṢĀ I. A nymph created as a maiden of the Flora (See under Kaṇḍu).

MĀRIṢĀ II. A river of Purāṇic fame. (Śloka 36, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

MĀRIṢĀ. A place of habitation of ancient Bhārata. (Śloka 69, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

MĀRJĀRA. Son of Jāmbavān. It is said in Brahmapurāṇa that the mārjāras (cats) have their origin from this son of Jāmbavān.

MARKA. See under the word Śaṇḍāmarka.

MĀRKAṆḌEYA. The son of Mṛkaṇḍu. He was a great devotee of Śiva.

1) Genealogy. Bhṛgu, son of Brahmā, begot of his wife Khyāti a daughter named Lakṣmī and two sons named Dhātā and Vidhātā.

Dhātā and Vidhātā married Āyati and Niyati daughters of Mahāmeru. Dhātā begot of his wife Āyati a son named Prāṇa and Niyati bore Vidhātā a son named Mṛkaṇḍu. Mārkaṇḍeya was the son of Mṛkaṇḍu and Vedaśiras was the son of Mārkaṇḍeya.

2) Birth. Mṛkaṇḍu did not have sons for a long time and so he performed penance for several years to please Śiva to get a son. Śiva appeared before him in person and asked him thus "Do you desire to have a virtuous, wise and pious son who would live up to sixteen years or a dull-witted evil-natured son who would live long ?" Mṛkaṇḍu chose the first type and soon a son was born. He was named Mārkaṇḍeya. Even from boyhood Mārkaṇḍeya knew all the Vedas and śāstras. His pleasing manners got the approval of his teachers and the boy was liked by one and all. But the parents were sad and whenever they looked at their son a gloom spread over their face. The secret of the short span of his life was hidden from him.

The sixteenth year was fast approaching and one day unable to control their grief they wept before him. Mārkaṇḍeya asked them the reason why they wept. Mṛkaṇḍu with tears running down his cheeks told him the story. From that day onwards Mārkaṇḍeya started performing penance wearing barks of trees for his dress and growing matted hair. The boy was soon engrossed in severe austerities.

The day of his death came and the boy sat before the idol of Śiva in deep meditation. The servants of the god of Death could not approach Mārkaṇḍeya for the radiation from him was too hot for them. So Yama, the god of Death, himself came to fetch him. Then Mārkaṇḍeya crying loudly for help embraced the idol before him. Yama threw his rope in a loop and it went and circled round the idol also. Angry Śiva rose from the idol and coming down killed Yama to save the child. From that day onwards Śiva got the names Mṛtyuñjaya and Kālakāla. After that at the request of the devas Śiva gave life to Yama again and made Mārkaṇḍeya to be of sixteen years for ever.

3) Penance of Mārkaṇḍeya. The Purāṇas state that after getting the blessing from Śiva, Mārkaṇḍeya lived for ten crores of years. While he was in deep meditation six Manvantaras passed away. When Mārkaṇḍeya continued his meditation to the seventh Manvantara Indra got frightened and he made an attempt to abort the penance of Mārkaṇḍeya. Indra sent his troops of Gandharvas, nymphs, Manmatha and Vasanta to the āśrama of Mārkaṇḍeya. The āśrama of Mārkaṇḍeya was at a place which was on the northern side of the Himālayas and was famous by the presence there of the river Puṣpabhadrā and the rock Citra. The agents of Indra came there and tried to entice him with many temptations. Beautiful celestial maidens danced around the āśrama. Flowers fell from their hair when their waists shook by the weight of their heavy breasts. Enchanting girls played with balls here and there. As they played the bracelets on their waists fell down and the thin garments that hid their bodies flew up showing an alluring nakedness. Kāma (God of Love) sent his arrows at that time against the sage. But Mārkaṇḍeya sat unconcerned as rigid as a rock and Indra accepted defeat. When Indra and his troops returned disappointed Mahāviṣṇu with many sages went to Mārkaṇḍeya. He awoke from his meditation and worshipped Viṣṇu.

4) Vision of Pralaya. On one evening at dusk Mārkaṇḍeya was sitting at Puṣpabhadrātīra when from somewhere a wind began to blow. The wind increased in strength and the sky became covered with clouds. The place resounded with peals of thunder and soon it began to rain. Rains became heavy. Rivers became flooded and water-level in the oceans rose. Everything around was submerged in water and Mārkaṇḍeya alone stood there with his matted hair swinging in the wind. It was impossible to know the directions and Mārkaṇḍeya started walking. He fell into whirlpools but was the next instant thrown up on to the top of surging waves. Then he saw on the top of a high wave a banyan tree. On a branch on the north-east of the tree he saw an infant lying, devouring the darkness by its effulgence. He was attracted to the infant by its vital force and went inside the infant as it inhaled. Inside the belly of the kid Mārkaṇḍeya had a vision of the entire universe. He saw the sky, the horizon, the stars, the oceans, the mountains expanses of land, Suras, Asuras, forests and all that the universe contained in its proper set-up. He saw passing before his eyes the elements, the Yugas and the Manvantaras. After some time he was thrown out by an exhalation of the infant. He stood on the waters. The old banyan tree was still there. An infant was still lying on a leaf on that tree. Mārkaṇḍeya then knew it was Mahāviṣṇu. He rushed to embrace the child; but the child disappeared before he reached it. Mārkaṇḍeya praised Mahāviṣṇu.

5) Pārvatī and Parameśvara come to Mārkaṇḍeya. When Mahāviṣṇu disappeared from his vision he felt he was sitting at Puṣpabhadrātīra and he again went into meditation. At that time Pārvatī and Parameśvara came that way and appeared before Mārkaṇḍeya. The sage worshipped them and they both blessed Mārkaṇḍeya and said "Every desire of yours will be fulfilled. You will never be rugous or grey-haired and will live virtuous and famous till the end of the world. Omniscience will be an asset for you". After having said so much Pārvatī and Parameśvara disappeared. The Purāṇic belief is that the realised soul of Mārkaṇḍeya is moving about in the universe. (10th Skandha, Chapters 8 to 11, Bhāgavata).

6). Details from Mahābhārata relating to Mārkaṇḍeya.

(i) This sage shone in the court of Dharmaputra. (Śloka 15, Chapter 4, Sabhā Parva).

(ii) He sits in the court of Brahmā and worships him (Śloka 12, Chapter 11, Sabhā Parva).

(iii) Once Mārkaṇḍeya gave Dharmopadeśa to the Pāṇḍavas. (Chapter 25, Vana Parva).

(iv) Mārkaṇḍeya sitting on the banks of the river Payoṣṇī sang praises about river Payoṣṇī and king Nṛga. (Śloka 5, Chapter 88, Vana Parva).

(v) Once Mārkaṇḍeya narrated to Dharmaputra stories about Kings and Ṛṣis. (Chapters 186 to 232, Vana Parva).

(vi) Mārkaṇḍeya had a vision of the great deluge. (Chapter 188, Vana Parva).

(vii) This sage entered the belly of Bālamukunda. (Śloka 100, Chapter 188, Vana Parva).

(viii) Mārkaṇḍeya gave a description of Kaliyuga. (Śloka 7, Chapter 190, Vana Parva).

(ix) He described at another time the incarnation of Kalki. (Śloka 93, Chapter 19, Vana Parva).

(x) Once Mārkaṇḍeya narrated the story of Tripuravadha to Dharmaputra. (Śloka 2, Chapter 33, Karṇa Parva).

(xi) Mārkaṇḍeya was also one among the several sages who visited Bhīṣma lying on his bed of arrows. (Śloka 11, Chapter 47, Śānti Parva).

(xii) Mārkaṇḍeya learnt Sahasranāma (thousand names) of Śiva from Naciketas and taught the same to Upamanyu. (Śloka 79, Chapter 17, Anuśāsana Parva).

(xiii) Once Mārkaṇḍeya discussed with Nārada topics on many different subjects. (Dākṣiṇātya Pāṭha, Chapter 22, Anuśāsana Parva).

(xiv) Once Mārkaṇḍeya explained the evils of taking flesh as food. (Śloka 37, Chapter 115, Anuśāsana Parva).

(xv) The name of the wife of Mārkaṇḍeya was Dhūmorṇā. (Śloka 4, Chapter 146, Anuśāsana Parva).

(xvi) Yudhiṣṭhira worshipped Mārkaṇḍeya also when he worshipped great sages before commencing the Mahāprasthāna. (Śloka 12, Chapter 1, Prasthāna Parva, M.B.).

(xvii) Mahābhārata gives the following synonyms for Mārkaṇḍeya:—Bhārgava, Bhārgavasattama, Bhṛgukulaśārdūla, Bhṛgunandana, Brahmarṣi and Viprarṣi.

MĀRKAṆḌEYA (M). A famous holy place. This place is situated about sixteen miles to the north of Kāśī at a place where the rivers Gaṅgā and Gomatī meet. He who visits this place would get the benefit of doing an Agniṣṭomayajña. Not only that, he would lift the prestige of his family. (Śloka 80, Chapter 34, Vana Parva).

MĀRKAṆḌEYAPURĀṆA. One of the eighteen Purāṇas. The number of granthas in it is ninethousand. It contains a critical study of Dharma and Adharma. It is considered to be very good to give this Purāṇa as gift on the full-moon day in the month of Kārttika (November). (Chapter 272, Agni Purāṇa).

MĀRKAṆḌEYASAMASYĀPARVA. A sub-Parva of the Vana Parva of Mahābhārata. This contains chapters 82 to 242 of Vana Parva.

MARMAN. According to Indian Śāstras there are 108 Marmans in the body of a living being. Of these the most important are forehead, eyes, eye-brows, armpits, shoulders heart, chin etc. Bhaviṣya Purāṇa, Chapter 34 says that a snake-bite or a heavy blow on any one of these marmans would prove fatal.

MĀRTTIKĀVANA (M). An ancient country in Bhārata. During the time of the Pāṇḍavas this country was ruled by King Śalya. (Śloka 14, Chapter 16, Vana Parva). Paraśurāma killed all the Kṣatriyas of this country. (Śloka 12, Chapter 70, Droṇa Parva). Arjuna once made the son of Kṛtavarmā the King of this country. (Śloka 69, Chapter 77, Mausala Parva).

MARU I. A king of the Ikṣvāku dynasty, the father of Prasuśruta and son of Śīghra. He had become "Cirañjīvī" (immortal) by his Yogic power. According to Bhāgavata Purāṇa, all Kṣatriya families would perish in Kaliyuga. At that time, Maru would come back to the world to revive the Kṣatriya race. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

MARU II. A Videha king of the Nimi dynasty. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

MARU III. One of the chief lieutenants of Narakāsura. He was slain by Śrī Kṛṣṇa.

MARUBHŪMI (MARUDHANVA). The ancient name of the present Rājasthān. In Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 32, Verse 5 we see that Nakula had won a victory over Marudhanva during his triumphal march over the western country. Kāmyakavana in which is included Tṛṇabindu sarovara, is in Marudhanva. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 258, Verse 13). Marudhanva was also known as "Mārvāṭa". The sage Uttaṅka lived in Mārvāṭa. In Mahābhārata, Aśvamedha Parva, Chapters 53, 54 and 55 it is stated that once Śrī Kṛṣṇa showed his Viśvarūpa to this sage at Mārvāṭa.

MĀRUDHA. A country of Purāṇic fame. Sahadeva conquered this place while he was on his victory march to the south. (Śloka 14, Chapter 31, Sabhā Parva).

MĀRUTA. The fortynine Vāyus. (For details see under DITI).

MĀRUTA (M). An ancient place of habitation of south Bhārata. Those who stood on the right side of the Krauñcāruṇa Vyūha (a battle array) constructed by Dhṛṣṭadyumna in the Kurukṣetra battle were the people of Māruta from south Bhārata. (Śloka 57, Chapter 50, Bhīṣma Parva).

MĀRUTAGAṆATĪRTHA. (MARUDGAṆATĪRTHA) A sacred place. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 38).

MĀRUTANTAVYA. One of the sons of Viśvāmitra. (Śloka 54, Chapter 4, Anuśāsana Parva).

MĀRUTĀŚANA. A soldier of Subrahmaṇya. (Śloka 62, Chapter 45, Śalya Parva).

MĀRUTASKANDHA. An army of the Devas. The commander of the forces was Subrahmaṇya. (Śloka 55, Chapter 231, Vana Parva).

MARUTS. In the Purāṇas there are references to 49 gods who are known as "Maruts". All of them are the sons of Kaśyapa. The story of how the child in Diti's womb was cut into 49 pieces which became 49 Maruts. is given in Chapter 71 of Vāmana Purāṇa as follows:

Kaśyapa's first wife Aditi became the mother of Devas and his second wife Diti became the mother of Daityas. The chief of the Devas was Indra and the chiefs of Daityas were Hiraṇyākṣa and Hiraṇyakaśipu. At the request of Indra, Hiraṇyākṣa and Hiraṇyakaśipu were slain by Mahāviṣṇu. Diti who was grieved at the death of her sons, approached Kaśyapa and requested him to give her a son who would be strong enough to kill Indra. Kaśyapa told her that if she could perform tapas for 10, 000 Divyavarṣas with due observances, she would get a son who would be able to kill Indra and conquer the three worlds. He gave her a long list of conditions to be observed during the tapas, some of which were as follows :—Do not injure any creature; do not curse; do not tell lies; do not cut nails or hair; do not touch any unclean object; do not get angry, do not speak to wicked people; do not wear soiled clothes; do not wear garlands used by others; do not eat what is left over by another; do not eat meat touched by a Śūdra woman. Putting on clean, white dress, carrying auspicious substances, everyday before breakfast, cows, Brāhmaṇas, goddess Lakṣmī and Kaśyapa himself should be worshipped." This observance is known as "Puṁsavana." He said that if she performed the tapas with this austere observance, a son capable of killing Indra would be born to her.

Diti started the observance as advised by her husband. Kaśyapa left for Udaya mountain. After his departure, Indra came to the Āśrama and pretending friendship offered to serve Diti as an attendant. Diti accepted his offer and allowed him to serve her. One day Diti who was utterly tired fell asleep and Indra took advantage of this opportunity and gained entrance into her womb through her nostrils. He cut the child in Diti's womb with his weapon Vajra into seven pieces. At that time the child cried aloud and Indra said to it "Mā ruda" which means "Do not cry". He cut each of the seven pieces again into seven pieces and thus 49 Maruts were born out of the 49 pieces. Since Indra said "Mā ruda", they came to be known as "Maruts". All these Maruts subsequently became Indra's servants.

After this, Indra with his weapon came out of Diti's body. With joined palms he begged Diti's pardon and explained to her that he destroyed the child in her womb since he was destined to be his (Indra's) enemy.

MARUTTA I. A wealthy king who lived in Kṛtayuga.

1). Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu in the following order :—Brahmā, Marīci, Kaśyapa, Vivasvān, Vaivasvata Manu, Mahābāhu, Prasandhi, Kṣupa, Ikṣvāku, Viṁśa, Kalyāṇa, Khanīnetra, Suvarcas, Karandhama and Marutta.

2) How Marutta got gold. As soon as Marutta became king he began to perform a Yāga. Money was required for it. He was puzzled as to how to raise funds. Besides, Indra was trying to obstruct the Yāga. At last he consulted Nārada who told him that Bṛhaspati's brother Saṁvartaka was performing tapas in the forest and if Marutta approached him, he would give him enough money for this purpose. So Marutta went to Saṁvartaka. He advised Marutta to worship Śiva. Accordingly Marutta went to Kailāsa and got plenty of gold by worshipping Śiva and returned with it and began his Yāga. In spite of their efforts, Indra and other gods were not able to spoil Marutta's Yāga. After the Yāga Marutta stored up the surplus wealth in the neighbourhood of Himālayas where his capital was situated.

After the Bhārata Yuddha, Dharmaputra was in need of money to re-establish his administration and for conducting an Aśvamedha yāga. At that time sage Vyāsa informed him about the gold which Marutta had left in the neighbourhood of the Himālayas. It was by fetching that gold that the Pāṇḍavas conducted their Aśvamedhayāga. (M.B. Aśvamedha Parva, Chapters 3-10).

3) Marutta and Rāvaṇa. Once Rāvaṇa started on a triumphal tour in his Puṣpaka Vimāna with his followers. It was at that time that Marutta was performing his famous Yāga. The various gods were also present on that occasion. Alarmed at the sight of Rāvaṇa who was invincible by virtue of a boon he had received, the gods assumed the shape of different animals and birds. Indra became a peacock, Dharmarāja (Yama) became a crow; Kubera became a chameleon; Varuṇa transformed himself into a swan, and so on. Rāvaṇa entered the precincts of the Yajña and said to Marutta :—"Either you fight with me, or else admit defeat from me." To this Marutta replied calmly :—"May I know who you are?" Rāvaṇa answered with a smile of contempt :— "I am amused at your strange pretence ! Do you mean to say that you do not know Rāvaṇa who is the younger brother of Kubera ? There is no one but you in all the three worlds, who does not know me. I have won the Puṣpakavimāna after defeating my elder brother." Marutta retorted with bitter irony :— "As a younger brother who has defeated his elder brother, you are certainly a great man. There is no praiseworthy hero equal to you in all these three worlds. Do you brag that you have defeated your elder brother ? I do not know whether you have received the boon by your righteous conduct. I have not heard the stories which you have told just now. You wicked fellow, stop there ! I don't think that you will return alive!" Saying this Marutta took his bow and arrows and got ready for a fight.

But Saṁvartaka stopped Marutta saying "O King ! If you would please heed my advice, do not prepare for a fight here. We have started "Maheśvarasatra". If we do not bring it to a conclusion, the whole family will come to an end. One who performs this Yāga should not be engaged in a fight. He should not even become a victim to anger. This Rākṣasa (Rāvaṇa) is invincible. Your victory is doubtful." At this, Marutta put down his bow and began to occupy himself again with the affairs of the Yajña. Just then Śukra shouted, "Rāvaṇa has won." The Rākṣasas and their leader Rāvaṇa continued their tour after eating the Maharṣis who had come to take part in the Yāga. After Rāvaṇa left the place, the Devas resumed their own forms. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

4) Other Details.

(i) Marutta flourished in Yama's assembly. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 16).

(ii) Marutta is considered as one of the "Pañcamahāsamrāṭs" (five great emperors). The five great emperors are—Yuvanāśva, Bhagīratha, Kārtavīrya, Bharata and Marutta. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 15).

(iii) Once Śiva presented him a golden peak of the Himālayas. Indra, Bṛhaspati and other Devas attended Marutta's assembly. His Yajñamaṇḍapas were all golden. His cooks were groups of Maruts. He was able to make all his subjects strong and healthy. In Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 55, we see that Marutta ruled over the country for 1000 years as an ideal emperor.

(iv) Once Marutta received a sword from King Mucukunda. Marutta gave it to Raivata. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter, 166, Verse 77).

(v) Marutta gave his daughter to Aṅgiras and attained Heaven according to Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 234. Verse 18.

(vi) In Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha, we find a passage which says that since Marutta had no sons he had adopted Duṣyanta, a King of the Pūru dynasty, as his son.

MARUTTA II. A great sage. He entered into a dispute with Śrī Kṛṣṇa, who was on his way to Hastināpura as the messenger of the Pāṇḍavas. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 27).

MARUTVĀMALA. In south India, at the southern tip of the Sahya ranges, a mountain reputed for medicinal herbs, may still be seen. This mountain is known by the name "Marutvāmala". A legend connected with the origin of this mountain, is given in Uttara Rāmāyaṇa, as follows:—

It was the time of the battle between Śrī Rāma and Rāvaṇa. Rāvaṇa's younger brother Vibhīṣaṇa joined the side of Rāma and fought against Rāvaṇa. The enraged Rāvaṇa shot his arrow at Vibhīṣaṇa. In his endeavour to save Vibhīṣaṇa, Lakṣmaṇa fell down unconscious. Rāma and his followers discussed how Lakṣmaṇa could be revived. Jāmbavān observed that there was a herb called "Droṇam" in one of the peaks of the Himālayas and if it was brought at once, Lakṣmaṇa could be restored to his senses. Hanūmān flew to the Himālayas immediately. But although he combed the forests there, he was not able to find the herb Droṇam. So he tore away and lifted a whole peak which was full of all kinds of medicinal herbs and returned to Laṅkā. Jāmbavān took the needed herbs from it and deposited the peak at the southern end of India. This is the present Marutvāmala. (Mala means mountain).

MARUTVĀN. See under MARUTVATĪ.

MARUTVATĪ. The mother of two Marutvāns. This Marutvatī was the daughter of Dakṣa, and the wife of Dharma. The ten daughters of Dakṣa, namely, Arundhatī, Vasu, Yāmī, Lambā, Bhānu, Marutvatī, Saṅkalpā, Muhūrtā, Sādhyā, and Viśvā were the wives of Dharmadeva. Viśvadevas were born to Viśvā, Siddhas were born to Sādhyā, Marutvāns were born to Marutvatī, Vasus were born to Vasu, Bhānus were born to Bhānu, Ghoṣa was born to Lambā and Nāgavīthī was born to Yāmī. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part I, Chapter 15).

MARYĀDĀ I. A princess of Vidarbha. She was married by the king named Arvācīna. In Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 18, it is said that a son named Ariha was born to them.

MARYĀDĀ II. A daughter of the king of Videha, Devātithi a king of the Pūru dynasty married her. Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, verse 23 says that a son, Ariha was born to them.

MĀṢA. A measure of weight in ancient Bhārata. (See under Trasareṇu).

MĀSA (S) (MONTHS).

1) General information. It is believed that every where for a year there are twelve months. There are six different kinds of months in force in Bhārata. They are the following :—

	Malayālam	Tamil	Arabic	Sanskrit	English	Suriyāni
1.	Ciṅṅam	Āvaṇi	Muharram	Śrāvaṇa	August	Of
2.	Kanni	Puraṭṭāśi	Safar	Proṣṭhapada	September	Īlūn
3.	Tulām	Aippaśi	Yulavan	Āśvina	October	Taśrīnkadim
4.	Vṛścikam	Kārttikai	Utsani	Kārttika	November	Tesrinhroyi
5.	Dhanu	Mārkali	Jamadul Avval	Mārgaśīrṣa	December	Konūṇkadim
6.	Makaram	Tai	Jamatutsani	Pauṣa	January	Konunhroyi
7.	Kumbham	Māśi	Rajab	Māgha	February	Śībottu
8.	Mīnam	Paṅkuni	Śāvāl	Phālguna	March	Odor
9.	Meḍam	Cittirai	Ramzan	Caitra	April	Nīson
10.	Iḍavam	Vaikāśi	Śavvāl	Vaiśākha	May	Īyor
11.	Mithunam	Āni	Dulhad	Jyeṣṭha	June	Harson
12.	Karkaṭakam	Āṭi	Dulhaj	Āṣāḍha	July	Tommūs

2). What the names of the months indicate.

1). Malayālam months. The months are named based on certain beliefs. It takes twelve months for the earth to go round the Sun once. When the earth passes through the twelve divisions, it faces a separate set of constellataions in the universe in each of these divisions. In the month of Ciṅṅam the earth faces a cluster of constellations in the shape of a lion and so the month is called Siṁha (lion) or Ciṅṅam. In the next division the earth faces the constellations in the shape of a Kanyakā and so the month was called Kanni. The earth faces next the constellations in the shape of a balance and so the month was called Tulām (Tulā = balance). In the next division the earth faces the constellations in the shape of a scorpion and so the month was called Vṛścikam (scorpion). The set of constellations which faces the earth in the next division is shaped like a bow (dhanus) and so the month got the name Dhanu. In the next division the earth faces a set of constellations in the shape of a Makaramatsya (makara-fish) and so the month was called Makaram. Kumbha means a jar and Mīnam means a fish and Meḍam (Meṣa) means a goat and Iḍavam (Ṛṣabha) means an ox. The shapes of the constellations in those divisions are like the things mentioned and the months were so named after them. In the next two divisions the constellations appear as twins and a crab respectively and the months were so called Mithunam (twins) and Karkaṭakam (crab).

2). English months.

i) January has come from the word Janus, the name of a Roman devatā. Janus is twinfaced, one facing the front and the other back.

ii) February means 'to purify' and the festival of purification of the Romans is conducted in that month.

iii) March is Mars, a devatā of War. Rome was built by the brave warrior Romulus. In his time there were only ten months in a year and the number of days in a month varied considerably. There were months with twenty days and thirtyfive days. It was in the year 700 B.C. that the then King of Rome, Numa, divided the year into twelve months and added January and February to it. Till then March was the first month of the year.

iv) April—Aperio means 'blossoming' and since the trees and plants blossom in that month it got the name of April.

v) May is named after Maia daughter of the demigod (devatā) Atlas. There is an opinion that it is named after Maius, another name of Jupiter.

vi) June gets its name after the devatā Juno though there is a version that it is named after a Roman tribe called Junius.

vii) July was formerly known as Quintilis meaning the fifth counting from March which was the first month of the year till the time of Numa. It was to commemorate the name of Julius Caesar that the name was changed to July.

viii) August. This month was formerly known as Sextilis meaning the sixth month. But it was renamed August in honour of Augustus Caesar. But it still lacked the importance of July as it contained thirtyone days and August only thirty days. So Augustus took one day from February and made the number of days in August thirtyone.

ix) September means the seventh month from March.

x) October means the eighth month.

xi) November means the ninth month.

xii) December means the tenth month.

MAŚAKA (M). A place in the ancient island of Śāka. Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 11 says that in ancient times, Kings used to live there for the fulfilment of their desires.

MAŚARŚĀRA. A king of the Ṛgveda period. Ṛgveda, 1st Maṇḍala, 18th Anuvāka, 122nd Sūkta says that this king used to persecute the Aryans.

MĀSAVRATOPAVĀSA. Purāṇas mention about the months in which Vratas are to be observed with efficacy and the details are given below :

(1) He who fasts for half a day in the month of Tulām will get children and vehicles in plenty and would become pure. (Śloka 29, Chapter 106, Anuśāsana Parva).

(2) He who fasts the whole day of the Dvādaśī in Tulām and worships Viṣṇu will get the benefit of making a Sahasragodāna (giving away thousand cows as gift). (Śloka 3, Chapter 106, Anuśāsana Parva).

(3) He who fasts for one time of the day in Vṛścikam will become a very brave and valorous man and acquire many wives and fame. (Śloka 30, Chapter 106, Anuśāsana Parva).

(4) All men and women who worship Viṣṇu on the dvādaśī day in Vṛścikam fasting for the whole day will get the benefit of a Godānayajña. (Śloka 14, Chapter 109, Anuśāsana Parva).

(5) He who fasts for one time a day during the month of Meṣa will get gold, diamonds and pearls in plenty and will be born in a high family in his next birth. (Śloka 23, Chapter 106, Anuśāsana Parva).

(6) If one fasts the whole of the Dvādaśī day in the month of Meṣa one would get the benefit of conducting a Puṇḍarīka. (Śloka 7 Chapter 109, Anuśāsana Parva).

(7) He who fasts for one time in a day in the month of Mithuna will become very prosperous. (Śloka 25, Chapter 106, Anuśāsana Parva).

(8) If one fasts the whole day and night of the Dvādaśī in Mithuna and does Trivikrama pūjā one would not only get the benefit of conducting a Gomedayajña but will be able to enjoy sexual pleasures with celestial maidens. (Śloka 9, Chapter 109, Anuśāsana Parva).

MASĪRAM. A place of habitation in ancient India. There is a reference to this region in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 53.

MATAṄGA I. An ancient sage. The Rāmāyaṇa in Araṇya Kāṇḍa describes the āśrama of Mataṅga. Rāmalakṣmaṇas after crossing the forest of Krauñca came to the āśrama of Mataṅga. Kabandha was slain at this place After abandoning his demoniac body Kabandha extolled the greatness of Mataṅgāśrama to Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa. "The flowers of this āśrama are never plucked and worn on heads. Even if they are not plucked they never fade. They remain fresh always. There is a reason for this. The disciples of Mataṅga once brought a heavy load of fruits for their guru and when they reached the āśrama they were tired and drops of perspiration fell on the plants and they became flowers. Śabarī is performing penance in this aśrama."

Mataṅga once cursed Bāli. It happened that while the sage was living on the mountain of Ṛṣyamūka Bāli and the asura Dundubhi fought against each other and blood flowing from the body of Dundubhi by a blow of Bāli spurted out and fell on the hands of the sage.

Mataṅga then cursed Bāli saying that his head would blow off if he entered Ṛṣyamūkācala again. (Sarga 46, Kiṣkindhā Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa and Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Pūrva Kāṇḍa). Mataṅgāśrama was a holy place. (Chapter 84, Vana Parva).

MATAṄGA II. Another name of Triśaṅku. The name of Mataṅga is used for Rājarṣi Triśaṅku in Verse 31, of Chapter 71, of Ādi Parva. For more detail see under Triśaṅku.

MATAṄGA III. A maharṣi born to a barber of a brahmin woman. This clandestine birth was not known either to the brahmin husband or Mataṅga for a long time. Once his brahmin father sent him to the fields for ploughing. He put a donkey to the yoke and ploughed. When the donkey slowed down its work Mataṅga beat it hard. The mother of the donkey saw it and wept. She called Mataṅga to her side and told him that he was the son of a barber and that was why he behaved like a caṇḍāla showing no kindness towards the animal. Mataṅga ran to his house and told his parents what the mother-donkey said. After that he left his house and did penance to become a brahmin. Indra was pleased and he asked Mataṅga what he wanted and he replied he wanted to become a brahmin. Indra made him a brahmin and sent him back. (Chapter 27, Anuśāsana Parva).

MATAṄGA IV. A preceptor. He was the guru of Śabarī. (Araṇya Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

MĀTAṄGA. Sage Mataṅga was known by this name also. (See under Mataṅga).

MATAṄGAKEDĀRA. A sacred place. He who bathes in a pond there would get the benefit of making a thousand Godānas (Chapter 85, Vana Parva).

MĀTAṄGĪ. The great grandmother of the elephants. Mātaṅgī was the daughter of Krodhavaśā, daughter of Dakṣa and wife of Kaśyapaprajāpati. Mātaṅgī had nine sisters. Elephants were born of Mātaṅgī. (Sarga 14, Araṇya Kāṇḍa; Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

MĀTALI. Charioteer of Indra. Chapter 69 of Vāmana Purāṇa gives the following story about the birth of Mātali.

A child was born to sage Śamīka. It was the time of Devāsura war. A great army of asuras under the leadership of Andhaka attacked Devaloka and conquered it. In the great battle with Andhaka the Vajrāyudha of Indra broke into two. Indra was thinking of a new weapon for him. Mahāviṣṇu then appeared before him and advised him to praise the glory of Agni. Indra did so and then a divine weapon rose from the fire. Indra flew at the asuras carrying the new weapon. There was no clever charioteer to drive the chariot of Indra. Still, seated in the golden chariot given to him by the Vasus Indra drove very swiftly against the asuras. The earth shivered by the din of the chariot-wheels.

When the earth began to quake the sage Śamīka following directions of his wife Tapasvinī placed the child on the ground outside the hermitage. An astrologer had told her that a child would become two if it was placed in an open ground at the time of earth-quake. Tapasvinī wanted one more child. As soon as her child was placed on the ground another child identical in every respect with the first one was born by the side of the other. But the second child, as soon as it was born rose up and ran to Indra for driving his chariot.

When the Gandharvas knew he was coming to help Indra, they showered him with brilliance and the child approaching Indra said "Oh, Lord of the Devas, I shall be your charioteer." Indra asked him, "Child, whose son are you? How will you drive my horse? I doubt your competence." The child replied, "I am the son born to Śamīka on the ground. I have been given power and brilliance by the Gandharvas and so I am capable of driving your chariot." On hearing this, Indra accepted him as his charioteer and named him Mātali.

MĀTARIŚVAN. A devatā (demigod). There are several stories in the Vedas regarding the birth of Agni (fire). Though Agni originating from the clouds reaches the earth as lightning it hides itself making it invisible to man. It was Mātariśvan who took its form from the earth and gave it to the Bhṛgu family and made it possible for them to make it as and when it was required. (Ṛgveda).

This Mātariśvan was one of the prominent sons of Garuḍa. (Śloka 14, Chapter 10, Udyoga Parva).

MATHANA. An asura on the side of Tārakāsura. Mahāviṣṇu killed him. (Chapter 152, Matsya Purāṇa).

MĀṬHARA I. A demigod deputed by Indra to serve Sūrya (Sun). This demigod always sits on the right side of Sūrya, (Brahma Parva, Bhaviṣya Purāṇa).

MĀṬHARA II. One of the Aṣṭādaśavināyakas (Eighteen Vināyakas). (Sāmba, 16).

MĀṬHARA III. An ācārya (teacher). He is believed to be the author of the book Sāṅkhyakārikāvṛtti. (Kauṣītakī Brāhmaṇa).

MĀṬHARAVANA. A holy place in Dakṣiṇa Bhārata. The victory pillar of Māṭharaka, an aide of Sūrya, is situated here. (Śloka 10, Chapter 88, Vana Parva).

MATHURĀ. The birth place of Śrī Kṛṣṇa.

MATI. A daughter of Dakṣaprajāpati. She became the wife of Dharmarāja. (Śloka 15, Chapter 66, Ādi Parva).

MATINĀRA. A King of Puruvaṁśa. The line from Pūru is as follows: Pūru - Janamejaya-Prācinvān-Manasyu-Vītabhaya - Śuṇḍu - Bahuvidha - Saṁyāti-Rahovādī-Bhadrāśva-Ṛkṣeyu-Kṛṣeyu-Sannateyu-Ghṛteyu - Sthaṇḍileyu-Dharmeyu-Saṁvidheyu-Kṛteyu-Matināra. Matināra got two sons, Santurodha and Pratiratha. Duṣyanta, husband of Śakuntalā, was the son of Śanturodha. (Chapter 278, Ādi Parva).

MATKULIKĀ. A follower of Subrahmaṇya. (Śloka 19, Chapter 467, Śalya Parva).

MĀTṚTĪRTHA. A sacred place situated on the outskirts of Kurukṣetra. If one bathes in a holy pond there one would be rich in children. (Śloka 58, Chapter 83, Vana Parva).

MATSYA I. The first and foremost incarnation of Mahāviṣṇu. (See under Avatāra).

MATSYA II. An ancient country of Purāṇic fame. The people of this country are called Matsyas. The details available regarding Matsyadeśa from the Mahābhārata are given below:

(1) The Pāṇḍavas wandering through the forests came to Matsyadeśa. (Śloka 2, Chapter 155, Ādi Parva).

(2) The people of Matsyadeśa in fear of Jarāsandha migrated from the north to the south. (Śloka 28, Chapter 14, Sabhā Parva).

(3) Bhīmasena during his victory march to the east conquered this country. (Śloka 8, Chapter 30, Sabhā Parva).
(4) Sahadeva during his victory march to the south conquered the people of Matsyadeśa. (Śloka 4, Chapter 31, Sabhā Parva).
(5) Matsyadeśa was one of the countries suggested by Arjuna to spend their life incognito. (Śloka 12, Chapter 1, Virāṭa Parva).
(6) Virāṭa was the chief of Matsyadeśa during the time of Mahābhārata. (Śloka 17, Chapter 1, Virāṭa Parva).
(7) In the Kurukṣetra battle Virāṭa, King of Matsyadeśa, came to the help of Yudhiṣṭhira with an Akṣauhiṇī (army). (Śloka 12, Chapter 18, Udyoga Parva).
(8) The Pāṇḍavas spent a year of their life incognito at the palace of Virāṭa king of Matsyadeśa. (Chapter 7, Virāṭa Parva).
(9) Matsyarājya was one of the prominent kingdoms of ancient Bhārata. (Śloka 40, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).
(10) Bhīṣma slaughtered many soldiers from Matsyadeśa.
(11) Droṇācārya killed at a stretch five hundred Matsyas in the great battle. (Śloka 31 Chapter 190, Droṇa Parva).
(12) Karṇa once conquered Matsyadeśa. (Śloka 18, Chapter 8, Karṇa Parva).
(13) The people of Matsyadeśa were honest and charitable. (Chapter 45, Śloka 28, Karṇa Parva).
(14) Those who were left out among the Matsyas in the great battle were killed by Aśvatthāmā. (Śloka 158, Chapter 8, Sauptika Parva).

MATSYA III. A King. He was the brother of Satyavatī, mother of Vyāsa. Satyavatī and Matsya were both found in a fish by the same fisherman. (See under Adri.)

MATSYAGANDHĪ (MATSYAGANDHĀ). Another name for Satyavatī, mother of Vyāsa. (See under Satyavatī).

MATSYAKĀLA. A King of Pūruvaṁśa. He was one of the seven celebrated Kings known as Girikāputras. The others were : Bṛhadratha, Kuśa, Yadu, Pratyagra, Bala and Vīra. The seven sons were born to Girikā of her attendants. (Chapter 278, Agni Purāṇa).

MATSYAPURĀṆA. One of the eighteen Purāṇas. This Purāṇa was told to Manu Satyavrata by Mahāviṣṇu during his incarnation as Matsyu. There are thirteen thousand ślokas in it. For prosperity this Purāṇa should be given as gift on the Viṣuvat day along with a golden image of Matsya. (Chapters 2 and 272, Agni Purāṇa).

MATSYODARĪ. Another name for Satyavatī, mother of Vyāsa. (See under Satyavatī).

MATTA. A demon. He was born to the demon Mālyavān of his wife Sundarī. Matta had six brothers named Vajramuṣṭi, Virūpākṣa, Durmukha, Suptaghna, Yajñakośa and Unmatta. This Matta was killed in the Rāma-Rāvaṇa battle. (Chapter 10, Agni Purāṇa).

MATTAMAYŪRA(S). A special tribe of Kṣatriyas. Nakula, one of the Pāṇḍavas, defeated these people during his victory march to the west. (Śloka 5, Chapter 32, Sabhā Parva).

MAUDGALYA (MAUDGALA). A maharṣi. This maharṣi once cursed Rāvaṇa.
Once Maudgalya was sitting in Svastikāsana resting his shoulders on his yogic staff in the forest of Kadamba. Rāvaṇa returning after his victory march came that way. Seeing the sage sitting in a wonderfully queer posture Rāvaṇa was amused and playfully tapped the staff with his Candrahāsa. The staff broke into two and Maudgalya fell flat on the ground breaking his spine. The sage was furious and he cursed Rāvaṇa saying that his Candrahāsa would thenceforth have no effect at all. (Yuddha Kāṇḍa, Kamba Rāmāyaṇa).

MAUHŪRTTIKĀGATI. When the Sun passes through the centre of Puṣkaradvīpa it covers a path equivalent to a thirtieth part of the earth and this journey of the Sun is called Mauhūrttikāgati. (See under Sūrya).

MAUÑJĀYANA. A maharṣi. This sage shone in the court of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Śloka 13, Chapter 4, Sabhā Parva).

MAURAVAPĀŚA. See under Mura.

MAURVĪ. A kind of grass. It is with this grass that ascetics make mekhalā (waistlet). (Śloka 33, Chapter 17, Droṇa Parva).

MAUSALAPARVA. A Parva of Mahābhārata. This Parva contains the story of the end of the Yādavas by killing each other.

MĀVELLA. The fourth son of Uparicaravasu. Māvella attended the Rājasūya of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Chapter 63, Ādi Parva and Chapter 34, Sabhā Parva).

MĀVELLAKA. An ancient place of habitation in India. Suśarmā, King of Trigarta, fought against Arjuna taking along with him the warriors of Māvellaka. Arjuna killed them all. (Śloka 20, Chapter 17, Droṇa Parva).

MAYA. A Dānava king who served Devas and Asuras as their architect and builder.
1) General. Kaśyapa Prajāpati, son of Marīci and grandson of Brahmā married the thirteen daughters of Dakṣa. Among them, the first was Aditi, the second was Diti and the third was Danu. Ādityas were born to Aditi, Daityas were born to Diti and Dānavas were born to Danu. The chief among the sons of Danu was Maya.
Maya was found to be very proficient in the art of architecture even from his boyhood. He worshipped Brahmā in the Himālayas to gain unrivalled skill in architecture. Brahmā was pleased and appeared before him. He blessed Maya to become the unequalled architect of the Devas. Asuras and Dānavas. After that Maya was engaged in building magnificent mansions for Devas and Asuras. He was also anointed King of the Dānavas.
It was a period of friendly co-operation and brotherly relations between Devas and Asuras. Once there was a dancing show in Devaloka. Maya was also invited to see the performance of the women of Devaloka. All the dancers acquitted themselves creditably. But what attracted Maya most, was the dance of Hemā, the Apsarā woman. Maya and Hemā were mutually attracted and fell in love with each other. The Devas who came to know of this, gave Hemā in marriage to Maya. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).
2) Domestic life. Maya and Hemā went to the valley south of Himavān and built there a city named "Hemapura". While leading a happy life there, two sons, Māyāvī and Dundubhi were born to them. But they had no daughter. So they worshipped Śiva, praying for a daughter.
At about that time, one day, an Apsarā woman, Madhurā, after observing Somavāra Vrata, came to Śiva and did obeisance to him. Pārvatī was not at home at the moment. Fascinated by Madhurā's charm, Śiva embraced her. Pārvatī who came to know of it, cursed Madhurā and turned her into a frog. But she said that after twelve years, the curse would be lifted and she would become a woman again. It was in a well near the place where Maya and Hemā were performing tapas that Madhurā fell as frog. After twelve years, the frog recovered her former shape as a woman. At that time Maya saw her, and taking her to be the daughter given to him by Śiva, took her with him to his palace. He gave her the name "Mandodarī". It was this "Mandodarī" whom Rāvaṇa married later.

Besides these three children, Maya had some other sons and daughters. In Devī Bhāgavata, 8th Skandha there is a reference to the Dānava named Bala, the son of Maya, living in Atala, a section of Pātāla. In Kathā saritsāgara, Madanamañcukālambaka, 3rd Taraṅga we find that Maya had two daughters named Svayamprabhā and Somaprabhā. Of them, Somaprabhā was married by Nalakūbara, the son of Vaiśravaṇa.

3) Alliance with Arjuna and construction of Indraprastha. Once Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna offered Khāṇḍavavana to Agnideva as a feast. (See under the word "Khāṇḍavadāha"). While Agni was furiously feeding upon the forests, the human and animal inhabitants in it began to flee from it. Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna shot them down with arrows. At that time Maya was hiding himself in the disguise of Takṣaka. When the flames of fire approached that place Maya left his shelter and rushed out. Śrī Kṛṣṇa aimed his weapon Cakra at him. Crying aloud with fear, Maya ran to Arjuna praying for protection. Arjuna stopped Agnideva and Śrī Kṛṣṇa and thus saved Maya. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 240).

From that time, Maya became a loyal follower of Arjuna. After Khāṇḍavadāha, Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna were taking rest when Maya approached them with joined palms and asked Arjuna what he should do in return for saving him from the fury of Kṛṣṇa and the blazing fire. Arjuna replied that he expected no return from Maya for saving his life but wanted only his friendship. Maya was not satisfied. He insisted that Arjuna should accept some service from him as a token of his deep gratitude. On hearing this, Śrī Kṛṣṇa suggested that Maya should build a beautiful palace for the Pāṇḍavas. Accordingly he built a magnificent palace for the Pāṇḍavas at the place called Khāṇḍavaprastha. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 1).

4) Maya settled down in Vindhya. Once Maya sought shelter from Mahāviṣṇu. Viṣṇu offered shelter to Maya and so he built a mansion called "Sudharmā" for all the Devas. It was a building of inexpressible beauty and rare architectural workmanship. The Asuras who became angry with Maya for his allianee with the Devas made preparations to attack him. Alarmed at it, Maya fled southwards with his family and reached Vindhya. There he built a lovely mansion and settled down in it. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Madanamañcukālambaka, 3rd Taraṅga).

In Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Kiṣkindhā kāṇḍa, 50th sarga also there is a reference to this wonderful mansion which Maya built on the Vindhya mountain. In their search for Sītā, Hanūmān and the other monkeys reached the Vindhya mountain. There they combed the forests and caves to find out Sītā. When they came to the peak to the south west of the mountain, they saw a huge dark cave. They entered it and cautiously moved forward. After a long and tedious walk the monkeys were exhausted with hunger and thirst. When they proceeded a little further, they came across a bright place. There they saw a woman sitting alone, dressed in deer skin and barks of trees. She greeted them and in the course of her talk with the monkeys she told them that the cave was made by the magician Maya and that her name was Svayamprabhā. Her mother was Merusāvarṇī and that she (Svayamprabhā) was entrusted with the task guarding the wonderful mansion. Then she gave them fruits and fresh water.

5) Building of Tripuras. It was Maya who built three magic dwellings for the three Dānavas, Kamalākṣa, Tārakākṣa and Vidyunmālī. (For details see under the word Pura).

6) Other details.

(i) Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 227, Verse 41 says that Namuci the Dānava was the broth.r of Maya.

(ii) Maya had two sons named Sunītha and Sudaṇḍika They became human beings under a curse. (For details see under the word Sūryaprabhā).

(iii) In Kathāsaritsāgara Madanamañcukālambaka, 8th Taraṅga we see that Maya was an incarnation of Viśvakarmā.

(iv) At the time when Mahāviṣṇu as Vāmana took the three worlds from Mahābali, Maya joined with other Dānavas and fought against Vāmana. (M.B. Bhaviṣya Parva, Chapter 55).

(v) Once Maya was relaxing with his friends on the Malaya mountain. Knowing about it Maheśvara sent Indra to that mountain. Indra challenged the Dānavas for a fight. In the battle that followed, Indra killed the Dānava named Pāka. Thus he got the name, "Pākaśāsana". Indra killed Pura, the son of Mahābali also in that battle and so came to be known as "Purandara" The remaining Dānavas under the leadership of Maya fled to Pātāla. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 71).

MĀYĀ.

1) General information. A consort of Mahāviṣṇu, Māyā has got a very prominent place in Hindu Purāṇas. The Purāṇas state that this whole universe is unreal, illusory and if we feel it real it is because of the working of this Māyā.

2) Birth. How was Māyā born? Agni Purāṇa in its twentieth chapter gives a genealogy of Māyā. Hiṁsā (injury) is the wife of Adharma (evil). They got two children named Anṛta (falsehood) and Nikṛti (wickedness). From them were born Bhaya (fear), Naraka (hell) Māyā (illusion) and Vedanā (pain). Māyā in turn gave birth to Death, the destroyer of all pain produced from Hate or Misery. Mṛtyu (death) produced Vyādhi (disease), Jarā (rugosity), Śoka (sorrow), Tṛṣṇā (desire) and Krodha (anger).

3) Exhibition of Māyā. Mahāviṣṇu once told Nārada thus: "There is nothing like living beings on earth. All is an illusion due to Māyā." Nārada requested Mahāviṣṇu to show him that and Viṣṇu took Nārada to the banks of a river and exhibited the wonderful working of Māyā. (For details see under Tāladhvaja I).

4) How Gāthi, a brahmin, saw Māyā. In the country of Kosala there was once a brahmin named Gāthi. He went to the forests and standing there in water in a pond, immersed up to his neck, started doing penance. For eight months he did penance thus and then Mahāviṣṇu appeared before him and asked him what boon he wanted. The brahmin said he wanted to see Māyādevī. Viṣṇu granted the boon and disappeared.

Several years passed after that and nothing happened. One day the brahmin as usual went to bathe in a pond. When he took a dip in the waters he forgot all his prayers and mantras. There was a change of mind. He felt he was lying dead in his house. Relatives were sitting around weeping. His wife was in tears and was holding his legs. In an atmosphere of mourning, his own people weeping bitterly carried his body to a frightening burial ground and put it on a funeral pyre. It was burnt to ashes. He then felt himself in the womb af a Caṇḍāla woman living in a village near Hūṇamaṇḍala. The foetus developed and a black boy was born. The boy grew passing the stages of infancy, childhood and boyhood and became a man, black and stout. He started enjoying sexual life with a beautiful caṇḍāla girl. The amorous plays were done on leaf-beds, in creeper-huts, bushes and in caves and soon many evil-natured sons were born to him. Gradually his health faded and he constructed a hermitage and lived there as a hermit. His children grew up and he became old and then all on a sudden all his children and wife and other members of his family died and he was left alone. He then left the place and travelling much reached the capital city of Kīramaṇḍala. The city gates were decorated and inside people stood in groups. The road to the palace from the gate had been beautified and as he reached the palace gates he saw an elephant as big and black as mountain standing there well caparisoned. It was customary in those days to post an elephant well bedecked before the palace gates when a King died. The elephant he saw was one who had been let loose to select a new King in the place of the one who had just died. The elephant on seeing him took him by its trunk and placed him on its back. The people when they saw it shouted "The King", "The King". Drums were beaten and people shouted with joy. He was taken to the palace where he was received by young and beautiful girls. He was dressed in royal robes and he took over the administration of the state. Gradually he accepted as his wives the wives of the former King and lived there accepting the name of Gālava. He ruled the state to the satisfaction of all for eight years. One day the King went out for a stroll dressed as an ordinary man. Just outside the gate of the palace a set of Caṇḍālas were sitting singing songs to the accompaniment of a violin. As soon as they saw Gālava one of the Caṇḍālas, a red-eyed old man, got up from the group and addressing the King as "Hi, Kalañju" shouted loudly, "Friend, where had you been all this time ? It is a long time since we saw you. It is our luck we saw you at least now". The King of Kīra did not like the words of the Caṇḍāla and he rebuked the old man. The queens and others standing on the terrace of the palace could see this scene. They were shocked. They regretted they had all along been serving a Caṇḍāla. The news spread like wild fire in the state. The King had to live in the palace without the help and co-operation of anybody inside or outside the palace.

People wanted to atone for the crime they had committed in installing a Caṇḍāla as their King. They made small firepits throughout the country and started committing suicide by jumping into it. The King lamented that such a mass suicide was due to him and he also made a fire-pit and jumped into it.

The heat of the fire-pit woke him from his day-dream and Gāthi found himself in the pond where he had come to bathe. "What! Who am I? What all roles did I take just now?" These puzzling thoughts filled him and he went back to the āśrama and started life as usual. One day an old friend of his came to the āśrama and after the daily routine they lay down to sleep. During their conversation Gāthī asked his friend why he had become fleshless and so lean. Then his friend narrated a story exactly similar to the experiences which Gāthi had in the country of Kīra. He added that to atone for the sin of his association with the Caṇḍālas he was conducting Prayāgasnāna (bath in Prayāga), Japa and Cāndrāyaṇamahāvrata. All those things he explained, made him lean.

Gāthi knew that the story of the guest related to him and he was eager to visit the country of Kīra. When he went to Kīra he saw everything there in the same way as in his dream. Then he realised that it was an exhibition by Viṣṇu of the working of Māyā. Gāthi then renounced everything and went into a cave and started doing penance there. After some years Mahā Viṣṇu appeared before him and blessed him. (Jñānavāsiṣṭha).

MĀYĀDARŚANAPARVA. A subdivision of Ādi Parva, in Mahābhārata. Chapters 227 to 233 of Ādi Parva, are included.

MĀYĀDHARA. An asura. Indra got down Purūravas to fight against this demon who was always giving trouble to the devas. Purūravas killed Māyādhara in a battle. The day the demon was killed Indra gave a banquet in honour of Purūravas. After the banquet there was a dance performance by Rambhā and as she was dancing before Ācārya Tumburu, Purūravas openly criticised Rambhā for the mistake in dancing she committed then. Tumburu did not relish it and he cursed Purūravas saying that Purūravas would bear a separation from his wife Urvaśī. It was because of this curse that Urvaśī was once carried away from the palace of Purūravas by the Gandharvas. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Taraṅga 3, Lāvāṇakalambaka).

MĀYĀMṚGA. Mārīca, uncle of Rāvaṇa, took the form of a beautiful deer to tempt Sītā and went to the āśrama where Sītā was staying. This deer is called Māyāmṛga. (See under MĀRĪCA).

MĀYĀPURĪ. A city of the asuras. (See under Krauñca).

MĀYĀSĪTĀ. When Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa were in exile in the forests with Sītā, Rāvaṇa came to carry away Sītā. At that time the real Sītā disappeared in Agni and in her place a false Sītā was installed. It was this phantom Sītā who was carried away by Rāvaṇa and who lived in Laṅkā till the time of Rāvaṇa's death. It was this Māyāsītā whom Rāma asked to jump into the fire to test her purity. At that time Māyāsītā disappeared and the real Sītā came out from the fire. (See under SĪTĀ).

MĀYĀŚIVA. Padma Purāṇa gives a story of how once an asura named Jalandhara approached Pārvatī as Śiva to induce her to surrender to his desires. This Śiva was called Māyāśiva.

A great battle between the devas and asuras was going on. The asuras were winning and the devas got frightened at the strength of the asuras and so Śiva himself entered the battlefield. Jalandhara who led the army of the asuras found the fight against Śiva very tough and smelt defeat. He decided to cheat Pārvatī, the consort of Śiva, to compensate for his defeat in the battle-field and so making an asura named Śumbha as the chief, he left for Kailāsa. Śumbha became a māyā Jalandhara and continued the fight.

Taking another asura named Durvāraṇa, Jalandhara went to a cave in Kailāsa and there changed himself into an exact replica of Śiva. He made Durvāraṇa look like Nandikeśa.

Then they went to the top of the mountain where Pārvatī and her companions were staying. Śiva approached Pārvatī on the shoulders of Nandikeśa with wounds all over his body and blood oozing from them. Pārvatī seeing Śiva thus, with tears rolling down her cheeks asked him, "Oh, Lord of the gods what happened to your lordship ? Who defeated you in the battle ? Why do you weep like a low-bred man ?" Māyāśiva took from his body all his ornaments like Vāsuki and gave them to the companions of Pārvatī. When Pārvatī saw the heads of Gaṇapati and Subrahmaṇya in the hands of her husband she cried in bitterness. Śiva told her that all his pārṣadas like Maṇibhadra, Vīrabhadra, Puṣpadanta, Damana, Dhūmatāmra and Kūṣmāṇḍa were killed in the battle. Caṇḍī, Bhṛṅgī, Kirīṭī, Mahākāla, Śṛṅkhalī, Caṇḍīśa and Guptanetra were all killed. Māyāśiva told her that he had picked up the heads of Gaṇapati and Subrahmaṇya found lying in the battlefield. He requested Pārvatī to console him by embracing him. Pārvatī resented the request. She said, "What you say is unfit for the situation. Sexual enjoyment is forbidden in times of misery, fear, meditation, vomiting fever, performing offering to the manes, journey, royal visits, marriage festivities and in the presence of elders and teachers. Why do you make this request to me when I am mourning the death of my sons ?

Pretending to be grief-stricken Māyāśiva said "She who does not give sexual pleasure to a man in distress would go to hell. I have no pārṣadas now. I have lost my sons also. I lost my house. Now you also hate me. I am going to my cave. Let me end my life there. Come on, Nandikeśa, Vajra, we will go.

Hearing this Pārvatī went near him.

At this time there happened a few bad omens in the ocean of milk where Viṣṇu was residing, and calling Garuḍa to his side Viṣṇu asked him to go and enquire about the battle that was going on between the devas and asuras. To prevent him from being deceived by the magic of the asuras Viṣṇu dropped into the mouth of Garuḍa a pill of great potency. Garuḍa reached the battlefield very soon but could not find anything out of the way and so flew to Kailāsa. He did not see Pārvatī first but hearing a noise from somewhere else peeped in and saw Māyāśiva. Garuḍa could understand him because of the power of the pill and so flew swiftly back to Mahāviṣṇu and told him what he saw.

Mahāviṣṇu knew that Pārvatī had been deceived by Jalandhara. So he decided to cheat Vṛndā, wife of Jalandhara. Mahāviṣṇu filled with amorous desires, avoiding Mahālakṣmī, covering his head with a yellow scarf and taking the figure of another person by his yogic powers stepped out of his abode taking Ananta for his company. He went to Durgākānana the abode of Vṛndā. They constructed an āśrama there and the wild animals like the lion, tiger, boar, bear and monkey became their disciples taking human form. Then Viṣṇu created mental agony in Vṛndā to attract her to his āśrama. Vṛndā started getting hot and her maids fanned her continuously and anointed her with sandalwood paste. She thought of her husband in the battlefield and often fainted. She had a very bad dream. She saw her husband Jalandhara lying wounded on his head, ears and nose, with his body smeared with ashes and his eyes pecked by vultures. She saw Kālī, with her hair lying lose, her face reddened with blood, with a skull in her hand dancing before the body of her husband before starting to eat it. At this moment she was awakened by the music of the Māgadhas and loud chanting of family praises by Kimpuruṣas. She at once stopped the music and prayers and paid them off. Then she sent word for pandits to explain the dream she saw. The Pandits said "Devī, this appears to be a dream giving unimaginable fear. To calm the fear give as gifts to brahmins, diamonds, garments, cows and elephants." Then the brahmin pandits sprinkled on her, water made potent by mantras. There was no waning of the fever. Dismissing the pandits, queen Vṛndā went and sat alone upstairs. She felt the whole palace burning and by the craft employed by Viṣṇu she found living inside the palace unbearable.

She got out of the palace and boarding a chariot drawn by mares she went to her play-garden. The sight of the garden filled with beautiful flowers and celestial maidens where no one else but pleasing breeze could enter made her remember her husband. She then brooded on how to find out Jalandhara, and there also she did not get peace of mind. So she accompanied by her maids started for another garden. That garden gave a ghastly sight with huge trees standing crowded interspersed with black rocks and the place resounding with the roars of lions and tigers. Vṛndā got frightened and she hastened to say "Smaradūtī, I feel frightened. Please drive back the chariot home."

Hearing this Smaradūtī said, "Oh, Devī, I do not know the place. I do not understand the directions also. To which direction am I to drive ? The horses look tired. There is no way here. Anyhow let it go as directed by God. If we stay here we will be eaten by man-eaters." So saying the maid drove the chariot and soon they reached a forest more grisly than the former. It was a forest where great yogins lived. There was no light there neither water nor wind. No sound came. Even the sounds of the bells on the horses and the chariot stopped. Vṛndā moaned, "Where are we to go now, maid ! There is no peace of mind for me anywhere in this world."

Smaradūtī looking ahead cried, "Look Devī, there is a great black mountain in front of us. The horses refuse to move, for they are afraid of it."

Cold with fear the queen stood up from the chariot and keeping her hands on the pearl necklace on her breast jumped out of the chariot. Then a very fierce demon came towards them. He was yellow in colour with three legs, five hands, seven eyes and ears like a tiger's and the shoulders and chin like those of a lion. It was a horrible sight and Vṛndā hid her eyes with her hands and trembled like a plantain leaf. The maid jumping out of the chariot cried aloud "Oh, my queen, help me. This demon is going to eat me." The demon approaching them took the chariot with the horses and whirled it round in the air. Both the queen and the maid fainted at this exhibition of strength. The demon ate all the horses and then catching hold of the hands of the queen he roared, "If you want your life make me your husband. Your husband has been killed by Śiva in the battle. If you join me you can live for years together without fear. Come on, drink this sweet liquor with flesh". Vṛndā became half dead when she heard that.

At that time Mahāviṣṇu in the guise of an ascetic wearing barks of trees and matted hair appeared before them. An angered look form Viṣṇu sent the demon away from the place. Vṛndā took refuge in the ascetic and the false ascetic said, "I am Devaśarmā, son of Bharadvāja. Renouncing all worldly pleasures I have come here to do penance and if it pleases you, you can come and stay in my āśrama and do penance. We can go to another forest far away from here." As soon as they reached the āśrama Mahāviṣṇu appeared before her in the figure of Jalandhara. They embraced each other and lived there joyfully for many days. One day at the end of a sexual act Vṛndā saw instead of Jalandhara the ascetic in embrace with her. She was shocked and stood up separated from him. Then Mahāviṣṇu said "Vṛndā, I am Viṣṇu husband of Lakṣmī. Your husband has gone to conquer Śiva and get Pārvatī for himself. I am Śiva also. We appear separate. Your husband Jalandhara has been killed in the battle. Join with me."

Vṛndā got angry. She cursed Viṣṇu ; she said, "You cheated me by pretendiug to be an ascetic. Let your wife also be once cheated by a false ascetic." The cursed Viṣṇu disappeared and Vṛndā started penance. Many Gandharva ladies came with temptations to dissuade Vṛndā from continuing the penance. But all such attempts failed and Vṛndā ended her life doing penance. The nymphs showered flowers on her from above and the dead body of Vṛndā was cremated by Smaradūtī and Smaradūtī jumped into the funeral pyre of Vṛndā and gave away her life. The nymphs made an image of her with the ashes from the funeral pyre and floated it on the river Gaṅgā.

Pārvatī did not consent to having any sexual enjoyment with Māyāśiva and she escaped from the place and went to Ākāśagaṅgā and started doing penance there. One day Pārvatī called her maid Jayā to her side and said "Jayā you go in my dress to Śiva and find out whether he is really Śiva or not. If he kisses you and embraces you he will surely be a dānava come in disguise by his Māyā. But if he asks you about my welfare he will be real Śiva. Go and tell me what happens."

Jayā went to Māyāśiva. Jalandhara when he saw her mistook her for Pārvatī and caught hold of her and immediately semen flowed out from him. Jayā returned and told Pārvatī that it was Jalandhara and not Śiva. Pārvatī afraid of Jalandhara hid in a lotus and her companions became beetles sitting on the lotus. In the meantime the guards of the palace finding the queen absent from the palace reported the matter to Śumbha fighting against Śiva. He sent Caṇḍamuṇḍas to Jalandhara to inform him of the situation. Jalandhara came back to the battle-field running and took up the fight against Śiva again.

MĀYĀSURA. An asura. He had a daughter named Somaprabhā. (Kathāsaritsāgara).

MĀYĀVASIṢṬHA. There was once a King called Mitrasaha among the Kings of the Solar dynasty who ruled Ayodhyā. One day while he was hunting he saw two demons roaming about as tigers and Mitrasaha killed one of them. The other demon waited for an opportunity to wreak vengeance and an opportunity presented itself. Mitrasaha was conducting an Aśvamedha yāga to which Vasiṣṭha was the chief priest. The demon went to the King as Vasiṣṭha and privately told him that he desired to eat meat and the King accordingly prepared meat which was greatly resented by the real Vasiṣṭha and the sage cursed Mitrasaha to become a demon. The false Vasiṣṭha who played the trick on the King is called Māyāvasiṣṭha. (See for details under Kalmāṣapāda).

MĀYĀVATĪ. An incarnation of Ratidevī. An asura named Śambara made her his wife. But Pradyumna, son of Kṛṣṇa, carried her away to Dvārakā. (See under Pradyumna).

MĀYĀVĪ. An asura.

1) Birth. Māyāvī was born to the great architect of the Dānavas, Maya, of his wife Hemā, a nymph. Maya fell in love with Hemā when he once found her dancing in Devaloka and the devas coming to know of it gave her in marriage to Maya. Maya took Hemā to the southern side of the Himālayas and constructing a city there called Hemapura stayed there happily. They got two sons named Māyāvī and Dundubhi. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

2) Death. Valorous Māyāvī fought against anybody and everybody. He once challenged Bāli to a fight. But the mighty blows of Bāli were unbearable to him and the defeated Māyāvī ran away from Bāli and hid himself in a big cave. Bāli followed him and when he reached the mouth of the cave he posted his brother Sugrīva there with instructions to shut tight the opening of the cave in case he died in the cave in the fight. He said that if blood flowed from the cave the dead person was Māyāvī and if milk flowed from the cave the dead person was himself. In the cave a great fight ensued in which Māyāvī was killed. But Māyāvī by his powers of magic made the blood that flowed out look like milk for Sugrīva and the latter thinking that it was his brother who was killed shut tight the mouth of the cave and went his way. (Sarga 9, Kiṣkindhā Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa and Pūrva Kāṇḍa, Kamba Rāmāyaṇa .

MAYIL (PEACOCK). In Uttara Rāmāyaṇa there is a story about how the peacock got its beauty. Mayil in Malayālam means peacock.

Once Rāvaṇa set out in his Puṣpaka Vimāna with his army of Rākṣasas, determined to gain victory over all Kings. They got down on the mountain called Uśīravīra. Rāvaṇa examined the valley to see whether there were any Kings doing tapas anywhere there. A King named Marutta was performing a yāga called "Māheśvara" in an āśrama. Indra and other gods were also present to receive the share of offerings (Havirbhāga). At the sight of Rāvaṇa, the gods took different disguises and fled in panic. At that time Indra assumed the form of a big peacock. As soon as Rāvaṇa left the place, the gods reassembled there. From that time, Indra who put on the disguise of a peacock felt a special attachment to that bird. He called the peacock and said:—"Till now you were blue in colour. But from today onwards, your feathers will have various colours. All my thousand eyes

I transfer to you. Besides, you will be immune from all diseases. Whoever kills you, will meet with death, soon after. You will dance at the commencement of the rainy season. People will greet you with enthusiasm."

It is because of Indra's blessing that Peacocks are so beautiful in appearance and dance at the onset of the rainy season.

MAYŪRA. An asura who fought against Subrahmaṇya. Skanda Purāṇa, Vīramahendra Kāṇḍa describes the terrible battle between Mayūra and Subrahmaṇya. Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 65 says that after death, Mayūra was reborn in the world as a King named Viśva.

MAYŪRADHVAJA. A King of Ratnanagara. After performing seven Aśvamedha yāgas this King started another Aśvamedha in the Narmadā river valley. The task of protecting the sacrificial horse was undertaken by the King's son Sucitra or Tāmradhvaja. He set out for the conquest of the world with the chief minister Bahudhvaja. On his return, he came across Yudhiṣṭhira's Aśvamedha horse at the city of Maṇipur. The heroic Sucitra encountered Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna who were leading the horse. After making them unconscious, he entered the city with the sacrificial horse.

When they recovered their senses, Śrī Kṛṣṇa disguised himself as a Brāhmaṇa and Arjuna as a Brāhmaṇa boy and they went to Mayūradhvaja's palace. The King welcomed them respectfully. Śrī Kṛṣṇa, in his disguise as Brāhmaṇa told the King that he was coming from Dharmapurī to meet the King's priest, Kṛṣṇa who was to officiate at the marriage of his (Brāhmaṇa's) son. He added that unfortunately on his way through a forest a lion caught hold of his son. Although he prayed to Lord Narasiṁha, the boy could not be rescued. The lion told him that he would release his son, if the Brāhmaṇa persuaded Mayūradhvaja to offer one half of his body as food to the lion.

On hearing the Brāhmaṇa's story, Mayūradhvaja agreed to give half of his body to the lion. Just then his queen Kumudvatī appeared before them and said, "I am the left half (Vāmabhāga) of the King. You may take me and offer me as food for the lion." But the Brāhmaṇa replied that the lion wanted the right half of the King's body.

When the King heard this, he readily agreed to give the right half of his own body. Accordingly, they started cutting his body into two halves. Just then, seeing tears coming down from Mayūradhvaja's left eye, the Brāhmaṇa said:—"I find that you are in great sorrow ; I do not wish to accept a gift which is not given wholeheartedly." Mayūradhvaja explained that his tears were not caused by pain or sorrow. His left side was disappointed in not being able to be of as much service as the right side.

When Śrī Kṛṣṇa heard these words of the King, he resumed his own shape and embraced him and blessed him. After that Mayūradhvaja completed his yāga and started with Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna, taking Yudhiṣṭhira's sacrificial horse with them. (Jaimini ; Aśvamedha : 41-46).

MEDA. A serpent of the clan of Airāvata. This serpent was burnt to death at the Sarpasatra of Janamejaya. (Śloka 11, Chapter 57, Ādi Parva).

MEDHĀ. One of the twentyfour daughters born to Dakṣaprajāpati of his wife Prasūti. Of these, thirteen daughters including Medhā were married by Dharmadeva. (Chapter 7, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

MEDHĀTITHI I. Grandson of Svāyambhuva Manu. Svāyambhuva Manu had two sons named Priyavrata and Uttānapāda. Of these Priyavrata married Sarūpā and Barhiṣmatī, daughters of Viśvakarmaprajāpati. Medhātithi was the son born to Priyavrata of Sarūpā. Agnīdhra, and others were the brothers of Medhātithi. Medhātithi became the King of Plakṣadvīpa after the death of Priyavrata. (8th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

Medhātithi got seven sons named Śāntahaya, Śiśira, Sukhodaya, Ānanda, Śiva. Kṣemaka and Dhruva. They all became Kings of Plakṣadvīpa. The countries they ruled were named after them as Śāntahayavarṣa, Śiśiravarṣa, Sukhodayavarṣa, Ānandavarṣa, Śivavarṣa, Kṣemakavarṣa and Dhruvavarṣa. There are seven mountains showing the boundaries of these states and they are called Gomeda, Cāndra, Nārada, Dundubhi, Somaka, Sumana and Vaibhrāja. In these beautiful countries and grand mountains live a great many Devas, Gandharvas and virtuous men. (Chapter 4, Aṁśa 2, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

MEDHĀTITHI II. A Rajarṣi of the Pūru dynasty.

Genealogy. Pūru—Janamejaya Prācīnvān—Manasyu—Vītabhaya—Śuṇḍu—Bahuvidha—Saṁyāti—Rahovādī—Bhadrāśva—Matināra—Pratiratha— Kaṇva — Medhātithi.

This Medhātithi got two sons named Duṣyanta and Pravīra. It was this Duṣyanta who married Śakuntalā. (Chapter 278, Agni Purāṇa).

Medhātithi was a celebrated sage of Bhārata. The maharṣi referred to in Śūkta 12, Anuvāka 4, Maṇḍala 1 of Ṛgveda is Medhātithi son of Kaṇva. Once Indra coming in the form of a goat drank the soma of Medhātithi and the latter called him 'goat' (Meṣa) and thenceforth Indra got the name Meṣa. (Sūkta 51, Anuvāka 10, Maṇḍala 1, Ṛgveda).

We get the following details about Medhātithi from the Mahābhārata.

(1) He was a King in the court of Indra.

(2) Medhātithi had a son named Kaṇvamuni who was popular on the east coast of Bhārata. (Śloka 23, Chapter 107, Śānti Parva).

(3) Medhātithi observed Vānaprastha and attained Svarga. (Śloka 7, Chapter 336, Śānti Parva).

(4) Medhātithi was considered to be a sage deserving worship and when he went to see Bhīṣma once Dharmaputra received him with respect and worshipped him. (Śloka 3, Chapter 26, Anuśāsana Parva).

MEDHĀTITHI III. A river. This river is the place of birth of Agni. (Śloka 23, Chapter 222, Vana Parva).

MEDHĀTITHI IV. A sage who was the father of Arundhatī, wife of Vasiṣṭha. This Medhātithi who was living in an āśrama on the banks of the river Candrabhāgā performed a Jyotiṣṭoma yajña. (Kālikā Purāṇa).

MEDHĀVĪ I.

1) General information. A fierce sage. His father was a sage known as Bāladhi. For a very long time Bāladhi had no children and so, griefstricken, Bāladhi did penance and Medhāvī was born as a result of his penance. Even from boyhood the child showed wonderful powers of grasping things and so he was named Medhāvī. (Chapter 135, Vana Parva).

2) How Medhāvī cursed a nymph. One day in spring, Mañjughoṣā (Śucismitā), a nymph, was playing with other companions in the Caitrarathodyāna. Medhāvī was doing penance in a place nearby and Mañjughoṣā fell in love with the sage and she went near him and made love to him by dance and music. Medhāvī was attracted by her and the sage accepted her advances and lived with her for a long time.

One day Mañjughoṣā sought permission to go to Devaloka. "Wait till daybreak" said the sage. When it was morning the nymph renewed her request and the sage said "Wait till I finish my evening prayers." Hearing this Śucismitā said "Oh, best of brahmins, how many mornings and evenings have gone by this time! Fiftyfive years nine months and three days have gone by since we started living together". The sage then counted the years and found she was correct. The astounding fact that his penance had such a long break made the sage angry and he cursed her and made her into an evil spirit. She begged for pardon and the sage said "If you observe with fasting the Caitrakṛṣṇaikādaśī called Pāpamocinī it will absolve you of all sins and give you release from the curse". (Chapter 48, Part 4, Padma Purāṇa).

3) In Ṛgveda. The Aśvinīdevas once gave rice to this sage. (Sūkta 117, Anuvāka 17, Maṇḍala 1, Ṛgveda).

MEDHĀVĪ II. A brahmin boy. This child once gave Tattvopadeśa to his father. (The philosophy that the human soul or material world is identical with the supreme spirit pervading the universe). Chapter 377, Śānti Parva).

MEDHYA. A holy place on the west coast. A river flows through this place. This sacred river is believed to be the place of origin of Agni. This is one of the rivers worthy to be remembered every morning and evening. (Chapter 155, Anuśāsana Parva).

MEDINĪ. A synonym for Earth (Bhūmi). (See under Kaiṭabha for details).

MEGHAHĀSA. A son of Rāhu. When he heard that Mahāviṣṇu had cut off the head of his father he went to the banks of the river Gautamī and practised severe penance. As a result of that Rāhu, his father, got a place among the other planets in the sky. (Chapter 142, Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa).

MEGHAKARṆĀ. A female follower of Subrahmaṇya. (Śloka 30, Chapter 46, Śalya Parva).

MEGHAMĀLĀ. A female follower of Subrahmaṇya. (Śloka 30, Chapter 46, Śalya Parva).

MEGHAMĀLĪ I. A demon who fought against Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa in the forests. He was one of the captains of the army of the great demon Khara. The other captains were Śyenagāmī, Pṛthugrīva, Yajñaśatru, Vihaṅgama, Durjaya, Karavīrākṣa, Parigha, Kālakāmukha, Mahāmālī, Sarpāsya and Rudhirāśana. (Sarga 26, Araṇya Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

MEGHAMĀLĪ II. One of the two pārṣadas given to Subrahmaṇya by Mahāmeru. The other was Kāñcana. (Śloka 47, Chapter 45, Śalya Parva).

MEGHANĀDA. Indrajit, son of Rāvaṇa. (Only portions which were left off under the entry Indrajit are given here.

1) Synonyms of Meghanāda. Kānīna, Rāvaṇi, Māyāvī, Indrajit. The origin of each name is given below:

(i) Kānīna. Son of a virgin. In olden times, once, the Sea of Milk was churned. From it arose a beautiful maiden called Sulakṣaṇā. She became an attendant of Pārvatī and one day while bathing in a pond in the garden she sent Sulakṣaṇā to fetch some clothes for her. Śiva who was then in Pārvatī's chamber alone, lost his control when he saw the beautiful Sulakṣaṇā and had intercourse with her. The maid was perplexed and then Śiva assured her that she would give birth to a child only after her marriage.

But when Sulakṣaṇā returned with the dress Pārvatī felt suspicious and she cursed her and made her into a frog and pushed it into that same pond.

Time passed on. Once Maya performed severe penance to please Śiva to get a daughter and Śiva persuaded Pārvatī to release Sulakṣaṇā from the curse and she did so turning her into a beautiful maiden named Mandodarī and Śiva gave her to Maya. Rāvaṇa married her and their first son was Kānīna.

(ii) Rāvaṇi. Son of Rāvaṇa.

(iii) Meghanāda. (One having the sound of thunder). When he was born he made a sound as loud as thunder and so he was called Meghanāda.

(iv) Māyāvī. He accepted Śiva as his Guru and learned all the divine arts of magic like Mṛgendrajāla, Brahmendrajāla, Surendrajāla, Mahendrajāla Khagendrajāla, Vāyustambha, Jalastambha, Agnistambha, Ākāśasañcāra, Parakāyapraveśa, Rūpabhedasvīkāra and Tirodhāna. Because he knew all these tricks he was called Māyāvī.

(v) Indrajit. When Rāvaṇa attacked svarga he pushed forward too much and so was caught inside an army of the Devas which surrounded him. When Meghanāda saw it he broke the army circle of the devas and getting in caught Indra as a prisoner and brought him to Laṅkā. Indra was later released by the mediation of Brahmā and the latter gave him the name Indrajit meaning "Conqueror of Indra".

2) Boons. When Rāvaṇa was conducting his world campaign he performed at Nikumbhilā many yāgas and got from Brahmā many boons. Meghanāda acquired powers which had not been possible for mānavas, dānavas, vānaras or rākṣasas to acquire. He got a Vimāna (divine car) which could travel in all directions, backwards and forwards, up or down. He received an armour against which no weapon would be of any use. He possessed a weapon which would be effective against anything. Above all these, he had the power to remain invisible. He could be killed by only one person of his age who had lived for fourteen years dutifully and virtuously without sleep. Only Indrajit knew about this.

In a battle Māyāvī would show many tricks. If one was found ineffective he would use another. He had in his stock over a thousand such tricks all of which he had acquired with very little effort. (Yuddha Kāṇḍa, Kamba Rāmāyaṇa).

MEGHANĀDA II. A soldier of Subrahmaṇya. (Śloka 57, Chapter 44, Śalya Parva).

MEGHAPUṢPA. A horse of divinity drawing the chariot of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (Śloka 27, Chapter 45, Virāṭa Parva)

MEGHASANDHI. A prince of ancient Magadha. Once Meghasandhi fought against Arjuna and was defeated. (Chapter 82, Aśvamedha Parva).

MEGHAŚARMAN. A brahmin who was a great devotee of Sūrya. When there was a drought in the country during the reign of Śantanu this brahmin by his worship of Sūrya brought rains to the country. (Bhaviṣya Purāṇa, Pratisargasaṁhitā).

MEGHASVANĀ. A female follower of Subrahmaṇya. (Śloka 8, Chapter 46, Śalya Parva).

MEGHAVĀHANA. A King. He was a dependant of Jarāsandha. (Śloka 13, Chapter 14, Sabhā Parva).

MEGHAVĀHINĪ. (MEGHAVĀSINĪ). A female follower of Skandadeva. (Śloka 17, Chapter 45, Śalya Parva).

MEGHAVARṆA I. A character in a story of Pañcatantra. (See under Pañcatantra).

MEGHAVARṆA II. A son of Ghaṭotkaca. Meghavarṇa was also present with Arjuna when he went to protect the sacrificial horse of the Aśvamedha conducted by the Pāṇḍavas.

MEGHAVĀSA. An asura. This asura sits in the council of Varuṇa and worships him. (Śloka 19, Chapter 9, Sabhā Parva).

MEGHAVEGA. A very brave soldier who fought against the Pāṇḍavas on the Kaurava side. Abhimanyu killed him. (Śloka 15, Chapter 48, Droṇa Parva).

MEKHALA (MEKALA). Mekhala was a country which had attained Purāṇic fame in ancient India. The inhabitants of this place were called Mekhalas. They were the bodyguards of Bhīṣma. (Chapter 51, Bhīṣma Parva). They formed a separate division in the army of Bṛhannala, King of Kosala. (Chapter 87, Bhīṣma Parva). Once Karṇa conquered this country. (Śloka 8, Chapter 4, Droṇa Parva). Mekhalas were Kṣatriyas formerly. But they became persons of low caste when they showed jealousy towards the brahmins. (Śloka 17, Chapter 35, Anuśāsana Parva).

MENĀ I. Wife of Himavān. Beautiful Menā was the daughter of Mahāmeru.

Himavān lord of the mountains and the seat of many minerals and fossils had two daughters of unparallelled beauty and their mother was the lovely Menā, daughter of Mahāmeru and wife of Himavān. (Sarga 35, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

Rāmāyaṇa states that Menā had two daughters of extraordinary beauty named Gaṅgā and Umā. They were both married by Śiva.

But Vāmana Purāṇa in chapter 51 states that Menā had three beautiful daughters and a son named Sunābha. Menā's first daughter was Rāgiṇī with red body and eyes and wearing a red dress. Her second daughter named Kuṭilā was white in colour, had lotus eyes, and wore white dress. The third was a girl of enchanting beauty named Kālī. She was blue-black in colour with eyes like the blue lotus leaf.

It can be surmised that the Umā of Rāmāyaṇa and Kālī were one and the same person by the following verse in the Amarakośa.

Umā Kātyāyanī Gaurī
Kālī Haimavatīśvarī //

When the statements of the two Purāṇas are taken together Menā should have had four daughters, Gaṅgā, Rāgiṇī, Kuṭilā and Kālī and a son named Sunābha.

MENĀ II. Daughter of the Pitṛs (Manes). Pitṛs are of two kinds : Anagnis and Sāgnis. Anagnis are those who do not perform yāgas and those who perform yāgas are called Sāgnis. Anagnis are called Agniṣvāttas and Sāgnis are called Barhiṣadas. Svadhā was the common wife of all the Pitṛs. Svadhā got two daughters, Menā and Dhāriṇī. They were both very well-learned, virtuous girls and were Brahmavādinīs (expounders of Vedānta philosophy). (Chapter 10, Aṁśa 1, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

MENAKĀ. A nymph of extraordinary beauty. Taking instructions from Indra, Menakā used to entice many sages and destroy their power of penance. There are innumerable stories of this kind in Purāṇas. Some important events connected with Menakā are given below :

1) Mother of Pramadvarā. Once Menakā became pregnant by a Gandharva named Viśvāvasu. On the day she delivered she threw the child on the banks of a river and went to Svarga. A sage named Sthūlakeśa who was doing penance nearby took the babe and brought it up. When she grew up she was named Pramadvarā and Ruru married her. (See under Pramadvarā).

2) Birth of Śakuntalā. When Viśvāmitra was performing penance in the forests, Menakā, under instructions from Indra, went and enticed Viśvāmitra and broke the continuity of his penance. A girl was born to Menakā and became later the celebrated Śakuntalā. (See under Śakuntalā).

3) Again with Viśvāmitra. Once again when Viśvāmitra was performing penance in Puṣkaratīrtha, Menakā approached him and again Viśvāmitra fell in love with her and they lived together for ten years. Then one day Viśvāmitra realised his folly and leaving her went again to the forests for penance.

4) Maṅkaṇa was enticed. See under Maṅkaṇa

5) Other details.

(i) When once Durvāsas visited Devaloka it was Menakā who presented him with a flower garland. This incident led to the churning of the milk ocean at a later period. (See under Amṛta).

(ii) Menakā was one among the six prominent celestial maidens. Urvaśī, Pūrvacitti, Sahajanyā, Menakā, Ghṛtācī and Viśvācī are the six. (Śloka 68, Chapter 74, Ādi Parva).

(iii) Menakā attended the Janmotsava of Arjuna and sang on the occasion. (Śloka 64, Chapter 122, Ādi Parva).

(iv) Menakā was a dancer in the court of Kubera (Śloka 10, Chapter 10, Sabhā Parva).

(v) Menakā once gave a music performance in the court of Indra in honour of Arjuna. (Śloka 29, Chapter 43, Vana Parva).

MEṆḌA (MENDHA). A Sanskrit poet who lived in the 5th century A.D. Among his works only one is known viz. Hayagrīvavadha (the assassination of Hayagrīva). This book is known by another name "Hastipāka".

MEPPATTŪR NĀRĀYAṆA BHAṬṬATIRI. A Sanskrit poet who lived in Kerala.

1) General information It is believed that this poet lived during the period from 1560 to 1648 A.D. He was born in the village of Kurumāttūr in Malabar district The illam (house of nambūtiris) which became famous by his birth was a mile to the east of the Bhagavatī temple, Candanakkāvu, which itself is situated just two furlongs to the north of the well known Tirunāvāya temple. Meppattūr illam became impoverished and was merged with another illam of name Maravañceri Tekkeṭattu.

Nārāyaṇa Bhaṭṭatiri had a brother named Mātṛdatta. He was younger to Nārāyaṇa and his work was to take down the verses which Nārāyaṇa composed. Meppattūr (Nārāyaṇa is more well-known under the name of his illam) studied under different preceptors. His father taught him Mīmāṁsā and such other subjects. He studied Veda under Mādhavācārya and Tarka under Dāmodarācārya. Acyuta Piṣāroṭi taught him Vyākaraṇa. The poet became a rheumatic patient in his old age and he stayed in the Guruvāyūr temple worshipping the deity there. His famous work Nārāyaṇīyam was written sitting in the temple of Guruvāyūr and the maṇḍapa (raised dais) where he sat and wrote is even now preserved for pilgrims to see. He took hundred days to write the Nārāyaṇīyam.

2) His works. It is not yet known how many books Meppattūr had written but the following have been recognised as definitely written by him : (1) Nārāyaṇīyam (2) Śrīpādasaptati (3) Guruvāyupureśastotram (4) Gośrīnagaravarṇanam (5) Māṭamahīśapraśasti (6) Śailābdhīśvarapraśasti (7) Sūktaślokas (8) Āśvalāyanakriyākrama (9) Prakriyāsarvasvam (10) Dhātukāvyam (11) Apāṇinīyaprāmāṇyasādhanam (12) Mānapariccheda of Mānameyodaya (13) Tantravārttikanibandhana (14) Rājasūyam (15) Dūtavākyam (16) Pāñcālīsvayaṁvaram (17) Nālāyanīcaritam (18) Sundopasundopākhyānam (19) Subhadrāharaṇam (20) Kaunteyāṣṭakam (21) Kirātam (22) Kailāsavarṇanam (23) Matsyāvatāram (24) Nṛgamokṣam (25) Niranunāsika or Śūrpaṇakhāpralāpa (26) Rākṣasotpatti (27) Ahalyāmokṣa (28) Bālakāṇḍa story (29) Dakṣayajña (30) Tripuradahana (31) Aṣṭamīcampū (32) Svāhāsudhākaram (33) Koṭiviraham.

MERUBHŪTA. A place of habitation of ancient Bhārata. (Śloka 48, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

MERUDĀNA. Merudānas (gifts of heaps like Meru) are all very effective and productive of good results. The Merus for the dānas are the following :

1) Dhānyameru. A dhānyameru or a thousand droṇas of dhānya (grain) is considered the best ; a dāna of half that quantity (i.e. 500) was fair and half of the latter, the worst.

2) Lavaṇameru. A dāna of sixteen droṇas of lavaṇa (salt) is considered to be Uttama (best) ; with half of that as Madhyama (fair) and with half of the latter as Adhama (worst).

3) Guḍameru. One with ten bhāras of guḍa (jaggery) is considered Uttama ; with half of that as Madhyama and with half of the latter as adhama.

4) Svarṇameru. A svarṇameru with a thousand palas of Svarṇa (gold) is considered Uttama ; with half of that as madhyama and with half of the latter as adhama.

5) Tilameru. One with ten droṇas of tila (gingelly) is considered Uttama ; with half of that as madhyama and with half of the latter as adhama.

6) Kārpāsameru. A Meru with twenty bhāras of Kārpāsa (cotton) is considered Uttama ; with ten as madhyama and with five as adhama.

7) Ghṛtameru. One with twenty jars of ghṛta (ghee) is Uttama ; with ten, madhyama and five, adhama.

8) Rajatameru. One with ten thousand palas of silver is deemed Uttama ; with half of that as madhyama and with half of the latter as adhama.

9) Śarkarāmeru. One with eight bhāras of sugar is deemed Uttama ; with half of that as madhyama and with half of the latter as adhama. (Chapter 210, Agni Purāṇa).

MERUDEVĪ. A daughter of Mahāmeru. The nine daughters of Mahāmeru are : Merudevī, Pratirūpā, Ugradaṁṣṭrī, Latā, Ramyā, Śyāmā, Nārī, Bhadrā and Devavīthī. They were married to Nābhi, Kimpuruṣa, Hari, Ilāvṛta, Ramyaka, Hiraṇmaya, Kuru, Bhadrāśva and Ketumāla respectively. All these nine Kings were born to a King Agnīdhra of the nymph Pūrvacitti. (Pañcama Skandha, Bhāgavata).

MERUMANDARA. A mountain. This supports Mahāmeru. The mountains which support it from the four sides are Mandara, Merumandara, Supārśva and Kumuda. (5th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

MERUPRABHA. A forest. There were three beautiful forests about the waist of the mountain Latāveṣṭa, situated to the south of Dvārakāpurī. Meruprabha is one of them. The other two are Tālavana and Puṣpakavana. (Chapter 26, Sabhā Parva, Dākṣiṇātya Pāṭha).

MERUSĀVARṆI. A Manu. (See under Manvantara). The daughter of this Merusāvarṇi named Svayamprabhā was met by Hanūmān on his way in search of Sītā. (Sarga 51, Kiṣkindhā kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

MERUVRAJA. A city of ancient India. A demon named Virūpākṣa lived there. (Śloka 19, Chapter 17, Śānti Parva).

MEṢA I. A synonym for Indra. Once Indra taking the shape of a goat went and drank the Soma of the sage Medhātithi. Then that sage called Indra 'goat' (meṣa) and that name of Meṣa stuck to him. (Sūkta 51, Anuvāka 10, Maṇḍala 11, Ṛgveda).

MEṢA II. A soldier of Subrahmaṇya. (Śloka 64, Chapter 45, Śalya Parva).

MEṢAHṚT. A son of Garuḍa. (Śloka 12. Chapter 101, Śalya Parva).

MIŚRAKA I. A special tribe of horses. (Dākṣiṇātya Pāṭha, Chapter 38, Sabhā Parva).

MIŚRAKA II. A garden in the city of Dvārakā. The city shines more by this divine garden. (Dākṣiṇātya Pāṭha, Chapter 38, Sabhā Parva).

MIŚRAKA III. A sacred place within the boundaries of Kurukṣetra. If one bathes in a holy pond there one would get the benefit of bathing in all the sacred ponds in India. (Śloka 91, Chapter 81, Vana Parva).

MIŚRAKEŚĪ I. A celestial woman. She was the beautiful daughter born to Pradhā wife of Kaśyapaprajāpati. Raudrāśva son of Pūru married Miśrakeśī and begot a son named Anvagbhānu and nine sons more who were all good archers. When once Arjuna went to Indraloka Miśrakeśī gave a dance performance in his honour. (Chapter 65, Ādi Parva and Chapter 43, Vana Parva).

MIŚRAKEŚĪ II. Wife of King Vatsaka, brother of Vasudeva. (9th Skandha, Bhāgavata, and Chapter 59, Ādi Parva).

MIŚRĪ. A serpent. This serpent also was among those serpents which came to take away the soul of Balabhadrarāma to Pātāla at the time of his death. (Śloka 15, Chapter 4, Mausala Parva).

MITADHVAJA. A King of Videha. According to Bhāgavata Mitadhvaja was the son of Dharmadhvaja Janaka.

MITHI (MITHI JANAKA). Son of King Nimi. The sixth chapter of Devī Bhāgavata gives the following story about the birth of Mithi.

There was once an emperor of great renown in the line of Ikṣvāku named Nimi. He was the twelfth son of the celebrated Ikṣvāku and was devoted to the welfare of his subjects. He was a very honest, virtuous, righteous and good-natured man of a charitable disposition. The agrahāra (village where brahmins reside) named Jayantapura near the āśrama of Gautama Maharṣi was constructed by this emperor. This emperor of a Rājasic mind decided to perform a yāga which would take years for its conclusion and in which land was to be given as gifts. He went to his father Ikṣvāku, and took permission from him to conduct the yāga. He made all preparations for the yāga. He invited Bhṛgu, Aṅgiras, Vāmadeva, Pulastya, Pulaha and Ṛcīka all of whom were well-versed in the Vedas and were worthy of being priests in a Yāga of the kind he was conducting. He then went and invited his Kulaguru (family priest and preceptor) Vasiṣṭha for the Yāga. But Vasiṣṭha had to officiate at a Yāga conducted by Indra and so he commanded Nimi to postpone the Yāga by five hundred years. Nimi did not act according to it and he performed the Yāga with the help of the other sages and completed it successfully. After five hundred years when the Yāga of Indra came to a close, Vasiṣṭha came to see Nimi. Nimi was asleep then and the servants in the palace hesitated to go and inform him of the arrival of the sage. Vasiṣṭha got angry and cursed him and made him Videha (without body). At once the body of the King fell to the ground and the soul got out of it. But before the soul separated from the body Nimi cursed Vasiṣṭha also and separated his soul from his body. Vasiṣṭha was again born as the son of Mitrāvaruṇas.

The other sages present there took the lifeless body of Nimi and after sacrificial ceremonies and worship of gods started to churn the body. After some time a mighty and perfect man of great brilliance was born out of it. Because he was born by Mathana (churning) he was named Mithi. Because he was born from his father (Janaka) he was called Mithijanaka and because he was born of Nimi, a Videha, he was called Videha also. The country which was ruled by Mithi got the name of Mithilā. It is the country of Sītā.

MITHILĀ.

1) General information. A celebrated country of ancient Bhārata. This is situated on the north-eastern side of Bhārata. Its modern name is Tirhut. Mithilā was ruled by the renowned Janaka Kings. See under Mithi to know how the country got the name Mithilā.

2) The wealth of Mithilā. Mithilā was the capital of the extensive country of Videha. Successive generations of Janaka ruled the country. Mithilā was noted more for its sāttvic virtues than for the pomp and glory of kings. Everyday on the protruding breasts of an idol of Rājasa-rājalakṣmī (embodiment of royal prosperity) bhasma (ashes) and candana (sandalwood paste) would be smeared. In the middle of Tretāyuga Videha was ruled by a Janaka who brought fame and prosperity to the successive generations. A devotee of Śiva and of a sāttvic disposition he was a Nityabrahmacārī (observing celibacy throughout life) and his wife a disciple of Maitreyī and well-versed in Advaitavedānta was a Nit abrahmacāriṇī.

Videha grew prosperous with agricultural wealth by hard work put up by the peasants and divine wealth by the virtuous deeds of the King and the people. Agriculture was given importance, so much so that the royal emblem itself was the figure of a plough. Rains were there in season and in plenty because of the yāgas conducted properly by the King. (Bālakāṇḍa, Kamba Rāmāyaṇa).

3) Other details.

(i) Once Pāṇḍu, father of the Pāṇḍavas, attacked this country and conquered it. (Śloka 28, Chapter 112, Ādi Parva).

(ii) Śrī Kṛṣṇa, Arjuna and Bhīma once visited this country when they were on their way to Magadha from Indraprastha. (Śloka 28, Chapter 20, Sabhā Parva).

(iii) Karṇa once conquered and captured the country of Mithilā. (Śloka 8, Chapter 254, Vana Parva).

(iv) Sītā was born in Mithilā. (Śloka 9, Chapter 274, Vana Parva).

(v) Because she was born in Mithilā she is known by the name of Maithilī. (Śloka 2, Chapter 277, Vana Parva).

(vi) Once Mithilā was ruled by a King called Dharmadhvaja. Hearing about his great Dharmajñāna (knowledge about virtues and duties) a female ascetic named Sulabhā visited him in the guise of a beggar woman. (Śloka 4, Chapter 320, Śānti Parva).

(vii) Śuka the great sage, with the permission of his father Vyāsa came to Mithilā and took Dharmopadeśa from King Janaka. (Śloka 6, Chapter 325. Śānti Parva).

MITHU. A very valorous dānava. Once Bharata son of Ārṣṭiṣeṇa was making preparations for an Aśvamedha on the banks of the river Sarasvatī with Upamanyu as his priest when Mithu came and took them both to Pātāla. Then Devāpi, son of Upamanyu, got his father and the King released from there by continuous worship of Śiva (Brahma Purāṇa—127. 56-57).

MITRA.

1) General information. One of the twelve Sūryas. The twelve Sūryas born to Aditi of Kaśyapaprajāpati are Viṣṇu, Śakra, Aryamā, Dhātā, Tvaṣṭā, Pūṣā, Vivasvān, Savitā, Mitra, Varuṇa, Bhaga and Aṁśa. (Chapter 15, Aṁśa 1, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

Mitrāvaruṇas are two devatās of great intimacy. They are always found together. If you pray to Mitrāvaruṇas you will get plenty of rains. (Sūkta 2, Anuvāka 1, Maṇḍala 1, Ṛgveda).

See para 2 under Agastya to understand the story of how Mitrāvaruṇas became the father of Agastya.

2) Other details.

(i) Mitra came and stood in the sky at the time of the birth of Arjuna. (Śloka 66, Chapter 122, Ādi Parva).

(ii) Mitra was one among those sent by Indra to fight against Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna at the time of the burning of the forest Khāṇḍava. (Śloka 36, Chapter 226 Ādi Parva).

(iii) Mitra was a member of the Indra sabhā. (Śloka 21, Chapter 7, Sabhā Parva).

(iv) He presented two Pārṣadas named Suvrata and Satyasandha to Subrahmaṇya. (Śloka 41, Chapter 45, Śalya Parva).

MITRĀ. A female companion of Pārvatī. (Śloka 41, Chapter 231, Vana Parva).

MITRABHEDA. See under Pañcatantra.

MITRADEVA. Brother of Suśarmā, King of Trigartta. Arjuna killed him in the great battle. (Śloka 3, Chapter 27, Karṇa Parva).

MITRADHARMĀ. Son of the Agni called Pāñcajanya, (Śloka 12, Chapter 220, Vana Parva).

MITRAGHNA. A demon who fought on the side of Rāvaṇa in the Rāma-Rāvaṇa battle. Śrī Rāma killed this demon. (Chapter 34, Verse 27, Yuddha Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

MITRAJÑA. Son of the Agni named Pāñcajanya. He was one of the five Devavināyakas. (Śloka 12, Chapter 220, Vana Parva).

MITRASAKHA (MITRASAHA). A King of the Solar dynasty. He was known as Kalmāṣapāda also. (See under Kalmāṣapāda).

MITRASENA. A King who fought on the side of the Kauravas in the great battle. Arjuna killed him. (Śloka 20, Chapter 19, Karṇa Parva).

MITRAVĀN I. Son of the Agni named Pāñcajanya. He was one of the Pāñcadevavināyakas. (Śloka 12, Chapter 220, Vana Parva).

MITRAVĀN II. An ascetic who lived in the city of Saupura. He acquired complete peace of mind by reading the second Chapter of the Gītā sitting in a Śiva temple. Once a brahmin of name Devaśarmā approached a sage named Muktakarmā seeking advice to obtain peace of mind. The latter directed Devaśarmā to Mitravān andMitravān advised him to read the second Chapter of the Gītā. (Padma Purāṇa, Uttara Khaṇḍa, 176).

MITRAVARDHANA. Son of the Agni called Pāñcajanya. He was one of the Pañcadevavināyakas. (Śloka 12, Chapter 220, Vana Parva).

MITRAVARMAN. Brother of Suśarmā, King of Trigarta. Arjuna killed him in the great battle. (Śloka 3, Chapter 27, Karṇa Parva).

MITRĀVARUṆA(S). The combined name of two of the Dvādaśādityas (twelve Sūryas) Mitra and Varuṇa. These two are always seen together. Agastya and Vasiṣṭha were born as sons of Mitrāvaruṇa. It was due to a curse by Mitrāvaruṇas that Urvaśī had to marry King Purūravas, a man of the earth. Manu had no children and he performed a yāga to placate Mitrāvaruṇas. But since there were many faults in the ceremony a girl was born to him. (For details see under Ilā, Nimi, Urvaśī, Vasiṣṭha and Mitra).

MITRAVINDA. A deva. The havis (clarified butter which is put in the Agni called Rathantara is intended for this deva. (Śloka 19, Chapter 220, Vana Parva).

MITRAVINDĀ. Daughter of Śrī Kṛṣṇa's father's sister. Mitravindā's mother's name was Rājādhidevī. Rājādhidevī, queen of Avantī, got three children named Vinda, Anuvinda and Mitravindā. In the Svayaṁvara Mitravindā chose Kṛṣṇa as her husband. Vinda and Anuvinda did not like it and joining the Kaurava side fought against Kṛṣṇa. But Kṛṣṇa defeated them all and took Mitravindā to Dvārakā. (10th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

MITREYU. A King of the Lunar dynasty. He was the son of Divodāsa and father of Cyavana.

MLECCHA. A tribe of people of ancient India. This tribe was born from the tail of the celestial cow Nandinī, kept by Vasiṣṭha for sacrificial purposes when there was a fight between Viśvāmitra and Vasiṣṭha. Mahābhārata gives the following information regarding them.

(1) The mlecchas who sprang up from the tail of the celestial cow Nandinī sent the army of Viśvāmitra flying in terror. (Śloka 38, Chapter 174, Ādi Parva).

(2) Bhīmasena defeated the mlecchas living in the coastal regions and took from them several valuable diamonds as tax. (Sloka 25, Chapter 30, Sabhā Parva).

(3) The mlecchas living in the coastal area were once defeated by Sahadeva, one of the Pāṇḍavas. (Śloka 66, Chapter 31, Sabhā Parva).

(4) Nakula also once defeated the mlecchas. (Śloka 16, Chapter 32, Sabhā Parva).

(5) Bhagadatta was the King of the mlecchas. (Śloka 14, Chapter 51, Sabhā Parva).

(6) Bhagadatta accompanied by the mlecchas living on the coasts attended the Rājasūya of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Śloka 14, Chapter 51, Sabhā Parva).

(7) Different tribes of mlecchas will be born on earth at the beginning of the era of Pralaya. (Śloka 34, Chapter 188, Vana Parva).

(8) Kalkī, the incarnation of Viṣṇu, will destroy the mlecchas who are found everywhere in the world. (Śloka 97 Chapter 190, Vana Parva).

(9) Karṇa during his world campaign conquered many mleccha countries. (Śloka 19, Chapter 254, Vana Parva).

(10) A place of habitation in Bhārata is called Mleccha. (Śloka 57, Chapter 9. Bhīṣma Parva).

(11) Aṅga, a mleccha warrior was killed in the battle by Bhīmasena. (Śloka 17, Chapter 26, Droṇa Parva).

(12) Once the mlecchas attacked Arjuna with arrows. Arjuna killed the hairy soldiers. (Śloka 43, Chapter 93, Droṇa Parva).

(13) Sātyaki killed many mleccha soldiers in the great war. (Śloka 43, Chapter 119, Droṇa Parva).

(14) Nakula killed Aṅga, a mleccha King. (Śloka 18, Chapter 22, Karṇa Parva),

(15) Arjuna had to face a great army of mlecchas to protect the Yāgāśva. (Śloka 23, Chapter 73, Aśvamedha Parva).

(16) The wealth that remained in the Yāgaśālā of Yudhiṣṭhira after the distribution as gifts to brahmins was taken away by the mlecchas. (Śloka 26, Chapter 89, Aśvamedha Parva).

(17) The mlecchas drove angered elephants on to the army of the Pāṇḍavas. (Śloka 10, Chapter 22, Karṇa Parva).

MODA I. A demon who was a companion of Hiraṇyākṣa. In the Devāsura battle Vāyu killed him.

MODA II. A serpent born of the clan of Airāvata. This serpent was burnt to death in the sarpasatra of Janamejaya. (Śloka 10, Chapter 52, Āṣramavāsika Parva).

MODĀGIRI. A country of ancient Bhārata. The King of this country was killed by Bhīmasena. (Śloka 31, Chapter 30, Sabhā Parva).

MODĀKĪ. A vast area of land in Śākadvīpa near the mountain Kesara. (Śloka 26, Chapter 11, Bhīṣma Parva).

MODĀPURA A country of ancient Bhārata. Arjuna defeated the King of this country once. (Śloka 11, Chapter 27, Sabhā parva).

MOHA. A son born of the lustre of Brahmā. (3rd Skandha, Bhāgavata).

MOHAKA. Son of Suratha, a devotee of Śrī Rāma. When Suratha blocked the Aśvamedha horse of Śrī Rāma, a fight ensued in which Mohaka also took part (Padma Purāṇa, Pātāla Khaṇḍa).

MOHANA. An ancient place of habitation in Bhārata. This place was conquered by Karṇa. (Śloka 10, Chapter 254, Vana Parva).

MOHANĀ. Wife of Sugrīva. Mohanā helped her husband in bringing water from the Sarayū river to bathe the Aśvamedha horse of Śrī Rāma. (Padma Purāṇa, Pātāla Khaṇḍa).

MOHINĪ. The female form of Mahāviṣṇu. Devas and Asuras quarrelled with each other over the right of partaking the Amṛta (nectar) obtained from the sea of Milk. At that time Mahāviṣṇu appeared before them in the guise of a beautiful maiden of maddening charm and the asuras were guilefully made to turn their attention on her for some time during which time the nectar was carried away by the Devas. The female form of Mahāviṣṇu was called Mohinī.

Śiva fell in love with Mohinī and by the union of the two was born Śāstā. (See under Amṛtam). (8th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

MOKṢA I. One of the seven divisions of the island of Plakṣa. The seven divisions are Śiva, Yavasa, Subhadra, Śānta, Mokṣa, Amṛta and Abhaya. (5th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

MOKṢA II. [1]Mokṣa means liberation and is generally meant to convey the meaning of the deliverance of the soul from recurring births. The Jīvātmā enshrined in the body has the delusion that it enjoys or suffers happiness or woe. In truth it neither suffers nor enjoys anything. It is detached from all. It is the Supreme Being (Parabrahman). When Jīvātmā deserts its woes it gets mokṣa i.e. Jīvātmā gets merged with Paramātmā. When once Jīvātmā merges with Paramātmā, Jīvātmā is devoid of happiness or woes. It need not be enshrined in any body. A Jīvātmā getting released from one body joins another new body and thus a Jīvātmā in succession enters thousands of bodies and each time without knowing the absolute Truth laments over its woes. In the words of a Ṛṣi it is explained thus : "Jīvātmā, which is bliss in itself living in births after births searches for bliss elsewhere just as a person wearing a golden necklace round his neck searches for the same elsewhere." The passage of Jīvātmā from one birth to another and the bodies that enshrine it each time constitutes the worldly life. When once a Jīvātmā thus involved in Saṁsāra (mundane existence) gets real knowledge, the knowledge that Jīvātmā and Paramātmā are one and the same, then that Jīvātmā gets final emancipation, liberation from recurring births. It merges with Brahman. This is called Mokṣa.

MOKṢADHARMAPARVA. A sub-divisional Parva of Śānti Parva. It contains the chapters 174 to 365 of Śānti Parva.

MṚGADHŪMA. A sacred place on the border of Kurukṣetra. If one goes there and worships Mahādeva one will get the benefit of conducting an Aśvamedhayajña. (Śloka 101, Chapter 83, Vana Parva).

MṚGAMANDĀ. A daughter of Kaśyapa. (See under Mṛgas).

MṚGĀṄKAKA. A sword. Once Kubera cursed a Yakṣa and making him a lion posted it to guard the palace-gates of Mahābali. He said he would be released from the curse when any man on earth defeated it. Once a brahmin warrior named Śrīdatta defeated this lion and at once the lion changed into a Yakṣa and the Yakṣa presented Śrīdatta with the sword named Mṛgāṅkaka. (Kathāpīṭhalambaka, Kathāsaritsāgara).

MṚGĀṄKAVATĪ. Daughter of an ancient King called Śrī Bimbaki. (See under Śrīdatta).

MṚGAS (DEER). All the animals originated from Kaśyapaprajāpati. Kaśyapaprajāpati, son of Marīci, married the eight daughters of Dakṣa named Tāmrā etc. From Tāmrā were born birds. Krodhavaśā gave birth to ten girls named Mṛgī, Mṛgamandā, Harī, Bhadramadā, Mātaṅgī, Śārdūlī, Śvetā, Surabhi, Surasā and Kadrū. Mṛgas (deer) are the children of Mṛgī. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇya Kāṇḍa, Sarga 4).

MṚGASVAPNODBHAVAPARVA. A subsidiary Parva of the Vana Parva of Mahābhārata. Chapter 258 of Vana Parva constitutes this Parva.

MṚGĀVATĪ. See under Udayana.

MṚGAVYĀDHA. The disguise Śiva took when he went to test the devotion of Paraśurāma. Paraśurāma once went to the forests and did penance to please Śiva to learn archery from him. Śiva in the form of a Mṛgavyādha (forest hunter) appeared before Paraśurāma and tested his sincerity in his penance in several ways. Śiva was pleased to find Paraśurāma's devotion to Śiva unwavering and blessed him. He gave instructions in archery and also permitted him to go round the earth. (Chapter 65, Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa).

MṚGAVYĀDHA II. One of the Ekādaśarudras (eleven Rudras). (Śloka 2, Chapter 66, Ādi Parva).

MṚGĪ. The mother of all types of deer. (See under Mṛgas).

MṚKAṆḌU. Father of the sage Mārkaṇḍeya. (See under Mārkaṇḍeya).

MṚṢĀ. Wife of Adharma. Adharma begot of Mṛṣā two children named Dambha and Māyā. (4th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

MṚTAM. See under Pramṛtam.

MṚTASAÑJĪVANĪ. This is a medicinal herb to give life to those who are dead. When in the Rāma-Rāvaṇa battle Lakṣmaṇa and others fell dead, Śrī Rāma wanted Mṛtasañjīvanī to be brought to revive them back to life. Jāmbavān the oldest among the monkey-warriors then instructed Hanūmān to get it from the mountain Mahāmeru explaining to him the way to reach there. He said : "If you go a hundred yojanas (1200 Kilometres) from here to the north you would reach Rāmeśvara the southernmost point of Bhārata. From there if you go to the north another thousand yojanas you would reach the Himālayas which is the northern-most point of Bhārata. Himavān is thousand yojanas high, two thousand yojanas wide and is long enough to reach the two oceans on the east and the west.

On that mountain is the marriage-dais of Pārvatī and Parameśvara and you will find places where Parameśvara had sat for practising penances. On the northern side under a big Kūvala tree lies Kāmadhenu. This cow gives milk to the sages and tourists who go there.

[1] Jīvātmā=The individual soul enshrined in the human body imparting to it life, motion and sensation as opposed to Paramātmā.
Paramātmā=The Supreme spirit or Brahman
Saṁsāra=The circuit of life consisting of births and rebirths with sufferings and enjoyments of woes and happiness.

Nine thousand yojanas to the north of this there are two mountains named Hemakūṭa and Ratnakūṭa. The centre of that is Ṛṣabhavarṣa. On a big Kāraskara tree there will be hanging a king with his face downwards after being cursed by the sage Durvāsas. He will be released from the curse by you. If one eats the fruits of this tree one will be free from greying of hairs and rugosity.

If you go farther north from Hemakūṭa you will reach the mountain Niṣadha. There is a lake there. If one bathes there one will be granted all prosperity by Lakṣmīdevī. Farther to the north is situated Mahāmeru. The greatness of this mountain is indescribable.

Mahāmeru has got four supporting mountain pillars named Mandara, Merumandara, Supārśva and Kumuda. The abode of the three deities is on the top of this mountain. On a peak in the centre is living Brahmā with his wives Vāṇī, Gāyatrī and Sāvitrī as creator of the universe. This place is called Satyaloka and to the west of it is Śrī Vaikuṇṭha the abode of Mahāviṣṇu. Mādevī and Bhūdevī are his two wives. He is the god who protects us all. To the east of Satyaloka is Kailāsa, the abode of Śiva. He lives there with his wives Gaṅgā and Pārvatī and sons Gaṇeśa and Subrahmaṇya. To the south of Satyaloka is the city Saṁyamanī the abode of Yamadharmarāja. He lives there with his wife Kālinī and sons Viḍava, Mahimā and Dīpaka. To the east of this is the wonderful Devaloka. There lives Indra, his wife Śacīdevī and son Jayanta with thirtythree crores of Devas. Celestial nymphs like Urvaśī, Rambhā and Tilottamā live there. Kāmadhenu, the Kalpa tree, Airāvata, Uccaiśśravas, and Cintāmaṇi are all there. You will find Amarāvatī, the Capital of Indra and Sudharmā his court there.

On the northern side of Meru is a tall Aśvattha tree. To the north of that is the Nīla-mahāgiri (the great blue mountain). Kaśyapa has installed a deity named Śvetavarāhamūrti there. Beyond that is the Ṛṣabhādri (ox-shaped mountain). It is believed that a divine ox became a mountain there. Its two horns are like two peaks. This mountain contains many divine medicines of which Śalyaharaṇī, Viśalyakaraṇī, Sandhānakaraṇī and Mṛtasañjīvanī are the most important.

Once the asuras defeated the Devas. Then Parameśvara and Mahāviṣṇu gave the Devas these four medicinal herbs. They planted them here and watered them from the Milk-sea. Around these precious plants stand guard the pārṣadas of Śiva and the Discus Sudarśana of Viṣṇu." (Yuddha Kāṇḍa, Kamba Rāmāyaṇa).

There is another statement in the Mahābhārata that Sañjīvanī is an art, the use of a mantra. Śukrācārya by this art brought to life all the asuras killed in a war with the devas. (Śloka 8, Chapter 76, Ādi Parva). Again Śukrācārya brought to life three times his disciple Kaca whom the asuras killed three times. Śukrācārya taught the art to Kaca. (Śloka 28, Chapter 76, Ādi Parva).

MṚTTIKĀVATĪ. A place of habitation in ancient Bhārata. (Śloka 10, Chapter 254, Vana Parva).

MṚTYU. The goddess of Death. Agni Purāṇa gives details about the birth of Death. Hiṁsā was the wife of Adharma. They got a son named Anṛta and a daughter named Nikṛti. From them were born Bhaya, Naraka, Māyā and Vedanā. Of these Māyā gave birth to Mṛtyu, the destroyer of matter.

Mṛtyu has been described both as a god and goddess in Mahābhārata. The statements regarding Mṛtyu as a deva are as follows :—

(i) Three sons were born to Nikṛti, wife of Adharma. One of them was Mṛtyu. Mṛtyudeva has neither wife nor children because he is the destroyer of all. (Śloka 54, Chapter 66, Ādi Parva).

(ii) Once the son of an old Gautamī was bitten by a snake. A hunter seeing it rushed to kill the serpent but Gautamī objected to it. She advised him that it was a sin to injure any living being. The serpent then said, "It is not my fault that I bit the boy. I was persuaded by the god of death to do so." The god of death Mṛtyudeva also appeared there then. He confirmed the snake's statement and added that God had programmed all events beforehand and the boy's death was not due to any mistake on anybody's part. (Śloka 50, Chapter 1, Anuśāsana Parva)

(iii) Once Mṛtyu followed the King Sudarśana, but Mṛtyudeva had to withdraw after accepting defeat because the King had been living a virtuous life of high standard. (See under Sudarśana).

The statements regarding Mṛtyu as a goddess are the following :

(1) This devatā was born from the body of Brahmā in the shape of a woman. (Śloka 17, Chapter 53, Droṇa Parva).

(2) Brahmā gave the work of destruction to Mṛtyu. When she got that work she wept aloud. (Śloka 21, Chapter 257, Śānti Parva).

(3) The goddess of Mṛtyu once did severe penance. (Śloka 17, Chapter 54, Droṇa Parva).

(4) Brahmā assured the goddess of death that any destruction by her would not be deemed as a sin. (Śloka 44, Chapter 54, Droṇa Parva).

(5) The terrible strength of Mṛtyudevatā is described in Chapter 819, Śānti Parva, Mahābhārata.

MUCUKUNDA. A celebrated King of the Solar dynasty.

1) Genealogy. Descending in order from Viṣṇu — Brahmā—Marīci—Kaśyapa — Vivasvān — Vaivasvata Manu—Ikṣvāku—Śaśāda — Purañjaya (Kakutstha) — Anenas — Pṛthulāśva — Prasenajit — Yuvanāśva — Māndhātā—Mucukunda.

Māndhātā got three sons named Ambarīṣa, Mucukunda and Purukutsa and fifty daughters and all the fifty were married to a sage named Saubhari.

2) How Mucukunda attained salvation. (For the story see para 72, under Indra).

3) Other details.

(i) Mucukunda had a daughter named Candramukhī. She was married to Śobhana, son of Candrasena. Once, when Śobhana came to his wife's house it was an Ekādaśī day and all were observing fasting and so Śobhana also did so. The next day Śobhana was seen lying dead. The soul of Śobhana went to the valley of the mountain of Mandara and started enjoying heavenly bliss. One day a pilgrim from the country of Mucukunda named Somaśarmā met the soul of Śobhana and coming to know that it was the son-in-law of their King he started making enquiries about him. Śobhana then said that all his happiness was due to his observing the Ekādaśī Vrata. On hearing the gladdening news about her husband Candramukhī became happy. (Chapter 61, Bhāga 1, Padma Purāṇa).

(ii) This Rājarṣi shines in the court of Yama. (Śloka 21, Chapter 8, Sabhā Parva).

(iii) Once being greatly pleased with him Kubera offered him all the worlds as gift. But Mucukunda refused to accept it saying that he would enjoy only what was earned by him by his own efforts. (Śloka 97, Chapter 132, Udyoga Parva).

(iv) Once Mucukunda just to try the might of Kubera attacked him. The demons sent by Kubera defeated him. He then meditated on Vasiṣṭha and he was able to defeat the army of asuras of Kubera. (Śloka 4, Chapter 74, Śānti Parva).

(v) Once Paraśurāma gave dharmopadeśa (Instruction on morality, piety etc) to Mucukunda. (Śloka 7, Chapter 143, Śānti Parva).

(vi) Once the King of Kāmboja gave him a sword and he gave that sword to Marutta. (Śloka 77, Chapter 166, Śānti Parva).

(vii) He believed in making gifts of cows (Śloka 25, Chapter 76, Anuśāsana Parva).

(viii) Mucukunda hated eating flesh. (Śloka 61, Chapter 115, Anuśāsana Parva).

(ix) Mucukunda is listed among those kings who are worthy of being remembered morning and evening. (Śloka 54, Chapter 165, Anuśāsana Parva).

MUDĀVARTA. A King born in the line of Hehaya kings. (Śloka 13, Chapter 74, Udyoga Parva).

MUDGALA I. A country of ancient Bhārata. This country was once conquered by Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (Śloka 16, Chapter 11, Droṇa Parva).

MUDGALA II. A serpent born of the family of Takṣaka. This serpent was burnt to death at the Sarpasatra of Janamejaya. (Śloka 10, Chapter 57, Ādi Parva).

MUDGALA III. (MAUDGALYA). A sage of Purāṇic fame.

1) Mudgala and Durvāsas. Mudgala had never been provoked even once by anger. Durvāsas once came to the āśrama of Mudgala in Kurukṣetra where he was living on alms received by begging. Durvāsas came naked. Mudgala gave all that he got that day to Durvāsas. The latter ate to his heart's content and smeared on his naked body what remained after his meal. Mudgala never got angry. This continued for days together and not for once did Mudgala get angry. Durvāsas was immensely pleased with this behaviour of Mudgala and he offered to send him to heaven with his body. Devas came with a Vimāna at once. Mudgala after enquiring about the conveniences and luxuries of heaven refused to go. (Chapter 261, Vana Parva).

2) Other details.

(i) Mudgala, who was well versed in the Vedas, was a priest in the Sarpasatra of Janamejaya. (Śloka 9, Chapter 53, Ādi Parva).

(ii) Mudgala visited Bhīṣma lying on his bed of arrows. (Śloka 9, Chapter 47, Ādi Parva).

(iii) Once Śatadyumna gave Mudgala a golden house. (Śloka 21, Chapter 137, Anuśāsana Parva).

(iv) Once the King of Cola conducted a Yāga making Mudgala the chief priest. (Chapter 130, Part IV, Padma Purāṇa).

MUDGARA PARṆAKA. A serpent of the family of Kaśyapa. (Śloka 13, Chapter 103, Udyoga Parva).

MUDGARAPIṆḌAKA. A serpent born to Kadrū of Kaśyapaprajāpati. (Śloka 9, Chapter 35, Ādi Parva).

MUDITĀ. Wife of the Agni named Saha. (Śloka 1, Chapter 222, Vana Parva).

MUDRĀS. When he recites the mantras a Māntrika should use different kinds of gestures with his hands to suit the recital. They are called Mudrās. The Mudrās in general are given below :

The first mudrā is called Añjalimudrā. Añjalī means a cavity formed by folding the hands and joining the open hands together. If the hands thus folded are placed on the breast it becomes a Vandinī mudrā. The hands should be placed on the breast with a slight slant to the left for Vandinī mudrā. The third mudrā is called Ūrddhva mudrā. Hold the left hand first in such a way that the thumb comes on the top and then with the fingers of the right hand bind the thumb of the left hand. The thumb of the right hand should also come to the top. This is called Ūrddhva mudrā. The lowering of the left palm opened up is called Varāhamudrā. (Chapter 26, Agni Purāṇa).

MŪKA I. A serpent born of the family of Takṣaka. This serpent was burnt to death at the Sarpasatra of Janamejaya. (Śloka 9, Chapter 5, Ādi Parva).

MŪKA II. An asura. This demon once went to Arjuna who was engaged in penance in the forests. He had assumed the form of a boar and Arjuna killed him. At once Śiva appeared there in the guise of a forester and contended that the boar was killed by him. A quarrel ensued which ended in a fight between them. In the end Śiva appeared before Arjuna in his real form and granted him the missile Pāśupata. (See under Arjuna).

MŪKA III. A Caṇḍāla devoted much to his parents. A Brāhmaṇa named Narottama went to this caṇḍāla to learn moral lessons from him. (Sṛṣṭikhaṇḍa, Padma Purāṇa).

MUKHAKARṆĪ. A follower of Subrahmaṇya. (Śloka 29, Chapter 46, Śalya Parva).

MUKHAMAṆḌIKĀ. One of the evil spirits tormenting infants. This is called Diti also. (Śloka 30, Chapter 23, Vana Parva).

MUKHARA. A serpent of the family of Kaśyapa. (Śloka 16, Chapter 103, Udyoga Parva).

MUKHASECAKA. A serpent born of the family of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. This serpent was burnt to death at the Sarpasatra of Janamejaya. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 47, Śloka 16).

MUKTĀPHALAKETU. A Vidyādhara youth. The story of this young man who was born to kill Vidyuddhvaja, a fire-brand of an asura, is told thus in Kathāsaritsāgara.

An eminent asura of name Vidyutprabha performed penance to propitiate Brahmā to get a son. As a result of the blessings of Brahmā he got a son invincible to the Devas. He was named Vidyuddhvaja. Even from boyhood he was very brave and daring. Once when he saw some demons standing guard to protect the asura family he said "At present our country is being protected by the hands of others. I shall, therefore, perform penance and obtain boons to remove dhvaja went straight to the forests and performed penance to propitiate Brahmā. When the austerities became severe, Vidyuddhvaja observed fasting without break and the whole world became excited due to anxiety. So Brahmā appeared before him in person and gave him many divine weapons like Brahmāstra. For Brahmāstra the only counter-missile was Pāśupata and so Brahmā warned him that it should be used only when it was found absolutely necessary.

Vidyuddhvaja became arrogant with the possession of such divine weapons and started for Indraloka with his father and his army to conquer Indra. He knew that Indra was ready to face him with a big army headed by Candraketu and Padmaśekhara.

The battle that ensued was very grim. Even Brahmā and Rudra came to see the fight. In a combat with Indra, Vidyutprabha was killed. Vidyuddhvaja saw his father killed, got furious and sent Brahmāstra against Indra who in turn opposed it with Pāśupata. Vidyuddhvaja fainted. Devas sounded the trumpets of victory and left the place.

After some time Vidyuddhvaja awoke from the swoon and lamented thus to those of his men who were around:—"My tapobala (strength resulting from penance) was of no use. I have decided to die fighting against Indra. I do not want to return to a country where my father is not alive. On hearing this his aged minister pointed out to him his mistake in having used the Brahmāstra untimely.

Vidyuddhvaja decided to attain more powers and so he went to the base of the Himālayas to perform penance to propitiate Śiva. Pleased at his penance of five thousand years Śiva appeared in person and asked him to name the boon he wanted. Vidyuddhvaja demanded "I must be able to kill Indra in a battle." Śiva granted him the boon.

Vidyuddhvaja once again attacked Indra with a huge army. In the fierce battle that followed Indra fell down fainting by the weapons of Vidyuddhvaja. At once a voice from the air commanded, "Take away Indra from the battlefield. It is dangerous to keep him there" Vāyu came and carried him away swiftly. When Indra awoke from fainting he went to Brahmaloka with all the other devas.

Vidyuddhvaja established himself in Amarāvatī, the capital city of Indra and lived there enjoying his life as Indra. In the meantime Candraketu, King of the Vidyādharas was sitting in Vāyuloka musing thus, "How long should we remain thus displaced from our positions ! There is no waning of the power of Vidyuddhvaja. My friend Padmaśekhara, King of Gandharvas, has gone to Śivapura to perform penance. I do not know whether he has been blessed by god. Anyhow I will act after hearing from him."

As his musings came to an end Padmaśekhara himself appeared before him and said: "I have come to tell you the glad news that Śiva told me. Śiva said "Son, do not grieve. You will get your country back. You will get a son and a daughter. They will be top-ranking men in all activities. The husband of your daughter will kill Vidyuddhvaja."

A happy Candraketu went to Kailāsa with his wife Muktāvalī and started penance. Padmaśekhara went and mentioned to the devas all that had happened. The devas then went to Mahāviṣṇu and told him of the boons which Vidyuddhvaja had received from Śiva and how he was ruling Indraloka then. After hearing them patiently Viṣṇu said that only Śiva could do anything in that matter. They all then went to the temple of Siddhīśvara and sat there meditating on Śiva.

In the meantime Bhagavān appeared before Candraketu and blessed him and said he would get a very valorous son who would kill Vidyuddhvaja and restore Devaloka to the devas. But after that he would be born as a man on earth by a curse. Padmāvatī daughter of a Gandharva King, would by the strength of her penance release him from the curse and help him to get his original state as a Gandharva. He would then marry Padmāvatī and remain as emperor of the Vidyādharas for ten Kalpas together. Candaraketu and wife came back to Vāyuloka.

At this time Śiva appeared in person to those sitting in the temple of Siddhīśvara and said that a son would be born to Candraketu from a part of his and that valorous youth would kill Vidyuddhvaja. Muktāvalī wife of Candraketu became pregnant at that time and soon delivered a son. He was named Muktāphalaketu. Even from boyhood he became an ardent devotee of Śiva and started performing penance to propitiate Śiva. Śiva appeared before him and gave him the secrets of many techniques in archery.

Vidyuddhvaja was once bathing in a river when muddy waters flowed from up the river and the arrogant demon sent a servant to find out the cause thereof. When he went up by the shores he saw an ox and an elephant bathing in the river. They were the Vāhanas of Śiva and Indra. The elephant was the famous Airāvata. He came back and intimated to Vidyuddhvaja what he saw. The demon then ordered his people to bring the culprits to his side. But the Vāhanas killed those who went to capture them and then they went to their masters, Śiva and Indra. Hearing about this audacity of the demon-chief the Devas challenged the asuras to a fight. This time the army of the devas was led by Muktāphalaketu.

A Gandharva princesss named Padmāvatī grew up to be a beautiful maiden at that time. She was in love with Muktāphalaketu. Padmāvatī was one day plucking flowers from a pond in the Gandharva land thinking about Muktāphalaketu who had gone to war against the asuras. A demoness who was going to eat flesh in the battle-field of the devas and asuras saw Padmāvatī, took her and went up. Muktāphalaketu coming to know of this went up with her and got back Padmāvatī who was struggling in the hands of the demoness like streaks of lightning among clouds. Then he asked her maids about her and they said, "She is the daughter of the Gandharva King Padmaśekhara. Padmāvatī is her name. She is unmarried. But she is betrothed to the son of Candraketu named Muktāphalaketu, who is born to destroy Vidyuddhvaja. She has come here to practise penance for the success of her father and Muktāphalaketu in this war between devas and asuras."

Padmāvatī recognised Muktāphalaketu from the words of his followers. But the latter had to go back to Devaloka under instructions from Indra. The Devāsura war became fierce. By the valour and skill of Muktāphalaketu many of the asuras were killed. The war was won. Muktāphalaketu was given a grand reception at devaloka and was then sent back. Muktāphalaketu did not seem to be happy and everybody thought that it might be due to his having killed Vidyuddhvaja. But the real cause was his separation from Padmāvatī.

A sorrow-stricken Padmāvatī sent her female companion Manoharikā to the country of Vidyādharas to enquire about Muktāphalaketu. What she saw there was a sad Muktāphalaketu pining to see Padmāvatī. Both now understood each other and Manoharikā returned with presents for Padmāvatī from Muktāphalaketu.

At that time Muktāphalaketu went to see a Maharṣi named Tapodhana. Disregarding the objections of the disciple Dṛḍhavrata who stood guard outside the āśrama Muktāphalaketu entered the āśrama with his friend. Dṛḍhavrata followed them. When they entered the āśrama they found the āśrama empty and at once Dṛḍhavrata cursed them both to be born on earth as men. Padmāvatī fainted when she heard the news. When she regained her consciousness she started practising austerities sitting in a temple devoted to Gaurī, wife of Śiva. She meditated on her husband Muktāphalaketu in his life on earth and performed penance to propitate Śiva. By the grace of Śiva Muktāphalaketu got his original life and he married Padmāvatī and led a happy married life. (Taraṅga 2, Padmāvatīlambaka, Kathāsaritsāgara.)

MUKULA. A King of the dynasty of Pūru. Mukula, Sṛñjaya, Bṛhadiṣu, Yavīnara and Kṛmila were the sons of King Bāhyāśva. All these five are known as Pāñcālas. Of these the family of Mukula comprised of Maukulyas. Mukula got a son named Pañcāśva. (Chapter 201, Agni Purāṇa.)

MUKUṬA. A Kṣatriya family. It was in this family that the wicked King Vigāhana was born. (Śloka 16, Chapter 74, Udyoga Parva).

MUKUṬĀ. A follower of Subrahmaṇya. (Śloka 23, Chapter 46. Śalya Parva).

MŪLAKA, A son of Kumbhakarṇa. Mūlaka was born on Mūla day and Kumbhakarṇa deeming that day and the constellation inauspicious threw the baby away. The abandoned child was brought up by honey-bees giving the babe honey. When Mūlaka grew up he became a mighty demon who always tormented people. He was killed by Sītā with the help of Śrī Rāma. (Ānanda Rāmāyaṇa, Rājyakāṇḍa).

MUMUCU. A sage who lived in Dakṣiṇabhārata. (Chapter 165, Verse 39, Anuśāsana Parva).

MUṆḌA I. A warrior of the country of Muṇḍa. In the great battle the Muṇḍas were present in the Kaurava's army. (Śloka 9, Chapter 56, Bhīṣma Parva).

MUNDA II. An asura. (See under Caṇḍamuṇḍas.

MUṆḌAKA. A forest. During his exile Śrī Rāma entered this great forest of Muṇḍaka and paid homage to the sage Agastya. (Araṇya Kāṇḍa, Kamba Rāmāyaṇa).

MUṆḌAVEDĀṄGA. A serpent born of the family of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. This serpent was burnt to death at the Sarpasatra of Janamejaya. (Śloka 17, Chapter 57, Ādi Parva).

MUṆḌĪ. A female follower of Subrahmaṇya. (Śloka 17, Chapter 46, Śalya Parva).

MUÑJAVĀN. A mountain. This is in the range of the Himālayas. Paramaśiva performs his frequent penances at this place. Śiva freely rambles for pleasure with his army of goblins in the caves and shades of trees in this place. Everyday the Sādhyas, Rudras, Viśvadevatās, Vasus, Yama, Varuṇa, Bhūtas, devils, Nāsatyas, Aśvins, Gandharvas, celestial maidens, Yakṣas, Devarṣis, Ādityas, Maruts, and Yātudhānas come to this mountain to worship Śiva. There is neither heat nor cold here. Greying of hairs or rugosity is unknown here. There is no hunger or thirst either. None dies here. On the sides of this mountain gold lies spread like sunlight. (Verses 1-12 Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 8).

MUÑJAVAṬA I. A holy place of pilgrimage devoted to Śiva in the neighbourhood of Kurukṣetra. If one resides here for one night one will get the position of Gaṇapati. (Śloka 22, Chapter 83, Vana Parva).

MUÑJAVAṬA II. A holy place of pilgrimage devoted to Śiva on the banks of the river Gaṅgā. If a man goes to this place and does circumambulation of the idol there singing songs in praise of Śiva he would get the position of Gaṇapati and if he bathes in the Gaṅgā river also, he would be absolved of all sins. (Śloka 67, Chapter 85, Vana Parva).

MUÑJĀVAṬA. A place on the Himālayas. Once Paraśurāma went to this place and calling the sages there instructed them to keep their tufts knotted together. (Śloka 3, Chapter 112, Śānti Parva).

MURA I. A ferocious asura.

1) Birth and acquisition of boons. Mura was the asura born to Kaśyapaprajāpati of his wife Danu. Once Mura was shocked to find the huge heap of dead bodies of the asuras killed by the devas. Mura got afraid of death and did penance for years to propitiate his grandfather and Brahmā appeared before him and asked him to name the boon he wanted. Mura said "Lord, anybody whom I touch with my hands in a battle, even if they are immortal, should die." Brahmā the father of the universe granted him the boon. (Chapter 60, Vāmana Purāṇa).

2) Family life. Mura became the guard of the boundaries of Prāgjyotiṣa, the capital city of Narakāsura. Mura begot four thousand sons. Of these ten were posted to guard the palace of the queens. Mura performed penance and obtained boons. He fenced the boundary of Prāgjyotiṣa with six thousand ropes and arrested the approach of the enemies. These ropes were known in Purāṇas as the Mauravapāśas. (Chapter 38, Dākṣiṇātya Pāṭha, Sabhā Parva).

3) Digvijaya. (Conquest of the quarters). Mura who became arrogant by the power of the boons he possessed went to Mahāmeru and challenged the Yakṣas and Gandharvas to a fight. But none dared to fight with him. Then he went to Amarāvatī and challenged Indra. Indra also did not accept the challenge. Then he entered Amarāvatī with a raised hand. Nobody stopped him. Going to the palace of Indra he said "Oh, thousand-eyed deva, fight with me or leave this place". On hearing it Indra left his place and came to earth. Then Mura took possession of Airāvata and Vajra. He lived in devaloka with Maya, Tāra and other dānavas enjoying the luxuries there. Along with his wife, son and other devas Devendra established himself on the southern bank of Kālindī river.

Then one day Murāsura came to the earth on the Airāvata and landed at a place on the banks of the river Sarayū where Raghu a king of the solar dynasty was conducting a yāga. Murāsura went to Raghu and said "Come on, fight with me or you should stop this yāga. You should not worship the devas." Then the great and brilliant Maitrāvaruṇi sage, Vasiṣṭha told him, "Daitya, what use is there in conquering men of the earth ? You should win against those who are never defeated. If you want to fight go and challenge Antaka, the god of Death. Oh, King of asuras, that boy of an Antaka would never obey your orders. If you conquer him you will have defeated all the world."

On hearing the words of Vasiṣṭha, Mura started to fight Dharmarāja. Yama on hearing that Mura was coming to fight him went to Mahāviṣṇu on his buffalo as he knew he could kill him. Mahāviṣṇu asked him to send Mura to him. Yama returned to his place to see Mura there ready to fight. Yama told him that he would do whatever Mura ordered him and then Mura said "You should stop killing people or I will chop your head off." Dharmarāja replied "Mura, if you had been the person who had appointed me for this job I would have willingly followed your instructions. But I am under the control of somebody else." Mura asked "Who is the person superior to you ? Tell me, I shall surely defeat him." Yama said "There is an individual called Viṣṇu holding a Cakra and a Gadā in his hands living in Śvetadvīpa. He is the person who has appointed me." Mura anxiously asked "Where is his abode? I shall go there myself to conquer him." Antaka replied "You go to the ocean of Milk. It is there that Viṣṇu, the omnipresent protector of the universe is residing." Mura said "Well, I am going to him. But you should in the meantime discontinue your work of killing people." Yama replied "Go and win him. If you defeat him I shall abide by your instructions."

Mura went to fight Mahāviṣṇu. It was at this time that Śrī Kṛṣṇa the incarnation of Mahāviṣṇu attacked the capital city of Narakāsura, Prāgjyotiṣa. Mura went to the help of Narakāsura. The boundary of the city was well-fenced with ropes but Kṛṣṇa cut them all and removed the barrier. In the fight that ensued both Narakāsura and Mura were killed by the celebrated weapon Sudarśana of Kṛṣṇa. From then Kṛṣṇa got the name of Muramathana. (10th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

MURA II. Son of Tālajaṅgha, an asura born of a part of Brahmā. The capital of this valorous Murāsura was in the city of Candravatī.

Murāsura who possessed the brilliance of Brahmā was a nightmare to the devas. Once Murāsura fought against Viṣṇu and in the fierce fight that took place Viṣṇu was defeated and he ran away from the battlefield and started sleeping in a cave named Siṁhavatī in the neighbourhood of Badarikāśrama. Mura went there too. Then Mahāviṣṇu created a Devī through his Yogamāyā and made her kill Mura.

Pleased at the slaughter of Mura, Viṣṇu blessed her and said "From today onwards you will be known as 'Ekādaśī'. You will be capable of wiping off all sins on earth." (Padmapurāṇa, Uttarakhaṇḍa 36. 50-80).

MURA III. (MURU). A Yādava King. He was one of the neighbours of Jarāsandha. The daughter of this Yādava king called Kāmakaṭaṅkaṭā was married to Ghaṭotkaca. (13. 13. Sabhā Parva and Skanda Purāṇa).

MURA IV (MURU). A country of ancient Bhārata. A King called Bhagadatta was the King of this country. (Śloka 14, Chapter 14, Sabhā Parva).

MURĀRI. A Sanskrit dramatist who lived in the 8th century A.D. in India. His father was Bhaṭṭaśrīvarddhamāna. Murāri is the author of the drama 'Anargharāghava'. This drama has eight acts. Murāri has mentioned in his works about Anaṅgaharṣa who lived in 700 A.D. and Ratnākara who lived in 750 A.D. It is therefore, surmised that Murāri must have lived during the latter part of the 8th century. In the writing of dramas Murāri has excelled the Mahāvīracarita of Bhavabhūti and his verses indicate he had the style of Māgha.

MURMURĀ. A river. Agni originated from this river. (Śloka 25, Chapter 222, Vana Parva).

MŪRTI. One of the thirteen daughters of Dakṣaprajāpati. This girl was married to Dharma. Nara and Nārāyaṇa are the sons born to Mūrti of Dharma. (4th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

MŪṢAKA. An ancient place of habitation in Bhārata. (Śloka 56, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

MŪṢAKĀDA (MŪṢIKĀDA). A serpent born to Kaśyapaprajāpati of his wife Kadrū. This serpent sits in the court of Varuṇa and worships him. Once Nārada introduced this nāga to Mātali. (Śloka 10, Chapter 9, Sabhā Parva and Śloka 14, Chapter 103, Udyoga Parva).

MUSALA. A Brahmavādī son of Viśvāmitra. (Śloka 53, Chapter 4, Anuśāsana Parva).

MŪṢIKA. An ancient merchant. In the Kathāpīṭhalambaka of Kathāsaritsāgara a story is told to demonstrate that even without any capital an ingenious and industrious man can earn money.

A merchant got this name by means of his industry. Once a poor man of no resources went to the house of a great merchant named Viśākhila. He was then admonishing a young man of his own caste. The merchant was saying, "See, here is a dead rat on the ground. A clever man would earn money by using this as a capital. To you I have given money for business on several occasions. Not only that you have not increased it but also you have lost it."

The poor man who went to him requested the merchant to give him the dead rat. Viśākhila greatly amused at the request gave him the rat. A rich man bought it for his cat to eat and gave him instead two measures of Bengal gram. He roasted it and made it palatable and then with a pot of water went outside the city gates and sat under a tree on the road-side. Wood-cutters were passing that way carrying loads and he sold the roasted gram and water to them who purchased it with eagerness to ease their weariness. They gave him in exchange firewood and in the evening he took it to the market and sold it. With the money he purchased more Bengal gram and continued the trade as before and after a few days he purchased from them a great stock of firewood. Suddenly there were heavy rains and there was a scarcity of firewood in the market and he sold his stock for good price. With the money thus received he purchased some goods and started a grocery shop. Gradually his business increased and he became a big merchant. Because he started the business from a Mūṣika (rat) he got the nick-name Mūṣika.

MŪṢIKASTRĪ. See under Pañcatantra.

MUṢṬIKA. An asura who was a servant of Kaṁsa. This asura was killed by Balabhadra. (See under Kṛṣṇa).

N

NA. In Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348, the meaning of this syllable is given as 'vṛnda' (collection) and 'Buddha'

NABHAGA. A brother of Ikṣvāku, who had ten brothers named Nabhaga, Śaryāti, Diṣṭa, Dhṛṣṭa, Nariṣyanta, Nābhāga, Pṛṣadhra, Kavi, Karūṣa and Vasumān. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 8).

NĀBHĀGA. A brother of Ikṣvāku. The famous Ambarīṣa was Nābhāga's son. After conquering all the worlds he ruled the kingdom strictly along the path of truth and righteousness. (Vana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 12). In the evening of his life Nābhāga gifted away the whole land to Brahmins. Since she could not leave Nābhāga, Bhūmidevī herself assumed physical form and went to him on the occasion. This emperor never consumed meat. He lives in Brahmaloka according to Chapter 115, Anuśāsana Parva. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 96, Verse 124).

NĀBHĀGĀRIṢṬA. A son of Vaivasvata Manu. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 75, Verse 17).

NABHAKĀNANA. An ancient country in South India. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 59).

NABHASVĀN. A son of Narakāsura. Tāmra, Antarīkṣa, Śravaṇa, Vasu, Vibhāvasu, Nabhasvān and Aruṇa were the seven prominent sons of Narakāsura. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

NABHODA. An eternal Viśvadeva. (A class of gods concerned in the Śrāddha offerings to the Manes). (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 34).

NĀCIKA. One of the Brahmavādin sons of Viśvāmitra (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 58).

NĀCIKETA (NACIKETA). A sage of olden days. Son of Uddālaki, he lived for a long time in the āśrama serving his father, who devoted his time to performing yajñas. Naciketa, who was once sent into the forest for flowers etc. did not find them anywhere there, and he returned to the āśrama without them. Angry at this his father cursed him to be taken to Yamaloka. Accordingly he went to Yamaloka. He waited at the gates for a long time to see Yama, who appeared at last when he sang the praises of Yama. The advice then given by Yama to Naciketa forms the Kaṭhopaniṣad. After studying the advice he returned to his father, who was pleased to find him a great scholar. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 71).

NACIKETAS. A famous hermit. Kaṭhopaniṣad is the exhortation given by Yamadeva (God of death) to this hermit. There is a story to substantiate this statement. The father of Naciketas was the hermit Vājaśravas. This hermit gave as alms, cows which had grown lean by old age and lack of food, at the time of sacrifices. Naciketas felt grieved at this action of his father. He went to his father and sadly asked him "Father, to whom are you going to give me?" The father got angry at the question of the son, and replied; "You are to be given to Yama."

On hearing these cruel words of his father, the boy went to the palace of Yama who had been away. For three days and nights the boy waited there without food and drink. When Yama returned the boy was happy and cheerful and Yama was pleased with him. Yama promised the boy three boons and asked him what boon he wanted. The first boon he asked for was, "Give me the boon that father will be pleased with me and not angry with me." The second was, "Advise me how to attain heaven." The third was, "Tell me the solution of the mystery, whether the soul remains after death." Yama granted the first two boons and said to him, "Boy, this is a difficult question. So ask for another boon such as long life, power over the world, all the pleasures of the world and so on."

The boy replied: "The things you have promised to give me are useless things because after a while the organs of sense will become fragile. The life also will end. So, please tell me. I want the answer to my question." Being greatly pleased at the reply of the boy Dharmadeva expounded to him about the immortality of the soul and the essence of things regarding God Almighty. (Kaṭhopaniṣad).

NACĪNA. An ancient region of the country mentioned in Chapter 38, Sabhā Parva.

NĀDA. See under Pāṭṭu.

NAḌĀGIRI. An intelligent elephant with discriminative power. Mention is made about this elephant on several occasions in Kathāsaritsāgara.

NĀḌĪCAKRA. The ten nāḍīs where the yogī in meditation retains the five prāṇas form the nāḍicakra.

At the bottom of the nābhi (nābhīkanda) innumerable nāḍīs or nerves originate or sprout up. 72,000 such nāḍīs exist at the centre of the nābhi (navel). The whole body is filled with these nāḍīs spread out in parallel and horizontal positions, and they exist in the form of circles entwined with one another. Ten nāḍīs are prominent amongst them, i. e. Iḍā, Piṅgalā, Suṣumnā, Gāndhārī, Hastijihvā, Pṛthā, Yaśā, Alambuṣā, Kuhā and Śaṅkhinī. Any defect or harm caused to any one of these ten nāḍīs may lead even to death.

There are ten Vāyus (winds) in the body. The five Prāṇas called Prāṇa, Apāna, Samāna, Udāna and Vyāna, and the five Vāyus called Nāga, Kūrma, Kṛkala, Devadatta and Dhanañjaya together constitute the ten Vāyus. Prāṇa is the most important Vāyu. This vāyu does the emptying as well as the refilling of the other nine vāyus and thus sustains life. The prāṇavāyu has its existence ever in the chest of living beings and fills the body with air through breathing in, out, coughing etc. It depends on life and it is called Prāṇavāyu as it moves or travels with life.

Apāna leads vāyu downwards. It is Apāna which directs man's food downwards. Also it keeps in its fold urine and semen. This vāyu is called Apāna as its function is adhonayana (leading downwards) as mentioned above. Samānavāyu conveys to the different parts in the body in equal manner the things which living beings eat, drink and smell as also blood, bile, phlegm and vāta. Udāna causes the shivering of lips, flushing of face and eyes and excitement of joints etc. Vyāna causes the limbs to be closed and stretched, and it excites diseases. Nāga exists in nausea, Kūrma in the bulging of the eyes Kṛkala in food, Devadatta in yawning and Dhanañjaya in sound. Dhanañjaya does not quit the body even after death.

Life, Prāṇa, travels through the nāḍīcakra depending on ten different courses, i.e. Saṅkrānti, Viṣuva, Ahar, Rātri, the two ayanas (Dakṣiṇa and Uttara), Adhivāsa Ṛṇa, Ūnarātra and Dhana. Ūnarātra means hiccough, Ṛṇa cough, Dhana breathing and Adhivāsa yawning. Of the two ayanas, Uttara and Dakṣiṇa, the former is the course towards the left and the latter towards the right and Viṣuva is the centre between the two. Saṅkrānti is the change of position of Viṣuva. On he left side of the human body is the nāḍī called Iḍā, on the right side Piṅgalā and between the two Suṣumnā. The prāṇa above these three nāḍīs is Ahar i.e. day and that below is Apāna, i.e. night. Thus every vāyu assumes ten different forms.

There are various kinds of prāṇāyāma (control of breaths). Prāṇāyāma practised with the prāṇa contained in the centre of the body is called Candragrahaṇa; that which supersedes physical principles is called Sūryagrahaṇa. To fill the stomach with as much of vāyu as is desired is Pūrakaprāṇāyāma. To remain like a full pot, all breathing stopped, (Pot completely filled) having closed all the openings—'doors'—of the body is Kumbhaka. The yogī practising Kumbhaka should direct the vāyu upwards in one breath, and that practice is called Recaka. He who does it should be conversant with the yoga of inhalation. Erudite people call it Japa, because when it is practised Śiva resident in one's own body awakes within. Śiva, the King of yogins, chants the mantra (japa) 21,6000 times within the course of one day and one night. The soul chants the mantra—Gāyatrī—of which Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Śiva are the presiding deities, and that is called Ajapa. He who chants Ajapa will have no future births. Prāṇāyāma should be followed by Kuṇḍalinīyoga, Kuṇḍalinī meaning primordial force. The force is a compound of Sun, fire and Moon and its seat is the heart, where it exists in the form of a sprout. Since creation is dependent upon this force power for creation should be invoked on it. The yogin should picture in his mind that nectar flows out of Kuṇḍalinī. He should also realise that the soul within the body possesses form while pure soul is formless. He should address this soul as 'Haṁsa Haṁsa'. Haṁsa means Śiva. Śiva exists and functions inside and outside the body just as oil is in the gingelly seed and fragrance in flower. Soul possessing form is of five kinds. Accordingly Brahmā's seat is the heart, Viṣṇu's the neck, Rudra's, the centre of the throat; Maheśvara's the forehead; and Śiva's, the tip of the prāṇa. Soul without form is just contrary to the above. Its place is where the prāṇa ends. By prāṇāyāma the formless soul may be experienced. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 214).

NADĪJA. An ancient King. In Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 15, it is mentioned that the Pāṇḍavas had sent an invitation to this King to take part in the Bhārata battle.

NĀḌĪJAṄGHA I. A famous stork. It lives in the pond called Indradyumna as an eternal being, without death. (See under Indradyumna).

NĀḌĪJAṄGHA II. A kite, who was a son of Kaśyapa. A friend of Brahmā, it was known as Rājadharmā as well. Nāḍījaṅgha was once killed for food by an ungrateful brahmin. (For details see under Gautama V).

NAḌVALĀ. (a) The wife of Manu, the son of Cākṣuṣa Manu. Ten sons named Ūru, Pūru, Śatadyumna, Tapasvī, Satyavāk, Kavi, Agniṣṭu, Atirātra, Sudyumna and Atimanyu were born to Manu by Naḍvalā. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 18).

(b) The daughter of Prajāpati Vairāja. Manu married this woman. Kuru, Pūru, Śatadyumna, Tapasvī, Satyavān, Śuci, Agniṣṭoma, Atirātra, Sudyumna and Abhimanyu were the ten sons born to Naḍvalā from Manu. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1, Chapter 13).

NĀGA I. An asura (demon). (See under Nāgāstra).

NĀGA II. A class of serpents. It is stated in Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇya Kāṇḍa, Sarga 14, that of the ten daughters of Kaśyapa, from Surasā, the nāgas and from Kadrū, the Uragas (both are serpents) came into the world.

NĀGADATTA. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. This Nāgadatta was killed by Bhīmasena. (Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 157, Stanza 197).

NĀGADHANVATĪRTHA. An ancient holy place of bath, situated in the basin of the river Sarasvatī. Vāsuki stays here. It was at this holy place that Vāsuki was anointed as the King of the Nāgas. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 37, Stanza 3).

NĀGADVĪPA. A region inside the island Sudarśana. This region has the shape of the ear of the hare in the Moon. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 6, Stanza 55).

NĀGALOKA. The world of the Nāgas or Pātāla. Vāsuki is its chief. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 127, Verse 60). There is a pond in Nāgaloka and a drink of its water bestows the strength of a thousand elephants. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 127, Verse 68). Pātāla is thousands of miles away from earth. Its area exceeds a thousand yojanas, and it is surrounded by magnificent forts studded with gems. The steps at the entrance of the fort are also decorated with gold and gems. There are beautiful gardens, fountains and singing birds in Pātāla. Its outer doors are hundred yojanas in length and five in width. (Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 58, Verse 37).

NĀGAPURA. A place situated on the basin of the river Gomatī in Naimiṣāraṇya. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 355, Stanza 3, that in this place, a Nāga named Padmanābha lived.

NAGARA. In ancient days there were rules and principles regulating the construction of a city. The name 'city' could be applied to them only if they conformed to the rules and principles in vogue. The principles and rules of the erection of a proper city are given below:—

One yojana or a half of land should be selected as site.[1] The planning of the city should be commenced after worshipping the deity of Vāstu. There should be four main gates on the four sides, East, West, North and South. The South gate should be in the position of Gandharvapada, West gate in the place of Varuṇa, the North gate in the place of Soma (Moon) and the East fort gate in the place of Sūryapada (the position of the Sun). The haṭṭas (minor gates) should be wide enough for elephants etc. to pass through. The main gates should be six rods wide.

When the city is completed goldsmiths should be settled in the Agni corner[2] (i. e. South East). The courtesans who live by dancing etc. should have their houses on the south side of the city. The houses of actors, those who extract oil, fishermen etc. should be in the corner of Nirṛti (South West). Sheds for chariots, weapons, swords etc. should be on the western side. Dealers in liquor, carpenters, blacksmiths, masons etc. and servants should be given houses in the Vāyu corner i.e North West. The houses of Brahmins, hermits, sages, saints, and such others should be on the north side. In the Īśāna corner (North East) merchants of vegetables and on the eastern side, the authorities of the army should have their houses.

The army (Infantry, cavalry, chariots and elephants) should be put up in the Agni corner. On the south the goddesses who are protectors of women-folk should be consecrated. Archers should live in the Nirṛti corner. Most honourable people, Treasury officers, Leaders of the people, Brahmin groups and such others should have their abodes on the western side. So also Kṣatriyas should have their houses on the eastern side, Vaiśyas on the south and Śūdras on the west of the city. Vaiśyas and horses should be placed on all four sides. The army also should be placed thus. The movable wealth should be placed on the east side and the funeral place on the south. The cattle etc. should be kept on the west, farmers on the north, and the outcastes on the corners. This should be the plan of a city as well as that of villages too.

On the east fort-gate of cities and villages Vaiśravaṇa and Śrī Bhagavatī should be consecrated. They will confer prosperity upon those who visit them. Temples dedicated to Gods should be erected on the western side facing the east. If temples are erected on the east they should face the west and those erected on the south should face the North. For the protection of the city, there should be temples dedicated to Indra, Viṣṇu and such other Gods. If there is no worshipping place in a city, a village, a fort, or a house, such places will be haunted by devils and troubled by diseases etc. If cities are built according to this plan they will afford both salvation and prosperity.

On the east there should be the house of Lakṣmī, in the Agni corner, the kitchen on the south, bedrooms in the Nirṛti corner the weapon-house, on the west the dining hall, in the Vāyu corner, the granary, on the north, the treasury, and the place of worship in the Īśāna corner.

Houses could be erected with four blocks, three blocks or only one block. Houses with four blocks could be made in two hundred and fiftyfive ways by making changes in each block and the open verandas. Houses with three blocks are of four types; with two blocks are of five types; and houses of only one block are of four types. There are houses and cities with twenty-eight open verandas. There are fiftyfive types of houses with four open verandas and seven open verandas. Houses with six open verandas and eight open verandas are of twenty types. In cities houses should have eight open verandas. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 105).

NĀGĀRJUNA. Minister of King Cirāyus. (For details see under Cirāyus).

NĀGĀRI. One of the prominent children of Garuḍa. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Verse 9).

NĀGAŚATA. The mountain where Pāṇḍu did tapas

1 A yojana is approximately twelve Kilometres.

2 To know the corners see under Aṣṭadikpālakas.

along with Kuntī, Mādrī and others. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 118, Verse 47).

NĀGAŚRĪ. Wife of King Dharmadatta of Kosala. Tārādattā was their daughter. (See under Dharmadatta).

NĀGĀSTRA. A destructive weapon (arrow). The following story about the astra is told in the Yuddha Kāṇḍa of Kamba Rāmāyaṇa.

In olden times there was a very powerful and mean asura called Nāga. Brahmā resorted to virulent black magic to kill Nāga, and from the fire-pit arose a terrible goblin called Nāgapāśa. It was deputed to kill Nāga and the Trimūrtis followed it. Nāgapāśa went to the city of Nāgāsura called Vīramahendra, ascended its tower and made a terrible noise the echo of which caused abortion in all the pregnant nāga women. Many children fainted and many died. Nāgāsura deputed his army chieftain Vīrasena with an army to kill the nāga goblin. At the sight of the army the goblin raised another terrible cry, which blew off Vīrasena and his army, reducing them to powder. Then Nāgāsura's minister with a big army attacked the goblin. But the minister was devoured by him, and the army annihilated. Enraged at this defeat of his minister, Nāgāsura attacked the goblin with an army of crores of soldiers. But, within seconds the goblin devoured the mighty army. At last Nāgapāśa and Nāgāsura engaged themselves in a duel which lasted for years. Ultimately the goblin swallowed up Nāgāsura also. Then he went to the Trimūrtis and saluted them. They granted him many boons, and Śiva, in excess of joy, wore it as one of the ornaments round his neck. Some time later Nāgapāśa set out on a tour to see the fourteen worlds, and Śiva specially instructed him not to visit the Śālmali island. He visited the various worlds earning all knowledge and started for mount Kailāsa. On his way he saw Śālmali island, the abode of nāgas, and in violation of Śiva's instructions, he entered the island. The nāgas there did not honour him and his false pride made him tremble with rage. Then the nāgas of the island told him thus : "We have a powerful enemy, who visits us every month, and unless we feed him sumptuously he will devour all of us for food He is to come today, and if you are capable enough, you defeat and drive him off and save us. If you do so, we shall crown you as our King and honour you."

The powerful enemy of the nāgas was Garuḍa and he came. All the nāgas ran off at his sight. Garuḍa then attacked the goblin Nāgapāśa, who was standing unperturbed before him. There being no chance of victory for the goblin he ran away and took refuge with Śiva. Garuḍa also followed him, and demanded of Śiva to return to him, his enemy, the goblin. Śiva told Garuḍa thus:—"If, in future he (the goblin) interferes with anybody connected with you, you may either punish or eat him. Do not do anything with him now".

Garuḍa agreed to the above proposal of Śiva. From that day onwards Nāgapāśa lived in Vaikuṇṭha entwined with nooses. He became the arrow called nāgapāśa or nāgāstra.

NĀGATĪRTHA I. A holy place situated on the boundary of Kurukṣetra. Those who drink the water of this holy bath will obtain the fruit of performing an Agniṣṭoma sacrifice. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 14).

NĀGATĪRTHA II. A holy place which is situated near Gaṅgādvāra or Kanakhala and which keeps up the memory of Kapila, the King of the Nāgas. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 66).

NĀGAVĪTHĪ. Daughter born to Yāmī, the daughter of Dakṣaprajāpati. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 15).

NAGNAJIT I. A Kṣatriya King. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 37, Stanza 21 that this King was born from a portion of an asura called Iṣupāda. This Nagnajit who was the King of Gāndhāra was killed by Karṇa and his sons were defeated by Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 254 and Udyoga Parva, Chapter 43).

NAGNAJIT II. An asura. This asura who had been the disciple of Prahlāda took rebirth as a King named Subala. (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 63, Stanza 11).

NĀGODBHEDA. A holy place near Vinaśana tīrtha. Sarasvatī is supposed to dwell here in invisible form. He who bathes here will attain nāgaloka. (Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Verse 112).

NAHUṢA I. A famous King of the Lunar dynasty.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu in the following order:—Brahmā-Atri - Candra - Budha-Purūravas-Āyus-Nahuṣa.

2) Birth. Āyus, the son of Purūravas, married the princess named Indumatī (Svarbhānukumārī). Nahuṣa was the son born to the couple, thanks to the blessing of the great hermit Dattātreya. Nahuṣa married Aśokasundarī, the daughter of Śiva.

There is a story about the birth and marriage of Nahuṣa and Aśokasundarī in Padma Purāṇa as given below :

Once Śiva and Pārvatī were engaged in love-making in Kailāsa. Pārvatī requested Śiva to show her the best garden ever created by Brahmā. Śiva took her to Nandanavana, where she saw the Kalpa tree, which was beautiful all over, and she asked Śiva about its special features. Śiva replied that anything asked of it would be granted by the Kalpa tree. Pārvatī made a request to the Kalpa tree for a girl just for a test. Instantly a very beautiful girl was born from the tree. Pārvatī named her Aśokasundarī and brought her up as her daughter. Once Pārvatī gave her a boon that she would become the wife of King Nahuṣa of the Lunar family, who would be equal to Indra.

One day, when the beautiful Aśokasundarī was walking with celestial maids in the Nandanavana an asura named Huṇḍa the son of Vipracitti, came there. The moment his eyes fell on Aśokasundarī he fell in love with her. The asura spoke to her of his love and requested her to be his wife. Not only did she refuse his request but also told him that according to the boon given by Pārvatī she would become the wife of Nahuṣa, the King of the Lunar dynasty.

Hearing this Huṇḍa smiled and said : "That righteous man named Nahuṣa is yet to be born in the Lunar dynasty. You will be much older than he. He will not suit you as he will be too young. So don't waste your blooming youth. Come and enjoy life with me." But Aśokasundarī did not concede. Huṇḍa was disappointed. So he began to think about ways to get her. He disappeared from there and reappeared in the guise of a beautiful woman and told Aśokasundarī thus:—"Lady, I have taken a fast. Huṇḍa has killed my husband. I am doing penance to curse him. You may come to my hermitage on the banks of the Gaṅgā".

Aśokasundarī believed these false words. She went with her. Both of them walked on and at last entered a palace. Then only did she understand that it was the palace of Huṇḍa, who assumed his original form and tried to violate her chastity. Aśokasundarī became angry and cursed Huṇḍa that he would die at the hands of Nahuṣa, and ran away to Kailāsa.

Huṇḍa was sad for two reasons. On the one hand he did not get Aśokasundarī and on the other hand he had incurred the curse that Nahuṣa would be his slayer. Now what was the way to get out of the trouble? He asked his minister Kampana to take Indumatī the wife of Āyus by stealth and bring her to his palace. They decided to destroy Nahuṣa in the womb of Indumatī, in case it was not possible to carry her away. They waited for an opportunity.

Āyus was an emperor of righteousness. After the marriage, for a long time he was childless. Once he visited the hermit Dattātreya, in his hermitage. Dattātreya who was the son of Atri and the most famous and the noblest of all the hermits, was quite senseless and red-eyed because of drinking, and without even the Brahmasūtra, was playing with a young woman, seating her in his lap. His body was besmeared with sandalwood and aloe and adorned with garlands and necklaces of pearl and he was surrounded by many women. The King seeing the divine hermit bowed him with reverence and fear. The moment the hermit saw the King, he sat in deep meditation. This continued for a hundred years, at the end of which period, seeing the devotion of the King, he said, "Oh King! why do you take this trouble. I have left off the customs and manners of Brahmins. I have no Brāhmaṇya (Brahminism). I am immersed in liquor, meat and women. So you had better go and serve another Brahmin."

Āyus refuted all that the hermit said and requested him to bless him that he might get a son. Finally the hermit ordered the King to bring meat and liquor in a skull. The King obeyed him. Dattātreya was pleased at the devotion and willingness to serve as a disciple and told the King that a son would be born to him; that the son would be a worshipper of Devatīrthas (Holy baths), that he would not be defeated by devas, asuras, Kinnaras giants, and Kṣatriyas, that he would be the protector of his subjects and that he would be a great scholar in Vedas and Śāstras. Saying this he gave the King a fruit to be given to his wife. The King returned to his palace.

The King gave the fruit to his wife Indumatī. She ate it and became pregnant. One night she gave birth to a son. When the servant-maid went out of the room of confinement Huṇḍa entered into her body and went in. When all were asleep he took the child and ran to his palace at Kāñcanapura. He gave the child to his wife Vipulā and asked her to make a sauce of the child for him. Vipulā gave the child to the servant woman to cook it. With the aid of the cook she hid the child and prepared a sauce with some other flesh. The cook took the child to the hermitage of Vasiṣṭha and placed it at the door of the hermitage, in the night. At dawn Vasiṣṭha came out of the hermitage and seeing the child took it, named it Nahuṣa and brought him up. The King and his wife Indumatī cried for a long time over the loss of the child. At that time Nārada came there and told them that their son would return soon.

Once Nahuṣa was bringing Samits (butea-fuel) when he heard some devacāraṇas (heavenly singers) saying among themselves the history of Nahuṣa. Nahuṣa heard it. He told Vasiṣṭha all that he had heard. Vasiṣṭha told him all the stories from the beginning to his being kidnapped by Huṇḍa. Nahuṣa was amazed at what he heard. He wanted to kill Huṇḍa instantly. So he bowed before Vasiṣṭha and taking bow and arrow went away to kill Huṇḍa.

Believing that he had eaten Nahuṣa, Huṇḍa approached Aśokasundarī again and told her that he had actually eaten Nahuṣa. Aśokasundarī felt very sad when she heard this. At that time a Kinnara named Vidyuddhara and his wife came there. They consoled Aśokasundarī and told her that Nahuṣa was alive. He continued.

"Oh beautiful lady, that great sage will kill Huṇḍāsura and marry you, and live with you as an emperor in this world, as Śakra (Indra) in heaven. From Nahuṣa will be born to you a son named Yayāti, who will be righteous, kind and loving towards his subjects and equal to Indra, and a hundred daughters who would be exceedingly beautiful and of very fine character. Then Nahuṣa will go to heaven and become Devendra. At that time your son Yayāti will be the emperor and will rule his subjects with kindness. Four sons, who would possess prowess and valour, who would be second to none in archery will be born to him. They will be known by the names Turvasu, Puru, Kuru and Yadu. Powerful and mighty sons called Bhoja, Bhīma, Andhaka, Kukkura, Vṛṣṇi, Śrutasena, Srutadhāra and Kāladaṁṣṭra will be born to Yadu. They will become famous by the name Yādavas. Several sons will be born to them. Thus the family of Nahuṣa and yourself will increase."

By this time Nahuṣa had arrived at the spot fully armed and ready to fight Huṇḍa, who was killed in the terrible battle which ensued. Nahuṣa married Aśokasundarī in the midst of devas and after the marriage the couple reached the palace of Nahuṣa. (Padma Purāṇa, fifteen chapters from 102).

3) Nahuṣa became Indra.

Became a python by the curse of Agastya. To get remission from the sin of Brahmahatyā, incurred by killing Vṛtrāsura, Indra hid himself in a cluster lotuses in the Mānasa lake. The devas who were worried due to the absence of Indra, elected Nahuṣa as Indra temporarily. Nahuṣa wanted to get Indrāṇī. Agastya cursed Nahuṣa and changed him to a python. At the sight of the Pāṇḍavas he regained his original form and went back to the world of Indra. (For detailed story see under Agastya).

4) Other details.

(i) Nahuṣa had six sons Yati, Yayāti, Saṁyāti, Āyati, Ayati and Dhruva. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 75, Stanza 30).

(ii) Nahuṣa was allowed to enter heaven because he made himself pure by performing the sacrifice Vaiṣṇava yajña. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 257, Stanza 5).

(iii) Nahuṣa once came down to the world in the aerial chariot of Indra to see the battle of Arjuna. (M.B., Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 56, Stanza 9).

(iv) Nahuṣa got a famous sword from his father Āyus. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 266, Stanza 7).

(v) Nahuṣa had once a talk with the hermit Cyavana about the wealth of cows. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 51).

(vi) On another occasion the hermit Cyavana granted Nahuṣa a boon. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 51, Stanza 44).

(vii) Once Nahuṣa gave to Brahmins lakhs of cows as alms. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 81, Stanza 5).

(viii) It is stated in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Stanza 8, that Nahuṣa, after death, stays in the palace of King Yama (God of death).

(ix) Mention is made in the Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 7, Sūkta 31, about Nahuṣa's becoming Indra.

(x) The names Devarāja, Devarāṭ Devendra, Jagatpati, Nāga, Nāgendra, Surādhipati, Surapati etc. are used in Bhārata as synonyms for Nahuṣa.

NAHUṢA II. A famous nāga (serpent) born to Kaśyapaprajāpati by his wife Kadrū. (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 35, Stanza 9).

NAIDHRUVA. A gotra-originator of the Kaśyapa dynasty. He was the grandson of Maharṣi Kaśyapa and son of Avatsara maharṣi. He was one of the six Brahmavādins of the family of Kaśyapa the other five being Kaśyapa, Avatsara, Raibhya, Asita and Devala. (Vāyu Purāṇa, Chapter 52; Matsyapurāṇa, Chapter 145).

NAIGAMEYA. A younger brother of Subrahmaṇya. He had three younger brothers, i.e., Śākha, Viśākha and Naigameya. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1. Chapter 15).

NAIKABĀHU. A synonym of Pārvatī. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 11).

NAIKAPṚṢṬHA. A particular region in ancient India. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 41).

NAIMIṢA. (NAIMIṢĀRAṆYA).

1) General. Naimiṣa is very famous in the Purāṇas. It is considered to be a sacred place. Nimasar is the modern name for the place, and it is in the Sītāpur zilla of North India.

Śaunaka conducted a yajña here which lasted for twelve years. All the reputed Ṛṣis participated in it, and there Sūta (Sauti) the son of Vyāsa recited to the Maharṣis Mahābhārata composed by Vyāsa. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 1; also see under Sūta).

2) Other information.

Devas once came to this place and conducted a yajña there. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 196, Verse 1).

(ii) Arjuna once visited here the river called Utpalinī. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 214, Verse 6).

(iii) Half of the sin of those who visit Naimiṣa will at once be dispelled. The remaining portion of the sin also will be removed before they return from the place. He who stays for a month and bathes here will derive all the results of Gomeda yajña. He who quits his life here by fasting will attain all the sacred lokas. (Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 59).

(iv) River Gomatī, Yajñabhūmi of the Devas and the yājñic vessel of Sūrya are found at this place. (Vana-Parva, Chapter 87, Verse 6).

(v) Dharmaputra once came to this place with his brothers and bathed here and made gifts of cows. (Vana Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 1).

NAIMIṢAKUÑJA. An ancient sacred place on the borders of Kurukṣetra. The Ṛṣis of Naimiṣāraṇya built this place. A bath here gives the same results as an agniṣṭomayajña. (Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 108).

NAIMIṢEYA. A sacred place. River Sarasvatī which flowed westwards changed its course here towards the east so that it (river) might see the sages of Naimiṣāraṇya. There is a story about it in Mahābhārata as follows:—

The Yajña conducted by Śaunaka at Naimiṣāraṇya ended in the twelfth year. The Ṛṣis who came from various parts of the country were put up in āśramas built on the banks of river Sarasvatī. But, many Ṛṣis did not get accommodation there and they moved eastwards. The River Sarasvatī which felt sorry that the Ṛṣis could not be accommodated also turned and moved eastwards, and thus afforded space for āśramas to be built on her banks. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 37).

NAIRṚTA. An urban region in ancient India. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 51).

NAIRṚTI. A Rākṣasa. His name also occurs in the list of the ancient guards or protectors of the world. (Śanti Parva, Chapter 227, Verse 52).

NAKṢA. The son born to Pṛthuṣeṇa by his wife Ākūti. Mention is made in Bhāgavata, Skandha 5, that he had a son named Gaya of his wife Druti.

NAKṢATRAKALPA. A part of the Atharvaveda. The great hermit Muñjakeśa had divided the Atharvaveda into five parts called Nakṣatrakalpa, Vedakalpa, Saṁhitākalpa, Āṅgirasakalpa and Śānti Kalpa. Nakṣatra Kalpa deals with the order of worshipping the Nakṣatras (stars), Veda Kalpa deals with the activities of Brahmā as a Ṛtvik (family priest), the Saṁhitā Kalpa, the mantras (spells and incantations). In Āṅgirasa Kalpa sorcery and enchantment and in Śāntikalpa, Śāntis (Alleviation or cure) of horse, elephant etc. are given. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 3, Chapter 6).

NAKṢATRAYOGA. It is ordained in the Purāṇas that alms-giving on each star or day will be rewarded by particular attainments. This is called Nakṣatrayoga. The Nakṣatrayoga of each star is given below:—

1) Aśvayuk:— Those who give horses and chariots as alms on this day, would be born again in a noble family.

2) Bharaṇī:— If lands and cows are given to Brahmins on this day, one would get a large number of cows and will become famous in heaven.

3) Kṛttikā:— If rice-pudding is given to Brahmins to their satisfaction on this day the giver will attain the prominent worlds after death.

4) Rohiṇī:— If milk-rice and venison mingled with ghee is given to Brahmins on this day, his indebtedness to the manes would end.

5) Mṛgaśiras:— (Candra nakṣatra). If a milch-cow is given as alms on this day, one would attain heaven.

6) Ārdrā:— If fast is taken and gingelly oil is given as alms on this day, the giver will become capable of crossing mountains and trenches.

7) Punarvasu:— He who gives bread on this day will be born again in a good family.

8) Puṣya:— He who gives gold as alms on this day will enter the world of bright planets.

9) Āśleṣā:— He who gives an ox made of silver as alms on this day, will become fearless.
10) Maghā:— He who gives gingelly as alms on this day will become prosperous with cows.
11) Pūrvaphalguni:— If ghee-rice is given to Brahmins taking fast on this day, the giver would become happy and prosperous.
12) Uttaraphalguni:— He who gives rice of Nīvara variety mixed with milk and ghee on this day will be honoured in heaven.
13) Hasta:— If one gives four horses and an elephant as alms, on this day, one will attain the world of bliss.
14) Citrā:— He who gives oxen and perfumery as alms on this day, will enter the parks in which celestial maids play.
15) Svātī:— He who gives any sort of wealth as alms on this day will become renowned in the worlds.
16) Viśākhā:— He who gives as alms on this day, oxen, milch-cow, grain-box, cart, paddy and diamond will attain heaven.
17) Anurādhā:— He who gives cloth, rice and blanket on this day will be honoured in heaven for a hundred yugas.
18) Jyeṣṭhā:— If Brahmins are given yams and greens on this day one could realize one's wishes.
19) Mūlā:— The manes will be contented, if Brahmins are given roots and nuts on this day.
20) Pūrvāṣāḍhā:— If Brahmins who are expounders of Vedas are given as alms pots of curd, after observing fast, the givers will take birth again in families with many cows.
21) Uttarāṣāḍhā:— He who gives milk and ghee to wise men will be honoured in heaven.
22) Śravaṇa:— Those who give cloth and rug on this day will enter a white conveyance and reach heaven.
23) Śraviṣṭhā:— Those who give cattle, cart and cloth on this day will enter heaven.
24) Śatabhiṣak:— Those who give sandalwood and aloe wood on this day, will go to the world of devas (gods).
25) Pūrvaproṣṭhapada:— He who gives coins on this day will reach the world of bliss.
26) Uttaraproṣṭhapada:— Those who give mutton on this day will be pleasing the manes.
27) Revatī:— He who gives cows which could give potfuls of milk, could reach any world. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 64).

NAKULA.

1) Birth. The fourth of the Pāṇḍavas. Mādrī, the second of the two wives of Pāṇḍu meditated on the twin gods Aśvinīdevas, and recited one of the Mantras given to Kuntī by the hermit Durvāsas and the two sons Nakula and Sahadeva were born to her from those gods. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 111 that Nakula and Sahadeva were immensely handsome.

2) Story of Nakula till the Bhārata battle. Naming and such other rituals after birth were performed for Nakula also as in the case of the other Pāṇḍava children, by the hermits who lived in Śataśṛṅga. The ceremony of investiture with the Brahmā string was conducted by Kaśyapa the priest of Vasudeva. The royal hermit Śuka taught Nakula archery and swordsplay, in his boyhood. When Pāṇḍu died, Mādrī jumped into the funeral pyre and died leaving her two sons with Kuntī. After this the hermits of Śataśṛṅga took Kuntī and her five sons to Bhīṣma at Hastināpura.

At Hastināpura, Nakula learned archery under the great teacher Droṇa. According to the instruction of the teacher, Arjuna had to fight with him (teacher) on the completion of the teaching and during that fight Nakula and Sahadeva were the guards of Arjuna's chariot-wheels. As Nakula was such an expert in wielding the weapons, he got the name 'Atirathi'. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 138, Stanza 30). When the lac-palace was completed at Vāraṇāvata, the Pāṇḍavas shifted to that mansion by the instruction of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. When the lac-palace was set fire to, the Pāṇḍavas escaped by way of an underground passage and reached the banks of the Gaṅgā. There Nakula and Sahadeva fell down weary and exhausted. Bhīma carried them on his shoulders. After Baka had been killed, they proceeded to Pāñcālapura, where at the Svayaṁvara (marriage) Pāñcālī became the wife of the Pāṇḍavas. They returned to Hastināpura. A son named Śatānīka was born to Nakula by Pāñcālī. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Stanza 75).

After that Nakula married Kareṇumatī, the daughter of the King of Cedi. A son named Niramitra was born to the couple. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Stanza 70).

Nakula was then sent to the kingdoms of the west for regional conquest, by Dharmaputra. The wealth of the kingdoms he had conquered, was carried on ten thousand camels to the capital Hastināpura. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 32). After the Rājasūya (imperial consecration) of Yudhiṣṭhira, Nakula went to Gāndhāra to escort Subala and his sons. After the defeat of Yudhiṣṭhira in the game of dice, the Pāṇḍavas went to live in the forest. At that time Nakula put soil all over his body and sat on the ground because of his profound grief. In the forest, once Jaṭāsura carried away Nakula. (See under Jaṭāsura). Nakula killed Kṣemaṅkara, Mahāmaha and Suratha in the forest At Dvaitavana (a forest) Nakula went to a lake to fetch water and was killed by Dharmadeva who appeared in the form of a crane. At the request of Dharmaputra, who came afterwards, all the Pāṇḍavas including Nakula were brought to life again, by Dharma.

During the pseudonymity of the Pāṇḍavas at the city of Virāṭa, Nakula assumed the name Granthika. When the period of pseudonymity expired, Nakula fought with the Trigartas on behalf of the King Virāṭa. On the return of the Pāṇḍavas after the expiry of their forest-life and pseudonymity, when Duryodhana announced that he would give not even a single dot of land to them, Nakula was very eager to decide the matter by a battle. He proposed that the King Drupada should be made the chief captain of the army.

3) Nakula in the Bhārata-battle. The following is the part played by Nakula in the battle of Kurukṣetra.

(i) There was a combat between Nakula and Duśśāsana on the first day of the battle. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 23).

(ii) Nakula fought with Śalya and was wounded. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 83).

(iii) He fought with Śakuni. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 105, Stanza 11).

(iv) He engaged Vikarṇa in a combat. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 110, Stanza 11).
(v) Nakula defeated Vikarṇa. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 106, Stanza 12).
(vi) Nakula defeated Śakuni. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 169, Stanza 16).
(vii) He defeated Duryodhana in a fight. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 187, Stanza 50).
(viii) Nakula killed the King of Aṅga. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 22, Stanza 13).
(ix) He retreated on being defeated by Karṇa. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 24, Stanza 45).
(x) He fought with Droṇa. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 48, Stanza 34).
(xi) Nakula fought with Duryodhana again and was wounded. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 56, Stanza 7).
(xii) He fought with Vṛṣasena. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 61, Stanza 36).
(xiii) Nakula killed Citrasena, Satyasena and Suṣeṇa the sons of Karṇa. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 10).
4) After the Bhārata-battle.
(i) After the battle, Nakula explained to Yudhiṣṭhira, the duties of a house holder. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 12).
(ii) On the instruction of Yudhiṣṭhira, Nakula became the chief captain of the army. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 41, Stanza 12).
(iii) After the battle, the palace of Durmarṣaṇa the son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra was given to Nakula by Dharmaputra. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 44, Stanza 10).
(iv) After the battle when Yudhiṣṭhira performed the horse sacrifice, Nakula and Bhīmasena stood as protectors of the city. (M.B. Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 72, Stanza 19).
(v) Nakula went to the forest to see Kuntī, who was engaged in penance during her latter days. (M.B. Āśramavāsi a Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 8).
5) The end. At the 'great departure' (Mahāprasthāna) of the Pāṇḍavas, Nakula died in the forest. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Svargārohaṇa Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 9, that after death Nakula and Sahadeva attained the position of the Aśvinīdevas.
6) The name Nakula. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 5, Stanza 25 that the name 'Nakula' was given to him because there were none more handsome than he in the family (Kula) of the Pāṇḍavas.

NĀKULA. An ancient country in India. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 50, Stanza 53).

NALA I. Nala the King of Niṣadha. (As the history of Nala is included under the word Damayantī, some points which are not given there, are mentioned here).
(i) Nala was the son of Vīrasena, the King of Niṣadha. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 52, Stanza 56).
(ii) Once the hermit Bṛhadaśva came to the Palace of Vīrasena and praised Nala a good deal and spoke highly of his good qualities to his father. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 53, Stanza 2).
(iii) When Nala was playing in the garden some swans with golden wings flew to the lake in the garden. Nala caught hold of one of them just for fun. The swan said to Nala, "If you will let me off, I will tell Damayantī about you." So it was released. As a reward it flew to the country of Vidarbha and persuaded Damayantī to love Nala. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 53).
(iv) After death Nala sat in the aerial chariot of Indra and witnessed the battle fought by Arjuna with the Kauravas at the end of the forest life of the Pāṇḍavas. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 56, Stanza 10).
(v) Previous birth. Two different stories are narrated about the previous birth of Nala.
1) In the previous birth Nala was a Vaiśya of the city of Pippala in the Gauḍa country. This Vaiśya became abstinent and after leaving off everything he had, he went to the forest. There, according to the advice of a hermit he undertook the fast of Gaṇeśa. As a result he was born as Nala in the next birth. (Gaṇeśa Purāṇa).
2) Nala and Damayantī were foresters named Āhuka and Āhukā. Śiva was pleased with the couple. So they were born in royal families in the next birth, and Śiva in the form of a swan, helped them. (Śiva Purāṇa, Śatarudra Saṁhitā).

NALA II. An ancient hermit. In Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 17, it is mentioned that this hermit lives in the palace of Indra.

NALA III. A monkey. This monkey was the son of Viśvakarmā. Śrī Rāma and the monkey-army went to redeem Sītā from Laṅkā and reached the sea-shore. A bridge had to be made to cross the sea and reach Laṅkā. Immediately Varuṇa the King of the seas appeared there and said, "Nala who is in the monkey-army, is the son of Viśvakarmā. His father had given him a blessing that he would become as expert an architect as his father. So let the construction of the bridge be commenced under his supervision." Accordingly under the supervision of Nala, Rāma's bridge of rock was completed and Śrī Rāma and the army of monkeys reached Laṅkā by walking over this bridge (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa, Sarga 22).
In the battle between Rāma and Rāvaṇa, Nala fought with the giant Tuṇḍaka. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 285, Stanza 9).

NALAKŪBARA. A son of Vaiśravaṇa. He had a brother called Maṇigrīva.
1) Cursing Rāvaṇa, It was the time when Rāvaṇa was ruling over Laṅkā and terrorising the fourteen worlds. As he was carrying on his conquests, once he came to a round rock near Kailāsa. It was night. Rambhā had fixed a rendezvous near the rock that night with Nalakūbara. The full moon shone bright. The radiance of the moon rendered Kailāsa and its vicinity most beautiful. Filled with passion Rāvaṇa could not sleep at all. In the silence of that calm night he heard the tinkling of bangles. Rāvaṇa opened his twenty eyes and looked in that direction. He saw an extremely beautiful woman clad in splendid garments and ornaments going along the way. He ran to her and caught hold of her hand. She was flurried and confused at his sudden appearance. So she said, "Oh Lord ! I am the wife of Nalakūbara who is the son of your brother Kubera. My name is Rambhā. Your brother's son is your son too. So don't do any harm to your son's wife." But Rāvaṇa did not pay any heed to her words. He lifted her up and placed her on the round rock and raped her. Before dawn Rambhā, who had become like the lake of lotus trodden by a mad elephant, went to Nalakūbara and told him everything. Nalakūbara became very angry and cursed Rāvaṇa. "You, who have become blind with lust, shall not touch a woman who does not reciprocate your love. If you do so your head will be split into seven pieces." It was because of this curse that Rāvaṇa did not touch Sītā though she was kept in his harem. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa; Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 28).

2) Another wife of Nalakūbara. It is mentioned in Kathāsaritsāgara, Madanamañcukālambaka, Taraṅga 3, that, of the two daughters, Svayamprabhā and Somaprabhā of Maya, Somaprabhā was the wife of Nalakūbara.

3) The curse of Nārada. Nalakūbara and Maṇigrīva, the sons of Kubera were playing with celestial maidens in the Ganges in nudity, when Nārada came by that way. The hermit was returning after visiting Viṣṇu. The moment the celestial maids saw Nārada they put on their clothes and stood aside bowing before Nārada. Nalakūbara and Maṇigrīva did not see Nārada. They ran here and there, playing with no clothes on. At this, Nārada got angry and cursed them that they would become two "Marutu" trees (Terminalia alata) on the earth. They became very sad and requested for liberation from the curse. Nārada told them they would get liberation from the curse when they saw Śrī Kṛṣṇa, the incarnation of Viṣṇu. Accordingly Nalakūbara and his brother took birth near the house of Nandagopa in Ambāḍi, as double "Marutu" trees. It was the period of the childhood of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Once Śrī Kṛṣṇa swallowed mud, and Yaśodā tied him to a mortar. The child dragged the mortar to the Marutu tree and got himself between the double trees. Immediately the trees regained the original forms of Nalakūbara and Maṇigrīva. They paid homage to Śrī Kṛṣṇa, who blessed them, and both of them returned to Vaiśravaṇapurī. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 10).

NALASETU. The rock bridge built by the monkey named Nala. The bridge over which Śrī Rāma and the monkey-army crossed the sea to Laṅkā was built under the supervision of Nala and so the bridge came to be called Nalasetu. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 283, Stanza 45).

NALATANTU. One of Viśvāmitra's sons who were expounders of Brahman. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 58).

NĀLĀYANĪ. See under Pāñcālī.

NĀLĀYIRAPRABANDHAM. See under Nammālvār.

NALINĪ. A branch of the Ganges. When the heavenly Gaṅgā came down to the earth as a result of the penance of Bhagīratha, Śiva received it on his head. It is seen in Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Sarga 43, that when the Gaṅgā fell drown from the head of Śiva it split into seven river-arms called Hlādinī, Pāvanī, Nalinī, Sucakṣus, Sītā, Sindhu and Gaṅgā. The Ganges which flows through North India is one of these seven river-arms.

NALOPĀKHYĀNAPARVA. A sub Parva (section) of Mahābhārata. This sub section consists of Vana Parva, Chapters 52 to 79.

NĀLU (FOUR). Various things mentioned in the Purāṇas having some association with four (Nālu) are given below :—

1) Four distances. In the case of an elephant one must keep a distance of 1000 kols, a horse 100 kols, horned animals 10 kols, evil people, unli mited number of kols. (1 kol is equal to a metre).

2) Four Adhikārins. Manda (the very ordinary), Madhyama (medium standard), Uttama (best) and Uttamottama (the very best).

3) Four Anubandhas. (Factors). In philosophy there are four factors called Viṣaya (subject matter), Prayojana (purpose), Śambandha (relationship between factors) and Adhikārin (the deserving or eligible person).

4) Four Antaḥkaraṇas (Internal organs). Manas (mind), Buddhi (intellect), Cittam (heart) and Ahaṅkāra (ego). Imagination is the function of the mind, decision that of Buddhi; to retain knowledge gained in orderly form is the function of Cittam and self-respect that of Ahaṅkāra.

5) Four Anvavāyas. Satyam (truthfulness), Dama (Self control), Ārjavam (straightforwardness) and Ānṛśaṁsyam (not to be cruel).

6) Anvavedas Four. Yajña (sacrifical offerings), Dāna (alms-giving, gifts), Adhyayana (learning) and Tapas (penance).

7) Four Apātrīkaraṇas. (Not suited to the particular station or place in life). Brahmins are forbidden from receiving bribes, engaging in trades, service of Śūdras and uttering lies.

8) Abhinayas Four. (Acting). Āṅgikam (where gestures and bodily actions are used to convey ideas). Sāttvika Subjective feelings expressed by perpiration etc. Āhāryam (extraneous), Vācikam (by words of mouth).

9) Abhyāsaviṣayas Four. (Subjects for practice and training). Vinaya (humility), Damana (control of mind), Indriyanigraha (controlling the sense-organs) and Bhūtadayā (kindness).

10) Amṛtas Four. (Nectar). Good wife, talk of children, present from King and honourable food.

11) Alaṅkāras Four. (Ornaments). For the stars, Moon; for women, husband; for earth, King and for all, education (learning).

12) Alaṅkārasādhanas Four. According to rhetorics, Atiśaya (excellence), Sāmya (simile), Vāstavam (matter of fact, as it is) and Śleṣa (one word with two meanings) are the Alaṅkārasādhanas.

13) Avasthās Four. (States, conditions).

A. Śaiśavam (childhood), Kaumāram (boyhood), Yauvanam (youth) and Vārdhakyam (old age).

B. Jāgrat (wakefulness), Svapnam (dream), Suṣupti (sleep) and Turīyam (being one with the supreme soul).

14) Astraprayogalakṣyas Four. (Objects of shooting arrows). Sthiram, Calam, Calācalam, Dvayacalam.
When the archer and the object of his shooting remain motionless the object is called Sthiram. When the object is moving but the archer is not, the object is called Calam. When the case is just the opposite of the above it is Calācalam. When both are moving it is called Dvayacalam.

15) Ākhyāyikāguṇas Four. (Factors of the novel).
Kathābandha (plot or theme), Pātraprakaṭanam (exposition of characters), Rasapuṣṭi (sentiment) and Gadyarīti (prose style).

16) Ābharaṇas Four (Ornaments). For man, shape or form; for form, quality or merit; for quality, knowledge or wisdom and for wisdom, patience or forbearance.

17) Āyudhas Four. (Weapons). Mukta, Amukta, Muktāmukta and Yantramukta. (See under Dhanurveda).

18) Āvaraṇas Four. (Covering, Protection). For earth the sea, for house the compound wall, for country the King, for women chastity.
19) Āhārādis Four. (Food etc.). Āhāra (food), Nīhāra (Evacuation), Maithuna (sexual act), Nidrā (sleep).
20) Āhāravastus Four. (edibles). Khādyam (eaten by munching with teeth and chewing), Peyam (that which is drunk), Lehyam (licked with the tongue)and Bhojyam (that which is not included in the above three).
21) Ṛṇas Four. (Obligations, debts). Debts due to Devas, Ṛṣis, Pitṛs and Men. One pays back one's debts to Devas by performing yajñas. By Svādhyāya (self-study) and tapas one pays the debt due to Ṛṣis; by procreation of children and libation offerings that due to Pitṛs and by truthfulness, hospitality etc. that due to people are repaid.
22) Ṛtviks Four. Adhvaryu, Udgātā, Hotā and Brahmā. The first of the four should be an erudite scholar in Yajurveda, the second in Sāmaveda, the third in Atharvaveda and the fourth in all the four Vedas.
23) Kavis Four. (Poets). He who boasts about himself in secret is called Udātta; he who cries down others and indulges in self-praise is known as Uddhata; he who proclaims others' merits is called Prauḍha and he who shows humility is called Vinīta.
24) Kukkuṭaguṇas Four. (Traits of the Cock). To rise early in the morning, to struggle for existence, to share whatever is got with relations and to work and earn one's own food—these are the qualities of the Cock.
25) Grāhyas Four. (Acceptables).

A. Nectar even from poison, good advice even from boys, good action even from enemies and noble and chaste brides even from low families are to be welcomed.

B. Literacy (learning of alphabets) should be accepted from brahmins, food from mother, pan from wife and bangles from King.

26) Caturaṅgas Four. Elephant, Horse, Chariot and Infantry.
27) Āśramas Four. Brahmacarya (student life), Gārhasthya (married life), Vānaprastha (anchorite, forest-life) and Sannyāsa (Renunciation).
28) Yugas Four. Kṛta, Tretā, Dvāpara and Kali.
29) Vargas Four. Dharma, Artha, Kāma and Mokṣa.
30) Upāyas Four. (Expedients). Sāma, Dāna, Bheda, Daṇḍa.
31) Cikitsāpādas Four. (Four elements in the treatment of patients). Vaidya (doctor), Rogin (patient), Auṣadham (medicine) and Paricāraka (attendant).
32) Jātis Four. (Castes). Brāhmaṇa, Kṣatriya, Vaiśya and Śūdra.
33) Tyājyas Four. (things to be shunned).

A. Horse returning after bath, elephant in its rut, love-lorn bull and wicked scholar.

B. Evil action, unhealthy region, evil wife and bad foods.

34) Dānas Four. (Gifts). Gifts daily given without expecting return or result is Nityadāna. Gifts given to scholars (pundits) for the sake of alleviation of or redemption from sin is Naimittikadāna. Gifts given for welfare and prosperity is Kāmyakadāna. Offering made to propitiate God is Vimala.
35) Nāyakas Four. (Heroes) Dhīrodātta, Dhīroddhata, Dhīralalita, Dhīraśānta.
36) Nārīs Four. (Women). Padminī, Śaṅkhinī, Citriṇī, and Hastinī.
37) Pramāṇas Four. (Means of valid knowledge), Pratyakṣa, Anumāna, Upamāna, and Śabda.
38) Mokṣas Four. (Salvation). Sālokya, Sāmīpya, Sārūpya and Sāyujya.
39) Four Yogas. Jñānayoga, Bhaktiyoga, Karmayoga and Dhyānayoga.
40) Four Śatrus (Enemies). Mother leading an immoral life; father who incurs debt; foolish son and beautiful wife.
41) Four Śāstras. Nītiśāstra, Tarkaśāstra, Manusmṛti and Kāmaśāstra.

NAMASYU. A King of Yayāti's family. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

NAMBŪTIRIS. (Malayāla Brahmins). Logan says that the Nambūtiris were the batch of Aryans that settled down in Kerala after the Nairs. The historians like Śaṅkuṇṇi Menon and others have stated that the Nambūtiris had come to Kerala from the banks of the rivers Godāvarī, Narmadā and Kāverī. Famous historians have inferred that the progress of the Aryans to the south took place between 1000 and 325 B.C. But Thomas Fawlks thinks that there were Nambūtiri priests and hermits in South India, during the time of Buddha. N.K. Datta, the author of the book "Aryanisation of India", is of opinion that during the time of the invasion of Alexander, the Aryans had spread all over India and Ceylon. Thus historians have not yet come to an agreement as to the correct period of the exodus of the Aryans to the south. Anyhow in the Geography of Ptolemy mention is made that half a degree east to Taibis there was a place called Brahmagāra. It may be assumed that Brahmagāra may be Brahmāgāra (settlement of Brahmins). It has been decided definitely that the period of Ptolemy was A.D. 2nd century, and in that case the Brahmins must have settled in the south before that period.

Though the period of the 'Saṅgha poets and their works' has been assessed differently by different scholars, the majority have fixed it as the first few centuries of A.D. In these Saṅgha poems the gods of the Aryans are praised. The gods Sūrya (the Sun), Candra (the moon), Varuṇa (god of water), Baladeva (Śrī Kṛṣṇa's elder brother) and Viṣṇu (Supreme God) are specially mentioned in 'Cilappadikāra'. The Saṅgha work 'Puranānūru' is an encomium to the purity of the Vedas and Agnihotra Brahmins (Brahmins who maintain the holy fire by burnt offering). In those days the King carried on the administration of the country with the advice of Brahmins. Economics, Grammar and law were taught in royal palaces. Pañcākṣara and such other spells, reading of the scriptures, Aryan ways of marriage, Recitations of Purāṇic stories etc. were prevalent in those days. Maṇimekhalā is stated to have reached the capital of the Cera King and learned Vedas and Sāṅkhya doctrines (one of the six systems of Indian Philosophy dealing with evolution) from the prominent teachers here. The diction of both the works 'Cilappadikāra' and 'Maṇimekhalā' is, to a certain extent, indebted to Sanskrit. Many of the Sanskrit poetic traditions are used in these poems. When these proofs are taken into account, it is not wrong to presume that in the period from 1st century to 5th century A.D. Aryan civilization prevailed in south India. If, during this period, Aryan civilization had taken root to such an extent in south India, the advent of the Aryans to south India must have taken place at least two or three centuries prior to this period.

The Nambūtiris of Kerala are called Malayāla Brahmins. Between them and the Brahmins of other countries there are differences in manners and customs. They are given below:—

1) The Brahmins of other parts of India do not perform agnihotra rites (maintaining the holy fire by burnt offering) so elaborately as the Malayāla Brahmins.

2) Among the sixteen purificatory rites, Agnisvīkāra (or taking up of sacrificial fire) is an important item in Malabar. From Vedic period Agni (Fire) had become a prominent God. Most of the verses in Ṛgveda are concerned with fire. The attachment of the Brahmins of Kerala to fire shows their antiquity.

3) Much importance is attached to the learning of scriptures and priest-hood in Kerala. There were 18 Maṭhas and residential institutions in Kerala for giving religious education.

4) The peculiar type of recitation of the Vedas of the Malayāla Brahmins and the accompanying gestures of their hands and the movements of the head at the time of recitation are considered by them to be ancient. Even today certain sounds are produced by them in the Vedic way. (For instance Samrāl—Samrāṭ; Vaṣar—Vasaṭ; Īḍe— Īle etc.).

5) In Malabar there is a customary atonement or expiation called Vrātyastoma for those Brahmin boys who had not undergone investiture with the sacred thread within the stipulated time. This shows the stress laid on the need of religious education.

6) The custom that all the male members of the family except the family chief should be engaged in 'Snātakavṛtti' (should remain celibates even after education) is prevalent only in Malabar.

7) Much importance is attached to evening worship in Kerala. At that time the Vedic gods are not hailed. But Brahmins of other places do not seem to attach so much importance to this practice.

8) The Brahmins outside Kerala repeat the mantras uttered by the priest and perform the functions, at the time of meditation and worship. But in Kerala for meditation and worship with or without incantations a priest is not necessary. This indicates the practice in vogue during Vedic period before the priestly class became predominant.

9) The Nambūtiris have recognized only three Vedas.

10) The Kerala Brahmins wear only one sacred thread.

The Nambūtiris became predominant in Kerala and began to have a hand in the various spheres of activities. Thus the Aryan civilization shook the customary faith and religion of Kerala from top to bottom and the Aryan religion hoisted its flag of victory here. Aryan literature also found its way into Kerala. The authors and scholars in Kerala began to imitate it. The Nambūtiris erected temples in Kerala with the help of local chieftains. The sounds of alphabets, sentence pattern, grammar, poetic tradition etc. of Malayālam language underwent a thorough change. Sanskrit education spread far and wide. They spread Aryan civilization through 'Kūttu and Kūṭiyāṭṭam (Narration of mythological stories with gestures etc. and collective dance) Pāṭhaka and Saṅghakkali (Musical lectures and dramatic performances), in connection with festivals in the temples. They absorbed many of the customs and manners of Kerala. The Nambūtiris who had adopted priest-hood as their career had amassed wealth and landed property in the capacities of priests and authorities of the temples. Some of them became Kings (e.g. King of Iḍappally, King of Campakaśśeri etc.). They kept up the contact with the people of the locality by means of morganatic marriages and made their positions secure. Thus these people, though a small minority, were able to hold sway over the people of Kerala for a long time.

NAMMĀLVĀR. The first of the twelve great Ālvārs. The Śaivite devotees of South India are called Nāyanārs and the Vaiṣṇavite devotees, Ālvārs. The word ālvār means, a devotee of God. The Vaiṣṇava religion says that the twelve ālvārs are the incarnations of Ādiśeṣa and Garuḍa the followers and the embodied deities of the Conch and the discus the weapons of Viṣṇu. It is mentioned in Śrīmad Bhāgavata that divine persons who are followers of Viṣṇu will incarnate on the earth in Kaliyuga and that their native places will be the banks of the holy rivers in Drāviḍa such as Tāmraparṇī, Kṛtamālā (Vaigai), Payasvinī (Pāpanāśinī) and Kāverī. It is stated about these divine persons in Viṣṇumāhātmya that they would take birth in any caste and compose Drāviḍa songs and thereby propagate lofty truths. The collection of Drāviḍa songs thus composed by the ālvārs is called 'Divya Prabandha' (Divine Composition).

There are four thousand songs in four parts in the Divine composition and hence it has the name Nālāyira Prabandham 'Four thousand composition'. The theme of the 1st and 2nd thousands is a secret known as 'Tirumantra' (the divine spell). The third thousand is concerned with the "Caramaśloka" (the verse of death) and in the fourth "Dvayamantra" is dealt with. The Tirumantra (the divine spell) is the collection of of three words Om, namaḥ and Nārāyaṇāya.

'Om' and'namaḥ'are explained in the first thousand and the word Nārāyaṇāya in the second thousand of the composition. The Caramaśloka (the verse of death) is the last utterance of the songster-priest. It is a propagation of the theme of seeking refuge. The individual soul has to seek refuge under the universal soul, unconditionally. This is what is called 'Prapatti. Dvayamantra (the two fold mantra) deals with the aim and the ways for the realisation of that aim. It would be possible only by the help of Lakṣmī Bhagavatī (the goddess Lakṣmī). It is a verse of only two lines.

The first and foremost among the ālvārs is Nammālvār. 'Tiruvāymoli' is his work. It had been predicted in Vaiṣṇava Purāṇa that at the beginning of Kaliyuga. Viṣṇu Senānī named Viṣvaksena would incarnate as Nammālvār and that he would reinstate the Vaiṣṇavite religion. It is hinted in Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa that Nammālvār would incarnate in Śrīnagarī (Tirunagari) on the banks of river Tāmraparṇī in the Kingdom of Pāṇḍya. As was fore-told Nammālvār was born in Tirunagari. The present name of this place is 'Ālvār tirunagari'.

There is a traditional lore about the birth of Nammālvār. There was a ruling chief named Kāriyār in Tirunagari. Udayamaṅkayār was his wife. The couple once went to the Vaiṣṇavite temple near Mahendra mountain known as Tirukkuruṅkuṭi temple and prayed to the god consecrated there called Nambi, for a son. Reply was given through the priests that the god himself would take birth as their son. Accordingly Udayamaṅkayār gave birth to Nammālvār. Scholars say that the birth of Nammālvār was on the 43rd day of Kailyuga-that is in B.C.3102.

Nammālvār had another name Parāṅkuśa. Some believe that he was the incarnation of portions of Seneśa and the jewel Kaustubha. Some say that there are portions of Mahāviṣṇu, Pañcāyudha, Ādiśeṣa and Seneśa in Nammālvār. The Vaiṣṇavites have given Nammālvār a lofty place. The infant born to Kāriyār and Udayamaṅkayār was not an ordinary one. Generally infants at birth are covered with a case of air called 'Śaṭha'. Because of this they lose the memory of previous birth. But Nammālvār had no Śaṭha. So he got the name 'Śaṭhakopa'. The parents were amazed at the infant which lay still without beating its legs, and crying or sucking its mother's breasts. The bright infant was taken to the Vaiṣṇavite temple on the twelfth day. Because of his difference from ordinary infants he was named Māra. A golden cradle studded with jewels was hung on the branch of a tamarind tree and laying the child in it, the parents went home. That tamarind tree still stands there. The devotees believe that that tree also is a portion of Ādiśeṣa.

Nammālvār spent sixteen years under the tamarind tree without opening the eyes or uttering a single word. In the sixteenth year a wise man who could understand the dignity of Nammālvār came there. The person was the Madhura Kavi Ālvār. After this Nammālvār sat under the tamarind tree and sang songs of praise of Nārāyaṇa. Madhura Kavi set tunes for them and sang them. Everybody who heard them was struck with wonder and stood still. Nammālvār spent his days under the tamarind tree in meditation and contemplation. At the age of 35 he entered heaven.

NAMUCI I. A fierce Rākṣasa (giant). It is stated in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 22, that this giant was the son of Prajāpati Kaśyapa by his wife Danu. This fierce giant was killed by Indra. There is a story in the Purāṇas describing how Namuci was killed.

Under the leadership of Namuci a great army of the giants invaded the realm of the gods. Indra came with an army of devas. Though the giants were defeated in the battle Indra was not able to kill Namuci. To save himself from the attack of Indra, Namuci got into the radiance of the Sun and hid himself there. Indra found him out and made a treaty with him, the conditions of which were as said by Indra:—

"Oh, noble giant, I will not kill you by wet thing or dry thing, in the night or in the day. What I say is true."

According to this treaty it became impossible for Indra to kill Namuci either with wet things or with dry things and either in the day time or in the night. Only when Indra had agreed to these conditions did Namuci come out.

The battle continued and Indra drove away Śumbha and Niśumbha the elder brothers of Namuci, who went to Pātāla. Indra ran after Namuci and in the evening Indra found him hiding on the sea shore and killed him with the foam of the sea. As Indra had violated the condition of the treaty the severed head of Namuci followed Indra. With this Indra incurred the sin of Brahmahatyā (killing a Brahmin). To get remission from this sin Indra approached Brahmā. He was advised to bathe in Aruṇāsaṅgama and doing so Indra got remission of his sin. From that day onwards Aruṇāsaṅgama became a holy bath (tīrtha). (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 40).

NAMUCI II. An army-captain of Hiraṇyākṣa. In the battle with Indra, Namuci made him unconscious and the elephant Airāvata thrust its tusks on the ground. After that by his magic and sorcery he created many creatures. But Viṣṇu destroyed all those creatures with his discus Sudarśana. At last Indra killed Namuci. (Padma Purāṇa, Sṛṣṭikhaṇḍa).

NAMUCI III. Another valiant captain of Hiraṇyākṣa. He sent five arrows against Indra in a fierce battle. But Indra cut all the five arrows in the midway. Then by his magic and sorcery Namuci spread darkness everywhere. Indra defeated that strategy also. Then Namuci dashed forward and taking hold of the tusks of Airāvata shook Indra down. Indra stood up and cut off the head of Namuci with his sword. (Padma Purāṇa, Sṛṣṭi Khaṇḍa).

NANAGĀBHU. A King of the family of Yayāti. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

NANDA I. (NANDAKA). See under Nandagopa.

NANDA II. (See under Vararuci).

NANDA III. A son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. In the battle of Kurukṣetra, Bhīmasena killed him. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 51, Stanza 19).

NANDA IV. A serpent born in the family of Kaśyapa (Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 103, Stanza 12).

NANDA V. A warrior of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 64).

NANDA VI. A synonym of Bhagavān Viṣṇu. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 149, Stanza 69).

NANDĀ I. Wife of Harṣa the third son of Dharmadeva. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Stanza 33).

NANDĀ II. A river. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 214, Stanza 6, that while Arjuna had been engaged in a pilgrimage visiting the holy places in the east, he reached the banks of the rivers Nandā and Aparanandā. Many of the scholars are of opinion that this river flowed through the eastern side of the forest Naimiṣaraṇya. When the hermit Dhaumya talks about the holy places of the east to Yudhiṣṭhira, he says as follows about the river Nandā. "The beautiful mountain 'Kuṇḍoda' is a place which abounds in roots, fruits and water. Nala the King of Niṣadha, who was weary of thirst rested here. There is a holy temple here called Devavana which is thronged by hermits. Near this temple there is a mountain through the top of which, two rivers Bāhudā and Nandā flow." (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 87).

During the time of the forest life of the Pāṇḍavas, Yudhiṣṭhira travelled with the hermit Lomaśa, through the basin of the rivers Nandā, and Aparanandā. During the Paurāṇic times some deities had lived in the basin of the river Nandā, and men began to come there to visit the deities. The devas (gods) did not like this and so they rendered the place inaccessible to men. From that time onwards the river basin of Nandā and the mount Hemakūṭa have become prohibited area for human beings. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 110).

NANDABHADRA. A righteous Vaiśya. Having been childless for a long time this Vaiśya, who was an ardent devotee of God Kapileśvara, got a son in his old age. But he died after his marriage. With this calamity Nandabhadra became a man of abstinence and began to try to acquire spiritual knowledge. After a while a seven-year-old boy appeared before the Vaiśya and quenched his thirst for spiritual knowledge. Later with meditation on Śiva and the Sun, Nandabhadra attained heaven. (Skanda Purāṇa, Chapters 1, 2 and 46).

NANDAGOPA. Foster-father of Śrī Kṛṣṇa.

1) Previous birth. There are two stories about the previous birth of Nandagopa.

(i) Droṇa, one of the eight Vasus and his wife Dhārā once committed a mistake, not becoming the gods. Brahmā who found it out, cursed the couple to take birth in the family of cowherds. Droṇa and Dhārā prayed for remission. Brahmā told them that Mahāviṣṇu would incarnate as their son as Śrī Kṛṣṇa and that after that birth they would be liberated from the curse. Accordingly Droṇa took birth as Nandagopa and Dhārā as Yaśodā. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

(ii) Once a King named Candrasena sat in the Mahākāla temple in Ujjayinī to perform penance. Śiva was pleased at his penance and gave him a jewel. That brilliant precious stone fulfilled all his desires. Other kings heard about this jewel and came to war to take possession of the jewel. The King came and took refuge in the temple.

At this time a son named Śrīkara was born to a cowherdess in Ujjayinī. He was god-fearing since childhood. Śrīkara came to Mahākāla temple and sat in worship and meditation and attained the goodwill of Śiva. The Kings who came in chase of Candrasena could not approach the temple because of the unearthly brilliance that radiated from Śrīkara. Not knowing the reason the kings stood staring and Hanūmān instantly appeared before them and said. "Hear this, oh Kings! Śrīkara is not a mere cowherd boy. The God is pleased with him. In his eighth birth from today he will be born in Ambāḍi under the name Nandagopa. Then Mahāviṣṇu will incarnate as the son of Nandagopa under the name Śrī Kṛṣṇa."

Nandagopa was the eighth birth of this Śrīkara. (Śiva Purāṇa, Śanipradoṣamāhātmya).

2) Varuṇa carried away Nandagopa. While Śrī Kṛṣṇa was living in Ambāḍi as the foster-son of Nandagopa, Nandagopa went to bathe in the river Yamunā. While he was taking a dip under the water a servant of Varuṇa carried him away to the realm of Varuṇa. As Nandagopa disappeared the people of Ambāḍi ran here and there in grief. At last Śrī Kṛṣṇa jumped into the water and reached the city of Varuṇa, who praised Śrī Kṛṣṇa and said that it was to see Śrī Kṛṣṇa that he had carried Nandagopa away, and requested for pardon. Śrī Kṛṣṇa pardoned Varuṇa and brought Nandagopa to Ambāḍi. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

3) Nandagopa swallowed by a great mountain-snake. (See under Kṛṣṇa, Para 21).

NANDAKA I. A tabor. Whenever the flag of Yudhiṣṭhira was hoisted, two tabors called Nandaka and Upanandaka used to be beaten. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 27, Stanza 7).

NANDAKA II. A sword of Mahāviṣṇu. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 147, Stanza 15).

There is a story explaining how Mahāviṣṇu came by this sword Nandaka. In days of old Brahmā performed a sacrifice on the banks of the heavenly Gaṅgā on a peak of mount Mahāmeru. While Brahmā was sitting in deep meditation in the sacrifice Lohāsura was seen coming to cause disturbance to the sacrifice. Immediately a male being came into existence from the meditation of Brahmā. The male being paid homage to Brahmā and the devas (gods) became glad and they encouraged the male being. Because the gods greeted the male one, he was changed to a sword called Nandaka (that which is greeted or thanked for). That sword was received by Mahāviṣṇu at the request of the gods. When Mahāviṣṇu slowly took it Lohāsura came near. He was an asura of blue complexion, with thousand hands of adamantine fists. By wielding his club he drove away the gods. Mahāviṣṇu cut down his limbs one by one and those organs became metals by the touch of the sword. Then Mahāviṣṇu killed the asura. Then Mahāviṣṇu granted Nandaka a pure body and various boons. Afterwards Nandaka became the deity of weapons on the earth. Thus Brahmā, who got rid of the disturbance by the aid of Viṣṇu, completed the sacrifice. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 245).

NANDANA I. Son of Hiraṇyakaśipu. Nandana who had been ruling over the Śveta island had obtained boons from Śiva and had become invincible. He ruled over the kingdom for ten thousand years and then attained Kailāsa and became a gaṇa of Śiva. (Śiva Purāṇa, Uttara Khaṇḍa, Chapter 2).

NANDANA II. One of the two attendants given to Skandadeva by Aśvinīkumāras. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 44).

NANDANA III. A divine park in the world of devas (gods). Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 45, that those who had brought the organs of senses under control and who had not killed any living being, would be permitted to enter this park.

NANDĀŚRAMA. A holy place. Ambā, the daughter of the King of Kāśī once performed penance in this holy place. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 186, Stanza 26).

NANDĪ I. A Deva Gandharva. He was present at the birth celebration of Arjuna. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 12, Stanza 56).

NANDĪ II. One of the divine attendants of Śiva. (See under Nandikeśa).

NANDIGRĀMA. It is stated in Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Ayodhyākāṇḍa that while Śrī Rāma had been leading forest life, Bharata lived in Nandigrāma for twelve years worshipping the sandals of Śrī Rāma. This Nandigrāma is situated nearly fourteen miles away from Ayodhyā. (Faizabad).

NANDIKEŚA. The chief of the Bhūta Gaṇas (the attendants) of Śiva. For the story of how Nandikeśa once took the form of a monkey and cursed Rāvaṇa, see under Rāvaṇa.

NANDIKUṆḌA. A holy place. In Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 60, it is mentioned that the sin incurred by causing abortion, will be washed away by taking a bath in this holy place.

NANDINĪ I. A cow of the world of the gods (Devas). (See under Kāmadhenu).

NANDINĪ II. A holy place. In this place there is a well esteemed by the gods. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 15, that those who bathe in this holy well will obtain the fruits of Naramedhayajña (human sacrifice).

NANDISENA. One of the four attendants given to Subrahmaṇya by Brahmā. Lohitākṣa, Ghaṇṭākarṇa and Kumudamālī were the other three attendants. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 24).

NANDĪŚVARA. See under Nandikeśa.

NANDIVARDHANA I. The name of the conch of Sātyaki. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 61, Dākṣiṇātyapāṭha).

NANDIVARDHANA II. A King of the solar dynasty. He was the son of Vīrada and the father of Suketu. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

NANDIVEGA. A Kṣatriya family of ancient India. A famous King named Śama was born in this family. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 74. Stanza 17).

NAPTĀ. An eternal god concerned with offerings to the Manes. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 37).

NAPUṂSAKA. (EUNUCH). Mention is made in Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 48, that the semen introduced into the womb of the woman by the man at the time of coition, will get mixed with the blood in the womb, and that the issue will be male, female or eunuch according to the proportion of the mixture. In the mixture of semen and blood, if blood exceeds semen the issue will be female and if semen exceeds, it will be male child and if both are equal the child will be a eunuch.

NARA I. A hermit of divine power.

1) Birth. Brahmā created Dharmadeva from his breast. Truthful and righteous Dharma married ten daughters of Dakṣa. Several sons were born to Dharma of his ten wives. But foremost among them were Hari, Kṛṣṇa, Nara and Nārāyaṇa. Hari and Kṛṣṇa became great yogins and Nara and Nārāyaṇa became great hermits of penance. The Nara-Nārāyaṇas lived in the holy Asylum of Badarikāśrama in the vicinity of the Himālayas for a thousand years performing penance to Brahmā. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 4).

2) Giving birth to Urvaśī. See under Urva ī, Para 1.

3) Keeper of Amṛta (Ambrosia). The Devas (gods) and the asuras (demons) together churned the sea of milk and obtained Ambrosia (the celestial nectar of immortality). Mahāviṣṇu took the guise of a fascinating woman and obtained the Amṛta by stealth from the asuras and gave it to the devas. The asuras waged a terrible war with the devas. At that time, at the request of the devas, Nara and Nārāyaṇa took sides with the devas, and fought against the asuras as a consequence of which the asuras were defeated. In Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 19, Stanza 31, it is stated that from that day ownwards Indra entrusted the keeping of the celestial Nectar with the hermit named Nara.

4) Dambhodbhava brought under control. See under Dambhodbhava).

5) Conflict with Śiva. Because he was not invited to the sacrifice by Dakṣa, Śiva got angry and sent his trident against Dakṣa's sacrifice. The trident completely destroyed the sacrifice and flew through the air here and there. Then it reached Badaryāśrama and hit the breast of Nārāyaṇa who was sitting engaged in penance. By the force of the utterance of the sound 'Hum', made by Nārāyaṇa, the trident was ejected from his breast. Finding no accommodation there it flew back to Śiva, who getting angry at this rebut approached Nara-Nārāyaṇas with the intention of exterminating them. Nara took a grass from the ground and discharged it at Śiva. Instantly the grass became an axe. It flew round Śiva to attack him. Śiva broke the axe. From that day onwards Śiva got the name 'Khaṇḍaparaśu' (one who broke the axe). In this story it is said that the trident which had returned from the breast of Nārāyaṇa heated the hair of Śiva to such an extent that they were dried as dry grass. So Śiva came to be called 'Muñjakeśa' (with hair having the colour of dry grass). (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 343).

6) Fight with Prahlāda. Once Cyavana the son of Bhṛgu went to Nākuleśvara tīrtha (Bath) to take his bath in the river Narmadā. As soon as he got into the water the serpent called Kekaralohita caught hold of him. Cyavana meditated on Viṣṇu. So the poison of the serpent did not affect him. The huge serpent dragged Cyavana to Pātāla (the Nether world). But as his poison did not affect the hermit the serpent left the prey and went away. The Nāga damsels welcomed him and showed hospitality. Being greeted by the Nāga damsels he travelled through Pātāla and reached the great city of Dānavas. The asura chiefs greeted him with respect. Prahlāda met Cyavana, and received him with pleasure. The hermit said to Prahlāda. "I came to bathe in the Mahātīrtha and worship Nākuleśvara. When I got into the river a serpent caught hold of me and brought me to Pātāla, and made it possible for me to meet you." Hearing these words of Cyavana the King of the asuras said : "Oh good Lord ! which are the holy baths in the earth, the sky and the Pātāla ? Would you be pleased to tell us ?" Cyavana replied : "Oh ! powerful and mighty King ! The holy baths are Naimiṣa on the earth, Puṣkara on the sky and Cakra tīrtha in Pātāla ; these are the most important ones."

The King of the Daityas decided to go to Naimiṣa and said :—"We must go and bathe in the Naimiṣa tīrtha. We could visit and worship Viṣṇu with eyes as beautiful as lotus." Obeying the words of the King, preparations were made instantly and the asuras started from Rasātala for Naimiṣa.

The mighty host of Daityas and Dānavas reached Naimiṣa and bathed in the tīrtha. After that Prahlāda went to the forest for hunting. As he was walking thus he saw the river Sarasvatī. Near the river there was a Pine tree with very big branches, all of which were covered with arrows, the head of one at the tail of another. Prahlāda saw near the tree two hermits, with matted hair, clad in the hide of black antelope, performing penance. Near them were two perfectly made divine bows named Śārṅga and Ajagava and two quivers which would never become empty. Prahlāda questioned them without knowing that they were Nara and Nārāyaṇa. The questioning ended in a contest. The hermit Nara stood up and taking the bow Ajagava began sending showers of arrows at Prahlāda. Prahlāda checked every one of them. The hermit made his fight more severe. Prahlāda also withstood it. At last pushing Nara back Nārāyaṇa came to the front. The fight between Prahlāda and Nārāyaṇa was fierce. In the end Prahlāda fell down, his breast being pierced by the arrow of Nārāyaṇa.

Prahlāda realized that the hermit Nārāyaṇa was none but Viṣṇu. He praised Nārāyaṇa (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 8).

7) Other information.

(i) On the occasion of the stripping of Pāñcālī of her clothes at the palace of the Kauravas, Pāñcālī cried, calling Nara and Nārāyaṇa. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 68, Stanza 46).

(ii) Arjuna and Śrī Kṛṣṇa were the rebirths of Nara and Nārāyaṇa. (See under Arjuna).

(iii) It is stated in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 334, Stanza 9, that the hermit Nara was one of the four incarnations taken by Mahāviṣṇu in the Manuṣya yuga (age of man) of the Svāyambhuva Manvantara.

(iv) It is mentioned in Padma Purāṇa, Uttara Khaṇḍa, Chapter 2, that, of the two viz. Nara and Nārāyaṇa, Nara was of fair complexion and Nārāyaṇa of dark complexion.

(v) It was because of the curse of the hermit Bhṛgu that Nara-Nārāyaṇas took birth as Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa in the Dvāparayuga. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 4).

(vi) The meaning of the word 'Nara' is he who is not damaged. The universal soul named Nara has created water and so water got the name 'Nāram'. Because he lives in that water which has the name Nāram, the universal soul got the name Nārāyaṇa. (Manusmṛti, Chapter 1, Stanza 10).

(vii) For the other incarnations of Nara see under Raktaja.

NARA II. A Gandharva (semigod). It is stated in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10, stanza 14 that this Nara stays in the presence of Kubera.

NARA III. A King of Ancient India. He never tasted meat in his life. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 115, Stanza 64).

NARĀ IV. One of the wives of Uśīnara, a King of the family of the Aṅga Kings. Uśīnara had several wives such as Nṛgā, Narā, Kṛmī, Daśā, Dṛṣadvatī and so on. Nṛga was born from Nṛgā, Nara from Narā, Kṛmi from Kṛmī, Suvrata from Daśā and Śibi from Dṛṣadvatī. All these sons became Kings. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 277).

NARA V. An ancient place in South India. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 60).

NĀRĀCA. A particular type of arrow.

NĀRADA I. A very famous sage of the Purāṇas.

1) Birth. Nārada was the son of Brahmā, born from his lap. Brahmā mentally created the famous saptarṣis, Marīci, Aṅgiras, Atri, Pulastya, Vasiṣṭha, Pulaha and Kratu. From Brahmā's anger was born Rudra, from his lap Nārada, from his right thumb Dakṣa, from his mind Sanaka and others and from his left thumb a daughter called Vīraṇī. Dakṣa wedded Vīraṇī. (Devī Bhāgavata, 5th Skandha).

2) Various births of Nārada. The Purāṇas refer to more than seven prominent births of Nārada. He was first born as the son of Brahmā, and after that, on account of Brahmā's curse he was born as the Gandharva called Upabarhaṇa. Following that he was born as the son of emperor Drumila and was named Nārada. Again born as the son of Brahmā under the name Nārada, he married Mālatī and ended his life as a monkey. He was again born as the son of Brahmā and was cursed by Dakṣa. Afterwards he was born as the son of Dakṣa and also as a worm. All these births did not occur in one and the same Manvantara. Nārada may be noticed doing something or other in connection with the various characters in the Purāṇas. There is no other character in the Purāṇas occupying so popular a place in them as Nārada. The important five births of Nārada are described below.

(i) The Gandharva called Upabarhaṇa. Nārada born from the lap of Brahmā desired to remain a celibate. But, Brahmā suggested that he should assume responsibility for procreation as his (Brahmā's) other sons like Marīci and Sanaka had already become celibates. Nārada did not accept this suggestion of Brahmā at which the latter got angry and cursed Nārada to lose his knowledge and to marry fifty beautiful women. Brahmā continued:—"You will be born as a Gandharva known as Upabarhaṇa and will become a great musician. You will be unrivalled in the handling of the Vīṇā. After your death as the Gandharva you will be born as the son of a servant woman, and as such you will be a great devotee of Viṣṇu. Afterwards you will be born as my son when I will impart knowledge to you."

There was a Gandharva called Citraketu, who performed penance on the banks of the Puṣkara lake to propitiate Śiva for a child. Śiva appeared and blessed Citraketu to the effect that Nārada, the son of Brahmā, would be born as his son. Accordingly the wife of Citraketu delivered a son whom the family priest named Upabarhaṇa. The boy grew up as a devotee of Viṣṇu. Bṛhaspati taught him the worship of Hari (Viṣṇu). Upabarhaṇa lived on the slopes of the Himālayas performing penance. While Upabarhaṇa was one day engaged in Samādhi fifty daughters of the Gandharva called Citraratha passed that way, and they fell in love with Upabarhaṇa, who was in Samādhi. He awoke from Samādhi on hearing the melodious songs of the fifty damsels who stood there with palms joined in reverence. Upabarhaṇa too fell in love with them, and he married all the fifty girls. He returned with them to the palace and lived there for thousands of years. Once the Gandharvas and the Apsaras were invited to sing the story of Viṣṇu in Brahmaloka. Upabarhaṇa accompanied them. He became lustful towards Rambhā. The Prajāpatis, who noticed it got angry, and Upabarhaṇa well-nigh dead due to their curse returned home. He told his wives all that had happened to him. He spread a darbha grass on the ground and lay on it and died. Mālatī, the eldest of his wives, got ready to curse Brahmā, Yama and Mṛtyu. In great consternation they sought refuge under Viṣṇu, who comforted and sent them back to Mālatī. They saluted her. Then a brahmin, who went there questioned Brahmā about the death of Upabarhaṇa. The brahmin told him that, according to previous decision, life for another thousand years remained for Upabarhaṇa, but he died in the meantime on account of the curse of Prajāpati. Immediately the brahmin assumed the form of Viṣṇu. The brahmin blessed Upabarhaṇa who woke up from death rubbing his eyes. He lived happily at home with his wives. He was blessed with children and grandchildren. Knowing that his end was near Upabarhaṇa and Mālatī spent their time in austerities on the banks of the Gaṅgā. At last Upabarhaṇa expired, and Mālatī ended her life in his funeral pyre. (Bhāgavata, 7th Skandha).

(ii) Son of Kalāvatī. There lived in Kānyakubja the emperor called Drumila. He, along with his wife Kalāvatī, performed penance on theb anks of the Gaṅgā for an offspring. Kalāvatī pleased Kaśyapa, by her worship and with his blessing she became pregnant. Drumila, who in the meantime had renounced everything in life, decided to spend the rest of his life in the forest itself. He gifted away all his wealth to brahmins and died in the forest. Though Kalāvatī got ready to follow him in the funeral pyre, a celestial voice stopped her and she refrained from committing self-immolation. She returned to the village and lived as a slave in a brahmin's house. In due course of time she delivered a son. On the birth of the child it rained in the land which was suffering from failure of rains, and because of that the brahmin master of Kalāvatī named the child Nārada, meaning he who gives water. When the child Nārada grew up he told his mother the story about his former birth. He turned out to be a great devotee of Viṣṇu. Meanwhile, Kalāvatī, who went to milk the cow one night, was bitten to death by a snake, and Nārada was orphaned. Śiva and three attendants of his who went there in disguise were pleased at Nārada's great devotion for Viṣṇu and his service-mentality. He lived on the left-overs given by them. He repeated songs sung by them about Viṣṇu. Gradually Nārada became perfect devotee of Viṣṇu and a unique master of music. Śiva and others imparted Bhāgavata to Nārada before they left him. Nārada who thus attained divine knowledge performed penance for many years on the banks of the Gaṅgā and died there. (Bhāgavata, 7th Skandha).

(iii) Birth as Kapi (Monkey). Nārada, who expired on the banks of the Gaṅgā was again born as the son of Brahmā. Though the father wanted the son to get married the latter preferred to spend his days in the meditation on God. Brahmā then told his son as follows:—"Why are you so much afraid of the house-holder's life? Many people have attained salvation by following the four āśramas (stages in life) like that of the celibate, the house-holder, the anchorite and the sannyāsin. In fact, only such people will be able to serve man and God. A girl named Mālatī alias Damayantī is born to maharṣi Sañjaya, and Śiva has granted her the boon that in this birth you will become her husband. You, therefore, go to Naranārāyaṇas engaged in penance on the Himālayas. They will give Mālatī in marriage to you."

Accordingly Nārada went to Badarikāśrama where in the presence of Naranārāyaṇas he married Mālatī.

During those days Nārada and sage Parvata started on a pilgrimage in the course of which they went to the palace of emperor Sañjaya to observe Cāturmāsya. The emperor left a well-furnished house at the disposal of the pilgrims. He also deputed his daughter Damayantī to serve them. The humble service of Damayantī pleased them both. But, Damayantī's devotion towards Nārada was more ardent and both of them noticed this fact. One day Parvata asked Nārada whether Damayantī did not take a special interest in him (Nārada) and to this Nārada answered 'Yes, I too think so'. Parvata got angry at this answer of Nārada and told him thus: "We had agreed at the time when we started on this tour to divulge all secrets to each other. Now you have broken that contract. Why did you not tell me about Damayantī's partiality for you? You become, therefore, a monkey". Nārada, in turn, cursed Parvata as follows: "You will live in hell in Yamaloka for a hundred years."

Accordingly Nārada became a monkey and Parvata lived in hell. At this juncture Sañjaya's ministers advised him to marry his daughter to a prince, and the news made her very sad. Sañjaya understood the reason for his daughter's sadness from her nurse. The father had ultimately to yield to her wishes and Damayantī married Nārada, who had been turned into a monkey. Hundred years rolled by, and Parvata, the period of his curse being over, returned to the palace of Sañjaya. Nārada treated Parvata duly well, and pleased at the treatment, he gave redemption to Nārada from the curse. Nārada lived very happily with Damayantī for a long time at the palace, and after the demise of Damayantī he attained Brahmaloka. (Bhāgavata, 7th Skandha).

(iv) Born as Dakṣa's son. After the creation of the Devas was over, Brahmā called Dakṣa to him and asked him to marry Vīraṇī and procreate, and Dakṣa accordingly begot five thousand sons of Vīraṇī. They were called Haryaśvas. Finding that the Haryaśvas also were interested in the procreation of children Nārada, the Devarṣi, approached and told them as follows:—"Oh ! Haryaśvas ! You who are exceptionally vital people seem to be trying to procreate children. But, you have not enquired as to whether there is enough space on earth for such large numbers of people. You are just like children who know nothing about the world. How will you procreate people? Since you could live absolutely free in the sky, why do you not find out the limit of the earth?"

The Haryaśvas thereupon ran away in different places to find out the limit of the earth, and they have not, like the rivers which entered the ocean, returned yet.

At the loss of the Haryaśvas in the above manner, Dakṣa created the Śabalāśvas, whom also Nārada sent away to various parts of the earth. Dakṣa again created five thousand people whom also Nārada drove away in the above manner. Angry and sad at this, Dakṣa cursed Nārada thus:— "Well, Nārada ! my children roam about like this because of you. Therefore, you too in future will be roaming about without a permanent abode. Moreover, you will have rebirth as my son."

Nārada became a world-trotter on account of the above curse of Dakṣa. He was also reborn as the son of Dakṣa. (Devī Bhāgavata, 7th Skandha and Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 15).

(v) Born as a worm. There is a story about Nārada being born as a worm. On the approach of a chariot the worm moved quickly away from its route lest its wheel should crush it to death. The King seated in the chariot burst out into laughter at the above sight when the worm told him as follows:—"There is nothing to be laughed at in my action. In every birth the body is much dear to the ātman (soul). Just as you love your body I also love and protect my body. (Mahābhārata).

3) Viṣṇu showed Nārada the function of Māyā. See under Tāladhvaja I

4) Nārada became a woman. While staying once with Kṛṣṇa at Dvārakā, Nārada and the former went out on a tour in an aerial chariot. On the way they saw a stream and Kṛṣṇa stopped the chariot there as Nārada wanted to quench his thirst at the stream. Nārada drank water from the stream disobeying Kṛṣṇa's injunction that he should bathe before drinking water, and lo! the next moment Nārada was turned into a woman and when 'she' looked around neither Kṛṣṇa nor the chariot was to be seen. She wandered about in the forest and at last reached an āśrama. When the Ṛṣi of the āśrama awoke from his samādhi he saw standing before him a beautiful woman who requested him to accept her as his disciple. He readily granted her request. The preceptor married the disciple and in due course of time she became the mother of sixty children. One day all the sixty children and their father expired together. The grief-stricken widow felt too weak to perform the obsequies of the dead. An extraordinary hunger also held her in its grips. She raised her hand to pluck a fruit from the mango tree that stood nearby but could not reach the mango above. She placed together the corpses one on the other, mounted upon the heap of dead bodies and plucked the mango-fruit Immediately a brahmin arrived on the spot and exhorted the widow on the impropriety of taking food without bathing after the death of husband and children. Then the widow entered the stream and dived in its waters holding above water the hand in which was held the mango, and lo ! it was Nārada who came out from the water. Only the hand, which had been held above water and did not therefore get wet, remained like that of a woman with bangles thereon. The brahmin, who stood there on the banks of the stream transformed himself into Kṛṣṇa. As ordered by Kṛṣṇa Nārada again dived with the whole of his body in the water when the hand also turned into that of a man. The mango held in the hand turned into an excellent Vīṇā. And Kṛṣṇa told Nārada: "The Ṛṣi who lived with you as your husband and who is no more is Kālapuruṣa, and the sixty children are years Prabhava, Vibhava etc.

Kṛṣṇa and Nārada then returned to Dvārakā. (Bhāgavata. 7th Skandha).

5) Nārada met the woman called Bhakti. When Kalikāla held the earth in its grips Nārada, on a particular occasion, went round the world viewing the evils of Kali, and he saw a young woman immersed in grief sitting on the banks of the Yamunā, the sports field of Kṛṣṇa. On both sides of her two old men were breathing in an unconscious state, and the woman, weeping was trying to restore them to consciousness. Many other women were fanning the unconscious men and trying to comfort the woman. Nārada approached the young woman when she spoke to him as follows: 'Oh! great sage, please put an end to my grief, because your words will remove all grief. I am called Bhakti and these two old men are my sons, one of whom is known as Jñāna (knowledge) and the other Vairāgya (renunciation), and they have become old due to the impact of time. The others found here are sacred rivers, who have come to serve me. But, the service of nobody will do me good.

I was born in the Drāviḍa region, grew up in Karṇāṭaka, lived here and there in Mahārāṣṭra and became old at Gujarat whereat, atheists due to the evil of Kali inflicted wounds on me for a long time so that I became very weak. I did then go with my sons to the worshipful Vṛndāvana where I regained my old form and became a young woman in the shape of a ghost. My children suffer here in an unconscious state and I have to leave this for another place. I am so very sad that my sons have become old. Why did I become a young woman when my sons were old people? We three were touring together, and how then did this difference arise with regard to us? Is it not the proper thing for the mother to be older, and her children younger? You will please explain the reason for all these."

Nārada read out the Vedas and the Vedāṅgas to her, to no purpose. Then Sanaka, Sanandana, Sanatkumāra, Sanatsujāta and others (all of them the mental offsprings of Brahmā and gifted with eternal youth) asked Nārada to read out Bhāgavata to the sons of Bhakti. Nārada did so, and they became immediately young. (Padma Purāṇa, Uttarakhaṇḍa).

6) Tested Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Kṛṣṇa was living in Dvārakā with his 16008 wives. Nārada once wanted to know how Kṛṣṇa managed to maintain so many wives without any difficulty or quarrels among them. To test it he first went to the palace of Rukmiṇī where both Kṛṣṇa and herself welcomed and treated him duly. Nārada next visited Satyabhāmā's house where also Kṛṣṇa and herself welcomed and treated him well. In the houses of all the 16008 wives of Kṛṣṇa, Nārada had the same experience as above. He was wonder-struck at the divine powers of Kṛṣṇa and returned home praising Kṛṣṇa (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

7) Mahāviṣṇu put down Nārada's haughtiness. Nārada had been very proud about his greatness as a musician. Viṣṇu decided to put an end to this conceit of Nārada for which purpose he took Nārada to a forest. There they saw many women, whose limbs had been cut, crying on account of insufferable pain. Mahāviṣṇu asked the women who they were and why their limbs were cut. They answered Viṣṇu that they were Rāgiṇīs, the presiding deities over the various tunes and that they were reduced to their present plight by the totally erroneous singing of the tunes by Nārada.

Nārada hung his head down in shame at the above answer of the women and he was cured of his conceit. (Adbhuta Rāmāyaṇa).

8) Hanūmān shamed Nārada. Nārada once met Hanūmān, who sang a song for him. Enjoying the music Nārada placed his Vīṇā on a rock which had been melted by the song of Hanūmān, and Nārada's Vīṇā sank into the melted rock. When the singing by Hanūmān was over, the rock, as of old, became hard again and the Vīṇā got stuck up with it. Hanūmān asked Nārada to melt the rock again with a song of his and take away his Vīṇā. Nārada sang and sang, all to no purpose. The rock did not melt again. Then Hanūmān sang a song and the rock melted. After praising Hanūmān Nārada left the place ashamed. (Adbhuta Rāmāyaṇa).

9) Śrī Kṛṣṇa instructed Nārada about Māyā. Nārada once requested Kṛṣṇa to teach him about Māyā (illusion) and Kṛṣṇa told him that he would be taught sometime later. Afterwards, one day while Nārada was walking about, it began to rain and he took shelter from the rain in a hut near at hand. There was a beautiful young woman in the hut and Nārada fell in love with her. Nārada lived with her for many years and a number of children were born to them. But, a flood washed the mother and children off into the sea, and Nārada was grief-stricken. Then Kṛṣṇa appeared there and asked Nārada whether he loved Māyā. Nārada confessed that he understood Māyā very well and requested Kṛṣṇa to save him from attachments on account of Māyā.

10) Nārada and Sanatkumāra. Once Nārada went to Sanatkumāra and requested him to instruct him in spiritual wisdom telling the latter that he had already learnt the Vedas and all other scriptures and arts. Sanatkumāra accordingly taught him about the perfect nature, without either beginning or end, of supreme bliss. He taught Nārada thus : "Everything is God. God exists in all animate and inanimate objects, and God is superior to everything." (Chāndogyopaniṣad).

11) Other information about Nārada.

(1) Once Brahmā advised him sixteen names which would wash off all the evils of Kali, i.e. Hare Rāma Hare Rāma Rāma Rāma Hare Hare, Hare Kṛṣṇa Hare Kṛṣṇa Kṛṣṇa Kṛṣṇa Hare Hare. (Kalisantaraṇopaniṣad).

(2) It was Nārada who gave the impetus to Vālmīki for the composition of Rāmāyaṇa. Once Vālmīki asked Nārada, who had returned after a tour of the three worlds, who the greatest of men was. Nārada replied 'Śrī Rāma' and related to Vālmīki a brief history of Rāma. Nārada departed from there and Vālmīki went to the banks of the river Tamasā. It was there that Vālmīki, at the sight of a hunter shooting down one of the Krauñca birds, sang the famous verse 'Mā niṣāda' etc. (See under Vālmīki).

(3) Nārada once went to Veda Vyāsa, who was very unhappy because he had no children. Questioned by Vyāsa as to the means to have a son Nārada advised him to worship Parāśakti (the supreme power). Accordingly Vyāsa worshipped Parāśakti at Kailāsa and was gifted with the son Śuka. (Devī Bhāgavata, 1st Skandha),

(4) When once Nārada came to Vaikuṇṭha playing on his Vīṇā Lakṣmīdevī went bashfully into the inner apartment. In fact, she felt some love towards Nārada who asked Viṣṇu for the reason thereof. Viṣṇu replied that none existed who had absolutely conquered Māyā (illusion) and that Lakṣmīdevī felt love towards Nārada for a few moments because of the influence of Māyā. (Devī Bhāgavata, 6th Skandha).

(5) Once Agastya kicked down mount Vindhya and Nārada had also a small share in it. Vindhya had risen above the path of the sun as Nārada told him querulously that the Sun was circling Mahāmeru and was ignoring Vindhya. (Devī Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

(6) Nārada once went to Pātālaloka and returned after having been duly treated as guest by Prahlāda. (Brahma Purāṇa, Chapter 23).

(7) Nārada once cursed Nalakūbara and Maṇigrīva (sons of Kubera) and turned them into two trees. They regained their former form on being touched by the mortar drawn by Kṛṣṇa as a boy. (See under Nalakūbara).

(8) It was Nārada who told Kaṁsa that Śrī Kṛṣṇa was in Ambāḍi. He also told Kaṁsa about his previous history. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

(9) Vṛkāsura once asked Nārada who amongst the Trimūrtis used to be pleased most easily and Nārada mentioned Śiva. It was therefore that the asura performed penance to Śiva and pleased him. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

(10) The following story occurs in the Vāyu Purāṇa as to how Nārada's Vīṇā became the musical instrument of the world. Once Nārada was in Indra's court when the latter asked Urvaśī to give a dance performance. She did so and in the course of the dance saw Jayanta, son of Indra seated before her. She was swept over by a passion towards Jayanta as a result of which some mistakes were made by her in dancing. Nārada, who was playing his Vīṇā called Mahatī, also committed some mistakes. Nārada did so to attract the attention of the audience to Urvaśī's mistakes. Noticing the mistake Agastya, who too was present on the occasion, cursed Urvaśī to become a bamboo. He cursed that Nārada's Vīṇā should become the Vīṇā of the world (Vāyu Purāṇa).

(11) Nārada's curse was also one of the causes for Rāvaṇa's death. Rāvaṇa once requested Nārada to explain to him the meaning of 'Om', and when Nārada refused to oblige him he threatened to cut Nārada's tongue. Nārada in return cursed that the ten heads of Rāvaṇa would be cut. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa).

(12) During one Kalpa, Nārada was born as a Devagandharva as the son of Kaśyapa by his wife Muni, (Ādi Parva, Chapter 1 and Svargārohaṇa Parva, Chapter 5).

(13) On one occasion Nārada recited Mahābhārata which included three lakhs of ślokas. (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 1; Svargārohaṇa Parva, Chapter 5).

(14) Since he imparted Sāṅkhya wisdom to the sons of Dakṣa they renounced the world and departed for different places. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 75, Verse 7).

(15) He was present at the birthday celebrations of Arjuna. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 57).

(16) He also was present in the company of Devas and women, who attended Pāñcālī's Svayaṁvara. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 186, Verse 7).

(17) After Pāñcālī's Svayaṁvara he once went to the Pāṇḍavas at Indraprastha and advised the five brothers not to quarrel over Pāñcālī. It was he, who told them the story of the Sundopasundas. He also arranged that Pāñcālī should live by turns of one year each with each of the five Pāṇḍava brothers. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 207, Verse 9).

(18) It was he who consoled and sent the apsaras called Vargā, who was in the grip of a curse, to the south. (See under Vargā).

(19) In the form of a catechism he gave advice on various topics to Dharmaputra. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 5).

(20) When proposals for building a palace at Indraprastha for the Pāṇḍavas were under discussion Nārada went there and gave descriptions of the courts of Indra, Yama, Varuṇa, Kubera and Brahmā. (Sabhā Parva, Chapters 5-11).

(21) He related the story of Hariścandra to Dharmaputra. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 23).

(22) It was he who conveyed the information to Dvārakā that Kṛṣṇa's grandson Aniruddha was imprisoned in the house of Bāṇa. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 38).

(23) He bathed Yudhiṣṭhira's head with holy waters at the Rājasūya Yajña. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 55, Verse 10).

(24) He prophesied that the Kauravas would get annihilated. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 80, Verse 33).
(25) When Pradyumna decided to kill Sālva it was Nārada who saved him. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 19, Verse 22).
(26) Nārada too was in the company of the Gandharvas who had gone to receive Arjuna at Indraloka.) Vana Parva, Chapter 43, Verse 14).
(27) It was Nārada who informed Indra about the Svayaṁvara of Damayantī. (Vana Parva, Chapter 54, Verse 20).
(28) It was he who informed Sagara that his 60,000 children had been burnt to ashes in the fire of Kapilamuni's anger. (Vana Parva, Chapter 107, Verse 33).
(29) On another occasion he prevented Arjuna from using divine arrows. (Vana Parva, Chapter 183, Verse 18).
(30) While the Pāṇḍavas were living in the Kāmyaka forest Nārada went there and enjoyed hearing stories related by Sage Mārkaṇḍeya. (Vana Parva, Chapter 183, Verse 47).
(31) Once he went to the palace of Aśvapati the father of Sāvitrī and described the good qualities and merits of Satyavān as a result of which Sāvitrī was married to Satyavān. (Vana Parva, Chapter 294, Verse 11).
(32) Once in the course of a search for a suitable husband for his daughter, Mātali was taken by Nārada to Varuṇaloka and shown many wonderful sights. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 100).
(33) After that he took Mātali to Garuḍa loka. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101).
(34) At last he got Mātali's daughter married by Āryaka. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 104, Verse 1).
(35) He related Gālava's history to Dharmaputra. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 106).
(36) When fighting started between Bhīṣma and Paraśurāma Nārada tried to stop them. (See under Ambā).
(37) He consoled Akampana who was grieving over the death of his son. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 52).
(38) He demanded Sañjaya's daughter in marriage. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 52, Verse 12).
(39) Sage Parvata cursed Nārada and he, in turn, cursed Parvata. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 55, Verse 7).
(40) He blessed that a son would be born to King Sañjaya. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 55, Verse 24).
(41) He consoled Sañjaya who was sad over the absence of children by telling the story of Varuṇa. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 55, Verse 26).
(42) He spoke about the charitable nature of King Suhotra in the presence of Dharmaputra, who was feeling sad about the great war. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 56).
(43) He extolled the charitable nature of King Paurava. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 57).
(44) He extolled the yajña conducted by emperor Śibi and also his generosity. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 58).
(45) He related the story of Śrī Rāma to Yudhiṣṭhira. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 59).
(46) He related the story of Bhagīratha. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 60).
(47) He convinced Yudhiṣṭhira about the reasons for the prosperity of Dilīpa. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 61).
(48) He told Yudhiṣṭhira the stories of Māndhātā, Yayāti, Ambarīṣa, Śaśabindu, Saha, Rantideva, Bharata, Pṛthu, Paraśurāma and Sṛñjaya. (Droṇa Parva, Chapters 61-70).
(49) Nārada too was present to see the pond created with arrows by Arjuna during the great war. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 99, Verse 61).
(50) He lighted the lamp for the Pāṇḍavas during the great war. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 163, Verse 15).
(51) He prompted Vṛddhakanyā to get married. (See under Vṛddhakanyā).
(52) It was he who conveyed the news about the annihilation of the Kauravas to Balabhadrarāma. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 54, Verse 25).
(53) He prevented Arjuna and Aśvatthāmā from using Brahmāstra during the great war. (Sauptika Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 11).
(54) He informed Yudhiṣṭhira about the curse on Karṇa. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 2).
(55) On another occasion he related to Yudhiṣṭhira the story of Suvarṇaṣṭhīlī, son of Sañjaya. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 31).
(56) He was also present in the company of the sages who visited Bhīṣma on his bed of arrows. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 8).
(57) It was he who prompted Dharmaputra to question Bhīṣma on topics of Dharma (righteousness) (Śānti Parva, Chapter 54, Verse 3).
(58) Once Nārada told wind that the Śālmalī tree claimed itself to be greater than wind. The next morning wind smashed the branches and leaves of the tree. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 155, Verse 9).
(59) Once he entered into a discussion about the creation of the world with Asitadevalamuni. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 275, Verse 3).

(67) He was also present with the sages who cursed Sāmba, son of Kṛṣṇa, to deliver an iron rod. (Mausala Parva, Chapter 1).
(68) Synonyms for Nārada : Devarṣi, Parameṣṭhija. Pārameṣṭhi, Parameṣṭhiputra, Surarṣi etc.

NĀRADA II. One of the Brahmavādī sons of Viśvāmitra (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 53).

NĀRADĀGAMANAPARVA. A sub parva of Āśramavāsikaparva, Chapters 37-39.

NĀRADĪ. One of the Brahmavādī sons of Viśvāmitra. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 59).

NĀRADĪYAPURĀṆA. One of the eighteen Purāṇas. (See under Purāṇas).

NARAKA I. (NARAKĀSURA). A valiant Asura.

1) Birth. Once the Asura Hiraṇyākṣa was amusing himself by wading through the ocean and beating at the waves with his club. Varuṇa, the god of water, was alarmed at this and ran to Mahāviṣṇu and told him every thing. Hearing this Mahāviṣṇu got up to kill Hiraṇyākṣa. Hiraṇyākṣa who had assumed the form of a Boar carried the earth on his tusks and ran to Pātāla. As the goddess earth had come into contact with the tusks of Hiraṇyākṣa she became pregnant and gave birth to an asura infant of immense might and power. That infant was Narakāsura.

Taking the infant born from impurity the sad goddess Earth went to Mahāviṣṇu and requested him to save the child somehow. Mahāviṣṇu pitied him and gave him Nārāyaṇāstra (Nārāyaṇa's weapon) and said: "Naraka ! So long as this weapon is with you, nobody but me could kill you." Saying this he disappeared. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

2) Administration. Narakāsura made Prāgjyotiṣa his capital and ruled over the asuras as their emperor for a long time, all the while terrifying the Devas. Once this asura raped Kaśerū the daughter of Tvaṣṭā. He brought sixteen thousand and one hundred maidens from the women of the earth and the world of gods. He made them captives at Audaka on the top of the mountain Maṇiparvata. He appointed four mighty and fearful asuras: Hayagrīva, Nisunda, Pañcanada and Mura as gate-keepers of Prāgjyotiṣa. As they stood blocking the way up to Devayāna, nobody dared to enter Prāgjyotiṣa. The ten sons of Narakāsura guarded the harem. At the boundary of the country Murāsura had tied six thousand ropes with a sword at the end of each. So enemies dared not come near the boundary. When Sugrīva gave instructions to the monkeys who were sent in search of Sītā, about the route they were to follow, he had mentioned about the city of Prāgjyotiṣa. Mention is made in Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Kiṣkindhā Kāṇḍa, Sarga 42 that Sugrīva had given them special instructions to search for Sītā in Prāgjyotiṣa. (M.B. Viṣṇu Parva, Chapter 63).

3) Previous birth of Naraka. Long ago a king who was the father of Sixteen thousand daughters, ruled over a country. While the father and daughters were sitting in the palace Mahāviṣṇu came there as a hermit. The sixteen thousand damsels gathered round the hermit. Their father got angry and cursed them. The daughters shed tears and entreated their father for liberation from the curse. He gave them remission and said that in the next birth they would become wives of Mahāviṣṇu.

Another version of this story says that the damsels had requested Brahmā for liberation from the curse according to the advice of the hermit Nārada, and that Brahmā had given them liberation from the curse. In some versions it is stated that Nārada himself gave them liberation from the curse.

It was this King, who was the father of the sixteen thousand damsels, who took birth again as Narakāsura. Those sixteen thousand damels who had been born as princesses in different places were taken captives by Narakāsura and were kept in Audaka. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

4) Death. Narakāsura who had been causing devastation and terror in the three worlds entered the world of the gods once. The gods were not able to withstand the fury of Naraka, who carried away the ear-rings of Aditi, the mother of Indra, and the large white royal umbrella of Indra to Prāgjyotiṣa. Indra went to Dvārakā and told Śrī Kṛṣṇa of the molestations he had received at the hands of Narakāsura. Śrī Kṛṣṇa rode on his Garuḍa with his wife Satyabhāmā to Prāgjyotiṣa. They flew over the city round and understood the lay-out of the city, and the precautions taken by Narakāsura. The battle began after this reconnaissance. Śrī Kṛṣṇa, Satyabhāmā and Garuḍa fought with the asuras. The mighty asuras such as Mura, Tāmra, Antarīkṣa, Śravaṇa, Vasu, Vibhāvasu, Nabhasvān, Aruṇa and others were killed. At last Narakāsura himself entered the battlefield. A fierce battle ensued in which Naraka was killed. The divine weapon Nārāyaṇāstra of Naraka was given to his son Bhagadatta. After the battle Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Satyabhāmā went to the world of the gods and returned the ear-rings to Aditi and the umbrella to Indra. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

NARAKA II. Mention is made about another Narakāsura who was born to Prajāpati Kaśyapa by his wife Danu, in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 28. Once Indra defeated this Narakāsura. It is seen in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 9 that this asura after his death, stayed in the palace of Varuṇa worshipping him.

NARAKA III. Bhagadatta the son of Narakāsura ruled over the part of Pātāla called Naraka, and being the ruler of Naraka, Bhagadatta seems to have been known by the name of Naraka also.

NARAKA. IV See under Kāla I.

NARANĀRĀYAṆAS. Two hermits Nara and Nārāyaṇa. These two hermits had spent many thousands of years in Badaryāśrama doing penance. Arjuna was the rebirth of Nara and Śrī Kṛṣṇa was the rebirth of Nārāyaṇa. (For detailed story see under Nara and Nārāyaṇa).

NARĀNTAKA I. A captain of the army of Rāvaṇa. It is stated in Agni Purāṇa, Chapter10, that the captains of Rāvaṇa, viz., Kumbha, Nikumbha, Makarākṣa, Mahodara, Mahāpārśva, Matta, Unmatta, Praghāsa, Bhāsakarṇa, Virūpākṣa, Devāntaka, Narāntaka, Triśiras, Atikāya and other Rākṣasas fought on the side of Rāvaṇa against Śrī Rāma and that all of them were killed.

Of these Devāntaka and Narāntaka were mighty and valiant warriors. Aṅgada killed Narāntaka after a fierce battle. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa, Chapter 69).

NARĀNTAKA II. Son of Rudraketu, an asura. This asura terrorized the three worlds by his wicked and cruel deeds. When the wickedness and cruelty of this asura became unbearable Gaṇapati incarnated in the house of Kaśyapa to protect the three worlds. Knowing this Narāntaka resorted to various means to kill Gaṇapati. But his attempts were futile. Finally he was killed by Gaṇapati. (Gaṇeśa Purāṇa).

NARARĀṢṬRA. A kingdom of ancient India. In Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 31, Stanza 6, it is mentioned that Sahadeva one of the Pāṇḍavas, conquered this country.

NARASIṀHA. See under Avatāra.

NARAVĀHANA. A Kṣatriya King who had obtained remission of the sin of Brahmahatyā (slaughter of Brahmin) by taking the fast of Vaiśākhavrata.

This man who was a Kṣatriya of Pāñcāla once happened to kill a Brahmin with an arrow. To get remission of this sin, he discarded his Sacred thread, mark on the forehead and forelock and had been wandering here and there when he met a Brahmin named Muniśarmā. Naravāhana told him his story. This Brāhmaṇa who was a lover of God advised him regarding the importance of the Vaiśākha fast. By taking this fast the King obtained remission of sin. (Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 88).

NARAVĀHANADATTA. A famous Vidyādhara. Udayana the King of Vatsa had been spending his time in play and pleasure with his wives Padmāvatī and Vāsavadattā, when once Nārada appeared before them. The king greeted the hermit and showed hospitality. The King and the queens were childless. Nārada told them: "Hear, oh King. Your wife Vāsavadattā is the incarnation of Ratidevī blessed by Śiva. The son born to her would become the emperor of the Vidyādharas. Not long after this Vāsavadattā conceived and gave birth to a radiant son. He was named Naravāhana-datta. At this time Kaliṅgasenā, who had been transformed into a woman by the curse of Indra, gave birth to an extra-ordinarily beautiful girl. (For detailed story see under Kaliṅgasenā). That child was named Madanamañcukā. Even in infancy she was surrounded by a halo of unearthly beauty. Hearing of this child, Vāsavadattā brought Kaliṅgasenā and tbe infant to the palace. To the wonder of everybody, the infants looked at each other and they were not satisfied how soever long they looked at each other. The king and his wives understood this perfectly well and at the proper time their marriage was conducted.

Naravāhanadatta was anointed as the Heir-apparent. Once he was playing in the garden in the spring season, with his ministers Gomukha and others, when the most beautiful Ratnaprabhā came there. (See under Ratnaprabhā).

Once Naravāhanadatta went for hunting with his minister Gomukha and retinue. Somehow or other he was separated from Gomukha and army in the deep forest. Then he heard a divine song and sound of a heavenly lyre. He went in the direction from which the music came. and reached a Śaivite temple. Getting in, he saw an excessively beautiful damsel standing in the midst of her attendants and companions singing and playing on a lute, in praise of Śiva. At this time a grown-up Vidyādhara woman came down from the sky and getting near the damsel, gave her to Naravāhanadatta. The name of the Vidyādhara damsel was Alaṅkāravatī. (For other details see under Alaṅkāravatī).

As Naravāhanadatta was spending his days, enjoying the pleasing company of his wife Alaṅkāravatī, once he went for hunting, with his army. Being very tired they went in search of water, and entered a thick forest. There they saw a lake full of golden lotus flowers and four men plucking flowers. Naravāhanadatta approached them. They said that they had been plucking flowers to worship Viṣṇu. Naravāhana followed them to the presence of Viṣṇu. Mahāviṣṇu was greatly pleased at Naravāhanadatta who was standing with folded hands singing praises of Viṣṇu in intense devotion and blessed him to become the emperor of the Vidyādharas. (Kathāsaritsāgara).

NĀRĀYAṆA. One of the two Ṛṣis famous as Naranārāyaṇas.

1) Birth. Dharma, son of Brahmā was Nārāyaṇa's father. Dharma married ten daughters of Dakṣa, and four sons, i.e. Hari, Kṛṣṇa, Nara and Nārāyaṇa were born to him of them. Of the four, Nara and Nārāyaṇa were inseparable sannyāsins. In the holy Badarikāśrama on the slopes of the Himālayas they did tapas to please Brahmā for a thousand years.

2) Nārāyaṇa's tapas. The whole world was, so to say, burnt by the intense tapas of Naranārāyaṇas. Indra was alarmed. Believing that their tapas was for the attainment of Indrahood and fearing his own displacement Indra went to Badarikāśrama mounted on Airāvata to break their tapas, and told them thus: "Oh ascetics, who shine like the rising sun, I am pleased with your tapas. You may choose any boon you like."

The Naranārāyaṇas did not even recognise the thunder-like voice of Indra; nor did they answer him. This increased Indra's alarm, and he decided to disturb them with Māyā, productive of fear, desire etc. and thus break their tapas. Indra began threatening them with cruel animals created by him like wild cat, leopard tiger, lion, elephant etc. and also with aberrations created in nature like storm, rain, wild fire etc. But, none of the above affected or moved them in the least. After all, why should they be moved? You would threaten only those who are subject to desires, love of comfort, any particular object in life or likes and dislikes. Since Naranārāyaṇas had none of the above, Indra's attempts to threaten them failed. Thus disappointed he returned to Svargaloka and after thinking for a long time he called Kāmadeva to him and spoke as follows:—"You should go, along with Rati and the spring, to Badarikāśrama. Also take with you any number of apsarā women you want. You will find Naranārāyaṇas at the āśrama performing tapas and will weaken them from their resolution by using your arrows (erotic shafts) and tempt them into erotic life. I am also deputing apsarā women like Rambhā to help you."

Kāmadeva accordingly started for Badarikāśrama accompanied by all the apsarā women. When they reached the place spring season had set in there.

Varieties of beetles flew about from flower to flower humming. Trees like the mango and Palāśa were thick with flowers. Creepers (Comparable to young women) entwined and embraced trees (lovers), the former carrying puṣpas (flowers, in the case of young women, coming of age). A fragrant breeze swept the whole region. In this erotic background Kāma and Rati, with their five arrows and accompanied by celestial women came to the āśrama, and there they began singing and dancing. The erotic flow enchanted the soul of Naranārāyaṇas. Nārāyaṇarṣi awoke from his tapas and whispered something in the ears of Nara. By now Kāmadeva had entered the presence of Naranārāyaṇas accompanied by the reputed beauties of Svarloka like Menakā, Rambhā, Tilottamā, Sukeśinī, Manoramā, Maheśvarī, Puṣpagandhā, Pramadvarā, Ghṛtācī, Candraprabhā, Somaprabhā, Vidyunmālā, Ambujākṣī and Kāñcanamālā. These beauties were accompanied by 10080 of their beautiful attendants. Naranārāyaṇas were wonder-struck to see this army of Kāma. All those great beauties stood before Naranārāyaṇas in salutation. Some of them began to sing, others to dance and yet others to take up the tunes. Nārāyaṇarṣi could easily divine the reason for the show. He thought to himself thus—

"None but Devendra could have sent all these people here, and his object must be to hinder our tapas. But I shall prove to Indra that all these mean nothing to me. Let Devendra understand that I can create more beautiful ladies than these women of his here and that I am not in the least attracted by any of them here."

Thinking thus Nārāyaṇa beat gently on his thigh and immediately arose therefrom an exceptionally beautiful woman. Since that woman, the most beautiful in all the three worlds, was created from the Ūru (thigh) of Nārāyaṇa she came to be known as Urvaśī. Others were wonder-struck by this new creation. He created some other beauties also, and an equal number of other women to serve them. All of them stood before him in humble salutation.

The celestial women almost fainted with fear. In repentance they begged the munis pardon for their mistake. The munis were kindly disposed towards them. They told them that they (munis) cherished no animosity towards them, but in fact were pleased with them, and they further asked them (celestial women) to choose their boons. The munis also asked them to take Urvaśī to Devaloka as a present from them to Indra. Let the Devas prosper.

Having heard Nara speak like this the celestial women returned in great humility to Devaloka with Urvaśī and the other women. (Devī Bhāgavata, 4th Skandha).

3) Other information.

(i) Nara and Nārāyaṇa were two incarnations of Mahāviṣṇu. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 384)

(ii) A dark hair of Nārāyaṇarṣi was born as Kṛṣṇa and a white one as Balabhadrarāma. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 196, Verse 32).

(iii) He was a star member in Brahmā's assembly. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 11, verse 52)

(iv) Once he appeared before Māndhātā in the guise of Indra. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 64, Verse 14).

(v) He once fought with Śiva and won. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 382, Verse 110)

For complete details about Nārāyaṇarṣi see under Nara Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa)

NĀRĀYAṆĀŚRAMA. A holy place. (Vana Parva, Chapter 29, Verse 6)

NĀRĀYAṆASTHĀNA. (ŚĀLAGRĀMATĪRTHA). A sacred place where Mahāviṣṇu is always present. Brahmā, Devas, Sannyāsins, Ādityas, Vasus. and Rudras are also ever present here in the service of Viṣṇu. Viṣṇu is called Śālagrāma as he is being thus worshipped at Śālagrāma. Those who visit the place will enjoy the fruits of Aśvamedha yajña and ascend to Vaikuṇṭha. (Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 115).

NĀRĀYAṆĀSTRAMOKṢAPARVA. A sub parva of Droṇa Parva comprising of Chapters 193-220.

NĀRĀYAṆAVARMAMANTRA. Imparted by Viśvarūpa, son of Tvaṣṭā, to Indra, this mantra is competent to destroy enemies. He who dasires to chant this mantra should do so silently after having first washed his hands and feet and holding Kuśa grass in his hands with face turned towards the north. The mantra is to be chanted when some danger is imminent.

NĀRĪ. A daughter of Meru. She and her sisters were married by the following sons of Agnīdhra, i.e. Nābhi, Kimpuruṣa, Hari, Ilāvṛta, Ramyaka, Hiraṇmaya, Kuru, Bhadrāśva and Ketumāla. (Bhāgavata, 5th Skandha).

NARIṢYANTA I. Son of Vaivasvata Manu. He was a brother of Ikṣvāku. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 8).

NARIṢYANTA II. A King who was the son of Marutta. Indrasenā was his wife; Dama was his son. While Nariṣyanta was leading the life of a house-holder in the forest, Vapuṣmān killed him. Indrasenā jumped into the funeral pyre of her husband and died. (Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa).

NĀRĪTĪRTHA. Common name for the five tīrthas, i.e. Agastya tīrtha, Saubhadratīrtha, Paulomatīrtha, Kārandhamatīrtha and Bharadvājatīrtha. Once Arjuna bathed in Bharadvājatīrtha. The Apsarā women called Vargās were living in the five tīrthas in the form of crocodiles as the result of a curse. With the arrival of Arjuna there, the crocodiles resumed their previous forms as Apsarā women and returned to Devaloka. (For the curse etc. see under Vargā).

NARMADĀ I. A famous holy river of South India. This river which springs from Amarakaṇṭaka flows through the valley called Khambhāta and falls into the ocean.

1) Birth. This river which is considered to be a holy river was the rebirth of Tapatī the daughter of the Sun. (To know how Tapatī was reborn as Narmadā, see under Tapatī).

2) The divine nature of the river Narmadā. Mention is made in most of the Purāṇas about the river Narmadā which is one of the holy rivers of Bhārata. Once Nārada said to Yudhiṣṭhira about the river Narmadā as follows: "Gaṅgā has more divinity in Kanakhala and Sarasvatī has more divinity in Kurukṣetra. But Narmadā is a holy river everywhere, whether in the villages or in the forests. Sarasvatī purifies us in three days and Gaṅgā in one day. But the moment we see Narmadā we are purified."

The river Narmadā, the former half of which embraces the mountain Amarakaṇṭaka in the country of Kaliṅga, is the purest of rivers in the three worlds. The devas, asuras, Gandharvas and hermits bathe in the river and attain eternal bliss. He who controls his organs of senses and takes fast for one night and bathes in this river would be prosperous for hundred generations. This great river is hundred yojanas long and two yojanas wide. There are sixty crores and sixty thousand holy ghats in this river around the mountain Amarakaṇṭaka. Anybody who dies by fire, by drowning or by fast on this mountain Amarakaṇṭaka, will never have rebirth. (Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 13).

3) Mahābhārata and Narmadā. Throughout Mahābhārata mention is made about Narmadā. Important of them are given below :

(i) Goddess Narmadā stays in the palace of Varuṇa worshipping him. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 18).

(ii) While leading forest life Dharmaputra with his brothers visited Narmadādevī. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 121, Stanza 16).

(iii) Indra and the Aśvinīdevas once drank Soma sitting on the mountain Vaiḍūrya on the banks of the Narmadā. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 121, Stanza 19).

(iv) Narmadā is the origin of Agni (fire). (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 222, Stanza 21).
(v) A king named Duryodhana, who ruled over the city called Māhiṣmatī on the banks of the Narmadā once married Devī Narmadā. A daughter named Sudarśanā was born to them. She was extremely beautiful. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 2, Stanza 18).
(vi) He who observes fast for two weeks bathing in the waters of Narmadā will be born as a prince in the next birth. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 50).
(vii) Once Narmadā took Purukutsa, the son of Māndhātā, as her husband. (M.B. Āśramavāsika Parva, Chapter 20, Stanza 12). For the importance of Narmadā, see under Pramohinī).

NARMADĀ II. See under Puṣpotkaṭā.

NARMADĀ III. Wife of Purukutsa, the son of Māndhātā. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

NARYA. A King of the age of Ṛgveda. It is mentioned in Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala I, Anuvāka 10, Sūkta 54, that Devendra had rescued the Kings Narya, Turvasu and Yadu.

NĀSATYA. One of the Aśvinīkumāras. (Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 208, Verse 17).

NAŚĪKA. The grandson of Lomapāda. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

NĀṬAKEYA. A particular region in ancient India. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 38).

NĀṬOṬINĀṬAKA. A kind of dramatic performance in ancient Kerala. (See Tirayāṭṭam).

NĀṬOṬIPPĀṬṬU. (FOLK-SONGS). Every literature has a section known as nāṭoṭippāṭṭus (folk songs). In Kerala (Malayālam) literature the period of folk songs was a golden era. Worship of devatās, honouring heroes, entertainments, philosophy, science, caste-professions, morals, ethics etc., generally formed the themes for folk songs. There are a number of folk-songs in Malayālam called Saṅghakkali, Tīyāṭṭu, Olappāvakkūttu, Ezhāmatu Kali, Kāṇippāṭṭu, Nāṭṭuppāṭṭu, Vaṭṭippāṭṭn, Pūrakkalippāṭṭu, Aṭaccuturappāṭṭu, (Pulluvarpāṭṭu, Nizhalkūttuppāṭṭu, Bhadrakālippāṭṭu, Tirayāṭṭu etc.All these songs are reflective of the spiritual thoughts and ideas of the masses. Also, there is a special series of folk-songs called Vaṭakkanpāṭṭus (songs of the north).
All the Vaṭakkanpāṭṭus are heroic songs. They are folk-songs eulogising the heroic deeds and achievements of certain heroes and heroines of exceptional courage and prowess who flourished in olden days in north Malabar. Though there are more than four hundred such songs, only thirtyfive of them have been printed and published yet. These songs, which call for no special training or gifts for their singing or require any special knowledge in music for their appreciation, take their roots in the hearts of the common people. Almost all these songs are connected with Kalaris (schools where gymnastics are taught), Aṭavu (strategic feats of the duel fight), Payattu (physical training) and Aṅkam (fight). Descriptions of the challenges by heroes, clashing of arms and the way how youngsters get out of danger by their intelligence and prowess are really exciting and exhilarating to read.
Most of the heroes in the Vaṭakkanpāṭṭus lived either in Kaṭattanāḍu or its suburbs. A good majority of the songs sings the praises of two powerful families Puttūram house and Taccolimāṇikkattu, the former a Tīya and the latter a Nāyar family. Taccolimāṇikkattu house was at Meppa in Putuppaṇam village near Vaṭakara in Kaṭattanāḍu, and most of the songs relate to the great hero Otenakkuruppu of this house. Otenakkuruppu was born in 1584 A.D. and lived for thirtytwo years. Therefore, the Vaṭakkanpāṭṭus may generally be placed in the 16th and 17th centuries A.D. Āromalcekavar, Āromaluṇṇi, Āṭṭummaṇamel Uṇṇiyārcca, Taccoli Otenan, Taccoli Candu, Pālāṭṭu Komappan, Bambāyi Ālikutty, Putunāṭan Kelu and Kalpparampil Kaṇṇan are the chief characters in the paṭṭus. Especially the song about Uṇṇiyārcca is thrilling. Brief notes about the heroes and their families in the pāṭṭus are given below.

1) Puttūram Vīṭu. (Puttūram House). Āromal Cekavar, Āṭṭuṁmaṇamel Uṇṇiyārcca and Āromaluṇṇi were the star heroes of the house. Uṇṇiyārcca was the sister of Āromalcekavar and mother of Āromaluṇṇi whose father was Kaṇṇappan. It may be understood from the song 'puttiriyaṅkam' that Āromalcekavar was born to Kaṇṇappan when he was fortytwo years old. One or two songs about Āromalcekavar are extant, one about his playing a game of dice and the other about his fighting the 'puttiriyaṅkam'.
As for the game of dice, Āromalcekavar went to his uncle at Mikavil Mikaccerivīṭṭil—an expert in the game of dice—to study the art. There he spent a night with his uncle's daughter Tumpolārcca, who became pregnant by him. Though people ridiculed her at this development Āromal cekavar took her as his wife when she had delivered his child. Āromal Cekavar had also another wife called Kuñcuṇṇūli of Ālattūr house.
With regard to the puttiriyaṅkam, Aromar as the Cekavar (Sevakan, one who served) of Uṇṇikkonār,once went to fight with Ariṅṅoṭar. Candu, his father's nephew, accompanied him as his assistant. Candu hated Āromar from the day the latter stood in his way of marrying Uṇṇiyārca.
Ariṅṅoṭar brought over to his side Candu, assistant of Āromar. Āromar killed Ariṅṅoṭar in combat and on his way home he slept lying on the lap of Candu weary after the combat when the treacherous Candu thrust heated handle of the lamp into a wound in the stomach of Āromar, who managed to reach home only to die there.

2) Āṭṭummaṇamel Uṇṇiyārcca. Uṇṇiyārcca, overruling the opposition of her father-in-law and mother-in-law, one day went with her husband Kuñjurāman to witness Kūttu in the Allimalar temple. When they came to Eṭavaṭṭam market after passing Tānūr market certain ruffians confronted them. The coward that he was, Kuñjurāman trembled before the ruffians, but Uṇṇiyārcca routed them with her skill in combat.

3) Āromaluṇṇi. Āromaluṇṇi, who as a youth heard from his mother Uṇṇiyārcca the story about the treacherous killing of his uncle, Āromal Cekavar, by Candu rushed to Kolattunāḍu and killed the latter in combat.

4) Taccoli Otenan. Otenan was a powerful Nāyar (Kuruppu) born in Taccoli māṇikkattu house. His father was a nāyar chief well-known both as Putuppaṇattuvāzunnor and Cīnaṁvīṭṭil Taṅṅal. His mother was Uppāṭṭi, daughter of a woman called Teyi. He had an elder brother called Komappan and a younger sister called Uṇicciruta (Uṇiccira). Otenan's father begot a son (Kaṇṭācceri Cāppan) of Mākkam, the maid-servant of Uppāṭṭi. Cāppan grew up to be a constant companion of Otenan. Komappan (Komakkuruppu) brother of Otenan was a peace-loving, sedate person. Otenan mastered all the tricks of Kalarippayattu at the gymnasium of Matiloor Gurukkal. Otenan had also mastered the use of the Urumi (a thin sword). He was such a master in the use of the Urumi that he could, by one sweep of it, graze the throat of a man without cutting and shedding a drop of blood. He was an expert in necromancy also. What could not be managed by the physical strength of Otenan, Cāppan used to manage with his intellectual powers.

Otenan was born on the slope of a hill at Meppa one mile east of the present Vaṭakara railway station. Relics and remnants of Māṇikkattu family are there yet to be seen. Many songs have been composed about Otenan. One of them is his going to receive presents of cloth on Onam day from a stingy chief who, after the death of Otenan's father, had become 'Putuppaṇattu Vāzhunnavar'. Another song relates to his collecting taxes from Kotumala Kuññikkaṇṇan on behalf of Rājā of Koṭṭayam. Yet another song is about his putting down the conceit and pride of Kuṅki amma of Kekki house. And, another song is about his killing Kaiteki Otenan Nambiyār. His fight with the māppilas on behalf of the Rājā of Cirakkal forms the theme of yet another song. Another interesting song is about his making Koṭṭakkal Kuññāli Marakkār, who was a bosom friend of his, though a philanderer put on the attires of a female and thus teaching him a good lesson in life. Another song describes the escape of Otenan, who went to see the construction of the Karimala fort, with the help of Cāppan. There are also many other songs about Otenan.

The very marriage of Otenan is an interesting story. Mātevi amma of Kāvilum cāttottu had a daughter named Cīru. Māteviamma went to Māṇikkattu house and requested Otenan to marry her daughter Cīru. Otenan refused to oblige her. But, Cīru grew up to be very beautiful girl, and Otenan, who saw her in that state felt a great passion for her. He sent Cāppan to her for a pan (betel leaves for chewing) which she also refused. At last Cāppan took Otenan disguised as a blind person to Cīru's house. Cīru and Otenan got married without the knowledge of Cīru's mother, who cursed them when she knew about the marriage.

There is another story about Otenan and Karuttaniṭam (Kaṭattanāṭu) Kuññikkanni, the only daugher of the Rājā of Kaṭattanāṭu. A rowdy called Kelappan of Ponnāpuram fort forcibly carried her off. The Rājā, who tried to bring back his daughter had to return wounded.. Otenan came to know that Ponnāpuram fort had once been given as dowry to his family and Kelappan was in illegal and forcible occupation of it. Otenan along with Cāppan went and captured the fort. He released Kuññikkanni from captivity and took Kelappan captive. The Rājā of Kaṭattanāṭu was very much pleased with this exploit of Otenan and married Kuññikkanni to him.

There is also a story about Otenan fighting with the māppilas of Cirakkal.The māppilas did not honour the Rājā of Cirakkal during one of his tours, and the Rājā asked Otenan to put down the haughtiness of the māppilas, and he did so. Kotamala Kuṅkiamma, the Rājā Pulināḍu, Matilūr Gurukkal and others are referred to in this story.

Katirūr Gurukkal was a very powerful enemy of Otenan. The Gurukkal one day kept his new gun leaning against a jack fruit tree, and Otenan, in derision, commented about it thus : "Who is it that has kept the spear made of earth leaning against the tree on which usually spear made of gold is kept so ?" The Gurukkal, angry at the insult challenged Otenan for a combat within three months from Wednesday, the ninth of Kumbham. On the appointed day Otenan went to Gurukkal's combat field and killed him, Parintukūl Emmenpaniykar and others. On his way home after the victory, Otenan remembered that he had forgotten his dagger on the platform of the peepal tree, and paying no heed to the advice of his friends he returned to the combat field and got killed there.

5) Taccoli Candu. Candu was Otenan's nephew and was reputed for his great prowess. Mālu of Tāzhattumaṭham was his wife. One day she went for worship in the Omallur temple where Kaṇḍar Menon of Tulunāṭan fort abducted her into his court. Candu was at the time, twentytwo years old. On hearing about his wife's mishap Candu, disguised as a Sannyāsin, entered the fort and fought singlehanded against Menon and his army of 400 soldiers.

6) Pālaṭṭu Koman. Koman Nāyar, another nephew of Otenan, the son of Kuṅkiamma of Kappullipalāṭṭu, became famous under the name Komappan. The family feud between the Kuruppus of Toṇṇūrāmvīṭu and the Nāyars of Pālāṭu was a long-standing affair. There were seven Kuruppus during the days of Koman, and they had two sisters named Uṇṇicciruta and Uṇṇiamma. Koman felt a great passion towards Uṇṇiamma, who was bathing in the tank, and her brothers rushed to kill Koman. But Koman outlived all obstacles created by the seven brothers of Uṇṇiamma and the tale-bearing Uṇicciruta because of the cleverness of the very intelligent Uṇṇiamma. Koman also got settled by Otenan the fortytwo items of family quarrels and married Uṇṇiamma.

7) Bambāyi Ālikkuṭṭi. In the song about Ādirāja it is said Ālikkuṭṭi, an expert in the science relating to elephants, was invited for help when the seventh elephant of the Rājā escaped back into the forest. Ālikkuṭṭi hailed from Bombay. According to the song under reference Ālikkuṭṭi brought back the elephant from the forest to the Rājā, who, greatly pleased with him, gave his daughter, Kuññikkaṇṇi, in marriage to him.

8) Putunāṭan Kelu. Putunāṭan Candu and Kelu were brothers. Candu married a woman named Mātu. One Vaṭṭoli Menon became Mātu's paramour by bribing her with a golden chain worth three thousand paṇams, and she got her husband killed by this paramour. Candu had two dogs called Malli and Cokkan, and one of them kept guard over Candu's dead body while the other went and informed Kelu about Candu's death. Kelu, in great rage, rushed to the place, saw the golden chain presented to Mātu by Menon and blinded one of her eyes.

9) Kurumparampil Kaṇṇan. This tīya youth had a very chaste wife called Āryā. One day when Kaṇṇan was away from home for tapping coconut palms for toddy Putukolottu rājā saw Āryā, and having felt a great passion for her he presented her one night four pieces of silk and a gold ring. The next day Āryā dressed her husband as a brahmin with the sacred thread on, and deputed him to return to the Rājā's wife the presents made by her husband to her (Āryā). Kaṇṇan succeeded in his mission, but the revengeful Rājā ordered him to be executed. Āryā went to the Rājā and after various discussions with him returned home.

NAUBANDHANA. A peak of the Himālayas. The peak came to be known by this name on account of the following cause. Once upon a time Hiraṇyakaśipu stole the Vedas and with them hid in the bottom of the ocean. Mahāviṣṇu incarnated himself as fish to restore the Vedas. The world then was submerged in water and the maharṣis escaped in a boat attached to the horns of the Makara fish. On earth flood rose upto the peaks of the Himālayas. The Saptarṣis attached their boat to a peak of the mountain and that came to be known as Naubandhana. (nau=boat; bandha=tie). (Vana Parva, Chapter 187, Verse 50).

NAUKARṆĪ. A female attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 29).

NAVAGVA. The Navagvas are a group of the Aṅgirases. In Ṛgveda, mention is made about them in several places.

NAVAKANYAKĀ(S). An important item of Navarātripūjā (A festival of 9 days, as observed by Śakti worshippers) is the worship of virgins. The nine kinds of virgins (from two to ten years in age) thus worshipped are called Navakanyakās (nine virgins). (See under Kumārīpūjā).

NAVAMĪVRATA. (Fast on the ninth lunar day). This is a special fast taken in the month of Tulām (October-November) with a view to obtain 'Bhukti' (enjoyment or possession) and 'Mukti' (Beatitude). The important rite of this worship is to take fast on the ninth night of the bright lunar fortnight in the month of Tulām and worship goddess Gaurī. This navamī is also called Gaurīnavamī. Another name of this navamī is Piṣṭāka navamī. This name is given because on that day Piṣṭam (ground rice) is eaten and the goddess is worshipped. In the bright lunar fortnight of the month of Tulām (Āśvina), on the eighth night when the star is Mūlam and the Sun is in the zodiac of Kanyā if there is the touch of Navamī, it is called Aghārdananavamī or Mahānavamī.

Worship could be conducted on the days mentioned, by consecrating the goddess Durgā in nine temples or in one temple only. When the goddess is consecrated in nine temples they are meditated upon as nine separate beings. In such cases Goddess Durgā should be consecrated with eighteen hands and the rest of the goddesses with sixteen hands. Of the eighteen two should be holding Antimony and ḍamaru (a small drum shaped like an hourglass), and the remaining sixteen hands should hold weapons that the other goddesses hold. The nine goddesses to be worshipped are Rudrā, Caṇḍā, Pracaṇḍā, Caṇḍogrā, Caṇḍanāyikā, Caṇḍavatī and Caṇḍarūpā and in the middle of these eight beings the great goddess Durgā who is Ugracaṇḍā and the slayer of Mahiṣāsura. Durgā is addressed with the spell of ten letters "Om, Durge Durgekṣiṇi Svāhā." Adoration, offering to ancestors and exclamation in sacrifice (Namaskāra, Svadhākāra and Vaṣaṭkāra) should be denoted by six words and the Aṅgas (organs) beginning with heart also should be imagined. This root-spell should be repeated resting the organs such as heart etc. on the fingers. He who repeats this secret spell of goddess, will never be troubled by enemies.

The goddess should be worshipped by meditating upon her as carrying the weapons such as Kapāla (skull), Kheṭaka (shield) Ghaṇṭā (bell), Mirror, Tarjanī, bow, dhvaja (flag), ḍamaru (drum) and pāśa (rope) in the left hands and Śakti (dart) Mudgara, trident, vajra, sword, spear, conch, wheel and Śalāka (antimony) in the right hands. These weapons also should specially be worshipped.

In the worship of the goddess, a cow (sacrificial animal) should be beheaded with a sword repeating the spell Kālī Kālī and the blood and flesh of that cow should be offered as oblation to the goddess Pūtanā uttering the spell, Kālī Kālī Vajreśvarī, lauhadaṇḍāyai namaḥ." Offering to Pūtanā should be made in the south west corner of the shrine of the Devī. In the same way offerings of blood and flesh should be made to the goddesses Pāparākṣasī in the North West corner, Carakī in the North East corner and Vidārikā in the South East corner. The same form of offerings should be made to the god Mahākauśika in the south East corner. The King should bathe in front of this god Mahākauśika and making an image of his enemy with rice flour, should break it. Then give that rice flour as oblation to the gods Skanda and Viśākha and worship the female ancestors such as Brāhmī and such others in the night. As ordained in the Vedas, the Devī should be bathed in Pañcāmṛta (milk, curds, butter, honey and water) and then worship before her, uttering the spell "Jayantīmaṅgala Kālī, Bhadrakālī Kapālinī, Durgā Śivā Kṣamā Dhātrī Svadhā Svāhā Namostu te". (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 185).

NAVARATNAS I. (The nine precious Jewels). The nine precious stones are pearl, ruby, Chrysoprasus, beryl, diamond, coral, jacinth, emerald and sapphire.

Muktā - māṇikya - vaiḍūryā - gomeda vajra -vidrumau/
Padmarāgo maratakaṁ nīlaśceti yathākramam//

NAVARATNAS II. Legend says that there were nine scholars who handled philosophy and arts, in the palace of the emperor Vikramāditya. These nine scholars were known by the name Navaratnas (the nine jewels). They were Dhanvantari, Kṣapaṇaka, Amarasiṁha, Śaṅku, Vetālabhaṭṭa, Ghaṭakarpara, Kālidāsa, Varāhamihira and Vararuci.

NAVARĀTRĪ. Navarātripūjā (nine nights' worship) is done to goddess Durgā. Though this is observed throughout the whole of India, it is more prominent in North India than anywhere else. (To know the details regarding the origin of this worship, see under Sudarśa, Śaśikalā and Vijayadaśamī).

As ordained in the Vedas, the Nine nights' worship is to be made in the seasons of spring and autumn. These two seasons are called Kāladaṁṣṭrās (the tusks of seasons). Diseases and deaths occur in these seasons in excess, and so it is ordained that this fast and worship should be conducted in the months of Meḍam (Meṣa) and Tulām.

Vyāsa has ordered that navarātri worship should be conducted as follows. The things necessary for the worship and oblations should be collected on the new moon day. Only clarified butter could be eaten on that day. An open temple should be erected with pillars and flag-posts in an open flat place which is pure. It will be good if the shed has a circumference of sixteen cubits. There should be sixteen pillars. The shed should be floored with the mixture of cowdung and white clay. In the middle of the shed there must be a dais having a height of one cubit and a circumference of four cubits. This is the place for the seat. The shed and the dais should be decorated.

The throne placed on the dais must be covered with a white silk and Devī (goddess) should be consecrated on it. A calm Brahmin should read the Vedas and at that time the worship of the goddess should begin. This worship will continue for nine days. Another ritual of this 'navarātripūjā' is the worship of virgins. (See under Kumārīpūjā)

NAVAVYŪHĀRCANA. This is a worship conducted to prevent epidemics. In olden days Mahāviṣṇu advised Nārada on the form of this worship. The form of this worship is given below:

In the centre of the circular lotus, consecrate Vāsudeva with the first syllable of mantra (spell) 'A'. To the south of him consecrate and worship Saṅkarṣaṇa and Pradyumna with the syllable 'Ā'; in the S.E. corner, Aniruddha with the syllable 'Aḥ'; in the west,Nārāyaṇa with the syllable 'Om'; Brahmā in the N.W. corner with the syllables 'Tatsat'; Viṣṇu in the North with the syllable 'Hum'; Nṛsiṁha with the syllable 'Kṣau' and Varāha in the N.E. corner with the syllable 'bhūm'.

Consecrate Garuḍa with spells having as first syllables 'Kam','ṭam', "sam" and'śam' at the western entrance of the lotus figure; Pūrvavaktra, with syllables 'Kham' 'cham',Vam'and hum'at the southern entrance of the lotus figure; Gadā (club), with the syllables 'Kham', 'ṭham' and 'Śam' at the Northern entrance; consecrate Īśa with the syllables 'bam', 'ṇam','mam'and 'Kṣam, in the North East corner. Then consecrate Śrī with the syllables. 'Dham'. 'Dam', 'Bham' and 'Ham' on the southern side; Vanamālī with the syllables 'Gam', 'Ḍam' 'Vam' and 'Śam', on the northern side; Śrīvatsa with the syllables 'sam', 'ham' and 'lam', to the west of Vanamālī; and Kaustubha, with the syllables, 'cham', 'Tam' and 'yam', to the west of Śrīvatsa.

After having consecrated and worshipped persons as mentioned above, in the order of the ten member-parts of Mahāviṣṇu, Ananta should be consecrated below the seat of the deity and in the order of the ten member parts of Ananta, the four component parts called Mahendra and so on should be consecrated on the four directions such as east and so on, and consecrate in the same way all the decorations, flags, canopy etc. Then the three spheres of Vāyu (Air), Agni (fire) and Indu (moon) should be consecrated with the first syllables of the spells suited to each and meditating on them and worshipping them, dip the body in the meditation. Then imagine that the subtle form of the individual soul is staying in the sky. Then meditate that the individual soul is reborn by harmony with the universal soul after having been dipped and washed in the snow-white ambrosia emanating from the moon. After that saying to yourself 'I am Viṣṇu himself reborn", utter the twelve-syllabled mantra or spell. Place heart, head, turban and weapon respectively on chest, head, hindpart of the lock of hair and Netra (eye) Place weapons in both hands. After this your body will become divine. This placing of the individual soul should be repeated in the same way with Deva (god) and Śiva. When this worship of Viṣṇu is conducted in heart in imagination (without the aid of materials) it is called 'Anirmālyapūjā, and when it is done with the aid of lotus figure etc., it is called Sanirmālya pūjā.

At this pūjā (worship) the disciple should stand with eyes tied. Then on whichever deity he places flower it should be given that name. Place it on the left side and burn gingelly, paddy and ghee in the sacrificial fire. After performing hundred and eight burnings perform another burning for the purification of the body. To each of the member-parts of the Navavyūha deities also burnt offering should be made, no less than hundred times to each. Then put the entire thing in fire as burnt offer ng. Then the disciples should take fast, and the disciples should offer wealth etc. to the teacher. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 201).

NĀVYĀŚRAMA. An āśrama built by Lomapāda Maharṣi. Ṛṣyaśṛṅga came to Lomapāda's country in a boat. Hence the name Nāvyāśrama (See under Ṛṣyaśṛṅga.

NĀYANĀR. The protagonists of Southern Śaivism are known as Nāyanārs while those of Vaiṣṇavism are called Ālvārs.

NEMIHAMSAPADA. An important place in ancient India. The place is near Akṣaprapatanam in the Ānarta region. It was here that Kṛṣṇa killed Gopati and Tālaketu.

NEPĀLA. The kingdom of Nepal on the boundaries of the Himālayas has been famous from Purāṇic times. It is the only 'Hindu' State in the world. Karṇa, during his triumphal tour, had conquered Nepal also. (Vana Parva, Chapter 254, Verse 7).

NIBIḌA. A mountain in the Krauñca island. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 19).

NICANDRA. A Rākṣasa referred to in verse 26, Chapter 65 of Ādi Parva.

NICITĀ. A holy river of ancient India. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 18).

NIDĀGHA. A maharṣi. (For details see under Ṛbhu)

NIDHRUVA. One who actually saw the Sūktas. He was the son of Vatsāra Ṛṣi born in Kaśyapa dynasty. He married Sumedhas the daughter born to Cyavana and Sukanyā; and Kuṇḍapāyins were their sons. (Vāyu Purāṇa).

NIGHNA. A King of Ayodhyā and son of Anaraṇya. He had two sons called Anamitra and Raghūttama. (Padma Purāṇa, Sṛṣṭi Khaṇḍa).

NIKHARVAṬA. A Rākṣasa in Rāvaṇa's camp. He fought with the monkey called Tāra in the Rāma-Rāvaṇa war. (Vana Parva, Chapter 235, Verse 80).

NIKṢUBHĀ. An Apsarā woman about whom the following story occurs in the Brahmaparva of the Bhaviṣya Purāṇa. On account of the curse of Sūrya, Nikṣubhā, the great beauty in Svarloka, was born on earth as daughter of Sujihva a brahmin of Mihira Gotra. At the instance of her father, she used to keep the yajña fire ever burning. One day the fire held in her hands abruptly burst into flames, and her unique beauty revealed in the light kindled the passion of Sūrya.

Next day Sūrya went to Sujihva and told him that his daughter, Nikṣubhā was carrying since he had married her. As soon as he heard Sūrya's words Sujihva cursed his daughter thus: "Since the child in your womb is enveloped by fire the child born to you will be despised and rejected by people."

Then Sūrya went to Nikṣubhā and told her that though her child might be despised he would be a scholar, very well-bred and eligible for the worship of Agni.

As years passed many children were born to her by Sūrya. While she was living in the Śāka island Sāmba, the son of Kṛṣṇa, deputed her sons to perform rites in the Sūrya temple at Sāmbapura. Nikṣubhā's sons were married to girls born in the Bhoja family.

NIKUMBHA I. A very mighty Rākṣasa. Son of Kumbhakarṇa (Rāvaṇa's brother) by his wife Vajramālā. He had an elder brother called Kumbha.

When Kumbha was killed in the Rāma-Rāvaṇa war Nikumbha rushed to the front line and fought fiercely, and he was killed by Hanūmān. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa, Canto 77).

NIKUMBHA II. Third son of Prahlāda. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 63, Verse 19).

NIKUMBHA III. An asura born in the dynasty of Hiraṇyakaśipu. Sunda and Upasunda were his sons. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 208, Verse 2).

NIKUMBHA IV. A warrior of Subrahmaṇya (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 58).

NIKUMBHA V. A king born in the Ikṣvāku dynasty. He was the son of Haryaśva and the father of Saṁhitāśva (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 1).

NIKUMBHA VI. Another form of Gaṇapati. The following story about him in the Nikumbha state is told in Vāyu Purāṇa.

Suyaśā, wife of Divodāsa used to worship in the Nikumbha temple of Vārāṇasī for the sake of a child. As the worship did not yield the desired effect, Divodāsa smashed the idol in the temple into pieces. Then Nikumbha cursed that Vārāṇasī should decline. As a result of the curse the Hehayas like Tālajaṅgha and others destroyed Vārāṇasī and drove Divodāsa away from there. At last the Nikumbha temple was rebuilt and Vārāṇasī became prosperous again.

NIKUMBHILĀ. A particular spot in the forest outside Laṅkāpurī. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

NĪLA. I. A prominent nāga born to Kaśyapa Prajāpati of Kadrū. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 7).

NĪLA II.

1) General. A King born in the Hehaya dynasty. His was a rebirth of the asura called Krodhavaśa. Nīla was called Duryodhana also. Māhiṣmatī was the capital of his kingdom. He attended the Svayaṁvara of Draupadī. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 61).

2) Other Information

(i) Once he fought a fierce battle with Sahadeva, but ultimately yielded to the latter at the instance of Agnideva. (See under Agni, Para 8).

(ii) He gave his daughter Sudarśanā in marriage to Agnideva. (See under Agni, Para 8).

(iii) During his triumphal tour, Karṇa defeated Nīla. (Vana Parva, Chapter 254, Verse 15).

(iv) In the battle of Kurukṣetra he fought on the side of the Kauravas. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 19, Verse 23).

(v) He was reckoned as one of the mahārathis on the side of Duryodhana. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 164, Verse 4).

(vi) Sudarśanā was a daughter born to him of his wife Narmadā. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 2).

NĪLA III. A monkey-chief, who was a dependant of Śrī Rāma. He was Agni's son. 'Nīla, son of Pāvaka (fire) shone forth like agni (fire). He stood foremost among the monkeys in the matter of effulgence, reputation and prowess'. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Canto 17). This monkey-chief was also included in the set of monkeys deputed by Śrī Rāma to search for Sītā. In the Rāma-Rāvaṇa war Nīla killed Pramāthī, the younger brother of the Rākṣasa called Dūṣaṇa. (Vana Parva, Chapter 287, Verse 27).

NĪLA IV. A warrior who fought on the Pāṇḍava side. He was king of Anūpadeśa. He fought against Durjaya and Aśvatthāmā and was killed by Aśvatthāmā. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 25).

NĪLĀ. I. A daughter born to Kapiśa of Keśinī. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 3).

NĪLĀ. II. A Gopikā. Śrī Kṛṣṇa was one day picnicking in Vṛndāvana with the Gopī women, and they were proud that he was mad after them. To dispel their pride Kṛṣṇa disappeared abruptly from their midst and sported with the woman called Nīlā. Then she also became proud that Kṛṣṇa loved her more than the others, and she asked him to carry her on his shoulders. He stood there ready stretching his neck to carry her. But, when she stood with her legs parted to mount on Kṛṣṇa's neck and looked for him he was missing; he had already disappeared. The Gopikās ultimately shed their pride and then Kṛṣṇa appeared before them. (Ceruśśeri's Malayālam Epic Kṛṣṇa Gāthā).

NĪLAGIRI. Name of a mountain in the region called Ilāvṛta of Jambū island. In Ilāvṛta there are three chief mountains called Nīlagiri, Śvetagiri and Śṛṅgavān, and in their middle three Varṣas (regions) called Ramyaka, Hiraṇmaya and Kuru. (Devī Bhāgavata, 8th Skandha).

NĪLAKAṆṬHA DĪKṢITAR. A Sanskrit poet who flourished in the 17th century A.D. He was the court poet of King Tirumala-Nāyaka. He has written works in all the branches of literature. His more important works are Śivalīlārṇava, Gaṅgāvataraṇa. Nīlakaṇṭhavijaya Campū, and Kalividambana. Śivalīlārṇava contains twentytwo cantos. Its theme is the sixtyfour līlās (Divine sports) of Śiva installed at Madura. (South India) Gaṅgāvataraṇa is a poem in eight cantos which describes the story of Bhagīratha bringing Gaṅgā down to the earth. In the first canto of Nīlakaṇṭhavijaya, A.D. 1638-39 is referred to as the period of its composition, and this reference helps us to determine the date of the poet.

NĪLĪ. Second wife of King Ajamīḍha. Two sons called Duṣyanta and Parameṣṭhī were born to the king of Nīlī. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 32).

NĪLINĪ. A wife of Śunaśśepha. A daughter called Śānti was born to him of Nīlinī. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

NIMEṢA I. A son of Garuḍa. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 104, Verse 10).

NIMEṢA II. See under Kālamāna.

NIMI I. A famous emperor who was the son of Ikṣvāku.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu thus: Brahmā—Marīci—Kaśyapa — Vivasvān — Vaivasvata Manu—Ikṣvāku—Nimi.

Among the sons of Ikṣvāku, Daṇḍa, Vikukṣi and Nimi became famous.

2) Vasiṣṭha's curse. Emperor Nimi was very generous with his gifts. He was interested in performing yajñas. The feeding hall that can be seen even today near the āśrama of Gautama Maharṣi was built by emperor Nimi. The emperor, a person of rājasic nature, decided to conduct a Yajña which would take a long time to end and which required much money for gifts; and he got his father Ikṣvāku's permission for it. Arrangements were made for the Yajña, and Ṛṣis like Bhṛgu, Aṅgiras Vāmadeva, Pulastya, Pulaha and Ṛcīka who were competent to perform yajña and great scholars in the Vedas were invited for the Yajña. Lastly he met his family preceptor Vasiṣṭha and told him thus: "Oh preceptor! I have made all arrangements for a Yajña, which it is my desire should last for five hundred years. You would also come with me and see that the Yajña is duly performed."

Vasiṣṭha listened to Nimi's request with great attention. But, he had already been invited by Indra to conduct a Yajña which would last for five hundred years, and he would be able to oblige Nimi only after that period of time. So Vasiṣṭha asked the emperor to postpone his proposed yajña by five hundred years. Nimi returned disappointed.

Nimi had no patience to wait for five hundred years. So he started the yajña with Gautama as his preceptor. After Indra's Yajña for 500 years was over, Vasiṣṭha came to Nimi's Yajña hall. Nimi, at the time, was in the inner apartment of his palace. Though his servants went to him to tell him that his preceptor Vasiṣṭha had come, they waited outside his chamber as he was sleeping then. Within a few moments Vasiṣṭha was ablaze with anger. He raised his hands and cursed Nimi thus: "Oh ! Nimi, you have insulted me, your preceptor. You disobeyed my injunction and began the Yajña. Therefore, let your body be parted from the soul and fall on the ground."

This curse of Vasiṣṭha alarmed the servants of Nimi so much that they roused him from sleep and told him all about the affair. Nimi hurried to Vasiṣṭha and prostrated at his feet. But, he did not shed his anger. This made Nimi also angry. He also raised up his hands and cursed Vasiṣṭha thus: "Oh muni ! you who got angry without reason are worse than a Caṇḍāla. Therefore let your body also be parted from the soul and fall to the ground."

Vasiṣṭha got alarmed at the above curse. He ran up to and submitted his grievance to Brahmā, who told him thus :— "My son, your action was really fool-hardy. Yet, I shall advise you a way out of your troubles. You dissolve your-self in the effulgence of Mitra and Varuṇa and remain there permanently. After sometime you will be able to be born without being present in the womb of a woman, Then you will remember everything about your previous birth will acquire sense of righteousness and knowledge of the Vedas will become respected by all and will be omniscient.

The soul of Vasiṣṭha parted from his body on account of the curse of Nimi, saluted Brahmā, went to the āśrama of Mitrāvaruṇas and got mixed with their effulgence. Meanwhile Urvaśī one day came to the āśrama of Mitrāvaruṇas, who had seminal emission at her sight. The semen fell into a pot. The pot duly burst open and there emerged from it Agastya and Vasiṣṭha.

Nimi returned to the Yajña hall and told the munis about the curse on him of Vasiṣṭha. While the munis were helplessly looking on, Nimi's body got separated from the soul and fell down. The munis placed the dead body in an uncovered coffin, kept it free from putrefaction with the help of medicines and mantras and continued with the Yajña. At the close of the Yajña the Devas appeared and asked Nimi which did he prefer to have, a human body or body of a Deva. He preferred to have a Deva body, and accordingly ascended to Svarga along with the Devas.

As Nimi had no sons to perform his obsequies the munis began churning the corpse repeating mantras and there arose from it an ideal person as glowing as Nimi. As he was created by 'mathana' (churning) the munis named him Mithi. Again, as he was created from a dead body he came to be known as Janaka also. Further, as he was born from the body from which the soul had departed he was called Videha also. The famous kingdom of Mithilā on the banks of the Gaṅgā was founded by this Janaka.

Janaka, the father of Sītā, was a King born in this dynasty. To all the Kings born in this dynasty the surname 'Janaka' came to be applied. This dynasty is known as Janakavaṁśa and Videhavaṁśa after emperor Mithi. (Devī Bhāgavata, 6th Skandha).

3) Other information.

(i) He worships Sūrya's son Yama in his court. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 9).

NIMNA. A Yādava. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

NIMROCI. A King born in the Yādava dynasty. Nimroci, son of Bhoja had two brothers called Kiṅkaṇa and Vṛṣṇi, (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

NĪPA I. A famous King of the Pūru dynasty. A son called Brahmadatta was born to the King by his wife Kṛti alias Kīrtimatī. Brahmadatta begot hundred sons like Kīrtivardhana and all of them became famous by the name Nīpas. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

NĪPA II. An ancient kingdom in India. The King of this place participated in Yudhiṣṭhira's Rājasūya. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 51, Verse 24).

NĪPA III. A Kṣatriya dynasty. King Janamejaya belonged to this dynasty. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 74, Verse 13).

NĪPĀTĪTHI. A Ṛṣi extolled in the Ṛgveda. He was a Sūktadraṣṭā (one who realized the Vedic hymns).

NIRĀMARDA. A King of ancient India. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 237).

NIRĀMAYA. A King of ancient India. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 137).

NIRĀMAYĀ. A river, the water of which was very dear to the people of ancient India. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 33).

NIRAMITRA I. Son of Nakula. His mother was the noble lady called Kareṇumatī. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 79).

NIRAMITRA II. A Trigarta prince killed in the great war by Sahadeva. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 107, Verse 26).

NIRAVINDA. An ancient mountain. It is believed that he who bathes in the pond on this mountain will attain salvation. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 137).

NIRMOCANA. The Palace of Murāsura. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 48, Verse 83).

NIRṚTI I. A Deva. The Purāṇas contain the following information about him.

(i) He is one of the Aṣṭadikpālas (guards of the eight quarters). He is in charge of the south-western corner. (See under Aṣṭadikpālas).

(ii) He is one of the Ekādaśarudras. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 2).

(iii) Brahmā was his grand-father and Sthāṇu his father. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 2).

(iv) He attended the birth-day celebrations of Arjuna. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 129, Verse 63).

(v) In temples his idols are installed with sword in hand and seated on an ass. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 51).

NIRṚTI II. Wife of the Deva called Adharma. She had three sons called Bhaya, Mahābhaya and Antaka. These Rākṣasas are known as Nairṛtas. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 54).

NIŚĀ. The third wife of the Agni called Bhānu. To the couple were born seven sons called Agni, Soma, Vaiśvānara, Viśvapati, Sannihita, Kapila and Agraṇī, and a daughter called Rohiṇī. (Vana Parva, Chapter 211).

NIṢĀDA I. A forest dweller. The grand sire of the niṣāda tribe living in forests was one Niṣāda. Those forest-dwellers came to be known as niṣādas as they were the descendants of this Niṣāda. The Purāṇic story about the origin of Niṣāda is as follows :—

Once upon a time there lived a King called Vena. A very immoral ruler, he was hated by the people. As dharma declined in the country due to the misrule of Vena the maharṣis killed him with darbha grass sanctified by mantras. Then the maharṣis saw dust rising up everywhere and people told them that the poor people, in the absence of king, had turned into thieves and the dust was formed by the onrush of the thieves. To remedy the problem thus created the maharṣis churned the thigh of Vena, who had died childless, for a son, and from the thigh was born a male child, dark in colour, dwarfish and with a compressed face. Sadly he asked the brahmins (maharṣis) what he should do. They asked him to sit (niṣīda) and hence he became Niṣāda (forest-dweller). His descendants settled down on mount Vindhya and they by their sinful lives divested Vena of his sins. Vena was absolved of his sins through the Niṣādas, and thus the Niṣādas became responsible for the ending of Vena's sins. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 13).

NIṢĀDA II. A particular region in ancient India. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 51).

NIṢĀDANAREŚA. A King well known in Bhārata. He was born from aspects of the daityas, Kālakeya and Krodhahantā. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 50).

NIṢADHA I. A King born in Śrī Rāma's dynasty. Kuśa was born as the son of Śrī Rāma, Aditi as Kuśa's son and Niṣadha as Aditi's son. This Niṣadha was the father of King Nabhas. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

NIṢADHA II. A King of Bharata's dynasty. Niṣadha was the grandson of King Puru and the fourth son of Janamejaya. A great humanitarian, Niṣadha ruled the country to the satisfaction of everybody. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 56).

NIṢADHA III. A mountain near mount Meru. During his triumphal tour, Arjuna defeated the people of this region.

NIŚĀKARA I. A maharṣi. Honoured even by the Devas he lived in his āśrama on the heights of Mount Vindhya. One of those days Jaṭāyu and his elder brother Sampāti, under a bet, flew up to the Sun's sphere. In his attempt to shield Jaṭāyu, who flew with great speed and neared the Sun's sphere, from the scorching heat of the Sun, Sampāti's wings got burned and he fell down on the heights of Vindhya where he lay unconscious for six days.

Niśākara maharṣi heard Sampāti crying and he saved the bird, which lived there for many years as the maharṣi's slave. The maharṣi, who could foresee things told Sampāti about Śrī Rāma's incarnation which was to happen in the future. He entered Samādhi after finally telling Sampāti that monkeys would go there then in search of Sītā, that Sampāti would point out to them where Sītā was and that on that day his wings would automatically reappear and his legs would become strong. Afterwards for eight thousand years Sampāti led a solitary life in the āśrama. It was during this period that monkeys, in the course of their search for Sītā got information about her from Sampāti. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa; Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Kiṣkindhā Kāṇḍa, Canto 60).

NIŚĀKARA II. A great muni, who attained Svarga after passing through many lives. His story is given below:—

There was a great ascetic and erudite scholar in all branches of knowledge called Kośakāra, son of muni Mudgala. Kośakāra's wife was Dharmiṣṭhā, daughter of Vātsyāyana. To them was born a son, an idiot and a deaf and dumb child, whom they forsook at the gates of the mother's house. At the same time an evil-minded Rākṣasa woman called Śūrpākṣī, who was in the habit of lifting children came there with a lean child. She replaced Dharmiṣṭhā's child with the lean one and returned with it to the Śālobharaparvata where her blind husband asked her what she had brought for his food. She told him about the changelling child with her when he said as follows "Return the child at once to where it was found. The child's father is a great man of knowledge and wisdom and when he hears about your action, he will curse us. So, return the child and bring the child of some one else." As soon as she heard these words of her husband she rose up in the sky in great alarm.

Hearing the cries of the Rākṣasa child left at their gates Dharmiṣṭhā and her husband came out, and the child which, in its colour and shape resembled their child exactly, Kośakāra said thus : "Oh! Dharmiṣṭhā! this must be some ghost. Some one is lying here in the same form as our child to hoodwink and cheat us."

Saying so he tied the child to the ground by chanting mantras with darbha grass in his hands.

At the same time Śūrpākṣī came there in invisible form. She threw Dharmiṣṭhā's child from a distance into the courtyard. Kośakāra took his child. But all the attempts of the Rākṣasī to lift her child from the ground failed. The grief-stricken Rākṣasī reported the matter to her husband.

As soon as Śūrpākṣī left the place the magnanimous Kośakāra handed over the Rākṣasa child to his wife. He brought up his own child by feeding it on cow's milk, curd, juice of sugar-cane etc. Both the children grew up to seven years of age. The Rākṣasa boy was named Divākara and the other child Niśākara. Both the children were invested with the sacred thread in due course of time. Divākara learned the Vedas, but Niśākara did not, and he was despised by all. His father pushed him into a neglected well and covered its mouth with stone.

Niśākara lived in the well for many years. The fruits of a cluster of plants in the well served as his food. Some ten years afterwards when Niśākara's mother found the mouth of the well closed with a big stone she asked as to who did so, and from the well came the answer, "Mother, it was father who covered this well with that stone." Alarmed at this the mother asked who was within the well, and she was answered, "Your son, Niśākara." Then she argued that her son was named Divākara and that she had no son called Niśākara. But, Niśākara told her about his past life and what had happened to him during the present life, upon which the mother rolled away the stone and Niśākara came out of the well and prostrated before his mother. He then went home with his mother. Questioned as to how and why these things happened by Kośakāra his son Niśākara described his previous life as follows:—

Father, you would please hear about the reason why I became dumb and idiotic. In my previous life I was born in a noble family, my father being called Vṛṣākapi and mother Mālā. My father taught me all the Śāstras and theVedas. I became conceited over my unique learning and erudition and began doing evil acts. Conceit led to avarice, and I lost all my scholarship. I became indiscreet. Having thus become a fool, I began committing sins. I had to hang myself to death on account of my association with others' women and stealing others' money. I, therefore, fell into the Raurava hell. After a thousand years some sin remained attached to me as a result of which I was born as a tiger, and a King trapped and took me to his city. When I was caged Śāstras about Dharma, Artha and Kāma came up in my mind.

One day the King went out wearing only one piece of cloth and with a club in his hands. Then his wife Ajitā, a unique beauty came to me, and because of my taste in my previous life sexual desire arose in my heart. I told her about my feelings. She also felt like me. So, she unchained me and I approached her in great passion and seeing me thus the King's servants tied me to a peepal tree and thrashed me to death.

My soul again returned to hell. After a thousand years I was born as a white ass in the house of a brahmin named Agniveśya, who had many wives. Then all knowledge and wisdom were reflected in my mind. My duty was to carry the brahmin women on my back. One day the brahmin's wife Vimati of Navarāṣṭra started for her father's home mounted on my back. Half-way home she dismounted and went to a stream to bathe. The exquisite beauty of that lady with wet clothes upset me, and I ran up to her on the stream, pushed her into the water and myself fell upon her. Then a person came and tried to tie me down. I escaped from his grips and ran southwards. While thus running the saddle slipped into my mouth and I fell down. And, within six days I died thinking about her. Thus I fell again into hell. My next birth was as a parrot. A hunter caged me in the forest and he sold me to a Vaiśya merchant, who put me up in the women's quarters. The young women fed me on rice and fruits. One day the wife of the Vaiśya merchant hugged me to her breast and petted me. Her touch kindled in me sexual feelings and I embraced her with my wings. In my hurry about the affair I slipped down and got crushed between the doors. Thus I fell again into hell. Afterwards I was born as an ox in a camp of a Caṇḍāla. One day he yoked me to his cart and started for the forest in it with his wife. On the way she sang a song, and mentally excited by it I looked back. At once I slipped my feet, fell down and died. Again I returned to hell.

After another one hundred years I was born as your (Kośakārad) son in this house. All facts about my previous lives linger in my memory and now I am free from evils and am a virtuous person. I am going to the forest for tapas. Let the good boy, Divākara live here as house-holder. Niśākara thus did tapas for many years and attained Vaikuṇṭha (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 91).

There is no definite evidence in the Purāṇas to establish that the Niśākara, the protector of Sampāti and the Niśākara mentioned above were the same person.

NIṢAṄGĪ. A son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. He was killed in the great war by Bhīmasena. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 4).

NIŚAṬHA I. A prince of the Vṛṣṇi dynasty; son of Balabhadra born of Revatī. (Harivaṁśa). Niśaṭha also had participated in the utsava celebrations held at Raivata mountain by the Yādavas. It was Niśaṭha who went to Khāṇḍavaprastha with the dowry of Subhadrā. He was present at the Aśvamedha and Rājasūya of Yudhiṣṭhira. After death he was absorbed into the Viśvadevas. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 328, Verse 20; Sabhā Parva, Chapter 34; Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 66; Svargārohaṇa Parva, Chapter 5).

NIŚAṬHA II. A King of ancient India. After death he lived in the court of Yama worshipping him. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 11).

NIŚCIRĀ. A river glorified in the Purāṇas. It is well known in all the three worlds. A bath in the river is as good as performing an aśvamedha yajña, Those who bathe in the confluence of Niścirā will attain Indraloka. (Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 138).

NIŚCYAVANA. Second son of Bṛhaspati. He was sinless, pure and holy. (Vana Parva, Chapter 209).

NIŚĪTHA. A King of Dhruva's dynasty. Puṣpārṇa was the son of Utkala, the son of Dhruva, and Niśītha was Puṣpārṇa's son by his wife Prabhā. Niśītha had two brothers, Pradoṣa and Vyūṣa. (Bhāgavata, 4th Skandha).

NIṢKA. One palam (about one-sixth of a pound) of gold. (Manusmṛti, Chapter 8).

NIṢKṚTI. An agni (fire). A son of Bṛhaspati, he came to be known as Niṣkṛti as he redeemed (Niṣkrama) people from unhappiness. (Vana Parva, Chapter 229, Verse 14).

NIṢKUMBHA. A great asura. A dependant of the asura called Vṛṣaparvan, Niṣkumbha, took part in many Devāsura wars. (Bhaviṣya Parva, Chapter 59).

NIṢKUṬA. An ancient region in India. The people of the region were defeated once by Arjuna. (Sabhā Parva Chapter 27, Verse 29).

NIṢKUṬIKĀ. A female attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 12).

NIṢṬĀNAKA. A prominent nāga (serpent) begot by Kaśyapaprajāpati of his wife Kadrū. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 9).

NIṢṬHURAKA. A very prominent King, who lived in ancient times in South India. Once he had to depend on Śrīdatta, a King of North India. (See under Śrīdatta).

NIṢṬHŪRIKA. A nāga born in the Kaśyapa dynasty. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 106, Verse 12).

NIŚUMBHA I. An asura. Two of the sons of Kaśyapa Prajāpati by his wife Diti became notorious fellows called Śumbha and Niśumbha. They were born and brought up in Pātāla. But as young men thay came to the earth and began rigorous tapas taking neither food nor drink. After ten thousand years Brahmā appeared and asked them to choose their boons. They requested for eternity, deathlessness. But, Brahmā refused to grant that bcon. Then they thought of another boon, which would in effect be as goodas the first one; they wanted death to come, but to come in a manner impossible to happen. So, they requested Brahmā as follows : "We shall not meet with death at the hands of males among Devas, human beings as also by birds, animals etc. In short we should be killed only by women; we fear them not."

Brahmā granted them such a boon and they returned to Pātāla. They lost their head over the boon and appointed Śukra as their preceptor. Śukra was so pleased at this that he made Śumbha sit on a golden throne and crowned him King of Daityas. Following this, lesser Kings began coming to salute the great King and pay tributes. Great daityas like the Caṇḍamuṇḍas, Dhūmralocana, Raktabīja etc., became attendants of Śumbha and Niśumbha.

After having established the power of the daityas thus Śumbha—Niśum bhas gradually turned their attention towards extending the boundaries of their kingdom. The whole earth they subjugated. Then Niśumbha with a large army marched to Devaloka to conquer Indra. A Devāsura war started. In the fight all the Dikpālakas were on one side and Niśumbha alone on the other side; the latter side was slightly defeated. Smitten by Indra's Vajrāyudha Niśumbha fainted; his army also was broken.

As soon as news about the defeat of his brother was reported to him, Śumbha, with the remaining Dānavas hurried to Devaloka. In the battle that ensued the Devas were routed. Śumbha assumed Indra-hood by force and the standard (flag) of the daityas was hoisted on the flag-staff of Sudharmā, the palace of Indra. Śumbha captured Kāmadhenu, Airāvata, Uccaiśśravas etc. The Nandana garden and the shades of the Kalpaka tree were turned into resting places of the daityas. Fragrant flowers of the Kalpa tree adorned the hairs of daitya women. Śumbha drove away Kubera and took over Alakāpurī also from him. As Yama ran away from the kingdom, Kālapurī also came under Śumbha. All the Dikpālakas took refuge in forests and caves. Thousand years rolled by thus. By then the Devas worshipped Mahādevī, who appeared before them. Kauśikī devī, born from the body of Mahādevī stood before the Devas. As Kauśikī was dark in colour she came to be known as Kālikā also. Mahādevī, along with Kālikā started for the capital of Śumbha-Niśumbhas. At the capital they ascended a mountain and sat on two rocks. Mahādevī sang such a melodious song that birds and animals lost themselves in its sweetness and stood motionless.

The Caṇḍamuṇḍas, who were at the time passing that way were also attracted by the music. Having understood what it all meant they hurried upto Śumbhāsura and gave him a description of the supreme beauty of Mahādevī and Kālikā. The description kindled great interest in Śumbha and Niśumbha about the devīs and they deputed their minister Sugrīva to bring the devīs over to them. Having heard Sugrīva's mission Mahādevī told him as follows :— "We do not have any objection to becoming the wives of your masters But, in the matter of my marriage there is a special problem. While playing with my friends as a child I had accidentally taken a vow. I was at that age a bit proud about my capabilities and strength, and the vow I took was that I would marry only someone who was stronger than I am. My friends called me a 'fool' and ridiculed me about the vow. That only hardened my stubbornness and I stand by my vow even now. Therefore, please tell Śumbha first to defeat me in fighting."

When Sugrīva carried this information to Śumbha, and Niśumbha, they felt amused that a woman challenged them to fight. But, they had no alternative but to fight. So they deputed the mighty daitya Dhūmrākṣa with an army to fight Devī, and there ensued a fierce fighting between Devī and Kālikā on one side and the big daitya army on the other side. The whole army and finally Dhūmrākṣa too was killed.

Devī then retired from the battlefield to a place nearby and blew the conch. Śumbha-Niśumbhas heard the sound from it, and the next moment a messenger came and told them about the fate of the army and of Dhūmrākṣa. They then sent a much greater army under Caṇḍamuṇḍas against Devī. But Kālikā devoured them all. Raktabīja, who next encountered Devī with a great force, also became food for Kālikā. Then Śumbha-Niśumbhas entered the battlefield and they too were killed. Devas thus victorious regained Svarga. (Devī Bhāgavata, 5th Skandha).

NIŚUMBHA II. The Mahābhārata mentions another Niśumbha, a dependant of Narakāsura. Śrī Kṛṣṇa killed this asura who towered upto the path of the devas (devayāna) from the earth. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 38).

NISUNDA. An asura killed by Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (Vana Parva, Chapter 12).

NITAMBHŪ. A great maharṣi. He too was present in the company of the munis, who visited Bhīṣma on his bed of arrows. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 8).

NĪTHA. A king born in the Vṛṣṇi dynasty. (Vana Parva, Chapter 120, Verse 19).

NĪTIGOTRA. A king born in the Bhṛgu dynasty. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

NIVĀTAKAVACA(S). A sect of Daityas.

1) Birth. Daityas were the off-springs of Kaśyapaprajāpati by Diti. Two sons called Hiraṇyākṣa and Hiraṇyakaśipu and a daughter called Simhikā were born to the Prajāpati of Diti. Simhikā was married by Vipracitti and to them were born Rāhu and others who became famous as the Saimhikeyas. Hiraṇyakaśipu had four famous sons called Anuhlāda, Hlāda, Prahlāda (the great devotee of Viṣṇu) and Samhlāda. (Some texts refer to them as Anuhrāda, Hrāda, Prahrāda and Samhrāda). Hlāda's son was called Hrāda, Samhlāda's sons were called Āyuṣmān, Śibi and Bāṣkala, and Prahlāda's son was called Virocana. Mahābali was Virocana's son and Bāṇa was the eldest of the hundred sons of Mahābali.

Four crores of asuras called Nivātakavacas were born in the family of Prahlāda. The army of the Asuras, which routed the Devas many a time, was formed by the Nivātakavacas and Kālakeyas. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 19).

2) Fight against Rāvaṇa. After securing boons from Brahmā Nivātakavacas lived in the city of Maṇimatī and they were a terror to the world. Rāvaṇa longed once to defeat them and so besieged their city with his army. The two sides fought fiercely for hundreds of years. At last Brahmā intervened and conciliated them. From that day onwards the Nivātakavacas became friends of Rāvaṇa. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

3) Annihilation. The Nivātakavacas in company with the Kālakeyas attacked Devaloka. Indra, who could not withstand the attack, sent his charioteer Mātali to Arjuna and brought him down. Most of the Nivātakavacas and Kālakeyas were killed in the fight by Arjuna. (See under Kālakeya).

NIVĀTAKAVACAYUDDHAPARVA. A sub Parva in Vana Parva of Mahābhārata comprising of chapters 165 to 175.

NIVIT. A mantra or hymn. 'Uktha and Nivit are recited after the offerings in a yāga. (Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 14, Sūkta 86).

NIVĪTA. Brahmin's wearing upper cloth or the sacred thread on the left shoulder and under the right hand is called Upavīta; the same on the right shoulder and under the left hand is called prācīnāvīta and the same worn as a garland around the neck is called Nivīta.

NIVṚTI. A king of the Yayāti dynasty. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

NIYATĀYU. Son of Śrutāyu. He was killed by Arjuna in the great war. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 29).

NIYATI. A daughter called Lakṣmī and two sons called Dhātā and Vidhātā were born to maharṣi Bhṛgu of his wife Khyāti. Dhatā and Vidhātā married Āyati and Niyati, daughters of Meru. A son named Prāṇa was born to Vidhātā, and this Prāṇa became father of Mṛkaṇḍu and grandfather of Mārkaṇḍeya. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 10).

Niyati after her death became a Devī, and she continues to worship Brahmā in his court. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 43).

NIYOGA. During the Vedic period there prevailed a system or custom which permitted either the husband or the wife who had no child by his wife or her husband to procreate a child in another woman or beget children by another man. That custom, called Niyoga fell into disuse after the Vedic period. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 256).

NODHAS. A muni who lived in the Ṛgvedic period. He achieved all his desires by praising the Devas. (Ṛgveda)

NṚCAKṢUS. A king of the Yayāti dynasty. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

NṚGA. A king born in the dynasty of Vaivasvata Manu.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu thus: Brahmā—Marīci — Kaśyapa — Vivasvān — Vaivasvata Manu—Mahābāhu—Prasandhi—Kṣupa—Nṛga.

Nṛga was the younger brother of Ikṣvāku. From Nṛga was born Sumati, from him the king called Jyotis, from Jyotis Vasu and from Vasu Pratīka.

2) Nṛga became chameleon. Nṛga was an extremely righteous and generous King. Once, at Puṣkara he gifted away thousands of cows to brahmins. There was a brahmin called Parvata living near Puṣkara. He too was given a cow and it was after that the brahmin named Anārata came. By then there remained no cow to be gifted. Anārata came after Parvata had gone into the forest after leaving the cow at the pond (Puṣkara). Nṛga had forgotten the fact that the cow had already been gifted away to Parvata and finding it there owner-less he gave it to Anārata, who went away with the cow very much pleased. The King and his ministers also returned to the palace.

A very short time afterwards Parvata returned to the pond and felt very sorry to miss his cow. He searched for it here and there and at last found it at Anārata's house. Quarrel ensued between the two, Parvata alleging that Anārata had stolen his cow while the latter contended that it had been given to him by the King. Now, it was decided that the question should be submitted for arbitration to the King, and the contending parties went to the capital to see the King. At the palace they asked the gate-keepers to tell the King about their arrival. But, they did not tell the King, nor did he come.

Angered at this the brahmins cursed that Nṛga be converted into a chameleon and live as such for a thousand years. The King heard about the curse and ran up to the brahmins and requested for absolution from it. The brahmins then said that after one thousand years Mahāviṣṇu would incarnate as Śrī Kṛṣṇa and that at his touch Nṛga, the chameleon would resume his former form as King. According to this curse Nṛga was born as a chameleon in a neglected well at Dvārakā. One day Sāmba and others who happened to go near the well tried their best to take the chameleon out of it, to no purpose. At last Kṛṣṇa with his attendants came and took it out of the we l. At Kṛṣṇa's touch it resumed its form as King Nṛga, and related the story of his curse to the onlookers, who stood there wondering

3) Other information.

(i) After his death Nṛga lived in Yama's court worshipping him. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 8).

(ii) Nṛga once conducted a yajña on the banks of the river Payoṣṇī in Varāhatīrtha at which Indra drank soma so much as to get intoxicated, and the brahmins danced with pleasure at the very liberal gifts made to them. (Vana Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 5).

(iii) Nṛga was a King very dear to Indians. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 7).

(iv) Kṛṣṇa granted salvation to Nṛga who changed, at his touch, from chameleon to his former form as King Nṛga. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 70, Verse 29).

(v) He did not eat flesh. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 70, Verse 29).

NṚṢAD. A maharṣi, who was the father of sage Kaṇva. (Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 10).

NṚṢART. A Ṛṣi, who lived in the Ṛgvedic period. His son was deaf. (Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 17).

NYAGRODHA. A son of Ugrasena. When Kṛṣṇa killed Kaṁsa Nyagrodha fought with Kṛṣṇa and others and was killed by the blow of Balabhadra's shield. (Bhāgavata).

NYAGRODHATĪRTHA. A holy place on the banks of the ancient river Dṛṣadvatī in North India. (Vana Parva, Chapter 90, Verse 11).

O

O. This sound signifies Brahmā. (Agni Purāṇa; Chapter 348).

OḌRA (M). An ancient province of India, Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 51, Verse 23 says that the King of this province had come to Dharmaputra with presents.

OGHARATHA. Son of the King named Oghavān. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 2, Verse 38).

OGHAVĀN I. Grandson of King Nṛga. He had a son named Ogharatha and a daughter named Oghavatī. (M.B Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 2).

OGHAVĀN II. A warrior on the side of the Kauravas. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 42).

OGHAVATĪ I. There are seven Sarasvatī rivers in the world. These are Suprabhā, Kāñcanākṣī, Viśālā, Manoramā, Sarasvatī, Oghavatī and Sureṇu. In the Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva, Chapter 38 we find that Oghavatī was invoked and brought to Kurukṣetra. It was on the bank of this Oghavatī that Bhīṣma fell and lay on the Śaraśayyā. (Bed of arrows). (M.B. Śānti. Parva, Chapter 50, Verse 5).

OGHAVATĪ II. Daughter of the King named Oghavān. Sudarśana, the son of Agni married her. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 2).

OM. This sound is a combination of the three letters— A, U and M. The A—sound signifies Viṣṇu, the U—sound signifies Śiva and the M—sound signifies Brahmā.

> Akāro Viṣṇuruddiṣṭa
> Ukārastu Maheśvaraḥ/
> Makārastu smṛto Brahmā
> Praṇavastu trayātmakaḥ// > (Vāyu Purāṇa).

The sound "Om" is called "Praṇava" or "Brahman." All mantras begin with the sound 'Om'. Because of its sacredness, Śūdras and other low-caste people are not allowed to utter it or to hear it. They may pronounce it only as "Aum." This sound includes all that has happened and all that is to happen. (Māṇḍūkyopaniṣad).

OMPATU. (Malayālam word for nine).

Nine grahas (nine planets). Sun, Moon, Mars, Budha (Mercury), Guru (Jupiter), Śukra (Venus), Śani (Saturn), Rāhu and Ketu.

Nine Doṣa. Gulika, Viṣṭi, Gaṇḍāntam, Viṣa, Uṣṇa, ekārgalam, Sarpaśiras, lāṭam and Vaidhṛtam.

Nine Karmasākṣin(s). Sūrya, Candra, Yama, Kāla, Ākāśa, Vāyu, Agni, Jala and Bhūmi.

Nine Rivers. Sarasvatī, Vaitaraṇī, Āpagā, Mandākinī, Madhusravā, Amlu, Kauśikī, Dṛṣadvatī and Hiraṇvatī.

Nine Dūtī (s). Dūtī, Dāsī, Sakhī, Ceṭī, Dhātreyī, Prātiveśinī, Liṅginī, Śilpinī and Svastrī.

Nine treasures (nidhis). Mahāpadma, Padma, Śaṅkha, Makara, Kacchapa, Mukunda, Kunda, Nīla and Kharva.

Nine Prajāpatis. Bhṛgu, Marīci, Atri, Dakṣa, Kardama, Pulaha, Pulastya, Aṅgiras and Kratu.

Nine Yogins. Kavi, Hari, Antarīkṣa. Prabuddha, Pippalāyana, Āvihotra, Dramiḍa, Camasa and Karabhājana.

Nine Varṣa (s). (Sub continents). Bhāratavarṣa, Kimpuruṣavarṣa. Harivarṣa, Ilāvṛtavarṣa, Ramyakavarṣa, Hiraṇmayavarṣa, Kuruvarṣa, Bhadrāśvavarṣa and Ketumālavarṣa.

Nine kinds of Rājās. Sārvabhauma, Adhirāja. Narendra, Pārṣṇika, Paṭṭadhṛk, Maṇḍaleśvara, Bhaṭṭabhāk, Prahāraka and Śrotragrāhī.

Nine kinds of Angels. Bhaktijvālaka, Jñānādhikya, Bhadrāsana, Nāthakṛtya, Tattvaka, Balavad, Samādhānamukhya and Mukhyadevadūta.

P

PA. A garden. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).

PADAPĀṬHA. An ancient system of studying the Vedas. (See under Ghanapāṭha).

PADĀRTHA. See under Pañcabhūta.

PADĀTI. One of the eight sons of Janamejaya, a King of Kuruvaṁśa. The others are Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Pāṇḍu, Bālhīka, Niṣadha, Jāmbūnada, Kuṇḍodara and Vasāti. (The Pāṇḍu and Dhṛtarāṣṭra mentioned here are not the fathers of Kauravapāṇḍavas.).

PADMA I. A serpent born to sage Kaśyapa of his wife Kadrū. (Śloka 10, Chapter 35, Ādi Parva).

PADMA II. A King. This King shines in the court of Yama. (Śloka 39, Chapter 10, Sabhā Parva).

PADMA III. A soldier of Subrahmaṇya. (Chapter 45, Śalya Parva).

PADMA IV. A nidhi (treasure). This nidhi belongs to Kubera. (Śloka 39, Chapter 10, Sabhā Parva). Śaṅkhanidhi, Padmanidhi and a Puṣpakavimāna were presented to Kubera by Brahmā. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

PADMĀKARA. A Character in the story in Śiva Purāṇa describing the greatness of a Śivayogin. (See Ṛṣabha).

PADMAKETANA. One of the children of Garuḍa. (Chapter 101, Udyoga Parva).

PADMAKŪṬA. The palace where Suprabhā wife of Śrī Kṛṣṇa used to reside. (Dākṣiṇātya Pāṭha, Chapter 38, Sabhā Parva).

PADMANĀBHA I. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (See under Kauravas).

PADMANĀBHA II. A serpent. This serpent resides on the shores of the river Gomatī which flows through Naimiṣāraṇya. This serpent once went to Bhīṣma and talked to him about Dharma. (Chapter 355, Śānti Parva).

PADMAPURĀṆA. One of the eighteen Purāṇas. (See under Purāṇas).

PADMARĀGA. See under Navaratna.

PADMASARAS. A lotus pond of Uttara Bhārata. The Pāṇḍavas on their way from Khāṇḍavaprastha to Girivraja met Śrī Kṛṣṇa at this place and talked with him for a long time. (Chapter 20, Sabhā Parva).

PADMASAUGANDHIKA. A lotus pond situated near Cedideśa. During the period of the Mahābhārata a company of merchants were attacked by wild elephants at this place. This is very nicely described in Chapter 66 of Vana Parva of Mahābhārata.

PADMAŚEKHARA. A Gandharva King. Padmāvatī of whom many stories are told in Kathāsaritsāgara was the daughter of Padmaśekhara. Padmāvatīlambaka of the said book is entirely devoted to stories about Padmāvatī.

PADMĀVATĪ I. A river which is the incarnation of Mahālakṣmī. (See under Gaṅgā).

PADMĀVATĪ II. Wife of Emperor Udayana. (See under Udayana).

PADMĀVATĪ III. Wife of Candragupta son of Sahasramukharāvaṇa. (See under Sahasramukharāvaṇa).

PADMĀVATĪ IV. A female follower of Subrahmaṇya. (Chapter 46, Śalya Parva).

PADMĀVATĪ V. Daughter of Satyaketu, King of Vidarbha. Ugrasena married her. After marriage she went and stayed once in her father's house for a short period. During that time through illegal intimacy with a messenger from Kubera named Gobhila she became pregnant. She started to destroy the foetus when from inside a voice said "I am being born to wreak vengeance on Mahāviṣṇu for killing Kālanemi." The son born thus was Kaṁsa. (Sṛṣṭikhaṇḍa, Padma Purāṇa).

PADMĀVATĪ VI. Wife of a Vaiśya named Praṇidhi. Once Praṇidhi went to a neighbouring village for trade. Padmāvatī and her companions were one day bathing in a river nearby when a Śūdra passed that way. Attracted by her dazzling beauty he remained there talking to her. The Śūdra named Dharmadhvaja was greatly enamoured of her and the companions of Padmāvatī, noticing that, just to make fun of him said "If you abandon your life at the point where the rivers Gaṅgā and Yamunā meet you can attain Padmāvatī." Without any hesitation, thinking that what they said was true, he went and ended his life at the place suggested. Immediately he became a replica of Praṇidhi and stood before Padmāvatī. The real Praṇidhi also came there then. Padmāvatī was in a fix to choose the real husband. Mahāviṣṇu appeared before them then and asked Padmāvatī to accept both of them as her husbands. Padmāvatī pleaded it was forbidden for women of her community to accept more than one husband and then Mahāviṣṇu took all the three along with him to Vaikuṇṭha. (Kriyā Khaṇḍa, Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 4).

PAHLAVA. A place of human habitation of ancient India. This is situated in the western zone. (Śloka 68, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

PAIJAVANA. A śūdra. This śūdra conducted a grand Yajña similar to Aindrāgnayajña and gave as fees to priests a lakh of gold vessels. (Chapter 6, Śānti Parva).

PAILA. A disciple of Vyāsa. It was the five disciples of Vyāsa named Sumantu, Jaimini, Paila, Śuka and Vaiśampāyana who gave publicity to the original Mahābhārata. (See under Guruparamparā). He was the son of a person named Vasu and attended the Rājasūya of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Śloka 35, Chapter 33, Sabhā Parva). Paila was also one among those who visited Bhīṣma while he was lying on his bed of arrows. (Śloka 6, Chapter 17, Śānti Parva).

PAILAGARGA. An ancient sage. Ambā, daughter of the King of Kāśī, once practised austerities in the āśrama of this sage. (See under Ambā).

PAIŚĀCA. A kind of marriage. (See under Vivāha).

PAIṬHAKA. An asura. This asura was killed by Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (Chapter 38, Sabhā Parva).

PĀKA. A mighty asura. Once this asura gathered a big army and went to fight against Indra. A grim battle which lasted for several days took place in which the asura army was destroyed and Pāka killed. Indra got thenceforth the name Pākaśāsana. (Chapter 70, Vāyu Purāṇa).

PAKAL. Malayālam word meaning Day. A story about the origin of day, night, dawn and dusk is contained in Viṣṇu Purāṇa. At the time of the great Deluge everything from gods down to the rocks lay submerged in Parabrahman (Supreme Being). Brahmā sat in meditation to initiate what he termed as Jagatsṛṣṭi, the four species of living beings like the devas, asuras, pitṛs and men. When the meditation proceeded, the Tamoguṇa in Brahmā became prominent and so first and foremost of all, the asuras were born from his waist. Then Brahmā discarded his Tamoguṇa and the manifestation of the discarded Tamoguṇa became Night. Brahmā sat again in meditation and from his face sprang out the devas, who were embodiments of sattvaguṇa. Brahmā discarded the sattvaguṇa and it then became Day. That is why asuras are powerful at night and devas by day. Then another manifestation with sattvaguṇa predominating sprang out from Brahmā and it was called Pitṛs. Brahmā discarded that also and it became Dusk. Brahmā sat again in meditation and then were born men who were a manifestation of Rajoguṇa. Brahmā discarded that also and it then became Dawn. That is why men are strong at dawn and the pitṛs strong at dusk. It is because of these that it is said that day, night, dawn and dusk are bodies of Brahmā. All the above four are an asylum of the three guṇas.

Night is called Uṣā and day, Vyuṣṭi. Sandhyā (dusk) is the time between Uṣā and Vyuṣṭi. When the fierce and terrible Sandhyā commences, a set of ferocious demons called Mandehas desire to eat the Sun. A fight ensues then between the Sun and the demons and by a curse of Prajāpati the demons die daily though their bodies never perish. At that time the best of Brahmins with the sound of 'OM' vibrating recite the gāyatrī and throw water upwards. That water transforms itself into Vajrāyudha and burns to death the wicked demons. The first oblation to the sacrificial fire is performed reciting the mantra which begins with "Sūryojyotiḥ". 'OM' is but Bhagavān Viṣṇu, lord of the Vedas with the lustre of Ṛk, Yajus and Sāma. The very utterance of the word 'OM' therefore, destroys the demons Mandehas. (Chapter 8, Aṁśa 2, Chapter 5, Aṁśa 1, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

PĀKHAṆḌA. An ancient place of habitation in Dakṣiṇa Bhārata. Sahadeva one of the Pāṇḍavas sent his messengers and subdued the country. (Śloka 70, Chapter 31, Sabhā Parva).

PĀKKANĀṚ. Vararuci, the celebrated astronomer, got of a Caṇḍālī wife twelve sons. They were called "Paracci peṭṭa pantīrkulam (The twelve sons born of a Caṇḍālī).

They were

1. Agnihotrī. 2. Rajakan 3. Uliyanūr Taccan. 4. Vallon 5. Vāyillākkunnilappan. 6. Kārakkalmātā. 7. Vaṭutala Nāyar. 8. Uppukuṭṭan. 9. Pāṇanār. 10. Nārāyaṇabhrāntan 11. Akavūr Cāttan 12. Pākkanār.

Pākkanār's wife was a very chaste woman devoted to her husband. There are two stories demonstrating the devotion she showed to her husband.

(i) It was usual for all the sons of Vararuci excepting Vāyillākkunnilappan to assemble at the house of Agnihotrī for the Śrāddha of their father annually once. Once after the Śrāddha, all of them sat together for their meals and the antarjanam (wife) of Agnihotrī refused to serve an assembly consisting of Pākkanār, a Caṇḍāla. When Agnihotrī compelled her to do it she came to the place hiding her face with an umbrella. Pākkanār enquired about the purpose of the umbrella and Agnihotrī replied that it was the duty of chaste and devoted wives to hide their faces from other men. Then Pākkanār argued that still the brahmin wives who hid their faces were lacking in devotion and chastity and the Caṇḍāla women were the only class of women who were chaste and devoted to their husbands. Everybody present there joined sides with Agnihotrī and opposed the argument of Pākkanār. To demonstrate the devotion of Caṇḍālī wives Pākkanār took Agnihotrī to his house. On reaching there Pakkanār called his wife and asked "How much paddy do you have here?" "Five measures", she replied. "Pound half of it and bring it to me", Pākkanār instructed. The dutiful wife pounded the paddy, cooked the rice and brought it to Pākkanār. Pākkanār asked her to throw the rice into the drain. She did it without the least hesitation. Pākka nār then asked his wife to pound the remaining paddy and bring the rice cooked as before.She did so and when she brought it before Pākkanār he asked her to throw that also away into the drain. She instantly obeyed. That day both of them went without meals. They were so poor.

The next day Pākkanār along with Agnihotrī went to the illam (house) of Agnihotrī. Pākkanār then asked Agnihotrī to make his wife do exactly like what Pākkanār's wife was made to do. Agnihotrī immediately called his wife and asked her to take two and a half measures of paddy, pound it, cook it and bring it to him. "There is rice here ready in stock and so why should we pound paddy now?" Agnihotrī's wife questioned. But Agnihotrī insisted and so surrendering to the compulsion she did as she was instructed. When she brought the rice before him cooked, Agnihotrī asked her to throw it away into the drain. She hesitated first but when Agnihotrī insisted she did so very reluctantly. Then Agnihotrī asked her to take another two and a half measures of paddy, pound it and bring the cooked rice once again. The antarjanam (wife) flew into fury and showered on her husband a heap of abuses. She went and hid inside and despite repeated requests from Agnihotrī she never showed her face out again. Agnihotrī admitted defeat and accepted Pākkanār's view that a Caṇḍālī woman was more chaste than a brahmin woman.

(2) Once Agnihotrī came to the hut of Pākkanār. Pākkanār called his wife to bring a 'palaka' (a wooden plank used for sitting) for Agnihotrī to sit on. She was at that time drawing water from a well and the bucket was midway in the well with water. The instant she heard her husband call her she left the grip on the rope and rushed to the side of her husband. She did what was asked of her to do and then returned to the well. Pākkanār followed her taking Agnihotrī along with him. When they reached the well Agnihotrī was dumbfounded. The bucket with water was staying in mid-air in the well exactly at the position at which Pākkanār's wife had left it. The power of the chastity of the woman. (See under Vararuci).

PAKṢA. See under Kālamāna.

PAKṢĀLIKĀ. A female follower of Subrahmaṇya.

PAKṢIVAṀŚA. The Purāṇic version of the origin of birds is given below:

Descending in order from Viṣṇu came Brahmā—Marīci—Kaśyapaprajāpati. The latter got of his wife Tāmrā (daughter of Dakṣa) five daughters named Krauñcī, Bhāsī, Śyenī, Dhṛtarāṣṭrī and Śukī. From Krauñcī were born the Ulūkas, Bhāsī gave birth to Bhāsas, Śyenī to vultures and Dhṛtarāṣṭrī to swans and geese. From these originated the entire bird family of the world. (Chapter 4, Araṇya Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

PAKTHA. A King of Vedic times who was a protege of the Aśvins. Indra was kind to this King. In the Dāśarājña battle Paktha fought against Sudās on the side of Trasadasyu. (Maṇḍala 7, Ṛgveda).

PALA. A measure of ancient times. (See under Trasareṇu).

PĀLA. A serpent born of the race of Vāsuki. This serpent committed suicide at the Sarpasatra of Janamejaya. (Śloka 51, Chapter 57, Ādi Parva).

PĀLAKA. A son born to the King Caṇḍamahāsena of his wife Aṅgāravatī. Aṅgāravatī got two sons. The other son was named Gopālaka. (Kathāmukhalambaka, Kathāsaritsāgara).

PĀLAKĀVYA. The author of the famous book 'Hastyāyurvedasaṁhitā'. This book contains 160 chapters dealing with Mahārogasthāna (great diseases), Kṣudrarogasthāna (minor diseases), Śalyasthāna (extraction of extraneous matter from the body) and Uttarasthāna (diseases of the head). Pālakāvya taught this Āyurvedasaṁhitā to Rāmapāda, King of Aṅgadeśa. (Agni Purāṇa).

PALĀLĀ. One of the seven mothers of Subrahmaṇya. The other six are: Kākī, Halimā, Brahmikā, Mālinī, Āryā and Mitrā. (Śloka 10, Chapter 228, Vana Parva).

PALĀŚAVANA. A sacred forest. Once the sage Jamadagni performed a sacrifice in this forest. On that occasion all the rivers in the world were present there carrying their water. The sage at this Yāga gave wine to all the other sages to their heart's content. (Śloka 16, Chapter 94, Vana Parva).

PĀLĪ. A corrupt form of Sanskrit.

PALITA. A rat, a character in 'Biḍālopākhyāna'. This rat held a conversation with Lomaśa, a cat. (See under Biḍālopākhyāna).

PĀLITĀ. A female follower of Subrahmaṇya. (Śloka 3, Chapter 46, Śalya Parva).

PALLĀṆṬU. The name of the devotional songs sung by the Tamil devotional poet, Viṣṇucittar, PAMKTI. A horse which draws the chariot of Sūrya. There are seven horses to draw the chariot. The others are Gāyatrī, Bṛhatī, Uṣṇik, Jagatī, Triṣṭubh and Anuṣṭubh. (Chapter 8, Aṁśa 2, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

PAMPĀ. A pond near Ṛṣyamūkācala. Sugrīva used to stay near this pond. (Chapter 279, Vana Parva).

PĀMŚU. An ancient country of Bhārata. Vasudāna, king of this country helped the Pāṇḍavas in the great battle with twentysix elephants and two thousand horses (Śloka 27, Chapter 52, Sabhā Parva).

PANASA. A soldier of the army of monkeys of Śrī Rāma. This soldier was the commander-in-chief of an army of fiftyone crores of monkeys who fought against Rāvaṇa. His chief object of attack was the army of a demon named Paṭuśa. (Chapter 283, Vana Parva).

PAÑCABHŪTA. Pṛthvī (earth), Ap (water), Tejas (fire), Vāyu (air) and Ākāśa (ether) are the Pañcabhūtas (five elements). The whole visible world is composed of one or more of these five elements. This is called the Pāñcabhautikasiddhānta (doctrine of five elements). Besides these five dravyas (elementary substance), people in Bhārata have reckoned Time, space, soul and mind also as Padārthas or categories. Dravya, one of the seven categories according to Nyāya Vaiśeṣikasūtras, has nine svabhāvas (inherent properties). The seven Padārthas of Vaiśeṣika are Dravya, Guṇa, Karman Sāmānya, Viśeṣa, Samavāya and Abhāva.*

The word 'Padārtha' has got a very wide meaning. The word 'matter' in English cannot indicate the full significance of the word Padārtha. Kaṇāda in his Vaiśeṣika sūtras has given the name 'Artha' combining in it the three svabhāvas, Dravya, Guṇa and Karman. Of the above seven padārthas Praśastapāda, the famous logician, has included only the first six in his book 'Padārthadharma Saṁgraha'. The Vaiśeṣikas of a later period included 'abhāva' also and raised the number of arthas to seven. Gautama, the Nyāyasūtrakāra and Vātsyāyana, the Nyāyabhāṣyakāra, and all their followers accepted the number of arthas as seven.

All that can be perceived by the senses are included in the seven Padārthas according to the systems of Nyāya and Vaiśeṣika. Excepting abhāva all the other six are bhāvas. Kaṇāda has dealt with 'abhāva' but has not treated it as a category. Praśastapāda has not mentioned about 'abhāva' at all. Gautama deals with sixteen Padārthas. The Mīmāṁsakas take into account only five Padārthas and the Sāṅkhyas count only two Padārthas viz., Prakṛti and Puruṣa. Advaitavādins reckon only two Padārthas and to them they are Cit and Jaḍa (Ātmā and Anātman). Viśiṣṭādvaitins add god also to the above and make the number of Padārthas three.

According to Nyāya Vaiśeṣikasūtras there are seven Padārthas and they comprise nine kinds of Dravyas which are the Pañcabhūtas (five elements), Kāla (time), Dik (space), Ātmā (soul), and Manas (mind). They are described below:

1) Pṛthvī. (earth). The characteristic of this padārtha is smell. Pṛthvī is of two kinds, Nitya (eternal) and Anitya (perishable). Nitya is in the form of atom (paramāṇu) and anitya in the form of Kārya. They are classified into body, sense organs and objects.

2) Jala (water). Jala has a cold touch. It is of two kinds Nitya and Anitya. Nitya is in the form of paramāṇu (atom); Anitya in the form of Kārya.

3) Agni (fire). It generates heat. It is of two kinds, Nitya and Anitya. Nitya is in the form of paramāṇu and Anitya, in the form of Kārya. There are four kinds of Agnis : Fire of the earth, fire of the sky, fire of the stomach (digestive power) and the fire commonly used.

4) Vāyu (air). It is without form but with the sense of touch. It is also of two kinds. Nitya in the form of paramāṇu and Anitya in the form of Kārya.

5) Ākāśa (ether). This is the carrier of sound. It is single and eternal.

6) Kāla (time). It is general cause for all actions embracing the elements. It is also single and eternal.

7) Dik. Places like north, south, east and west which are eternal.

8) Ātmā (soul). It is related to knowledge and is of two kinds, Jīvātmā and Paramātmā.

9) Manas (mind). It is the sense-organ to enjoy pleasures. It is in the form of paramāṇu and eternal.

To know the views of Manu on the origin of the Pañcabhūtas see under Sṛṣṭi.

PAÑCABRAHMĀSANA. This is a divine cot with Brahmā, Viṣṇu, Rudra and Īśvara as its four legs and Sadāśiva as the couch. Devī rests on this cot always. (7th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

PAÑCACŪḌĀ. A nymph. Once Śuka, son of Vyāsa by his yogic powers entered the Ākāśa. Then a host of celestial maidens led by Pañcacūḍā stood watching him in admiration. (See under Śuka)

Bhīṣma once told Dharmaputra that women were fickle-minded and the cause of evils. To explain his statement he pointed out to the conversation between Nārada and Pañcacūḍā. Nārada once conducted a world tour during the course of which he met Pañcacūḍā and asked her the characteristics of women. She replied thus : "Even beautiful, venerable and noble ladies would stoop to folly. It is not the habit of women to leave away charming men of wealth if they get them conveniently. Any woman can be tamed if you please her in the proper way. If women remain faithful to their husbands

*1. Vaiśeṣika. One of the six principal darśanas or systems of Philosophy founded by Kaṇāda.
2. Padārtha. Anything which can be named; a category.
3. Dravya. An elementary substance, the substratum of properties.
4. Guṇa A characteristic or property of all substances.
5. Karman. Motion, action.
6. Sāmānya. General characteristic.
7. Viśeṣa. A peculiar attribute, the eternal distinguishing factor of each of the nine dravyas.
8. Samavāya. Intimate union, inseparable inherence or existence of one thing in another.
9. Abhāva. Nullity or negation.

Sāṅkhyas followers of the Sāṅkhya philosophy.
Advaitins followers of the Advaita philosophy.
Mīmāṁsakas followers of the Mīmāṁsā system of philosophy.
Paramātmā The supreme being.
Jīvātmā The individual soul enshrined in the body.
Kārya Evolute.

it is because they are afraid of scandal. They will enjoy men without looking into their age or figure. The desire for men in women can be compared to that of Antaka (god of Death) for the lives of men. This is the secret of womanhood." (Chapter 38, Anuśāsana Parva).

PAÑCADEVĪS. Durgā, Rādhā, Lakṣmī, Sarasvatī and Sāvitrī are the Pañcadevīs. They are different forms of nature. (See under Devī and Prakṛti).

PAÑCADHANUS. A King of the race of Pūru. He was the son of Sṛñjaya and the father of Somadatta. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

PAÑCAGAṆA. An ancient kingdom of Uttara Bhārata. During the time of the Pāṇḍavas this country was prospering and Arjuna once conquered the ruler of this country. (Śloka 12, Chapter 27, Sabhā Parva).

PAÑCAGAṄGĀ. A sacred place of Uttara Bhārata. The god of Death once sat at this place and practised penance. From then onwards the place was considered holy. (Śloka 23, Chapter 54, Droṇa Parva).

PAÑCĀGNI. Rohiṇī, a daughter and Soma, a son, were born to Niśā the third wife of Manu, an Agni. Besides these they got five sons in the form of Agni (fire) and these five are called Pañcāgnis. They are Vaiśvānara, Viśvapati, Sannihita, Kapila and Agraṇī.

PAÑCAJA I. (PAÑCAJANA). A mighty asura. This asura lived inside a conch. Śrī Kṛṣṇa killed this asura. Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Balabhadrarāma were having their education in the āśrama of the sage Sāndīpani. On the eve of their completing their education an asura named Pañcaja carried away the son of the sage while the child was bathing in the Prabhāsatīrtha and kept him inside a conch where the asura lived. The sage, greatly griefstricken asked his disciples to get him back his son as his Gurudakṣiṇā (fees for the preceptor). Accordingly Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Balarāma went to the banks of the river and prayed to Varuṇa. Varuṇa appeared before them and then they told him about the mishap. With the help of Varuṇa they killed the asura Pañcaja and got back the son of their guru. The conch in which the asura lived was taken by Kṛṣṇa. Because the conch belonged to Pañcaja the conch got the name Pāñcajanya. (10th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

PAÑCAJA II. Sagara of the solar race got a son named Asamañjasa of his wife Keśinī. He became famous as Pañcaja. He was the father of Aṁśumān and grandfather of Dilīpa. (Chapter 15, Harivaṁśa).

PAÑCAJANA. A Prajāpati. He gave his daughter Pañcajanī (Asiknī) in marriage to the great sage and law-giver Dakṣa. (6th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

PAÑCAJANAS. Brahmins, Kṣatriyas, Vaiśyas and Śūdras are the four castes. Niṣādas form the fifth caste. All these five are collectively called Pañcajanas. (Sūkta 89, Anuvāka 14, Maṇḍala 1, Ṛgveda).

PAÑCAJANĪ. A beautiful daughter of Viśvarūpa. King Ṛṣabha of the lunar race married this girl and they got five sons named Sumati, Rāṣṭrabhṛt, Sudarśana, Āvaraṇa and Dhūmraketu. (5th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

PĀÑCAJANYA I. The conch of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (See under Pañcaja).

PĀÑCAJANYA II. A forest near the mountain of Raivataka. (Dākṣiṇātya Pāṭha; Chapter 38, Sabhā Parva).

PĀÑCAJANYA III. An agni (fire). It was so called because it was born of the parts of five sages. It was called Tapa also. (Chapter 220, Vana Parva).

PAÑCAKA. One of the two soldiers presented to Subrahmaṇya by Indra for the battle between the devas and asuras. The other was named Utkrośa. (Śloka 35, Chapter 45, Śalya Parva).

PAÑCAKARṆAVĀTSYĀYANA. A Vedic preceptor. Because Pañcakarṇa was born in the family of Vātsya he got the name Vātsyāyana.

In the language of Yogic treatises the seven life-winds in the human head are called the 'Saptasūryas' (seven suns). Pañcakarṇavātsyāyana had a clear knowledge of these Saptasūryas and has given a vivid description of them. (Taittirīya Āraṇyaka).

PAÑCAKARPAṬA. An ancient country of western Bhārata. Nakula, one of the Pāṇḍavas, conquered this country. (Chapter 32, Sabhā Parva).

PAÑCĀKṢARAMĀHĀTMYA. Namaśśivāya composed of five letters (Na—maḥ—śi— vā— ya) is called the mantra of Pañcākṣara. There is a story in Śiva Purāṇa about the powers one can acquire by uttering this mantra. (See under Kalāvatī).

PAÑCĀLA I. An ancient village of Bhārata. (Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

PĀÑCĀLA II. A sage. He worshipped God according to the doctrines laid down by Vāmadeva and by the blessing of God attained the Kramavibhāga in the Vedas. (Śloka 102, Chapter 342, Śānti Parva).

PĀÑCĀLA III. An ancient country of Bhārata. Draupadī, wife of the Pāṇḍavas, was the daughter of Drupada, King of Pāñcāla. (See under Drupada).

PĀÑCĀLĪ. Draupadī, wife of the Pāṇḍavas.

i). Previous births. Pāñcālī had many previous births. During all these births many gods blessed her saying that she would have five husbands when she was born as the daughter of Drupada. Stories about her previous births lying scattered in the Purāṇas are given below:—

1) Māyāsītā. When Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa were in exile in the forest with Sītā, Agni came to Rāma once and told him in private thus : "Oh Rāma, you have incarnated on earth to kill Rāvaṇa. The time for that is drawing nigh and ere long Rāvaṇa would carry away Sītā. It is not proper that Sītā, the incarnation of Lakṣmī, should be touched by Rāvaṇa. Therefore I shall keep Sītā safe with me and I am giving you a phantom Sītā to be with you in her stead." Śrī Rāma took the Māyāsītā from Agni without even Lakṣmaṇa knowing it and handed over the original Sītā to the custody of Agni.

While thus Śrī Rāma, Lakṣmaṇa and Māyāsītā were living together in their hermitage a golden deer was seen one day in the precincts of their āśrama. Sītā was enamoured of the beautiful deer and wanted it. So Rāma keeping Lakṣmaṇa to watch over Sītā went in search of the deer. Śrī Rāma tried his best to capture the deer alive. But all his efforts failed and by that time he had come far from the āśrama following the deer. So he discharged an arrow and killed it. While falling dead the deer raised a cry imitating that of Rāma's and called Lakṣmaṇa for help. The deer was none other than Mārīca, the uncle of Rāvaṇa. On hearing the call for help Lakṣmaṇa rushed to the spot from where the sound came and Sītā was left alone for some time. Rāvaṇa came to the āśrama at that time and took the Māyāsītā away to Laṅkā.

Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa went to Laṅkā with an army of monkeys and after killing Rāvaṇa took back Sītā to Ayodhyā. Then Rāma in deference to public opinion put Sītā into the fire to test her purity. At that time god Agni taking back Māyāsītā gave the real Sītā to Rāma, unscathed by the fire. Then, when Māyāsītā was thus abandoned by Rāma she bowed down before Śrī Rāma and Agni and asked them thus "What am I to do now ? Where should I go ?" They advised her to go to Puṣkara and do penance there and blessed her saying that at the successful end of her penance she would become Svargalakṣmī. Paramaśiva was pleased by her penance and appearing before her asked her what boon she wanted. Māyāsītā who had become Svargalakṣmī by then requested Śiva to give her a husband. She repeated the request 'Patiṁ dehi' (Give me a husband) five times and Śiva said that she would have five husbands in her next life as the daughter of the King of Pāñcāla with the name Kṛṣṇā. (9th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

ii) Nālāyaṇī (Indrasenā). Once there was an aged sage named Maudgalya. Nālāyaṇī alias Indrasenā was the wife of Maudgalya. Even though the wife was young and the husband old, Nālāyaṇī was very chaste. The sage became very old, grey-haired and rugous, skeleton-like with a foul smell emanating from his body. He was always in an angry mood. Still Nālāyaṇī stuck to him as a chaste, loving and dutiful wife. As time passed on Maudgalya became a leper. One day while the sage was eating, a finger of his broke and fell into the rice. With great calmness and devotion Nālāyaṇī removed the finger from the rice and ate the rice. Greatly pleased at this act of hers the sage asked her what boon she wanted and she replied she desired to have an amorous life with him as Pañcaśarīra. Maudgalya granted her the boon and they both travelled the whole world enjoying an amorous life. When the sage took the form of a mountain Nālāyaṇī became a river and when the sage took the shape of a flowering tree she became a creeper on it. They spent thousands of years like that and then Maudgalya became tired of a sexual life and returned to the ascetic life. Even after such a long period of erotic life Nālāyaṇī was still lustful and she resented the decision of her husband to go back to the life of a hermit. She begged her husband to continue the same life for some more time. Maudgalya got cross when she thus caused hindrance to his penance and cursed her saying that she would in her next life be born as the daughter of the King of Pāñcāla when she would have five husbands to satisfy her lust. Greatly grieved at this curse she practised severe austerities standing in the midst of Pañcāgni. Pleased with her penance Śiva appeared before her and blessed her saying that she would be born in her next birth in a very noble family and she would then have five husbands, good-natured, doing godly work and equal in valour to Indra. She then pleaded that she should be granted the boon to remain a virgin during the coitus with each of her husbands. Śiva granted that wish. Then Śiva sent her to the river Gaṅgā, and asked her to fetch a beautiful young man whom she would be seeing there. Accordingly she went to the river to do as she was directed.

At that time all the devas joined together and performed a Yāga at Naimiṣāraṇya. Kāla, the god of Death, was one of the chief priests for the function. The Yāga lasted for a long time and since Kāla was consecrated for the Yāga he did not attend to his duties as the god of Death. Death came to a dead stop and men increased in alarming numbers and the devas were perplexed. They went to Brahmā and acquainted him with the frightening situation. Brahmā sent them to Naimiṣāraṇya. They went there and were talking to Kāla when they saw a few golden flowers coming down the river. Getting curious Indra walked up the river to locate the origin of these flowers. When he reached the place of origin of Gaṅgā he saw Nālāyaṇī there. Nālāyaṇī took the beautiful young man to Śiva. Śiva was at that time engaged in a game of dice with Pārvatī and Indra did not then recognise Śiva. Indra in his arrogance argued that the whole universe belonged to him. Śiva jumped up enraged and ran after Indra who ran to the mouth of a cave. Śiva caught him and said that he would show him four Indras inside that cave. Both of them entered the cave and to the amazement of Indra he saw four other Indras sitting inside the cave. They were all the creation of Śiva and with the original Indra the number of Indras came to five. Then addressing Nālāyaṇī who had followed them Śiva said, "Oh beautiful girl, do not be worried. All these five are your husbands. You will be born as the daughter of the King of Pāñcāla. Then all these five will be born in the lunar race and will marry you."

The Indras agreed to be born on earth and do the work of God. After that they all went to Mahāviṣṇu and requested him to give them mighty accomplices to fulfil their mission. Then Mahāviṣṇu plucked two hairs from his body, one white and the other black, and dropped them on the ground. The black hair was born as Śrī Kṛṣṇa and the white hair was born as Balarāma, to help the Pāṇḍavas later.

Pāñcālī's two previous births can be explained thus: Agnideva created Māyāsītā who in turn became Svargalakṣmī to be born as Pāñcālī. Māyāsītā was a part of Mahālakṣmī and so also Nālāyaṇī who became Pāñcālī was a part of Lakṣmī. Pāṇḍavas are known to be the sons of five gods and they used for the procreation of the Pāṇḍavas Indrāṁśa (part of Indra) thus making them all Indras. (Chapters 197 and 198, Ādi Parva).

2) Birth of Pāñcālī. Pāñcālī was born in the palace of Drupada, King of Pāñcāla. She had a brother named Dhṛṣṭadyumna. There is a story about their birth in the Purāṇas:

Drupada insulted Droṇa his classmate in the Gurukula and Droṇa kept in mind the insult to wreak vengeance on Drupada. Drupada, therefore, wanted a son to be born who would defeat Droṇa in a battle. Brahmins advised him to conduct a Yāga for that purpose. He decided to conduct one on a large scale and went about in search of a Yajvā (one who performs sacrifices according to Vedic rites) and reached Kalmāṣapurī on the banks of the river Gaṅgā. There he saw a brahmin's house where lived two sages named Yāja and Upayāja. They were in figure and nature alike. At first Drupada went to the younger of the two, Upayāja. He went near him and after massaging his feet and legs requested him to officiate in a Yāga aimed at getting for him a son to conquer Droṇa in a battle. He promised to give him ten crores of cattle for that and also anything else the sage wanted. These promises did not make the sage consent to conduct the Yāga and so the King stayed at the āśrama serving the sage. A year went by and one day the sage appeared cheerful and told Drupada thus: "Oh King, my brother who was walking one day in a storm saw a fruit lying on his way and ate it without first ascertaining whether the fruit was pure or not. Again, I have seen him taking food from others freely and eating it. I think he is wishful about wealth and, perhaps, if you approach him he may help you."

Drupada went to Yāja and after serving him to please him made his request promising him much wealth. Yāja was ready to perform the Yajña. Upayāja came to them at that time and Yāja consulted his brother before going to perform the Yajña. The Yāga was successfully conducted and at the end the priest Yāja called the wife of Drupada and gave her havya (clarified butter). Because the havya was prepared by Yāja and was offered by Upayāja the sages said that the queen would get two children. While Yāja was offering oblations to the sacrificial fire a boy with a crown on his head and bearing a sword and a bow in his hands rose from the fire. The ṛṣis present there then said that, that boy would kill Droṇa. He was named Dhṛṣṭadyumna. Then from the dais of the Yāga-fire emerged a beautiful lady of dazzling brilliance. Immediately a voice from heaven was heard to say thus: "This Sumadhyamā (a girl in her blossoming youth) would work on the side of God and will cause terror to the Kauravas."

Yāja blessed the wife of Drupada saying that the two children would thenceforth call her mother. Yāja himself named the boy Dhṛṣṭadyumna and the girl according to the ethereal voice, Kṛṣṇā. Kṛṣṇā was dark in complexion. Kṛṣṇā was called Pārṣatī because she was the grand-daughter of Pṛṣata and Draupadī because she was the daughter of Drupada and Pāñcālī because she was the daughter of the King of Pāñcāla. Pāñcālī grew up in the palace of Drupada. (Chapter 167, Ādi Parva).

3) Marriage. After escaping from the lac palace the Pāṇḍavas reached a village named Ekacakrā after walking a long time through the forests. There they stayed in a brahmin's house. Every morning they would go in disguise for begging and return with the alms in the evening. This was their daily routine and one day while they were in their daily round they saw a group of brahmins and they said they were going to the Svayaṁvara of the daughter of the King of Pāñcāla. The brahmins invited them also to come along with them describing in detail the beauty of the girl and the elaborate and festive arrangements made for the marriage. The Pāṇḍavas went to Pāñcāla along with the brahmins. On the way they met Vedavyāsa and receiving blessings from him they went to the capital city of Pāñcāla and took their abode in the house of a potter. Nobody knew who they were.

Drupada had placed a mighty steel bow in the marriage hall. When all the distinguished guests were seated in the marriage hall, the King announced that his daughter would be given in marriage to him who bent the steel bow and with it shot a steel arrow, through the central aperture of a revolving disc, at a target placed above. Many valiant princes from all parts of Bhārata including the Kauravas had gathered there. When it was time for the ceremonies to begin Pāñcālī clad in beautiful robes with a bewitching charm which excited the royal assemblage entered the hall with a garland in her hands. Then Dhṛṣṭadyumna brother of Pāñcālī said "Hear ye, oh princes, seated in state in this assembly, here is the bow and arrow. He who sends five arrows in succession through the hole in the wheel and unerringly hits the target shall win my sister."

Many noted princes rose one after another and tried in vain to string the bow. It was too heavy and stiff for them. Then Arjuna rose and meditating on Nārāyaṇa, the Supreme God, strung the bow with ease and hit at the target. Pāñcālī then put the garland on Arjuna's neck and accepting him as her husband went with him and stayed that night at the house of the potter. Drupada that night went to the house of the potter to make enquiries about his daughter and son-in-law. His joy knew no bounds when he knew that his son-in-law was none other than the celebrated Arjuna. The Pāṇḍavas then took Pāñcālī to their home in Ekacakrā and as soon as Kuntīdevī heard the footsteps of her sons outside she said from inside asking them to share that day's alms among themselves little knowing that it was a bride that had been brought by them. Thus Pāñcālī became the common consort of the five Pāṇḍavas. Then the marriage of Pāñcālī was ceremoniously conducted after inviting friends and relatives. The Pāṇḍavas then built a new palace at Indraprastha and lived there. (Chapters 190 to 220, Ādi Parva).

Śrī Kṛṣṇa was present there along with the leading members of the clan of Vṛṣṇi. He could recognise the Pāṇḍavas in spite of their disguise. Śrī Kṛṣṇa went to the potter's house and visited them. He gave them valuable presents on the occasion of their marriage.

4) Making Draupadī naked. Once Duryodhana challenged Dharmaputra to a game of dice. Dharmaputra lost all and in the end in despair pledged Draupadī and lost her. Immediately Duryodhana asked Vidura to bring Draupadī to his palace and make her serve as a servant-maid. Vidura did not consent to that. Then Duryodhana asked Prātikāmi to bring her. While entering the palace of Draupadī, Prātikāmi was as timid as a dog about to enter the cage of a lion. He informed Draupadī of his mission. Draupadī sent him back and then Duryodhana sent another messenger. Draupadī went with him to the court of the Kauravas. As soon as Duśśāsana saw Draupadī he jumped at her and caught hold of her hair and dragged her to the centre of the assembly. When Duśśāsana dragged her thus she said in piteous tones "I am in my monthly period and I have only the upper garment on me. Please do not take me to the assembly." Duśśāsana was not moved by these pleadings and he dragged her still.

Bhīma could not hold himself calm against this atrocity any longer and in a roar of wrath he abused Dharmaputra for pledging Pāñcālī thus and losing her. Arjuna however remonstrated gently with Bhīma. Then to the consternation of all, Duśśāsana started his shameful work of pulling at Pāñcālī's robes to strip her of all the clothes. All earthly aid having failed Draupadī in utter helplessness implored divine mercy and succour. Then a miracle occurred. In vain did Duśśāsana toil to pull the garments completely and make her naked. As he pulled off each, fresh garments were seen to come from somewhere and cover her nudity. Duśśāsana retired from his work exhausted and disappointed. Then Karṇa ordered that Draupadī should be sent to the palace of Duryodhana as a servant-maid. Hearing this Duśśāsana once again started dragging her. Draupadī wept. Bhīma roared in fury and said that if his brother, Dharmaputra, gave him permission he would at that instant smash to death the Kauravas just like a lion killing the animals. Bhīṣma and Droṇa interfered and pacified him. Duryodhana stood up and striking his right thigh with his right hand challenged Bhīma to a fight. Bhīmasena did not like Duryodhana exhibiting his naked thigh in front of Draupadī and an angered Bhīma declared that he would in a battle break Duryodhana's thigh with his mace. Dhṛtarāṣṭra came to the scene and pacified both of them and turning to Pāñcālī asked her to name any boon she wanted from him. Pāñcālī said : "In order that my son, Prativindhya, should not be called a 'dāsaputra' (son of a servant) his father Dharmaputra should be released from his servitude." The boon was granted. Then she requested that all the other Pāṇḍavas should be set free. That was also allowed. Dhṛtarāṣṭra then asked her to name a third boon. Pāñcālī then said that all Kṣatriya women were entitled only to two boons and so there was no need for a third one. Then Draupadī took a vow that her hair which was let lose by the wicked Duśśāsana would be tied properly only by a hand tainted by the blood of Duśśāsana. After that in strict obedience to the conditions of the wager the Pāṇḍavas started for the forests with Draupadī to spend twelve years in the forests and one year incognito. (Ten Chapters from Chapter 68, Sabhā Parva).

5) Vanavāsa of Pāñcālī. (Life in the forests). During the exile of the Pāṇḍavas in the forests Pāñcālī was involved in many events of which a few important ones are given below :

(i) Kirmīra's attack. When the Pāṇḍavas were in the Kāmyakavana, Kirmīra, the brother of Baka, came to the āśrama where Pāñcālī was taking rest. The demon was such a fierce-looking giant that Pāñcālī was forced to shut her eyes by fright and she became wearied like a river in the midst of five hillocks. Bhīmasena immediately ran to her rescue and killed Kirmīra. (Chapter 11, Vana Parva).

(ii) Pāñcālī consoled Dharmaputra by her soothing words. (Chapter 27, Vana Parva).

(iii) Once when her woes became unbearable she condemned the devas. (Chapter ?, Vana Parva).

(iv) While the Pāṇḍavas were on the mountain Gandhamādana, Pāñcālī persuaded Bhīma to bring for her the Saugandhika flower. (See under Bhīma).

(v) While the Pāṇḍavas were living in the Badarikāśrama waiting for the return of Arjuna who had gone on a year's pilgrimage, Pāñcālī was carried away by Jaṭāsura. (See under Jaṭāsura).

(vi) After she was rescued from Jaṭāsura, Pāñcālī along with her husbands dwelt in the hermitage of Ārṣṭiṣeṇa. (See under Ārṣṭiṣeṇa).

(vii) Once Draupadī gave instructions on the duties of a wife to Satyabhāmā who came to the forests along with Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (Chapters 233 and 234, Vana Parva).

(viii) Once Durvāsas with his disciples came to the forest as the guests of the Pāṇḍavas. They came late and Pāñcālī had taken her food already. The Akṣayapātra (the never-empty pot) could not be invoked to produce anything that day and Pāñcālī was greatly agitated and worried. She prayed to Śrī Kṛṣṇa for succour and Śrī Kṛṣṇa also coming hungry searched in the pot for something to eat and finding a bit of spinach sticking to the sides of the pot grabbed it with avidity and ate it. The guests felt as if they had enjoyed a sumptuous feast and left the place well pleased. (See para XII under Duryodhana).

(ix) Jayadratha carried away Pāñcālī from the forests once. The Pāṇḍavas rescued her. (Para 4 under Jayadratha).

6) Life incognito. After their twelve years of exile in the forests the time for living in disguise for a year came and Dharmaputra and his brothers with Pāñcālī spent that period in the palace of the King Virāṭa. Each assumed a new name and accepted different types of service under the King. Pāñcālī took the name of Sairandhrī and served as a companion and attendant to the princess. One day Kīcaka, the mighty brother-in-law of the King, tried to molest Pāñcālī and Bhīmasena killed him. (See under Kīcaka). It was at the time when the incognito life was coming to an end that the Kaurava army headed by Duryodhana carried away the cattle of the King Virāṭa. The King was absent from the palace at that time and the prince, Uttara, had not the guts to go and attack the Kaurava army. It was Pāñcālī who then suggested sending of Bṛhannala of the palace (Arjuna) to serve as charioteer of Uttara. (See under Arjuna, Para 24).

7) Subsequent events. The thirteen years of life in exile and incognito came to an end. But the Kauravas were not prepared to give half of the kingdom to the Pāṇḍavas. The differences between them increased and it led to a great war. Śrī Kṛṣṇa agreed to go as a messenger to the court of Dhṛtarāṣṭra and ask for the share of the Pāṇḍavas. Before leaving he asked each o. the Pāṇḍavas what he should say at the court of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Pāñcālī then approached Kṛṣṇa in private and said she desired for a war to defeat the Kauravas. She then reminded Kṛṣṇa of a vow taken by Bhīmasena that he would tie her hair with his hands smeared with the blood from the thigh of Duśśāsana.

The peace-mission of Kṛṣṇa failed and the famous Kurukṣetra battle started. Many valiant warriors on both the sides were killed. When Abhimanyu was killed Subhadrā wept bitterly and Pāñcālī who went to console her fainted. Śrī Kṛṣṇa revived her. Pāñcālī asked Bhīmasena to bring to her the inborn jewel on the head of Aśvatthāmā, son of Droṇa. She wanted to take revenge on him for killing her brother Dhṛṣṭadyumna.

After a fierce battle for eighteen days the Kauravas were defeated and their tribe annihilated. Pāṇḍavas took hold of Hastināpura and Pāñcālī was one among those who persuaded Dharmaputra to take charge of the administration of the state as its ruler. Dharmaputra performed an Aśvamedhayajña and Pāñcālī gave presents to Citrāṅgadā and Ulūpī who were present for the function then. After the Aśvamedha Draupadī lived in Hastināpura serving Kuntī and Gāndhārī alike for a long time. It was at that time that Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Gāndhārī and Kuntī went to the forests and Draupadī expressed her desire to go along with them to be of help to them. But they did not allow her to do so. While the Pāṇḍavas were living in Hastināpura as the rulers of the country eminent ṛṣis from different parts of the country visited them and some of the Siddhas (realised souls) among them saw Pāñcālī as the goddess Mahālakṣmī herself. (Śloka 9, Chapter 25, Āśramavāsika Parva).

8) Death of Pāñcālī. At the fag end of their life the Pāṇḍavas crowned Parīkṣit as the King of Hastināpura and started on their Mahāprasthāna. They travelled for long through the Himālayas and reached Mahāmeru. At that time Pāñcālī fell down dead. Then Bhīmasena asked Yudhiṣṭhira why without any particular ailment Pāñcālī died. Yudhiṣṭhira replied that it was because she showed special interest in Arjuna. The Pāṇḍavas walked on and all of them excepting Dharmaputra died on the way one by one. Even before Dharmaputra entered svarga Pāñcālī and the four brothers had reached there. (Chapters 1 to 4, Mahāprasthānika Parva).

9). Sons of Pāñcālī. Pāñcālī had five sons one each from each of the five husbands. She got Prativindhya of Yudhiṣṭhira, Śrutasoma of Bhīmasena, Śrutakīrti of Arjuna, Śatānīka of Nakula and Śrutakarmā of Sahadeva. (Śloka 73, Chapter 95, Ādi Parva).

PĀÑCĀLIKA (PĀÑCĀLIKEŚA). A Yakṣa who was a son of Kubera. In some parts of Bhārata this Yakṣa is worshipped as a deity. It is believed that Śiva had given Pāñcālīka a boon that he who worships him whether he be man or woman, young or old, would become intoxicated with vigour. There is a story behind Pāñcālika obtaining this boon :—

When Satī who was insulted at the Dakṣayāga was cousumed by fire a bereaved Śiva sat inactive and moody at a lonely place. When this continued for a long time Kāmadeva (god of love) at the request of the other devas sent arrows against him and made him lustful. Śiva then started running passionately calling the name of his wife and finding her nowhere jumped into the river Kālindī to commit suicide. (The waters of Kālindī became black from that time onwards). Kālindī was unable to bear the burden of the soul of Śiva and so he had to get out to the shore and run again. At this time Kāmadeva sent another arrow, unmādāstra (arrow of intoxication) also against Śiva. Śiva could not bear the impact of the two arrows together and he laboured under great strain. Just then he saw Pāñcālika son of Kubera coming that way. Śiva then made him understand his difficulties and requested him to take charge of the force of the arrows from him. Pāñcālika did so and saved Śiva from his toil. Pleased at this Śiva blessed him. He said that Pāñcālika will be worshipped by people in the month of Caitra and all those who do so will be invigorated. He added that henceforth he would be known as Pāñcālikeśa also.

PĀÑCĀLYA. An āśrama of ancient Bhārata. This was the place where Nyagrodha, King of Pāñcāla, performed penance for a long time. (Śloka 11, Chapter 90, Vana Parva).

PAÑCAMAHĀYAJÑA. For a Gṛhasthāśramī (householder) the following five apparatuses are unavoidable : A sifter, a grinding stone, a broom, a wooden mortar and a water-pot. It is believed that a sin is committed when each of these is used and to remove the sins thus committed the ancient sages have prescribed five yajñas and these five yajñas are called the Pañcamahāyajñas. They are the Brahmayajña, Pitṛyajña, Devayajña, Bhūtayajña and the Mānuṣayajña. Reciting of Vedas is Brahmayajña. Pleasing the manes by offering rice or libations of water is called Pitṛyajña. Giving offerings to the demi-gods in the sacrificial fire is called Devayajña and religious offerings of rice to the crows is called Bhūtayajña. Giving food for the guests is Mānuṣayajña. One who does not do the Pañcamahāyajñas is no better than dead. Some scholars have classified the Pañcamahāyajñas as Huta, Prahuta, Brāhmyahuta, Prāśita and Ahuta.

Japo huto huto homaḥ
Prahuto bhautiko baliḥ //
Brāhmyaṁ hutaṁ dvijāgnyarccā
Prāśitam pitṛtarpaṇam. //

Ahuta is Brahmayajña, huta is devayajña, prahuta is bhūtayajña, brāhmyahuta is mānuṣikayajña and prāśita is pitṛyajña. Even if at times one finds it not possible to do mānuṣikayajña one must perform daily brahmayajña and daivayajña. The offerings given to gods in the sacrificial fire go to the Sun. The Sun sends rains to the earth which in turn make the plants flourish. Vedas say that thus living beings increase. Just as all animals and objects depend on life-breath for living, a Brahmacārī, a Vānaprastha and a Sannyāsī depend upon a gṛhastha for sustenance. Therefore, the Gṛhasthāśrama is the best of all āśramas. (Chapter 3, Manusmṛti).

PAÑCAMĪ, An ancient river of Uttara Bhārata. People used to drink water from this river. Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

PAÑCANADA I. A land of the north-western side of Bhārata. This is at present called the Punjab. When Nakula conquered the western states he conquered Pañcanada also. (Śloka 11, Chapter 32, Mahābhārata). Five rivers of names Vipāśā (Vyāsa), Śatadrū (Sutlej), Irāvatī (Rāvī), Cndrabhāgā (Chenab) and Vitastā (Jhelum) run through this place and that is why the place is called Pañcanada.

PAÑCANADA II. A sacred place in Kurukṣetra. If one bathes in the holy pond of Koṭitīrtha there, one would get the benefit of performing an Aśvamedha. (Chapter 83, Vana Parva).

PAÑCAPRĀṆAS. The five prāṇas (life breaths) of any living being are Prāṇa, Apāna, Vyāna, Samāna and Udāna. There is a story in 'Devī Bhāgavata' regarding the origin of the Pañcaprāṇas.

Once Śrī Kṛṣṇa met Rādhādevī at Rāsamaṇḍala and in seclusion they spent in sexual sport the period of one day of Brahmā. Then Kṛṣṇa selecting an auspicious time dropped his vital fluid into her womb at the end of the sexual sport. Tired by the prolonged carnal sport and shaken by the impact of the hot semen Rādhādevī perspired profusely and the exhaustion produced deep and long breaths. The whole universe was covered with her sweat and her sighs became the goddess of the life-giving breaths of all created animals. From the left side of goddess was born Vāyupatnī and to her were born the Pañcaprāṇas. Besides these, another five younger prāṇas were also born. From the sweat of the Devī was born Varuṇa and from the left side of Varuṇa was born Varuṇānī. (9th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

Māṇḍūkyopaniṣad gives the following details regarding the working of the Prāṇas in the body :—Prāṇa was first used in the sense of breath. Later it got the meaning of life. Life is in fact breath to all living beings. Only when a man is awake, his mind and sense organs are active. But Prāṇa is active always both in the state of wakefulness and sleep. Therefore Prāṇa is the vigour of life. It may be said that when a man is asleep his senses merge with his mind and his mind with the prāṇa. The five factors of Prāṇa are the Pañcaprāṇas. The first of the five is called Prāṇa itself. It is called Mukhyaprāṇa or chief Prāṇa. Just as a King appoints his ministers at different places to do specified jobs the chief Prāṇa posts the other prāṇas at different parts in the body with specific purposes of their own. Prāṇa is seated in the heart and does the work of breathing. Apāna is seated in anus and directs the organs of excretion of the body. Vyāna is spread throughout the body and it is this life-wind which keeps one alive even when breathing is stopped for some time. When an archer stands in deep concentration with his bent bow without breathing he lives with the help of Vyāna. Samāna controls the breathing-in and breathing-out to a specified rhythm. Samāna (equaliser) is so called because it balances the force of the in-coming and outgoing breaths. There is a school of thought that Prāṇa is not seated in the heart but spread over the ears, eyes nose and face. Samāna is seated at the navel midway between the seats of Prāṇa and Apāna. This is also a reason why life-wind got that name. This breath does the work of prompting digestion. The four prāṇas, Prāṇa, Apāna, Samāna and Vyāna sustain life. The fifth one, Udāna, takes the soul of the being out of the body when it dies.

PAÑCĀPSARAS. A lake of distinction. During the exile of Śrī Rāma in the forests, Agastya showed Śrī Rāma this lake and described its origin thus : "In times of old a sage named Māṇḍakarṇi built this lake. This sage living on air alone stood in the waters of this lake and practised severe austerities for ten thousand years. Devas were frightened by the rigorous penance of Māṇḍakarṇi and they sent five devakanyakās (celestial damsels) to the earth to entice the sage and stop his penance. The sage was attracted by the divine beauty of the girls and he lived with them in a grand building constructed within the lake itself. Even after the passing away of the sage and the damsels people used to hear dance and music from inside the lake. Because five apsaras lived in that lake it became known as Pañcāpsaras.

(Apsaras = celestial damsels who are servants of Indra). (Sarga 1, Araṇya Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

PAÑCARĀTRA. An āgama (a system of philosophy). (Chapter 218, Śānti Parva).

PAÑCARĀTRA. A book of spiritual doctrines. He who learns this will attain the position of Uparicaravasu. Śloka 25, Chapter 325, Śānti Parva).

PAÑCAŚIKHA. A sage of ancient times. The Purāṇas give the following details about him.

He was a disciple of Āsuri. He was brought up breast-fed by Kapilā, wife of Āsuri and so he was known as Kāpila also. He dwelt in Pañcasrotas and performed a Yāga for a thousand years and got his name Pañcaśikha. He went to the assembly of the learned king Janaka and entered into a polemic contest with him and defeated him. The defeated King gave Pañcaśikha great respect and he lived in the court of Janaka as his Guru for a number of years. (Chapter 218, Śānti Parva).

PAÑCĀŚVA. A King of the Puru race. (See under Puruvaṁśa).

PAÑCATANTRA.

A. General information. An ancient book of distinction written by the scholar Viṣṇuśarmā in the form of stories for the use of children to give them an idea of the different aspects of life.

1) Origin. There is a statement in the preface itself regarding the composition of this book : "Three sons were born to an emperor named Amaraśakti. All the three were dull-witted. The emperor was very sorry for them but found no way to improve them. Greatly disappointed the King called the royal council and told them about his sons. Then one of the members of the council, a man named Sumati, stood up and said "Oh best of Kings, let us not try to teach your children the śāstras one by one. It will not only be unpleasant study but would also take a long time to complete. If we can mix all the śāstras cleverly and make it palatable like sweetmeats the children would take it easily. There is a suitable man also for this work in our state. He is Viṣṇuśarmā, a kind-hearted scholar who is not only well-versed in all the śāstras but also an adept in the art of the up-bringing of children. I am sure he would make your children wise and learned."

When the emperor heard this he sent for Viṣṇuśarmā and told him everything. After understanding well the nature of his would-be disciples and the ambition of their father, Viṣṇuśarmā took charge of his wards and within six months he taught the sons of the emperor the science of government. The stories which he used to teach them the science of administration were all compiled into a volume called Pañcatantra."

2) A general idea of the book. The book contains five divisions each division illustrating one tantra (tact, diplomacy) by several stories. It contains prose and verse. The first tantra is called Mitrabheda. Stories under this head explain the philosophy of "Divide and rule" in politics. The main characters in these stories are two foxes named Karaṭaka and Damanaka. Stories under Mitrabheda relate to how these sly foxes enjoy themselves in breaking the intimacy between a lion and an ox using slander against each other. 'Mitralābha' is the theme of the next tantra. It is an advice that you should select your friends with care selecting them only after studying them in detail properly. The author has selected as characters in his stories for this purpose a tortoise, a deer, a crow and a rat. The third tantra is called Kākolūkīya. This deals with the evils behind an intimacy between born enemies. The main characters in the stories relating to this are a crow and an owl. The fourth tantra is called Labdhapraṇāśa. It describes how a man loses what has come into his possession by his foolishness. A monkey and a crocodile are the characters in this story. The fifth tantra is Aparīkṣitakāraka. It deals with the bad side of not looking into all the possible aspects of what you hear. Several stories are there to illustrate this point.

3) Popularity of the book. Though no correct records are there in history in support of the belief, it is believed that Amaraśakti was the ruler of Mahilāropya in Deccan and that Pañcatantra must have originated from there. But Pañcatantra received a global publicity and popularity and was translated from Sanskrit into many other languages. Directed by King Kosru Anuṣirva, a Persian poet named Buryoe translated it into the Persian language during the period 531-575 A.D. That translation is not available at present. In the year 570 A.D. it was translated into the Syrian language by a poet named Bud. A scholar named Abdulla Ibaal Mogaffa in the year 750 A.D. translated it into the Arabic language. It was from this Arabic translation that it was translated into many European languages. The Greek translation appeared in the year 1080 A.D., Hebrew in 1100 A.D., Latin in 1270 A.D., German in 1480 A.D., Italian in 1582 A.D. and French in 1678 A.D. Next to the Bible this is the book which has received the greatest publicity and popularity. The great linguist Hertel says that Pañcatantra has appeared in about 200 translations in fifty different languages.

4) Period of composition. Because the translation into the Syrian language appeared in the year 570 A.D it must have been composed earlier than that date. Again, since it takes at least two centuries for a work to get popular enough to be translated into a foreign language, the composition must have been done early in the fourth century A.D. Some believe that the work was done in Kashmir. While others assert that it was written in Magadha. The original title of the book is believed to be 'Karataka and Damanaka' by a few.

5) Two editions. Two different editions of the book are now found. One edition popular in Kashmir is known as Tantrākhyāyikā. The other is in the form found in Kathāsaritsāgara and Bṛhatkathāmañjarī. The original Sanskrit work is very rarely found. There are several editions of this in Dakṣiṇa Bhārata. Changes in the stories according to the change of times are also noted. (History of Classical Sanskrit Literature).

B. Contents (Stories).

1) Mitrabheda. There was once a very good merchant in the land of Mahilāropya called Vardhamāna. He was once travelling in a bullock-cart. One of the bullocks drawing the cart was named Sañjīvaka. The leg of Sañjīvaka broke on the way striking against a stone. Leaving the bullock to the charge of four of his attendants Vardhamāna continued his journey. When night came the attendants were frightened by the surrounding forests and so, leaving the bullock to its fate the attendants left the place. The bullock got well and it roamed about in the forests bellowing loudly. The King of the forests, Piṅgalaka the lion, was frightened by the bellowing of the bullock.

The lion remained in the forest without stirring out from its cave. The minister of the lion was a fox. That fox had two sons named Karaṭaka and Damanaka. Damanaka wanted to know what made the lion worried and told his brother about it. Karaṭaka advised him not to interfere unnecessarily with the affairs of others and told his brother Damanaka a story to stress his point.

A group of sawers were sawing wood near a temple for its construction. At lunch time one of the sawers placed a wedge on a half-sawn timber and went for his midday meal. One of the monkeys sitting on the branch of a tree near the temple jumped on to the half-sawn timber and pulled out the wedge. His tail had fallen without his knowing into the space between the sawn planks and when the monkey later jumped out from the timber his tail was wedged between the planks and the tail got crushed. If you poke your nose into the affairs of others without any purpose such dangers are sure to happen.

Hearing that, Damanaka said, "Brother, are we serving the lion, our master, just for our food ? If we want only our food what difference is there between ourselves and the dog? Have you not seen the uproar the dogs make when they see food. A dog has no modesty, humility or self-confidence. Some men are also like that. But some others are not like that. Look at the elephant. It never makes an exhibition of its happiness when it gets its food. Its majestic stand, look and gestures are worth noticing. The best of men are also like this. Everybody should keep this in mind. He who earns his livelihood without depending on others but does it by his own wits and efforts is the most revered of men. But food is not enough, we must earn fame also. So even though we are children we must try to remove the worry that hangs over our lord, the lion."

The brother was not moved by this philosophy of Damanaka and so he said again, "Anywhere and in any venture success is difficult to achieve and failure is very easy. It is difficult to rise up but it is easy to fall down. It is a very hard labour to roll a stone up a mountain but to push it down from the top is very easy. He is blessed who can read correctly the thoughts of other people. I have, looking at the face of our King, understood that something big is worrying him."

Karaṭaka said, "Admitting what you say to be correct how are we to know the thing that worries the King? It is a dangerous task." Damanaka said "Regarding the achievement of success, there are three kinds of people namely the Uttama (best), the madhyama (mediocre) and the adhama (worst). The adhama type will never start a venture fearing failure. The madhyama type would start his endeavour but would turn back at the sight of obstacles. But the Uttama type would never turn back without achieving success. They are the adorable type of men in this world. The Uttama would act according to the circumstances of the situation. If he wants to talk to another and obtain a favour from him he would not go to him at random without looking into the time, place and opportunity to do so. Even Bṛhaspati has his moods. In fact, there is nothing impossible in this world. Disappointment and failures are due to want of experience and lack of endeavour. The great ocean with its huge rolling waves gives one a fright at first sight. But if he starts bathing in it for a long time he finds it not so unapproachable or ghastly."

When Karaṭaka heard these moral preachings of his brother he allowed him to do what he wanted to do. Damanaka went to the cave of the lion. Far from the cave itself Damanaka started walking humbly with his head bent down. The lion saw Damanaka walking thus to him and was immensely pleased. The King of the beasts asked him thus "Damanaka, it is a long time since I saw you and your brother. Why is it that you both, sons of my minister, do not come and see me as often as your father ?"

Damanaka replied very humbly "Oh mighty King, of what use can we insignificant creatures be to you? Yet, if one thinks over it, even little things can also be of use at times to great people." Damanaka then recited to the King a poem which in substance was thus: "Even grass over which we trample while walking, is of use as fodder to the cattle. Some are used for cleaning the teeth and still some, dry and brittle, to tickle the ear when it itches badly. Great men retain their greatness even when they fall. A burning torch would send its flame only upwards even when you keep it upside down. Similarly all things will shine only in their proper places. An ornamental waistbelt would not shine round a neck nor would bangles shine on one's ears. Anyhow let me ask your highness one question. Is it true that when your highness went to drink water something happened to make your highness worry ?"

Piṅgalaka the lion said: "What you say is correct. When I went today to drink water in the river I heard the horrifying bellow of a fierce animal and was frightened. I am thinking of leaving this forest and going to some other one."

Damanaka said "Oh Lord, be not frightened. Appearances are often deceptive and cannot be believed. I shall tell you the story of a fox who mistook an ordinary drum for an animal with good flesh. Once a fox saw a drum lying in a battlefield. It was making a sound when the wind blew over it. The fox mistook it for an animal with plenty of flesh and blood. Rejoicing at the prospect of having a hearty meal the fox mustered courage and went near it. It tore the leather open. Only then could it understand its blunder."

The King liked the story very much. So he sent Damanaka to enquire where the bellow came from. Damanaka found out Sañjīvaka, the ox and told him everything and added that he had been sent by the King to fetch him to his presence. Sañjīvaka was at first afraid to go but the consoling words of Damanaka gave him courage and it went to the lion. The lion and the ox became great friends and gradually the intimacy developed to such an extent that the King of the beasts started becoming indifferent to the welfare of the other beasts in the forest. The subjects of the King Piṅgalaka were in trouble.

Feeling sorry for his own actions Damanaka went to his brother and said, "All this happened because of our own fault. I shall tell you a story about a self-made calamity. Once an ascetic named Devaśarmā was afraid of robbers. So he stitched into his robes all the money he possessed. Somehow a robber named Āṣāḍhabhūti came to know of it and he made friends with the ascetic and acted as his servant pretending to be very faithful. Devaśarmā got confidence in him and one day he went to bathe handing over all his guarded wealth into the hands of Āṣāḍhabhūti. On his way back from the river after his bath Devaśarmā saw two goats fighting against each other. Blood was flowing from the heads of both the goats and still the fight continued. A fox came there to drink the fresh blood flowing from their heads and he went and started licking the blood that had dropped between the two fighting goats. The goats came again and hit against each other with force and the fox that was standing between the two and licking the blood greedily was crushed to death. When he returned after witnessing the fight the ascetic found that his servant had gone away with his cash."

Karaṭaka liked the story very much. They then discussed ways and means of getting out of this calamity. Damanaka said that any object can be achieved by cleverness and told his brother a story to illustrate his point.He said "Once a crow made his abode on a tree with his wife and children. After some time his wife began to lay eggs but all of them disappeared one by one. They made enquiries and found that the culprit was a big cobra living beneath the same tree. They were no match to the cobra and so they sought the advice of their friend, a fox.

The fox said, "I shall suggest a way to get out of the danger. Have you not heard the story of an old stork who got his food by his cleverness? The stork went to the banks of a pond feeling hungry. There were plenty of fishes in the pond. The stork stood still on the banks pretending to be sad. A crab seeing the sad-looking stork came and enquired the cause of his grief. The stork said 'You well know that we storks live on flesh. and fish. I now understand that a fisherman has planned to catch all the fish in this pond. This is the cause of my worry." The fishes who overheard this conversation between the crab and the stork came before the stork frightened and requested him to save them from the fisherman somehow. The stork said 'I am not strong to fight the fisherman. But I can do what little help I can give you. I shall every day remove you one by one from this pond to another one without the knowledge of the fisherman."

The poor fishes agreed to the proposal and the stork carried away one fish everyday from the pond and ate it at a place hidden from the view of the others. This went on for one or two months without break and somehow the crab got suspicious and he requested the stork to take him also to the other pond. The stork carrying the crab reached its usual place and the crab was horrified at the sight of the bones of the fishes eaten before by the stork. The crab knew its death was sure even if it did not fight with the stork and so started a fight and in the end killed the stork by crushing the neck of the stork."

The crows crew hilariously when they heard the story of the fox. The fox then told them a plan. "When any of those who come to bathe in a pond nearby removes the necklace and places it on the shore you are to pick it up and hang it on a branch of the tree." The crows did like that and pedestrians going that way saw the necklace hanging from the branch and took it after killing the cobra in the hole beneath the tree."

On hearing the story told by Damanaka the idea of putting the lion against the ox gained strength in Karaṭaka's mind. To confirm the idea in his brother's mind Damanaka told another story. Damanaka said, "Once there was a lion named Madotkaṭa. He lived in a forest harassing all the beasts that lived there.

All the subjects of King Madotkaṭa joined together, went to him and represented to him that they would go to his cave one by one every day to be killed and eaten by him. The lion agreed to that and the beasts one by one went to his cave each day. One day it was the turn of a clever hare. The hare walked slowly and reached the lion's den late. The King was very cross at this and asked him to explain why he was late. The hare said "Oh lord, on my way another lion accosted me and I had to take a round-about route to get away from that lion." The lion got angry and asked the hare to take him to the other lion who dared to come to that forest and question his authority. The hare took the lion to a well and asked his lord to peep in. When Madotkaṭa did so he saw his own reflection in the still waters of the well and mistook it for another lion. It jumped into the well and was killed."

Karaṭaka had implicit confidence in Damanaka after hearing all these stories and he sent his brother to the King to create a rupture between the lion and the ox. Damanaka went to the King Piṅgalaka and apologised for the mistake he had committed. Then the King enquired what the mistake was. Damanaka said that the ox Sañjīvaka was not such a simpleton as he took him to be. He was ambitious and wanted to snatch away the kingdom from Piṅgalaka. It was unwise to keep one single minister always. "After all what can an ox do ? He can plough the fields. I have come to inform you all these out of my regard for you." Damanaka said.

Even after hearing all these, Piṅgalaka did not have the heart to abandon the ox. Piṅgalaka asked what a poor bullock could do against a lion. Damanaka then said that one would come into grief if one believed too much in any body. "Have you not heard the story of the louse which believed the bug?" Damanaka asked. Then he narrated a story. "Mandavisarpiṇī was a louse which was living happily on the silken bed of a King. A bug went there and made friends with the louse. The poor louse believed the bug to be harmless and allowed it to stay that night with him. The bug said that it was very greedy to suck the blood of the King. At night the bug bit the King. The King woke up and ordered his servants to search for the thing that bit him. When lights were brought the clever bug slipped away. The royal servants conducting the search found out the louse and killed it."

The lion liked the tale very much and yet was reluctant to dismiss the ox. The lion wanted proof that the ox was at fault. So Damanaka went straight to the ox in his house and said "We are all small people. What does the master do for our welfare ? If small people seek the friendship of big people the small ones will always suffer." The ox endorsed the view and told a story to illustrate the truth. "A lion named Madotkaṭa had a tiger, a fox and a crow as his ministers. When the ministers were once walking in the forest they saw a camel. They had never seen a camel before and so they were wonderstruck by the animal. They went and talked with it and gathered that the curious animal was a camel which had been carrying loads for a merchant. It had now escaped from the merchant because of the heavy work it had to do. The camel wanted to remain in hiding. The ministers took the new animal to the lion. The lion liked the camel very much and soon they became good and intimate friends. The intimacy increased and soon the King lost all interest in his other subjects. At this stage the ministers found out a plan. They advised the King to kill and eat the camel but the King refused to do so. Then the crow went before the King and requested the lion to kill and eat it. But the crow was so small a food for the lion and so it refused to kill the crow. Then the fox made a similar offer but the lion refused to kill the fox also. Then came the tiger with the offer and the lion refused to kill the tiger also. Seeing all this the camel also made a similar offer and the moment his consent was out from his mouth the fox and the tiger together killed the poor camel and ate it. So one should be careful in believing others. In my case I am sure some wicked persons must have advised him against me and that is the reason why the lion is angry with me. But I will always work true to my conscience. There is no harm in fighting either for self-protection or for destroying one's enemies. So if it is necessary I will fight the lion."

Hearing this Damanaka said "To go to war without knowing the strength of the enemy is wrong. Once upon a time a water-fowl quarrelled with the ocean. The water-fowl was living happily on the shores of an ocean with his mate. They ate the worms that lived on the shores. The she-fowl got pregnant and when it was time to lay her eggs she asked her mate to show her a safe place to lay the eggs. The male mate asked her to lay the eggs on the shore itself. But the she-fowl said that the waves would carry away the eggs and so it was not wise to do so. The male fowl assured her that the ocean was not bold enough to do anything against his interests. But the she-fowl still hesitated.

Then the male fowl said "I am the nearest relative responsible for your protection and welfare. If one does not heed the words of a relative one will fall into danger. I shall tell you the story of a tortoise which came to grief by not obeying the instructions of its friends. In olden times there lived on the banks of a pond a tortoise who had two swan-friends in the lake named Saṅkaṭa and Vikaṭa. Once the lake became empty of water and the swans decided to go to another lake with water. They never wanted to part with their friend the tortoise and so decided to take the tortoise also along with them. But the tortoise could not fly and so they found a plan to carry the tortoise to the other lake. They brought a stick and the tortoise was asked to hang at the middle of the stick clutching the stick tightly with its teeth. The swans then took the stick by its two ends each holding one end in its beak. The swans gave strict instructions that the tortoise should not open its mouth and then rose up into the air and flew towards the other lake. On the way some children saw the funny sight in the air and so hooted and howled. The tortoise got angry and abused the children. The moment it opened its mouth it lost hold on the stick and fell down to the ground This happened because the tortoise did not heed the words of its friends." The water fowl continued 'It is cowardice and foolishness to remain sad expecting dangers in future. Just hear this story' he said 'Once in a pond there were three fishes named Anāgata, Utpannamati and Yadbhaviṣya. Hearing that fishermen were coming to fish in that pond Anāgata warned them and suggested going to another pond to escape from the fishermen. But Utpannamati and Yadbhaviṣya did not care. They said that some plan could be found out when the danger came. But Anāgata felt diffident and so he went away to another pond. Soon the fishermen came and spread their nets. Utpannamati lay still pretending to be dead. The fishermen took it and deposited it on the shore and started to fish again. The moment the fishermen turned their heads Utpannamati slipped into a mud pit nearby and remained there till the departure of the fishermen. But poor Yadbhaviṣya could not think of any plan and so was caught and carried away by the fishermen. So just like Utpannamati I will also come across some plan when the danger comes and so you do lay your eggs on the shore of the ocean itself."

Hearing the assuring words of her husband the she-fowl laid her eggs on the shore. But very soon waves came and carried them away. She complained to her husband. The water fowl called a conference of all the birds living there and explained to them his mishap and all of them went on a deputation to Garuḍa, the best of the birds and requested him to find out a remedy. Garuḍa represented the matter to Mahāviṣṇu who in turn called Varuṇa to his side and ordered him to give back the eggs to the fowl.

After telling this story Damanaka went to the lion and told him many misleading lies about the ox. Gradually the lion and the ox became enemies. Damanaka then triumphantly went and informed his brother Karaṭaka of his achievement. But Karaṭaka said "Brother, you have done a very unjust thing. There are four methods to achieve your object namely, Sāma, Dāna, Bheda and Daṇḍa. Of these Bheda is to be used only last of all. I shall tell you a story :

Once a chetty (Merchant) had two sons named Dharmabuddhi and Duṣṭabuddhi. Once they were both travelling through a forest when Dharmabuddhi got a treasure from a hole at the base of a big tree. Duṣṭabuddhi advised his brother not to take the treasure to the city as it was dangerous to do so and made him bury it at a place beneath the same tree. That night itself Duṣṭabuddhi went and dug out the treasure and got it buried in his own room. After some days both of them went together to see the treasure and found the place empty of the treasure. They accused each other of stealing the treasure. Both of them complained to the King. The King asked them whether they had any witnesses and they replied that only the tree was there as a witness. The King decided that both of them should go beneath the same tree and dip their hands in burning oil to prove their innocence. Duṣṭabuddhi went to his father and requested him that he should hide in the hollow of that tree and say that it was Dharmabuddhi who had stolen the treasure. Hearing this the father said "Child, when you think of a trick you must also think of the danger involved in it. Once there lived a stork with his wife on a tree. A serpent living in the same tree began to eat the young ones of the stork and the stork complained to his friend fox about it. The clever fox suggested to him a plan. There was a mongoose living near the tree. The stork was to drop fishes in front of the hole of the mongoose and continue dropping fishes in a line leading to the abode of the serpent. The mongoose would thus be led to the hole of the serpent. The stork did so and when the mongoose reached the hole of the serpent it saw it and killed it. I cannot do such cruel things." But when Duṣṭabuddhi insisted, the father half-heartedly agreed to it and went and sat in the hollow of the tree. Next day the servants of the King came to the foot of the tree with burning oil. They asked the tree to tell the truth regarding the theft. Then there came a voice from the tree denouncing Dharmabuddhi as the culprit. Dharmabuddhi then said there was no truth in the bodiless voice and requested them to fumigate the tree from beneath. The royal servants did so and then the father came out and confessed everything. The servants of the King nailed Duṣṭabuddhi on a spike and killed him.

After having told the story Karaṭaka tried to dissuade his brother from his deceitful intentions. Karaṭaka said:— "Piṅgala and Sañjīvaka are kind-hearted and simple people. There need be no treachery with them. Treachery is allowed against wicked people. I shall tell you the story of a merchant:—

This merchant had as his entire wealth a thousand pounds of iron and one day he went on a pilgrimage after entrusting his entire wealth to a friend and neighbour of his on the understanding that the latter should return it on his return after the pilgrimage. After ten months the merchant returned but the friend did not give back the iron. He regretted that all the iron was eaten by rats in which his house abounded. The merchant knew that his neighbour was speaking falsehood but kept silent over the matter. After a few days the merchant somehow enticed the only son of his neighbour to his house and locked the young boy in a room. The friend went in search of his son to the merchant's house and asked him whether he had seen his son anywhere. The merchant replied that he saw the boy being carried away by a kite. The friend could not believe the story and suspecting some foul play on the part of the merchant went to the king and reported the matter to him. The king sent for the merchant and asked him about the missing boy. The merchant gave the king the same reply he gave his friend. The king was surprised and asked the merchant whether it was believable that a boy aged eighteen would be carried away by a kite. The merchant very coolly replied that such things could happen in a country where rats could eat a thousand pounds of iron. The king asked the merchant to explain and he then told him everything that had happened. The king ordered the friend to return the iron and the merchant got back his wealth.

Karaṭaka after telling this story added that deceit in return for deceit was no sin. Damanaka stuck on to his plan and made the lion and ox fight each other. The poor ox was killed and the lion became his old self again.

2) Suhṛllābha. (Gaining friends). Once there lived on a tree a crow named Laghupatanaka. The crow saw a hunter coming and spreading a net beneath the tree. A flock of doves coming that way was caught in the net. But the doves flew up in a body and the net was carried from the ground freed of the pegs that held it. The crow followed them and when they were safely landed at another place Citragrīva the leader of the doves, told the crow thus "I shall now show you the benefit of gaining friends." Citragrīva and his doves flew again with the net and landed before the hole of a rat named Hiraṇyaka. The rat was a friend of Citragrīva.

On hearing the voice of Citragrīva outside, Hiraṇyaka came out and felt sorry for the plight of the doves. The rat pointed out that nobody could oppose fate and proved it with illustrations. He added :—"Though elephants and cobras are mightier and fiercer than men, it is because of fate that they are being controlled by smaller people than they themselves. Hiraṇyaka cut to pieces the threads of the net and set the doves free. Next day the doves flew away to their places. Seeing the generosity shown by the rat, the crow wanted to be friendly with the rat. The crow mentioned this to the rat. But the rat refused to be friendly thinking that it was a ruse to get him killed for his food. But the crow promised to be grateful for ever to the rat for saving the doves which belonged to the community of birds to which the crow also belonged. But the rat retorted that gratitude was a quality which was absent in any living being and generally harm was the reward for any favour done. The crow was greatly grieved to hear the words of Hiraṇyaka and told him that he (crow) would commit suicide if the rat did not take him as his friend. At last the rat took pity on the crow and they became friends. Time passed on and then there broke out a famine in the land. The crow decided to shift his abode and told the rat about it. He said he was going to a lake on the banks of which lived a friend of his, a tortoise. The tortoise, he added, would fetch for him from the lake plenty of fish to eat. The rat was also affected by the famine and so he also decided to accompany the crow. The crow took the rat in its beak and they both reached the lake where lived the tortoise named Manthara. The crow introduced Hiraṇyaka to the tortoise and the tortoise asked him the reason why he left his previous abode.

The rat said:—"There was a bhikṣu (one who lives on alms) named Cūḍākarṇa living in a house in my place. He used to eat only what was required to maintain life in him. He would cook his own food and keep the remains everyday in his kitchen. I used to eat that food and live. Then one day another Sannyāsin named Bṛhatsphik (Vīṇākarṇa) came to this house. Every night Vīṇākarṇa used to read the Purāṇas to Cūḍākarṇa. Cūḍākarṇa would sit and make a sound on the bow kept nearby to drive me away. The first time he did so Vīṇākarṇa who was reading resented the interrupting sound and asked Cūḍākarṇa why he made it. He then explained that it was intended to drive away the rat coming to steal the food. I was forced to starve and I became lean and weak. Even rivers would go dry if there are no rains. Only those with wealth would have friends. Begging is a nuisance to others. Everywhere it is important to acquire good and faithful friends. When a good man is in danger only good men rúsh to help him. When an elephant falls into a pit it is always another elephant which comes to its rescue. Therefore I desire to make friends with you."

All the three, the crow, the rat and the tortoise lived together happily. Then one day a deer named Citrāṅgada escaping from a hunter came frightened to their midst and started living with them. One day the deer which went in search of food did not return even after dusk and so the crow went in search of the deer and found it trapped in a hunter's net. The crow informed the rat about it and the rat immediately came and started gnawing at the strings of the net. In the meantime the tortoise desirous of knowing the plight of Citrāṅgada crawled to the place of accident. The rat had already torn to pieces the net and the crow and the rat said that it was unwise of Manthara to have come so far crawling as there was danger from the hunter coming to the place soon. Before the deer could endorse the views of his friends the hunter came to the scene. The deer, the crow and the rat escaped. The hunter saw the crawling tortoise and caught it. Binding it with a string the hunter placed it on the ground. In the meantime the friends of Manthara who had escaped hit upon a plan to rescue the tortoise. The deer lay down pretending to be dead at a place far away from the place but within the sight of the hunter. The crow sat perched on its body as if pecking at its flesh. The hunter saw it and went to take the dead body of the deer. The moment the hunter turned away from the tortoise the rat went and cut the string binding the tortoise and set it free. Before the hunter reached the deer it ran away. So all were saved. This is the benefit of having good friends.

3) Sandhivigraha (Peace and war). We must make friends with people only after knowing them well There was once a big banyan tree in a forest which was inhabited by many crows. Their leader was a crow named Meghavarṇa About three kilometres away from this tree was another banyan tree on which lived a number of owls. Their leader was an owl named Amardana. The crows and the owls were great enemies.

One day Amardana king of the owls with a large army of a lakh of his subjects attacked the crows at night. The crows could not see at night and so all the crows excepting a few of the top ones were killed. Meghavarṇa, the king, and his ministers, Uddīpaka, Sandīpaka, Anudīpaka and Cirañjīvī and a few other subjects were the only ones who escaped from there somehow. They sat in council at a place and thought of the ways and means to wreak vengeance on the owls. Uddīpaka said that when the strength of the enemy was great it was advisable to move away to another place, or to seek the aid of mighty people or to surrender to the enemy. It was the nature of dogs to leave one's place and go to another place, Sandīpaka said. Others also were of the same opinion. Cirañjīvī alone did not express any opinion and so the king asked him why he was sitting silent.

Cirañjīvī said:— "Oh King, we became enemies of the owls because of our bad tongue. I shall tell you the story of an ass which met with its death because of its bad words. Once a washerman had a donkey to carry his load of clothes to and fro. The poor washerman did not have sufficient earnings to feed the donkey well and so he let it loose to go and eat of its own accord to appease its hunger. The donkey started going to the fields of other people and eating their grains. People started hurting the donkey and so the washerman did a clever thing. He covered the donkey with the hide of a tiger and let it loose. People mistook it for a tiger and did not dare to go near and hurt it. Then one day a farmer keeping watch over the fields at night felt suspicious of the fake tiger and covering himself with a blanket and with a bow and arrow in his hand stealthily approached the donkey. The poor donkey mistook the farmer for a she-donkey and brayed and approached him with amorous movements of its body. The farmer knew from its voice that it was a donkey and so removed his disguise and stood before the donkey. The be-fooled donkey got angry and abused the farmer using very vulgar language. The farmer got angry and killed him with an arrow.

Cirañjīvī continued:—Once upon a time a few birds joined together and decided to elect their leader. The owl was the bird selected to lead them. An aged crow condemned it. The crow said; "Are you making this ugly bird which is blind all day your leader? If only you make a worthy creature your leader you will be respected. I shall tell you a story to illustrate my point." He then narrated the following story:

Once upon a time there came a period of twelve continuous years without any rain at all on the earth. Wells, ponds, lakes and rivers were all empty. A huge herd of elephants walking in the forests represented to its leader the grave situation and the leader sent messengers to all sides to find out watering places with water. One of the messengers came back and reported that he had found out a beautiful lake full of water and that on its banks lived a number of hares. The elephants immediately went to that place and started enjoying swimming and bathing in the waters of the lake. Many rabbits on the bank of the lake died when trodden upon by the elephants. The aggrieved rabbits sat in a council to consider the steps to be taken to stop this deadly nuisance of the elephants. One of the hares, Vijaya by name, promised to handle the matter by himself. He knew it would be unwise to go anywhere near the elephants. So Vijaya climbed on to the top of a hill near the lake and when he saw the elephants coming to the lake as usual hailed them from the top of the hillock. When the elephants turned their heads to the place from where the sound came they saw a hare speaking to them. The hare bawled out thus: "We are all servants of Candra, the moon-god. This lake has been given to us by him. Candra Bhagavān has deputed me to verify a report which has reached him that some elephants are making the water of the lake muddy. He will surely be cross with you if you again enter the lake. So it is better for you to go away from this place." The elephants were frightened and they all left the place. Cirañjīvī added that this happened to the elephants because of the lack of a wise and proper leader.

The aged Cirañjīvī continued: "It is unwise to place confidence in small people. I had an experience. Near my abode on a tree there lived a bird called Kapiñjala. We became friends. One day Kapiñjala did not come home as usual. Taking advantage of it a rabbit came to Kapiñjala's abode and started living there. I did not like it and I told the rabbit about it. But the rabbit did not mind it. After four or five days Kapiñjala returned home and on finding a rabbit in his nest got angry and asked him to leave the place. The rabbit refused to go and an argument ensued. The rabbit said that lakes, rivers and trees were for all and did not belong to any particular individual. "He who is in possession of it is its owner," the rabbit argued. So they decided to take the case for arbitration and for that purpose approached a cat named Dadhikarṇa doing penance on the banks of the river Yamunā. I followed them curious to know the decision of the ascetic cat. They did not see me. Both of them on approaching him started presenting their case before the cat. The cat pretended to be deaf and asked both of them to come nearer and talk into his ears. They moved nearer and the cat caught hold of them both and ate them. Those poor beings lost their lives by placing too much confidence in the aged cat. That is why I say that we should not select a small being like an owl as our leader.

On hearing the story of the crow the birds withdrew from their first decision of selecting an owl as their leader. The owl was offended and felt insulted and roared that his community would one day wreak vengeance on the crows. A wound made by an arrow would heal in due course and a tree would grow even if its branches are cut but any wound on the pride of an individual is never healed.

Cirañjīvī continued:—"This is how the crows and owls became enemies. We have to fight the owls. It is impossible to serve mean people. I shall tell you a story of what would happen if one believes in mean people:— Once a brahmin decided to perform a Yāga to increase the prosperity of the land.

He wanted a goat for the same and some wicked young people knew that he was going to buy one. They worked out a plan to deceive the poor brahmin. They sat hiding at different places on the way the brahmin was returning with the goat. As he came near the first of the wicked young men accosted the brahmin and asked him where he was taking the dog. The brahmin was surprised that the young man mistook his goat for dog and went his way. When he walked some distance more the second of the group came to him and put the same question. This time the brahmin was a bit perplexed that two people should have put the same question which he thought was absurd. When a third man put this question again he became worried and when this same question was repeated two more times the brahmin got mad and left the goat on the road and went his way. The wicked youngsters took the goat cooked it and ate it.

After narrating several such stories and maxims Cirañjīvī said he would lead the owls into a trap and come back. Cirañjīvī then went to the owls and their friends on the top of Ṛṣyaśṛṅga.

Cirañjīvī shaved his head and smearing the blood of the dead crows on his body went and sat alone on a branch of their former abode, the banyan tree. When night came the owls came and surrounded the tree. Cirañjīvī made some pitiable groans and the owls took him before their king. The king questioned Cirañjīvī and he said thus:—

"I am Cirañjīvī the minister of Meghavarṇa. Once I praised your greatness before my king and he shaved my head and dismissed me from his service."The king of the owls asked his ministers what should be done with Cirañjīvī. The minister of the king of owls,Baka, immediately jumped from his seat and said:

"Once a fox went to steal the cow of a brahmin. On his way he met a Brahmarākṣasa and they became friends. The Brahmarākṣasa was going to kill and eat the brahmin. Both exchanged their ideas and when they reached the gate of the house of the brahmin the fox said he would go first and eat the goat. But the Brahmarākṣasa said he would enter first and eat the brahmin. The quarrel developed into a noisy one and hearing the sound outside the brahmin came out. The fox accused the Brahmarākṣasa of having come to eat the brahmin while the Brahmarākṣasa accused the fox of having come to eat the goat. The brahmin was glad that he escaped from a danger and pardoning them sent them both with presents. This is the benefit of a split among the enemies.

The king of the owls gave refuge to Cirañjīvī and the latter expressing gratitude for the favour done took a vow that he would wreak vengeance on the crows after getting himself born as an owl in his next birth. At once the king said "Oh Cirañjīvī, it is not wise to change one's clan. Once a kite picked up a girl rat and flew up. On the way the young rat slipped from the beak of the kite and fell down into the open palm of a sage doing his sandhyāvandana. The sage by his yogic powers made it into a beautiful girl and presented her to his wife. The girl attained womanhood and the sage was anxious to get her married to a suitable person. He first approached the Sun and the Sun replied "You are in search of a powerful husband. Megha (cloud) is more powerful than myself since at any time it can cast a shadow over my brilliance. So go and ask Megha about this." The sage went to Megha and Megha said that wind which could carry him away at his will was more powerful than himself and so directed him to the wind. The sage approached the wind and it said that the mountain which could obstruct its path was more powerful and so the sage went to the mountain. The mountain said that the rat which could make holes in him was more powerful and so finally the sage went to the rat. The rat agreed to marry her but asked how it could keep her in the hole which was his abode. The sage said that it was easy and changed her into a rat. This is how a girl rat became a girl rat again. So do not change your clan, be a crow and live with me."

Cirañjīvī from that day onwards started living with the owls. During day time when the owls slept, the old crow would fly hither and thither and collect such easily combustible materials as hay, dry grass and cotton and stock them beneath the tree covered with dry leaves. Two months went by like this and one day when the owls were sleeping Cirañjīvī set fire to the stock of dry materials beneath the tree. The owls were all burnt to death. Meghavarṇa and his friends congratulated Cirañjīvī on his success. Cirañjīvī said: To obtain difficult positions great men pass through difficult situations. If one is prepared to suffer hardships any object can be achieved. Once a cobra began to starve for want of food. It went to the land of frogs and told the king of frogs thus: "Friend, I am in difficulties. I happened to bite a brahmin boy and that boy died. The boy's father cursed me. I asked for forgiveness and then he said:—"You must carry your enemies, the frogs, on your back from one pond to another pond and live on the food they give you." The king of the frogs believed him and allowed his subjects to be carried away to another pond from the one in which they were then staying. The cobra ate all the frogs on the way and at last the king also was eaten. Thus to destroy the enemies one will have to carry them on one's backs sometimes. The crows were happy their enemies the owls were destroyed and they lived more happily and peacefully than before.

4) Labdhanāśa.. (Losing what you got). Once a monkey named Balīmukha separated himself from his group and came to a fig tree on the banks of a river. When he jumped from branch to branch on the tree a great many ripe figs fell into the river. Seeing this a crocodile named Śiṁśumāra came to the foot of the tree and started eating the fruits. This went on for a few days and then the crocodile and the monkey became good friends. One day the crocodile sat chatting with the monkey and eating fruits and did not go home. The wife of the crocodile got worried on not seeing her husband back at home and sent a maid of hers to go and enquire what happened to her husband. The maid came and reported that the crocodile was spending his time with a she-monkey. The wife of the crocodile was very sad and angry to hear this and she sent word through her maid that she was seriously ill and if he wanted to see her alive he must return to her immediately. The crocodile returned home immediately and he called a doctor to examine her. The doctor who had been previously bribed by the crocodile's wife said that she should be given the heart of a monkey if she were to be saved from her present ailment. The crocodile was in a fix. He weighed in his mind the lives of his wife and friend and then decided to take the life of his friend to save the life of his wife. The crocodile went to its place near the fig tree as usual and the monkey made enquiries about his family. Then Śiṁśumāra said that his wife wanted to see the monkey-friend and had asked him to take him home that day. The monkey believed the story and started for the house of Śiṁśumāra on its back. When they reached half way in the river Śiṁśumāra told Balīmukha thus : "My wife is seriously ill. The doctor has prescribed the heart of a monkey as the only medicine for it." The monkey went pale-white with fright but instantly he hit upon a plan. Balīmukha said "Śiṁśumāra, what a fool you are. Why did you not tell me this at least at the time of our departure ? I kept my heart on the tree before starting, for I never knew you were in need of it. Let us go back and take it." The poor crocodile believed the story and went back with the monkey to the fig tree. As soon as they reached the shore the monkey jumped from the back of the crocodile and ran to the tree. The crocodile asked the monkey to bring his heart soon but the monkey laughed from the top of the fig tree and said thus:—"Dull-witted crocodile, I am not an ass like you. Have you not heard the story of the foolish ass?" The monkey then narrated the story of the ass thus :— "Once a lion calling his minister, the fox, to his side said that he wanted to eat the flesh of an ass as a remedy for the stomach trouble he was having by drinking too much of elephant's blood. The minister started in search of an ass and found one in the house of a washerman. The fox said that he was surprised that the ass was doing such heavy work daily with a washerman when a happy life in the palace of the lion was easily available. The ass was tempted and it went to the den of the lion. When it reached there it got frightened and taking the opportunity of the absence of the lion for his evening worship left the place in a hurry. The lion sent the fox again to fetch the ass. The fox came and laughed at the timidity of the ass. He said that the lion was of a loving nature and last time when it approached the ass to embrace him out of affection he ran away like a fool. The lion knew that the asses were as a class good musicians and the lion himself a great lover of music was anxious to hear the ass sing. The poor ass believed the story and went to the lion along with the fox When the ass reached the lion's den the lion was waiting for him and the ass in all simplicity bowed before the lion. The lion with one stroke killed the poor beast and leaving the carcass to the care of the fox went for his Sandhyāvandana. When the lion returned the fox had already eaten the heart of the ass. The King of the beasts not finding the heart in its place questioned the fox and the fox replied that the asses do not possess either a heart or neck :

When the monkey concluded his story by adding that never again would he be trapped like this, Śimśumāra, the crocodile, went its way. Labdhanāśa is the act of losing what came into your possession once.

5) Asamprekṣyakārita. This is a tale which explains the danger behind doing things adventurously without properly studying the pros and cons of an issue.

Once upon a time there lived in Gauḍadeśa a brahmin named Devaśarmā. His wife Yajñasenā became pregnant. The father started saying that the son to be born would be a very fortunate boy. One day the wife of the brahmin told him thus :— "It is not good to build castles in the air. Once a brahmacārī walked home carrying the fried grain he got as his dakṣiṇā in a pot on his head. He started thinking thus—"I will sell this fried grain and with the money will buy a lamb. The lamb will grow and give birth to two kids. I will then sell the goat and the kids and buy a cow. The cow will give birth to calves in a short time. I will buy some land to raise paddy. After selling the paddy I will renovate my old house and then I will marry. She will deliver a beautiful son. I will name the child Somaśarmā. At times leaving the child alone my wife will go to milk the cow and then I will hit her like this." So saying the brahmacārī hit with his stick the mud pot on his head containing the fried grain. The pot broke and the whole thing inside fell on the road.

Devaśarmā on hearing the story of Yajñasenā became pensive. After five or six days Yajñasenā delivered a son. Days went by and one morning Yajñasenā went for her bath in the river nearby entrusting the child to the care of her husband. Some moments later a messenger came from the palace asking him to go over there. The brahmin was in a fix. There was nobody around to whose care he could leave the child. He had a mongoose. The brahmin asked the mongoose to look after the child and went to the palace. Some time later a big cobra came creeping towards the child. The mongoose jumped at it and killed it. The mongoose was smeared with blood after that. The brahmin returned hurriedly from the palace only to see the blood-smeared mongoose waiting at the doorstep. Thinking that the mongoose must have killed his son the brahmin thrashed the poor mongoose to death. But on entering the room the brahmin found out his mistake, for there near the child was the dead body of a deadly cobra. The brahmin regretted his foolish act of doing a deed before knowing things well, when Yajñasenā came back after her bath and was greatly disturbed by the foolish deed of her husband. She said :—"Once there was in a place a very poor brahmin boy. He was an orphan with nobody to help him and he suffered from hunger daily. One night the boy had a dream. He was told that at midday next day three beggars would come to his place and if he slew them they would turn themselves into treasure jars and that the boy could become rich by using the wealth so received. Next day the brahmin boy was having his head shaved when as predicted in the dream three beggars entered his house. The brahmin boy ran away from the barber and taking a stick thrashed the three to death. All the three turned into treasure jars. The barber was astonished. The brahmin boy gave the barber a sovereign taken from the jar as his wages. The barber thought that beggars would turn themselves into treasure jars if they were thrashed to death. So he waited daily in his house for beggars to enter his house. One day after a long waiting three beggars entered his house and the barber with a hard stick which he had kept ready started thrashing the beggars. The beggars shrieked and shouted and ran away abusing the barber. Servants of the King came on hearing this and took the barber away and by the command of the King killed him nailing him on to a spike. Yajñasenā concluded by saying that even death would be the result if one does anything without properly understanding things.

PAÑCATĪRTHA. A holy place. There is a pond at this place. Once a nymph called Vargā with her four companions lived in this pond as crocodiles as a result of a curse. Arjuna came to that pond and rescued them from their curse. From that day onwards the pond came to be known as Pañcatīrtha or Saubhadrakatīrtha (For details see under Vargā and Saubhadraka tīrtha).

PAÑCAVAKTRĀ. A soldier who fought bravely against the asuras on the side of Subrahmaṇya.

PAÑCAVAṬĪ. The sacred place where Śrī Rāma built an āśrama and lived for some time with Sītā and Lakṣmaṇa during their exile in the forests. There is a story about Pañcavaṭī in the Kamba Rāmāyaṇa.

Pañcavaṭī is on the southern bank of the Godāvarī. Five Vaṭavṛkṣas (banyan trees) stand here in a circle and therefore, the place got the name Pañcavaṭī. There is a legend about these banyan trees. Once five Gandharva youths encircled the sage Agastya in the forest as a sport and prevented him from moving towards any direction. The enraged sage cursed them to stand in the same position as banyan trees. Thus by obstructing the movements of a divine man they were forced to remain without movement as trees. Before they took the form of trees they begged the sage for deliverance from the curse. Agastya said, "One day Śrī Rāma with his wife and brother will come and stay in an āśrama built in your midst. Their holy presence will give you salvation from my curse."

Śrī Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa when they came to that forest decided to build an āśrama in the centre of the circle formed by the five banyan trees. Lakṣmaṇa started to build the hermitage. At first he cut down one of the trees standing tall and straight and to the surprise and astonishment of all the fallen trunk of the tree disappeared and there in its place lay the dead body of a demon youth. It was the body of Śambhukumāra, son of Śūrpaṇakhā. He was doing penance there when Śrī Rāma came there with Sītā and becoming lustful at the sight of Sītā he stood there as a tree. It was he who was cut down by Lakṣmaṇa.

Śrī Rāma understood the thing that happened. He then explained to Sītā and Lakṣmaṇa many things about the frauds and deceits of the demons. After that they built their hermitage there and dwelt there for a long time. (Araṇya Kāṇḍa, Kamba Rāmāyaṇa).

PAÑCAVĪRA. A Sanātana Viśvadeva (one of the ten deities supposed to be the sons of Viśvā). (Chapter 91, Anuśāsana Parva).

PAÑCAYAJÑA. A sacred place of Bhārata. He who visits this place would get mokṣa. (Chapter 84, Vana Parva).

PAÑCĀYATANA. An idol of Śiva in Kāśī. This idol is called Oṁkāra also. Bhagavān Parameśvara who gives mokṣa to men dwells in this idol in the form of Pañcāyatana. The five souls of Śiva are the five āyatanas. They are Śānti (tranquillity), Atītaśānti (passed beyond tranquillity), Parāparavidyā (Greater and smaller knowledge), Pratiṣṭhā (celebrity) and Nivṛtti (Recession). Because these five āyatanas dwell in the idol of Śiva at Kāśī it got the name Pañcāyatana. (Chapter 34, Padma Purāṇa).

PĀṆḌA. One of the sons born to Kaṇva of his wife Āryavatī. He married Sarasvatīputrī and begot seventeen sons. They all became in the future originators of races. (Pratisargasaṁhitā, Bhaviṣya Purāṇa).

PĀṆḌARA. A serpent born of the race of Airāvata. This serpent was burnt to death at the sarpasatra of Janamejaya. (Śloka 11, Chapter 57, Ādi Parva).

PĀṆḌAVAS.

1) Origin. Śantanu, a celebrated King of Candravaṁśa (lunar dynasty) had two wives, Gaṅgā and Satyavatī. Bhīṣma was the son of Gaṅgā. After the birth of Bhīṣma Gaṅgā his mother went to heaven. After that Śantanu married Satyavatī, mother of Vyāsa. Satyavatī got two sons, Citrāṅgada and Vicitravīrya. Even while a bachelor, Citrāṅgada was killed by a Gandharva of the same name. So Vicitravīrya became King on Śantanu's death. Bhīṣma forcibly brought the three daughters of the King of Kāśī named Ambā, Ambikā and Ambālikā for Vicitravīrya to marry. But knowing that Ambā was in love with the King of Sālva, Bhīṣma let her off on the way. Ambikā and Ambālikā became the wives of Vicitravīrya. But for a long time they had no sons.

At that time Satyavatī, mother of Vicitravīrya, sent for Vyāsa her eldest son and asked him to beget sons of Ambikā and Ambālikā. Ambikā got Dhṛtarāṣṭra of Vyāsa and Ambālikā, Pāṇḍu, father of the Pāṇḍavas. Dhṛtarāṣṭra was born blind and he married Gāndhārī. Pāṇḍu was born pale-white in colour and he married Kuntī mother of the Pāṇḍavas.

Kuntī was the sister of Vasudeva, father of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. The real name of Kuntī was Pṛthā. Śūrasena, King of the Yādavas, was the father of Kuntī and Vasudeva. Because Kuntibhoja son of Śūrasena's sister, had no issues Kuntī was sent to the palace of Kuntibhoja and she grew up there. Pṛthā got the name of Kuntī because of that. Besides Kuntī, Pāṇḍu had another wife named Mādrī.

While she was living in the palace of Kuntibhoja the sage Durvāsas came and stayed in the palace as the king's guest. Kuntī was a little girl then and yet she served the sage with such care, patience and devotion that the sage was greatly pleased with her and gave her a divine mantra. He said : "If you call upon any god repeating this mantra he will manifest himself to you and bless you with a son equal to him in glory and valour. You can use this only five times." The impatient curiosity of youth made Kuntī give a test to the power of the mantra and though unmarried she invoked the Sun. The Sun immediately presented himself before her and by his grace she conceived and got a son whom she secretly set afloat in a river. A childless charioteer named Adhiratha happened to see the child and he took it home and brought it up. When he grew up he was sent to Hastināpura and the sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra took him in their service. He was Karṇa, the celebrated warrior of the Kauravas. Kuntī married Pāṇḍu after the birth of Karṇa.

Dhṛtarāṣṭra got of Gāndhārī a hundred sons and a daughter named Duśśalā. The children of Dhṛtarāṣṭra were known as Kauravas or Dhārtarāṣṭras. Pāṇḍu had a curse that he would die the moment he entered into sexual sport with his wives. (See under Kindama). So under instructions from her husband Kuntī invoked Dharma, Vāyu and Indra and got the sons Yudhiṣṭhira, Bhīmasena and Arjuna. She gave the remaining one chance to Mādrī and Mādrī invoked the two Aśvinīdevas, Nāsatya and Dasra and got two sons named Nakula and Sahadeva. All these five were accepted as the sons of Pāṇḍu and so they got the name of Pāṇḍavas. (Upto Chapter 123, Ādi Parva).

2) Life in Hastināpura and the lac-palace incident. After the birth of the Pāṇḍavas, Pāṇḍu with his wife and children spent a very long time in the forest of Śataśṛṅga. Kaśyapa, the royal priest of Vasudeva, performed the Upanayana (investiture with the sacred thread) and such other religious ceremonies ordained for boyhood. They were educated under the sage Śuka. One day in the Spring season Pāṇḍu's resolution broke down under the exhilarating influence of the season and he caught hold of Mādrī and embraced her despite earnest and repeated protests from Mādrī. At once the curse of the sage took effect and Pāṇḍu fell dead. It was the custom then that the wife should end her life in the funeral pyre of her husband and so Kuntī and Mādrī came forward to do so. But Mādrī said that one of them should live to take care of the children and so entrusting her children also to the care of Kuntī, Mādrī jumped into the funeral pyre and ended her life. The sages of the Śataśṛṅga forest took the children and Kuntī to Hastināpura and handing them over to the charge of Dhṛtarāṣṭra came back.

The Pāṇḍavas grew up in Hastināpura along with the Kauravas. But there was no real affection or intimacy between them. The naturally strong Bhīma found it a sport to tease and torment the Kauravas whenever he got an opportunity. Gradually as the teasings of Bhīma became unbearable a wicked thought of somehow putting an end to Bhīma's life found place in the minds of the Kauravas. They once poisoned Bhīma and binding him tight with ropes threw him into the ocean. But Bhīma went to the world of the Nāgas and came back unscathed with added siddhis (acquired power). This annoyed the Kauravas.

It was at this time that Droṇa a renowned preceptor in archery, came to Hastināpura. Bhīṣma enrolled the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas as disciples of Droṇa. Arjuna became an extraordinarily brilliant bow-man. This came off as another reason for the Kauravas to drift away from the Pāṇḍavas. After the end of their course of education a contest was held in which Arjuna ranked first. The time came for Gurudakṣiṇā (fees paid in bulk at the end of the studies to a preceptor). Droṇa asked his disciples to bring king Drupada bound hand and foot before him. The Kauravas failed in that mission and the Pāṇḍavas under the leadership of Arjuna fulfilled the demand of their Guru.

When the training and Gurudakṣiṇā were over, Dhṛtarāṣṭra crowned Yudhiṣṭhira as the heir-apparent and this increased the power and status of the Pāṇḍavas in Hastināpura. The jealousy of Duryodhana knew no bounds when he found the Pāṇḍavas in the pinnacle of power and popularity. He decided to kill them. He therefore, built a new palace in a place called Vāraṇāvata and with the permission of Dhṛtarāṣṭra made them change their residence to the new building. The new building was cunningly built of lac and other combustible material. The wise and intelligent Vidura knew this deceit beforehand and so he had warned the Pāṇḍavas of the danger through a messenger named Khanaka. The Pāṇḍavas had, therefore, made ready a secret passage by underground to escape from the building when an emergency arose. The passage was to lead them from the palace to the forest nearby. One night Purocana, a minister of Duryodhana, came stealthily and set fire to the palace. The Pāṇḍavas with their mother Kuntī escaped from the palace to the forest nearby. That night a huntress and her five sons were sleeping in a part of the building and they were burnt to death. They were all sleeping fully drunk and so could not escape from the building. Purocana also was burnt to death. Thus the Pāṇḍavas had to go away from Hastināpura for a brief period.

3) The Exile and its end. The Kauravas thought that Pāṇḍavas died in the fire and in that belief conducted the funeral rites of their brothers. The Pāṇḍavas after their escape from the fire walked a long distance through the forests and came to the banks of the river Gaṅgā. On their way a demon named Hiḍimba attacked them and Bhīma killed him but at the request of Dharmaputra married his sister Hiḍimbī. After that while they were continuing their journey crossing the river a Gandharva of name Citraratha attacked them. Citraratha was defeated in a battle and he later became friendly with the Pāṇḍavas. He gave them many valuable presents and also narrated to them the story of Tapatīsaṁvaraṇa. Then they went and stayed in the house of a brahmin in the village of Ekacakrā. It was at that time that the Svayaṁvara of Pāñcālī was held. The Pāṇḍavas went for the Svayaṁvara and married Pāñcālī. The news then spread that Pāṇḍavas were not dead but still alive. Dhṛtarāṣṭra then sent for them and the Pāṇḍavas returned to their palace in Hastināpura. Yudhiṣṭhira was crowned as King of half of the country and he built his palace in a place known as Khāṇḍavaprastha. The palace was designed and built by a demon named Maya with beautiful Crystals and costly diamonds. When the Pāṇḍavas were living there Nārada went to them once. He suggested that Pāñcālī should remain as wife to the Pāṇḍavas in turn, one year each to one of them. They accepted the suggestion and started living like that. Yudhiṣṭhira married Devikā, daughter of King Śibi, also. (Śloka 70, Chapter 95, Ādi Parva). Bhīmasena and Arjuna with the help of Śrī Kṛṣṇa slew Jarāsandha. After that they conducted a victory march over the country and established their overlordship by conducting successfully a Rājasūya yajña. Duryodhana and his brothers once visited Indraprastha, the palace of the Pāṇḍavas. They were fooled at the palace and this enraged them. Duryodhana invited Dharmaputra for a game of dice and the latter lost everything. Yet Dhṛtarāṣṭra gave them back everything and sent them to Indraprastha again. Before Dharmaputra reached the palace Duryodhana once again challenged him for a game of dice. Despite protests from all sides Dharmaputra went and played and lost again everything. To fulfil the conditions of the game Yudhiṣṭhira went to the forests with his brothers and wife to spend twelve years in exile and a year incognito. At that time Kuntī lived with Vidura.

It was during this period of exile that the Pāṇḍavas got the Akṣayapātra (never-empty pot) from the Sun. They dwelt first in Dvaitavana and then in Kāmyakavana. Then they went to the mountain of Gandhamādana and from there to Badarikāśrama. From there they came back again to Kāmyakavana and while they were living there Duryodhana and his men went to that forest to see the sufferings of the Pāṇḍavas and gloat on their sad plight. But Citrasena, a Gandharva, captured Duryodhana and Arjuna got him released. Duryodhana sent Durvāsas to tease Dharmaputra but the sage was sent back after being received duly and well-attended to earn his blessings. During their stay in that forest Jayadratha kidnapped Pāñcālī but the Pāṇḍavas rescued her immediately. They went from there again to Dvaitavana. Dharmadeva tested them once while they were there. The twelve years of exile came to an end and as per directions from Dharmadeva they spent their incognito period of one year in the court of the King of Virāṭa. After the end of their incognito life the King of Virāṭa gave in marriage his daughter Uttarā to Abhimanyu son of Arjuna.

Even after the return of the Pāṇḍavas from the forests after successfully fulfilling the conditions of the game, Duryodhana showed obstinate reluctance to part with even five pin-points of land in favour of the Pāṇḍavas. A peace mission of Śrī Kṛṣṇa from the Pāṇḍavas to avoid a war and settle matters amicably to Dhṛtarāṣṭra failed and the stage was set for a grea battle between the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas.

4) Ascension to Heaven. A great and grim battle was fought at Kurukṣetra between the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas lasting for eighteen days. Śrī Kṛṣṇa neither fought nor took arms even once against the Kauravas but acted as the charioteer of Arjuna. When the war came to an end the Kauravas were completely annihilated.

Yudhiṣṭhira became King. He performed an Aśvamedha Yāga. After a few years of reign the Pāṇḍavas crowned Parīkṣit, son of Abhimanyu, as the King and started for their Mahāprasthāna (departing this life). They walked in a line in the order of their age, Dharmaputra leading and Pāñcālī following last. At first Pāñcālī fell dead, but nobody turned back. Then Sahadeva fell and nobody worried. This continued thus till Dharmaputra was left alone. A dog which followed them from their very start also remained alive with Dharmaputra. The dog was none other than Dharmadeva, father of Dharmaputra. When Dharmaputra reached the top of the Himālayas Indra was there ready with the divine car to take him to heaven. But Dharmaputra said that he would not come to heaven leaving his brothers and wife elsewhere. Then Indra informed him that they were already in heaven and so Dharmaputra went to heaven with Indra. (Only a general and succinct history of the Pāṇḍavas is given under this head. For details see under the heads of each of the Pāṇḍavas as well as Pāñcālī, Kuntī, Bhīṣma and Vyāsa).

PĀṆḌAVAPRAVEŚAPARVA. A sub-divisional Parva of Virāṭa Parva. This includes chapters two to eighteen of Virāṭa Parva.

PAṆḌITAKA. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. He was killed in the great battle by Bhīmasena. (Chapter 88, Bhīṣma Parva).

PĀṆḌU I. Father of the Pāṇḍavas.

1) Genealogy. Refer to the genealogy of Arjuna.

2) Birth. Śantanu, a King of Candravaṁśa, had two wives, Gaṅgā and Satyavatī. Even while Satyavatī was a maiden she got of the sage Parāśara a son named Vyāsa. But because of the blessing of the sage Satyavatī did not lose her maidenhood. She got of Śantanu two sons, Citrāṅgada and Vicitravīrya. Citrāṅgada died young. Vicitravīrya married the two daughters, Ambikā and Ambālikā, of the King of Kāśī. Vicitravīrya died before any progeny was born to him. To save the dynasty from extinction Satyavatī asked her first son Vyāsa to beget children of Ambikā and Ambālikā. Accordingly Dhṛtarāṣṭra was born to Ambikā of Vyāsa and Pāṇḍu to Ambālikā. (Chapters 63 and 105, Ādi Parva)

3) How Pāṇḍu got his name. Vyāsa came to Hastināpura by the command of his mother to beget sons of Ambikā and Ambālikā. Vyāsa was an ugly sage with matted hair and he was dressed in garments of deerskin. Satyavatī that night called Ambikā to her side and in secret commanded her to go and lie with Vyāsa. She was reluctant to have a sexual union with that old and ugly sage. Yet obeying the orders of her mother-in-law she did so shutting her eyes during the whole period. The result was she got a child born blind who became known later as Dhṛtarāṣṭra. The next day Satyavatī ordered Ambālikā to go and lie with Vyāsa. Ambālikā on entering the bed chamber went pale on seeing the ugly Vyāsa and the result was she got a child that was pale white in colour. That child became known as Pāṇḍu. The third day Satyavatī asked her servant-maid to go and lie with Vyāsa. She did it with pleasure and she remained happy and cheerful during the whole period. The result was she got a beautiful child who became an intelligent scholar of great wisdom. He was known later as Vidura. (Chapters 1, 63, and 105, Ādi Parva).

4) Boyhood and kingship. Bhīṣma took care of Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Pāṇḍu and Vidura as his own sons. Bhīṣma taught them all the Vedas including Dhanurveda, and all warfare like mace-fight. They were trained in the use of elephants also. Bhīṣma taught them law and acquainted them with all the Itihāsas and Purāṇas. Pāṇḍu became second to none in archery. The people were all happy. When the boyhood was over Pāṇḍu was crowned as Yuvarāja. Pāṇḍu was the most eligible of the three to become King, for Dhṛtarāṣṭra was a born blind man and Vidura was the son of a servant-maid. (Chapter 109, Ādi Parva).

5) Married life. Obeying the behest of Bhīṣma, Pāṇḍu married Pṛthā, daughter of the Yādava King Śūrasena. She was the sister of Vasudeva, father of Kṛṣṇa. She got the name Kuntī because she grew up in the palace of King Kuntibhoja. While Kuntī was staying in the palace of Kuntibhoja Durvāsas came and stayed in the the palace as a guest of the King. Kuntī then served the sage with such devotion and patience that Durvāsas at the time of his departure gave Kuntī a divine mantra for begetting children. The mantra was to be used only five times. If she called upon any god repeating that mantra, that god would manifest himself before her and bless her with a son equal to him in glory. Out of impatient curiosity of youth Kuntī tried it before getting married. One morning, seeing the beautiful and brilliant sun in the sky she invoked him by the mantra and instantly the Sun stood in all bewitching brilliance before her and she got of him a son who was known as Karṇa later. Unmarried as she was, Kuntī sent the child afloat in the river nearby.
Even after a child-birth Kuntī remained a virgin by the blessing of the Sun and so got married as a virgin. Many Kings were present for the Svayaṁvara of Kuntī and she put the wedding garland round the neck of Pāṇḍu.
Once Bhīṣma went to the country of Madra. The King of Madra received Bhīṣma with respect and Bhīṣma took Mādrī daughter of Madra as a bride for Pāṇḍu. He brought her to Hastināpura and married her to Pāṇḍu. Pāṇḍu lived with his two wives happily and ruled the country well. Once Pāṇḍu attacked Daśārṇa with a huge army and defeated him. Later he defeated Dīrgha, King of Magadha. Then he conducted a victory march capturing many kingdoms like Kāśī, Mithilā, Suhma and Puṇḍra. Thus many of the Kings of Uttara Bhārata became feudatory princes of Pāṇḍu. In consultation with his brother Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Pāṇḍu gave all the wealth he got by his might to Satyavatī and Bhīṣma. He gave enough riches to Vidura also. Then Pāṇḍu went and stayed with his wives in a forest to the south of the Himālayas. (Chapters 110 to 114, Ādi Parva).

6) Curse of a sage. While Pāṇḍu was once walking with his wives in the forest he saw a couple of deer playfully running about and the hunting nature in him made him send an arrow against one of them. The deer was none other than the sage Kindama who in the guise of a deer was having sport with his mate. While falling dead Kindama cursed Pāṇḍu thus "Oh wretched King, you will fall dead the moment you touch your wife in amorous sport." From that day onwards Pāṇḍu could not touch his wives. (For details see under Kindama).

7) Sannyāsa and death. With the death of the innocent sage Kindama there occurred a great change in the life of Pāṇḍu. At first he thought of committing suicide.

But he changed that decision and started for the Himālayas to perform penance there. Kuntī and Mādrī accompanied him. They gave away all their jewels and ornaments as gifts to brahmins. People followed them to the border of the forests and returned to the country weeping. Pāṇḍu and his wives visited such holy places as Nāgaśatādri, Caitraratha, Kālakūṭa, Himālayas, Gandhamādana and the lake Indradyumna. Then they went to Śataśṛṅga and started performing penance. Once Pāṇḍu and wives along with a few sages went to Brahmaloka to attend a Yāga there. The long travel toiled them much and on the way Pāṇḍu wept thinking of his pitiable state of having no issue. Then Pāṇḍu told them of his helplessness in the matter because of the curse of the sage Kindama hanging over him. Then Kuntī confided in him the secret of the divine mantras in her possession. Pāṇḍu was extremely pleased and with his permission Kuntī got three sons, Yudhiṣṭhira, Bhīmasena and Arjuna. She gave one chance to Mādrī and she got two sons out of it named Nakula and Sahadeva.

Pāṇḍu was living happily with his children in Śataśṛṅga when spring time arrived in the forest with all its blossoming brilliance and fragrance conducive to amorous thoughts in all living beings. Pāṇḍu one day walked alone with Mādrī enjoying the sight of the flowering plants and trees. Bees and Beetles hummed around the flowers and on the branches sat the Cuckoos singing. There was a seductive fragrance all around and Pāṇḍu was excited beyond controllable limits. Pāṇḍu's resolution broke down under the exhilarating influence of the season and despite repeated protests from Mādrī, Pāṇḍu caught hold of her and embraced her. The curse of the sage took effect instantaneously and Pāṇḍu fell down dead.

The inhabitants of Śataśṛṅga assembled there weeping. In the presence of a huge crowd including the relatives who had come down from Hastināpura the dead body of Pāṇḍu was cremated according to religious rites. Both the wives came forward to end their lives in the funeral pyre of Pāṇḍu. But Kuntī was asked to remain to take care of the children and Mādrī leaving her children to the care of Kuntī jumped into the funeral pyre and ended her life. It was the sage Kaśyapa who performed the funeral rites of Pāṇḍu. (Chapters 115 to 126, Ādi Parva).

8) After the demise. Pāṇḍu's soul is shining in the court of Yama. (Śloka 25, Chapter 7, Sabhā Parva). Pāṇḍu sent a message to Yudhiṣṭhira from Devaloka that Yudhiṣṭhira should conduct a Rājasūya Yajña. The message was carried by Nārada. (Śloka 24, Chapter 12, Sabhā Parva). He lives in Indraloka with Mādrī and Kuntī. (Śloka 15, Chapter 5, Svargārohaṇa Parva).

9) Synonyms of Pāṇḍu. Pāṇḍu is known under the following names. Bhārata, Bharatarṣabha, Bhāratasattama, Kaurava, Kauravanandana, Kauravarṣabha, Kauravya, Kauravyadāyāda, Kausalyānandavardhana, Kurūdvaha, Kurukulodvaha, Kurunandana, Kurupati, Kurupravīra, Nāgapurādhipa and Nāgapurasiṁha.

PĀṆḌU II. The second son of Janamejaya. (Chapter 94, Ādi Parva).

PĀṆḌURA. A soldier of Subrahmaṇya. (Śloka 73, Chapter 45, Śalya Parva).

PĀṆḌURĀṢṬRA. A place of habitation in ancient Bhārata. (Śloka 44, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

PĀṆḌYA. I. A King of Vidarbha who was a great devotee of Śiva. One day while he was performing Śivapūjā at dusk he heard a loud noise outside the city and before completing the worship he went out and faced the enemies who were attempting to enter the city and killed its leader. He returned after the fight and without completing the worship took his meals. It was a sin to do so and the King was therefore born in his next birth as Satyaratha, a King, and was killed by his enemies. (Śatarudrasaṁhitā, Śiva Purāṇa).

PĀṆḌYA. II. (A Tamilian dynasty of Kings.) A place of Purāṇic fame in Dakṣiṇa Bhārata. The three states Cera, Cola and Pāṇḍya were from early times renowned states of Dakṣiṇa Bhārata. Historically and Purāṇically Pāṇḍya was a state of eminence.

(A.) Historically. The Pāṇḍya dynasty of Kings is very ancient, The exact period of its beginning is still unknown. Megasthanes who lived in the fourth century B.C. has made mention of the Pāṇḍya dynasty in his diary. Julian, an emperor of Italy, who lived in 361 A.D. is stated to have received vis tors from Pāṇḍyadeśa. The Pāṇḍya dynasty was revived and elevated under the leadership of Katuṅka in the 7th century A.D. From that time till the 16th century Madura was the capital of Pāṇḍyadeśa. The Uccaṅgī dynasty which was ruling the places to the south of Tuṅgabhadrā during the period from 9th century to 13th century A.D. is believed to be a part of the Pāṇḍyavaṁśa which had gone from Madura. A continuous history of the Pāṇḍya line of Kings is not available. Many Kings bear names like Jātavarmā or Māravarmā. The Pāṇḍya Kings were devotees of Śiva even from the period of the Jainas. At times they have ruled over the combined kingdoms of Cera and Cola. During the period from the 12th to the 14th century A.D. Pāṇḍya was ruled by five of the most valiant rulers and at that time the Pāṇḍyadeśa included all the places in south India up to Nellore. But the power of the Pāṇḍyas waned when the power of the Sultans who ruled Delhi spread to the south. After 1370 A.D only on rare occasions has the power of the Pāṇḍyas spread to the north of river Kāverī. In 1312 A.D. Kerala got herself free from the hold of the Tamilian Kings. (Pāṇḍyarājya).

(B) Purāṇic fame. The statements found in Mahābhārata about Pāṇḍyadeśa are given below :—

(i) Śrī Kṛṣṇa once slew a Pāṇḍya King who was the father of Malayadhvaja. Malayadhvaja who was a very valiant archer started for Dvārakā to kill Kṛṣṇa to avenge the death of his father. Friends dissuaded him from his attempt and so he dropped the idea. During the time of Mahābhārata Malayadhvaja was the King of Pāṇḍya. (Chapter 23, Droṇa Parva).

(ii) Malayadhvaja, King o' Pāṇḍya, was a frequent visitor to the court of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Śloka 24, Chapter 4, Sabhā Parva).

(iii) The King of Pāṇḍya presented gifts at the Rājasūya of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Śloka 35, Chapter 52, Sabhā Parva).

(iv) In the Kurukṣetra battle the Pāṇḍya King fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas with a large army. (Śloka 9, Chapter 19, Udyoga Parva).

(v) On the chariot of the Pāṇḍya King flags bearing the insignia of ocean flew. The Pāṇḍya King wounded Droṇa. (Śloka 72, Chapter 23, Droṇa Parva).

(vi) The King of Pāṇḍya fought against Vṛṣasena and Aśvatthāmā. (Śloka 46, Chapter 20, Karṇa Parva).

PAṆI (S). A tribe which opposed the Aryans during the time of Ṛgveda. Yāska's Nirukta states that their profession was trade and commerce.

PĀṆIKHĀTA A holy place on the border of Kurukṣetra. If one bathes in the sacred pond there and performs worship of the Manes one will get the benefit of conducting the three yajñas, Agniṣṭoma, Atirātra and Rājasūya. (Śloka 89, Chapter 13, Vana Parva).

PĀṆIKŪRCCA. A soldier of Subrahmaṇya. (Śloka 76, Chapter 45, Śalya Parva).

PĀṆIMĀN. A serpent. This serpent is a member of the court of Varuṇa. (Śloka 10, Chapter 9, Sabhā Parva).

PĀṆINI. The author of the Sanskrit Grammar, Pāṇinīya.

1) General information. There is nowhere else in this world a grammar so scientific and so complete as Pāṇinīya. The book contains about four thousand aphorisms. Pāṇini was an inspired sage and he got his knowledge from Śiva. It has not been possible to gather much information about the life of such a celebrated grammarian. Patañjali believes that he was the son of Dākṣi. He addresses Pāṇini as Acārya, Bhagavān and Maharṣi. The Chinese traveller Huen Tsang says that the grammar of all the languages in this world has its origin from Pāṇinīya. Rāmabhadradīkṣita says that Pāṇini was the son of the sage Pāṇi.

2) Life period. There is difference of opinion regarding the period during which Pāṇini lived. Dr. Goldstucker and Bhandarkar believe that Pāṇini lived before 500 B.C. while Vincent Smith and Belvelkar fix the period in 700 B.C. Patañjali, the author of the celebrated 'Mahābhāṣya' (commentary on Pāṇinīya) lived in 200 B.C. Patañjali has contradicted many of the unjust criticisms made by Kātyāyana about Pāṇinīya. So Pāṇini must have lived before Kātyāyana. Pāṇini has made no reference to Buddha and so he must have lived before Buddha. Pāṇini has shown great grasp over the laws of Smṛti and so he must have lived after Manu. Considering all these facts together it will be proper to fix the period of the end of the sixth century or the beginning of the seventh century B.C.

3) Place of birth. Evidences are lacking to correctly fix the birth-place of Pāṇini. Many pandits believe that Pāṇini was born in the village of Śālātura in the city of Attock in the state of Gāndhāra. But Pāṇini has spent the major portion of his life in Pāṭalīputra. So some pandits are of opinion that only the ancestors of Pāṇini belonged to the village of Śālātura and Pāṇini was born and brought up in Pāṭalīputra. Jaimini and Bhartṛhari have stated that Pāṇini was a Śiṣṭa. Śiṣṭas were brahmins well-versed in the Śāstras and devoid of earthly pleasures who inhabited the area surrounded by the Himālayas in the north, Kālakavana (Bengal) in the east, Vindhya mountains in the south and the Ādarśa (Aravalli mountains) in the west.

4) A legend. There was a preceptor named Varṣa in Pāṭalīputra and Pāṇini had his education under him. Varṣa gradually acquired a large number of disciples and Pāṇini was the most dull-witted among them. But he was greatly devoted to his Guru and this pleased the wife of the Guru and she took great interest in Pāṇini. One day she called Pāṇini to her side and advised him to go to the Himālayas and do penance to propitiate Śiva to get knowledge from him. Pāṇini obeying instructions went and performed penance. Śiva was pleased and he granted him knowledge about a new grammar. By the time Pāṇini came back from the Himālayas with his grammar another disciple of Varṣa, Vararuci by name, had come down with a grammar from Indra. Pāṇini challenged Vararuci for a polemical contest. It took eight days and on the eighth day Vararuci defeated Pāṇini. At once there was a great humming sound from the sky and the grammar book of Vararuci was destroyed. After that Pāṇini defeated all his co-disciples in polemics and emerged as the greatest grammarian of the world. (Kathāpīṭhalambaka, Kathāsaritsāgara, Taraṅga 4).

5) The birth of Pāṇinīya. When Pāṇini was doing penance to propitiate Śiva the latter appeared before him and started dancing. He sounded his musical instrument ḍhakkā (a large double drum) fourteen times. Each of it produced a different sound as follows (1) Aiuṇ (2) Ṛḷk (3) Eoṅ (4) Aiauc (5) Hayavaraṭ (6) laṇ (7) ñamaṅaṇanam (8) Jhabhañ (9) Ghaḍhadhaṣ (10) Jabagaḍadaś (11) Khaphachaṭhathacaṭatav (12) Kapay (13) Śaṣasar (14) Hal. Pāṇini accepted these fourteen sounds as fourteen sūtras (aphorisms). They are called Pratyāhārasūtras. (The comprehension of several letters or affixes into one syllable effected by combining the first letter of a Sūtra with its final indicatory letter.) These Sūtras are now known as Māheśvarasūtras.

Pāṇini's grammar contains eight chapters and each chapter has got four pādas and each pāda contains many sūtras. He has taken examples from worldly and spiritual texts in literature. He has dealt with the origin of sounds, connection between two words and all such etymological details. Pāṇini's grammar is not a mere grammar book. It is a science of language in itself.

PĀṆĪTAKA. One of the two pārṣadas presented to Subrahmaṇya by a deva named Pūṣā. The name of the other pārṣada was Kālika. (Śloka 43, Chapter 45, Śalya Parva) PAÑKADIGDHĀÑGA. A deva who fought bravely against the asuras along with Subrahmaṇya. (Śloka 68, Chapter 45, Śalya Parva).

PAÑKAJIT. Son of Garuḍa. (Śloka 10, Chapter 101, Udyoga Parva).

PĀPAŚODHANA. A sacred place of Bhārata. Indradatta, King of Cedi, once constructed a temple near this place. (Taraṅga 8, Kathāsaritsāgara).

PARA I. An ancient King of Bhārata. (Śloka 234, Chapter 1, Ādi Parva).

PARA II. A Brahmavādi son of Viśvāmītra. (Śloka 55, Chapter 4, Anuśāsana Parva).

PĀRĀ. Another name for Kauśikī river. (Sloka 32, Chapter 71, Ādi Parva).

PARABRAHMAN. The Supreme Spirit.

1) General information. Brahman is the root cause of this universe. From Brahman originated Ākāśa (sky). From sky came air, from air came Agni and from Agni came water and from water was born this earth. (Chapter 377, Agni Purāṇa).

2) General characteristics. Brahman is such that he who says he knows it does not know it and he who says he does not know it, knows it. It is beyond the experiences of time and space. The chief attributes of Brahman are Sat, Cit and Ānanda. Sat means existence, the really existent truth. The one and undivided existence. There are pandits who say that it was undivided, Nāstitva (nonexistence) that was at the beginning of the Universe. Since nothing can be born from 'nothing' the world should have started from astitva (existence). There is a saying in Ṛgveda explaining the position thus :—"There was neither Astitva nor Nāstitva (existence or non-existence) at the beginning." It is a matter to ponder how strongly conscious was the Ṛṣi who made the above statement about the Parabrahman's Nirguṇatva (devoid of attributes) and how clearly he tries to make it understandable to those who have not experienced the idea.

Cit means knowledge, splendour, consciousness. Ānanda means bliss. Paul Deussen writes that the ancient Upaniṣads do not include in the definition of Brahman the term 'ānanda'.

3) The two forms of Brahman. Brahman has two forms— Parabrahman and Aparabrahman. Parabrahman is Amūrta (formless, incorporeal) and Aparabrahman is Mūrta (embodied, corporeal). The Amūrta Brahman is known by such names as Parabrahman, Paramātmā and Nirguṇabrahman. The corporeal or material Brahman is Aparabrahman and thus this whole world is Aparabrahman.

4) The Upaniṣads about Brahman.

Aśabdamasparśamarūpamavyayaṁ
Tathāsrasaṁ nityamagandhavacca yat /
Anādyanantaṁ mahataḥ paraṁ dhruvaṁ
Vicārya tanmṛtyumukhāt pramucyate //
(Kaṭhopaniṣad)

(With no sound, touch, form, taste or smell, with neither beginning nor end Brahman is imperishable).

Na tatra cakṣurgacchati na vāk gacchati no mano
Na vidmo na vijānīmo yathaitadanuśiṣyate /
Anyadeva tadviditādatho aviditādadhi
Iti śuśruma pūrveṣāṁ ye nastadvyācacakṣire.
(Muṇḍakopaniṣad)

(No eye goes there, no word goes there, no mind, no intelligence—we do not see it, we cannot describe it—you cannot imagine it nor can you understand it—It is distinct from the known and above the unknown. We have heard it spoken thus).

Yasyāmataṁ tasya mataṁ mataṁ yasya na veda saḥ /
Avijñātaṁ vijānatāṁ vijñātam avijānatām. //
(Kenopaniṣad)

(He understands It who comprehends It not; and he understands It not who feels he has understood. It is the unknown to those who have acquired real knowledge while it is the known to those who are ignorant of true knowledge).

Yat cakṣuṣā na paśyati
Yena cakṣūṁṣi paśyati /
Tadeva Brahma tvaṁ viddhi
Nedaṁ yadidamupāsate. //
(Kenopaniṣad).

(That which is not seen by the eye but that by which the eyes are able to see—That alone is Brahman and not that which people do worship here, do know that).

Yato vāco nivartante
Aprāpya manasā saha. (Taittirīya Upaniṣad).
Avijñātaṁ Vijānatāṁ vijñātam avijānatām.
(Kenopaniṣad)

(It is unknown to people who think they know but known to those who did not profess to know it).

Naiva vācā na manasā prāptuṁ śakyo na cakṣuṣā /
Astīti bruvatoṣnyatra kathaṁ tadupalakṣyate. //
(Kaṭhopaniṣad)

(It is not possible to reach it by speech, mind or the eyes. How is it to be identified; or described?)—

Digdeśaguṇādiphalabhedaśūnyaṁ hi paramārtha—
Sat tad advayaṁ Brahma mandabuddhīnām asadiva pratibhāti.
(Śaṅkarācārya).

The sublime Truth (Brahman) is beyond time, place and attributes. Brahman is one (not two) and it is Sat (existent) but for the dull-witted, ignorant people it is Asat (non-existent).

Satyamevopāsate, tadetat tryakṣaraṁ satyamiti;

PĀRADA. An ancient place of Bhārata. Those who resided there were called Pāradas. The descendants of these people live in north Baluchistan. Pāradas gave Dharmaputra many valuable presents. (Chapter 51, Sabhā Parva). They followed Bhīṣma. (Chapter 87, Bhīṣma Parva).

PARAHAN. A king of ancient Bhārata (Śloka 238, Chapter 1, Ādi Parva, Mahābhārata).

PARAMAKĀMBOJA A place of habitation situated on the northwestern side of Bhārata. Arjuna conquered this land. (Śloka 25, Chapter 27, Sabhā Parva).

PARAMAKRODHĪ. One of the Viśvadevas who are worthy of accepting a share of the obsequial oblations. The others are : Balandhṛti, Vipāpmā, Puṇyakṛt, Pāvana, Pārṣṇikṣema, Samūha, Divyasānu, Vivasvān, Vīryavān, Hrīmān, Kīrtimān, Kṛta, Jitātmā, Munivīrya, Dīptaromā, Anukarman, Pratīta, Pradātā, Aṁśumān, Śailābha, Dhīrosṇi, Bhūpati, Sraja, Vajrīvari, Vidyudvarcas, Somavarcas, Sūryaśrī, Somapā, Sūryasāmitra, Dattātmā, Puṇḍarīyaka, Uṣṇīnābha, Nākoda, Viśvāyus, Dīpti, Camūhara, Sureśa, Vyomāri, Śaṅkara, Bhava, Īśa, Kartā, Kṛti, Dakṣa, Bhuvana, Divyakarmakṛt, Gaṇita, Pañcavīrya, Āditya, Raśmimān, Saptakṛt, Somavarcas, Viśvakṛt, Kavi, Anugoptā, Sugoptā, Naptā and Īśvara. (Chapter 91, Anuśāsana Parva).

PARAMĀṆU. See under Trasareṇu.

PARAMĀTMĀ. The Supreme Spirit. The vitality behind Jīvātmā (soul). (See under Jīvātmā and Brahman).

PARAMEṢṬHĪ I. A king of Candravaṁśa (Lunar race). He was the son of Indradyumna and the father of Pratīhāra. (Chapter 1, Aṁśa 1, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

PARAMEṢṬHĪ II. A Vaidikasūktadraṣṭā. He was a disciple of Brahmā. (Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad). According to Jaimini Brāhmaṇa Parameṣṭhī was the disciple of Prajāpati.

PARAMEṢṬHĪ III. A king of Pāñcāladeśa. He was born to Ajamīḍha of Nīlī. Parameṣṭhī and the sons of Duṣyanta, his brother, are known as Pāñcālas. (Ādi Parva, Mahābhārata).

PARĀNTA. A place of habitation of ancient Bhārata. (Śloka 47, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

PARAPURAÑJAYA. A prince of the Hehaya race. He once sent an arrow against a sage mistaking him to be a wild animal. (See under Ariṣṭanemi).

PARĀŚARA I.

1) Genealogy. Descending in order from Viṣṇu—Brahmā—Vasiṣṭha—Śakti—Parāśara.

2) Birth. Śakti, son of Vasiṣṭha begot of his wife Adṛṣyantī the son named Parāśara. Even at the time of his birth he was a scholar. (For details regarding birth see under Adṛṣyantī).

3) Rākṣasayāga. Even before the birth of Parāśara, Kalmāṣapāda in his demoniacal form ate his father, Śakti. Therefore Parāśara nurtured an obstinate hatred against the Rākṣasas. So he performed a Yāga to kill all the rākṣasas. Thousands of rākṣasas were burnt to death at this yāga and Vasiṣṭha, grandfather of Parāśara felt sorry for the innocent rākṣasas. He approached Parāśara and said "Son, do not give way to such anger. Abandon this wrath. What harm have these poor rākṣasas done? Death was in the destiny of your father. Every one has to suffer the result of his own deeds. Anger destroys the fame and austerity which one has attained by years of toil. Therefore abandon your anger and wind up your Yāga."

Parāśara accepted the abvice of his grandfather. Vasiṣṭha was pleased with his grandson and at that time Pulastyamaharṣi son of Brahmā also came there. Vasiṣṭha gave arghya (water and flowers) and received him. Then Vasiṣṭha and Pulastya jointly blessed him and said he would be the author of Purāṇasaṁhitā. Thus Parāśara became the best of the Guruparamparā (traditional line of preceptors). (Chapter 1, Aṁśa 1, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

4) Birth of Vyāsa. Parāśara begot a son of a fisher-woman named Satyavatī and the boy became later the celebrated Vyāsa.

5) Other details.

(i) He got the name Parāśara because even from the womb of his mother he consoled Vasiṣṭha when his son Śakti, father of Parāśara was eaten by the demoniac form of Kalmāṣapāda.

(ii) See under Guruparamparā the status of Parāśara in that traditional line of Gurus.

(iii) Among the Sūktas, Sūkta 65, Anuvāka 12, Maṇḍala 1 of Ṛgveda was sung by Parāśara.

(iv) Parāśara was one among the several sages who visited Bhīṣma lying on his bed of arrows. (Chapter 47, Śānti Parva).

(v) Once Parāśara visited king Janaka and talked with him on Ādhyātmika topics (spiritual matters). (Chapter 290, Śānti Parva).

(vi) Chapter 150 of Anuśāsana Parva mentions Parāśara as describing the power of Sāvitrīmantra to an audience.

PARĀŚARA II. A serpent born of the family of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. This was burnt to death at the sarpasatra of Janamejaya. (Śloka 19, Chapter 57, Ādi Parva).

PĀRĀŚARYA I. Vyāsa, son of sage Parāśara. (See under Vyāsa).

PĀRĀŚARYA II. This sage is different from Vyāsa. This Pārāśarya was a member of the court of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Śloka 13, Chapter 7, Sabhā Parva). He was a member of the court of Indra also. Śrī Kṛṣṇa once met him while he was going to Hastināpura from Dvārakā. (Śloka 64, Chapter 83, Udyoga Parva).

PĀRAŚAVA. A child born to a brahmin of a śūdra woman. Vidura was a son born to Vyāsa of a śūdra woman and was therefore called Pāraśava. (Śloka 25, Chapter 101, Ādi Parva).

PĀRASIKA. A place of human habitation in ancient Bhārata. (Śloka 25, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

PARAŚURĀMA. An incarnation of Mahāviṣṇu, as man.

1) Genealogy. Descending in order from Māhāviṣṇu—Brahmā - Bhṛgu-Cyavana - Ūrva - Ṛcīka - Jamadagni-Paraśurāma.

2) Cause for incarnation. Once god Agni went to Kārtavīryārjuna and begged for food. The king allowed him to take from his vast territory as much food as he wanted from anywhere he liked. Agni started burning forests and mountains and consuming them. Deep inside one of the forests a sage named Āpava was performing penance and the fire burnt the āśrama of Āpava also. Enraged at this the sage cursed thus : "Kārtavīryārjuna is at the root of this havoc. The arrogance of Kṣatriyas has increased beyond limits. Mahāviṣṇu would therefore be born on earth as Paraśurāma to destroy this arrogance of the Kṣatriyas." Accordingly Māhāviṣṇu was born as Paraśurāma in the Bhārgava race. (Chapter 40, Harivaṁśa).

Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa gives another version: Viṣṇu promised Bhūmidevī (mother earth) that he would be born on earth as Paraśurāma when Bhūmidevī went to him in the form of a cow and complained to him about the atrocities of the wicked Kṣatriya kings.

3) Birth. Paraśurāma was born as the son of sage Jamadagni of his wife Reṇukā. Their āśrama was on the shores of the Narmadā river. Reṇukā, mother of Paraśurāma, was the daughter of King Prasenajit. She had four sons even before the birth of Paraśurāma (Chapter 58, Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa).

4) Boyhood and education. Paraśurāma spent his boyhood with his parents in the āśrama. An important event in his life then was his slaying his mother at the behest of his father. (See under Jamadagni, Para 6). Though Paraśurāma was a brahmin there is nothing on record to show that he did study the Vedas. Perhaps he might have had the Vedic instructions from his father during his life with him. He had even from the beginning shown an interest in learning Dhanurvidyā (archery). For obtaining proficiency in archery he went to the Himālayas and did penance to please Śiva for many years. Pleased at his penance Śiva on several occasions extolled the virtues of Paraśurāma. At that time the asuras (demons) acquired strength and attacked the devas. The devas complained to Śiva. Śiva called Paraśurāma and asked him to fight with and defeat the semdon. Paraśurāma was without weapons and he asked Śiva how he could go and fight the demons without weapons. Śiva said : "Go with my blessings and you will kill your foes." Paraśurāma did not wait for a moment. When Śiva thus assured him of success, on he went straight to fight with the demons. He defeated the asuras and came back to Śiva when the latter gave him many boons and divine weapons.

Till that time his name was only Rāma and he became Paraśurāma because among the weapons given to him by Śiva was a weapon named Paraśu (axe). There is a story behind this weapon Paraśu. Once Śiva was not invited for a Yāga conducted by Dakṣa. An angered Śiva threw his spike into the Yāgaśālā (sacrificial hall). The spike spoiled the Yāga and smashed the hall and after that roamed about aimlessly for sometime and then turned towards Badaryāśrama where at that time Naranārāyaṇas were engaged in penance. The spike went straight to the heart of sage Nārāyaṇa. Nārāyaṇa made the defiant sound 'hum' (huṁkāra) and the spike turned away. Śiva felt angry for thus showing disrespect to his spike and he attacked the sage. At once Nararṣi plucked a grass and reciting a mantra threw it at Śiva. The grass became a Paraśu (axe) and it attacked Śiva. Śiva broke it into two. Then Nara-Nārāyaṇas bowed before him and worshipped him. Thereafter the two pieces of the Paraśu remained with Śiva. It was one of these that Śiva gave to Paraśurāma. When Paraśurāma was returning happy and glorious with boons and weapons he got on his way a disciple named Akṛtavraṇa. (See under Akṛtavraṇa). Guru and disciple lived in an āśrama and Paraśurāma became a noted Guru in dhanurveda (archery). (Chapter 34, Karṇa Parva; Chapter 49, Śānti Parva and Chapter 18, Anuśāsana Parva).

5) Instruction in archery. According to Purāṇas Paraśurāmā did not spend his life as an instructor in archery. There are statements, however, mentioning that Karṇa and Droṇa took instructions from him.

Pretending to be a brahmin Karṇa commenced taking instructions in archery from Paraśurāma. When his education was complete Paraśurāma taught him Brahmāstra. One day tired after a long walk in the forests Paraśurāma took rest placing his head on the lap of Karṇa and soon fell asleep. At that time a beetle came and started sucking blood from the thigh of Karṇa. Karṇa remained still, bearing the pain, lest any movement of his body should disturb the sleep of his Guru. Blood was oozing from his thighs and it slowly made the body of the Guru also wet. Paraśurāma woke up and the sight of the bleeding thigh and the calm demeanour of Karṇa raised doubts in him. He questioned Karṇa saying that no brahmin could ever bear such a pain with such calmness and Karṇa had to tell the truth. Then Paraśurāma cursed him for deceit against his Guru saying that he would never be able to remember the Brahmāstra when the time to use it came.

There is a story behind Alarka, the beetle that bit Karṇa. This beetle was in his previous birth a demon named Daṁśa. Daṁśa once tried to molest the wife of the sage Bhṛgu. The Maharṣi cursed him and made him into a beetle. On his request for mercy he said he would get release from the curse by Paraśurāma. So the beetle became the Rākṣasa again and left the place. Karṇa took leave of Paraśurāma and went to Hastināpura. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 3).

Another famous disciple of Paraśurāma was Droṇa. There is a story behind Droṇa getting Dhanurveda from Paraśurāma. After travelling throughout the world exterminating the Kṣatriya race Paraśurāma gave all his wealth to Kaśyapa. On hearing that Paraśurāma was giving away all his riches as gifts to brahmins Droṇa rushed to Mahendraparvata to see Paraśurāma. By then Paraśurāma had distributed all his wealth excepting Dhanurveda. Paraśurāma called Droṇa to his side and said that only two things remained with him, his body and Dhanurveda. Droṇa, he added, could take anyone of the two and then Droṇa took Dhanurveda from him. After that Paraśurāma went to Mahāraṇya for the sake of penance. (Chapter 130, Ādi Parva).

There are some apparent inconsistencies in the above stories: It is said Droṇa taught Dhanurveda to Karṇa. Droṇa was the last person to receive Dhanurveda from Paraśurāma because the latter, surrendering his Dhanurveda in entire, left for the forests for doing penance. Then, when did Karṇa learn Dhanurveda from Paraśurāma? Could it be before Droṇa went to Paraśurāma? Then it must be accepted that Droṇa had not studied under Paraśurāma when he was teaching the the Pāṇḍavas and Kauravas. He learnt it from somewhere before he became the preceptor of the Pāṇḍavas. Karṇa after studying under Droṇa for some time went to Paraśurāma for higher studies and Droṇa approached Paraśurāma after Karṇa had left him.

6) The destruction of the Kṣatriyas. The most important event of his life was the total extermination of the Kṣatriya race. The Purāṇic belief is that he went round the world eighteen times to massacre the Kṣatriyas.

In many places in the Purāṇas it is stated that Paraśurāma fought against the Kṣatriyas eighteen times. But in chapter 29 of Aśvamedha Parva it is stated that Paraśurāma fought against the Kṣatriyas twentyone times So it is to be surmised that Paraśurāma fought eighteen big battles and three minor ones.

There are some old stories to explain this revengeful enmity of Paraśurāma towards the Kṣatriyas.

(1) Family enmity. The Hehaya dynasty was the most powerful kingly race then. Paraśurāma was a descendant of Bhṛgu, a brahmin sage. That is why he gets the name Bhārgava also. The Bhārgavas were for generations the family preceptors of the Hehaya kings. Taking advantage of their supreme position in the royal palace the Bhārgavas accumulated great wealth at the cost of the royal riches. Gradually the Bhārgavas rose in prosperity in inverse proportion to the decline of the Hehaya wealth. It was at the time of Ṛcīka, grandfather of Parasurāma that they touched the rock-bottom of their wealth and they found funds lacking even for the day to day administration of the state. In despair they went and requested the Ṛcīkas to lend them some money. But they hid their money and refused to give them anything. The Kṣatriya kings got angry and killed the brahmins. What stock was left of them went to the base of the Himālayas. The wife of Ṛcīka who was pregnant then kept the child in her womb for twelve years afraid to bring forth the child. After that the child came out breaking open the thigh (ūru) and so the child was called Aurva. Even at the time of his birth Aurva shone like a brilliant torch and not only that; the child cried aloud "Oh, wicked Kṣatriyas, I will kill every one of you. I heard from my mother's womb the din of the swords you raised to kill my ancestors. I will never wait for another moment to wreak vengeance on you."

The fire that emanated from the face of Aurva burnt even Devaloka. Kṣatriyas as a class came and prostrated before him. The devas came and requested him to abandon his anger and Aurva agreed. The devas picked up the fire sparks from Aurva's face and deposited them in the ocean. From those sparks put in the ocean was born Baḍavāgni alias Aurva.

(ii) Curse of the sage. From Aurva was born Jamadagni and from Jamadagni was born Paraśurāma. In the race of the Hehayas was born at that time a very valorous king named Kārtavīryārjuna. Once Kārtavīryārjuna gave a dinner to Agnibhagavān. Agni began to devour all the mountains and forests in the world. The burning was so indiscriminate that it burnt the āśrama of a sage named Āpava also. The sage cursed Kārtavīryārjuna saying that the thousand hands of the latter would be cut off by Pasaśurāma born in the family of Bhārgavas. From that day onwards the latent feud in him against the Bhārgavas was roused into action.

(iii) Varuṇa's ridicule. Kārtavīryārjuna who got a thousand hands by a boon from a sage named Dattātreya subdued all enemies of his status and not satisfied with that he went to the shores of the ocean and challenged Varuṇa for a fight. Varuṇa came before him and very modestly admitted that he was incapable of meeting the challenge thrown and suggested that perhaps Jamadagni's son, Paraśurāma might accept the challenge and give him a fight. Hearing this Kārtavīryārjuna turned towards the āsrama of Jamadagni on the shores of the Narmadā river.

(iv) Causes of the war (immediate). Kārtavīryārjuna went for hunting in the forests and feeling exhausted after some time went to the āsrama of Jamadagni with his retinue. Jamadagni received them well and with the help of the Kāmadhenu (wish-yielding cow) named Suśīlā, Jamadagni gave a sumptuous feast to the King and his followers. When after the meals were over they started to take leave of the sage, Candragupta, a minister of Kārtavīryārjuna brought to the notice of the king the superior powers of the Kāmadhenu, Suśīlā. The king wanted to get the cow and asked Candragupta to tell the sage about it. Though the minister told Jamadagni about the royal desire the sage refused to part with the cow. Then the minister with the help of the other royal servants took the cow by force and the sage followed the cow weeping. On the way Candragupta beat Jamadagni to death and brought the cow to the presence of the king. The king was pleased and the royal hunting party returned to the palace happy.

Jamadagni's wife Reṇukā went in search of her husband and to her grief found him lying dead. Reṇukā wept beating her breast twentyone times and by that time her son Paraśurāma came there and he declared that he would travel round the world twentyone times, the number of times his mother beat her breast, to kill and exterminate the Kṣatriyas from this world. Then the dead body of Jamadagni was placed on a pyre and they were singing Viṣṇugītā before placing fire on the pyre when Śukramuni appeared there and brought Jamadagni to life by invoking the art of Mṛtasañjīvanī. By that time Suśīlā somehow escaped from the custody of the King and came there without the calf. Then Paraśurāma vowed that he would bring the calf soon and taking with him his disciple Akṛtavraṇa he left for the city of Māhiṣmatī the abode of Kārtavīryārjuna. There they fought a grim battle and after killing Kārtavīryārjuna and many of his followers brought back the calf. To atone for the sin of this massacre Jamadagni advised his son to go and perform penance in Mahendragiri. Taking advantage of the absence of Paraśurāma from the āśrama, Śūrasena son of Kārtavīryārjuna, with his followers went to the āśrama of Jamadagni and chopped off his head. Paraśurāma returned from Mahendragiri at once and cremated the dead body of his father. Reṇukā, his mother, jumped into the funeral pyre and abandoned her life. From that moment onwards started Paraśurāma's fierce programme of mass massacre of the Kṣatriyas.

(v) Victory march. Paraśurāma's world-tour was confined to an all-Bhārata tour. The wars of Paraśurāma are not described in detail in the Purāṇas. They mention that Paraśurāma killed the Kings of Cola, Cera and Pauṇḍra. To stop the birth of Kṣatriyas in future Paraśurāma destroyed even the embryo in the wombs of Kṣatariya women. Then the Bhārgava ancestors like Ṛcīka and others came to the sky and requested Paraśurāma to stop this slaughter. They said: "Oh son, Rāma, stop this slaughter. What good do you get by killing innocent Kṣatriyas ?" By that time Paraśurāma had made twentyone rounds around Bhārata killing the Kṣatriyas. (Chapter 64, Ādi Parva; Chapter 38, Sabhā Parva; Chapter 116, Vana Parva; Chapter 49, Śānti Parva and 10 chapters from chapter 83 of Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa).

7) Samantapañcakanirmāṇa. Samantapañcaka is Kurukṣetra itself where the great battle was conducted. This is a holy place and it was Paraśurāma who constructed it. He stored the blood of the Kṣatriyas he killed in the twentyone rounds of killing in five lakes in Samantapañcaka. He offered blood to the Manes in those lakes. The Manes led by Ṛcīka appeared before him and asked him to name any boon he wanted. Then Paraśurāma said, "Revered Manes, if you are pleased with me you must absolve me from the sin of this mass massacre of the Kṣatriyas and declare the five lakes where I have stored their blood as holy." The Manes declared, "Let it be so." From then onwards the place became holy under the name Samantapañcaka. At the end of the Dvāparayuga and the beginning of Kaliyuga a great battle lasting for eighteen days took place at this holy place between the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas. (Chapter 2, Ādi Parva).

8) Atonement. To atone for the sin of slaughtering even innocent Kṣatriyas, Paraśurāma gave away all his riches as gifts to brahmins. He invited all the brahmins to Samantapañcaka and conducted a great Yāga there. The chief Ṛtvik (officiating priest) of the Yāga was the sage Kaśyapa and Paraśurāma gave all the lands he conquered till that time to Kaśyapa. Then a platform of gold ten yards long and nine yards wide was made and Kaśyapa was installed there and worshipped. After the worship was over according to the instructions from Kaśyapa the gold platform was cut into pieces and the gold pieces were offered to brahmins.

When Kaśyapa got all the lands from Paraśurāma he said thus:—"Oh Rāma, you have given me all your land and it is not now proper for you to live in my soil. You can go to the south and live somewhere on the shores of the ocean there." Paraśurāma walked south and requested the ocean to give him some land to live. Varuṇa then asked him to throw a winnow into the ocean. There is a legend saying that it was a Paraśu that Paraśurāma threw. Paraśurāma threw the sieve (śūrpa) and the ocean gave way to land for a distance where the winnow fell from where he stood. This is the place Śūrpāraka now known as Kerala. (Śūrpa=Winnowing basket). After giving this land also to the brahmins, Paraśurāma went and started doing penance at Mahendragiri. (Chapter 130, Ādi Parva; Chapter 117, Vana Parva and Chapter 49, Śānti Parva).

9) Other exploits of Paraśurāma.

(i) Meets Śrī Rāma. Śrī Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa were returning to Ayodhyā from Mithilāpurī after the marriage along with the sage Vasiṣṭha through a deep forest when Paraśurāma blocked their way and addressing Śrī Rāma said thus ,'Oh Rāma, son of Daśaratha, I heard that you broke during the marriage of Sītā the great Śaiva bow of the palace of Janaka. It was a Śaiva bow and I have now come here to test your prowess. I am giving you a Vaiṣṇava bow now. Can you string this bow ?"

Vasiṣṭha tried his best to pacify Paraśurāma. But Paraśurāma without heeding it started describing the story and greatness of the Śaiva bow and the Vaiṣṇava bow. (See under Vaiṣṇava bow). Then Śrī Rāma took the bow from Paraśurāma and started to string it. The brilliance of Śrī Rāma dazzled him and he stood dumbfounded at his skill. Paraśurāma was immensely pleased and he blessed Śrī Rāma. After that he went again to Mahendragiri to perform penance.

This same story is told in Kamba Rāmāyaṇa with some slight changes :—Paraśurāma did not like Śrī Rāma breaking the bow of his Guru Śiva. So an angered Paraśurāma blocked the way of Śrī Rāma and challenged him to string and take aim with the mighty Vaiṣṇava bow he (Paraśurāma) was carrying with him then. Śrī Rāma with perfect ease took the bow, strung it, and taking the missile asked Paraśurāma to show the target. Paraśurāma was astonished and was in a fix. The missile could destroy even the entire Universe. So Paraśurāma asked Rāma to aim at the accumulated tapobala (power accrued by penance) of his self and Rāma did so. Then Paraśurāma surrendered to Śrī Rāma the Vaiṣṇava bow and arrow and the Vaiṣṇava tejas (divine brilliance) in him. Paraśurāma after having carried out the purpose of his incarnation gave instructions to Śrī Rāma to continue the purpose of his incarnation and then after blessing Śrī Rāma went again to do penance at his holy āśrama.

This same story is told by the sage Lomaśa to the Pāṇḍavas during their exile in the forests. This story is much different from the previous ones: "When the fame that Śrī Rāma was the best of Kings spread far and wide Paraśurāma once went to see Śrī Rāma. Giving him the bow and arrow with which he had done the mass massacre of the Kṣatriyas he challenged him to string it and take aim. With a smile Śrī Rāma did so and then Paraśurāma said Rāma should draw the string up to his ears. Śrī Rāma got angry and then on the face, which became fierce, by his anger, Paraśurāma saw besides himself, Āditya-Vasu-Rudras, Sādhyas, Bālakhilyas, Devarṣis, oceans, mountains, the Vedas and all such things of this universe. Śrī Rāma sent out his missile from the bow. The whole universe was thrown into chaos. Thunder and lightning rocked the world. Heavy rains flooded the whole land space. Burning stars and meteors fell to the ground. Paraśurāma then knew that Śrī Rāma was the incarnation of Mahāviṣṇu and he stood bowing before him. Ashamed of his defeat he took leave of Śrī Rāma and went to Mahendragiri. When he reached there he found he had lost all his brilliance. Then the manes appeared and advised him to go and bathe in the river Vadhūsarā. Accordingly Paraśurāma went and bathed in the river and regained his lost brilliance. (Chapter 99, Vana Parva).

(ii) Paraśurāma and Śrī Kṛṣṇa. The Purāṇas describe two important occasions when Paraśurāma met Śrī Kṛṣṇa.

The first meeting was at the mountain of Gomanta. Once Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Balarāma with a view to enjoying the abundance of Nature went to the beautiful mountain of Gomanta and ascended to its top. On their way they met Paraśurāma engaged in penance there. They exchanged greetings and talked to each other for some time. Then Paraśurāma requested Śrī Kṛṣṇa to kill Śṛgālavāsudeva, King of Karavīra on the base of that mountain. Śrī Kṛṣṇa promised to do so and left the place carrying with him the blessings of the sage.

The second meeting was when Kṛṣṇa was going to the court of the Kauravas as a messenger of the Pāṇḍavas. On his way Śrī Kṛṣṇa saw a company of sages coming and, alighting from his chariot Kṛṣṇa talked with them. Paraśurāma who was in that company then embraced Kṛṣṇa and said that he should give a true picture of the situation to the Kauravas when he was conducting his mission. The sages blessed Kṛṣṇa and wished Kṛṣṇa all success in his mission. (Chapter 83, Udyoga Parva; 10th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

10) Other details.

(i) Paraśurāma along with a few other sages was present at the Sabhāpraveśa of Dharmaputra. (Śloka 11, Chapter 53, Sabhā Parva).

(ii) Paraśurāma was present at the court of the Kauravas when Śrī Kṛṣṇa was speaking to Dhṛtarāṣṭra on behalf of the Pāṇḍavas. When the Kauravas did not reply the questions put by Śrī Kṛṣṇa, Paraśurāma rose up to tell a story to illustrate the evils resulting from the arrogance of man. There was once a King called Dambhodbhava who was very arrogant because of his great strength. He wanted to diffuse his energy by fighting and laboured much to get good opponents and roamed about in search of fighters. One day the brahmins directed him to Naranārāyaṇas and accordingly Dambhodbhava went to their āśrama at Badarikā and challenged them for a fight. They refused to fight and yet the King showered arrows on them. Then the sages took a few blades of the iṣīkā grass and threw them at him. They filled the sky as great missiles and the King begged to be pardoned and prostrated before the sages. They sent back the be-fooled King to his palace. (Chapter 96, Udyoga Parva).

(iii) Once a grim battle was waged between Paraśurāma and Bhīṣma. (See under Ambā).

(iv) Paraśurāma sits in the court of Yama. (Śloka 19, Chapter 8, Sabhā Parva).

PARAŚURĀMAKUṆḌA. Another name for Paraśurāmahrada. Paraśurāmakuṇḍa comprises of five pools of blood called Samantapañcaka constructed by Paraśurāma on the borders of Kurukṣetra. (See under Paraśurāma).

PARAŚUVANA. A forest in hell. The sinners after climbing out of Vaitaraṇī, a river in hell in which hot blood flows, reach Asipatravana. There the bodies of the sinners are cut by the leaves of asipatra which are as sharp as a sword's edge. Leaving that they reach Paraśuvana. (Sloka 32, Chapter 322, Śānti Parva).

PARATAṄGAṆA. A place of habitation of ancient Bhārata. (Śloka 64, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

PARĀVAHA. One of the seven forms of Vāyu. Prāṇavāyu has got seven forms :—

1) Pravaha. This vāyu makes lightning in the sky.

2) Āvaha. It is by this vāyu that the stars shine and waters of the ocean go up as water-vapour and down as rains.

3) Udvaha. This vāyu makes movements among the clouds and produces thunder.

4) Saṁvaha. This vāyu beats the mountains. Saṁvaha is also engaged in shaping the clouds and producing thunder.

5) Vyavaha. Preparing holy water in the sky and making Ākāśagaṅgā stay there static is the work of this vāyu.

6) Parivaha. This vāyu gives strength to one who sits in meditation.

7) Parāvaha. It is this vāyu that fans the devas to make them cool. (Chapter 329, Bhīṣma Parva).

PARĀVARTANAKA. One of the twentyeight hells. (See under Kāla).

PARĀVASU. Son of a sage called Raibhya. He was the brother of Arvāvasu. (See under Arvāvasu).

PĀRĀVATA. A serpent born in the family of Airāvata. This serpent was burnt to death at the Sarpasatra of Janamejaya. (Śloka 11, Chapter 57, Ādi Parva).

PARĀVIDYĀ. See under Aparāvidyā.

PARIBARHA. One of the children of Garuḍa. (Chapter 101, Udyoga Parva).

PĀRIBHADRIKAS. The inhabitants of the place called Pāribhadra. The soldiers from Pāribhadra fought on the side of Duryodhana during the great battle. (Śloka 9, Chapter 51, Bhīṣma Parva).

PARIGHA I. One of the five pārṣadas presented to Subrahmaṇya by the deva, Aṁśa. The other four are:— Vaṭa, Bhīma, Dahati and Dahana. (Chapter 138, Śānti Parva).

PARIGHA II. A forester. (See under Biḍālopākhyāna).

PARIHARA. A King of the country of Kālañjara situated near Citrakūṭa. Parihara who was an Atharvaparāyaṇa (devoted to the Atharvaveda) ruled the country for twelve years and during his reign he gave a strong opposition to the spread of Buddhism. (Pratisarga Parva, Bhaviṣya Purāṇa).

PARIHYAṄGA. A maharṣi. One of the sons born to Ṛṣi Marīci of his wife Ūrṇā. There were six sons and the five others were : Smara, Udgītha, Kṣudrabhṛt, Agniṣvātta and Ghṛṇī. In his next birth he was born as one of the relatives of Śrī Kṛṣṇa and was killed by Kaṁsa. (10th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

PĀRIJĀTA I. The sage who came to the court of Maya along with Nārada. (Chapter 5, Sabhā Parva).

PĀRIJĀTA II. See under Kalpavṛkṣa.

PĀRIJĀTA III. A serpent born in the family of Airāvata. This serpent was burnt to death at the Sarpasatra of Janamejaya. (Śloka 11, Chapter 51, Ādi Parva).

PĀRIJĀTAKA. A sage who was a brilliant member of the court of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Śloka 14, Chapter 4, Sabhā Parva).

PARĪKṢIT I. A brilliant King of Candravaṁśa. He was the grandson of Arjuna and son of Abhimanyu. (For genealogy see under Abhimanyu).

1) Birth. Parīkṣit was the son born to Abhimanyu of Uttarā. This was a still-born child and it was Śrī Kṛṣṇa who gave it life. There is a story in Mahābhārata about this :

Uttarā, wife of Abhimanyu, was pregnant when the war between the Pāṇḍavas and Kauravas started at Kurukṣetra. Aśvatthāmā, son of Droṇa, entered the camp of the Pāṇḍavas at night and slew Dhṛṣṭadyumna. He then sent the most fierce Brahmaśirāstra (missile of Brahmaśira) to exterminate the Pāṇḍavas. To face it and oppose it Arjuna also sent an equally fierce Brahmaśirāstra. The sight of two such powerful weapons opposing each other made all the sages anxious and they led by Vyāsa entered the field and requested them to withdraw their missiles. It was in vain. The missile of Aśvatthāmā went and struck the womb of Uttarā.

Once when the Pāṇḍavas after their exile were staying in the village of Upaplavya a brahmin had predicted to Uttarā that at the fag end of the life of the Pāṇḍavas Uttarā would bear a son who would be tested even while in her womb and that the child should be named Parīkṣit. (Parīkṣā = test).

The child in the womb died when the missile struck it. Śrī Kṛṣṇa was greatly agitated by this wicked act of Aśvatthāmā and he said thus : "Oh Aśvatthāmā, the child now dead in its womb would surely come to life again. You will be called a sinner because of this infanticide. Because of this you will roam about on earth for three thousand years and during that time nobody would mingle with you. You will not get a seat anywhere. All diseases will find an abode in your body. But this infant would grow up into a king and rule the country for sixty years. He would become celebrated as the next Kururāja." (Sauptika Parva, Mahābhārata) When the Bhāratayuddha came to an end Dharmaputra performed an aśvamedhayāga. Many prominent persons including Śrī Kṛṣṇa assembled at Hastināpura for this purpose. Vidura received them all. At that time they were informed that Uttarā had delivered a still-born child. Parīkṣit was born when the embryo was only six months old (Śloka 82, Chapter 85, Ādi Parva). Everybody assembled there was sad and depressed when he heard this news. Śrī Kṛṣṇa went in and saw the dead infant. Uttarā wept bitterly and everybody asked Śrī Kṛṣṇa to give life to the infant somehow. Śrī Kṛṣṇa did so and the child was named Parīkṣit remembering the prophetic words of the brāhmaṇa.

2). Marriage. Parīkṣit married a princess named Mādravatī and got of her four sons named Janamejaya, Śruta-sena, Ugrasena and Bhīmasena. Chapters 3, 4, 5, Ādi Parva).

3). Curse of a sage. Parīkṣit was greatly interested in hunting. Once he went to a big forest with his large retinue to hunt. While hunting he followed a deer which the king had struck with his arrow and he separated from the rest and went a long way deep into the forest. It was midday and the king was tired. Then he saw a sage sitting there and the king went in and asked him about the deer. The sage engrossed in his meditation did not hear that. The king mistook his silence to be arrogance and taking the dead body of a cobra lying nearby with the tip of his bow threw it round the neck of the sage and went his way. The sage did not know even that. The king returned to the palace after the hunting.

The sage had a son named Gavijāta (In many places the name Śṛṅgī is used for Gavijāta). He was playing with the sons of other sages. One munikumāra (son of a sage) said, "Oh Gavijāta, your father is equal to Śiva. Both have a serpent round their necks. But there is only one difference. The serpent round your father's neck is a dead one." Gavijāta was greatly disturbed by this jeer and he immediately went to the āśrama to make enquiries. When he knew that an unknown person had done that foul deed he took water in his hand and said "Whoever be the person who put this dead snake round the neck of my father will die being bitten by the fierce cobra Takṣaka within seven days." Only after pronouncing this horrible curse did he find out that the perpetrator of that crime was none other than the most noble and charitable king, Parīkṣit. Gavijāta repented greatly and immediately sent word to the king about his curse through Gauramukha, a munikumāra. The king was a bit frightened first but then he started thinking about the way to escape from the curse. (Chapter 40, Ādi Parva, and 2nd Skandha, Bhāgavata).

4.) Takṣaka gets ready. As soon as the messenger Gauramukha departed from the palace Parīkṣit called the ministers to his side and conferred with them to find a way to escape from the cobra Takṣaka. They built a building on a huge pillar and gave all protections to the building. Brahmins well-versed in all the mantras and Viṣavaidyas (physicians in the treatment of snake-poisoning) of fame were asked to sit around the pillar and the place was well-guarded. The King sat in a room tightly closed. Six days went by. On the seventh day the celebrated Viṣavaidya Kaśyapamaharṣi was on his way to the palace at the summons of the king. Takṣaka was also on his way to the palace in the guise of a brahmin. They met on the way and though Kaśyapa did not know him first Takṣaka introduced himself when he knew that Kaśyapa was going to the palace to treat the king if anything happened. He said "Oh Kaśyapa, I am Takṣaka and none of your wits would be able to fight against the effects of my poison. If you want to know it we shall make a trial." Saying so Takṣaka went and bit a big banyan tree standing nearby, and lo! the whole tree was burnt to ashes by the strength of the poison. Kaśyapa smilingly recited the Viṣahāri mantra and sprinkled some water on the ashes and lo! the tree stood in its place again with not a single mutilation anywhere. Takṣaka was astounded. He then bribed Kaśyapa. He said he would give him more than what could be expected of the king and requested him to return home. Kaśyapa returned and Takṣaka went to the palace.

5) Death of Parīkṣit. Takṣaka went and inspected the palace of Parīkṣit. There was no way to step in and Takṣaka was astonished at the perfect protection given to the king. Takṣaka called all his relatives to his side and asked them to go to the King in the guise of brahmins carrying several kinds of fruits as presents. Takṣaka crept inside a beautiful fruit in the shape of a worm and was carried along with the fruits taken to the king. The servants of the king took the fruits brought by the brahmins to the king and the king struck by the size and beauty of a fruit among them took it and cut it open. He saw a worm inside red in colour with two black spots as eyes. The king took it in his hand and at that instant it changed into Takṣaka and bit the king. After that it rose up into the air and disappeared. (Chapters 42 to 49, Ādi Parva and 2nd Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

6) Parīkṣit as a king. Many researches have been made to fix the period of the reign of Parīkṣit.

"Saptarṣayo maghāyuktāḥ
Kale Pārikṣite sbhavan //
(Chapter 271, Matsya Purāṇa),

"Te tu Pārikṣite kāle Maghāsvāsan dvijottamāḥ"
(Chapter 24, Aṁśa 4, Viṣṇu Purāṇa)

Following these statements in the Purāṇas, astronomers and astrologers searched for the year or years in which the Saptarṣi maṇḍala (the constellation of a group of seven stars) and the month of māgha came into the same zodiac. It came in B.C. 3077 and then in B.C.477. This would again occur in 2223 A.D. Parīkṣit, according to other facts, also must have lived in B.C. 3077.

Pāṇḍavas went for their mahāprasthāna after entrusting the administration to the care of Parīkṣit. The Mahābhārata battle was fought in the year 3138 B.C. Dharmaputra ruled for 36 years and so Parīkṣit must have taken charge of the administration in 3102 B. C. Parīkṣit ruled for 60 years and his son Janamejaya became king in 3042 B.C. It was this Janamejaya who conducted the famous Sarpasatra.

7) Parīkṣit attained Svarga. Parīkṣit did not enter heaven as soon as he died. So Janamejaya at the advice of Nārada conducted a yāga called Ambāyāga for the salvation of the spirit of his father. It was during the navarātri period that this was done. Many eminent sages took part in the ceremony. All were received well and given gifts in plenty. He made pure brahmins read the Devībhāgavata with devotion in the presence of the deity to please Jagadambikā (mother goddess), queen of all queens (Rājarājeśvarī). When it was over, a divine brilliance like burning fire was visible in the sky and Nārada appeared before Janamejaya and said "Oh Janamejaya, King of Kings, your father was lying bound by the shackles of his life on earth. But today he acquired a divine form and wearing divine apparels and ornaments went to the divine seat of Devī in a sacred Vimāna from Indrapura while Indra, devas and the celestial maidens stood praising him (Skandha 12, Devī Bhāgavata).

8) Other details.

(i) Parīkṣit ruled the country for sixty years, with all virtues and goodness. (Chapter 49, Ādi Parva).

(ii) After the great battle, one day at the request of a few, Vyāsa by his yogic powers arrayed all the dead great ones of the Pāṇḍava-Kaurava company. Parīkṣit was also called then to the Gaṅgā where it was arranged and Janamejaya who was present to witness the show then gave an Avabhṛtasnāna (ablution after a sacrifice) to his father. Parīkṣit disappeared after that. (Chapter 35, Āśramavāsika Parva).

(iii) The synonyms of Parīkṣit are (1) Abhimanyusuta (2) Bhārataśreṣṭha (3) Kirīṭitanayātmaja (4) Kuruśreṣṭha (5) Kurunandana (6) Kururāja (7) Kuruvardhana (8) Pāṇḍaveya.

PARĪKṢIT II. There is a story about another Parīkṣit belonging to the Ikṣvāku dynasty of kings in chapter 192 of Vana Parva:

Once this Parīkṣit went after a deer while hunting in a forest and he traversed a long distance following it. On the way he felt tired by hunger and thirst. He saw a green grove and a river running still by its side, then. The king entered the waters of the river with his horse and after quenching the thirst of the horse and drinking some water to quench his own thirst, he bound the horse to a nearby tree and lay on the shores to take rest. Then he heard from somewhere a melodious song. The king raised his head and enjoying the music, waited to see the origin of it. Then a beautiful damsel appeared before him and the king talked with her and their conversation ended in the king requesting her to be his wife. The beautiful maiden consented on one condition that she should not be made to touch water. The king agreed and by that time the king's followers came and the king took her to his palace in a decorated palanquin followed by his retinue. The king took her to a secret chamber and stayed with her allowing nobody to enter the room. The chief minister came to the palace and enqired what was happening there and the maidens attending on the queen said that it was strange that no water was allowed inside the room. Then the minister arranged a garden with beautiful flowers and fruits with no water anywhere and a pond in the middle in which water was not visible from outside. He then went to the king and told him of his arrangement and the king took his wife into the garden and started having amorous sport with her there. After some time they reached the pond; water was not visible and so they entered the pond. The moment they entered the pond they touched water and the queen disappeared in the water. The King asked the water of the pond to be emptied and then he saw a frog sitting at the bottom. The king accused the frog of having eaten the maiden and he started killing all the frogs of his state. The frogs became frightened and they went to their king and complained. The frog-king in the garb of a maharṣi went and requested the king to stop this massacre of frogs but the king refused to yield saying that a frog had eaten his wife. Hearing that, the sage was shocked and revealing his identity said "Oh King, be pleased with me; I am Āyus, the king of the frogs. Your wife was my daughter. She is called Suśobhanā and she is an obstinate bad-natured girl. Even from times of old she has cheated many kings like this."

Hearing this the king pleaded to the frog-king to give him back Suśobhanā. He gave Suśobhanā to Parīkṣit. But he cursed his daughter that she would bear misbehaving children because of her cheating many kings before. Āyus disappeared then. Parīkṣit begot of Suśobhanā three princes named Śala, Bala and Dala. When Śala grew up Parīkṣit crowned him as king and left for the forests for doing penance. (Chapter 192, Vana-Parva).

PARĪKṢIT III. He was the son of Avikṣit, a king of the Kuru line of kings. Parīkṣit was the eldest son and he got six sons named Kakṣasena, Ugrasena, Citrasena, Indrasena, Suṣeṇa and Bhīmasena. They were all virtuous scholars and Jñānins. (Chapter 94, Ādi Parva).

PARĪKṢIT IV. Son of Anaśvā, a king of the Kuru line of kings. His mother was Amṛtā. This Parīkṣit begot of his wife Suyaśā a son named Bhīmasena. (Śloka 41, Chapter 95, Ādi Parva).

PARĪKṢIT V. A king of the Kuru line of kings. (Chapter 150, Śānti Parva).

PĀRIPLAVA I. A king of the race of Bhārata. He was the son of Nṛcakṣus and the grandson of Nala. Pāriplava got a son named Medhāvī. (10th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

PĀRIPLAVA II. A holy place situated on the border of Kurukṣetra. If anyone visits this holy place he would get the benefit of conducting an Agniṣṭoma Yajña and an Atirātra yajña. (Śloka 12, Chapter 83, Vana Parva).

PARIŚRUTA. A soldier of Subrahmaṇya. (Chapter 45, Śalya Parva).

PARIVAHA. A Vāyu (wind). (See under Parāvaha).

PARIVYĀDHA. One of the nine sages who lived in the western regions of Bhārata. The others were : Uṣaṅga, Kuruṣa, Dhaumya, Suvīryavān, Ekata, Dvita, Trita and Sārasvata (Chapter 208, Śānti Parva)

PĀRIYĀTRA. A mountain of Purāṇic fame. The deity of this mountain Pāriyātra was a member of the court of Kubera. The āśrama of the celebrated sage Gautama, was on this mountain. The sage Mārkaṇḍeya once saw this mountain in the belly of Bālamukunda. This mountain is situated on the western side of Mahāmeru. (Śloka 115, Chapter 188, Vana Parva).

PARJANYA. A deva. See under Devavatī III.

PARṆĀDA I. An ancient sage of Bhārata. He was a member of the court of Yudhiṣṭhira (Śloka 18, Chapter 4, Sabhā Parva).

PARṆĀDA II. A brahmin of the country of Vidarbha. It was Parṇāda who was sent out to know whether Nala was alive and he found out Nala living in disguise under the name of Bāhuka and after collecting all information about him returned to Vidarbha. (See under Damayantī).

PARṆĀDA III. A sage who acted as priest for a yāga conducted by a brahmin named Satya who lived in the country of Vidarbha. (Śloka 8, Chapter 273, Śānti Parva).

PARṆĀŚĀ. A river of western Bhārata. This river sits in the court of Varuṇa in the form of a nymph. (Śloka 9, Chapter 1, Sabhā Parva). Śrutāyudha, a valiant soldier who fought against Arjuna in the great Kurukṣetra battle was the son of Parṇāśā. Varuṇa was the father of Śrutāyudha and at the time of the birth of a son for her she requested Varuṇa to grant her a boon that her son would not be killed by anybody. Varuṇa while granting her the boon gave the son a mace. That mace had a peculiarity. If the mace was used against anybody who was not fighting, the mace would turn back and kill the user. With the help of that mace Śrutāyudha gave Arjuna a fierce fight and in the midst of the heat he forgot the condition stipulated by Varuṇa and used it against Śrī Kṛṣṇa who was standing nearby watching their fight. The mace turned back and killed Śrutāyudha. (Chapter 92, Droṇa Parva).

ARṆAŚĀLĀ. A Village situated in the valley of the mountain Yāmuna. This mountain stands between the rivers Gaṅgā and Yamunā. During the period of Mahābhārata this village was the abode of a great number of eminent scholars. Once there lived in that village a brahmin of Agastyagotra, well-learned, named Śarmī. One day the messengers of Kāla (god of death) came to that village and by mistake took Śarmī to Yamaloka. It was only when they reached there that they understood their folly and Kāla then asked his men to carry him back to earth. Then Śarmī said he would spend the balance of life due to him in Yamaloka itself. But Yama did not allow that. Kāla then told Śarmī the greatness in giving as gifts Til and Vastra (Gingelly and clothes) and sent him back to earth. (Chapter 68, Anuśāsana Parva).

PARṆAYA. A demon of Ṛgvedic times. He had two friends named Karañjaya and Vaṅgṛda. They attacked the two Kings belonging to the group of Āryas named Atithiśvā and Ṛjiśvā. The asuras were defeated because of the help sent to the kings by Indra. (Sūkta 54, Anuvāka 10, Maṇḍala 1, Ṛgveda).

PAROKṢA. A King of Candravaṁśa. (9th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

PAROPAKĀRĪ. See under Kanakarekhā.

PĀRṢṆIKṢEMA. A Viśvadeva. (Śloka 30, Chapter 91, Anuśāsana Parva). (Viśvadevas are a particular group of deities, ten in number, supposed to be the sons of Viśvā).

PĀRŚVAMAULI. Another name for the demon named Maṇicara. There is a story behind this demon getting the name of Maṇicara. (See under Maṇicara).

PĀRŚVAROMA. A place of human habitation of ancient Bhārata. (Śloka 56, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

PĀRTHA. Son of Pṛthā (Kuntī). (See under Kuntī).

PARUCCHEPA. A sage of Vedic times who was a Sūktadraṣṭā. He used some sounds too often in his talks.

Nṛmedhas and Parucchepa vied with each other in their māntric skill. One day Nṛmedhas in great pride produced smoke from wet firewood without igniting it and then Parucchepa produced fire without firewood. Nṛmedhas admitted defeat. (Taittirīya Saṁhitā).

PARUṆĪTHA (PURUṆĪTHA). A King extolled in the Ṛgveda. (Maṇḍala 1, Ṛgveda).

PARUṢA. A Rākṣasa (demon). He was one among the twelve demons who supported Khara when the latter fought against Śrī Rāma. (Sarga 26, Araṇya Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

PARVAṆA (S). A company of rākṣasas and devils. Parvaṇas, Patanas, Jambhas, Kharas, Krodhavaśas, Haris, Prarujas, Arujas and Praghasas belonged to a group of invisible demons and they fought against Śrī Rāma on the side of Rāvaṇa. (Chapter 285, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

PARVASAṄGRAHAPARVA. A subsidiary Parva of Ādi Parva. Chapter twenty is included in this Parva.

PARVATA I. A sage who was the nephew of Nārada.

1) Genealogy. Descending in order from Viṣṇu—Brahmā—Marīci—Paurṇamāsa—Parvata.

Prajāpati Marīci got of his wife Sambhūti a son named Paurṇamāsa. Paurṇamāsa got two sons Virajas and Parvata. Parvata's mother was the sister of Nārada. (Chapter 10, Aṁśa 1, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

2) Nārada and Parvata. These two sages lived for a long time as inseparable friends. Once they travelled on earth in the form of human beings. They decided that each should speak out what he felt without reserve and if anybody broke the arrangement the other had the right to curse him.

During their travels they reached the palace of a King called Sṛñjaya (Sañjaya) and they stayed there as his guests for a long time. Damayantī (Madayantī) daughter of the King served them both and Nārada fell in love with her. Nārada hid this fact from Parvata and within a few days Parvata came to know it and he according to the agreement cursed Nārada to take the form of a monkey. Nārada gave a counter curse disabling Parvata from attaining Svarga. Both separated from there and after some time both lost their bitterness against each other. Parvata met Nārada in his monkey form in a forest. Both were sorry for their curses then and each withdrew his curse and Nārada got his original form. He married Damayantī and started living together and Parvata went to Svarga. (Chapter 30, Śānti Parva).

3) Other details.

(i) Parvatamuni was a member of the assembly of sages at the Sarpasatra of Janamejaya. (Śloka 8, Chapter 53, Ādi Parva).

(ii) Nārada and Parvata were present for the Draupadīsvayaṁvara (marriage of Draupadī). (Śloka 7, Chapter 156, Ādi Parva).

(iii) Parvata and Nārada were members of the court of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Śloka 15, Chapter 4, Sabhā Parva).

(iv) This uncle-nephew combination was present in Indrasabhā also. (Śloka 10, Chapter 7, Sabhā Parva).

(v) They were members of Kuberasabhā also. (Śloka 26, Chapter 10, Sabhā Parva).

(vi) When the Pāṇḍavas were living in Kāmyakavana, Parvata went there and advised them to conduct a pilgrimage. (Śloka 18, Chapter 93, Vana Parva).

(vii) Parvata showed the Pāṇḍavas daylight at night one day when the great battle was going on. (Śloka 15, Chapter 163, Droṇa Parva).

(viii) Parvata swore that he was not a party to the theft of the lotus of Agastya. (Śloka 34, Chapter 94 Anuśāsana Parva).

PARVATA II. It is believed that in Kṛtayuga all mountains had wings. They flew all over the world with the swiftness of Garuḍa or Vāyu. All beings including ṛṣis and devas lived in a state of suspense since at any moment any mountain might fly and land down on their heads. They complained to Indra and Indra asked the mountains to remain at one place which they flatly refused. Indra got angry and started cutting down the wings of the mountains with his Vajrāyudha. No mountain was able to escape from this punishment; but Vāyubhagavān carried away his bosom friend, the mountain Maināka, and put it in the ocean without anybody noticing it. So Maināka alone did not lose its wings. It was this Maināka which rose from the ocean and gave a resting point to Hanūmān, son of Vāyu, when he took a leap from the shores of Bhārata to Laṅkā. This was but an expression of gratitude to Vāyu whose son Hanūmān was, for the help he had given when Indra was cutting off the wings of all mountains. (Sarga 1, Sundara Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

PARVATEŚVARA. A King of Vindhyadeśa. He tortured his people because of his greed for money and Yama sent him to hell when he died. In his next birth he was born as a monkey. At that time a priest of the King had taken life as a Sārasa bird. One day the monkey tried to catch the bird and then the bird (priest) reminded him of his previous birth and told him that in their next birth both of them would be swans and in the birth after that they would become men again. (Uttara Khaṇḍa, Padma Purāṇa).

PĀRVATEYA. A rājarṣi (A King who is also a ṛṣi). He was born of the species of a demon named Kapaṭa. (Śloka 30, Chapter 67, Ādi Parva).

PĀRVATĪ. Wife of Śiva.

Pārvatī is known under different names and worshipped in different forms. Amarakośa (Sanskrit lexicon) gives the following synonyms for Pārvatī :

Umā, Kātyāyanī, Gaurī, Kālī, Haimavatī, Īśvarī, Śivā, Bhavānī, Rudrāṇī, Śarvāṇī, Sarvamaṅgalā, Aparṇā, Durgā, Mṛḍānī, Caṇḍikā, Ambikā, Āryā, Dākṣāyaṇī, Girijā, Menakātmajā, Cāmuṇḍā, Karṇamoṭī, Carccikā, Bhairavī.

Some of these names refer to the various dispositions of Pārvatī, while a few are the names in the various incarnations of Pārvatī. The origin of Pārvatī and her other prominent births are given below :—

1) Incarnation of Satī. Śiva was born from Brahmā. To make Śiva active, Satī, an aspect of Mahāmāyā, was born as the daughter of Dakṣa, one of the Prajāpatis. The 9th Skandha of Devī Bhāgavata gives the following story about the incarnation of Satī :

While Brahmā was engaged in creation a few daityas named Hālāhalas were born. They were very valiant and ferocious and they did penance to propitiate Brahmā and after obtaining boons from him conquered the three worlds and asserted their supremacy in all the three worlds. They defied the Trimūrtis (trio of Brahmā. Viṣṇu and Śiva). Śiva and Viṣṇu in despair went to war against them. The war continued for sixty thousand years and both the daityas and Devas were exhausted. Viṣṇu and Śiva refused to attend to their duties. Brahmā understood the situation and taking into his hands the work of Śiva and Viṣṇu also and calling his sons, Sanaka and others to his side said "Oh sons, Śiva and Viṣṇu are incapable of doing their work now. I have therefore, taken on myself the charge of their duties also and hence I do not find time to do penance. You must therefore, do penance to propitiate Mahāmāyā. Let her be pleased and when she incarnates in this universe the world will be happy."

As soon as they heard this the Prajāpatis headed by Dakṣa went to the forests on the side of the Himālayas. They started doing penance reciting the mantra of Māyābīja. The penance lasted for a hundred thousand years and then the goddess was pleased. She graciously appeared before them with three eyes and four hands bearing pāśa, aṅkuśa, vara and abhīti. Dakṣa and others praised her and she granted them boons. She did also promise to be born as the daughter of Dakṣa. Dakṣa and others returned happy.

Mahāmāyā incarnated as Satī in the house of Dakṣa. Satī blossomed into a beautiful maiden and all the Prajāpatis joined together and made Śiva marry her. The bride and bridegroom lived in the bride's house.

At that time the sage Durvāsas worshipped Jagadambikā seated at Jāmbūnada meditating on her and reciting the māyābīja mantra. The devī was immensely pleased and appearing before him gave him the divine garland lying round her neck. The garland was highly perfumed. Honey flowed from it always. Wearing that garland the sage travelled through air and reached the palace of Dakṣa, father of Satī, and gave that garland to him. Dakṣa received it with great delight and took it to his bed-room and placed it there. That night Dakṣa inhaled the perfume of the divine garland and enjoyed an amorous sport with his wife. This act made the garland impure and the latent curse in it made Dakṣa hate his daughter Satī and her husband Śiva. After that Dakṣa conducted a Yāga and insulted Śiva by not inviting either him or his wife. Satī, however, attended the Yāga uninvited and she was insulted. Unable to bear the insult Satī leapt into the fire and committed suicide. From that day onwards Śiva roamed about in the world crying "Satī, Satī."

2) Satī, Pārvatī (Kālī). During that time a son named Vajrāṅga was born to Kaśyapa of his wife Diti. This virtuous asura practised austerities for a thousand years and when he opened his eyes after his long penance he did not see his wife. Vajrāṅga started in search of her collecting fruits and roots for his food on the way. Then he came across her standing underneath a tree weeping and she said : "All the time you were doing penance, Indra was teasing me. I was living without food on the banks of the river keeping a vow of silence. Indra came there in the form of a monkey and threw away all my articles used for worship. Then he came in the form of a lion and frightened me. Then again he came in the form of a serpent and bit me. Oh lord, am I, your wife, an orphan?" Vajrāṅga got angry and decided to do penance again to find a remedy for this unjust act of Indra. Then Brahmā coming to know of the fierce decision of Vajrāṅga appeared before him and said "Why do you go in for a penance again? Ask me what you want and I shall grant you." Vajrāṅga said "Oh Lord, I did penance all these thousand years to get rid of the demoniac disposition of mine. But when I was engaged in meditation Indra tormented my virtuous wife very much without any reason. If you will bless me I must get a son named Tāraka to kill all the devas including Indra." Brahmā granted the boon.

Varāṅgī became pregnant and after twelve months was born a son to her named Tārakāsura. Tāraka did severe penance sitting in the midst of Pañcāgni (five fires) for a long time and Brahmā was pleased and appeared before him. Tāraka then said : "If I were to die I must die at the hands of a seven-day-old babe. You must grant me a boon like that." Brahmā granted the boon. Tāraka became arrogant with that boon and joined hands with such fierce demons as Prasena, Jambha and Kālanemi to create havoc in the three worlds of Svarga, Bhūmi and Pātāla. They blessed the wicked and killed the virtuous. It was the time when Śiva was sadly roaming about in search of his lost wife Satī.

All the devas headed by Indra went and complained to Brahmā. Brahmā said:—"After all, this calamity is not without remedy. There is an escape from the boon I have given him. Tārakāsura himself has allowed him to be killed by a sevenday-old babe. If there should be such a babe it should be from the virility of Śiva. Tārakāsura thinks that since Śiva is observing brahmacarya after the death of Satī there is no chance of a babe being born to him. That was why he was prepared to allow that clause in that boon. I shall therefore suggest a plan. Satī herself should be born as the daughter of Himavān and Menā in the name of Kālī. Kālī should do great penance and break the vow of celibacy of Śiva. If Śiva accepts her as his wife and a child is born to them we are saved."

Śiva was all this time spending his time thinking of Satī. Once during this time Śiva bathed in the river Kālindī and then the waters of the river Kālindī became black and the waters remained black ever since that.

Indra and others on their return from Brahmā went to Bṛhaspati to think about further procedure in the matter. Bṛhaspati said:—"No obstacle would ever come to any act of the devas. Himavān was doing penance for a long time to obtain a child and by the grace of Śiva, Satī has already been born as the daughter of Himavān. (Skanda Purāṇa in its Sambhava Kāṇḍa states thus about the birth of Satī as Pārvatī. "Satī before jumping into the fire meditated on Śiva and prayed that she should be born in her next birth as his wife. Śiva granted that request. It was at that time that Himavān along with his wife Menā went to the vicinity of Amṛtasaras and started doing penance to get a child. One day when Himavān and his wife were bathing in the saras they saw a gem of a girl in the waters and they took it. Then they found the child with four hands and all other emblems of goddess on her. They praised her with verses from Vedas and soon the divine emblems faded away and Himavān gave the child to his wife.") Brahmā never wanted Tāraka to know that the child was an incarnation of Devī and so he made the babe black by sending Niśā to do so. Niśā entered the womb of the pregnant Menā while she was sleeping with her mouth open one day. The child was like a sapphire idol. Himavān was surprised to see the child. The child will do severe penance and obtain Śiva as her husband. Śiva and Satī will never be separated in any of their births. Oh Indra now go and try to get Śiva interested in a married life."

Himavān and Menā had three daughters and a son. The devas were watching who among the three—Rāgiṇī, Kuṭilā and Kālī—would become the consort of Śiva. All the three were interested in penance. The devas took Rāgiṇī to Brahmaloka and showed her to Brahmā and the latter declared that Rāgiṇī was incapable of bearing the virility of Śiva. Rāgiṇī got angry and Brahmā cursed her and made her into Sandhyārāga and she took her place in the sky. Then the devas took Kuṭilā to Brahmā and the latter said that she was also incapable of being a mate of Śiva. Kuṭilā also got angry and Brahmā made her into a river and kept her in Brahmaloka. Menā was greatly distressed at the loss of her two daughters and so she advised Kālī, her third daughter to go home, discontinuing the penance. She at first said Umā (Mā = do not) and so she got the name of Umā She was the daughter of a Parvata (Himavān is a parvata (mountain) and so she got the name Pārvatī (mountain-girl) also. Kālī later went home. But after some time the natural inclination in her led her to start a severe penance again.

The young Kālī, who was only a small girl then, accompanied by two of her girl companions went to the shores of a river deep in the forests and started practising austerities. In summer she would sit in the midst of Pañcāgni (five fires) and in the rainy season she would sit in water and do penance. The penance lasted for a thousand years.

Śiva who was roaming about in search of Satī went once to the palace of Himavān. Śiva agreed to stay there for some time at the persistent request of Himavān. During his stay there Śiva understood that one of the daughters of his host was doing penance meditating on Śaṅkara. Curious to know more about her, Śiva one day went to the āśrama of Kālī. Kālī saw Śiva and she stood up bowing before him. Śiva was pleased with her. But before Kālī could have another look at Śiva, he vanished from there.

Kālī was disappointed and continued her penance again. Years went by and one day there came to her āśrama a Vaṭu (a brahmin brahmacārī). Kālī and her companions stood up and worshipped the Vaṭu who looked brilliant with ashes on his body and wearing rudrākṣa and akṣamālā (berry of a tree and rosary made of it) and carrying in his hand a daṇḍa (stick) and a Kamaṇḍalu (water pot). After formal introduction the Vaṭu asked Kālī the purpose of her penance and Kālī told him all about it. Then the Vaṭu asked her in tones of surprise why such a beautiful girl like herself born to be the wife of a king, should go after a crudely dressed aged man like Śiva who goes on the back of a bullock always. Pārvatī resented the statement of the Vaṭu and got angry with him. Then Śiva appeared before her in his real form and married Pārvatī (Kālī alias Umā) in the presence of devas and maharṣis.

3) Pārvatī changes into Gaurī. Śiva and Pārvatī spent their honeymoon travelling throughout the world. Years went by like that. One day Śiva in a spirit of sport called Pārvatī 'Kālī, Kālī'. Kālī meant black one and Pārvatī was as black as sapphire. Pārvatī misunderstood Śiva addressing her thus two times and thought, perhaps, Śiva did not like her black body and trembling with grief said "If a wound is made by an arrow it will heal in due course; if the top of a tree is chopped off it will again blossom when the season comes; but the wound in the minds of others by harsh words is never healed. It was not my fault that I was born black and I would never again come near you with this black body. I am going." Saying thus with a firm determination, she rose up into the air and travelling for some time reached a big forest. She created by her reciting the smaraṇamantra four attendants for her named Somaprabhā, Jayā, Vijayā and Jayantī and started doing penance there. She practised severe austerities standing on one foot for a hundred years and then Brahmā appeared before her and sought the reason why Pārvatī, wife of Parameśvara should do such severe penance and then she narrated to him all that had happened. Brahmā after hearing her story told her thus:—

"Virtuous woman, from today onwards, your black complexion would change into one of the hue of a lotus petal. Because of that 'gaura' hue you would be called 'Gaurī'." By the time Brahmā finished blessing her the colour changed into the one described by Brahmā.

4) Gaurī changes into Kātyāyanī, Vindhyavāsini, Caṇḍikā and Cāmuṇḍikā. When Devī became Gaurī her superficial skin peeled off and dropped down, it is said.

At that time there were two great demons called Rambha and Karambha. They had no sons and they started severe penance. Karambha was doing penance standing in deep waters and a crocodile swallowed him. The crocodile was none other than Indra. Rambha did penance standing in the midst of fire and finding no result even after a long time decided to sacrifice himself into the fire. Agnideva then appeared before him and blessed him thus : "Oh Rambha, you will get a mighty son of the woman you love." Rambha stopped his penance and returned home with the boon. On the way he saw a beautlful she-buffalo and passion rose in him and he made contacts with the buffalo. The buffalo became pregnant and in due course delivered a child which later on became the notorious Mahiṣāsura. In the meantime a buffalo loved Mahiṣāsura's mother and it attacked Rambha and gored him to death. The Yakṣas burnt his dead body in a funeral pyre and the she-buffalo jumped into the pyre and abandoned her life. From that pyre there arose then another demon and he was the notorious Raktabīja. Mahiṣāsura became the king of demons and Raktabīja, Caṇḍa and Muṇḍa became his ministers. They attacked the devas and drove them to exhaustion. The devas took refuge in Brahmā to think of a plan to kill those asuras. Viṣṇu, and Śiva took part in the conference. Viṣṇu the eternal, got angry along with Śiva and became fierce like the fire of death. Brahmā and the devas also became angry and from the face of everyone a brilliance emanated and all these brilliances joined together and reached the holy āśrama of Kātyāyana maharṣi and that eminent sage also sent out a brilliance. The ascetic brilliance joined with the divine brilliance and the combined brilliance shone like a thousand suns. Then this superior brilliance entered the peeled-off skin of Kālī to produce the fierce and divine form of a goddess named Kātyāyanī.

Each limb of the new form was made up of the brilliance from a particular god as follows : From the brilliance of Mahendra was formed the face; from Agni, the eyes; from Yama, the hair; from Viṣṇu, the eighteen hands; from Indra, the central parts; from Varuṇa, the hip and the thighs ; from Brahmā, the feet ; from Sūrya, the toes ; from Prajāpati, the teeth; from Vasus, the fingers of the hands ; from Yakṣa, the nose; from Vāyu the ears and from the ascetic brilliance, the erotic eyebrows. Thus Kātyāyanī shone in the world with a figure formed with distinctive perfection.

All the gods and devas presented Kātyāyanī with gifts:— Śiva gave her a trident (triśūla); Viṣṇu a Discus ; Varuṇa, a conch; Agni, a javelin ; Vāyu, a bow; Sūrya, a never-empty quiver ; Indra, Vajraghaṇṭā ; Yama, a daṇḍa (stick); Vaiśravaṇa, a mace ; Brahmā, a rosary garland ; Kāla, a sword and shield ; Candra, Cāmara (white brush-like fan) and a pearl necklace ; Ocean a garland ; Himavān, a lion ; Viśvakarmā, a moon-disced Cūḍāmaṇi, earrings and a dagger ; the King of Gandharvas, a silver-plated drinking cup ; the King of nāgas, a nāgahāra ; and the Ṛtus (seasons), never-fading flowers. The three-eyed Kātyāyanī on getting all these was highly pleased and made a roaring sound. Devī, thus worshipped and adored by all, mounted on the lion and went to the topmost peak of the Vindhyas. Indra and Agni went and served Kātyāyanī thus living there. Vindhya called Devī, Kauśikī and Agastya called her Durgā.

Mahiṣāsura once went to the Vindhyas after conquering all the three worlds. He was accompanied by his ministers, Raktabīja, Caṇḍa, Muṇḍa, Cikṣura and Naraka. They met there the goddess Kātyāyanī. Mahiṣāsura fell in love with the beautiful and well-figured Kātyāyanī and he sent Dundubhi as messenger to the goddess to make her know his desire. Dundubhi approached Kātyāyanī and told her to become the wife of Mahiṣa, the emperor of all the three worlds. Devī replied that she would accept as her husband one who defeated her and that was the custom also in her caste. Mahiṣāsura with a huge army and heavy equipments went to war with her. But Kātyāyanī entered the field alone mounted on her lion and the devas watching her enter the battlefield without wearing even an armour were shocked. Devī went forward reciting the mantra of Viṣṇupañcākṣara given to her by Śiva and lakhs and lakhs of demons were killed by the adroit sword-swinging and the dinning roar of Kātyāyanī. Mahiṣa and his ministers surrounded her and Devī stepping down from the lion started to dance wielding her sword. Swinging her swcrd to the rhythm of her dance-steps Devī picked up the leading demons one by one and killed them. Seeing that, Mahiṣāsura approached her, burning with rage like the pralayāgni. All the attendants of Devī fled. Those who remained were trampled to death by Mahiṣāsura. Devī at first killed the ministers and then faced Mahiṣāsura. Mahiṣa became an elephant and Devī cut off its trunk. The elephant became a buffalo then. Devī sent a spike and it broke. Even Devī's Discus, granted to her by Viṣṇu was blunted when it hit the rock-like body of Mahiṣāsura. Varuṇapāśa, Yamadaṇḍa and Indravajra were all alike fruitless against the mighty Mahiṣāsura. Angered Devī jumped on the buffalo form of the demon and drove it to exhaustion and when at last its power of resistance had failed, Devī plunged her spear into the ears of the buffalo and the demon fell dead.

Many years went by. Kaśyapa begot of his wife Danu three great sons named Śumbha, Niśumbha and Namuci. All were fierce demons. Namuci attacked Indra but they soon came to a compromise. But Indra hid in the foam of the ocean which entered the ears, nose and mouth of Namuci while he was playing in the ocean. Indra used his Vajrāyudha from inside and killed him. Śumbha and Niśumbha were angry and they entered svarga and defeating everyone there, carried all the riches from there to the earth. They met Raktabīja and he said "Oh Lords, I am Raktabīja, minister of Mahiṣāsura. Kātyāyanī Devī killed virtuous Mahiṣāsura. His two ministers Caṇḍa and Muṇḍa are hiding inside the ocean afraid of Kātyāyanī devī." While he was speaking thus Caṇḍa and Muṇḍa also came there. When they all exchanged ideas Śumbha called one of his men and said "Bho: Sugrīvāsura, go and tell Kātyāyanī to be my wife." Sugrīva went to Kātyāyanī and returned disappointed and said "Lords Śumbha and Niśumbha,

I told Devī your message and she only laughed. She said that Śumbha and Niśumha might be mighty lords but only those who defeated her could marry her."
Enraged at this arrogance of Kātyāyanī, Śumbha sent Dhūmrākṣa to drag Kātyāyanī down to him. Dhūmrākṣa with six Akṣauhiṇīs of soldiers went to the seat of Kātyāyanī and challenged her to a fight. Devī stepped down from her seat and stood before Dhūmrākṣa and the latter leaped forward to catch hold of her. But Dhūmrākṣa was burnt to death by the huṁkāra fire of the goddess. Not only that, the huṁkāra sound reached the ears of Śumbha. Śumbha felt small by this prowess of the Devī but his rage increased. Śumbha then sent Caṇḍa, Muṇḍa and the great demon Ruru also with an army of a hundred crores of demons to face Devī Kauśikī. When the enemies reached Vindhya the bhūtas of Devī made loud and shrill noises. The lion of Kātyāyanī roared and she leaped into the midst of the army sword in hand. Lakhs and lakhs of asuras fell dead by the sword of the goddess. Devī once opened her mouth and lakhs of asuras entered it and then she shut her mouth keeping in her stomach the asuras till they all died. Devī beat the demon Ruru to death. Devī plucked her matted hair and struck it on the ground and from there arose the fierce form of Cāmuṇḍī. Caṇḍa and Muṇḍa fled but Cāmuṇḍī followed them to Pātāla and catching hold of them chopped off their heads and presented them to Kātyāyanī. Then Devī, Cāmuṇḍī and the bhūtas together tore to pieces all the remaining asuras and stored them all in their stomachs. Hearing this Śumbha's rage knew no bounds and he started with an army of thirty crores of men. The army swept on like an ocean and finding it moving forward Cāmuṇḍī roared. Kātyāyanī made a sound like a lion's roar. Brahmāṇī holding high the dagger jumped down to fight. Māheśvarī with snakes and the spike, with the three eyes open got down in fits of anger. Kaumārī with the javelin hanging round her waist and bright eyes entered the field. Vaiṣṇavī swinging her sword and whirling the mace with many weapons rushed to the field. Vārāhī breaking open the earth with its tusk and bearing a large wooden pestle came to fight. Indrāṇī with diamond on her sides came to fight. Nārasiṁhī brushing the manes on her breast, shaking the stars and whirling the planets and making a fierce appearance came to the field. (Cāmuṇḍī, Brahmāṇī, Māhesvarī, Vaiṣṇavī, Vārāhī and Nārasiṁhī are the different forms of Kātyāyanī. They are called Saptamātṛs (seven mothers). These saptamātṛs were born when Kātyāyanī in her wrath beat the earth with her matted hair). Cāmuṇḍī roared. The world became dark. Hearing the roar Śiva descended to the field. The Asuras surrounded the Devī again. But they all fell dead with blood flowing in a stream. The dead bodies of the asuras became heaped up and in despair Śumbha and Niśumbha wept. Seeing that, Raktabīja got angry and rushed at Devī. The Saptamātṛs shouted and Cāmuṇḍī opened her mouth. The lower jaw of Cāmuṇḍī touched Pātāla when she opened her mouth from the sky. Raktabīja, wounded and bleeding by a dagger stroke of Cāmuṇḍī, fell into the mouth of Cāmuṇḍī and disappeared. Then Niśumbha interfered and the fight became one between Niśumbha and Devī. The fat and sturdy hands of Niśumbha and the mace he was carrying fell by an arrow sent by Devī. Then Devī struck him with her spike and Niśumbha was killed. Both Śumbha and Niśumbha who came to wreak vengeance on her were thus killed. (See under Laṅkālakṣmī to know how Pārvatī became Laṅkālakṣmī).

5) Pārvatī takes the forms of Elephant and monkey. Śiva and Pārvatī went about enjoying amorous sports in the forests. Śiva turned himself into a tusker and Pārvatī became a she-elephant then. Gaṇapati was born as a result of that sport. Śiva became a monkey and Pārvatī became his mate and Hanūmān was born as a result of that sport. (See under Gaṇapati and Hanūmān).

6) Pārvatī became Sītā. This happened when Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa along with Sītā were in the forests. One day Sītā went to the Godāvarī river nearby to bring water to the āśrama and she stayed for some time watching two swans playing in the midst of lotuses in the lake there. Hearing a sound she looked into the river and saw Śrī Rāma bathing there. She was surprised. When she left the āśrama Rāma was sitting there. At the same time another thing happened in the āśrama. Śrī Rāma found Sītā coming to him and when he arose to receive her the figure disappeared. Then Śrī Rāma found bathing by Sītādevī also disappeared. When an astonished Sītā reached the āśrama she found an equally astonished Śrī Rāma sitting there. They then told each other their experiences and Śrī Rāma on meditation understood that in the guise of Rāma and Sītā Śiva and Pārvatī had come from Kailāsa to know about the welfare of the princes in exile.

7) Pārvatī, Vihuṇḍa and Jalandhara. See under those names.

8) Other details.

(i) Pārvatī shines in the court of Brahmā. (Śloka 41, Chapter 11, Sabhā Parva).

(ii) When the Pāṇḍavas were in exile Pārvatī guarded Arjuna always. (Vana Parva, Chapter 37, Śloka 38).

(iii) Once Pārvatī appeared in person and blessed Dharmaputra. (Chapter 6, Virāṭa Parva).

(iv) Once Śrī Kṛṣṇa pleased Pārvatī and she granted Kṛṣṇa boons. The first was that he would have sixteen thousand wives. The next was a beautiful form for Kṛṣṇa and the next was love of his relatives. Another boon was that Kṛṣṇa would have the prosperity to be able to give food for seven thousand travellers daily. (Śloka 7, Chapter 15, Anuśāsana Parva).

(v) It was because of a curse of Pārvatī that devas do not get sons by their own wives. There is the following story behind that.
Śiva and Pārvatī went to the Himālayas after their marriage and started living there. Śiva and Pārvatī were so much engrossed in their amorous sport that they were oblivious of the happenings outside. After a long time when their sport continued without a break the devas went in and informed Śiva that the whole universe was trembling by their sport and if Śiva produced a son the world would be incapable of bearing it and so he should withdraw from the act of producing a child. Śiva agreed and drew his virile strength upwards. Pārvatī did not like that and she cursed the devas that they would never have sons of their own wives. (Chapter 84, Anuśāsana Parva).

(vi) Pārvatī once taught Gaṅgādevī the duties of women. (Śloka 33, Chapter 146, Anuśāsana Parva).

(vii) Pārvatī resides in the mount of Muñjavān in Kailāsa with Paramaśiva. There is a mount called Muñjavān in the Himālayas. Bhagavān Umāpati (Śiva) shines there on treetops, underneath the trees, on the mounts and in caves. (Chapter 8, Aśvamedha Parva).

(viii) The Mahābhārata uses the following synonyms for Pārvatī : Ambikā, Āryā, Umā, Bhīmā, Śailaputrī, Sailarājasutā, Śākambharī, Śarvāṇī, Deveśī, Devī, Durgā, Gaurī, Girisutā, Girirājātmajā, Kālī, Mahābhīmā, Mahādevī, Mahākālī, Maheśvarī, Parvatarājakanyā, Rudrāṇī, Rudrapatnī and Tribhuvaneśvarī.

9) Pārvatī pratiṣṭhā. The installation of the goddess Pārvatī in temples is done with the following sacred rites.

An inner temple should be constructed and the idol of Devī should be installed there. Before that, on the bed of the platform bearing the idol, amulets with spiritual inscriptions on them should be deposited there just as in the case of the installation of Maheśvara. Then Parāśakti should be consecrated there with recitals of mantras followed by the deposition of Pañcaratnas meditating on Piṇḍikā. Then the idol of Devī should be fixed on the platform. After that Kriyāśakti should be consecrated on the platform and Jñānaśakti on the idol. Finally Ambikā named Śivā should be invoked with the mantras as ordained in the scriptures.

The different zones like the east and the west and the guards of the Universe like Indra should also be worshipped. (Chapter 98, Agni Purāṇa; Sarga 36, Bāla Kāṇda, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa; Chapters 51 and 53, Vāmana Purāṇa; 7th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata; 4th Skandha, Bhāgavata; Chapter 43, Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa; Araṇya Kāṇḍa, Uttara Rāmāyaṇa, Kamba Rāmāyaṇa; Chapter 121, Padma Purāṇa; Chapter 186, Ādi Parva; Chapter 37, Vana Parva, Chapter 6, Virāṭa Parva; Chapter 23, Bhīṣma Parva; Chapter 202, Droṇa Parva; Chapter 283, Śānti Parva; Chapters 15, 84, 140 and 146, Anuśāsana Parva; and Chapter 8, Aśvamedha Parva).

PĀRVATĪYA I. (PARVATĪYA). A king who lived during the period of Mahābhārata. He was born of the species of the dānava called Kukṣi. (Śloka 56, Chapter 67, Ādi Parva).

PĀRVATĪYA II (PARVATĪYA). Those who resided in the country called Pārvatīya in ancient Bhārata were called Pārvatīyas. Pārvatīyas were also present for the Rājasūya of Dharmaputra. When the Pāṇḍavas had to fight against Jayadratha during their exile in the forests these pārvatīyas fought on the side of Jayadratha. Arjuna killed them all. In the Kurukṣetra battle the Pārvatīyas fought on the side of the Kauravas. Pārvatīya was a very important country of ancient Bhārata. Once the Pārvatīyas fought against Kṛṣṇa and Kṛṣṇa conquered them. In the great battle the pārvatīyas fought against the Pāṇḍavas under the banners of Śakuni and Ulūka. The Pāṇḍavas destroyed them all. (Chapter 52, Sabhā parva; Chapter 271, Vana Parva; Chapter 30, Udyoga Parva; Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva; Chapter 11, Droṇa Parva; Chapter 46, Karṇa Parva and Chapter 1, Śalya Parva).

PĀŚA. A divine weapon of Varuṇa. There is nothing to excel this in swiftness. (Śloka 29, Chapter 41, Vana Parva).

PĀṢĀṆATĪRTHA. A sacred place. This is located in the Jamadagnivedī in the temple of Śūrpāraka. (Śloka 12, Chapter 38, Vana Parva).

PĀŚĀŚINĪ. An ancient river of Bhārata. (Śloka 22, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

PĀŚĪ. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Bhīma killed him in the great battle. (Śloka 5, Chapter 84, Karṇa Parva).

PĀŚIVĀṬA. A place of habitation in ancient India. (M. B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 64).

PAŚUBHŪMI. The country of Nepal. The place got the name of Paśubhūmi because it is located near the birth place of Paśupati (Śiva). (Chapter 30, Śloka 9, Sabhā Parva).

PAŚUDĀ. A female follower of Subrahmaṇya. (Śloka 28, Chapter 46, Śalya Parva).

PĀŚUPATA I. An aged brahmin. (See under Virūpākṣa).

PĀŚUPATA. II. The missile of Śiva. Arjuna during his exile in the forests performed penance to propitiate Śiva and got this missile from him.

Śiva has a bow named Pināka. Pāśupata is the arrow that is used on that bow. Pināka is a serpent with the colours of a rainbow. It has seven heads and has fierce canine teeth. Poison flows from them always. The string of the bow is wound round the neck of Śiva. The arrow, bright like the sun and equal to the fire of death, is the Pāśupata. It will burn all that it touches. Neither Nārāyaṇāstra, Brahmāstra, Āgneyāstra nor Vāruṇāstra can stand against this. In times of old Śiva burnt the Tripuras (three cities of the notorious three demons) by this arrow. Even Brahmā and Viṣṇu could be killed by Pāśupata. (Chapter 14, Anuśāsana Parva). Devotees worship Pāśupata as a deity. If the Pāśupata mantra is recited once it will remove all obstacles from the way and if recited a hundred times it will end all your calamities and bring success in any war for you.

PĀŚUPATA (S). The bhūtagaṇas (Spirits and devils attending on him) of Śiva as a class are called Pāśupatas. (Chapter 67, Vāmana Purāṇa).

PAŚUSAKHA. Husband of Gaṇḍā, servant-maid of the saptarṣis. (See under Saptarṣis).

PAṬACCARA. A place of habitation in ancient Bhārata. During Purāṇic times the people of this place migrated to south India because they were afraid of Jarāsandha. (Chapter 14, Sabhā Parva). Sahadeva, one of the Pāṇḍavas during his victory tour of the south, subdued the people of this place. The paṭaccaras fought against the Kauravas on the side of the Pāṇḍavas. (Chapter 31, Sabhā Parva). It was the paṭaccaras who stood at the back of the Krauñca Vyūha constructed by the Pāṇḍavas. (Chapter 50, Bhīṣma Parva).

PATĀKĪ. A soldier of the Kaurava army. Duryodhana gave instructions to Śakuni to attack Arjuna taking Patākī along with him for help. (Chapter 156, Droṇa Parva).

PĀṬALA. A monkey. This monkey met Śrī Rāma at Kiṣkindhā when the latter was going to Laṅkā to meet Vibhīṣaṇa. (Chapter 88, Sṛṣṭi Khaṇḍa, Padma Purāṇa).

PĀTĀLA. The last of the seven regions or worlds under the earth said to be peopled by Nāgas. The seven regions one below the other are (1) Atala (2) Vitala (3) Sutala (4) Talātala (5) Rasātala (6) Mahātala and (7) Pātāla. In all these regions there are beautiful cities and buildings built by Maya, the great architect. The daityas, dānavas and nāgas live in these regions.

Pātāla is seventy thousand yojanas high each division being ten thousand yojanas high. The earth in these regions is of different hue like white, black, red and yellow. It is filled with rubbles, black granite and gold. Once Nārada on his return to Svarga from Pātāla said that Pātāla was more beautiful than Svarga. The ornaments worn by nāgas are profusely studded with shining diamonds. Daytime is lighted by the Sun and the night by the Moon. There is neither heat nor cold there and the happy nāgas living contentedly do not feel the passage of time.

Under the Pātāla is Ādiśeṣa, a tāmasic form of Mahāviṣṇu, known to the Siddhas as Ananta. He has a thousand heads and Svastika as his badge. Holding in one hand a plough and in the other a wooden pestle he sits worshipped by Śrīdevī and Vāruṇīdevī. At the time of the end of the world the Saṅkarṣaṇamūrti, Rudra, is born from the face of Ādiśeṣa shining brightly like poisonous fire and it consumes all the three worlds. Ādiśeṣa worshipped by all gods bears this earth on his head like a crown and sits in Pātāla. When Ananta yawns this world begins to quake along with its oceans, rivers and forests. Nobody has seen an end of his qualities and that is why he is known as Ananta (no end). It was by worshipping this Ananta that the ancient sage Garga learned the truth about the results of Nimittaśāstra (predictions by omens) a division of Jyotiṣaśāstra.

The distinguishing characteristics of each of the seven divisions of Pātāla are given below :—

1) Atala. The first region of Pātāla. Here lives Bala, the celebrated son of Maya. He has created ninetysix kinds of magical arts capable of giving everything one desires. Those interested in magic are even now using some of these. When Bala yawns three kinds of women will come out of his mouth. Puṁścalīs (harlots), Svairiṇīs (adulteresses) and Kāminīs (lustful maidens). These women have a charm called Hāṭaka to tempt all who enter Atala. This hāṭaka is a rasāyana which will excite sexual passion in men so that the women can enjoy a sexual life with them for a prolonged period. These women after enticing the men would live with them enjoying a life of bliss produced by bewitching side glances, charming smiles, erotic embraces and exciting amorous talks. The men who live with them will be in such a state of bliss that they would say with pride "I am perfect, I am god. I am one with the might of ten thousand elephants."

2) Vitala. This is the abode of Hāṭakeśvara who is none other than Paramaśiva. This god accompanied by Bhavānīdevī and surrounded by pramathagaṇas (prominent demigods who attend on him) and worshipped by devas, presides over this place increasing the prajās created by Brahmā. The semen virile of Pārvatī-Parameśvaras flows there as the river Hāṭakī. The gold named Hāṭaka is what is vomited by the wind-blown Agni after drinking the rasa of that river. The wives of daityas wear ornaments made of this gold.

3). Sutala. This is the abode of Mahābali. Here lives Mahābali meditating on Mahāviṣṇu with more glory and grandeur than Indra. To please Indra, Mahāviṣṇu once went to Mahābali on earth and by deceit took all his possessions and binding him with Varuṇapāśa pushed him to Sutala through a hole made on earth. Later Mahāviṣṇu felt he did a wrong in thus sending away Mahābali from earth by deceit and to remedy the sin committed he even now acts as a gatekeeper to Mahābali in Sutala. Once Rāvaṇa went to Sutala to attack Mahābali and then Mahāviṣṇu keeping watch over the palace-gate in the form of Vāmana gave Rāvaṇa a kick and sent him back.

4) Talātala. This is the place where Maya lives. This Maya is a mighty magician among demons. After the Tripuradahana (burning the three demons to death) Śiva blessed Maya and the latter is living as Tripurādhipati (chief of Tripura) in Talātala. Maya is the preceptor of all demon-magicians and many fierce-looking demons worship him always.

5) Mahātala. This is the abode of Kādraveyas. They got the name because they are all children of Kadrū, the cobra. All these cobras are fierce-looking multi-headed ill-tempered ones. The prominent ones among them are Kuhaka, Takṣaka, Suṣena and Kāliya. All these are long lean serpents possessing big hoods and great strength. These bad-tempered cobras live with their family terribly afraid of Garuḍa.

6) Rasātala. This is the residence of the notorious Nivātakavaca-Kālakeyas. They were enemies of the devas and they tormented them in many ways. The majestic authority of Mahāviṣṇu decreased their virility. They are now living in Rasātala frightened by the threats and beatings with a magic wand of Saramā, a mantrarūpiṇi (a sacred chant incarnate) deputed by Indra.

7) Pātāla. This is the abode of serpents. The nāgalokādhipatis (chiefs of the serpent world) like Vāsuki, Śaṅkha, Gulika, Śveta, Dhanañjaya Mahāśikha, Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Saṅkhacūḍa, Kambala, Aśvadhara and Devadatta live here. These are all strong, long-bodied, greatly poisonous snakes with very bad tempers. They all possess hoods varying in numbers from five to hundred and the lustre of the diamonds on their hoods keeps the region of Pātāla always illuminated. At the base of this Pātāla-world is a place, separated from the rest, thirty thousand yojanas in area. It is here that the tāmasic Viṣṇukalā resides under the name Ananta. Ādiśeṣa or Ananta is the manifestation of this Viṣṇukalā. Śrī Ananta has got a name Saṅkarṣaṇa meaning one who proudly and arrogantly pulls at every thing that is seen and unseen.

It is well-known that all the worlds are being borne on his head by the thousand-hooded Ādiśeṣa. When, while bearing the worlds like this, he feels that he should destroy the animate and inanimate objects of the worlds, he brings forth from his forehead Rudra named Saṅkarṣaṇa with eleven demigods and weapons like triśūla (trident). Ananta is very beautiful with divine brilliance. Other serpent chiefs prostrate before him and at that time they see their reflection on the diamond-mirror-like nails on the toes of Ananta and for some time the serpent chiefs lie there pleasantly looking at the reflection of thier own faces in the nails. The earrings of dazzling brilliance worn by these serpent chiefs reflect on their cheeks and the serpents feel extremely happy when they see the reflection of their faces on the nails.

The daughters of the serpent kings are all beautiful damsels with fair, spotless and lustrous bodies. They smear their bodies with fragrant pastes made from Aloe, Sandal and Saffron. They then stand around Ādiśeṣa with their bewitching smiles and amorous movements of their bodies accompanied by erotic side glances expressing their carnal desires. The mighty, virtuous, celebrated Ādiśeṣa sits there surrounded by serpents for the welfare of the world. He sits there worshipped by Devas, Siddhas, Gandharvas, Vidyādharas and Maharṣis, bearing the divine garland 'Vaijayantī', and wearing fragrant flower garlands, blue apparels and ornaments in ears and neck and holding in his hand the Halāyudha. Suppressing his anger and keeping calm and serene he pleases all around with his pathetic look. (9th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

PĀTĀLAKETU. A demon. This demon once carried away Madālasā, daughter of Viśvāvasu to Pātāla. Ṛtadhvajarāja defeated Pātālaketu and rescued Madālasā from Pātāla. (See under Ṛtadhvaja).

PĀTĀLARĀVAṆA. A leader among the demons. Rāvaṇa, the lord of Laṅkā, and Pātālarāvaṇa are different. Pātālarāvaṇa was the son of the sister of Mālyavān. Heti, son of Brahmā, begot of his wife Bhayā a son named Vidyutkeśa. Vidyutkeśa married Sālakaṭaṅkā and got of her Sukeśa. Sukeśa married Devavatī and got of her three sons, Mālyavān, Sumālī and Mālī. Of these Sumālī got Prahasta and others who were the ministers of Rāvaṇa. Pātāla-Rāvaṇa was the son of Mālyavān's sister.

A set of demons afraid of Mahāviṣṇu, the destroyer of demons, fled to Pātāla. Their leader was Pātālarāvaṇa. On reaching Pātāla he became their leader and emperor and he got the name of Pātālarāvaṇa from then onwards.

Pātālarāvaṇa performed severe austerities to propitiate Brahmā and got from him three extraordinary boons:— (1) To travel freely in all the worlds without the use of any vehicle (2) To be well-versed in all magical arts (3) To be alive till the beetle-shaped blue diamond in his possession is broken into two.

Pātālarāvaṇa used all these boons for the welfare and emancipation of his own people. He was interested in teasing his enemies by the power of his boons. Rāvaṇa, king of Laṅkā, had an alliance with Pātālarāvaṇa.

Pātālarāvaṇa had a cruel and huge brother named Kumbhodara who was an adept in magic. This brother always helped Pātāla-Rāvaṇa in all his activities.

The Rāma-Rāvaṇa Yuddha was going on and Rāvaṇa began to suffer defeat after defeat in quick succession. Rāvaṇa then sent for Pātālarāvaṇa and his brother Kumbhodara. Pātālarāvaṇa felt sorry at the pitiable plight of Laṅkā and both the Rāvaṇas sat together to discuss future plans. Though they had lost a major portion of their army, Rāvaṇa suggested they should fight with the rest of the army and kill Rāma. Pātālarāvaṇa was to kill Rāma and Laṅkā-Rāvaṇa was to marry Sītā. Pātālarāvaṇa said that it was unwise to continue the fight with a small army but promised he would make a trial by using his magic powers.

Pātālarāvaṇa and Kumbhodara on leaving Laṅkā made themselves invisible and travelled above the camp of Śrī Rāma to investigate the strength and manoeuvres of the Rāma-army. It was night and the whole place was lit by moonlight. The monkey soldiers were taking rest in different places. Vibhīṣaṇa and Sugrīva were talking in secret about grave matters. Śrī Rāma was lying resting his head on the lap of Lakṣmaṇa and Lakṣmaṇa was mildly massaging the divine body of his brother. Hanūmān was sitting on a big dais created by his tail and keeping watch over the whole camp.

Pātālarāvaṇa knew from what he saw that any attempt to carry away Rāma from the surface of the ground was impossible and so he returned to Pātāla. From there they made a tunnel up to the base of the seat of Hanūmān and from there to where Rāma lay. Then they carried Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa to Pātāla before anybody could find it out by making them smell a sammohanadivyauṣadha (divine medicine causing unconsciousness). They brought them to a temple of Mahākālī with the intention of offering them in a sacrifice to the deity the next day morning. They made all preparations for the same. Hanūmān used to inspect the camp often and yet when after midnight he looked at the place where Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa were sleeping he could not find them. He immediately woke up all and made a search and they then found the big hole of a tunnel near the place where Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa were sleeping. All the leaders including Sugrīva and Vibhīṣaṇa assembled there and then Vibhīṣaṇa told them what had happened. He then took Sugrīva, Hanūmān, Jāmbavān and Aṅgada and a big army to Pātāla and went straight to the Mahākālī temple. There Pātālarāvaṇa had already started the ceremonies for the sacrifice.

Vibhīṣaṇa then asked Hanūmān to go and get the beetle-shaped diamond of Pātālarāvaṇa from a secret place in his bed chamber. Hanūmān took it and kept it in his mouth and attacked Pātālarāvaṇa who came running to slay him. Pātāla-Rāvaṇa faced Hanūmān in a very indifferent manner and a fight ensued. After sometime Hanūmān lost patience and cracked the diamond within his mouth and the moment it cracked Pātāla-Rāvaṇa fell down dead.(Yuddha Kāṇḍa, Kamba Rāmāyaṇa).

PAṬALĀVATĪ. A holy river of Uttara Bhārata. (Śloka 11, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva)

PĀṬALĪPUTRA. An ancient city of Purāṇic fame in Uttara Bhārata. The former name of this city was Pāṭalīputraka. There is a story behind the city getting this name :—

There was once a sacred pond named Kanakhala on the banks of river Gaṅgā. A brahmin from Dakṣiṇabhārata along with his wife came to this pond and started practising severe austerities there. He got three sons while living there. After some time the parents died. The three sons went to a place named Rājagṛha and studied there. The three were very poor and they went from there to perform penance to propitiate Subrahmaṇya (Kumārasvāmī). On their way they entered the house of a brahmin named Bhojika livtng on the sea-coast. Bhojika had three daughters and the brahmin after knowing all details about them gave his daughters in marriage to them along with all his wealth. The brahmin went to perform penance and the three brahmin boys with their wives lived in that house.

Once there occurred a famine and the three brahmins left their home leaving their wives alone. The second girl was pregnant at that time and she and her sisters went to the house of a friend of their father named Yajñadatta. In due course she delivered a son and all the three women looked after the child as their common son.

Śiva and Pārvatī were travelling by air once and seeing this child Śiva said thus :—"I am blessing this boy. This boy in his previous birth jointly with his wife worshipped me with great devotion. They are now born again to enjoy life. His wife in his previous birth was born as the daughter of King Mahendra. Her name was Pāṭalī and she would again be the wife of this boy in this life."

That night Paramaśiva appeared before the mother of the boy in a dream and said "You must name this boy Putraka. Everyday morning when he rises up a lakh of small gold coins will fall to the ground from his head."

They therefore, named the boy Putraka and every morning they would collect and store the gold coins falling from his head. When Putraka grew up he was immensely rich and started giving away his riches to brahmins as gifts. The news of this spread far and wide and brahmins from all sides began to flock to his house.

One day among the brahmins who flocked to his house were his father and his two brothers. The fathers felt envious of the extraordinary progress in wealth and fame of their son and they cleverly took the son to a lonely place in a temple in the heart of the Vindhya mountains to kill him. After engaging some murderers to kill him they left the place. Putraka bribed the murderers with his costly dresses and ornaments and escaped from there. There was a great storm then and Putraka walked through it. On his way he met the two sons of Mayāsura quarrelling for the three things left over to them by their father. The paternal property consisted of a stick, a pair of sandals and a pot all of which had some strange powers. If you draw on the ground with the stick you will have at that spot anything you desire. If you wear the sandals you can travel in the air. If you dip your hands into the pot you will get plenty of food.

Putraka immediately hit upon a plan and addressed the quarrelling brothers thus :—"Why do you fight like this ? It is better you decide it by a competitive race. He who wins the race should have the right to get the things." The two brothers agreed to it and leaving the things with Putraka started running. When they had gone a long distance away from the spot, Putraka put on the sandals and taking the stick and pot with him rose into the air. He landed at a city far away from the spot and started living at the house of an old woman. The King of that country had a daughter named Pāṭalī. When the old lady described to him the beauty and good qualities of Pāṭalī, Putraka wanted to marry her. So at night when everybody in the palace was asleep Putraka put on his sandals and entered the room of Pāṭalī through the windows. Pāṭali woke up; she liked Putraka and they were married according to Gāndharva rites. Then they both went out of the palace by air with the help of the sandals and landed at a place on the shores of the Gaṅgā. Then at the request of Pāṭalī Putraka made a city there with the help of the stick and they named it Pāṭalīputraka. (Kathāpīṭhalambaka, Kathāsaritsāgara).

PATAÑGA. A mountain. There are twenty small mountains around Mahāmeru and Pataṅga is one of them.

PATAÑJALI. A celebrated commentator in Sanskrit. Patañjali is one of the best commentators of Pāṇini's Vyākarṇasūtras. Pandits are of opinion that he got his name Patañjali to mean that people should worship (añjali) at his foot (pāda). He was such an adorable person. Pandits believe that Patañjali is the author of Yogasūtra and Carakasaṁhitā. A few believe that Patañjali was the incarnation of Ādiśeṣa. But modern scholars are of opinion that Patañjali, the commentator and Patañjali the author of Yogasūtras are two different persons.

In his book on Patañjalicarita, Rāmabhadradīkṣita writes about the birth of Patañjali:—"Once Goṇikā, daughter of a sage, prayed to the Sun-god for a son At once Ananta, King of the serpents, fell on her palm in the form of a sage. The ascetic girl brought up that sage as her son. After some years the sage went to Cidambara and prayed to Śiva to bless him with enough knowledge and wisdom to write a commentary on Kātyāyana's Vyākaraṇavārttika (explanatory rules on Pāṇini's sūtras). Śiva blessed him and the sage wrote the commentary. Many disciples went to him to learn the commentary and the sage accepted them all as disciples and promised to teach them provided they would abide by a condition, namely, that nobody should remove a curtain he would place between him and the disciples while teaching. The teaching went on for some time. He would reply to their doubts but the replies were peculiar and ambiguous and the disciples, getting disappointed, removed the curtain one day. The sage cursed them all. One of the disciples was away from the place then and the sage cursed him for leaving the place without permission during the course of study. He begged for relief and the sage was pleased. The Guru said if he could teach his commentary to one who would say logically that the Bhūtakarmavācyakṛdanta (past participle of a verb) of the root 'Pac' was 'Pakva' he would be released from the curse. Candragupta who came from Ujjayinī gave the correct answer and he was taught the Mahābhāṣya. Bhartṛhari was the son born to Candragupta of a Śūdra woman.

Patañjali, according to Professor Goldstucker, was a courtier of King Puṣyamitra and was alive when Menander attacked Sāketa. This would mean that Patañjali lived before B.C. 150.

PATANA (S). A company of devils. (Chapter 285, Vana Parva).

PATATRI. A valiant warrior who fought on the side of the Kauravas in the great battle. He lost his chariot in a fight with Bhīmasena. (Chapter 48, Karṇa Parva).

PAṬAVĀSAKA. A serpent belonging to the race of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. This serpent was burnt to death at the sarpasatra of Janamejaya. (Chapter 57, Ādi Parva).

PAṬHARVAN. A rājarṣi well-praised in Ṛgveda. (Sūkta 112, Maṇḍala 1, Ṛgveda).

PATHYA. A great preceptor in the tradition of ancient Gurus. (See under Guruparamparā).

PATHIKṚTA. An agni. If a Yāga comes to a stop during its course this Agni is to be worshipped. (Chapter 221, Vana Parva).

PATINEṬṬARAKKAVI(S). (Eighteen and a half wise men).

Mānavikrama, the zamorin who ruled the old state of Kozhikkoṭu in the beginning of the seventh century (Malayālam Era) was a talented man well-versed in all arts. He kept in his court a company of nineteen wise men whom he called by the well-known name Patineṭṭarakkavis meaning eighteen and a half kavis. The kavis of the zamorin were the nine Paṭṭeris of Payyūr, the five Nambūtiris of Tiruvegappura, Mullappilly Nambūtiri, Uddaṇḍaśāstri, Kākkaśśeri Bhaṭṭatiri, Cennās Nambūtirippāḍu and Punam Nambūtiri. Of these eighteen were scholars in Sanskrit and the nineteenth, Punam Nambūtiri was a vernacular poet and so the then zamorin gave only half a unit value to the vernacular member and thus named the assemby as a company of eighteen and a half members. There is another explanation given to the word 'arakkavi'. 'Ara' means 'half; but modern pandits say that 'ara' was a prefix to show a sign of royalty as is found in the words 'aramana' meaning royal mana or palace of the King. So 'arakkavi' would mean a Kavi attached to a King. Then the question comes, which of the nineteen was not included in the original company to reduce the number to eighteen. We can leave the matter for further research.

Payyūr Accan Bhaṭṭatirippāḍu, the top-most of Kerala pandits, was the president of the council of Patineṭṭarakkavis. The illam (house) of this Bhaṭṭatirippāḍu belonged to the Kunnamkulam taluk near Guruvāyūr of Cochin state. He was known as Maharṣi also Uddaṇḍaśāstrikal in his Mallikāmāruta states that one of the Paṭṭeris was Payyūr Mahābhaṭṭatirippāḍu named Parameśvara. Uddaṇḍaśāstri belonged to Kāñcīpura. Kākkaśśeri Bhaṭṭatiri was born to defeat the invincible Uddaṇḍaśāstri. Cennās Nambūtiri was the author of Tantrasamuccaya. Many poets and pandits were born in the family of these Kavis after their death.

PATIVRATĀMĀHATMYAPARVA. A subsidiary Parva of Vana Parva of Mahābhārata. This comprises six chapters commencing from Chapter 293 of Vana Parva.

PATREŚVARA. A sacred place. This is situated on the northern shore of river Narmadā. If one bathes in the tīrtha (pond) there, one will be able to enjoy the company of celestial maidens for five thousand years. (Chapter 17, Padma Purāṇa)

PAṬṬATTĀNA. This was a custom which was in force in the ancient temples of Kerala from the 9th century A.D. Paṭṭa means a 'Sanskrit pandit' 'Paṭṭas' is used as its plural. To give instructions in śāstras and upaniṣads to the three upper classes and to read in public at fixed times the Purāṇas, to make people more and more religious minded, it was the custom to appoint Paṭṭas in temples in ancient Kerala. This position which was the loftiest that could be attained by a pandit of those times was called by the name Paṭṭattāna. From the 9th century A.D. references are found about Paṭṭattāna in official records. In all important temples a māvāratapaṭṭa used to be appointed. His duty was to read and explain Mahābhārata to people.

Ūrālars who conducted the day to day administration of the temples and the Koiladhikāri who represented the supreme authority, and the King, jointly granted the Paṭṭattāna to deserving people. Pandits used to come to temples and engage themselves in religions polemics to make themselves worthy of the grant of Paṭṭattāna. The Paṭṭas were entitled to some profits from the temples. Records of the 3rd century Malayālam Era regarding the routine expenditure in the Tiruvalla temple mention about 'five nāzhis of rice to be given to each of the Paṭṭas within the temple'. Paṭṭas also were given many lands free of tax as were given to Ūrālars. In the Manalikkara order of 1236 A.D. and the Padmanābhapura order of 1237 A.D. mention is made about these grants. Paṭṭasthāna and Ūrāymasthāna became hereditary after some time and began to decline in importance.

Even the meaning of the word Paṭṭattāna underwent a change. In Cochin it meant the ceremony of giving feasts followed by money-bags to invited brahmins by the Kings to obtain puṇya for the dead members of the royal family. The zamorins of Calicut meant by Paṭṭattāna the act of giving fifty-one bags each containing fiftyone rupees to the successful candidates in śāstrārtha contests held at the Tali temple during the period between Revatī and Tiruvātira (Ardrā) in the month of Tulām. There is a difference of opinion regarding the number of money-bags and the amount in each. Ullūr S. Parameśvara Iyer in his Vijñānadīpikā (page 148) states that the number of bags were 46 and the money in each was two hundred rupees. Of these, twelve bags each were sanctioned for Prābhākara Mīmāṁsā and Bhāṭṭamīmāṁsā, nine for Vyākaraṇa, and thirteen for Vedānta. According to certain records 48 bags were given in the year 1679 A.D. Contests in Prābhākara Mīmāṁsā were held on the southern temple-tower gate of the Tali temple and in Vyākaraṇa on the southern platform of the northern temple tower gate of the same temple. The custom of giving hundred and one rupees each to one hundred and eight scholars in Śrī Padmanābhasvāmī temple of Trivandrum is also called Paṭṭattāna.

PAUṢAJIT. One of the sages belonging to the tradition of the disciples of Vyāsa. (See under Guruparamparā).

PAUṢAMĀSA. The month of Pauṣa (January). During this month, on the full moon day the constellation Puṣya and the moon join in a zodiac. He who takes food only once a day during this month will get beauty, fame and prosperity. (Chapter 106, Anuśāsana Parva).

PAUṢPIÑJI. A sage belonging to the tradition of disciples of Vyāsa. (See under Guruparamparā)

PAUṢṬI. Wife of king Puru. Puru begot of Pauṣṭi three sons named Pravīra, Īśvara, and Raudrāśva. Pauṣṭi is called Kausalyā also. (Śloka 11, Chapter 9, Ādi Parva).

PAUṢYA I. A Kṣatriya king. The queen of this king gave her earrings as a gift to a sage called Uttaṅka. (See under Uttaṅka).

PAUṢYA II. Son of Pūṣā, king of Karavīra. Pauṣya had three wives and yet was not fortunate enough to get a son. At last by the grace of Śiva, he got a son named Candraśekhara. The palace of Candraśekhara was in Karavīranagarī situated near Brahmāvarta on the banks of the river Dṛṣadvatī. (Kālikā Purāṇa, Chapter 49).

PAUṢYAPARVA. A subsidiary Parva of Ādi Parva. Chapter three is included in this.

PAUṢYAÑJI. A preceptor of the tradition of disciples of Vyāsa. (See under Vyāsa).

PĀVAKA. A son of Agni. Agni got of his wife Svāhā three sons, Pāvaka, Pavamāna and Śuci. These three brilliant sons got together 45 sons and they were also called Agnis. Thus there were 49 Agnis made up of the father, his three sons and their 45 sons. Pāvaka had another name also—Mahān (Chapter 219, Vana Parva).

PAVAMĀNA I. An Agni (fire). The eldest son of Brahmā, Agni, got of his wife Svāhā three sons, Pāvaka, Pavamāna and Śuci. These three got fortyfive children and they are called Agnis. Thus, father, three sons and their fortyfive sons constitute the 49 Agnis. (Chapter 10, Aṁśa 1, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

PAVAMĀNA II. A mountain. This mountain is situated near Meru. (8th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

PAVAMĀNA III. One of the three sons of Vijitāśva. He was in his previous birth an Agni but was cursed by Vasiṣṭha to be born on earth as a man. (4th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

PĀVANA I. A Viśvadeva (one of the ten sons of Viśvā). (Śloka 30, Chapter 91, Anuśāsana Parva).

PĀVANA II. A son born to Kṛṣṇa of Mitravindā. (10th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

PĀVANA III. A sacred place situated on the border of Kurukṣetra. If one worships the Devas and Manes at this place one would get the benefit of conducting an Aśvamedha. (Chapter 83, Vana Parva).

PAVANAHRADA. A marudgaṇa tīrtha (a sacred pond) situated on the border of Kurukṣetra. If one bathes in this one would attain Viṣṇuloka.

PAVITRĀROPAṆA. A Pūjāvidhi (a mode of worship). If you perform a Pavitrāropaṇa worship you will get the benefit of worshipping Viṣṇu for a year. This worship is to be conducted in the months of Āṣāḍha (July), Śrāvaṇa (August) Prauṣṭhapada (September), Āśvina (October) and Kārttika (November) A sacred Pavitra (sacred thread or ring of Kuśa grass) is to be prepared either in gold, silver, copper, cotton or silk. A specially purified cotton thread is also enough The Pavitra is to be made of three threads woven together. The Pavitra is to be made holy by reciting 108 times the Gāyatrī mantra or even half of that number is enough. Reciting 108 times or more is considered to be Uttama (best); half of it is considered Madhyama (tolerable) and less than it is considered adhama (worst). The Pavitra should then be tied to maṇḍalas and the mantra to be recited at the time of tying it, is this :

> Oṁ Nārāyaṇāya vidmahe Vāsudevāya Dhīmahi > tanno Viṣṇuḥ pracodayāt.
> (Chapter 34, Agni Purāṇa).

PAVITRAVĀṆI. A sage who shone in the courts of both Indra and Yudhiṣṭhira. (Śloka 15, Chapter 4, Sabhā Parva).

PAYASYA. Son of the sage Aṅgiras. He had eight sons named Varuṇas. They were :—Bṛhaspati, Utathya, Payasya, Śānti, Ghora, Virūpa, Saṁvartta and Sudhanvā. (Śloka 130, Chapter 85, Anuśāsana Parva).

PAYODĀ. A female attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (Śloka 28, Chapter 46, Śalya Parva).

PAYOṢṆĪ. A holy river. This river starts from the Vindhya mountains and flows to the west. Nala and Damayantī walked through the banks of this river. (Chapter 61, Vana Parva). Those who bathe in this river will get the benefit of doing a thousand godānas (gifts of cows). There is a sacred place on the shores of this river called Varāhatīrtha. King Nṛga performed a Yāga at this place at which Indra came and had Somapāna and the brahmins received dakṣiṇā (fees) and got drunk. (Chapters 88 and 121, Vana Parva). Even the mere contact of water-drops of Payoṣṇī river would absolve one of all sins. The musical instrument Śṛṅga of Śiva is in this river. Dharmaputra once came to this river and stayed there for some time drinking its water. (Chapter 120, Vana Parva). On another occasion Gaya son of King Amūrtarayas conducted seven aśvamedhas at this place and pleased Indra. (Chapter 21, Anuśāsana Parva).

PAYYANNŪR PĀṬṬU. This is a work in Malayālam written during a very ancient period of Malayālam literature. A complete edition of the same has not yet been received. The plot as could be gathered from records available is the following :

Nīlakeśī, a woman born in a very noble family in Triśśivaperūr did not have any sons though she accepted many husbands for the sake of progeny. At last she decided to perform penance. She left her place alone on a pilgrimage and reached Kāccil, a famous trading centre near Ezhimala. There lived a merchant named Nambucetty alias Combucetty who was the chief man of the place. He talked with Nīlakeśī and accepted her as his wife. She got a son of him named Nambuśāri Aran. Pleased at the birth of a son the parents gave a grand feast at the big Payyannūr plains. At that time the brothers of Nīlakeśī reached the place in a ship. They climbed the fort-walls and tried to enter the grounds. Some people objected to it and at that time Nambucetty came there and beat them to death. On hearing about this Nīlakesī left everything behind including her son and went again on a pilgrimage. When the son grew up the father taught his son everything about trade and ships. The father gave him a new ship for trading and the son taking along with him Pāṇḍyas, Jonakas, Coliyas, Pāppavas and a Yavana and a huge stock of goods put the ship into the sea and fearlessly went for trading. After passing through many ports and crossing another ocean he reached Ponmala (the mountain of gold) and bartered his goods for a heap of gold. He came back to his own land and was one day playing chess with his father when a Sannyāsinī (female ascetic) came there. When she was given alms she requested to be allowed to talk to the young merchant. The Sannyāsinī was none other than Nīlakeśī the mother of Nambuśāri Aran, the young merchant. She requested him to come to Payyannūr for a feast conducted by a woman there and he agreed to that. But the father objected to it. But when the son persisted in going, the father sent him with the sons of a cetty, a few people from Maṇigrāma and a huge stock of goods for trade. The poem ends there thus with 104 verses.

There are different opinions about the story among literary critics and historians. Gundert writes about it thus:—"This is a piece of Malayālam work most ancient of all that I have seen. This is a creation in Malayālam before that language became diluted with meaningless indeclinable Sanskrit words." According to Gundert this poem was written before the poem Rāmacarita was written and thus in the 3rd century M.E.

PEDU. A Rājarṣi otherwise named Aṅkāśva. (Maṇḍala 1, Ṛgveda).

PERIYĀLVĀR. Viṣṇucittar, father of Āṇḍāl. (See under Viṣṇucittar).

PERUKA. A King of Vedic times. He was the āśrayadātā (one who gives refuge) of Bharadvāja. (Anuvāka 63, Maṇḍala 6, Ṛgveda).

PHALAKAKṢA. A Yakṣa. This Yakṣa was a member of the court of Kubera. (Śloka 16, Chapter 10, Sabhā Parva)

PHALAKĪVANA. A sacred place. Once the devatās started practising severe austerities at this place and it lasted for a long time extending to thousands of years. From then onwards this became a holy place. (Chapter 83, Vana Parva, Śloka 86).

PHALAUDAKA. A Yakṣa. This Yakṣa lives in the court of Kubera. (Chapter 10, Sabhā Parva).

PHALGŪ. A holy river. If one visits this place one would get the benefit of doing an Aśvamedha. (Śloka 98, Chapter 84, Vana Parva).

PHALGUNA. Another name of Arjuna. Arjuna was born in the Uttarāphalgunī constellation in a mount of the Himālyas. So he was called Phalguna and also Phālguna. (Śloka 9, Chapter 44, Virāṭa Parva).

PHĀLGUNA. A month (March). It is so called because the phalgunīnakṣatra yoga occurs in that month. He who gives away as gift his meal for a time of the day will become more loved by his wife. Not only that, the Purāṇas declare that such a man would attain Candraloka. (Chapter 109, Anuśāsana Parva).

PHALGUTANTRA. The father of Sagara. During the old age of Phalgutantra the Haihayas led by Tālajaṅghas attacked Ayodhyā and drove out the royal family from the palace. Phalgutantra fled from the palace with his wife and stayed in the āśrama of Aurva. The King died before long. The queen who was pregnant then delivered a son in due course and he became the celebrated Sagara. (Chapter 3, Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa).

PHALODAKA. A Yakṣa of the court of Kubera. (Śloka 16, Chapter 10, Sabhā Parva).

PHENA. A King of the race of Uśīnara. His son was Sutapas and his grandson Auśīnara. (Harivaṁśa, 1, 31, 32).

PHENAPA. A gotra-maker of the Bhṛgu family. Phenapa is mentioned in the context of describing to Yudhiṣṭhira the greatness of cows. Phenapa's original name was Sumitra. He lived on the shores of the river Kulajā in the mountain of Triśikhara drinking the foam of cow's milk alone and thus getting for him the name Phenapa. (Phena = foam; Pā = drink). (Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.)

PICCHALA. A serpent born in the family of Vāsuki. This serpent was burnt to death at the Sarpasatra of Janamejaya. (Śloka 6, Chapter 57, Ādi Parva).

PICCHILĀ. A river of Purāṇic fame which runs through Uttara Bhārata. (Śloka 29, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

PINĀKA. The bow of Śiva. Pīnāka was formerly the three-forked spike of Śiva. Once it fell down from the hands of Śiva and on falling down took the shape of a bow. From then onwards it was used as a bow. See under Pāśupata. (Chapter 38. Sabhā Parva: Chapter 141, Anuśāsana Parva; Chapter 289. Śānti Parva).

PINĀKĪ I. One of the eleven Rudras. He was the grandson of Brahmā and the son of Sthāṇu. Pinākī attended the Janmotsava of Arjuna. (Chapter 66, Ādi Parva; Chapter 208, Śānti Parva; Chapter 122, Ādi Parva).

PINĀKĪ II. Śiva got this name because he wields the bow named Pināka.

PIṆḌĀRAKA I. A serpent born in the family of Kaśyapa. This serpent was burnt to death at the Sarpasatra of Janamejaya. (Śloka 17, Chapter 57, Ādi Parva).

PIṆḌĀRAKA II. A sacred place situated near Dvārakā in Saurāṣṭra. He who bathes in a holy river there would get immense gold. The place is worshipped by the sages. He who stays there for one day bathing in that river would get the benefit of conducting an Agniṣṭomayajña. (Chapter 82, Śloka 62, Vana Parva; Śloka 21, Chapter 88, Vana Parva; Śloka 57, Chapter 25, Anuśāsana Parva).

PIṆḌASEKTĀ. A serpent of the race of Takṣaka. This serpent was burnt to death at the Sarpasatra of Janamejaya. (Śloka 8, Chapter 57, Ādi Parva).

PIṆḌIKĀ. A stool to install idols. The length of this stool should be equal to that of the idol. The breadth should be its half and the thickness equal to that is the breadth. The exact place where the idol is fixed of called Mekhalā and the hole in the mekhalā should slightly slant towards the north. The pipe (exithole for the water to flow out) called Praṇāla should be as wide as a fourth part of the area of the pīṭha. For a praṇāla of a Śiva temple the length of the same should be half of that of the Piṇḍikā.

The sanctum sanctorum of the temple should be divided into seven divisions and the Piṇḍikā should be fixed by a learned priest in the Brāhmabhāga of the garbhagṛha (sanctum sanctorum). (Chapters 50 and 60, Agni Purāṇa).

PIṄGĀKṢA. See under Durmukha.

PIṄGĀKṢĪ. A female follower of Subrahmaṇya. (Śloka 18, Chapter 46, Śalya Parva).

PIṄGALA I. A deva who is an attendant of the Sun-god. Sūrya (Sun-god) rides in a one-wheeled chariot drawn by seven horses and he bears in his hands two lotuses. On his right side stands the attendant Daṇḍī with an ink-pot and a writing stick and on his left side stands the attendant Piṅgala with a stick. Both these are demi-god attendants of Sūrya. (Chapter 51, Agni Purāṇa).

PIṄGALA II. A prominent serpent born to the sage Kaśyapa of his wife Kadrū. (Śloka 9, Chapter 35, Ādi Parva).

PIṄGALA III. A sage. He was a Yajvā (priest) in the Sarpasatra of Janamejaya. (Śloka 6, Chapter 53, Ādi Parva).

PIṄGALA IV. A King of the Yakṣas. He is a friend of Śiva. He acts as body-guard to Śiva who spends his time in cremation grounds. This Yakṣa gives happiness to all in the world. (Śloka 51, Chapter 23, Vana Parva).

PIṄGALA V. A lion, who is a character in the book Pañcatantra. (See under Pañcatantra).

PIṄGALA VI. A brahmin of very bad manners. This brahmin was killed by his own wife who was a prostitute. In their next birth Piṅgala became a vulture and the prostitute, a parrot. Both had memories of their previous birth and the vulture (Piṅgala) with vengeance killed the parrot. After that Piṅgala was eaten one day by a tiger. A brahmin residing on the shores of Gaṅgā read to their souls the fifth chapter of Gītā and they got salvation and entered Pitṛloka (world of the Manes). (Chapter 40, Sṛṣṭi Khaṇḍa, Padma Purāṇa).

PIṄGALA VII. A rākṣasa (demon). Once when this demon was going through a forest he met a forester. The latter got afraid and climbed up a Śamī tree. Then a branch broke and it fell on the head of Gaṇeśa sitting beneath that tree. It was an act of worship and because of that both the forester and the demon were elevated. (Gaṇeśa Purāṇa).

PIṄGALĀ I. A prostitute. (See under Ṛṣabha II).

PIṄGALĀ II. A prostitute of the country of Avantī. Piṅgalā was born as the daughter of King Candrāṅgada in her next birth because of the virtuous act she did in doing service to the sage Ṛṣabha. The King named the girl Kīrtimālinī and Bhadrāyu married her. (See under Bhadrāyu).

PIṄGALĀ III. A woman of the city of Ayodhyā. Once this woman approached Śrī Rāma with amorous intentions and Śrī Rāma who was strictly observing a vow of one-wife refused to satisfy her desire and said:—"During the incarnation of Kṛṣṇa you will be born as a servant maid of Kaṁsa and then I will in my form as Kṛṣṇa accept you." Sītā on hearing this cursed Piṅgalā. She said "Oh beautiful woman who has approached my husband with amorous intentions, you will have three bends in your body when you are born next as the servant maid of Kaṁsa." Piṅgalā weeping bitterly craved for pardon and then Sītā said that Kṛṣṇa would make her perfect. (Vilāsa Kāṇḍa, Ānanda Rāmāyaṇa).

PIṄGALARĀJA. A Yakṣa who lives in cremation grounds. He always acts as a pilot to Śiva in his travels. (Śloka 51, Chapter 231, Vana Parva).

PIṄGATĪRTHA. An ancient holy place. (Chapter 82, Vana Parva.)

PIÑJALĀ. A river of Purāṇic fame. The greatness of this river is described in Śloka 27, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

PIÑJARAKA. A son born to the sage Kaśyapa of his wife Kadrū. Śloka 6, Chapter 35, Ādi Parva).

PIPPALA I. The youngest of the three sons born to the daitya named Mitra of his wife Revatī. (Bhaviṣya Purāṇa).

PIPPALA II. A brahmin born of the race of Kaśyapa. Pippala did severe penance and became arrogant of the power acquired by it. Once he happened to see the eminent sage Sukarmā serving with devotion his own mother and father and that made his arrogance fade a bit. (Bhūmi Khaṇḍa, Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 61).

PIPPALĀDA. An ancient sage belonging to the tradition of preceptors. (See under Guruparamparā). It is said that this sage got that name because he was in the habit of eating Pippalī in large quantities daily. Praśnopaniṣad tells a story of how the sages Sukeśa, Śaibya, Satyakāma (Kaśyapa), Kauśalya, Bhārgava and Kabandhī went to Pippalāda seeking Ātmajñāna (spiritual knowledge) and how he gave them instructions on the same.

Padma Purāṇa gives the following information regarding Pippalāda:—"Once Kuṇḍala, a brahmin residing in Kurukṣetra, got a son named Sukarmā. Sukarmā's parents were old and Sukarmā spent most of his time looking after his sickly aged parents. Kuṇḍala taught his son all the Vedas and Śāstras. At that time in the gotra of Kaśyapa was born a brahmin named Pippalāda. Controlling his senses and abandoning all passions he did severe penance in a forest called Daśāraṇya. The greatness of his penance made the animals of the forest leave their mutual enmity and live in perfect peace. Even the devas were astonished at the power of his penance.

Pippalāda did penance sitting as majestic and motionless as a mountain for a thousand years. Ants made a sand-heap over him like a mole-hill. The sage sat inside without any motion; poisonous black cobras circled round him and yet the sage made no movement. Three thousand years went by like that and then the devas showered flowers on him. Brahmā appeared and gave him the boon 'Sarvakāmasiddhi' (getting all that is desired) and by the blessing of Brahmā he became a very learned person also.

Pippalāda became arrogant with the boon of 'Sarvakāmasiddhi' in his possession. One day while he was sitting on a river-bank a swan appeared before him and in clear tones said:—"Pippalāda, why are you so proud of your greatness? I do not believe you have that power of universal attraction. This art is arvācīna (modern); you do not know Prācīna because you are illiterate. You take pride unnecessarily for having done penance for three thousand years. Do you know Sukarmā, the wise son of Kuṇḍala? He is the man who has acquired this power of attraction. There is no mahājñānī (one possessing spiritual knowledge) like him anywhere else in this world. Sukarmā has given no gifts, he has not practised meditation, he has not performed yāgas or yajñas nor has he ever done a pilgrimage. He has not done any of these virtuous deeds and yet he is well-versed in all the śāstras and Vedas. Even though he is a child you do not possess enough knowledge to equal his. Why? Because he is always engaged in the care and welfare of his parents. You take pride in your achievements without reason."

Hearing that Pippalāda went and met Sukarmā. Pippalāda knew that the bird was none other than Brahmā himself. They talked to each other for a long time and then Pippalāda admitted that Sukarmā was a greater man than himself. (Chapters 60-62, Padma Purāṇa).

PIPPALASTHĀNA. A division of land included in the Jambūdvīpa. (Śloka 37, Chapter 6, Bhīṣma Parva).

PIPPALĀYA. One of the nine sons born to Ṛṣabhadeva of his wife Jayantī. Pippalaya was a very pious king. (4th Skandha, Bhāgavata)

PIŚĀCA I. (Devil, Satan)

1) Origin. A malevolent being which is the very manifestation of evil. Everybody, everywhere in the world, from the very birth of this universe believed in the presence of such a wicked soul. According to Hindu Purāṇas, Piśāca is a creation of Brahmā. In the beginning Brahmā created the eighteen prajāpatis headed by Dakṣa, the Yakṣas, the Gandharvas and the Piśācas. (Chapter 1, Ādi Parva). This wicked being is called in English a 'Devil'. This word is derived from the Greek word 'diabolos'. People of the West and East equally believe that Piśāca (Satan) is an enemy of men and gods alike.

2) Bible and the Piśāca. It is not clearly stated in Bible how Satan was born but it is being referred to at several places as a wicked soul which leads men to evil.

3) The Bhāratīya Saṅkalpa. Piśāca, the creation of Brahmā, has taken important roles in the Purāṇic stories. Though Piśāca is the instigator of all evils its manifestation appears in many contexts in the Purāṇas:—

(i) Piśāca lives in the court of Kubera and worships him. (Śloka 16, Chapter 10, Sabhā Parva).

(ii) Piśāca lives in the court of Brahmā and worships him. (Śloka 49, Chapter 11, Sabhā Parva).

(iii) Piśāca lives in the Gokarṇatīrtha and worships Śiva. (Śloka 25, Chapter 85. Vana Parva).

(iv) Piśāca is the head of all evil spirits. Marīci and sages like him have created many evil spirits. (Śloka 46, Chapter 272, Vana Parva).

(v) The bhūtas (evil spirits) made Rāvaṇa their king. (Śloka 88, Chapter 275, Vana Parva).

(vi) The food of Piśāca is flesh and its drink, blood. (Śloka 9, Chapter 50, Droṇa Parva).

(vii) In the battle af Bhārata, the horses attached to the chariot of Alambuṣa were Piśācas. (Śloka 38, Chapter 167, Droṇa Parva).

(viii) The Piśācas fought Karṇa acting as helpers to Ghaṭotkaca. (Śloka 109, Chapter 175, Droṇa Parva).

(ix) Arjuna conquered the Piśācas at the time of Khāṇḍavadāha. (Śloka 37, Chapter, 37; Karṇa Parva).

(x) The Piśācas were present during the fight of Arjuna with Karṇa (Śloka 50, Chapter 87, Karṇa Parva).

(xi) The Piśācas worship Pārvatī and Parameśvara doing penance on the top of the mountain Muñjavān. (Śloka 5, Chapter 8, Āśvamedhika Parva).

(xii) During the time of Mahābhārata many Piśācas incarnated as kings. (Śloka 6, Chapter 31, Āśramvāsika Parva).

PIŚĀCA II. A Yakṣa. (Śloka 16, Chapter 10, Śānti Parva).

PIŚĀCA III. An inhabitant of the country of Piśāca in ancient Bhārata. These Piśācas fought against the Kauravas on the side of the Pāṇḍavas during the great battle. It was these piśācas that stood on the southern side of the Krauñcavyūha of Yudhiṣṭhira in the great battle. (Śloka 50, Chapter 50, Bhīṣma Parva). A few of these Piśācas were with Bhagadatta in the army of Duryodhana. (Chapter 87, Bhīṣma Parva). Śrī Kṛṣṇa cursed the piśācas. Chapter 11, Droṇa Parva).

PIŚAṄGA. A serpent born of the family of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. This serpent was burnt to death at the Sarpasatra of Janamejaya. (Śloka 17, Chapter 57, Ādi Parva).

PIṢṬĀKANAVAMĪ. See under Navamīvrata.

PITĀMAHASARAS. A sacred place in the base of the Himālayas. If one bathes in the holy pond there one would get the benefit of doing an Agniṣṭoma. (Śloka 148, Chapter 84, Vana Parva).

PĪṬHA. A demon. He was killed by Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (Śloka 5, Chapter 11, Droṇa Parva).

PIṬHARA. A daitya who was a member of the court of Varuṇa. (Śloka 13, Chapter 9, Sabhā Parva).

PIṬHARAKA (PĪṬHARAKA). A prominent serpent born in the family of Kaśyapa. This was burnt to death in the Sarpasatra of Janamejaya. (Śloka 15, Chapter 57, Ādi Parva).

PITṚ(S). Pitṛs are a set of demigods. From Manuprajāpati, son of Brahmā. were born the Saptarṣis like Marīci and they in turn created the Pitṛs. Besides Marīci and his set many others like Virāṭ Puruṣa and Brahmā have created Pitṛs. Some Purāṇas state that Pitṛs are of daily creation. Brahmā in the beginning created three sets of Pitṛs with form and four with brightness making thus seven sets. The three sets of bodied pitṛs are Agniṣvāttas, Barhiṣadas and Somapās and the four bright ones are Yama, Anala, Soma and Aryaman (10th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

"Manor hairaṇyagarbhasya ye marīcyādayaḥ sutāḥ /
Teṣāmṛṣīṇāṁ sarveṣām
putrāḥ pitṛgaṇāḥ smṛtāḥ" //
(Śloka 194, Chapter 8, Manusmṛti).

Pitṛs (manes) are classified into two types: The Agniṣvāttas and Barhiṣadas. Of these the Agniṣvāttas do not perform Yāgas and the Barhiṣadas are those who perform yāgas. Besides these two major divisions they are classified into many other groups as follows:

1. Somasadasya (s). Virāṭ Puruṣa is the creator of these Pitṛs. Somasadasyas are the Pitṛs of Sādhyadevas.

2. Agniṣvātta (s). They are the pitṛs of devas.

3. Barhiṣadas. These Pitṛs are the creation of the sage Atri. They are the manes of daityas, dānavas, yakṣas, gandharvas, uragas (serpents), rākṣasas (demons), suvarṇas and kinnaras.

4. Somapā (s). They are the sons of the sage Bhṛgu and are the manes of brahmins.
5. Havirbhuk (s). The sage Aṅgiras is the father of these Pitṛs who are the manes of Kṣatriyas.
6. Ājyapā (s). These are the sons of the sage Pulastya and are the manes of Vaiśyas.
7. Sukālika (s). Sons of the sage Vasiṣṭha, these Pitṛs are the manes of the Śūdras.

To the seven sages like Marīci were born the pitṛs and to the pitṛs were born the devāsuras (devas and asuras) and to the devāsuras were born everything else in this universe, animate and inanimate. (Chapter 3, Manusmṛti).

Performing a Śrāddha (offering obsequial oblations to the departed) is just like a yajña. The oblations should be offered in either silver or silver cum copper pots. Viśvadevas are the guardians of the pitṛs. Therefore the oblations should be offered after worshipping the Viśvadevas first and then the pitṛs and then Viṣṇu. (See under Śrāddha).

PITṚTĪRTHA. The Kumbhīpākanaraka (the hell of Kumbhīpāka) in the land of the manes is called Pitṛtīrtha. There is a story about this in Devī Bhāgavata:

Once the sage Durvāsas with his body smeared with ashes and wearing sacred berries went to Pitṛloka muttering "Śivaśaṅkara sarvātman śrīmātar bhuvaneśvari". The lord of the Pitṛloka received him with respect and worshipped him. While they were talking, Durvāsas heard cries of agony from somewhere and the sage then asked Pitṛnātha thus: "Oh lord of the Pitṛs, I have heard you described as a very virtuous man. How can then such painful cries of distress be heard from here? "Oh, I am dying beaten", "Oh, I am being killed" "Oh, I am dying" and "Oh, I am being burnt" are some of the woeful shrieks I hear. What is the reason for this?"

Hearing this Dharmarāja said: "Great sage, this is in fact a land of virtue. Nothing but righteous things are done here. I can tell you from where you hear that wail. The Yamapurī named Saṁyamanī is nearby. There Yama sits to punish the sinners. Yama is a dispenser of Justice and he has got several cruel and mighty servants to carry out his orders. There are eighty-six hells to punish the sinners and of these Kumbhīpāka is the most horrible. Great sinners like those who insult the gods, fornicators and those who insult their parents are put in this hell and punished. You are now hearing the cries of such sinners from that hell."

Durvāsas was curious to see the hell and the lord of the Manes gave permission and asked his servants to show Durvāsas the Kumbhīpākanaraka. The hell was found to change into a heaven The residents were laughing, singing dancing and doing such acts of happiness.

The servants of Yama were astonished and they went and reported to Yamarāja this sudden change. Yamarāja was also amazed to hear the news. He immediately rode on his vehicle, the buffalo, to the hell to learn the details personally. He could not find out the cause for the change. The place looked like the Svargaloka of Indra. King Yama sent a messenger to Indra with the news and Indra at first thought that it must be due to some māyā and so came to the place swiftly on his Airāvata. The news spread and one by one Brahmā, Viṣṇu, the Aṣṭadikpālakas (the eight guardians of the quarters) and all such people came to Kumbhīpākanaraka. Nobody could find an explanation for this change and so Mahāviṣṇu accompanied by a few devas went to Kailāsa and reported the matter to Śiva and Śiva said smilingly "Oh Viṣṇu, all this happened because of the greatness of the holy ashes. When the sage Durvāsas bent down to have a good look at the hell, particles of ashes from his body fell into the hell. From that moment onwards Kumbhīpākanaraka became a holy place for the Manes. This hell will henceforth be known as Pitṛtīrtha and those pitṛs who bathe in the holy pond there will become virtuous people. Do install on the shore of this pond an idol of mine, a Śivaliṅga, and by my side the idol of Umā, which is my power in an embodied form." The devas returned and did as they were directed.

PITṚVARTTI. See under Brahmadatta I.

PĪVARĪ. Wife of Śukabrahmarṣi, son of Vyāsa. Śuka got of Pīvarī four sons named Kṛṣṇa, Gauraprabha, Bhūri and Devaśruta and a daughter named Kīrti. (See under Śuka).

PLAKṢADVĪPA. One of the seven dvīpas (islands). (See under Saptadvīpa.)

PLAKṢAJĀTĀ. A tributary of river Gaṅgā. It is believed that this river is an incarnation of Sarasvatī and that the sins of those who drink the water of this river will vanish. (Chapter 169, Ādi Parva).

PLAKṢAPRASRAVAṆATĪRTHA. The place of origin of the river Sarasvatī. This is a very holy place. (Śloka 11, Chapter 54, Śalya Parva).

PLAKṢĀVATARAṆA. A sacred spot at the place of origin of Yamunā. The ancient people of Bhārata used to worship this place as a gate of Heaven. (Śloka 4, Chapter 90, Vana Parva).

PLAKṢAVATĪ. A river. This is referred to as a holy river in the Purāṇas. (Śloka 25, Chapter 165, Anuśāsana Parva).

PLĀKṢĀYAṆA. A Vaiyākaraṇa (grammarian). His opinion on Visargasandhi (a point in grammar) is described in Taittirīyaprātiśākhya.

POTAKA. A serpent born of the family of Kaśyapa. (Śloka 13, Chapter 103, Udyoga Parva).

PRABĀHU. A brave soldier who fought against the Pāṇḍavas on the side of the Kauravas in the great battle of Kurukṣetra. He showered arrows on Abhimanyu. (Chapter 37, Droṇa Parva).

PRABĀLAKA. A Yakṣa. This Yakṣa sat in the court of Kubera and worshipped him. (Śloka 17, Chapter 10, Śānti Parva).

PRABHĀ I. A devī. This devī sits in the court of Brahmā worshipping him. (Chapter 11, Śānti Parva).

PRABHĀ II. A celestial maiden of Alakāpurī. Once when the sage Aṣṭāvakra went to Alakāpurī this maiden gave a dance performance in his honour. (Śloka 45, Chapter 19, Anuśāsana Parva).

PRABHĀ III. Daughter of a dānava called Svarbhānu. She was married to king Āyus and Āyus begot of her sons like Nahuṣa and others (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, 3—6—26).

PRABHĀ IV. One of the two wives of King Puṣpārṇa. (4th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

PRABHADRĀ. Wife of the son of Karṇa, King of Aṅga. She is called Bhadrāvatī also. (Jaimini Bhārata, Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 63).

PRABHADRAKA. A special division of the army of Pāñcālarāja. This division comprises of Kṣatriyas only. Dhṛṣṭadyumna and Śikhaṇḍī were its leaders. During the Kurukṣetra battle Śalya slew many of the Prabhadrakas. The rest of the Prabhadrakas were killed by Āśvatthāmā while they were sleeping. (Chapter 8, Sauptika Parva; Chapter 57. Udyoga Parva; Chapter 19, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 11, Śalya Parva).

PRABHĀKARA I. A serpent born of the race of Kaśyapa. Śloka 15, Chapter 35, Ādi Parva).

PRABHĀKARA II. A great sage born of the race of Atri. This sage married the ten daughters of Ghṛtācī born of Raudrāśva (Bhadrāśva) of the family of Pūru. The names of the daughters are Rudrā, Śūdrā, Maladā, Bhadrā, Malahā, Khaladā, Naladā, Surasā, Gocapalā and Strīratnakūṭā.

Once when the Sun was in distress while he was being devoured by Rāhu, Sage Prabhākara said 'Svasti' to give salvation for the Sun and instantly the Sun came out from Rāhu's hold and shone brightly as before. It was as a result of this virtuous deed that the sage got the name Prabhākara. By his great knowledge and eminence he kept glowing the fame of Atrikula earned by generations.

Sage Prabhākara conducted a Yāga and on the occasion the devas presented him with great wealth and ten sons (Harivaṁśa, 1. 81-8.17).

PRABHĀKARA III. The sixth division of the land of Kuśadvīpa. (Śloka 13, Chapter 12, Bhīṣma Parva).

PRABHAÑJANA I. The first son of Citravāhana, king of Maṇipura. Citravāhana who was without a son for a long time did penance for obtaining a son. Śiva was pleased with his penance and he blessed him and assured him of a son soon. (Śloka 29, Chapter 214, Ādi Parva).

PRABHAÑJANA II. A king. He performed Śiva-worship for ten thousand years and attained Dikpālakatva. The name of his son was Pūtātmā. (Skanda Purāṇa, 41, 13).

PRABHAÑJANA III. A Kṣatriya king. Once this king killed a deer while it was breast-feeding its child and by a curse of the mother-deer Prabhañjana had to live as a tiger for a hundred years. When the period of the curse was coming to an end, the tiger heard the advice of a cow called Nandā and got himself transformed into his original form of the king. (Chapter 18, Sṛṣṭi Khaṇḍa, Padma Purāṇa).

PRABHĀNU. A son born to Śrī Kṛṣṇa of his wife Satyabhāmā. (10th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

PRABHĀSA I. A son born to Dharmadeva of his wife Prabhātā. This Prabhāsa is considered to be one of the aṣṭavasus. Prabhāsa's wife was the sister of Bṛhaspati, a widely travelled virtuous woman of renowned chastity and great yogic attainments. (Śloka 17, Chapter 66, Ādi Parva; Chapter 15, Aṁśa 1, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

PRABHĀSA II The sacred place called Prabhāsatīrtha. This place of Purāṇic importance is situated in Saurāṣṭra on the west coast. This is called Somatīrtha also. Some facts about this tīrtha from the Purāṇas are given below:

(i) During the pilgrimage of Arjuna he did penance for a thousand divine years standing on one foot at Prabhāsa. Śloka 15, Chapter 12, Vana Parva).

(ii) Agnideva resides in this place. One who bathes in the holy pond there would get the benefit of doing Agniṣṭomayajña. (Śloka 58, Chapter 82, Vana Parva).

(iii) Once Yudhiṣṭhira along with his brothers came and did penance here. (Śloka 15, Chapter 118, Vana Parva).

(iv) Prabhāsatīrtha is dear to Indra. (Śloka 7, Chapter 130, Vana Parva).

(v) Those who bathe in the holy pond in Prabhāsa are taken to heaven in Vimānas and they then by songs of praise wake up the celestial maidens there. (Śloka 9, Chapter 25, Anuśāsana Parva).

(vi) It was at this Prabhāsatīrtha that the Yādavas fought against one another and destroyed themselves. (Śloka 10, Chapter 3, Mausala Parva).

(vii) Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Balarāma merged with the Supreme spirit at this place. (Chapter 4, Mausala Parva).

(viii) The son of sage Sāndīpani was kidnapped by Pañcajana while the former was bathing at this tīrtha. (10th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

(ix) It was while standing on the shore of the Prabhāsa pond that Arjuna first heard about Subhadrā. (10th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

PRABHĀTA. See under Sṛṣṭi.

PRABHĀTĀ. Wife of Dharmadeva. Dharmadeva begot of her two sons named Pratyūṣa and Prabhāsa. Both were Vasus. (Śloka 17, Chapter 66, Ādi Parva).

PRABHĀVATĪ I. A woman who was engaged in penance at the abode of Mayāsura. One of the batches of monkeys that went to different places in search of Sītā met Prabhāvatī. (Śloka 4, Chapter 282, Vana Parva).

PRABHĀVATĪ II. The wife of Sūryadeva. (Śloka 8, Chapter 117, Udyoga Parva).

PRABHĀVATĪ III. A female follower of Subrahmaṇya. (Śloka 3, Chapter 46, Śal a Parva).

PRABHĀVATĪ IV. Wife of Citraratha, king of Aṅga. This Prabhāvatī was the eldest sister of Ruci, wife of Devaśarmā. (Śloka 8, Chapter 42, Anuśāsana Parva).

PRABHĀVATĪ V. Daughter of the demon Vajranābha. She was married to Pradyumna, son of Śrī Kṛṣṇa.

There was once a very valiant demon called Vajranābha. He went into the valley of Meru and performed penance to propitiate Brahmā. Brahmā appeared before him and he got from him boons such as strength to conquer and subdue all kings, the secret of leaving the body and entering that of others etc. Empowered with these boons he made Vajranābhapura his capital. He got a daughter named Prabhāvatī. His brother Sunābha had two daughters named Candramatī and Guṇavatī.

While he was thus living there, he set out on a campaign of victory. He conquered the whole world and then turned his eyes towards Svarga. Going to Indraloka he told thus: "Hi, son of Kaśyapa, I am also born of Kaśyapa. Your mother Aditi and my mother Diti are both wives of Kaśyapaprajāpati. You ruled over Svarga till this time. Now, let me rule over it for some time." Indra was embarrassed by this logical challenge and could not give any reply to him. Kaśyapaprajāpati was then performing a long Yāga and Indra replied he would find a solution to his demand when their father returned after the Yāga. From that moment onwards Indra started thinking of plans to destroy Vajranābha. He went and sought help from Śrī Kṛṣṇa residing in Dvārakā. Kṛṣṇa promised to help him when the time came,

After returning to Devaloka, Indra started planning to kill Vajranābha. Vajranābhapurī was surrounded by sky-scraping fortresses and admission inside was restricted. He, therefore, called the gaily loitering swans of Devaloka to his side and told them thus : "Look here, swan—ladies. You should go to Vajranābhapurī and see Prabhāvatī and then describe to her the beauty and goodness of Pradyumna. Your description should be such that Prabhāvatī should fall in love with Pradyumna. After that you should go to Pradyumna and tell him about Prabhāvatī in a similar way. On completing your mission you should come and report to me."

Obeying the orders of Indra the swans flew to Vajranābhapurī. They saw Prabhāvatī in a secluded spot and told her just what they were asked to tell her. Then they flew to the side of Pradyumna and told him about Prabhāvatī. After successfully completing their mission they flew to Devaloka. The marriage day of Prabhāvatī drew near. The swans went to Prabhāvatī again and made her request her father to include the performances of a dramatic troupe also in the programme of marriage festivities. Vajranābha agreed and a troupe was invited. The dramatic troupe comprised among others many Yādava soldiers, Śrī Kṛṣṇa, Pradyumna and his brothers, all in disguise. Their drama was Rāmāyaṇa. The performance was superb and even Vajranābha stood amazed at their skill. The troupe was encamped in another palace and treated as royal guests. The companion maid of Prabhāvatī, Sūcīmukhī, united her with Pradyumna during the dark hours of the night and they spent the nights in amorous sports. The daughters of Vajranābha's brother, Candravatī and Guṇavatī came to know of these secret meetings and they requested Prabhāvatī to find out suitable persons among the Yādavas for them also to enjoy with. Prabhāvatī introduced them to Gada and Sāmba both sons of Kṛṣṇa. The amorous sports of all of them continued freely during the nights.

When things progressed so far, Indra and Kṛṣṇa persuaded Pradyumna to kill Vajranābha. Pradyumna started a war with Vajranābha and in the great battle that ensued Pradyumna killed Vajranābha. Pradyumna and his brothers then took the demon girls to Dvārakā. Pradyumna, Gada and Sāmba married Prabhāvatī, Candravatī and Guṇavatī respectively. By this time Kaśyapaprajāpati returned to Devaloka after his long yāga. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Chapters 91 to 95).

PRABHU. A soldier of Subrahmaṇya. (Śloka 69, Chapter 45, Śalya Parva).

PRABUDDHA. A king born of the line of Priyavrata, son of Manu. (4th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

PRACAṆḌA. A demon. Pracaṇḍa fought against Kārttikeya in the fight between Paramaśiva and the Tripuras. (Chapter 1, Gaṇeśa Purāṇa).

PRACETAS. The emperor Pṛthu, had two virtuous sons named Antardhāna and Vādī. Antardhāna got a son named Havirdhāna of his wife Śikhaṇḍinī. Dhiṣaṇā of the race of Agni became the wife of Havirdhāna She got of Havirdhāna six sons named Prācīnabarhis, Śukra, Gaya, Kṛṣṇa, Vraja and Ajina. (Chapter 14, Aṁśa 1, Viṣṇu Purāṇa). Prācīnabarhis had ten sons named Pracetas. They were Prajāpatis. Dakṣa was born of the ten Prajāpatis to Vārkṣī alias Māriṣā. Therefore he got the name Prācetas. (Śloka 5, Chapter 75, Ādi Parva).

PRĀCĪNĀVĪTA. Wearing of an upper apparel or sacred thread by brahmins on the left shoulder and through the right arm-pit is called Upavīta and vice versa is called Prācīnāvīta. If it is worn as a necklace it is called Nivīta. (Chapter 2, Śloka 63, Manusmṛti).

PRĀCĪNABARHIS. A prajāpati. (For genealogy see under Pṛthu).

Pṛthu got two sons named Antardhāna and Vādī who were very virtuous. A son named Havirdhāna was born to Antardhāna of his wife Śikhaṇḍinī. Dhiṣaṇā born of the family of Agni became the wife of Havirdhāna and they got six sons named Prācīnabarhis, Śukra, Gaya, Kṛṣṇa, Vraja and Ajina. Of these Prācīnabarhis became a great Prajāpati. He carpetted the world with darbha grass with its head turned towards the east and thus got the name (Prācī = east ; barhis = bed of Kuśa grass) Prācīnabarhis. He performed great penance and married Savarṇā, daughter of the oceans. They got ten sons who were called Pracetases and who were all masters of dhanurveda (archery). They all performed penance for ten thousand years lying submerged in water. Brahmā persuaded Prācīnabarhis to request his sons to refrain from remaining unmarried. Prācīnabarhis informed his sons about Brahmā's wish. They sat in meditation in the ocean for ten thousand years as per directions from their father and sang songs in praise of Viṣṇu. Mahāviṣṇu was pleased and he gave darśana (vision of god) to them on the surface of the ocean itself with the brilliance of blue lotus. Pracetases went into ecstasy when they saw Bhagavān coming to them riding on the back of Garuḍa and they bowed down in great devotion before him. Mahāviṣṇu asked them what they wanted and they reported they wanted a boon for the progress and prosperity of the prajās. Granting them the boon Mahāviṣṇu disappeared and the Pracetases went back to their father. (Chapter 14, Aṁśa 1, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

PRĀCINVĀN. A king who was the son of Janamejaya and grandson of Pūru. His mother's name was Anantā. This king conquered in one day all the countries in the east (prācī) and got his name Prācinvān. He got of his wife Aśmakī a son named Saṁyāti. (Śloka 12, Chapter 95, Ādi Parva). Prācinvān got a son named Manasyu. (Chapter 278, Agni Purāṇa).

PRĀCYA. A place of habitation of Purāṇic fame. (Śloka 58, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

PRADĀTĀ. Viśvadeva. (Śloka 32, Chapter 91, Anuśāsana Parva).

PRADĪPAKA. A character in Pañcatantra. (See under Pañcatantra).

PRADHĀNA. An ancient Rajarṣi. A learned woman named Sulabhā was born in his family and king Janaka conducted scholarly discussions with her. (Śloka 184, Chapter 320, Śānti Parva).

PRADOṢA. The grandson of Dhruva. Puṣpārṇa, son of Dhruva, begot of his wife Prabhā three sons named Pradoṣa, Niśītha and Vyuṣṭa. (Bhāgavata, 4th Skandha).

PRADVEṢĪ. Wife of Dīrghatamas. (See under Dīrghatamas).

PRADYOTA I. A Yakṣa. He was a member of the court of Kubera. (Śloka 15, Chapter 10, Śānti Parva).

PRADYOTA II. The first king of the dynasty of Pradyota. He was the son of a king called Śunaka. Pradyota is referred to as Śunakaputra in Vāyu Purāṇa.

Kṣemaka alias Śunaka father of Pradyota was killed by Mlecchas (a barbarous tribe). To avenge the death of his father Pradyota under the advice of Nārada decided to conduct a Mleccha Yajña and for that purpose dug a Yajñakuṇḍa seventeen miles long and seventeen miles wide. The Yajña started and in that Yajña different kinds of Mlecchas were burnt to death. From then onwards Pradyumna got the name 'Mlecchahantā' (killer of Mlecchas). (Bhaviṣya Purāṇa).

PRADYUMNA.

1) General information. A son born to Śrī Kṛṣṇa of his wife Rukmiṇī, Pradyumna was the rebirth of Kāmadeva. (For genealogy see under Kṛṣṇa).

2) Birth. It was at the time when Kāmadeva and Ratidevī were living together that Pārvatī, daughter of Himavān, started her penance to get Śiva as her husband. It was a need of the devas to get a son of Śiva to kill the fierce demon Tārakāsura. The devas employed Kāmadeva to create feelings of love in the ascetic Śiva and make him marry Pārvatī. Taking instructions from Indra, Kāmadeva took aim at Śiva with his bow and arrow. Śiva was then in deep meditation and Kāmadeva broke his concentration and Śiva got angry. He opened his third eye and burnt Kāmadeva to death.

Griefstricken by the death of her husband Ratidevī performed penance near the Himālayas to propitiate Mahādevī. Mahādevī appeared before her and consoled her thus: "Little girl, Kāmadeva would be reborn as the son of Śrī Kṛṣṇa of Rukmiṇī. He would then be named Pradyumna. The devas have cursed Śambara the leader of the asuras, during the battle between the demons and the demi-gods that he (Śambara) would be killed by Pradyumna. So Śambara is now searching for the infant which is a rebirth of Kāmadeva. So you abandon your present body and be born again as Māyāvatī to be the wife of Śambara. Pradyumna, the reborn Kāmadeva, would kill Śambara and accept you as his wife." Devī disappeared after saying this.

Obeying the instructions of Mahādevī, Rati abandoned her life and was born in the world of asuras. She grew up under the name Māyāvatī and became the wife of Śambara.

While Śrī Kṛṣṇa was living as the chief of Dvārakā his first wife Rukmiṇī was yearning for a child. Kṛṣṇa was deeply moved by the grief of Rukmiṇī and he flew on the back of Garuḍa to Kailāsa to obtain a boon for the birth of a child for her. On the way he alighted in the āśrama of Naranārāyaṇas and after obtaining the blessings of the sages there, went to Kailāsa and bowed before Śiva and explained to him the purpose of his visit. Śiva blessed him and said that Kāmadeva who was burnt to death by the fire of his third eye would take birth again as the son of Rukmiṇī. Kṛṣṇa returned to Dvārakā well-pleased. Rukmiṇī became pregnant and gave birth to Pradyumna, a rebirth of Kāmadeva. The demon Śambara knew of this birth and coming to Dvārakā in an invisible form carried away the infant when it was seven days old.

The demon threw the child into the ocean and a great fish swallowed it. The fishermen of the country of Śambara caught this fish and following the custom prevalent there presented the king with the fish. Śambara called his wife Māyāvatī and asked her to take the fish and get it cooked. When Māyāvatī cut open the fish for cooking she found to her surprise a beautiful child inside it. Even from the first sight of the child Māyāvatī had a great liking for it and so she took the child and brought it up as her own child.

When Pradyumna grew into a youth all the charm and beauty of Kāmadeva were found in him. Māyāvatī was excited to find a resemblance in him of her lost husband Kāmadeva. One day the great sage Nārada came that way and calling Māyāvatī to his side secretly revealed to her that Pradyumna was the incarnation of Kāmadeva and was thus her lost husband. From that day onwards Māyāvatī's affection for him changed into one of love. She taught him all the magic and witchcraft of Śambara. When Pradyumna found that Māyāvatī's affection for him was gradually changing into one of passionate love he questioned her about it. Māyāvatī then told him everything that happened and Pradyumna decided to kill Śambara and take Māyāvatī away.

3) War with Śambara. Pradyumna waited for an opportunity to kill Śambara. One day Pradyumna went under the flagstaff of Śambara which flew the royal flag of the king with an emblem of the figure of a lion embossed on it. He dropped it down by one stroke of his arrow. Hearing of this Śambara ordered his sons to kill Pradyumna. The eleven sons of Śambara, viz., Atisena, Citrasena, Viṣvaksena, Śrutasena, Suṣeṇa, Somasena, Ākkāla, Vikala, Kumbhaketu, Sudaṁṣṭra and Keśī, attacked Pradyumna. The devas came in their vimānas and joined sides with Pradyumna. The army of the demons teased him with various kinds of weapons like javelins, arrows, spears and battle axes. But Pradyumna cut them all by his arrows and cut to pieces all the sons of Śambara. Then Śambara sent an army against him. They were also made to flee by the arrows of Pradyumna. Then Śambara himself came on the scene. The fight became horrible. The continuous flow of arrows made it impossible for even Sun's rays to reach the earth. Then Śambara started his magical war. But Pradyumna faced that also. Śambara sent phantom lions; but Pradyumna made them immobile. Śambara then in turn created storms, rains, wild animals, serpents and vultures. All of them were killed by Pradyumna. Then with a well-aimed arrow Pradyumna killed Śambara. Then he rushed to Dvārakā carrying Māyāvatī with him. The people of Dvārakā were astounded to see them. Pradyumna went to Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Rukmiṇī and told them the whole story. They were overjoyed to find them and blessed them.

Aniruddha who married Uṣā the daughter of Bāṇa was the son of Pradyumna. (Chapters 103 to 108, 10th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

4) Prabhāvatīpariṇaya. Marriage with Prabhāvatī. (See under Prabhāvatī).

5) Other details.

(i) Pradyumna was born of a part of Sanatkumāra. (Śloka 152, Chapter 67, Ādi Parva).

(ii) Pradyumna was one among those who came to Arjuna from Dvārakā with dowry for his marriage with Subhadrā. (Śloka 31, Chapter 220, Ādi Parva).

(iii) Pradyumna was present for the Rājasūya Yajña of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Śloka 16, Chapter 34, Sabhā Parva).

(iv) Pradyumna consoled and encouraged the Yādava army which stood dumb-founded before the valorous exploits of King Sālva. (Chapter 17, Vana Parva).

(v) Pradyumna fainted during a fierce fight between himself and King Sālva. (Chapter 17, Śloka 22, Vana Parva).
(vi) Pradyumna slew King Sālva in the end. (Chapter 19, Vana Parva).
(vii) Pradyumna means the merging of Bhūtajāla during Pralaya. (Śloka 37, Chapter 340, Śānti Parva).
(viii) Pradyumna fell dead by the beatings of the Bhojas during the Mausala fight. (Śloka 33, Chapter 3, Mausala Parva).
(ix) After his death Pradyumna took the form of Sanatkumāra. (Śloka 13, Chapter 5, Svargārohaṇa Parva).

PRĀGAHI. A preceptor. He has expressed his views on Yajñas in the book Sāṅkhyāyana Brāhmaṇa. Prāgahi describes what should be done in case any of the Karmans is left out by mistake during a Yajña. (Sāṅkhyāyana Brāhmaṇa).

PRAGHASĀ I. A rākṣasī (demoness). She was one among the several leading demonesses who sat around Sītā in Laṅkā to coax her into accepting Rāvaṇa as her husband. An ill-tempered woman, this demoness tried several methods to win Sītā to the side of Rāvaṇa. (Sarga 23, Sundara Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

PRAGHASĀ II. A female follower of Subrahmaṇya. (Śloka 16, Chapter 46, Śalya Parva).

PRAGHASA(S). A tribe of rākṣasas (demons). (Chapter 285, Vana Parva).

PRAGHOṢA. A son of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (10th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

PRĀGJYOTIṢA. The palace of Narakāsura. Narakāsura was known as Bhaumāsura also. After the death of this asura Bhagadatta became King there. After Bhagadatta Vajradatta became ruler there. Prāgjyotiṣa was an invincible fortress of the asuras. (Chapter 23, Verse 28, Sabhā Parva; Chapter 48, Udyoga Parva and Chapter 75, Aśvamedha Parva).

PRAHĀSA I. A serpent born of the family of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. This serpent was burnt to death at the Sarpasatra of Janamejaya. (Śloka 16, Chapter 57, Ādi Parva).

PRAHĀSA II. A soldier of Subrahmaṇya. (Śloka 68, Chapter 45, Śalya Parva).

PRAHASTA. A minister of Rāvaṇa.
1) Genealogy. Descending in order from Viṣṇu—Brahmā—Heti — Vidyutkeśa — Sukeśa — Sumālī — Prahasta.
The demon Sukesa got of his wife Devavatī three sons named Mālyavān, Sumālī and Mālī. Of these Sumālī got of his wife Ketumatī ten sons named Prahasta, Akampana, Vikaṭa, Kālakāmukha, Dhūmrākṣa, Daṇḍa, Supārśva, Saṁhrāda, Prakvāta and Bhāsakarṇa and four daughters named Vekā, Puṣpotkaṭā, Kaikasī and Kumbhīnasī. Most of the sons were the ministers of Rāvaṇa.
2) Other details.
(i) Prahasta was the chief minister of Rāvaṇa. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).
(ii) In the Rāma-Rāvaṇa battle Prahasta fought against Vibhīṣaṇa and was killed by the latter. (Śloka 4, Chapter 286, Vana Parva).

PRAHETI I. A demon. Once Brahmā, the creator, became hungry and in his anger he produced some sounds which became Rākṣasas and Yakṣas. When one said "Rakṣāmahe" the rākṣasas (demons) came into being and when the other said 'Yakṣāmahe' the Yakṣas came into being. It was Praheti who became the father of the rākṣasas and Heti, the father of the Yakṣas. Both of them became mighty and powerful like Madhu and Kaiṭabha. Of these Praheti knew that only by virtuous life could one attain happiness in the next world and so remaining unmarried went to the valley of the Himālayas and doing penance there attained mokṣa. Heti when he came of age married Bhayā, sister of Kāla, and got a son named Vidyutkeśa. Vidyutkeśa married Sālakaṭaṅkā, daughter of Sandhyā. The rākṣasa race born of them lived in Pātāla and Laṅkā. In the Rāma-Rāvaṇa battle all were killed.

PRAHETI II. A demon. This demon travels along with a Sūrya named Aryaman during the month of Vaiśākha (May). (12th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

PRAHLĀDA I.
1) General information. Son of a rākṣasa King who saw Mahāviṣṇu by means of his devotion in the form of Narasiṁha (man-lion). His father was Hiraṇyakaśipu and mother Kayādhū.
2) Genealogy. Descending in order from Viṣṇu — Brahmā — Marīci — Kaśyapa — Hiraṇyakaśipu — Prahlāda.
3) Birth. Kaśyapaprajāpati got of his wife Diti two sons named Hiraṇyākṣa and Hiraṇyakaśipu and a daughter named Siṁhikā. Of these two, Hiraṇyākṣa got boons from Brahmā and roamed about as a very valiant hero destroying everything on earth and finally pulling down the earth to the depths of the ocean. Mahāviṣṇu then incarnated as Varāha and after killing Hiraṇyākṣa lifted the earth from the ocean and put it in its original position.
Hiraṇyakaśipu became very angry at Mahāviṣṇu for killing his brother and with a view to wreaking vengeance on him performed penance to propitiate Brahmā. When the emperor of the demons, Hiraṇyakaśipu, thus went to the forests for performing penance the Devas attacked the land of the demons. A great fight ensued in which the devas were defeated. While fleeing away thus Indra took away Kayādhū wife of Hiraṇyakaśipu by force. Nārada who heard the moanings of the poor woman under the clutches of Indra got her released from Indra's hold. For some time she stayed in the āśrama of Nārada worshipping him. Kayādhū was pregnant then. Nārada taught the child in Kayādhū's womb lessons in Vedas, moral philosophy, duty and spiritual knowledge. When Hiraṇyakaśipu returned after his penance Kayādhū joined him and very soon gave birth to a son. That boy was Prahlāda.
Hiraṇyakaśipu begot of Kayādhū five sons, Prahlāda, Saṁhlāda, Anuhlāda, Śibi and Bāṣkala. Prahlāda got three sons named Virocana, Kumbha and Nikumbha. The celebrated emperor Mahābali was the son of Virocana. Bāṇa was the son of Mahābali. Uṣā, daughter of Bāṇa, was married to Aniruddha, son of Pradyumna and grandson of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (Chapter 65, Ādi Parva; Chapter 19, Agni Purāṇa; Chapter 15, Aṁśa 1, Viṣṇu Purāṇa and 7th Skandha, Bhāgavata).
4) Boyhood and education. Hiraṇyakaśipu decided to make Prahlāda an instrument to wreak vengeance on Mahāviṣṇu. Entrusting the education of his son to able preceptors he instructed that the boy should never mutter 'Nārāyaṇāya namaḥ' but should on the other hand mutter 'Hiraṇyāya namaḥ' only. Not only that, he wiped out the name of Nārāyaṇa from the land altogether. Prahlāda stayed in the house of the preceptor and studied his lessons. One day Prahlāda went to see his father along with his preceptor. Hiraṇyakaśipu was drunk then. Prahlāda went and prostrated before his father and Hiraṇyakaśipu lifting the boy up from the ground asked him with affection to repeat to him all the good things he had learned so far and Prahlāda quickly repeated thus :—"I bow down to Mahāviṣṇu, the root cause of all things seen and unseen, the protector of this visible universe, who is without beginning, centre and end and who is without origin, growth and decay."

The words of Prahlāda struck his father like a thunderbolt. With his lips trembling with anger Hiraṇyakaśipu stared with his blood-red eyes at the preceptor. The frightened Guru again and again submitted that he had never taught him any of the kind the boy had repeated before his father. Then who must have taught him those things ? the emperor enquired. Then Prahlāda said that all those things were put into his mind by Mahāviṣṇu himself. A hot discussion then took place between Prahlāda and his father and in the end Hiraṇyakaśīpu ordered the preceptor to take away Prahlāda and make another earnest attempt to correct him and bring him round to the emperor's liking. Prahlāda stayed for another period with the Guru serving him with devotion and studying well. After a long time Prahlāda was again taken before his father and the latter as before asked him to repeat what he had studied so far. To the shocking disappointment of Hiraṇyakaśipu Prahlāda again repeated verses in praise of Mahāviṣṇu. The emperor's rage knew no bounds and he ordered his men to kill his son. (Chapter 17, Aṁśa 1, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

5) Torturing Prahlāda. On hearing the order of Hiraṇyakaśipu many armed soldiers surrounded Prahlāda. Prahlāda addressed them thus : "Oh daityas, Mahāviṣṇu resides in your weapons, in you all and in me also. Since that is the real truth your weapons will not injure me." The daityas struck him hard with their weapons but Prahlāda did not feel pain at all.

Hiraṇyakaśipu then sent thousands of poisonous serpents led by great ones like Takṣaka. When they started thrusting their venomous fangs into his body, Prahlāda stood cheerfully meditating on Mahāviṣṇu and he did not even feel the bitings. On the other hand the fangs of the serpents dropped out from their mouths and the gems on the heads of the big ones burst out and all the snakes felt sorry for their action.

Hiraṇyakaśipu then sent the aṣṭadiggajas (the eight elephants who bear the burden of this earth) to kill Prahlāda. The huge animals bigger than the biggest of mountains threw the boy to the ground and struck him with their long and pointed tusks. Prahlāda lay meditating on Mahāviṣṇu and the tusks that hit the body of Prahlāda were broken to bits. Prahlāda was then thrown into a pit of fire. But the wind-blown ferocious fire was not able to burn him and as he lay in the firepit meditating on Mahāviṣṇu he felt he was lying on a bed of lotuses.

When things progressed so far the astonished priests of the palace advised the emperor to put a stop to torturing Prahlāda. Their consoling words alleviated his rage and he sent Prahlāda again to his Guru for another term of study. He stayed with his Guru and continued his studies. Whenever he got leisure he taught the other inmates of the āśrama lessons in Viṣṇumārga. Hiraṇyakaśipu was informed of this and obeying orders from him the asuras gave poison to Prahlāda. That too was of no avail. The royal priests got angry and they created a devil as ferocious as the flames of fire. The devil with mighty thumpings on earth dashed towards Prahlāda and hit him on his breast with its spike. The spike broke into pieces and the devil turning back cursed the priests. Then the daityarāja took him to the top of a mountain twentyfour miles high and pushed him down from there. The boy fell down meditating on Mahāviṣṇu and the goddess of earth received him with extended hands and prevented a painful impact with the ground. The father became furious and sent Śambarāsura to kill his son. Śambara tried many magical attacks. Prahlāda without any ill-feeling towards Śambara sat meditating on Mahāviṣṇu and then Viṣṇu sent his Sudarśana wheel against the demon and he was forced to retreat. Then by orders from Hiraṇyakaśipu the wind god entered the body of Prahlāda. Prahlāda knew it and he sat meditating on Viṣṇu and the latter entering the body of Prahlāda drank the wind inside him. When Hiraṇyakaśipu was defeated in all his attempts to kill Prahlāda he sent his son again to his Guru. Then the preceptor taught him everything that was needed for a king and also the science of justice written by Śukrācārya. When Prahlāda completed his education and the Guru felt the boy had become humble he took him back to Hiraṇyakaśipu.

Once again Hiraṇyakaśipu entered into a discussion on god with his son and dissatisfied with his continued devotion to Viṣṇu decided again to kill his son. He was thrown into the ocean bound hand and foot. With every movement of Prahlāda the ocean became turbulent and water rose on all sides. There was a deluge on earth. Hiraṇyakaśipu called the daityas to his side and said : "Oh daityas, bring all the mountains on earth and create a barrier round the ocean so that my wicked son cannot get outside the ocean. Fire does not kill this boy; he is not wounded by any of the weapons; wind. poison, devils, magic, falls from heights and even the diggajas could not kill him. So let him remain in water for thousands of years together and then he will die."

The daityas and dānavas brought mountains and dropped them over Prahlāda lying inside the ocean. The mountains lay spread over thousands of miles. Lying thus in the ocean the pious boy prayed to Mahāviṣṇu and the latter appeared before him and granted him boons. Escaping from the ocean Prahlāda went to his father and prostrated before him. Hiraṇyakaśipu was astounded to see him alive and taking him in his arms embraced him and with tears rolling down his cheeks for having tortured him so far asked him "My son, you are still alive, are you not ?" After that he started treating him as his son. (Chapter 20, Aṁśa 1, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

6) The incarnation of Narasiṁha. But as days went by Hiraṇyakaśipu got wild again. He could not bear his son's increasing devotion to Viṣṇu. He hated to hear Prahlāda's chantings of Viṣṇu's name and so one dar while Prahlāda was repeating his chantings of Viṣṇu's name Hiraṇyakaśipu jumped up from his seat with sword in his hand and asked Prahlāda where his Viṣṇu was. Prahlāda very calmly replied that Viṣṇu was present everywhere even in stones, trees or the pillars of the palace. Hiraṇyakaśipu in uncontrollable rage struck the nearest pillar with his sword. Then to the shocking surprise of Hiraṇyakaśipu Mahāviṣṇu in the form of a fierce man-lion (Narasiṁha) jumped out from the pillar. The figure was terrifying to look at. It had fiery eyes, a dagger-like tongue with blood oozing from it, shaggy neck with trembling eyebrows, two teeth one on each side curved like the crescent moon, a black face inside a cave-like heap of manes, hairs strong and pointed like diamond needles, nails white and cup-like and a body as bright and brilliant as a thousand crores of suns. Only Prahlāda could stand before the figure and look at it.

The man-lion jumped on the body of Hiraṇyakaśipu and tearing open the belly of Hiraṇyakaśipu took the bloody intestines out and wearing it round its neck performed a naked dance. Everything happened in no time and the Narasiṁha changing into the form of Mahāviṣṇu blessed Prahlāda and then disappeared. (7th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

7) Prahlāda and Naranārāyaṇas. When Hiraṇyakaśipu was killed Prahlāda was crowned as emperor of the demons in Pātāla. At that time, once Cyavana the best of the Bhṛgus, went to Nāgakuleśvaratīrtha to bathe in the Narmadā. He saw Mahādeva there. When he entered the waters of the river a serpent Kekaralohita by name bit him and took him to Pātāla. Cyavana meditated on Viṣṇu when he was bitten by the serpent and so he was not affected by the poison of the serpent. He therefore, roamed about in Pātāla accepting the hospitality of the serpent maidens. Travelling thus he reached the land of the dānavas. He was worshipped by the daityas there and Prahlāda finding an ascetic of great saintliness honoured and worshipped by his people received him with respect and worshipped him and enquired about him. Cyavana said : "I came today to see Nāgakuleśvara and bathe in the Narmadā river. But as soon as I entered the river I was caught by a serpent and was brought to Pātāla. I was thus able to see you." Hearing the words of Cyavana the lord of the daityas said : "Oh, Bhagavan, which are all the sacred tīrthas of the earth, which are in the heavens and which all in Pātāla? Please do enlighten us." Cyavana replied ; "Mighty king, Naimiṣa is the best of all tīrthas on earth, Puṣkara in the heavens and Cakratīrtha in Pātāla."

The daitya emperor turned to the dānavas and said "Make all preparations immediately. We must go to earth to bathe in the holy tīrtha, Naimiṣa. We can then see Puṇḍarīkākṣa (lotus-eyed) Viṣṇu sitting there as Pītāmbara (robed in yellow)." Hearing this dānavas with heavy equipments started from Pātāla with their king to the earth.

All the mighty dānavas reached the forest of Naimiṣa and after bathing in the holy pond there went for hunting. During their wanderings they found the river Sarasvatī, flowing with crystal-like water. On the shore of the same they saw a pine tree covered with arrows. The arrows were sticking to it one above another. The arrows looked like serpents and the gruesome sight roused Prahlāda's anger. Near that tree sat two ascetics wearing the hide of Kṛṣṇa deer and matted hair on thei heads. By their side were two divine bows, Śārṅga and Ajagava with two never-empty quivers. Prahlāda mistook them for two fake sannyāsins and therefore questioned them thus : "Why are you thus falsely trading on virtuousness? What connection is there between matted hair and penance and weapons of such supreme quality?" Then one of the ṛṣis, Nararṣi, said "King of daityas, why do you think like that? If one is powerful whatever one does will be right." Prahlāda jeered and said "When I, who have fixed limits for virtue and righteousness, am here what power can you wield?" Nara replied "Oh king, our ability is really supreme. There is nobody in the three worlds to conquer us in a fight." Prahlāda got furious on hearing the boasting of the ṛṣi and took a vow thus immediately : "I will fight and win against Naranārāyaṇas." Then the great Prahlāda keeping aside his army in the forest took his bow and made a thundering noise with it.

At once Nara took his Ajagava bow and showered arrows on Prahlāda with it. But Prahlāda broke them all with his gold-plated matchless arrows. Nara got angry when he found all his arrows broken to pieces so easily by Prahlāda and he sent different kinds of arrows in quick succession. But the daitya king replied with astonishing rapidity. For one arrow of Nara the daitya sent two and the fight became grim. Nara covered the whole world above with arrows and the daitya emperor smashed them all to pieces by his gold-plated ones.

The fight then turned to one with divine weapons. The asura chief took the divine Brahmāstra and then Nara took the fierce Nārāyaṇāstra. They met in the air and fell down powerless. When his Brahmāstra got fused Prahlāda got wild with anger and taking a mace jumped out of his chariot and rushed at Nara. When Nārāyaṇa saw the daitya chief rushing towards Nara with his mace he asked Nara to step aside and faced the demon himself. Prahlāda then attacked Nārāyaṇa and hit him with the mace. But the mace broke into a hundred pieces and Prahlāda was forced to use other weapons. The fight became ghastly and even devas assembled above to witness the fight. When Prahlāda found it was getting more and more difficult for him to defeat the Naranārāyaṇas he prayed to Mahāviṣṇu for help. Viṣṇu appeared before him and when Prahlāda asked him the reason why he could not defeat Naranārāyaṇas, Viṣṇu replied that they were the sons of Dharmadeva who were invincible by weapons. They could be won over only by devotion.

Hearing that Prahlāda returned to Pātāla and entrusting the administration of his kingdom to his cousin Andhaka, son of Hiraṇyākṣa, Prahlāda returned to Badarikāśrama and erecting an āśrama there started a penance to propitiate Naranārāyaṇas. When Naranārāyaṇas appeared before him Prahlāda requested to be pardoned for fighting against them. They pardoned him and blessed him and Prahlāda returned to Pātāla. Even after his return Prahlāda did not take back the administration from Andhaka. He constructed an āśrama away from the palace and lived there performing penance. He spent many years there as an advisor to the asura Kings. (Chapters 7 and 8, Vāmana Purāṇa).

8) Blessings of Śukra. Andhaka, son of Hiraṇyākṣa, ruled over the empire only for a short time. At that time there was a fight between the asuras and the devas in which the asuras were defeated. After a truce with the devas Bali, son of Virocana, and grandson of Prahlāda was crowned the emperor of the asuras. Prahlāda then went to the mountain Gandhamādana and started doing penance to increase his personal power. Bali ruled as an antagonist of the devas and so very soon a grisly battle ensued between the devas and the asuras and Mahāviṣṇu defeated them. They fled from their land and took refuge under their preceptor Śukrācārya. Śukra then told them thus : "You remain here without fear. I shall protect you by my power of mantra and medicines. I shall devote my cogent brilliance to your advantage. It is enough if you remain here with full confidence in me."

The devas understood all these plans of the daityas through spies and they met in conference to consider their future plans. They knew that Śukrācārya was very powerful and if the daityas attacked them with the help of Śukrācārya the defeat of the devas was sure. They feared that they might even be compelled to flee from Svargaloka. How could the daityas under the shield of the mighty Śukra be destroyed ? That was the worrrying thought of the devas.

They were thus worrying about this when Śukrācārya went to do penance for attaining more power. The daityas awaited the return of their ācārya. In the meantime they sent Prahlāda who was, though a daitya, a friend of the devas to talk peace terms with the devas. The mission was successful and the devas agreed to a no-war treaty. Prahlāda returned triumphant.

Śukra did severe penance to propitiate Śiva and Śiva appeared before Śukrācārya and when he knew that the purpose of Śukra was to defeat the devas he was a bit embarrassed. So he told him thus : "Oh sage Śukra, you take a vow and do penance with your head downwards over smoky incense for a thousand years. You will then attain power and happiness as you desire." In fact Śiva thought Śukra might not be able to complete the penance and so not succeed in his plan of destroying the devas. But Śukra started the penance in right earnest.

The devas were frightened when they knew the deceit of the daityas and the strategy of their preceptor. They decided to go to war with the daityas immediately. The daityas were in a fix. They knew that if they fought without the help of their guru defeat to them was sure. So they ran to the mother of Śukra and sought her help. The devas rebelled against Śukra's mother and she invoked the goddess of sleep and put all the devas into deep slumber. Mahāviṣṇu stealthily carried away Indra lying asleep. Indra persuaded Mahāviṣṇu. to kill Śukra's mother and he cut off the head of Śukra's mother by the divine discus, Sudarśana.

Bhṛgumaharṣi, father of Śukra, was angry at that arrogant and cruel deed of Mahāviṣṇu and cursed him saying that he would be born on earth several times as man. After that he brought to life by sprinkling water his wife lying dead with her head severed from her body. Knowing well the havoc that would be created when Śukra came back after his penance Indra sent his daughter Jayantī to destroy the penance of Śukra. She went in the guise of a demon girl to serve Śukrācārya. In the meantime at the request of Indra Bṛhaspati took the form of Śukrācārya and presented himself before the daityas. The daityas believed him to be their real guru Śukra and were pleased.

Ten years went by and one day Śukrācārya remembering the old events left Jayantī and went to his court in the demon land. Bṛhaspati had by that time returned to devaloka fully satisfied with his mission. The devas not knowing that Śukra had returned started for a war with the daityas. Śukra when he came back went wild when he knew that his people had been worshipping Bṛhaspati for ten years. The angered preceptor was not to be pacified by any amount of arguments and so they sent Prahlāda to Śukrācārya and Prahlāda pleaded for controlling his anger and Śukra did so.

Śukra then saw with his divine vision the maneuverings in mind of the devas and was convinced that a war with the devas at that juncture would be an utter failure. So he advised the daityas to desist from war and assured them that during the period of Sāvarṇi Manu to come, emperor Bali would become all-powerful and he would then fight and win the devas. Prahlāda returned and told the asuras the message of Śukrācārya. But the daityas were not satisfied and compelled Prahlāda to go to war with the devas. At last Prahlāda was forced to agree and a fierce devāsura battle ensued. Prahlāda met Indra in a single combat and it prolonged for a hundred years. In the end Prahlāda won. Indra prayed to the goddess and fearing that she might destroy the demon world, Prahlāda also prayed to her. The devī was pleased with both of them and she pacified them both and each went back to his own place. (4th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

9) Other details.

(i) Once there was a fight between Prahlāda and Kāla. (Bhaviṣya Parva, Chapter 59).

(ii) Bali who was trampled down to Pātāla built a Viṣṇu temple and worshipped Viṣṇu following the advice of Prahlāda. (See under Bali).

(iii) Once Prahlāda taught Indra the rules of good conduct. (Śloka 28, Chapter 124 Śānti Parva).

(iv) Once Uśanas sang in honour of Prahlāda. (Śloka 50, Chapter 139, Śānti Parva).

(v) Once Prahlāda learnt the importance of Ājagaravṛtti from a sage. (Chapter 179, Śānti Parva).

(vi) During the reign of emperor Pṛthu when the goddess of earth (Bhūmidevī) was milked, the asuras used Prahlāda as the calf to milk madya (wine) from her. (4th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

(vii) Prahlāda sits in the court of Varuṇa and worships him. (Śloka 12, Chapter 9, Sabhā Parva).

(viii) Prahlāda once went to the court of Brahmā to worship him. (Śloka 19, Chapter 11, Sabhā Parva).

(ix) Prahlāda acted as mediator in the controversy between Virocana and Sudhanvā. (See under Sudhanvā). (For knowing more details about Prahlāda please see under Virocana and Bali.)

PRAHLĀDA II. A Kṣatriya King born of the family of Bālhika. This King belonged to the line of kings under the demon king Śalabha. (Śloka 30, Chapter 67, Ādi Parva).

PRAHLĀDA III. A serpent. This serpent sits in the court of Varuṇa and worships him. (Śloka 10, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

PRAHLĀDA IV. A place of human habitation of Purāṇic fame. (Śloka 46, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

PRAHUTA. A great yajña.

Manusmṛti states that respecting each of the following five is considered as a yajña in itself :—A devatā, a guest, servants, parents and the self. Of these the first is called Āhuta, second, huta, third, prahuta, fourth brāhmyahuta and fifth, prāśita (Ślokas 72. 73, Chapter 3, Manusmṛti).

PRAJĀGARĀ. A celestial lady. Once when Arjuna went to the court of Indra this celestial maiden gave performance in dance at the request of Indra. (Śloka 30, Chapter 43, Vana Parva).

PRAJĀGARAPARVA. A sub-division of Udyoga Parva of Mahābhārata. This comprises chapters 33 to 40 of Udyoga Parva.

PRAJAÑGHA. A rākṣasa (demon) of the party of Rāvaṇa. This demon was killed by Aṅgada. (Sarga 76, Yuddha Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

PRAJĀPATI(S). Creators of the world. With a view to making creation easy Brahmā at first created twentyone Prajāpatis (creators). They are Brahmā, Rudra, Manu, Dakṣa, Bhṛgu, Dharma, Tapa, Yama Marīci, Aṅgiras, Atri, Pulastya, Pulaha, Kratu, Vasiṣṭha, Parameṣṭhī, Sūrya, Candra, Kardama, Krodha and Vikrīta. (Chapter 384, Śānti Parva).

PRAJĀPATIVEDĪ. This is a holy place situated in the middle of four sacred places in Kurukṣetra named Tarantuka, Arantuka. Paraśurāmakuṇḍa and Macakruka. This place is called the Uttara (north) vedī of Prajāpati also. Besides this, four other places, Pratiṣṭhānapurī (with Prayāga), Kambala, Aśvatara and Bhogavatī are called Prajāpativedīs. The aforesaid five sacred Places are called Brahmavedī also. (Chapter 53, Śalya Parva; Chapter 85, Vana Parva).

PRĀJĀPATYA. A kind of marriage.

Sahobhau caratāṁ dharma-miti vācānubhāṣya ca /
Kanyāpradānamabhyarcya
Prājāpatyo vidhiḥ smṛtaḥ //
(Sloka 30, Chapter 3, Manusmṛti).

Giving in marriage to a brahmacārī one's daughter after inviting him to his house and worshipping him is called Prājāpatya.

PRAKĀLA. A serpent born of the family of Vāsuki. This serpent was burnt to death at the Sarpasatra of Janamejaya. (Chapter 57, Ādi Parva).

PRAKĀŚA. A brahmin born of the family of Bhṛgu. He was the son of Tamas who belonged to the race of Gṛtsamada. (Śloka 63, Chapter 30, Anuśāsana Parva).

PRĀKKOSALA. The place east of Kosala. Sahadeva conquered this place situated in Dakṣiṇabhārata (Śloka 13, Chapter 31, Sabhā Parva).

PRĀKṚTA. A Yakṣa. He became very rich within twelve days. (Śloka 19, Chapter 134, Vana Parva).

PRAKṚTI ; PURUṢA. Prakṛti (matter) and Puruṣa (spirit) are two basic factors essential for production of the Prapañca (the visible world which is the scene of manifold action) as man and woman are for the production of progeny. From Puruṣa (male), Prakṛti (female) originated and then they together created the Prapañca. The Vedas and Purāṇas make statements everywhere regarding Prakṛti and Puruṣa and three of the most important ones are given below :

1) 'Pra' means 'principal' and 'Kṛti' means 'creation'. Therefore the word is meant to convey the meaning 'one that is the principal factor for creation'. 'Pra' means 'sāttvic', 'Kṛ' means 'rājasic' and 'ta' means 'tāmasic' and the word 'Prakṛti' thus conveys the power of the three guṇas'. 'Pra' means 'before' and 'Kṛti' means creation and so Prakṛti means that which existed before creation.

Before creation Prakṛti lay merged with the Supreme Spirit without separate existence. But when the desire for creation was aroused, this Supreme Spirit divided itself into Prakṛti and Puruṣa. Then the right half becomes 'Puruṣa' and the left half 'Prakṛti' Even though they are thus two yogīndras (kings among sages) they see themselves as merged with the eternal One like fire and heat and assert the truth Sarvaṁ Brahmamayam (everything is Brahman, the Supreme Spirit). It was this basic Prakṛti that took forms as the five goddesses, Durgā, Lakṣmī, Sarasvatī, Sāvitrī and Rādhā. (9th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

2) Puruṣa is the vital sentient Truth that sets in action the entire Prapañca. This Puruṣa is Supreme among the Supreme, beyond human comprehension. without form, colour, name, without origin, growth, change or end, residing in himself and that which can only be imagined to exist. This puruṣa has got two different forms, the visible and the invisible and also a third imaginary one, time. The sages call Puruṣa the Sūkṣmaprakṛti (The subtle all-pervading spirit, the supreme soul). This Sūkṣmaprakṛti which cannot be measured by any unit of measure, is not attached to anyhing, is imperishable, is without decrepitude, is immovable and is without the senses of sound, touch smell or form. This Prakṛti endowed with the three guṇas, without beginning or end is eternal, is the root cause of this Prapañca. This Prakṛti pervaded over Prapañca from the beginning of the great Deluge to the beginning of creation. Brahmajñānins who were great seers and who knew the truth of the Vedas speak about Prakṛti thus : "There was no night or day then, neither the earth nor the sky, neither light nor darkness. There was nothing but this. There was only one Brahman merged in which were Prakṛti and Puruṣa, a brahman which could not be understood by any of the five senses nor by intelligence. It was from the supreme being of Viṣṇu that the two forms Prakṛti and Puruṣa originated. These two were separated from Viṣṇu at the time of the great deluge and again joined together at the time of creation. The form of Viṣṇu from which these occurred was termed Time. During the last great deluge this visible Prapañca merged with it and so, this deluge was called Prākṛtapralaya. Time is eternal, having no end and so the process of Sṛṣṭi, Sthiti and Saṁhāra (creation, existence and destruction) continued without any interruption.

After that, during Pralaya (deluge), Prakṛti and Puruṣa stand apart due to equality of the guṇas, Sattva, Rajas and Tamas in Prakṛti. Viṣṇu in the form of Time starts the work to join them both together. Then when the time of creation came Viṣṇu, the Supreme Being, the supreme soul, the god of all living beings, omnipresent and omnipotent by his will entered the emotionless Puruṣa and emotional Prakṛti and created sensations in them. Smell is the sense which creates sensation in one by its nearness to it. Just like that Viṣṇu by his very presence near them created disturbances in them. It is Viṣṇu, the best of Puruṣas, who acts as Prakṛti which can disturb and which can be disturbed, which exists in states of contraction and expansion. It is Viṣṇu, the god of the gods, who exists in forms of Sūkṣma and Sthūla, and as the great tattva and as the devas like Brahmā.

The Mahattattva originated from Prakṛti, which was existing as emotionless due to the equalisation of the three guṇas, when at the time of creation Viṣṇu, Truth in the form of Kṣetrajña (knower), merged with Prakṛti. The Mahattattva in its three forms, Sattva, Rajas and Tamas lay enveloped by Prakṛti just as a seed is covered by its husk. From this Mahattattva originated the three egos, Vaikārika, Taijasa and Tāmasa, the cause of the Pañcabhūtas. Because that ego contained the three guṇas it became the cause of the origin of the bhūtas (elements) and indriyas (senses). Ego pervaded the Mahattattva just as the Mahattattva pervaded (Aṁśa 1, Chapter 2, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

3) In the beginning during the Deluge the world was all water. Then Śiva tore open his thigh and dropped a drop of blood in the waters. It became a huge egg. He broke it and from it came out Puruṣa and from Puruṣa he made Prakṛti for the creation of the Prapañca. These two, Prakṛti and Puruṣa, created the Prajāpatis and they in turn created the prajās. Puruṣa seeing the vast creation going on due to him became arrogant and Śiva chopped off his head. Śiva became repentant of his hasty deed later. To atone for his sin he took the skull in his hand and vowed that he would ever carry a skull in his hand and that he would live in cremation grounds. The two halves of the great egg became ākāśa and bhūmi (earth and sky). (Taraṅga 2, Kathāpīṭhalambaka, Kathāsaritsāgara).

RALAMBA I. A notorious dānava born to Kaśyapaprajāpati of his wife Danu. (Śloka 29, Chapter 65, Ādi Parva).

PRALAMBA II. An asura (demon). He attacked Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Balarāma and was killed by Balarāma. (10th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

PRALAYA (Destruction). Pralaya is of four kinds. The first is nityapralaya. This is the destruction going on daily for all animate and inanimate objects born on earth. The second is Brāhmapralaya or naimittikapralaya. The third is Prākṛtapralaya. This is the great deluge made by prakṛti (nature) at the end of a thousand Caturyugas (four yugas). The fourth is ātyantikapralaya. This is the union of the soul with the Supreme Being due to Jñāna. Of the above the Brāhmapralaya, or naimittikapralaya happens at the end of a Kalpa or a day of Brahmā or a thousand yugas. The nature of this pralaya is as follows : At the end of a thousand yugas the world will look famished. Then there will be excessive drought for a hundred years together and everything in this world would be destroyed then. Then Mahāviṣṇu, lord of everything in this universe, would present himself in the seven big rays of the Sun and drink to emptiness all the waters of all the three worlds, earth, ocean and pātāla. Then by the divine power of Mahāviṣṇu the seven rays of the Sun which had grown fat by drinking this water would become seven separate Suns. These Suns would burn all the three worlds including Pātāla. Then the earth would look like the back of a tortoise (Kūrmapṛṣṭha). At that time Rudra, equal in brilliance to Kālāgni, would from beneath burn the pātāla sending breaths from Ādiśeṣa. After pātāla Kālāgnirudra would burn the earth and then the heavens. Because of this all the worlds would look like globes of fire. Then the inhabitants of these worlds would go to Maharloka unable to bear the heat and from there to Janaloka. Thus Viṣṇu in the form of Rudra would destroy everything.

Then from the face of Viṣṇu would originate clouds and lightning in different forms. Those clouds would rain incessantly for a hundred years and destroy the fire prevailing everywhere. When the rains become unbearable Vāyu would encroach upon the seats of the Saptarṣis in the ocean and by the breath of Viṣṇu destroy all the clouds. At that time Viṣṇu, lord of all, would lie on the back of Ādiśeṣa in that one big ocean drinking vāyu (air). Viṣṇu will lie thus for a period of a Kalpa in yogic slumber meditating on Vāsudeva taking the name Madhusūdana and form of Brahmā praised by the siddhamunis inside the ocean. After that he would take the form of Brahmā and start creation.

In Prākṛtapralaya this whole universe would lie in extinction for a period of two parārddhas. One parārddha is 100000000000000000 years (one followed by seventeen zeroes) and so the period of a prākṛtapralaya is double the above number of years. The world would then come into the grip of a great drought; fire would break out and burn away everything in this world from Mahattattva to Viśeṣa. Then prompted by the desire of Viṣṇu, pratisañcaraṇa (back into nature) would occur. Then Jala (water) would absorb the guṇas of bhūmi like gandha (smell) and when the qualities of the earth are thus absorbed the earth would merge with pralaya. Jala is rasātmaka. Agni will absorb the rasa of Jala and Jala would be kindled. The guṇa of Agni is form and is in the form of Sun. Vāyu would absorb it and Agni would be destroyed. Vāyu would then become powerful and shake the world. The quality of Vāyu is touch and the ether would absorb that guṇa of Vāyu and Vāyu would be destroyed. The quality of ether is sound and it would be absorbed by the elements. If the elements are absorbed one by one the earth would merge into water (Jala) and Jala in Agni, and Agni in Vāyu and Vāyu in ether and ether in Ahaṅkāra (ego). Ahaṅkāra would merge in Mahattattva. This Mahattattva would be absorbed by Prakṛti. Prakṛti has got two forms:— Vyakta and Avyakta (Manifest and Un-manifest). The Vyakta would merge with Avyakta. Puruṣa is single, pure and without decay. But he is also part of Paramātmā (the Supreme Being). So Prakṛti and Puruṣa would both merge into the Supreme Being. There are no distinctions, fabrications in Paramātmā, the lord of all. It is only an existence. It is such a Paramātmā that should be known and which itself is knowledge. The Paramātmā is beyond the Ātmā (soul). It is in such an indescribable Paramātmā that all are dissolved during a Prākṛtapralaya. (Chapter 368, Agni Purāṇa).

PRAMADA. A son of Vasiṣṭha. He was one of the Saptarṣis of Uttama Manvantara. (8th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

PRAMADVARĀ. Wife of Ruru.

1) Birth. Pramadvarā was the daughter of the nymph Menakā born of the Gandharva Viśvāvasu. As soon as the child was born, Menakā threw the child into the forest and left for Devaloka.

Sthūlakeśa, a sage who was engaged in penance in that forest in a hermitage heard the cry of a child and came out of his āśrama. On seeing a new-born child lying unclaimed and uncared for, he took the child to his āśrama and named her Pramadvarā and brought her up. She grew into a charming maiden and one day Prince Ruru coming that way while hunting saw her and fell in love with her. The sage was pleased to give her in marriage to the King and so fixed the date of marriage.

The day previous to her marriage she trampled over a poisonous snake while walking in the forest with her companions and immediately she fell dead by the bite of the serpent. Ruru's grief was uncontrollable. He wept bitterly crying aloud "If I have from my very birth with great devotion taken vows, let Pramadvarā rise up alive." Then a devadūta (messenger from god) appeared before him and said that all his wails were of no avail since it was only in the order of things that one whose āyus (period of life on earth) was over should die. Ruru then enquired of him a way of escape from this inevitable calamity and then the devadūta said that if Ruru was prepared to surrender half of his āyus in favour of Pramadvarā she would come back to life. Ruru agreed and they went to Dharmarāja (god of Death) and told him of his wish. Dharmarāja brought back Pramadvarā to life and she stood before Ruru as if just woken up from sleep. Their marriage was duly conducted. (Chapters 8 and 9, Ādi Parva).

PRAMAGANDA. The King of Kīkaṭas mentioned in Ṛgveda. (Sūkta 14, Anuvāka 53, Maṇḍala 3, Ṛgveda).

PRAMĀṆAKOṬI. A sacred place on the banks of the river Gaṅgā. There is a great banyan tree named Pramāṇakoṭi at this place. It was at this spot of the river that Duryodhana poisoned Bhīmasena and threw him into the river, bound hand and foot. The Pāṇḍavas who went for their exile in the forests spent their first night at this spot. (Śloka 41, Chapter 1, Vana Parva).

PRAMANDHU. A Yakṣa who was the custodian of the wealth of Hariścandra. Viśvāmitra removed the bad smell of the body of this yakṣa by pouring holy water over his body. (Chapter 2, Skanda Purāṇa).

PRAMATAKA. A sage. He was one of the members of the Sarpasatra of Janamejaya. (Śloka 7, Chapter 53, Ādi Parva).

PRAMĀTHA I. A son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (Śloka 13, Chapter 116, Ādi Parva).

PRAMĀTHA II. One of the two pārṣadas given to Subrahmaṇya by Yamarāja. The other one was named Unmātha. (Śloka 30, Chapter 45, Śalya Parva).

PRAMĀTHA III. A rākṣasa (demon). This rākṣasa was a minister of demons Khara and Dūṣaṇa. (Sarga 23, Araṇyakāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

PRAMATHAGAṆA. Śiva's attendants. They were well-versed in Dharmādharmas (What is virtuous and what is not). (Chapter 131, Anuśāsana Parva).

PRAMĀTHĪ I. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. He was killed by Bhīmasena in the great battle. (Chapter 157, Droṇa Parva).

PRAMĀTHĪ II. Brother of Dūṣaṇa who was an associate of Rāvaṇa. When Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa were in exile in the forests they had to fight Kharadūṣaṇatriśirases. Then the captains of their army, Mahākapāla, Sthūlākṣa and Pramāthī attacked Rāma-Lakṣmaṇas. Pramāthī attacked Lakṣmaṇa and then Nīla an army-chief of the monkeys killed Pramāthī. (Sarga 26, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa and Śloka 22, Chapter 287, Vana Parva).

PRAMĀTHĪ III. A rākṣasa who was a friend of Ghaṭotkaca. In the Kurukṣetra battle Duryodhana killed this Pramāthī. (Śloka 20, Chapter 91, Bhīṣma Parva).

PRAMĀTHINĪ. A celestial woman. This woman gave a dance performance during the Janmotsava of Arjuna. (Śloka 21, Chapter 122, Ādi Parva).

PRAMATI I. (PRAMITI).

1) General information. Great Sage Bhṛgu, got of his wife Pulomā Cyavana and Cyavana got of his wife Sukanyā, Pramati. This sage Pramati married the beautiful Pratāpī and their son was Ruru.

2) Other details.

(i) Pramiti visited Bhīṣma while he was lying on his bed of arrows. (Śloka 5, Chapter 26, Anuśāsana Parva).

(ii) Pramiti is described as the son of Vāgindra born in the family of Gṛtsamada son of Vītahavya. (Śloka 58, Chapter 30, Anuśāsana Parva). For details see under Ruru).

PRAMATI II. Son of a brahmin named Śūra of Prayāga. During the fag end of Kṛtayuga the brahmins made Pramati their army-chief and defeated the Kṣatriyas. (Viṣṇudharmottara Purāṇa).

PRAMATI III. One of the four ministers of Vibhīṣaṇa. (Yuddha Kāṇḍa, Chapter ?7. Verse 7, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

PRAMĪLĀ. Chief of the Strīrājya (country of women) in the Himālayas. The Pāṇḍavas conducted an aśvamedhayāga after the great battle. It was Arjuna who followed the sacrificial horse. Roaming about without anybody daring to tie it the horse reached Strīrājya and Pramīlā tied the horse. Arjuna challenged her and in the fight that ensued Pramīlā defeated Arjuna. At that time there was a voice from heaven which said "Arjuna, you will never be able to take back the horse after defeating Pramīlā. So if you want to save the sacrificial horse, enter into a truce with her and make her your wife." Arjuna took the advice and saved the horse after marrying Pramīlā. (Jaiminīya, Aśvamedha Parva, 21—22).

PRAMLOCĀ. A nymph who enticed the sage Kaṇḍu. (See under Kaṇḍu).

PRAMODA I. A serpent born of the family of Airāvata. This serpent was burnt to death at the Sarpasatra of Janamejaya. (Śloka 11, Chapter 57, Ādi Parva).

PRAMODA II. A soldier of Subrahmaṇya. (Śloka 65, Chapter 45, Śalya Parva).

PRAMODA III. One of the Mānasaputras (Spiritual sons) of Brahmā. Pramoda was born from the neck of Brahmā. (Matsya Purāṇa).

PRAMOHINĪ. A Gandharva maiden. Pramohinī and four Gandharva maidens were absolved from their curses by a drop of water from the river Narmadā. The story recounted to Yudhiṣṭhira by Nārada is as follows : Five Gandharva maidens Pramohinī, Suśīlā, Susvarā, Candrikā and Sutārā were friends. Pramohinī was the daughter of Śukasaṅgīti, Suśīlā that of Suśīla, Susvarā of Svaravedī, Candrikā that of Candraka and Sutārā of Suprabha. On a day in spring all the five went about collecting flowers in a forest. As they went on walking they reached the pond named Acchoda. They bathed in that pond and after that made an idol of Ambikā with clay and adorned it with golden ornaments. Putting marks on it with Kumkum (Saffron) and Candana (Sandalwood-paste) they danced around the idol with devotional songs. As they were doing so, the eldest son of sage Vedanidhi came to bathe in the Acchoda pond. He was very charming to look at with eyes like lotus, broad chest and round and brawny hands. He looked like another Kāmadeva (Cupid). He was wearing a deer-hide and around his waist was a yellow waist-band of Muñja grass. The five girls were attracted by the ascetic youth and stopping their dancing they at first thought of making him their guest. The more the girls looked at him the more they saw a resemblance of Kāmadeva in him and they decided to make him their husband. The girls started to approach him with amorous looks and perplexed by this move, the ascetic youth fled away from the place. The girls searched for him everywhere and he was not to be found. They found an emptiness on all sides. They thought that perhaps he might be a magician. They felt themselves in the plight similar to that of the gopīs who searched for the missing Kṛṣṇa. Somehow taking courage they reached their homes and fell down before their mothers. The mothers asked them why they were so late and they replied they knew not the passage of time speaking with the Kinnarīs who arrived there. Their bodies were hot and the mothers thought that it might be due to their brisk walking for such a long distance.

Telling a lie like that to hide their secret, they lay on the ground thinking about him and him alone. They did not make the Kelīmayūra (peacock kept for pleasure) dance, did not teach the parrot in the cage, did not pet the mongoose nor did they converse with their pet Śārikā. The night seemed to them like a yuga and as soon as it was morning they ran up to the Acchoda pond. The brahmin boy came there that morning also for bathing. The five girls encircled him and requested him to marry them. He made several excuses and tried to get away from them. Then Pramohinī breaking the circle went and caught hold of him by his legs, Suśīlā and Susvarā caught hold of his hands, Sutārā embraced him and Candrikā kissed him on his cheeks. At last in despair the brahmin boy cursed them and turned them into devils. The girls were not to be subdued like that. They also cursed him in return and made him also a devil. All the devils formed like that by curses and counter-curses lived in the same place in the forest. After a long time one day the sage Lomaśa came that way by chance and the burning effulgence of Lomaśa due to his severe penance made him unapproachable to the devils and they stood at a great distance from him. But the brahmin devil by the strength of his penance in his previous life knew Lomaśa and falling before him in prostration told him everything that had happened. Lomaśa was greatly moved by his story and he took them to the banks of the river Narmadā. At that time a wind blew and drops of water from the river, changed them into their original forms and they stood praising Narmadā. Then following the advice of Lomaśa the brahmin boy married the five girls and lived on the shores of Narmadā bathing in it, drinking its water and worshipping it. They lived there for long happily and then attained Viṣṇuloka. (Chapter 22, Padma Purāṇa)

PRAMṚTA. One of the ways of earning wealth. There are five ways according to Manusmṛti.

Ṛtāmṛtābhyāṁ jīvettu
Mṛtena pramṛtena vā /
Satyānṛtābhyāmapi vā
Na śvavṛtyā kadācana.//
Śloka 4, Chapter 4, Manusmṛti).

Ṛtam, Amṛtam, Mṛtam, Pramṛtam and Satyānṛtam are the five ways.

Each has been described thus:

Ṛtamuñchaśilaṁ jñeyam
Amṛtaṁ syādayācitam /
Mṛtantu yācitaṁ bhaikṣam
Pramṛtaṁ karṣaṇaṁ smṛtam //
Satyānṛtantu vāṇijyam
tena caivāpi jīvyate /
Sevā śvavṛttirākhyātā
Tasmāt tāṁ parivarjjayet //
(Ślokas 5 and 6, Chapter 4. Manusmṛti)

(Ṛtam is the collection of grains from paddy fields with two fingers. Amṛta is that which is obtained without begging and Mṛta is that which is obtained by begging. Wealth that is obtained by agriculture is Pramṛta and that which is obtained by trade is Satyānṛta. Wealth obtained by sevā (flattery and service) is to be avoided.)

PRĀṀŚUNṚGA. A Manu. Ikṣvāku, Nābhāga. Dhṛṣṭa, Śaryāti, Nariṣyanta, Prāṁśunṛga, Diṣṭa, Karūṣa and Pṛṣadhra are all Manus. (7th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata)

PRAMUCI (PRAMUCA). A sage who lived in Dakṣiṇabhārata. (Śloka 29, Chapter 208, Śānti Parva).

PRĀṆA I. Grandson of sage Bhṛgu. Bhṛgu got of his wife Khyāti a daughter named Lakṣmī and two sons named Dhātā and Vidhātā. They married Āyati and Niyati respectively and they got two sons named Prāṇa and Mṛkaṇḍu. Mārkaṇḍeya was the son of Mṛkaṇḍu. (Chapter 10, Aṁśa 1, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

PRĀṆA II. A son born to the Vasu named Soma of his wife Manoharā. This Prāṇa was the younger brother of Varccas. These brothers had two other brothers named Śiśira and Ramaṇa. (Śloka 26, Chapter 66, Ādi Parva).

PRĀṆA III. Prāṇavāyu. The wind of life. (See under Parāvaha).

PRĀṆADHARA. A carpenter of Purāṇic fame.

There were two celebrated carpenters in the country of Kāñcī named Prāṇadhara and Rājyadhara when King Bāhubala was ruling that country. They learnt many mechanical arts in carpentry and architecture from the great architect, Mayāsura. Prāṇadhara, the elder brother, became an addict to wine and women and gambling and lost all his wealth. Rājyadhara gave a portion of his wealth to his brother and before long both became poor. Then Prāṇadhara found out a plan and they both together made a mechanical bird and tying a rope to its legs sent it into the treasure-house of the King through a window. The bird picked up diamonds or ornaments which it could carry in its beak and came back to them. This continued daily for some days and then Rājyadhara advised his brother to stop it acquainting him with the dangers if it was ever found out. But Prāṇadhara did not heed the advice and continued the theft. When the keeper of the treasury found things missing he was worried. He mused : "Doors are not open. Can it be rats? No, there has never been a single rat here before. Then how did it happen ?" Thinking thus he went and reported the matter to the king. The King was confident of the keeper. Soon he put guards over the treasure-house to keep watch over it at night. Little knowing that he was being watched Prāṇadhara put his bird into action that night also. The watchmen caught hold of the rope as soon as the bird came out with the booty from the treasure-house. Prāṇadhara knew that the trick had been found out and he rushed to his brother and told him what had happened. Immediately Prāṇadhara made a Vimāna and escaped from the place with his family. Rājyadhara also made a Vimāna and escaped. When he had travelled in the Vimāna for four hundred Kātas (Kāta=four miles) he reached a sea-shore and then leaving the Vimāna there started walking. On the way getting tired he slept inside a garden. When he woke up, a man on a peacock came to his side and said "You live here. When you are hungry and feel like taking food go to the second floor of this house and you will find there whatever you want." The visitor disappeared and he found a house in front of him. When he had finished his daily ablutions he went inside the house which was empty. But when he went up he saw ample food in gold vessels arranged there. He never heard about his brother again. (Taraṅga 9, Ratnaprabhālambaka, Kathāsaritsāgara).

PRĀṆAKA. Son of an agni called Prāṇa. (Śloka 1, Chapter 22, Vana Parva).

PRĀṆARODHA. One of the twenty eight hells. (See under Kāla).

PRĀṆĀYĀMA. Prāṇa means the wind in the body and āyāma means restraint. Prāṇāyāma means restraining or suspending breath. Spread on the floor a piece of cloth, or animal-skin or Kuśa grass and sitting on it cross-legged, controlling all actions of the sense-organs and concentrating on one single object do prāṇāyāma for the purification of the soul. There are three different kinds of prāṇāyāmas namely Recakaprāṇāyāma, Pūrakaprāṇāyāma and Kumbhakaprāṇāyāma.

Holding the nostrils with the left hand and massaging the belly with the other hand one sends out the air within the belly. It is called Recakaprāṇāyāma. Doing just the reverse and getting air inside is called Pūrakaprāṇāyāma. Then the yogī sits, with his belly full of air. Sitting thus without either letting the air out or letting it in is called Kumbhakaprāṇāyāma. Here the yogī sits like a pūrṇa-kumbha (full jar). The body of man is a chariot, the sense organs its horses, mind the charioteer and prāṇāyāma the whip. (Chapter 373, Agni Purāṇa).

PRAṆIDHI. Son of an Agni called Pāñcajanya. (Śloka 9, Chapter 220, Vana Parva).

PRAṆĪTA. A Son born to one's own wife by the grace of great men. (Śloka 19, Chapter 119, Ādi Parva).

PRĀÑNADĪ. A sacred place. He who visits this place would attain Indraloka. (Śloka 15, Chapter 84, Vana Parva).

PRAPAÑCA. See under Sṛṣṭi.

PRAPAÑCABUDDHI. A beggar with astonishing powers mentioned in Kathāsaritsāgara.

PRĀPTI. A wife of Kaṁsa. Kaṁsa had two wives and the other was called Asti. (10th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

PRARUJA I. A division of rākṣasas (demons) and Piśācas (devils). (Śloka 1, Chapter 285, Vana Parva).

PRARUJA II. A deva who once guarded the Amṛta (nectar). Once there was a fight between Praruja and Garuḍa. (Chapter 28, Ādi Parva).

PRASĀDA. A King of the family of Manu. (4th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

PRAŚAMĪ. A nymph of Alakāpurī. This nymph once gave a dance performance in honour of Aṣṭāvakra. (Śloka 45, Chapter 19, Anuśāsana Parva).

PRASANDHI. A son of Vaivasvata Manu. Kṣupa is the son of Prasandhi. (Śloka 2, Chapter 4, Aśvamedha Parva).

PRAŚĀNTĀTMĀ. A synonym of Sūrya (Sun). (Śloka 27, Chapter 3, Vana Parva).

PRAŚASTĀ. A holy river. During their pilgrimage the Pāṇḍavas came to this place and bathed in this river. (Śloka 2, Chapter 118, Vana Parva).

PRASENA I. A son of Karṇa. He was killed in the great battle by Sātyaki. (Śloka 6, Chapter 82, Karṇa Parva).

PRASENA II. A King of Vṛṣṇivaṁśa.

1) Genealogy. Descending in order from Viṣṇu — Brahmā Atri—Candra—Budha—Purūravas— Āyus — Nahuṣa—Yayāti—Yadu— Sahasrajit—Śatajit—Hehaya — Dharma — Kunti — Bhadrasena — Dhanaka — Kṛtavīrya — Kārtavīryārjuna — Madhu — Vṛṣṇi — Yudhājit—Anamitra—Snigdha (Nimna)—Prasena.
Snigdha had two sons, Prasena and Satrājit.

2) Prasena and the Syamantaka. Satrājit and Sūrya (Sun) were friends. Once Satrājit requested Sūrya to give him some gift as a token of their friendship. Then Sūrya gave him the Syamantaka gem. If that stone was worshipped daily with pūjās by brāhmaṇas it would yield eight loads of gold daily. When once Satrājit travelled by air with that gem round his neck the people of Dvārakā mistook him for Viṣṇu. Śrī Kṛṣṇa was attracted by the beauty and power of that stone and he asked Satrājit that gem for a good price. Śrī Kṛṣṇa offered as much money as he wanted and still Satrājit did not part with it.

Once Prasena went hunting with that gem round his neck and he was attacked and killed by a lion. The lion while carrying the Syamantaka was killed by Jāmbavān and the latter carried the gem to his den and gave it to his children to play with.

When Prasena did not return from his hunting and was found later lying dead without the gem the news spread that the stone might have been stolen by Kṛṣṇa after killing Prasena. The slander reached the ears of Kṛṣṇa also and he went to the forest in search of the Syamantaka. He found the cave of Jāmbavān and on peeping in found the children of Jāmbavān playing with the gem. Jāmbavān attacked Kṛṣṇa and after a grim battle which lasted for several days Jāmbavān was defeated. When he knew that it was Kṛṣṇa who had defeated him he gave him along with the Syamantaka his daughter Jāmbavatī also Kṛṣṇa brought the gem and the girl to Dvārakā and gave back the gem to Satrājit. (Chapter 38, Harivaṁśa; Chapter 13, Part 8, Padma Purāṇa).

PRASENAJIT I. Father of Suyajñā, wife of Mahābhāma. As a King he did godāna (gift of cows) for many years and attained Puṇyaloka in the end. (Śloka 20, Chapter 95, Ādi Parva).

PRASENAJIT II. Father of Reṇukā, wife of the sage Jamadagni. Jamadagni abandoned the beautiful Reṇukā once but fearing a curse Prasenajit gave her again to Jamadagni. (Chapter 58, Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa).

PRASENAJIT III. A distant brother of Satrājit called Bhava. (Dākṣiṇātya Pāṭha, Chapter 14, Sabhā Parva).

PRASENAJIT IV. A King who lived in the city of Śrāvastī. Once a very virtuous brahmin came to this city. Finding him to be a man of great virtues a Vaiśya took him to his house and kept him there worshipping him. Many rich men coming to know of the brahmin came and worshipped him with offerings of costly clothes and ornaments. Within a short time the poor brahmin got a huge heap of gold and silver. He collected his lot and at night without letting anybody know went and buried it in a secret place in the forest. After some days he went and looked for it and found his buried wealth missing. When the brahmin returned weeping, the host, the Vaiśya, gathered from him all that had happened. The house-holder consoled him but the miserly and greedy brahmin was not to be pacified thus and he started to commit suicide. He went to a pond nearby and was about to jump into it when Prasenajit who heard about this came to the spot and told him thus:—"Do not grieve over your loss. I shall make enquiries about it and if the stolen wealth is not recovered I shall give you compensation from my treasury."

After consoling the brahmin thus the King went to his palace. He pretended to be ill and called the physicians of the city to his side. He asked them about their patients, their illness and the medicines prescribed for them. One of the physicians during the enquiry said thus : "Oh lord, Mātṛdattavaṇik is my patient. Yesterday I prescribed to him the root of Ūraka plant." The King soon dispersed the physicians and sent for Mātṛdattavaṇik and asked him who had brought for him the root. When Mātṛdattavaṇik replied that it was his servant the King sent for the servant and on questioning the servant the latter confessed having taken the hidden treasure. Thus because of the intelligence and wisdom of the King the brahmin got back his wealth. (Taraṅga 7, Madanamañcukālambaka, Kathāsaritsāgara).

PRĀŚITA. One of the Pañcamahāyajñas. The five yajñas are Ahuta, Huta, Prahuta, Brāhmyahuta and Prāśita. (Śloka 73, Chapter 3, Manusmṛti).

PRASKAṆVA. I A King who was the son of Medhātithi. The Kings of Praskaṇva line were Kṣatriyas formerly but they became brahmins later. (9th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

PRASKAṆVA II. A sage who was the son of Kaṇvamuni. The sūkta 44 of anuvāka 9 of maṇḍala one of Ṛgveda was written by this sage.

PRAŚRAYA. A King of the family of Manu. (4th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

PRASṚTA. A demon. This demon was killed by Garuḍa. (Śloka 12, Chapter 105, Udyoga Parva).

PRASTHALĀ I. The palace of Suśarmā. (See under Suśarmā).

PRASTHALA II. A greatly condemned place. (Śloka 47, Chapter 44, Karṇa Parva).

PRASUHMA. A country which was conquered by Bhīmasena during the Mahābhārata times. (Śloka 16, Chapter 30, Sabhā Parva).

PRASUŚRUTA. A King who was a descendant of Śrī Rāma. (9th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

PRASŪTI. A daughter of Svāyambhuva Manu. Svayaṁbhuva Manu had two sons named Priyavrata and Uttānapāda and three daughters named Ākūti, Devahūti and Prasūti. Ākūti was married to Ruciprajāpati, Devahūti to Kardamaprajāpati and Prasūti to Dakṣaprajāpati. Yajña is the son of Ākūti. Kapila is the son of Devahūti. Prasūti got only a number of daughters. (8th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

PRATĀPA. A prince of the country of Sauvīra. He stood behind the chariot of Jayadratha holding his flag. Arjuna slew him. (Śloka 10, Chapter 265, Vana Parva).

PRATĀPAMUKUṬA. Father of Vajramukuṭa. Vajramukuṭa is the hero in the tale of Vetālakathā described beautifully in Kathāsaritsāgara. (See under Vetāla).

PRATĀPĪ. Cyavanamaharṣi got of his wife Sukanyā a son named Pramati. Pratāpī is the beautiful wife of Pramati. Ruru is the son born to Pramati of Pratāpī. (2nd Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

PRĀTARA. I. A serpent born of the Kauravya race. This serpent was burnt to death at the Sarpasatra of Janamejaya. (Śloka 13, Chapter 5, Ādi Parva).

PRĀTARA II. A son born to Dhātā, the seventh āditya, of his wife Rākā. (6th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

PRATARDANA.

1) General information. A King of the line of Pūru. Pratardana who was the son of the daughter of King Yayāti ruled the country after making Kāśī his capital. Pratardana's mother was Mādhavī, Yayāti's daughter, and father, Divodāsa. Pratardana once found on his way his grandfather, King Yayāti, who had fallen from Svarga. (See under Yayāti).

2). Other details.

(i) Emperor Śibi gave Pratardana a sword. (Śloka 80, Chapter 166, Śānti Parva).

(ii) He once gave a gift of a netra (eye) to the brahmins. (Śloka 20, Chapter 224, Śānti Parva).

(iii) He slew the son of Vītahavya. (See under Vītahavya).

(iv) Pratardana courted death after appointing his sons for the service of brahmins. (Śloka 5, Chapter 137, Anuśāsana Parva).

PRATIBHĀNU. A son born to Śrī Kṛṣṇa of Satyabhāmā. Bhānu, Subhānu, Svarbhānu, Prabhānu, Bhānumān, Candrabhānu, Bṛhadbhānu, Havirbhānu, Śrībhānu and Pratibhānu are the sons born to Satyabhāmā. (10th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

PRATĪCYA. A King born of the race of Bharata. (9th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

PRATĪCYĀ. Wife of Pulastyamaharṣi. (Śloka 17, Chapter 116, Udyoga Parva).

PRATĪHĀRA. A King born of the race of Bharata. Pratīhāra was the son of Parameṣṭhī and the father of Pratihartā. (Chapter 1, Aṁśa 2, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

PRATIHARTĀ. A King who was celebrated for his yajñakarmans. His father was Pratīha and mother Suvarcalā. Pratihartā got two sons of his wife Stuti. (5th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

PRATIJÑĀPARVA. A sub-divisional Parva of Droṇa-Parva. This comprises chapters 72 to 84 of Droṇa Parva.

PRATĪKA. Son of a King called Vasu (9th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

PRĀTIKĀMĪ. The charioteer of Duryodhana. It was Prātikāmī who brought Pāñcālī to the court of the Kauravas when the Pāṇḍavas were defeated at the game of dice by the Kauravas. He was killed in the Kurukṣetra battle by the Pāṇḍavas. (Chapter 67, Sabhā Parva; Chapter 33, Śalya Parva).

PRATIKṢATRA. A King born of the family of Paraśurāma. (9th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

PRATIMATSYA. A place of human habitation in ancient Bhārata. (Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

PRATĪPA. A King of Candravaṁśa (Lunar dynasty). He was the father of King Śantanu. There is a story behind the birth of the son Śantanu to Pratīpa.

One day this Rājarṣi was worshipping the Sun-god in the waters of the river Gaṅgā, when a beautiful maiden rose from the waters and sat on the right thigh of the royal ascetic. The King was embarrassed and he told her thus :—"Oh sweet girl, who are you? Do you realise what an unrighteous deed you have done? Why did you thus climb on my thigh without seeking my permission? The right thigh is for the daughter and the wife of the son. Since you have thus sat on my right thigh, you shall be the wife of my son when one is born to me."

Hearing this the maiden jumped out from the thigh of the King and left the place and the King went to his palace. After some time Pratīpa got a son named Śantanu. Śantanu was none other than emperor Mahābhiṣak who was forced to be born on earth due to a curse of Brahmā. When Śantanu came of age Pratīpa decided to spend the rest of his life in forests and calling his son to his side gave him all advice and added "Son, perhaps a maiden may come to you and if she comes accept her as your wife. Do not ask her about her identity. By making her your truthful wife you will acquire a great many benefits."

Pratīpa, thereafter, entrusted the kingdom to his son and after performing severe penance in the forests attained divyaloka. (2nd Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

PRATIPĀDA. A King of the race of Bharata. He was the son of Gandhamādana and the father of Svavalkala(?) (Navama Skandha, Bhāgavata)

PRATIRATHA. A King of the Pūru line of kings. Pratiratha, Dhruva and Sumati were the sons of King Antibhāra. (9th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

PRATIRŪPA. An asura (demon). This demon who held sway over all the worlds also died. His story was told to illustrate that there was an end to all lives. (Śloka 53, Chapter 227, Śānti Parva).

PRĀTIŚĀKHYA. See under Kramapāṭha.

PRATIŚRAVAS. A son born to the queen Kumārī of king Bhīmasena of the family of king Parīkṣit. Pratiśravas had a son named Pratīpa. (Śloka 42, Chapter 95, Ādi Parva).

PRATIṢṬHĀ I. A female follower of Subrahmaṇya (Śloka 29, Chapter 46, Śalya Parva).

PRATIṢṬHĀ II. The installation of deities in temples. According to Agni Purāṇa it is the installation of Śivaliṅga that is called Pratiṣṭhā.

Pīṭha is Śakti (Power) and Liṅga is Śiva. It is the union of Śakti in the form of Pīṭha and Śiva in the form of liṅga that is called Pratiṣṭhā. This Pratiṣṭhā is attained by means of Śivamantras. There are five different kinds of Pratiṣṭhās :—

1) Viśeṣapratiṣṭhā. Any pratiṣṭhā in which Brahmaśilā is used in combination is called Viśeṣapratiṣṭhā.

2) Sthāpana. Fixing the liṅga on the pīṭha (platform) is called Sthāpana.

3) Sthitasthāpana. The fixing of the liṅga (idol) on the pīṭha (platform) when the liṅga gets shaky on it is called Sthitasthāpana.

4) Utthāpana. Taking the idol out from the platform and refixing it, is called Utthāpana.

5) Āsthāpana. A pratiṣṭhā in which after the fixation learned priests conduct purification ceremonies, is called Āsthāpana.

PRATIṢṬHĀNAPURA. A sacred place in Prayāga. The place is at present called Jhūsi. Once this place was ruled over by a king called Yayāti. The sage Gālava accompanied by Garuḍa visited this king one day. (Śloka 9, Chapter 114, Udyoga Parva).

PRATĪTA. A Viśvadeva. (Śloka 32, Chapter 92, Anuśāsana Parva).

PRATIVINDHYA I. A son born to Pāñcālī of Dharmaputra. The details available about him from Mahābhārata are the following:—

(i) Prativindhya was born from a part of a Viśvadeva. (Śloka 127, Chapter 37, Ādi Parva).

(ii) On the first day of the Kurukṣetra battle Prativindhya fought against Śakuni. (Śloka 63, Chapter 45, Bhīṣma Parva).

(iii) Prativindhya was defeated in fight with Alambuṣa (Śloka 39, Chapter 100, Bhīṣma Parva).

(iv) He fought against Aśvatthāmā. (Śloka 29, Chapter 25, Droṇa Parva).

(v) Prativindhya accepted defeat after fighting with Duśśāsana. (Śloka 34, Chapter 168, Droṇa Parva).

(vi) He slew king Citra in a battle. (Śloka 20, Chapter 14, Karṇa Parva).

(vii) Prativindhya died fighting Aśvatthāmā at night. (Śloka 48, Chapter 8, Sauptika Parva).

(viii) The synonyms found used in the Mahābhārata for Prativindhya are the following :—Yaudhiṣṭhira and Yaudhiṣṭhiri.

PRATIVINDHYA II. A violent king born of the family of Ekacakra. Arjuna defeated this king during his victory march. (Śloka 5, Chapter 25, Sabhā Parva).

PRATYAGRAHA. An ancient king of Bhārata. He was the second son of Uparicaravasu. (Śloka 238, Chapter 1, Ādi Parva).

PRATYAṄGA. An ancient king of Bhārata. (Śloka 238, Chapter 1, Ādi Parva).

PRATYŪṢA. A son born to Dharmadeva of his wife Prabhātā. Pratyūṣa is one of the Aṣṭavasus. The Aṣṭavasus are Āpa, Dhruva, Soma, Dharma, Anila, Agni, Pratyūṣa and Prabhāsa. The sage Devala is the son of Pratyūṣa. (Śloka 17, Chapter 66, Ādi Parva).

PRAVAHA. A vāyu (wind). This wind of life in the body always moves upwards. (Śloka 21, Chapter 301, Śānti Parva).

PRAVĀHA. A soldier of Subrahmaṇya. (Śloka 64, Chapter 45, Śalya Parva).

PRAVĀHAṆA. A king of Pāñcāladeśa. He was a contemporary of Uddālaka.

Pravāhaṇa was a great Dārśanika (philosopher) and he once held a Tattvajñāna Pariṣad (seminar of philosophers). With a view to defeating the king in a discussion Śvetaketu also attended the seminar. But Śvetaketu was unable to answer the five questions put to him by Pravāhaṇa. Ashamed of the defeat Śvetaketu went to his father Uddālaka, who was his Guru in Jñānavidyā also, and asked him the questions put by Pravāhaṇa. Uddālaka also was unable to answer the questions and they both went to Pravāhaṇa and the latter gave as a gift to those brahmins whatever knowledge he had on Tattvajñāna then. (Chāndogyopaniṣad).

PRAVĀLAKA. A Yakṣa of the court of Kubera (Śloka 17, Chapter 10, Sabhā Parva).

PRAVARA. A Yādava. He was one of the ministers of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (Chapter 71, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

PRAVARĀ. A river of Purāṇic fame. (Śloka 23, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

PRĀVARAKA-(PRĀVĀRA). An ancient Purāṇic place included in Krauñcadvīpa. (Śloka 22, Chapter 12, Bhīṣma Parva).

PRĀVĀRAKARṆA. An owl without death living in the Himālayas. (See under Indradyumna).

PRAVARASENA. A Sanskrit poet who lived in the sixth century A.D. He is the author of the book 'Setubandha' written in Prakrit language. The book is called 'Setukāvya' and 'Rāvaṇavadha' also.

PRAVARṢAṆA. A peak of the mountain Gomanta. Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Balarāma once went to its top to observe the movements of their enemy Māgadha. (10th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

PRAVASU. A son born to Īlina of the Candravaṁśa (lunar dynasty) of his wife Rathantarī. Pravasu had four brothers named Duṣyanta, Śūra, Bhīma, and Vasu. (Śloka 17, Chapter 94, Ādi Parva).

PRAVEṆĪ. Kaṇvāśrama was on the shores of this river. (Śloka 11, Chapter 88, Vana Parva).

PRAVEPANA. A serpent of the family of Takṣaka. This serpent was burnt to death at the Sarpasatra of Janamejaya. (Śloka 9, Chapter 57, Ādi Parva).

PRAVĪRA I. A king of the Pūru dynasty. His father was Santurodha. He had two brothers named Duṣyanta and Sumanta. (Chapter 278, Agni Purāṇa).

PRAVĪRA II. A son of Pūru, a king of the Pūru dynasty His mother was Pauṣṭī. He had two brothers named Īśvara and Raudrāśva. Pravīra got of his wife Śūrasenī a son named Manasyu. He was known by the name Janamejaya also. After conducting three aśvamedhas, Pravīra accepted Vānaprastha (third stage of life). (Śloka 11, Chapter 95, Ādi Parva).

PRAVĪRA(S) III. A special class of Kṣatriyas. King Vṛṣadhvaja was born in this class. (Śloka 16, Chapter 74, Udyoga Parva).

PRAVĪRA IV. A caṇḍāla (the lowest and most despised of all classes of people). In order to keep his word of honour Hariścandra allowed himself to be sold to this caṇḍāla Pravīra. He was none other than Lord Śiva himself. (See under Hariścandra).

PRĀVṚṢEYA. A place of human habitation in ancient Bhārata. (Śloka 50, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

PRAVṚTTA. All religious ceremonies are divided into two classes, Pravṛtta and Nivṛtta. All ceremonies connected with worldly life are classed under Pravṛtta and those of a spiritual nature under Nivṛtta. (Chapter 262, Agni Purāṇa).

PRAYĀGA. A sacred place situated at the meeting point of Gaṅgā and Yamunā. He who bathes at this holy spot would get the benefit of doing ten aśvamedhas. (Śloka 35, Chapter 84, Vana Parva).

It is believed that at Prayāga there is the presence of Brahmā, devatās, dikpālakas (guardians of the quarters), lokapālakas (guardians of the world), Sādhyas (realised souls), Pitṛs (manes), Maharṣis like Sanatkumāra, Aṅgiras, Brahmarṣis, Nāgas, Garuḍa, Siddhas, Sūryadeva and Mahāviṣṇu. There are three fire-pits there. The river Gaṅgā runs through the centre of these pits. The Centre of the confluence of Gaṅgā and Yamunā is believed to be the waist of the world. There is at Prayāga the world-famous Triveṇī confluence. If one bathes at that place one gets the benefit of Aśvamedha and Rājasūya together.

The greatness of Prayāga is described thus: Prayāgatīrtha, Pratiṣṭhānatīrtha, Kambalatīrtha, Aśvataratīrtha, and Bhogavatītīrtha are said to be the Yāgavedīs of Prajāpati. At such a Prayāga Vedas and Yajñas live personified. If one praises it or chants its name in songs or smears the mud from it on one's body, one would be absolved of all sins. If one gives away anything in charity at this place or conducts Śrāddha (ceremony of giving offerings to deceased relatives) or does pious mutterings one would get benefits of an imperishable nature. There are about seventy thousand tīrthas in this world, ten thousand of one kind and sixty thousand of another kind. Prayāga has the presence of all these tīrthas and so it is considered as the best of all tīrthas. Here is the Bhogavatītīrtha of Vāsuki and the tīrtha called Haṁsaprapatana. If one bathes in the ponds there for three days together one would get the credit of giving as charity a crore of cows. The three important places are the Gaṅgādvāra, Prayāga and Gaṅgāsāgarasaṅgama. Chapter 211, Agni Purāṇa).

PRĀYAŚCITTA. In ancient Bhārata sacred injunctions existed about religious rites to be performed for the atonement of sins committed. The following are a few of them.

Murder is that act which ends in loss of life. One who kills a brahmin is a Brahmaghātaka. Even if murder is actually committed by one man, all those involved in a conspiracy for murder are murderers. If death occurs while treating a patient it is no murder. If death occurs when you punish your son, disciple or wife it is no sin. If he who has killed a brahmin or a cow commits suicide he will be absolved from his sin. Or he should go about begging with a skull and the organ of generation of any animal. If he spends twelve years begging eating little and with repentance in his heart the Brahmaghātaka will be absolved of his sin and he will become pure. If the murder is done to serve a purpose of his he should live as a beggar for twelve years but if it is not done to gain any end of his, he need live only for six years as a beggar. If a brahmin attempts to murder another brahmin he should observe the above vow for three years. If the attempt is made by a Kṣatriya he should double the period; if by a Vaiśya or Śūdra, triple the period. If a brahmin kills a Kṣatriya he need observe only three fourths of the prāyaścitta. If a brahmin kills a Vaiśya or Śūdra he need observe only an eighth part of the prāyaścitta. If he kills a woman he should observe the punishment fixed for killing a Śūdra.

If a brahmin does 'gohatyā' (killing a cow) he should practise penance drinking Pañcagavya (five products of the cow taken collectively). He should sleep in a cowshed and go about feeding the cow and should also give away cows as gift. If a gohatyā is committed by a person of any other caste, he need observe only three fourths of the prāyaścitta. Hitting the cows by fists, piercing their body with nails and cutting their horns are to be classified under gohatyā. If one kills a cat mongoose, frog dog, or a bird, one should drink milk for three days.

Though wine, date-palm-juice sugar-cane-juice, black-palm-juice, tamarind-juice and toddy are intoxicants they are not classified under alcoholic liquors. Real liquor or surā is that made from rice flour. Drinking liquor is prohibited to Brahmins, Kṣatriyas and Vaiśyas. If any one of these castes drinks he should drink water after performing penance or live eating pippalī (long pepper)for a year or eat oil cake at night for a year. If one drinks water in a pot used for taking liquor one should observe the prāyaścitta for seven days. If he drinks water from a cāṇḍāla he should observe the prāyaścitta for six days. If one eats rice from a cāṇḍāla one should observe Cāndrāyaṇa. (an expiatory penance of decreasing and then increasing food according to the waxing and waning of the moon). If one eats food in the house of a Śūdra during times of distress, one would be absolved of the sin by repentance alone.

Taking another man's property and appropriating it to himself is called theft. He who steals gold should be struck on the head by a wooden pestle by the king and killed. Alternatively he should live for twelve years with matted hair, eating one time a day only such things as leaves, fruits and roots and lying on earth. He who steals diamonds, pearls, corals, copper, silver, iron, bronze and granite stones should fast for twelve years. He who enjoys sexual intercourse with his father's wife, own sister, daughter of his preceptor or wife of the preceptor should burn himself in a hot iron pot. Alternatively he should embrace a red hot iron idol of a woman and die. (Chapters 183 and 184, Agni Purāṇa).

PRAYUTA. A Devagandharva. He was born to Kaśyapaprajāpati of his wife Muni. (Śloka 43, Chapter 65, Ādi Parva).

PREKṢĀGṚHA. A building for staging dramas, and conducting festivals well-designed and ornamentally constructed. Droṇācārya made the royal architects construct a Prekṣāgṛha for exhibiting the skill of the Pāṇḍavas and Kauravas in archery. (Śloka 11, Chapter 133, Ādi Parva).

PRETAGRANTHA. A very ancient book of the Egyptians. There are only two books which can claim to be as old as the Ṛgveda, the most ancient treasure-book of mankind. One of them is Pretagrantha which the English people call the Book of the Dead. The other is Gilgamish of the Babylonians.

PRĪTI. Wife of sage Pulastya. Prīti got a son named Dattoli of her husband Pulastya, That Dattoli was in his previous birth the Agastya of Svāyambhuva Manvantara. (Chapter 107, Aṁśa 17, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

PRIYABHṚTYA. An ancient King of Bhārata. (Śloka 236, Chapter 1, Ādi Parva).

PRIYADARŚANA I. A soldier of Subrahmaṇya. (Śloka 59, Chapter 45, Śalya Parva).

PRIYADARŚANA II. A son of the king Drupada. In the battle that ensued after the marriage of Draupadī, Karṇa killed him. (Ādi Parva, Mahābhārata).

PRIYAKA. A soldier of Subrahmaṇya. (Śloka 65, Chapter 45, Śalya Parva).

PRIYAMĀLYĀNULEPANA. A soldier of Subrahmaṇya (Śloka 60, Chapter 45, Śalya Parva).

PRIYAṀVADĀ. A companion of Rādhikā. This girl gave all protection and service to Arjuna when the latter was conducting Jalānuṣṭhāna taking the form of a woman named Arjunī. (Chapter 74, Pātāla Khaṇḍa, Padma Purāṇa).

PRIYAVARCCAS. A nymph of the court of Kubera. Arjuna saved her when she was lying as a crocodile due to a curse. (Chapter 1, Skanda Purāṇa).

PRIYAVRATA. The eldest son of Svāyambhuva Manu. He had another son named Uttānapāda and three daughters named Ākūti, Devahūti and Prasūti. The daughters were married to Ruci, Kardama and Dakṣa respectively. (8th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

Priyavrata married Barhiṣmatī daughter of Kardamaprajāpati. He got of her two daughters named Samrāṭ and Kukṣi and ten sons named Agnīdhra, Agnibāhu, Vapuṣmān, Dyutimān, Medhas, Medhātithi, Bhavya, Savana, Putra and Jyotiṣmān. Of these Jyotiṣmān was really possessing jyotis (brilliance). All the sons, Medhas, Agnibāhū and Putra, were interested in the practice of yoga and were aware of their previous births. Priyavrata disributed seven islands to seven of his sons as follows :

Jambūdvīpa to Agnīdhra ; Plakṣadvīpa to Medhātithi; Śālmalīdvīpa to Vapuṣmān ; Kuśadvīpa to Jyotiṣmān; Krauñcadvīpa to Dyutimān ; Śākadvīpa to Bhavya ; and Puṣkaradvīpa to Savana.

Agnīdhra had nine sons named Nābhi, Kimpuruṣa, Harivarṣa, Ilāvṛta, Ramya, Hiraṇvān, Kuru, Bhadrāśva and Ketumāla. (Chapter 1, Aṁśa 2, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

Priyavrata once circled round Meru in his chariot. As if competing with the Sun Priyavrata started his circling along with sunrise and ended it at sunset. He did so seven days making nights look like day and the sun appear dim and faded. The Sun was dejected and it was at the request of the Trimūrtis that Priyavrata stopped his circumambulation. It was the path of Priyavrata's circling for seven days that later became the seven oceans of Purāṇic fame. (Yuddha Kāṇḍa, Kamba Rāmāyaṇa).

PROṢAKA. An ancient place of human habitation in western Bhārata. (Śloka 61, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

PROṢṬHA. An ancient city of Bhārata. (Śloka 61, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

PṚṢADAŚVA. An ancient King who got a dagger from king Aṣṭaka. (Śloka 80. Chapter 166, Śānti Parva).

PṚṢADHRA I. The ninth son of Vaivasvata Manu. He is described as one of the sacred and virtuous persons to be remembered during early mornings. He did penance at Kurukṣetra and attained Svarga. (Śloka 11, Chapter 20, Aśvamedha Parva).

Even from boyhood Pṛṣadhra started practice of penance. He got disgusted with life even from his boyhood. A story is told how it happened so. Once when Pṛṣadhra was studying under his Guru, a tiger entered the shed of the cows at night. Hearing the pitiable wails of the cow he went to the shed with his sword and gave a strong and fatal cut to the tiger with it. Unfortunately the stroke fell on the cow instead of the tiger and not knowing the truth in the darkness Pṛṣadhra went and slept peacefully. In the morning when he went to the shed he found the cow lying dead with his sword-cut. He then knew the mistake he had made at night and was so distressed with the accident that he at once left for Kurukṣetra and started doing penance there.

PṚṢADHRA II. A son of King Drupada. He was killed in the great battle by Aśvatthāmā. (Śloka 18, Chapter 156, Droṇa Parva).

PṚṢADHRA III. A brahmin boy. One night while he was living in the āśrama of his Guru he saw a lion going out from the premises of the āśrama with an āśrama cow in its mouth. The brahmin boy rushed at it and struck the lion with a sword. But due to want of proper light the sword-cut fell on the cow and the cow fell down dead. The next day the Guru finding the cow lying dead mistook it for a deliberate killing by his disciple and cursed Pṛṣadhra to death. to be born as a Śūdra. When Pṛṣadhra was thus roaming about in the forests in his cursed form he fell into a big forest fire and was burnt to death. (Chapter 2, Sṛṣṭi Khaṇḍa, Padma Purāṇa; Chapter 1, Aṁśa 4, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

PṚṢATA. A king of Pāñcāla. He was the father of Drupada and a friend of the sage Bharadvāja. It was from Pṛṣata that Pāñcālī, daughter of Drupada, got the name Pārṣatī. (Śloka 41, Chapter 129, Ādi Parva).

PṚṢATĀŚVA. A King of the Sūryavaṁśa (solar dynasty). He was called Virūpa also. Himself, Ketumān and Śambhu were the sons of king Ambarīṣa. (9th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

PṚŚNI I. Wife of the Prajāpati named Sutapas. (See under Aditi).

PṚŚNI II. An ancient sage. He approached Droṇa during the Kurupāṇḍava battle and commanded him to stop the battle. (Śloka 34, Chapter 190, Droṇa Parva). He attained svarga by the power of his penance. (Chapter 26, Śānti Parva).

PṚŚNIGARBHA. A name of Mahāviṣṇu. There are two opinions in the Purāṇas regarding how Viṣṇu got this name.

1) In the early part of the period of Svāyambhuva Manu the Prajāpati named Sutapas and his wife Pṛśni did penance for twelve thousand divine years to get Viṣṇu as their son. As a result of that Viṣṇu was born in the womb of Pṛśni as Pṛśnigarbha. The name was suited for Śrī Kṛṣṇa the incarnation of Viṣṇu also. (Chapter 3, 10th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

2) Anna (rice), Veda, Jala (water) and amṛta (nectar) are called Pṛśni and so Mahāviṣṇu (Kṛṣṇa) who bears these inside is called Pṛśnigarbha. (Śloka 45, Chapter 342, Śānti Parva).

PṚTANĀ. The name of a division of the army. (See under Akṣauhiṇī).

PṚTHĀ. See under Kuntī.

PṚTHĀŚVA. An ancient king who worships Yama. (Śloka 19, Chapter 9, Sabhā Parva).

PṚTHU I. (VAINYA). A King of great virtue born in the line of Dhruva.

1) Genealogy. Descending in order from Viṣṇu—Brahmā—Svāyambhuva Manu—Uttānapāda—Dhruva Śiṣṭi—Ripu—Cākṣuṣa Manu—Kuru—Aṅga—Vena—Pṛthu.

Manu, son of Cākṣuṣa, got of his wife Naḍvalā eleven sons Puru, Kuru, Pūru, Śatadyumna, Tapasvī, Satyavāk, Śuci, Agniṣṭu, Atiratha, Sudyumna and Abhimanyu. Of these the second son Kuru got of his wife Ātreyī seven sons named Aṅga, Sumanas, Svāti Kratu, Aṅgiras, Gaya and Śibi. Aṅga married Sunīthā. She delivered a very wicked son named Vena. Pṛthu was born to Vena. Pṛthu got six sons named Antardhāna, Vādī, Sūta, Māgadha, Pālita and Vijitāśva.

2) Birth and Coronation. Sunīthā, wife of Aṅga, was the eldest daughter of Yama. Vena was born of her. Vena, the grandson of Yama, because of hereditary traits from his grandfather, was very wicked even from birth. When Vena was crowned king by the maharṣis and he became the supreme lord of the world he announced to the world thus: "Yāgas should not be performed; gifts should not be given; no kind of homa should be done. There is nobody but me to accept as Yajñapuruṣa the share of yajñas. I am the sole lord and consumer of yajñas."

The sages were dumbfounded. They all approached Vena and impressed upon him the necessity of performing a Yāga to propitiate Mahāviṣṇu. Vena who got angry at this request of the sages told them thus: "There is nobody greater than I and I have none to be worshipped. Who is Hari, your Yajñeśvara? (lord of the yāga). All such great powers who can bless and curse alike and such eminent deities and entities like Brahmā, Viṣṇu, Śiva, Indra, Vāyu, Yama, Varuṇa, Sūrya, Agni, Dhātā, Pūṣā, Bhūmi and Candra are merged in me, the king. Do understand this fact and obey my orders."

Despite repeated requests Vena did not give permission to conduct a Vaiṣṇava yajña. The sages got angry and cried aloud "Kill this wicked man", "Kill this wicked man". Saying thus the sages killed Vena by Kuśa grass made sacred and powerful by mantras—Vena, who was spiritually dead because of his contempt of the gods even before. Then the sages saw dust rising in columns from all sides and asked the people the cause of the same. The people said "When they knew that there was no king poor people have turned themselves into rogues and are plundering the wealth of the rich. The swift movements of these running in haste are raising dust from the ground below."

The ṛṣis conferred together and to get a son from the dead Vena they churned the thigh of the wicked king. Then from the thigh came out a short and black (as black as a burnt pillar) man with a compressed face who stood before the sages in distress and asked "What am I to do?" The sages said 'Niṣīda' meaning 'sit down'. He thus became Niṣāda (an illiterate forest-dweller). He went to the mountain of Vindhya and along with him went all the sins of Vena. Niṣādas thereafter are said to be those who have destroyed the sins of Vena.

Then the sages churned the right hand of Vena and from it came out a brilliant boy of great strength and power and he was named Pṛthu. At the time of his birth there dropped from heaven the divine bow Ajagava and many powerful arrows and a divine armour. All animate objects of the world were happy at his birth. Vena attained svarga for having delivered such a brilliant son. For the coronation of Pṛthu the oceans brought very many precious diamonds and the rivers holy water. Brahmā along with Āṅgirases came and crowned Pṛthu as the emperor. Brahmā saw the line of Candra in his right hand and was, therefore, pleased to know that he was part of Mahāviṣṇu. Thus Pṛthu, valiant and brilliant, was crowned their emperor by the virtuous people of Bhārata.

He united his people by his love for them. When he travelled through the ocean the water stood still and when he travelled on land the mountains gave way and his flag-pole was never obstructed anywhere.

3) Sūta-Māgadhas. Brahmā performed a yāga as soon as Pṛthu was born. From that yāga was born a very wise and intelligent demon named Sūta. A scholarly Māgadha also was born from the yāga. The maharṣis commanded the Sūta-Māgadhas to praise Pṛthu and they then said "Oh revered sages, we do not know anything good or bad about this king just born. He has not earned a name or fame. Then on what basis are we to sing praises about him?" The maharṣis said that they should praise him for the qualities he should have in future. Pṛthu heard that and feeling elated decided to become a very virtuous emperor. When Pṛthu was thinking like that the Sūta-Māgadhas sang in melodious tones thus : "This king speaks the truth always, is charitable, is one who keeps his promises, is valiant and full of all good qualities." Thus with the blessings and good wishes of all, Pṛthu started his reign.

4) Pṛthu attacks the Earth. The people were hungry for want of proper food crops. They approached Pṛthu and told him that during the short interval between Vena's death and Pṛthu's assuming charge the goddess of earth drew inside all her vegetations and so the people were put to great difficulties. They requested him to generate vegetations again.

Pṛthu got angry on hearing this and taking his bow Ajagava and several arrows went in search of the goddess of earth. The goddess got frightened and fled taking the form of a cow. She went to all lokas but Pṛthu followed her with his bow and arrows everywhere. At last desiring to escape from the arrows of such a valiant king Bhūmidevī went to him and trembling with fear said "Oh king, why do you make such a persistent attempt, to kill me which would be the great sin of Strīvadha ? (killing a woman)." The Rājā replied that there was no sin in killing wicked persons. The goddess asked what refuge was there for the people if the earth was destroyed. The king said that he would protect his people by the power of his yoga. Bhūmidevī was frightened and she said "Oh king, I shall give you back all I have destroyed in the form of milk. Therefore, virtuous as you are, if you are really interested in the welfare of the people I shall allow you to milk me and take back everything you want. Do bring a calf."

5) Pṛthu milks the Earth. Pṛthu by the end of his bow put in arrangement at one place the thousands of mountains which were lying scattered over the country. The grounds were not even and so there were formerly no divisions into villages and towns. There were no grain-plants like paddy or wheat, no agriculture, no cow-protection and no trade. It was since the time of Pṛthu that all these came into being. People desired to live in places where the grounds were even. Then the people lived on fruits, leaves and roots. When they were all destroyed people found it difficult to live.

Therefore Pṛthu making Svāyambhuva Manu as calf milked for the welfare of his people all plants from the earth. People do live even today by what was milked then. Pṛthu, because he gave life to Bhūmidevī, became her father and she got the name Pṛthvī.

The brahmin sages milked the cow of earth again. Then Agastya became the calf and Bṛhaspati milked. When the planets milked, Candra became the calf and again Bṛhaspati milked. The devas even now feed on the Ūrjjakṣīra (milk rich in food value) they got then. All the animals live because of their virtue and truth. The ṛṣis milked truth and virtue. The manes made Yama the calf and Antaka the milker. They milked Svadhā in a silver pot. The cobras and serpents making Takṣaka the calf milked poison making Dhṛtarāṣṭra the milker. They live by their poison which is their great defence also. The daityas and dānavas using Virocana as calf and making the two-headed Ṛtvik Madhu as the milker milked jointly courage, valour and the sarvaśatruvināśinī māyā (māyā, the destroyer of all enemies). They milked in an iron pot. All their knowledge, bodily health, strength, vigour, brilliance and valour are made from this and that is why they are adepts in the art of māyā even now.

Yakṣas milked in an iron pot milk that disappeared from the earth. Rajatanābha milked using Vaiśravaṇa as calf. That Yakṣarājaputra was sarvajña (knowing all) and Sarvadharmajña (conversant with all charitable things) with two heads and eight hands. The rākṣasas, piśācas and wicked maruts using Rajatanābha as milker and Sumālī as the calf milked blood in a pot made of a skull. They live on this.

The Gandharvas and nymphs using lotus as their pot, Suruci as milker and Citraratha as calf milked music from her. The mountains making Mahāmeru as milker and Himālayas as the calf milked diamonds and medicines. The sacred trees made Sāla the milker and plakṣa the calf and milked in a pot of palāśa Chinnadagdhaprarohaṇa (the power of growing again even if cut or burnt). The siddhaguhyakacāraṇavidyādharas also milked her each using different pots, calves and milkers and they all got what they wanted.

6). Aśvamedha. Pṛthu's land became rich and prosperous. Then he performed an Aśvamedha. The Yāga horse was led by Vijitāśva, son of Pṛthu. Indra did not like Pṛthu conducting the yāga. Indra hid at a place on the path of the yāga horse. The sage Atri helped Indra. Indra bound the horse and a fight ensued between Indra and Vijitāśva in which Indra was deplorably defeated and confessing his guilt he craved for pardon and Pṛthu granting him pardon became his great friend. (4th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

7) Pṛthu's rule. In the history of Bhārata the period of Pṛthu's rule is considered a golden period. When Pṛthu became the emperor, Brahmā divided the universe into several kingdoms and made a separate ruler for each of them. Soma was appointed King of the stars, planets, brahmins, plants, yāgas and austerities. He appointed Kubera as the lord of Kings, Varuṇa as the lord of all waters, Viṣṇu, as the lord of all ādityas and Pāvaka as the lord of all Vasus. Dakṣa was given lordship over prajāpatis, Indra over maruts, and Prahlāda over all daityas and dānavas. Yama, the Dharmarāja was made lord of the manes. Airāvata was made King of all elephants and Garuḍa King of all birds. Uccaiśśravas was made King of all horses and Vṛṣabha of all cattle. The lion was made King of all beasts and Himavān the lord of all immovable things. Kapila became chief of all sages and the tiger the leader of all beasts with nails and snouts. Plakṣa was made the King of all trees.

After distributing kingdoms thus, Brahmā appointed

Dikpālakas (guardians of the zones). In the east he posted Sudhanvā, son of Vairājaprajāpati, in the south he posted Śaṅkhapāda son of Kardamaprajāpati, in the west he put Ketumān, son of Rajas and in the north Hiraṇyaromā. Thus Brahmā organised a universe with suitable emperors to control and supervise. (Chapter 22, Aṁśa 1, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

8) The end of Pṛthu. After several years of benign rule Pṛthu became old. He then entrusted the affairs of the state to his son Vijitāśva and left for penance with his wife Arccis. After doing severe penance for a long time he merged with Parabrahman. Arccis who was all along serving her husband with devotion ended her life by jumping into the funeral pyre of her husband following her husband like Lakṣmī following Viṣṇu.

9) Pṛthu's sons. Pṛthu had five sons named Vijitāśva, Haryakṣa, Dhūmrakeśa, Vṛka and Draviṇa. The eldest of these Vijitāśva, with the help of his brothers ruled the country. Haryakṣa ruled over the east, Dhūmrakeśa over the south, Vṛka, west and Draviṇa, north. (Padma Purāṇa).

PṚTHU II. A virtuous brahmin of good conduct. Once when Pṛthu was travelling he met five ugly devils. They became devils for their sins of not doing any charity and behaving rudely with beggars. Pṛthu gave them advice on āhāra (food), ācāra (conduct) and vrata (vow) so that they might get salvation from their devil-lives. (Chapter 27, Sṛṣṭi Khaṇḍa, Padma Purāṇa).

PṚTHŪDAKA. A sacred pond on the borders of Kurukṣetra. This is one of the celebrated tīrthas of Bhārata. He who bathes in this pond would get the benefit of doing an aśvamedha. (Chapter 83, Vana Parva; Chapter 39, Śalya Parva).

PṚTHŪDARA. A celebrated Yakṣa. This Yakṣa got a daughter named Saudāminī. Her father took her to different mountains to entertain her. One day while she was playing with her companion Kapiśabhrū she met a Yakṣaputra named Aṭṭahāsa. They fell in love and Saudāminī's father agreed to their marriage and fixed it. After fixing the marriage Pṛthūdara took his daughter to his house. Next day her companion Kapiśabhrū came to Saudāminī in a sorrowful mood and when she asked her the reason she said "Friend, how am I to report to you this sad news. On my way to you I passed through a garden named Citrasthala in the valley of the Himālayas. To have some sport with the love-stricken Aṭṭahāsa his friends staged a drama in which Aṭṭahāsa was made Vaiśravaṇarāja and his brother Dīptaśikha, Nalakūbara, and the rest, his ministers. They were thus acting and enjoying when Nalakūbara himself came that way and seeing his servant Aṭṭahāsa in the robes and form of his father was angry and calling Aṭṭahāsa to his side said: "A servant like you is ambitious of becoming a king. Let this ambition be the cause of your downfall. You will be born as man." Aṭṭahāsa was shocked and he craved pardon "Oh Lord, I did this only for some entertainment. I did not do it with any desire for a big position. Pardon me for my mistake. Nalakūbara then by his divine power understood everything and taking pity on him consoled him and said "She with whom you are in love will be your wife in your life as man. Your brother Dīptaśikha will then be born as your son. Both of you will then be released from the curse. Dīptaśikha after ruling the country for some time will also be free from this curse." Aṭṭahāsa and Dīptaśikha soon disappeared by the power of the curse.

Aṭṭahāsa was born as king of Trigartta in the name of Pavitradhara and Saudāminī became his wife. A son was born to them named Dīptaśikha and as soon as he was born the parents were released from the curse and entered heaven. (Śaśāṅkavatīlambaka, Kathāsaritsāgara, Taraṅga 6).

PṚTHUDARBHA. A king of the race of Aṅga. (Chapter 277, Agni Purāṇa).

PṚTHUGRĪVA. When Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa were staying in Pañcavaṭī a demoness named Śūrpaṇakhā made approaches to them and Lakṣmaṇa cut off her limbs and sent her away. Then a rākṣasa army came under the leadership of Khara, Dūṣaṇa and Triśiras and Pṛthugrīva was one of the twelve prominent soldiers of that army.

(Sarga 26, Araṇya Kāṇḍa Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

PṚTHUKA. A devagaṇa of Raivata Manvantara.

PṚTHULĀKṢA. A King born of the race of Aṅga. This king lived in the court of Yama and worshipped him. (Śloka 22, Chapter 8, Sabhā Parva).

PṚTHULĀŚVA. A king of the race of Ikṣvāku. He was the son of Pṛthu and father of Adra. (Chapter 1, Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa).

PṚTHURAŚMI. One of those who are named 'Yati'. The Yatis were a people of anti-yajña feelings and were all burnt to death in Indra's fire of wrath. But three yatis, Bṛhadgiri, Rayovāja and Pṛthuraśmi were taken care of by Indra and Indra taught them Brahmavidyā, Kṣatriyavidyā and Vaiśyavidyā.

Pṛthuraśmi compelled Indra to grant him Kṣātratejas also along with Kṣātravidyā. There is now a sāma even in the name of Pṛthuraśmi. (Pañca-viṁśa-Brāhmaṇa).

PṚTHUṢEṆA. A King of ancient Bhārata. (5th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

PṚTHUŚRAVAS I. A King of Ṛgveda times. Indra killed the enemies of this King. (Sūkta 116, Anuvāka 17, Maṇḍala 1, Ṛgveda).

PṚTHUŚRAVAS II. Father of Kāmā, wife of king Ayutanāyī. He lived in the court of Yama. (Śloka 12, Chapter 8, Sabhā Parva).

PṚTHUŚRAVAS III. A sage of ancient Bhārata who was a friend of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Śloka 22, Chapter 26, Vana Parva).

PṚTHUŚRAVAS IV. A soldier of Subrahmaṇya (Chapter 46, Śalya Parva).

PṚTUŚRAVAS V. A serpent. This serpent was present at Prabhāsatīrtha to carry the soul of Balabhadrarāma. to Pātāla (Śloka 15, Chapter 4, Mausala Parva).

PṚTHUVASTRĀ. A female attendant of Subrahmaṇya (Chapter 46, Śalya Parva).

PṚTHUVEGA. A King of the court of Yama. (Śloka 12, Chapter 8, Sabhā Parva).

PṚTHVĪRŪPA. A beautiful king of a country called Pratiṣṭhāna. Once three wise yogins came to him and said "Oh King, we have travelled round the world. There is a princess in Muktidvīpa called Rūpalatā. In beauty she will be a good match for you." On hearing this Pṛthvīrūpa calling the court artist Kumāradatta to his side said "Paint a picture of mine and go along with these three sannyāsins to Muktidvīpa and give the painting in private to the princess there and also bring me an exact painting of hers."

The painter went to Muktidvīpa and the King coming to know of the talents of the artist Kumāradatta commissioned him to paint a picture of his daughter Rūpalatā. He did the work beautifully. The King was immensely pleased and he enquired if Kumāradatta had seen a suitable prince for Rūpalatā. Kumāradatta immediately showed him the portrait of Pṛthvīrūpa. The king found the prince extremely suitable and entrusted the artist himself with the task of negotiating the marriage with Pṛthvīrūpa. Kumāradatta returned to his King with the portrait of Rūpalatā and Pṛthvīrūpa was infatuated with the dazzling beauty of Rūpalatā. Before long the marriage of Pṛthvīrūpa with Rūpalatā was conducted in all grandeur. (Alaṅkāravatīlambaka, Kathāsaritsāgara, Taraṅga 1).

PṚTHVĪTĪRTHA. A sacred pond on the borders of Kurukṣetra. He who bathes in this pond would get the benefit of doing a sahasragodāna (giving away as gift a thousand cows). (Śloka 13, Chapter 83, Vana Parva).

PUCCHĀṆḌAKA. A serpent of the family of Takṣaka. This serpent was burnt to death at the Sarpasatra of Janamejaya. (Śloka 8, Chapter 57, Ādi Parva).

PŪJANĪ. A bird of superior intellect. The story of Pūjanī was told by Bhīṣma to illustrate that Kṣatriyas can never be believed.

There was once a king called Brahmadatta in the country of Kāmpilya. The King had a bird named Pūjanī. Pūjanī was very intelligent and all-knowing and the king treated her as his friend. Days went by and one day the queen delivered a son. At the same time Pūjanī also got a child. The prince and the little bird grew up as great friends. The little bird used to bring to the prince whatever eatable it could take in its little beak. They lived as such thick chums.

One day while Pūjanī was away from the cage, the prince caught hold of the little bird and strangled it to death. When Pūjanī came back she found her child missing and went about crying loudly. She then knew what had happened and got very angry. She flew and pricked blind the eyes of the prince and bade farewell to the King. The parting scene was very pathetic. Pūjanī declared that Kṣatriyas were not to be believed and flew away. (Chapter 139, Śānti Parva).

PŪJĀVIDHI. Chapter 155 of Agni Purāṇa states the various acts of worship that should be done daily and they are the acts of worship observed by all brahmacārins during the time of Manusmṛti.

You should rise up at Brāhmamuhūrta. Finish your excretory routine sitting facing north during daytime and facing south during night time. If it is at dusk or dawn it should be done as during day time. It should never be done in public roads, water or grass. Wash with sand after your excretions and then wash your teeth. After that take your bath. Baths are of six kinds : Nityasnāna, Naimittikasnāna, Kāmyasnāna, Kriyāṅgasnāna, Malakarṣaṇasnāna and Kriyāsnāna. Any religious act done without a bath is of no use. Therefore you should bathe early. Well-water is good for bathing, water from a fountain is better, water of a lake is much better, river-water is still better and water of a tīrtha is still better. The water of the river Gaṅgā is the best.

After washing after excretions you should enter into the waters and wash again and then wash your body. While washing you should recite the following mantras "Hiraṇyavarṇaḥ, Śanno devīḥ, āpo hi ṣṭhā and idamāpaḥ." You should submerge yourself in the waters and recite the mantras there under the water. You should also recite Aghamarṣaṇa sūkta or the Ṛk named Drupada. Gāyatrī should be chanted specially. After the Japa you should rub dry with a cloth your head and body and then offer water to the devas and manes. Then you should worship with water reciting Puruṣasūkta.

You should give way to anybody carrying a load, a pregnant woman and preceptors. Never look at the Sun at the time of rising or setting. Never look at the reflection of the moon in waters. Never look at a nude woman. Do not peep into a well. Never trample over clothes and sacred ashes. Never enter the bedroom or the treasure room of another man. Those who rub mud blocks against mud block, cut their teeth or bite their nails will perish. Never enter a house through any other opening than its proper gate. Never interrupt when others are talking. Never use the clothes of another man. Tell everybody 'Bhadram' 'Bhadram' (well well). Never speak to displease anybody. Never walk on the shadow of an individual. Do not pass through the space between two respectable persons sitting and talking. Do not look at falling stars. Never mention the name of another river while in a river. Do not scratch your body with both your hands. Never cross a river before offering water to the devas and manes. Do not throw your excretions into the waters. Never bathe naked. After bath you should pray to gods for your welfare. Never take out a garland from your body by yourself. Avoid dust from the hooves of donkeys sticking to your body. Never laugh at low-caste people, nor live with them nor live in their places. Never live in a place where there are no rivers, doctors or a king. Nor live in a place ruled by barbarous people or a woman or by a number of people together. Never talk with women during their period of menses. If you have talked with them think of Viṣṇu. Never laugh, sneeze or yawn without covering your mouth. Wise man should hide the disgrace to one superior to himself and protect the words of the superior or his own. Never encourage too much activity of the senses nor should you check the pressure of excretions. Do not belittle even the smallest of ailments or the smallest of enemies. If you walk through public roads you should wash yourself. Never walk bearing water or fire. Do not hiss in the presence of respectable and virtuous people. Do not place one leg over the other leg. Never speak directly or indirectly things which are unpleasant to others. Avoid contempt of Vedas, Kings, sages, science and devas. Do not be jealous of women nor do place confidence in them. Always listen to virtuous talks, be devoted to the gods and observe righteous acts daily. On your birthday worship the moon, gods and brahmins. Never take an oil bath on the fourth (caturthī), sixth (ṣaṣṭhī) and eighth (aṣṭamī) days of lunar fortnight. Throw away your excretions far away from home. Never be unfriendly with venerable and noble people.

PULAHA. One of the Prajāpatis. The references about him in the Purāṇas are the following :

(1) Pulaha was one of the spiritual sons of Brahmā. (Śloka 12, Chapter 204, Vana Parva).

(2) Kṣamā, wife of Pulaha, delivered three sons named Kardama, Urvarīvān and Sahiṣṇu. (Chapter 10, Aṁśa 1, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

(3) Pulaha got of his wife Kṣamā another son named Karmaśreṣṭha. (Chapter 20, Agni Purāṇa).

(4) Pulaha is included in the group of six powerful sages. (Śloka 4, Chapter 66, Ādi Parva).

(5) From Pulaha were born the butterflies, lions, tigers, lambs, wolves and Kimpuruṣas. (Śloka 3, Chapter 66, Ādi Parva).

(6) Pulaha took part in the Janmotsava of Arjuna. (Śloka 52, Chapter 122, Ādi Parva).

(7) Pulaha was also among the sages who dissuaded Parāśara from conducting a yāga to kill all the rākṣasas. (Śloka 9, Chapter 180, Ādi Parva).

(8) Pulaha was a member of the court of Indra. (Śloka 17, Chapter 7, Sabhā Parva).

(9) Pulaha was a worshipper of Brahmā. (Śloka 18, (Chapter 11, Sabhā Parva).

(10) Pulaha did penance at a place on the shores of Alakanandā, a tributary of river Gaṅgā. (Śloka 6, Chapter 142, Vana Parva).

(11) He took part in the Janmotsava of Subrahmaṇya. (Śloka 9, Chapter 45, Śalya Parva).

(12) Pulaha is included in the twenty one Prajāpatis. (Śloka 35, Chapter 334, Śānti Parva).

(13) Pulaha is one among the group of Saptarṣis called Citraśikhaṇḍins. (Śloka 29, Chapter 335, Śānti Parva).

(14) Pulaha is also one of the Aṣṭaprakṛtis. (Chapter 340, Śānti Parva).

PULAKA. A daitya who was transformed into an animal. There is a story in the Skanda Purāṇa about him thus — Pulaka performed penance and got from Śiva a boon that he should possess astonishing smell in his body. The demon used to entice even celestial ladies by means of his smell. He thus became a menace to the three worlds. Devas complained to Śiva. Śiva got angry and commanded him to abandon his demoniac form and become an animal. Pulaka agreed to do so but requested Śiva to grant him the smell even in his state of an animal. Śiva granted that.

PULASTYA. One of the Prajāpatis.

1) Birth and marriage. Pulastya is one of the six spiritual sons of Brahmā. Pulastya was born from the Karṇa—ear—of Brahmā. (Chapter 65, Ādi Parva and Bhāgavata).

Pulastya had a son named Dattoli (Dambholi) of his wife Prīti. This Dattoli in his previous birth was the Agastya of Svāyambhuva Manvantara. (Chapter 10, Aṁśa 1, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

Pulastya had a son named Viśravas of his wife Havirbhū. (4th Skandha, Bhāgavata). Mahābhārata states that Pulastya had two wives named Sandhyā and Pratīcī. Havirbhū mother of Viśravas had another name, Māninī.

All these statements taken together indicate that Pulastya had four wives named Prīti, Havirbhū, Sandhyā and Pratīcī.

2) Genealogy. The race formed by Pulastya is given below : Pulastya got a son named Viśravas of his wife Havirbhū alias Māninī. Viśravas had two wives named Kaikasī and Devavarṇinī alias Ilabilā. Kaikasī had three sons, Rāvaṇa, Kumbhakarṇa, and Vibhīṣaṇa and a daughter named Śūrpaṇakhā. Rāvaṇa got of his wife Mandodarī three sons, Meghanāda, Atikāya and Akṣakumāra. Kumbhakarṇa got of his wife Vajramālā two sons named Kumbha and Nikumbha. Vibhīṣaṇa got of his wife Saramā seven sons. Viśravas got of his wife Ilabilā a son named Vaiśravaṇa alias Kubera.

3) Birth af Viśravas. In olden times in Tretāyuga Pulastya Maharṣi was doing penance on Mt. Meru. On a nearby hillock the sage Tṛṇabindu was also doing penance. Celestial maidens, Nāga maidens and their lovers came to the āśrama and by their erotic sports and dances vitiated the precincts of the āśrama. Pulastya got angry and cursed all the maidens to become pregnant if they entered the āśrama area. Without knowing this curse Māninī, daughter of Tṛṇabindu came to that spot and got pregnant of Pulastya. Pulastya then married her and the celebrated Maharṣi Viśravas was born to her.

4) How he saved Rāvaṇa. Once Rāvaṇa who started on a victory campaign met Kārtavīryārjuna on the shores of Narmadā. Kārtavīryārjuna chained Rāvaṇa in the former's prison. Pulastya was grieved much to hear about the plight of his grandson and going to Kārtavīryārjuna and explaining things got the release of Rāvaṇa. (Chapter 46, Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa).

5) Other details.

(i) Pulastya once blessed Parāśara for the writing of Purāṇas. (Chapter 1, Aṁśa 1, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

(ii) Rākṣasas, Vānaras (monkeys), Kinnaras, Gandharvas and Yakṣas were born from the intelligent Pulastya. (Śloka 7, Chapter 66, Ādi Parva).

(iii) He was present for the Janmotsava of Arjuna. (Śloka 52, Chapter 122, Ādi Parva).

(iv) Parāśara once started to perform a Yāga to destroy all the rākṣasas. Pulastya along with other sages went and persuaded him to withdraw from his venture. (Chapter 180, Ādi Parva).

(v) Pulastya was a member of the court of Indra. (Śloka 17, Chapter 7, Sabhā Parva).

(vi) Pulastya sits in the court of Brahmā and worships him. (Śloka 19, Chapter 11, Ādi Parva).

(vii) Once Pulastya taught Bhīṣma the importance and greatness of all the holy places of Bhārata. From then onwards Pulastya is called the Guru of Bhīṣma also. (Chapter 82, Vana Parva).

(viii) Pulastya got of his wife Gau a son named Kubera. (Śloka 12, Chapter 274, Vana Parva).

(ix) Viśravas was born of half of the body of Pulastya. (Chapter 274, Śloka 13 Ādi Parva).

(x) Pulastya was present for the birth day celebrations of Subrahmaṇya. (Śloka 9, Chapter 45, Śalya Parva).

(xi) Pulastya also visited Bhīṣma lying on his bed of arrows. (Śloka 10, Chapter 47, Śānti Parva).

(xii) Pulastya was one among the twentyone Prajāpatis. (See under Prajāpati).

(xiii) Pulastya is included in the group of Saptarṣis called Citraśikhaṇḍins. (Śloka 29, Chapter 335, Śānti Parva).

(xiv) Pulastya. is one of the Aṣṭaprakṛtis. (Chapter 340, (Śānti Parva).

(xv) As synonyms of Pulastya the following terms are used: Brahmarṣi, Viprayogī. (Mahābhārata).

PULINDA(S) I. The people of the country of Pulinda. Information available regarding them from the Mahābhārata is given below :

(1) Pulindas were originally Kṣatriyas. But they became Śūdras by a curse of the brahmins. (Chapter 33, Anuśāsana Parva).

(2) Pulindas who belong to the mleccha tribe became rulers in Kaliyuga. (Chapter 186, Vana Parva).

(3) Pulindas were born from the foam of the celestial cow Nandinī of sage Vasiṣṭha when she got enraged. (Chapter 165, Āśramavāsika Parva).

(4) Bhīma fought against the Pulindas and destroyed all their big cities. (Chapter 26, Sabhā Parva).

(5) In the great Mahābhārata battle Pulindas fought on the side of Duryodhana. (Chapter 158, Udyoga Parva).

PULINDA(S) II. A mleccha tribe of ancient Dakṣiṇabhārata. The Vāmana Purāṇa gives some details regarding them.

PULINDĪ. See under Caṇḍaka.

PULKASA. A son born to a Kṣatriya woman of a Śūdra is called Pulkasa. (See under Cāturvarṇya).

PULOMĀ I. A demon. This asura belongs to the asura race born to Kaśyapa of Diti. This asura fell in love with Pulomī, wife of the sage Bhṛgu. (See under Cyavana). Śacīdevī, wife of Indra, was the daughter of Puloman. (Chapter 19, Agni Purāṇa).

PULOMĀ II. (PULOMĪ). Wife of the sage Bhṛgu. (See under Cyavana for details).

PULOMĀ III. A demoness. Her sons are called Paulomas. This Pulomā had a sister named Kālakā. Both of them together did severe penance and pleased Brahmā. They got a boon from Brahmā to the effect that their sons would never be killed. The Paulomas were given a golden city in the air to live and he declared that that city could never be destroyed by anyone. (Chapter 173, Vana Parva).

PUM, PUT, PUTRA. Pum alias Put is a hell. Those who die without children go to this hell and he who saves one from this hell is called Putra. (Śloka 38, Chapter 74, Ādi Parva).

Puṁnāmno narakādyastu
Trāyate pitaraṁ sutaḥ/
Tasmāt putra iti proktaḥ
Svayameva svayambhuvā//
(Śloka 138, Chapter 9, Manusmṛti).

(Because a son of his own, by birth, saves a father from the hell called 'Put' he is called Putra).

There are twelve different kinds of 'Putras' (sons).

1) Aurasaputra. A son born to a wife of his own caste begot by the husband himself is called aurasaputra.

2) Kṣetrajaputra. If one dies without children or is impotent or possessed of a disease, his wife is lawfully allowed to lie with the brother of the husband to get a child. The son born of such a union is called Kṣetrajaputra.

3) Dattaputra. When one is worrying miserably for getting a son and if at that time a husband and wife willingly hand over a son born to them by mutual consent with the following words : "This son becomes your own from now" with a religious sprinkling of water, such a son is called Dattaputra.

4) Kṛtrimaputra. A son adopted from one's own caste for the purpose of doing the obsequial ceremonies for the manes is called Kṛtrimaputra.

5) Gūḍhotpanna. A son born to one's wife by another man is called Gūḍhotpanna.

6) Apaviddhaputra. When a son is rejected by either a father or mother or by both and that son is taken care of and brought up by another man, that son becomes an apaviddhaputra.

7) Kānīnaputra. If a son is born to a virgin before marriage while living with her father, that son is called a Kānīnaputra.

8) Sahoḍhaputra. When a girl is married while pregnant the son born to her after marriage is called a Sahoḍhaputra.

9) Krītakaputra. A son purchased and brought up by a sonless man is called Krītakaputra.

10) Paunarbhavaputra. A son born to a woman after becoming a widow or after being divorced by her husband by her willingly going with another man is called a Paunarbhavaputra.

11) Svayaṁdattaputra. When a son after becoming an orphan or after being abandoned by his parents goes willingly to another man and remains with him as his son, that son is called Svayaṁdattaputra.

12) Śaudra (Pāraśava) Putra. A son born to a brahmin of a Śūdra wife.

PUNARJANMA. It is the theory that the soul of a man is born again after his death. The Purāṇas and Vedas contain many statements regarding this of which the following are a few :

1) What is Death? When the Jīvātmā (soul) of an individual leaves his body with all its upādhis (attributes and adjuncts) it is called Death. By upādhis are meant the folllowing four things. (i) Mind and the senses. (ii) The five Prāṇas namely Prāṇa, Apāna, Udāna, Vyāna and Samāna. (iii) The Sūkṣmaśarīra, that is, the Prāṇamanovijñānakośasaṅghāta (the subtle body that is invisible with the grosser elements). (iv) Karman (action). All these four things follow the soul even after his death. Only when the soul attains mokṣa (salvation) do the upādhis leave it. It is the life breath Udāna that guides the soul out of the body. It is the Sūkṣmaśarīra that gives heat to the body while there is life and that is why when the soul leaves the body with the upādhis the body becomes cold.

2) After death. When the soul leaves the body with the upādhis it becomes active again and its activities and movements depend upon the actions of the soul while living. The spiritual actions of the individual are classified into three.

(i) Aparabrahmopāsana. He who has done all his deeds according to scriptural injunctions is said to be one who has done upāsana of aparabrahma. When such an individual dies his soul with all the upādhis attains Candra. He goes to Candra through dhūma (smoke), rātri (night), Kṛṣṇapakṣa (the dark fortnight), dakṣiṇāyanakāla (the sun's passage south of the equator), pitṛloka (world of the manes) and Ākāśa (ether). He enjoys the rewards of the deeds done on earth there and reserving some to be enjoyed or suffered in his next birth the soul with the upādhis comes back to earth to enter another body. The soul comes back to earth through ether, vāyu, dhūma, megha, varṣa, vrīhi, yava, auṣadhi, vṛkṣa, Tila, Puruṣabīja and strīgarbha. When the Jīvātmā goes to Candra its padārthatva (attribute) diminishes gradually and when it comes back to earth it increases gradually. Thus the jīvātmā takes thousands of births going to and from the moon. The jīvātmā coming back from the moon evolves from a plant to man. Plants are the food of man and the soul entering the plant enters the puruṣabīja (semen virile) through food. The souls coming out as rebirths do accept wombs according to a definite principle. In the order of the merit of their good deeds on earth they are born in Brahmin, Kṣatriya, Vaiśya or Śūdra wombs. The souls with great sins are born as worms and insects. This passage of the soul from earth to Candra and vice versa is called Pitṛyāna.

(ii) Aparavidyopāsana. There are some people who do not consider performance of religious rites as important but worship Brahman. They do not treat Brahman and jīvātmā as one but view them as separate entities. Such devotees are called Aparavidyopāsakas. Their souls as soon as they leave the body move towards aparabrahman. The path to aparabrahma is through Agni, Jyotis, daytime, Śuklapakṣa (the white fortnight), Uttarāyaṇa (the passage of the sun to the north), samvatsara (year), Sūrya (sun), Candra (moon) and Vidyut (lightning). The dhanyas (blessed ones) who attain Vidyut go to Varuṇaloka, Indraloka and Prajāpatiloka and then merge with parabrahma (the supreme being). This path is called Devayāna. Since for both Pitṛyāna and Devayāna the jīvātmā has to depend upon Candra it is to be surmised that there is some special connection between jīvātmā and Candra. Those who attain Aparabrahma by the path of devayāna do not come back to earth. They have no rebirths. Those who have merged with aparabrahma attain Brahman by the end of a lifetime of Brahmā. Thus those who attain Brahman and do not believe that jīvātmā and Brahman are one and view them separately attain Parabrahma through the merger with aparabrahma. This is called Kramamukti. Some sages are of opinion that those who attain aparabrahma enjoy prosperity by mind. Those who live attached to worldly pleasures but not do things prohibited by the Vedas attain Pitṛloka by the path of Dakṣiṇāyana. After enjoying all the accrued 'puṇya' there, they come back again to earth to be born again.

(iii) Pāpopāsana. The jīvātmā of one who does not follow the injunctions of śāstras correctly does not attain Candraloka. It is born again as pests and insects attaining a place called Tṛtīya. There is no evidence in the Purāṇas of their attaining mokṣa. How a soul subjected to rebirths attains mokṣa is described under 'Mokṣa'. (Chāndogya Upaniṣad, Gītā, Bhāgavata, Śvetāśvatara Upaniṣad).

PUNARVASU ĀTREYA An ancient preceptor of Āyurveda. He was the Guru of Agnideva author of the book 'Agniveśatantra' which is the basis of Carakasaṁhitā and also of his classmates like Bhela.

Punarvasu was the son of the sage Atri who was one of the spiritual sons of Brahmā. In support of this statement it can be found in many places in Caraku saṁhitā his name referred to as 'Atrisuta' or Atrinandana'.

Atri maharṣi was also a learned preceptor of Āyurveda. According to Kaśyapasaṁhitā Devendra taught Āyurveda to Kaśyapa, Vasiṣṭha, Atri and Bhṛgu. The incomplete work 'Āyurvedacikitsātantra' by Atri was completed by Punarvasu according to Aśvaghoṣa.

Punurvasu's mother's name was Candrabhāgā. Getting knowledge in Āyurveda from his father and also from Bharadvāja, Punarvasu became an authority on Āyurveda. His important work is 'Ātreyasaṁhitā'. There are about thirty prescriptions in his name. The prescriptions regarding 'Balātaila' and 'Amṛtāditaila' are found in Carakasaṁhitā.

PUNAŚCANDRA. A sacred place. This is situated in the Jamadagnivedī in Śūrpārakakṣetra. (Śloka 12, Chapter 88, Vana Parva).

PUÑCU. A King of Sūryavaṁśa (solar race). He was the son of Harita and father of Vijaya. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 1).

PUṆḌARĪKA I. A King born of the race of Śrī Rāma. He was the son of Niṣadha and father of Kṣemadhanvā. (9th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

PUṆḌARĪKA II. One of the Aṣṭadiggajas (elephants guarding the eight zones). (See under Aṣṭadiggajas).

PUṆḌARĪKA III. A brahmin who lived during the period of Nārada. Nārada once held a scholarly conversation with him on virtue. He saw Mahāviṣṇu in person and attained sāyujya (intimate union with a deity). (Chapter 124, Anuśāsana Parva).

PUṆḌARĪKA IV. A great yajña. (Śloka 100, Chapter 5, Sabhā Parva).

PUṆḌARĪKA V. A holy place situated on the border of Kurukṣetra. One who bathes in a sacred pond there would get the benefit of doing a Puṇḍarīkayajña. (Śloka 83, Chapter 83, Vana Parva).

PUṆḌARĪKĀ. VI. A nymph. This maiden was present for the Janmotsava of Arjuna and performed a dance then. (Śloka 13, Chapter 122, Ādi Parva).

PUṆḌARĪKAMUKHA. An eminent serpent King. His subjects, Puṇḍarīkamukhas, lived with him in the beautiful serpent-city surrounded on all sides by gold castles. Gandharvas and Kinnaras of both sexes lived inside the city. A Gandharva of name Lalita fell in love with a Gandharva lady named Lalitā and they lived there happily enjoying amorous sports. One day Puṇḍarīkamukha held a music concert in which Lalita was asked to sing as the leading musician. His love Lalitā was absent at the assembly and Lalita could not sing or dance in proper form that day. Karkaṭaka, a serpent chief, privately informed his King the reason for the poor display of Lalita that day. The King got angry and cursed Lalita thus : "Wicked one, you will be born as a man-eating rākṣasa. This is the penalty for thinking about your wife while singing for me."

Lalita immediately became an ugly, fierce-looking demon. Lalitā deeply mourned over this pitiable plight of her husband and followed him in the forests where he roamed about making loud roaring sounds. While they were thus wandering in the forests, they found a pretty āśrama in which there was an ascetic engaged in penance. Lalitā stood before him with tears rolling down her cheeks. When the sage opened his eyes Lalitā told him that she was the daughter of the Gandharva named Vīradhanvā and that her husband had become a demon by the curse of the serpent King Puṇḍarīkamukha. The sage advised her to observe Ekādaśī Vrata. She observed the Vrata with devotion and her husband Lalita, was freed from the curse. He became the former handsome Gandharva once again. They then went back to Gandharvaloka. (Chapter 49, Bhāga 4, Padma Purāṇa).

PUṆḌARĪYAKA. A Viśvadeva. (Chapter 91, Anuśāsana Parva).

PUṆḌRA I. An ancient King in Bhārata. (Śloka 224, Chapter 1, Ādi Parva).

PUṆḌRA II. An ancient region of Bhārata. The region comprised then the present district of Mālada, certain portions on the east coast of river Kosī and certain portions of Dinājpur. King Pāṇḍu conquered Puṇḍra. (Chapter 112, Ādi Parva). The people of Puṇḍra came to the Rājasūya of Yudhiṣṭhira with presents. The Pauṇḍrakavāsudeva mentioned in the Bhāgavata was the King of Puṇḍra. Karṇa and Arjuna conquered this country at different times. (Chapter 52, Sabhā Parva; Chapter 8, Karṇa Parva; Chapter 82, Āśvamedhika Parva).

PUÑJIKASTHALĀ. A nymph. She was the servant-maid of Bṛhaspati. One day she was collecting flowers for her Guru in a garden when a set of young men and women came to the garden for amorous sports. They were roaming about in the garden in pairs doing all sorts of erotic acts and Puñjikasthalā stood watching them for some time with passion aroused in her. She returned to the āśrama thinking all the way about her miserable lot of having no husband to enjoy a similar life. She was full of lust when she returned to the āśrama and on seeing Bṛhaspati she caught hold of him by the hand and pleaded to satisfy her passion. Bṛhaspati was angry at this improper request and cursed her "You have become rotten. You have become lustful by seeing the amorous sports of others. May you be born as a monkey. Get out of this āśrama." Puñjikasthalā came to her senses and regretting her hasty act begged her Guru to grant her release from the curse. Bṛhaspati felt pity on her and said "Go and enjoy to your full sexual life with a lover whom you like best. Then you will get a son from the vitality of Śiva. When that son is born you will be released from the curse and you will go to heaven."

She became immediately a monkey girl named Añjanā and started living in a forest of that name itself. She fell in love with a monkey boy named Kesarī there and lived for many years enjoying an amorous life. She did not get a child even after several years and then she prayed to Śiva for a child.

It was at that time that Pārvatī and Parameśvara played amorous sports in the form of monkeys and Pārvatī became pregnant. Pārvatī expressed reluctance to be the mother of a monkey child and then Śiva by his divine powers deposited his semen virile through Vāyubhagavān (god of wind) into the womb of Añjanā who was then praying to him for a child. Coming to know of this through Nārada and fearing that his lordship over the monkeys would be lost if such a monkey were born to Añjanā Bāli poured into the belly of Añjanā molten liquid of pañcaloha (five metals). Añjanā was not the least injured and she gave birth in due course to a monkey son who became the celebrated Hanūmān, the life-force of the Rāma-Rāvaṇa tussle. (Pūrvakāṇḍa, Kamba Rāmāyaṇa; Kiṣkindhā Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

This Puñjikasthalā belongs to the famous set of eleven devakanyakās. They are : Menakā, Sahajanyā, Karṇikā, Puñjikasthalā, Ṛtusthalā, Ghṛtācī, Pūrvacitti, Ullocā, Pramlocā, Urvaśī and Viśvācī. These were the celebrated courtezans of Svarga. (Chapter 123, Ādi Parva). Puñjikasthalā was the dancer at the court of Kubera. (Chapter 10, Sabhā Parva). She took part in the Janmotsava of Arjuna. (Chapter 122, Ādi Parva).

PŪNTĀNAM NAMBŪTIRI.

1) General information. The illam (house) of this Nambūtiri who was a contemporary of Meppattūr Nārāyaṇa Bhaṭṭatiri was in Nenmeni aṁśa of the taluk of Valluvanāḍu in south Malabar. Though some say that his original name was Brahmadatta there are no sufficient records to support the statement. His Guru according to the work 'Śrī Kṛṣṇakarṇāmṛta' was a nambūtiri named Nīlakaṇṭha. Pūntānam had only ordinary education. He worshipped Kṛṣṇa at the temple of Guruvāyūr for a very long time and became a great devotee of Kṛṣṇa. He lived for ninety years. When he became very old he found it difficult to come to Guruvāyūr for worship and so one day he bade farewell to the deity. Then a voice from heaven said "Do not worry. I will be near you on your left side." He went and sat on a hill named Tirumāndha and to his astonishing ecstasy he found Kṛṣṇa sitting on his left side. He then constructed a temple there and installed his deity Kṛṣṇa there and continued his worship. That was the Vāmapura (left place) of Pūntānam.

2) Kṛtis (works). The following are the works of Pūntānam : (i) Bhāṣākarṇāmṛta (ii) Kumārāharaṇam (Pāna) (iii) Jñānappāna (iv) Pārthasārathistava (v) Ghanasaṅgha (vi) Nārāyaṇakīrtanas (vii) Govindakīrtanas (viii) Ānandanṛtya (ix) Dvādaśākṣaranāmakīrtana (x) Śrīkṛṣṇakīrtanas (xi) Aṣṭākṣarakīrtana (xii) Brahmaparagovindakīrtana (xiii) Gopālakṛṣṇakīrtana (xiv) Gaurīkīrtana (xv) Vāmapureśakīrtanas (xvi) Padmanābhakīrtana (xvii) Vivekodayakīrtana (xviii) Jayakṛṣṇakīrtana (xix) Viṭakolkīrtana (xx) Śrī Rāma Kīrtana (xxi) Mukundakīrtana (xxii) Daśāvatārastotra. Besides these he has composed some philosophical songs in Tamil also.

3) Jñānappāna. Pūntānam got a son after a long time of prayer and for the ceremony of Annaprāśana (feeding rice for the first time) all the people of his community were invited. The women who came for the function threw their upper garments on to the cradle where the little child was suffocated to death. Pūntānam thereafter became disgusted with life and Jñānappāna was written at that time.

4) Santānagopālam. Pūntānam spent most of his time in the temple of Guruvāyūr after the death of his child. It was at this same time that the great scholar Nārāyaṇabhaṭṭatiri, author of the famous Nārāyaṇīya, was in the temple worshipping the deity there. Pūntānam had written a poem 'Santānagopālam' in the pāna style and he took it to the great pandit Nārāyaṇa Bhaṭṭatiri for correction. With the haughtiness that was his trait he said "What is there for correction in a Malayālam poem ? Nothing but blunders will there be in it. Especialy when Pūntānam is not well-versed in Sanskrit grammar. It will therefore be full of mistakes." Pūntānam could not contain the rebuff and he wept bitterly. Then from the inside of the temple came a voice which said "Though Pūntānam is not a grammarian like you Bhaṭṭatiri, he is a greater devotee of mine than you. His Bhakti is more appealing to me than your vibhakti." The divine voice made Bhaṭṭatiri feel sorry and ashamed of his behaviour and he begged Pūntānam to grant him pardon and immediately went through his work giving suggestions for improvement.

PUṆYA I Son of the sage Dīrghatamas. The story of Puṇya as found in Jñānavāsiṣṭha is the following:— There is a mountain called Mahendra in Jambūdvīpa. Dīrghatamas who was doing penance there had two sons named Puṇya and Pāvana. Puṇyakumāra grew up into a boy abounding in virtues. Pāvana was not so broad-minded. When after some time Dīrghatamas, their father died, Puṇyakumāra controlling his sorrow did all the funeral rites; but Pāvana unable to control his sorrow left the place and wandered in the forests weeping bitterly. After some days Puṇyakumāra went in search of his brother and on finding him consoled him and told him that there was nothing to be worried about their father's death. On hearing the learned and moral teachings of Puṇya, Pāvana also got enlightened and after living in that forest for a number of years both of them abandoned their lives.

PUṆYA II The name of the āśrama of the sage Vibhāṇḍaka. (Śloka 23, Chapter 110, Vana Parva).

PUṆYAJANA. A rākṣasa. Raivata, king of Kuśasthalī, born of the race of Śaryāti, went to see Brahmā. Taking advantage of his absence from the place Puṇyajana took control over Kuśasthalī. Afraid of the demon all the hundred brothers of Raivata left the country. After some time the Śaryāti dynasty merged with that of Hehaya. (Chapter 2, Aṁśa 4, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

PUṆYAJANĪ. Wife of Maṇibhadra, one of the Śivapārṣadas. Her father's name was Kratustha. Maṇibhadra got thirteen sons of Puṇyajanī. (Chapters 3 and 7, Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa).

PUṆYAKṚT. A Viśvadeva. (Śloka 30, Chapter 91, Anuśāsana Parva).

PUṆYANĀMĀ. A soldier of Subrahmaṇya. (Chapter 45, Śalya Parva).

PUṆYANIDHI. A king of the lunar race. The King was a great devotee of Viṣṇu and he went to Rāmeśvara to do worship of Viṣṇu there. Pleased with the pure devotion of the king Mahāviṣṇu started living at Rāmeśvara under the name of Setumādhava. (Chapter 3, Skanda Purāṇa).

PUṆYAŚĪLA. A brahmin who was residing on the banks of the river Godāvarī. Once Puṇyaśīla engaged a brahmin widower for officiating in a Śrāddha ceremony. As a result of that sin Puṇyaśīla's face became that of a donkey. To be freed from the sin he went and bathed in the Svāmitīrtha and Ākāśagaṅgātīrtha of Veṅkaṭācala. His sin was washed away and his face regained its original form. (Chapter 2, Skanda Purāṇa)

PUṆYAŚRAVAS. A sage. This maharṣi who was a great devotee of Viṣṇu was born to the brother of Nanda gopa, during the incarnation of Viṣṇu as Kṛṣṇa, as a daughter named Lavaṅgā. (Pātāla Khaṇḍa, Padma, Purāṇa Chapter 72).

PUṆYATOYĀ. A river seen by the sage Mārkaṇḍeya when he moved about inside the belly of Bālamukunda. (See under Mārkaṇḍeya).

PURA. A demon.

PURAMĀLINĪ. A river of Purāṇic fame. (Śloka 21, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

PURANDARA I. Indra.

PURANDARA II. Tapa, son of the agni called Pāñcajanya. Indra once became the son of this Purandara. (Śloka 3, Chapter 221, Vana Parva).

PURANDARA III. The name of Indra in Vaivasvata Manvantara. (See under Manvantara). In Matsya Purāṇa Purandara has been considered to be one among the eighteen Vāstuśāstrakāras (adepts in house building). The other seventeen are: Bhṛgu, Atri, Vasiṣṭha, Viśvakarmā, Maya, Nārada, Nagnajit, Viśālākṣa, Brahmā, Kumāra, Nandīśa, Śaunaka, Garga, Vāsudeva, Śukra, Bṛhaspati and Aniruddha. (Matsya Purāṇa, Chapter 252, verses 2 and 3).

According to Mahābhārata Lord Śiva wrote a book "Vaiśālākṣa" containing ten thousand chapters dealing with Dharmārthakāmas. Purandara condensed it into a book of five thousand chapters called 'Bāhudantaka'. Purandara gave that book that name in honour of his mother who was called Bāhudantī. (Chapters 59, 89 and 90, Śānti Parva).

PURAÑJANA. A king. The story of this king was told to king Prācīnabarhis by Nārada to illustrate the truth that those who kill yajña cows on earth would surely suffer its consequences at one time or another.

Purañjana once started on a tour after killing a few yajña cows. His aim was to build a new palace. After walking alone for a long time he reached the neighbourhood of Himālayas. While wandering in the forests he saw a beautiful garden and by its side a big castle with nine tower-gates. It was the residence of the Gandharva lady Purañjanī. She had innumerable girl companions and her castle was guarded by a five-hooded cobra called Prajāgiri.

Purañjanī fell in love with Purañjana at first sight and their greetings and subsquent talks ended in their marriage. Thus Purañjana became the husband of Purañjanī and they lived happily an erotic life for a hundred years. Then one day the king went for hunting alone. Even that separation for a little while from Purañjanī was unbearable to Purañjana and he returned to his palace soon. Purañjanī did not come to receive him. On enquiry her companions informed the king that Purañjanī was lying on the floor with grief unable to bear the separation from the king. Purañjana consoled her and they lived again for many years in perfect happiness. Then one thing happened.

Kāla had a daughter named Kālakanyakā who lived a very wicked and vicious life. She wanted to get married but nobody wanted to be her husband. She went about in search of a husband. Pūru became her husband for some time but she was soon divorced by him. She approached a Yavana king named Bhaya who had a brother called Prajvara. Bhaya did not want to take that woman as his wife and so sent her back with a boon that she could stand in hiding and enjoy all men she liked. He sent his brother Prajvara for her help. She roamed about like that for some time and came back again to Bhaya. Kālakanyakā, Bhaya and Prajvara joined together and gathering a strong army attacked Purañjana. A grim battle followed which lasted for several years in the end of which Purañjana was defeated and taken captive. While he was being taken as a prisoner a herd of wild cows attacked Purañjana and he was killed. After that he was born as a princess named Vaidarbhī. Malayadhvaja, king of Pāṇḍya, married her and got seven celebrated sons. Agastya married the daughter of Malayadhvaja. (4th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

PURAÑJAYA. A king of Ayodhyā. See under Kākutstha.

PURĀṆA.

1) General information. The Amarakośa describes a Purāṇa thus :

Sargaśca pratisargaśca
Vaṁśo manvantarāṇi ca /
Vaṁśānucaritaṁ cāpi
Purāṇam pañcalakṣaṇam //

According to this definition, Purāṇa is one which describes Sarga, Pratisarga, Vaṁśa, Manvantara and Vaṁśānucarita. Among these Sarga and Pratisarga are natural creation and renovation (Cosmogony). Vaṁśa means history of sages and patriarchs. By Manvantara is meant the period of different Manus. Vaṁśānucarita means Genealogy of kings. In the Purāṇas which are current now some of these five divisions are wanting.

Statements about Purāṇas are found even in the Brāhmaṇas. Therefore it is to be surmised that Purāṇas existed even before historic times. Mahābhārata has used the term Purāṇa to mean stories about devas and siddhas. The Upaniṣads say that Purāṇas are itihāsas and as such constitute the fifth Veda. Smṛti says that Purāṇas are commentaries on Vedas. From all these statements it can be gathered that Purāṇas have a hoary past. The great Sanskrit scholar Raṅgācārya has defined Purāṇa as Purā nava (Purā=old; nava =new) meaning things which are as good as new though existing from olden times. Though there are large portions of wide imagination dealing with the human side in the Purāṇas many truths about the universe can be grasped from them. All the Purāṇas contain praises of Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Maheśvara. In most of the Purāṇas of old, new additions and interpolations are seen. The Purāṇas in original were in existence before Christ.

Ākhyānaiścāpyupākhyānair
Gāthābhiḥ Kalpaśuddhibhiḥ /
Purāṇasaṁhitāṁ cakre
Purāṇārthaviśāradaḥ //
(Śloka 15, Chapter 6, Aṁśa 3, Viṣṇu Purāṇa)

Aṣṭādaśa Purāṇāni
Kṛtvā Satyavatīsutaḥ /
Bhāratākhyānamakhilaṁ
Cakre tadupabṛṁhaṇam //
(Śloka 70, Chapter 53, Matsya Purāṇa)

From the above it can be gathered that it was Vyāsa who composed all the Purāṇas. Bāṇa who lived in the seventh century A.D. speaks about Vāyu Purāṇa. Kumārila Bhaṭṭa who lived in the eighth century and Śaṅkarācārya who lived in the ninth century speak about the Purāṇas. Purāṇas must have therefore taken their present forms before the sixth or seventh century A.D.

There are eighteen major Purāṇas and another eighteen minor ones. The major Purāṇas contain over four lakhs of Ślokas. All the Purāṇas are in verses like Mahābhārata. But none of them is as good as Mahābhārata as a piece of literature. Still the Purāṇas splendidly reflect the culture of Bhārata. The Purāṇas are the basis of the bulk of Indian thinking on matters social, cultural, religious and political. Even the Indian art has taken form from the Purāṇas. The Purāṇas are classified into three, those pertaining to Brahmā, those pertaining to Viṣṇu and those to Śiva.

2) A. Viṣṇu-based Purāṇas.

(i) Viṣṇu Purāṇa. This is one of the most important of all the Purāṇas. This contains the five technical divisions of the Purāṇas. This is divided into six aṁśas. This deals with the events of Vārāhakalpa and contains twentythree thousand ślokas. The theme is the ten incarnations of Mahāviṣṇu. Viṣṇu Purāṇa is the most ancient of all the Purāṇas and has got the name Purāṇaratna (gem of Purāṇas).

The method of narration is in the form of teaching his disciple Maitreya by sage Parāśara. Since there is a reference in it to the Maurya dynasty it is to be surmised that this was composed in the first or second century A.D. The narrator himself states thus :—"Vyāsa an adept in the compositon of Purāṇas composed this Purāṇasaṁhitā with ākhyānas, Upākhyānas, gāthās and Kalpanirṇayas. A Sūta named Romaharṣaṇa was Vyāsa's chief disciple. The broad-minded Vyāsa gave that saṁhitā to that sūta. Romaharṣaṇa had six disciples named Sumati, Agnivarcas, Mitrāyus Śāṁśapāyana, Akṛtavraṇa, and Sāvarṇi. Of these Akṛtavraṇa, Sāvarṇi and Śāṁśapāyana born in the Kaśyapagotra have composed Purāṇasaṁhitās. There is yet another saṁhitā composed by Romaharṣaṇa which was the basis of the saṁhitās of his three disciples. I have composed Viṣṇupurāṇa basing on the above four saṁhitās."

If a man gives as gift a book of Viṣṇu Purāṇa on the full moon day in the month of āṣāḍha (July) with Jaladhenu he will attain Viṣṇupāda.

(ii) Bhāgavata Purāṇa. This is the most popular and widely circulated of all the Purāṇas. It is dear to Viṣṇu-devotees. Divided into twelve Skandhas this contains eighteen thousand ślokas. All the incarnations of Viṣṇu are described in this. The most interesting Skandha is the tenth Skandha in which the author has described the life and activities of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. There was once a belief that it was Baladeva who lived in the thirteenth century A.D. that had composed this Purāṇa. But this belief was smashed when it was found that Vallālasena of Bengal who lived in the eleventh century A.D. had made references to this Purāṇa in some of his works. Bhāgavata accepts Kapila and Buddha as incarnations of Viṣṇu. This has been translated into all Indian languages. This book has to be given as gift on the full-moon day in the month of Proṣṭhapada (September). Agni Purāṇa instructs that this book is to be given along with a golden image of a lion.

(iii) Nāradīya Purāṇa. This is in the form of a narration by Nārada to Sanatkumāra. In this book of twentyfive thousand verses Nārada teaches the dharmas of Bṛhatkalpa. If this is given as gift on the full-moon day in the month of Āśvina there will be great prosperity.

(iv) Garuḍa Purāṇa. This is in the form of instructions to Garuḍa by Viṣṇu. This deals with astronomy, medicine, grammar, and with the structure and qualities of diamonds. This Purāṇa is dear to Vaiṣṇavites. The latter half of this Purāṇa deals with life after death. The Hindus of north-India generally read this Purāṇa while cremating the bodies of the dead. This has given great importance to the origin of Garuḍa. There are eight thousand verses in this book. This book should be given as gift along with an image in gold of a swan to get prosperity.

(v) Padma Purāṇa (Pādma Purāṇa). This book is divided into six Khaṇḍas comprising fiftyfive thousand verses. The six Khaṇḍas are Sṛṣṭikhaṇḍa, Bhūmikhaṇḍa, Svargakhaṇḍa, Pātālakhaṇḍa, Uttarakhaṇḍa and Kriyāyogasāra. The Uttarakhaṇḍa describes the importance of all months and also the lotus, the seat of Brahmā. This contains the stories of Śakuntalā and Śrī Rāma as described by Kālidāsa in his works Śākuntala and Raghuvaṁśa which has made some believe that this Purāṇa was written after Kālidāsa. If this Purāṇa is given as gift with a cow in the month of Jyeṣṭha (June) it brings prosperity.

(vi) Varāha Purāṇa. The mode of narration is in the form of narrating the story by Varāha, the third incarnation of Viṣṇu. The theme is about holy places and mantras. It states that the goddess of earth prayed to Mahāviṣṇu and that prayer took the form of a goddess. This book contains fourteen thousand verses. If one copies down this Purāṇa and gives it as gift along with a golden image of Garuḍa on the full-moon day in the month of Caitra (April) one will attain Viṣṇuloka.

B. Purāṇas relating to Brahmā.

(i) Brahma Purāṇa. This is in the form of teachings by Brahmā to Dakṣa. This contains twentyfive thousand verses. This is called Ādi Purāṇa also. There is a special treatise in this book on Orissa, an ancient holy region of Bhārata. There is in this a special annexure explaining the intimacy between Śiva and Sūrya which is a deviation from other Purāṇas. Brahma Purāṇa states about a sūryakṣetra (sun-temple) situated at a place called Koṇārka near the holy place of Purī, installed there in the year 1241 A.D. If this Purāṇa along with Jaladhenu is given as a gift on the full-moon day in the month of Vaiśākha (May) the donor will attain heaven.

(ii) Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa. This deals with the origin of the universe as told by Brahmā. In the beginning there was a golden egg and the prapañca (universe with its activities) was formed out of it. Portions of Adhyātma Rāmāyaṇa, references to Rādhā and Kṛṣṇa and the incarnation of Paraśurāma are included in this. This book contains twelve thousand verses and it is believed to be uttama (best) to give this book as a gift to a brahmin.

(iii) Brahmavaivarta Purāṇa. This was instructed to Sāvarṇika by Nārada. The theme is the story of Rathantara. There are four kāṇḍas in this Purāṇa called Brahmakāṇḍa, Prakṛtikāṇḍa, Gaṇeśakāṇḍa and Kṛṣṇajanmakāṇḍa. This deals with Prapañcasṛṣṭi (creation of the universe). It says that Prapañca is nothing but the Vaivartta (transformation) of Brahman. It is considered to be holy to give this book containing eighteen thousand verses as a gift on the full-moon day in the month of Māgha (February).

(iv) Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa. This is one of the ancient Purāṇas. There are many stories regarding Indra, Sūrya and Agni in this. This includes a division called Devīmāhātmya containing praises about the goddess Durgā. This contains nine thousand verses and it is considered as uttama (best) to give this book as a gift to a brahmin on a full-moon day in the month of Kārttika (November).

(v) Bhaviṣya Purāṇa. This is what is told to Manu by Sūrya (Sun). This contains statements about future events. The book praises the worship of Sūrya (Sun), Agni (fire) and Nāga (serpent). There is an annexure dealing with the several holy places of Bhārata and the rights of pilgrims. The book contains fourteen thousand verses and it is considered to be uttama (best) to give this book along with treacle as a gift to a brahmin on the full-moon day in the month of Pauṣa (January).

(vi) Vāmana Purāṇa. There is a great similarity between the contents of this Purāṇa and that of Varāha Purāṇa. All the incarnations of Viṣṇu from Vāmana downwards are described in this Purāṇa. The scene of Śiva marrying Pārvatī is vividly described in this book. This Purāṇa contains ten thousand verses and it is considered to be uttama (best) to give this book as a gift in the autumn season or at the time of Viṣuva to a brahmin.

C. Purāṇas relating to Śiva.

(i) Vāyu Purāṇa. This Purāṇa is told by Vāyu. Bāṇabhaṭṭa who lived in the seventh century A.D. makes references to this Purāṇa in his works. There are many references in this Purāṇa about the Gupta Kings who ruled Bhārata in the 4th century A.D. So it is believed that this Purāṇa must have been written in the fifth or sixth century A.D The book contains plenty of verses in praise of Śiva. There are fourteen thousand verses in the Vāyu Purāṇa and it is considered to be best to give this book as a gift to a brahmin on the full-moon day in the month of Śrāvaṇa (August).

(ii) Liṅga Purāṇa. This contains instructions of Śiva on Dharma sitting in the form of liṅga (Phallus). The twentyeight different forms of Śiva are described in this. This contains twelve thousand verses and if this book is given as a gift to a brahmin with tiladhenu on the full-moon day in the month of Phālguna (March) the donor will attain Śivasāyujya.

(iii) Skānda Purāṇa. This Purāṇa is narrated by Skanda. The theme is the slaughter of the demon Tārakāsura by Skanda (Subrahmaṇya). There is a great similarity between this Purāṇa and the Kumārasambhava of Kālidāsa. There are eightyfour thousand verses in this Purāṇa and giving this book as a gift is thought to be good.

(iv) Agni Purāṇa. This Purāṇa was instructed to the sage Vasiṣṭha by Agnideva. There are several references in this to Śivaliṅga and Durgādevī. The incarnations of Rāma and Kṛṣṇa are also dealt with in this. Distinct from other Purāṇas this book deals with arts and science like Kavyālaṅkāranāṭakas (Poems, dramas, figures of speech), Jyotiśśāstra (Astronomy) and Śilpakalā (architecture). This Purāṇa contains twelve thousand verses and is capable of imparting knowledge on all arts and sciences.

(v) Matsya Purāṇa. This Purāṇa was taught to Manu by Matsya, the incarnation of Viṣṇu, The incarnation of Matsya is dealt in this. Several subjects like Jainamata (religion of Jainism), Buddhamata (Buddhism), Nāṭyaśāstra (histrionics) and Āndhrarājavaṁśa (kingdom and Kings of Āndhra) are discussed in this book. The book contains thirteen thousand verses and this is to be given as gift along with a golden image of a fish at the time of Viṣuva.

(vi) Kūrma Purāṇa. This Purāṇa is taught by Kūrmamūrti (incarnation of Viṣṇu as Kūrma (tortoise) while narrating the story of Indradyumna at Pātāla. All the seven islands and seven oceans are described in this book. Bhārata is situated in the centre of all these and is called Jambūdvīpa. Though it is believed that there were four saṁhitās for this, only the Brāhmasaṁhitā is available now. It includes Īśvaragītā and Vyāsagītā.

The book contains eight thousand verses and is to be given as gift along with a golden image of tortoise.

3) Upapurāṇas. There are eighteen minor Purāṇas besides the eighteen major ones. They are :—(1) Sanatkumāra (2) Nārasiṁha (3) Nāradīya (4) Śiva (5) Durvāsas (6) Kāpila (7) Mānava (8) Uśanas (9) Vāruṇa (10) Kālika (11) Sāmba (12) Saura (13) Āditya (14) Māheśvara (15) Devībhāgavata (16) Vāsiṣṭha (17) Viṣṇudharmottara (18) Nīlamata Purāṇa.

The two Upapurāṇas mentioned lastly are associated with Kashmir. The first is about the Vaiṣṇava religion there and the second about the wise saying of a Nāga King of the place called Nīla.

(Purāṇas; History of Sanskrit Literature).

PŪRṆĀṄGADA. A serpent born of the family of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. This serpent was burnt to death at the Sarpasatra of Janamejaya. (Śloka 16, Chapter 57, Ādi Parva).

PŪRṆĀYUS. A Devagandharva who was the son of Kaśyapa of his wife Pradhā. (Śloka 46, Chapter 65, Ādi Parva.

PUROCANA. A minister of Duryodhana. It was under the guidance of this minister that the lac-palace was constructed and set fire to in order to kill the Pāṇḍavas. Purocana was also burnt to death when the lac-palace was destroyed by fire. (See under Arakkilla).

PUROJAVA. The youngest son of the Vasu, Prāṇa,, born to him of his wife Ūrjjasvatī. (6th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

PUROVASU. A King of the Aṅga line of Kings. He was the son of Babhrusetu. He ruled over the country of Gāndhāra. (Chapter 270, Agni Purāṇa).

PURU I. A Kṣatriya King. He was the son of Manu. Manu had eleven sons of his wife Naḍvalā.

PURU II. A mountain. (Śloka 22, Chapter 90, Vana Parva).

PŪRU I. A celebrated king of Candravaṁśa.

1) Genealogy. Descending in order from Viṣṇu are Brahmā-Atri — Candra—Budha—Purūravas—Āyus—Nahuṣa—Yayāti—Pūru.

Yayāti had two wives named Śarmiṣṭhā and Devayānī. Śarmiṣṭhā gave birth to Druhyu, Anu and Pūru. Devayānī gave birth to Yadu and Turvasu.

2) Pūru becomes king. Yayāti, Pūru's father, was turned into an old man by a curse of Śukrācārya. The king called all his sons to his side and requested each to take his old age and give him their youth. All the elder sons refused to do it but Pūru agreed to do so. Taking the youth of Pūru, his father, Yayāti lived a sensuous life for a thousand years. Then the king gave back Pūru his youth and crowned him as the heir apparent to his kingdom. (See under Devayānī).

3) Other details.

(i) Pūru got of his wife Kausalyā alias Pauṣṭī three sons named Janamejaya (Pravīra), Īśvara and Raudrāśva. (Chapter 94, Ādi Parva).

(ii) After his death Pūru entered the court of Yama. Śloka 8, Chapter 8, Sabhā Parva).

(iii) Pūru along with Indra in the latter's Vimāṇa witnessed the war between Arjuna and the Kauravas. (Śloka 10, Chapter 56, Virāṭa Parva).

(iv) A king called Māndhātā once defeated Pūru in a battle. (Śloka 10, Chapter 62, Droṇa Parva).

PŪRU II The name of the charioteer of Arjuna. (Śloka 30, Chapter 33, Sabhā Parva).

PURUCCHEPA. (PARUCCHEPA). A sage praised in the Ṛgveda. He was the son of Divodāsa. (Maṇḍala 1, Ṛgveda).

PURUJIT. A king who was the son of Kuntibhoja and brother of Kuntī, mother of the Pāṇḍavas. He had a brother named Kuntibhoja. In the great battle he fought against Durmukha of the Kaurava army. When he died Purujit went to Yamaloka. (Chapter 14, Sabhā Parva; Chapter 6, Karṇa Parva, Chapter 23, Droṇa Parva).

PURUKUTSA. The son born to the celebrated king, Māndhātā of his wife Bindumatī. (See under Māndhātā for Genealogy). Purukutsa had a brother named Mucukunda. Descending in order from Purukutsa were Araṇya — Bṛhadaśva—Haryaśva—Tridhanvā—Aruṇa—Satyavrata—Triśaṅku.

One Purukutsa is praised in the Ṛgveda. It is not known whether both are one and the same person. Purukutsa with his wife Narmadādevī went to the forest of Kurukṣetra and doing penance there attained mokṣa. (Chapter 20, Āśramavāsika Parva).

PURUMĪḌHA. A king of Pūruvaṁśa. He was the son of Bṛhatputra. Bṛhatputra had two more sons named Ajamīḍha and Dvimīḍha. Of these three sons the most valiant Ajamīḍha became the propagator of the dynasty. (Chapter 278, Purāṇa).

PURUMITRA I. One of the eleven valiant sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. In the great battle of Mahābhārata Abhimanyu wounded this soldier. (Chapter 73, Bhīṣma Parva).

PURUMITRA. II. The first Maṇḍala of the Ṛgveda mentions a Rājarṣi youth Vimada marrying the daughter of Purumitra.

PURUNĪTHA. See under Paruṇītha.

PURŪRAVAS. I. A prominent king of Candravaṁśa (lunar race).

1) Origin of Candravaṁśa and birth of Purūravas. Descending in order from Brahmā came Atri—Candra—Budha Purūravas. The dynasty which came from Candra was called the Candravaṁśa. Though Budha was the first king of Candravaṁśa it was Purūravas who became celebrated. The story of the birth of Purūravas is given below :

Brahmā in the beginning deputed the sage Atri for the work of creation. Atrimaharṣi started the penance called anuttara to acquire sufficient power for creation. After some years Saccidānanda brahma with an aura of lustre reflected in the heart of that pure and serene soul. In sheer ecstasy tears rolled down his cheeks and the glittering flow of water was lustfully drunk by the zones taking the form of women with a view to producing progenies. They became pregnant but were unable to bear the embryo of Atri and so they threw them away. Brahmā took them all and made them into one armoured youth and took him in his chariot to his land. Then the brahmarṣis requested Brahmā to make him their lord. When the ṛṣis, devas, gandharvas and nymphs praised him reciting sāmaveda the majestic lustre of the youth increased. It was from this that auṣadhas (medicines) originated and that is why Candra is considered to be the lord of medicines, dvija and Vedasvarūpa. The Candramaṇḍala is full of chemicals. It increases and decreases according to the white half and black half of the moon-based month.

Dakṣa gave in marriage to Candra twentyseven beautiful maidens. Then Candra did penance meditating on Viṣṇu for ten thousand Kalpas. Viṣṇu pleased by his penance asked him to name a boon and Candra said "When I perform a yāga in svarga all the devas like Brahmā should come in person to my yāgaśālā and take the yāgabhāga. Śūlapāṇi should remain as a watchman at my Rājasūya." Accordingly with the blessing of Viṣṇu, Candra conducted the yāga in which Atri, Bhṛgu, Brahmā, Viṣṇu, Devas, Vasus, Maruts and Viśvadevas took part. Candra gave as yāga-fees to Ṛtviks all the three worlds. The yāga was complete and when Candra rose up after a bath nine devīs fell in love with the amorous beauty of Candra. Lakṣmī, wife of Viṣṇu, Sinīvālī, wife of Kardama, Dyuti, wife of Vibhāvasu, Puṣṭi, wife of Dhātā, Prabhā, wife of Sūrya, Kuhū, wife of Haviṣmān, Kīrti, wife of Jayanta, Aṁśumālī wife of Kaśyapa and Dhṛti wife of Nanda, abandoned their husbands and went with Candra. Candra treated them all as his own wives and gave them erotic pleasure to their hearts' content. Those who saw this non-virtuous act stood dumbfounded unable to curse Candra.

Attracted by the dazzling brilliance of Candra Tārā, wife of Bṛhaspati, went with him. Enraged at this, Bṛhaspati joining with other devas prepared for a fight against Candra. Devas took sides and by the mediation of Indra a conference of both the parties was held and Tārā was sent back to Bṛhaspati. Tārā was pregnant then and Tārā confessed that the child in her womb was that of Candra. So when that child was born Candra took it away and named it Budha. Brahmā and other ṛṣis gave Budha a seat among the planets.

Budha married Ilā and they got a son named Purūravas. (See under Ilā). After that Budha performed a hundred Aśvamedhayāgas. He then enjoyed world prosperity as lord of Saptadvīpa living in the beautiful Himādriśṛṅga. worshipping Brahmā. (Chapter 12, Bhāga 3, Padma Purāṇa).

2) Testing Purūravas and the curse. Purūravas by his brilliance performed a hundred Aśvamedhayāgas and lived in glory at Himādriśṛṅga. Great demons like Keśī became his servants. Urvaśī attracted by his beauty became his wife. While he was living like that Dharma, Artha and Kāma went in disguise to his palace to test him. He received them all well but paid more attention to Dharma. Artha and Kāma got angry and cursed him. Artha cursed him saying that he would be ruined by his greed and Kāma cursed him saying he would go mad by being separated from Urvaśī. Hearing that Dharma blessed him thus : "You will live long leading a virtuous life. Your race will increase and remain in glory till the end of the moon and the stars. The insanity caused by your passion for Urvaśī would end by the end of sixty years. That celestial maiden would remain then with you for one Manvantara." (Chapter 12, Bhāga 3, Padma Purāṇa).

Purūravas used to visit Indra daily. One day while he was going through air wellarmed with a bow and arrows he saw a demon named Keśī carrying away by force Urvaśī and Citralekhā and after defeating Keśī in a fight recovered the nymphs and gave them back to Indra. Indra praised Purūravas and in his honour a drama, Lakṣmīsvayaṁvara, was enacted by Urvaśī, Menakā and others. Urvaśī taking the part of Lakṣmī started to dance but seeing Purūravas before her she became lustful and made wrong steps. Nārada who was present at the function got angry and cursed her "You will forget all you have learnt. Not only that, you will live as a creeper separated from Purūravas for a period of sixty years." (For details see under Urvaśī). Padma Purāṇa says that it was Bharata who cursed Urvaśī. This story is slightly different from that found in the other Purāṇas.

3) Sons of Purūravas. Urvaśī got eight sons of Purūravas named Āyus, Dṛḍhāyus, Vaśyāyus, Danāyus, Vṛttimān, Vasu, Divijāta and Subāhu. Of these Āyus became the propagator of the dynasty. Of the sons born to Āyus five sons, Nahuṣa, Vṛddhaśarmā, Raji, Dambha and Vipāpmā became celebrities. A hundred sons were born to Raji. They were called Rājeyas. (Chapter 12, Bhāga 3, Padma Purāṇa).

Some Purāṇas state that Purūravas had six sons while some state that he had seven sons.

4) Other details. The following references are made about him in the Mahābhārata.

(i) Once Purūravas stole the wealth of some brahmins. The brahmins took Sanatkumāra along with them and made representations to the king. Purūravas did not give back their wealth. The brahmins cursed him and as a result the prosperity of the King waned. Then Purūravas brought down from svarga three Agnis and performed a yāga and thus regained his lost splendour and prosperity. (Chapter 75, Ādi Parva).

(ii) Purūravas got six sons of Urvaśī named Āyus, Dhīmān, Amāvasu, Dṛḍhāyus, Vanāyus and Śatāyus.
(iii) Once he asked Vāyu the wind-god about the origin of the four castes and the superiority of the brahmins over other castes. (Śloka 3, Chapter 72, Śānti Parva).
(iv) At another time he discussed about yajñapurohitas with Kaśyapa. (Chapter 73, Śānti Parva).
(v) Ikṣvāku gave Purūravas a sword which in his old age he gave to his son Āyus. (Chapter 166, Śānti Parva).
(vi) He once declared that one can attain svarga by the blessings of brahmins. (Śloka 31, Chapter 6, Anuśāsana Parva).
(vii) Purūravas was famous as a donor of cows. (Śloka 26, Chapter 76, Anuśāsana Parva).
(vii) Purūravas never ate meat. (Śloka 65, Chapter 111, Anuśāsana Parva).

PURŪRAVAS II. A king of the race of Dīptākṣa. (Śloka 15, Chapter 74, Udyoga Parva).

PURUṢA. See under Prakṛti.

PURUṢĀDAKA. An ancient place. (Chapter 57, Sabhā Parva).

PURUṢANTI. A maharṣi well-praised in the Ṛgveda. The Aśvinīdevas once saved the following from trouble viz. Turvīti, Dabhīti, Dhvasanti and Puruṣanti. (Sūkta 113, Anuvāka 16, Maṇḍala 7, Ṛgveda).

PURUṢOTTAMA. Śrī Kṛṣṇa. He got this name because of his Pūraṇa (filling) and Sadana (sitting) (Chapter 70, Udyoga Parva).

PURUYAŚAS. A king of Pāñcāla. He was the son of Bhūriyaśas. The King became more and more prosperous observing 'Vaisākhadharma' following the instructions of the King's preceptors Yāja and Upayāja. (Chapter 2, Skanda Purāṇa).

PŪRVĀBHIRĀMĀ. A river of Purāṇic fame. (Śloka 22, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

PŪRVACITTI. A celebrated celestial maiden. She belongs to the group of six celebrated nymphs named Urvaśī, Pūrvacitti, Sahajanyā, Ghṛtācī, Viśvācī and Menakā. (Śloka 68, Chapter 74, Ādi Parva). Pūrvacitti was present for the Janmotsava of Arjuna. (Chapter 122, Ādi Parva). Once when Arjuna went to svarga Pūrvacitti and others danced in his honour. (Chapter 43, Vana Parva).

PŪRVADIŚĀ (PŪRVADIK). The East.
Of all the sides Pūrvadiśā is the most prominent.
1) The Sun rises in the east.
2) The sādhyas come and do severe penance in the east at dusk.
3) The moon rises here.
4) The result of offering havya to the fire spreads to the east.
5) The daughters of Dakṣa after becoming the wives of Kaśyapa delivered in the east.
6) Devas made Indra the king of the east.
7) Indra and the devas did penance jointly in the east.
8) Because the devas accepted this side first (pūrva) the side got the name Pūrvā.
9) The sun gives away as gifts the yajur Mantras at this place.
(10) The devas drink the soma juice facing the east
11) Varuṇa once entered Pātāla by the east and attained prosperity.
12) Indra selected the sacrificial animals at this place.
13) The soul of man comes to Svarga and the earth through the east. (Chapter 108 Udyoga Parva).

PŪRVAPĀLĪ. An ancient king. The Pāṇḍavas invited this king for the great Mahābhārata battle. (Śloka 17, Chapter 4, Udyoga Parva).

PŪRVĀŚRAMA. A sacred place on the shores of the river Sarayū. While going along the shores of this river with Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa, Viśvāmitra showed the boys this āśrama and explained to them its importance. It was at this place that Śiva burnt Kāmadeva (god of love) to death. Kāmadeva got the name Anaṅga at this place. (Bāla Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Sarga 23).

PŪṢAṆĀ. A female follower of Subrahmaṇya. (Śloka 20, Chapter 43, Śalya Parva).

PŪṢĀ I (PŪṢAN). Pūṣā attended the Janmotsava of Arjuna. (Chapter 122, Ādi Parva). When Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa fought against Indra at Khāṇḍavaprastha Pūṣā stood as an ally of Indra. (Śloka 35, Chapter 226, Ādi Parva). Once all the devas together performed a yāga and not knowing the importance of Śiva, they did not invite him to the Yāga. Śiva attended the function uninvited. The devas did not like it and they attacked Śiva. The twelve ādityas as a team fought against Śiva and in the fight Pūṣā lost his teeth. (Chapter 18, Sauptika Parva). Once Pūṣā presented to Subrahmaṇya two warriors named Pāṇītaka and Kālika.

PŪṢĀ II. (PŪṢAN). Another name for the Sun. (Śloka 16, Chapter 3, Vana Parva).

PUṢKALĀ I. A valiant soldier who fought on the side of Rāvaṇa. Hanūmān fought against this soldier fiercely. (Bhāga 2, Padma Purāṇa).

PUṢKALA II. The youngest son of Bharata, son of Daśaratha. Māṇḍavī was the mother of Puṣkala. (Chapter 88, Vāyu Purāṇa; Chapter 6, Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa; Chapter 4, Viṣṇu Purāṇa; Chapter 11, Agni Purāṇa).
Details available about Puṣkala from Padma Purāṇa and Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa are the following :
(1) Puṣkala was with Śatrughna when the latter served as the guardian of the horse in all the three aśvamedhayāgas conducted by Śrī Rāma. (Padma Purāṇa, Pātāla Khaṇḍa, Chapters 1 and 22).
(2) He defeated Damana, son of Subāhu, while he was following the sacrificial horse. (Padma Purāṇa, Pātāla Khaṇḍa, Chapter 34).
(3) He fought fiercely against the demons, Vidyunmālī and Ugradaṁṣṭra. (Padma Purāṇa. Pātāla Khaṇḍa, Chapter 34).
(4) He fought against Rukmāṅgada and Vīramaṇi. (Padma Purāṇa, Pātāla Khaṇḍa, Chapter 41).
(5) He was defeated by Lava who checked the progress of the sacrificial horse. (Padma Purāṇa, Pātāla Khaṇḍa, Chapter 61).
(6) Puṣkala conquered the country of Gāndhāra and built there a city called Puṣkalāvatī alias Puṣkalāvata and made it his capital city. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Uttara Kāṇḍa).
(7) His wife's name was Kāntimatī. (Padma Purāṇa, Pātāla Khaṇḍa, Chapter 67).

PUṢKARA I. Son of Varuṇa. Soma's daughter was attracted by the beauty of Puṣkara and married him. (Śloka 12, Chapter 98, Udyoga Parva).

PUṢKARA II. The younger brother of Nala. It was this Puṣkara who jointly with Kali defeated Nala in a game of dice and drove him away from his country.

At last Puṣkara apologised to Nala and gave him back his country. (See under Damayantī).

PUṢKARA III. A sage. He was the Guru of Paraśurāma. (Chapter 151, Agni Purāṇa).

PUṢKARA IV.

1) General information. This is a holy place situated 36 Kilometres to the north of Ajmer. Brahmā once did penance there. There is a temple of Brahmā there. Padma Purāṇa gives a story about the origin of this tīrtha :—

Once Brahmā came to a place holding a lotus. Then Brahmā saw Vajranābha who was engaged in penance for the destruction of the devas. Suddenly the lotus in the hands of Brahmā fell down making a thundering noise. The sound was so loud that its vibrations killed Vajranābha. From that day onwards the place was known as Puṣkara.

2) Other details.

(i) Arjuna spent the period after his pilgrimage in this tīrtha. (Śloka 14, Chapter 220, Ādi Parva).

(ii) Once sage Pulastya praised the greatness of Puṣkara. (Śloka 20, Chapter 82, Vana Parva).

(iii) Sage Dhaumya praised the greatness of Puṣkaratīrtha. (Śloka 16, Chapter 89, Vana Parva).

(iv) Once the god of death came and did penance at this place. (Śloka 26, Chapter 54, Droṇa Parva).

(v) Once Brahmā performed a Yāga at this place and then Sarasvatī rose up from the place in the name of Suprabhā. (Śloka 5, Chapter 38, Śalya Parva).

(vi) If one performs penance at this place peacefully one can attain mokṣa. (Chapter 297, Śānti Parva).

PUṢKARA V. A mountain in the island of Puṣkara. This mountain is full of precious stones. (Śloka 24, Chapter 12, Bhīṣma Parva).

PUṢKARA VI. One of the seven islands. The other six are Jambūdvīpa, Plakṣadvīpa, Śālmalīdvīpa, Kuśadvīpa, Krauñcadvīpa, and Śākadvīpa. (8th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

PUṢKARADHĀRIṆĪ. The wife of a sage. There was once a sage named Satya in the country of Vidarbha. Puṣkaradhāriṇī was the wife of Satya. Satya who believed in Ahiṁsā performed a Yāga with fruits and roots. It is believed that no yāga is perfect if performed without a sacrificial goat. But even his wife for fear of a curse did not object to a Yāga of the kind.

There was another sage living in that forest in the form of a deer due to a curse and he was a great friend of Satya. The deer came to the place of the Yajña and requested Satya to kill him as the sacrificial animal to make the Yāga a success. Satya did not agree to that but then Sāvitrīdevī appeared in person and compelled him to kill the deer and conduct the Yāga. With great reluctance Satya killed the deer and conducted the Yāga; but the power of penance of Satya faded away by that deed of his. Then Puṣkaradhāriṇī performed penance to regain the power of her husband and Dharma appeared in person and blessed Satya. (Chapter 272, Śānti Parva).

PUṢKARĀKṢA I. A King of Purāṇic fame.

There was once a King called Bhadrākṣa in Takṣaśilānagara. He worshipped Bhagavatī with 108 lotus flowers daily in order to obtain a son. One day he found one flower missing and the brave king tore open his heart and made the number complete. The goddess was pleased and she blessed him saying that he would have a son worthy of becoming an emperor. Puṣkarākṣa was the son thus born.

The boy grew up and after crowning him as King Bhadrākṣa left for the forests. Puṣkarākṣa worshipped Śiva daily to get a suitable wife. After some time Śiva blessed him saying that he would get a very good wife.

One day he went for hunting. He saw a camel trying to eat two cobras engaged in the act of mating. Instantly the King sent an arrow against the camel and the camel falling down turned into a Vidyādhara and that Vidyādhara told the King thus :—"Oh King, there was once a Vidyādhara named Raṅgamālī. A Vidyādhara maiden named Tārāvalī was attracted by the handsome form of Raṅgamālī. She married him without the consent of her parents. The angered father separated them by a curse. The curse took effect and they soon got separated losing their way in the forest. Pining to see her husband Tārāvalī roamed about in the forests and reached the other shore of the western sea. It was a colony of ṛṣis and there was a fig tree there standing in full blossom. Tārāvalī took the form of a beetle and sat on the tree sucking honey. After some days Raṅgamālī also came to the place. On seeing her husband she had emission and from the virile fluid was born a fig fruit. After that both of them flew to the Gandharva loka. I am Raṅgamālī. One day a sage named Jitāsu came that way and this fruit fell before him. From the fruit came out a beautiful maiden and Jitāsu with his divine power understood the whole story behind it and so took the girl to his āśrama and named her Vinayavatī. Vinayavatī grew into a beautiful maiden and stayed in the āśrama. One day by accident I happened to see her and attracted by her beauty tried to rape her. She cried aloud and hearing the noise the sage came out and cursed me and turned me into a camel. I pleaded for mercy and the sage said I would be released from the curse when I was killed by the future husband of Vinayavatī, Puṣkarākṣa by name. Oh King, I am now released from the curse and you should go to the forest named Surabhimāruta on the other side of the western sea and marry that maiden."

Puṣkarākṣa was pleased to hear this and the king going back to the palace and entrusting the administration of the state to his ministers left for the forest of Surabhimāruta. Reaching the shore of the western sea he was thinking of ways to cross the sea when he saw a Bhadrakālī temple nearby. When he went to the temple he saw a violin in front of it and taking it he played on it a few songs in praise of Kālī and went to sleep in the temple. The goddess was pleased with his songs and took the sleeping king to the other side of the sea. When he woke up next morning he saw himself on the other shore and was pleasantly surprised. He walked about on the shore and saw an āśrama and peeping in saw a sage sitting inside. On seeing the king the sage told him thus "Oh Puṣkararāja, Vinayavatī in search of whom you have come here has just gone to pluck flowers for her worship. She will come just now and you can then accept your wife of your previous birth as your wife of this life."

The king wanted to know more about Vinayavatī when the sage said she was his wife in his previous birth also. Then the sage said : "Once there was a Vaiśya called Dharmasena in Tāmralipti. He married a girl named Vidyullekhā. All their wealth was stolen by thieves and grief-stricken they attempted to commit suicide by jumping into the fire. They saw two swans flying towards them and without waiting for them to reach them they committed suicide. In their next birth they became a swan couple. They lived on a date tree during rainy seasons. Once in a storm the tree fell down and in the darkness each went its own way. In the morning the male swan started searching for his mate. In the end he found her in the lake of Mānasa in Svarga. They lived there happily till the rainy season was over and then they went and stayed on a mountain. One day a forester killed the she-swan and while coming with the dead swan in his hands he saw a set of armed men coming that way and the frightened forester threw the dead swan into a lake nearby. The dead swan came in touch with the Mṛtasañjīvanī herb in the pond and coming to life flew away.

The husband swan went into another group of swans and lived there in sorrow. One day a fisherman came and caught all the swans in a net. At that time the she-swan came there and finding her husband in the net felt very sad. She was thinking of some way to get her husband released from the net when a man came to bathe in the pond. He wrapped the diamond necklace of his in a cloth and placed it on the shore. The she-swan took the necklace and flew making the fisherman see everything before him. Seeing the swan going with the necklace the fisherman went after it. The swan flew to a mountain nearby and placed it on its top. The fisherman started climbing up and the she-swan then flew back and released her husband from the net. One day while they were flying making a lotus as an umbrella a hunter shot them down with arrows. Fortunately the lotus fell on an idol of Śiva and by the power of Śiva they were born in their next birth as a king and a woman. The king is yourself and the woman is Vinayavatī."

Puṣkarākṣa married her there and returning to his land lived happily for a long period. (Taraṅga 2, Śaśāṅkavatīlambaka, Kathāsaritsāgara).

PUṢKARĀKṢA II. A king. Puṣkarākṣa, son of king Sucandra, was cut to death by Paraśurāma. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 3).

PUṢKARAMĀLINĪ. A very virtuous woman. She was the wife of a sage named Satya who lived on alms in the country of Vidarbha. Because she was very strict and perfect in the observance of vratas she became lean but pure. She was very obedient to her husband and she made her own dress out of peacock feathers gathered from forests. Puṣkaramālinī was against sacrificing cows in yajñas. (Chapter 246, Śānti Parva).

PUṢKARIṆĪ I. Wife of Cākṣuṣa Manu. Cākṣuṣa got of Puṣkariṇī a son named Manu. (Chapter 18, Agni Purāṇa).

PUṢKARIṆĪ II. Wife of Bhumanyu, emperor of Bhārata. Bhumanyu got of his wife Puṣkariṇī, six sons named Suhotra, Diviratha, Suhotā, Suhavis, Suyajus and Ṛcika. (Chapter 94, Ādi Parva).

PUṢKARIṆĪ III. Wife of king Unmukha. Unmukha got of his wife Puṣkariṇī six sons named Aṅga, Sumanas, Khyāti, Kratu, Aṅgiras and Gaya. (4th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

PUṢPA. A serpent born of the family of Kaśyapa. (Śloka 13, Chapter 103, Udyoga Parva).

PUṢPADAṀṢṬRA. A prominent serpent of the family of Kaśyapa. (Śloka 12, Chapter 35, Ādi Parva).

PUṢPADANTA I. One of the Aṣṭadiggajas. (The eight elephants of the quarters).

PUṢPADANTA II. One of the three soldiers given to Subrahmaṇya by Pārvatī. The other two were Unmāda and Śaṅkukarṇa. (Śloka 51, Chapter 45, Śalya Parva).

PUṢPADANTA III. One of the attendants of Śiva. Due to a curse Puṣpadanta was born on earth as Vararuci. (See under Vararuci). There was another curse also on him. (See under Jambukeśvara).

PUṢPADANTĪ. A relative of a Gandharva named Citrasena. Puṣpadantī was once dancing in the court of Indra with Mālyavān and other Gandharvas. Puṣpadantī faltered in her steps as she was admiring the beauty of Mālyavān and Indra cursed them both and turned them into devils. They then observed the Ekādaśī (eleventh day of every lunar fortnight) called 'Jayā' and got themselves released from the curse. (Chapter 43, Uttara Khaṇḍa, Padma Purāṇa).

PUṢPAKA I. A divine Aerial Chariot.

1) Origin. Viśvakarmā had a daughter named Saṁjñā. She was married to Sūrya. But Saṁjñā could not live with Sūrya for long because of the terrible heat and so she came back and told her father about it. At once Viśvakarmā ordered Sūrya to come to him and the former then tried to reduce his brightness by rubbing him on a grindstone. However much he tried he was not able to reduce even an eighth of his brightness. The brightness of the Sun which was rubbed out spread in the atmosphere as suspended lustrous particles. Viśvakarmā collected that lustrous dust and from it created four brilliant things. The Cakrāyudha of Mahāviṣṇu is one, the Triśūla of Śiva is another, and the third is Puṣpakavimāna (Puṣpaka Aerial chariot). The fourth is Śakti, a weapon of Subrahmaṇya. Viśvakarmā gave them all as presents to Brahmā. (Chapter 2, Aṁśa 2, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

2) How Kubera got the Puṣpaka. Vaiśravaṇa alias Kubera was the son born to Viśravas of his wife Devavarṇinī, daughter of sage Bharadvāja. Viśravas did penance to please Brahmā to get a son and Vaiśravaṇa was born by the blessing of Brahmā. Kubera also, even while he was a boy, went to the valley of Himavān and did penance there. Kubera did penance for ten thousand years with his head downwards in cold water and another ten thousand years in Pañcāgni standing on one leg. At that time Brahmā appeared in person and asked what boon he wanted. He said he wanted to be one of the lokapālakas (guardians of the universe). Granting Kubera that, Brahmā gave him two treasures named Śaṅkhanidhi and Padmanidhi and also the Puṣpakavimāna. After that Kubera built a city named Laṅkā on the mountain of Trikūṭa in the southern ocean and started living there.

3) How Rāvaṇa got the Puṣpaka. Viśravas had three more sons named Rāvaṇa, Kumbhakarṇa and Vibhīṣaṇa. They did penance and acquired divine powers. Rāvaṇa then went to Laṅkā and after defeating Kubera and sending him north captured Laṅkā and made it his capital. He also took by force the Puṣpaka from Kubera.

All the victory marches of Rāvaṇa were in this Puṣpaka. Once Rāvaṇa was going in his Puṣpaka with a Yakṣa beauty kidnapped from Alakāpurī when the girl cried loudly attracting the attention of Sampāti, a vulture King. Sampāti attacked Rāvaṇa with his fierce beak and powerful claws. Rāvaṇa's weapons proved futile against Sampāti and the bird broke the Puṣpaka into pieces. But the Vimāna was a divine one and it regained the original shape and utility soon. All the weapons of Rāvaṇa were destroyed, the great weapon Candrahāsa was thrown away. The crown of Rāvaṇa was struck down and trampled upon. With his sharp beak and piercing claws Sampāti made bruises on the face of Rāvaṇa. Unable to bear the attack of the mighty bird Rāvaṇa begged for peace. Sampāti asked Rāvaṇa to release the Yakṣa girl which Rāvaṇa did at once. Rāvaṇa then returned to Laṅkā in the Puṣpaka (Kiṣkindhā Kāṇḍa, Kamba Rāmāyaṇa). It was in this Puṣpaka plane that Rāvaṇa kidnapped Sītā. In the battle that followed, Rāvaṇa was killed and the Puṣpaka Vimāna came into the possession of Vibhīṣaṇa who gave it as a gift to Śrī Rāma. Śrī Rāma sent it back to its original owner, Kubera. But Śrī Rāma used it again for once.

A śūdra named Śambūka started performing penance in Rāmarājya as a consequence of which there started a series of infant deaths in the country. Śrī Rāma knew the cause and he got down by meditation the Puṣpaka Vimāna from Kubera. When the plane came from Kubera Śrī Rāma got into it and flew to the place where Śambūka was doing penance and on reaching there killed the Śūdra and saved the country from a calamity. The Vimāna was then sent back to Kubera. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

PUṢPAKA II. The great forest lying on one side of the mountain Latāveṣṭa situated to the south of Dvārakāpurī. (Chapter 38, Dākṣiṇātya Pāṭha, Sabhā Parva).

PUṢPĀNANA. A Yakṣa. He lives in the court of Kubera. (Śloka 17, Chapter 10, Sabhā Parva).

PUṢPARĀGAPRĀKĀRA. (RATNAŚĀLĀ). The Purāṇas state about a fort made of diamonds called Puṣparāga shining red above the heavenly place called Maṇidvīpa above Brahmaloka. This fort is seven yojanas high. All things inside it, the ground, the trees, the birds, the animals, plants, creepers and gardens are puṣparāga-studded and look red like saffron. Therefore the fort is called Ratnaśālā also. All the dikpālakas of the universe live with their family and attendants in this fort. (12th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

PUṢPARATHA. The chariot of the King called Vasumanas. This chariot was capable of travelling through air, mountains and oceans. (Chapter 198, Vana Parva).

PUṢPĀRṆA. A King born of the family of Dhruva. He married a girl named Prabhā. (Skandha 4, Bhāgavata).

PUṢPAVĀHANA. A King of Rathantarakalpa. He got ten thousand sons of his wife Lāvaṇyavatī. Puṣpavāhana was a hunter in his previous birth. He used to give daily lotus flowers to a harlot who was doing worship of Viṣṇu observing the Dvādaśīvrata. He was doing this service with such devotion that in the next birth he was born under the name Puṣpavāhana (carrier of flowers). The sage Bhṛgu once told him about his previous birth and asked him to observe dvādaśīvrata. Puṣpavāhana observed the vrata and attained bliss. (Sṛṣṭi khaṇḍa, Padma Purāṇa).

PUṢPAVĀN. A King. This King who ruled supreme over all the three worlds also met with his death. The story of this King was quoted by Bhīṣma to illustrate that everything is transitory in this world. (Chapter 277, Śānti Parva).

PUṢPAVATĪ. A sacred place. If one stays here for three nights fasting and bathes in the holy pond there one would get the benefit of making a thousand godānas (cow-gifts) and his family will be absolved of all sins. (Śloka 12, Chapter 85, Vana Parva).

PUṢPOTKAṬĀ. Mother of Kubera.

1) Genealogy. From Brahmā were born two demons Heti and Praheti. Heti married Bhayā, daughter of Kāla and to them was born a son named Vidyutkeśa. Vidyutkeśa married Sālakaṭaṅkā daughter of Sandhyā and to them was born a son named Sukeśa. They abandoned the child in a forest and went away. Śiva took care of the child Sukeśa who married Daivavatī daughter of the Gandharva called Maṇimaya and she delivered three sons named Mālyavān, Sumālī and Mālī and all the three started living in the crystal palace built at Laṅkā by Viśvakarmā.

At that time a Gandharva woman called Narmadā delivered three daughters named Sundarī, Ketumatī and Vasudhā. When they came of age Sundarī was married to Mālyavān, Ketumatī to Sumālī and Vasudhā to Mālī. Mālyavān got of Sundarī seven demons named Vajrapuṣṭi, Virūpākṣa, Durmukha, Suptaghna, Yajñakeśa, Matta and Unmatta and a demoness of name Nalā. Sumālī got of Ketumatī ten sons named Prahasta, Akampana, Vikaṭa, Kālakāmukha, Dhūmrākṣa, Daṇḍa, Supārśva, Saṁhrāda, Prakvāta and Bhāsakarṇa and four daughters named Vekā, Puṣpotkaṭā, Kaikasī and Kumbhīnasī. Mālī got of Vasudhā four sons named Anala, Anila, Aha and Sampāti.

Sumālī wandered in the forests with his daughters. He gave all the four daughters in marriage to Viśravas, son of Pulastya. Viśravas got of Kaikasī three sons named Rāvaṇa, Kumbhakarṇa and Vibhīṣaṇa and a daughter named Śūrpaṇakhā. Viśravas got of Puṣpotkaṭā a son named Vaiśravaṇa or Kubera. (Chapter 11, Agni Purāṇa; Chapter 275, Vana Parva, Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

PUṢṬI. A daughter born to Dakṣaprajāpati of his wife Prasūti. Dharma married her. Puṣṭi had twelve sisters. Dharma married them also. Besides these thirteen daughters Dakṣa got of Prasūti another eleven daughters. They were Khyāti, Satī, Sambhūti, Smṛti, Prīti, Kṣamā, Santati, Anasūyā, Ūrjjā, Svāhādevī and Svadhā. They were married in order to Bhṛgu, Śiva, Marīci, Aṅgiras, Pulastya, Pulaha, Kratu, Atri, Vasiṣṭha, Agni and the Pitṛs. (Chapter 7, Aṁśa 1, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

PUṢṬIMATI. Another name for the agni called Bharata. If this agni is appeased there will be health. (Chapter 221, Vana Parva).

PŪTANĀ I. A demoness who was killed by Kṛṣṇa at Ambāḍi. Her previous birth, her relationship with Kaṁsa and such other details are found differently in different Purāṇas.

1) Kaṁsa and Pūtanā.

(i) Pūtanā was the daughter of a demoness called Kaitavī and was the servant maid of the wife of Kaṁsa. She had a younger sister called Vṛkodarī. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 18).

(ii) Pūtanā was the dhātrī (foster-mother) of Kaṁsa. She entered Gokula in the form of a bird. (Harivaṁśa, Chapter 2, Verse 6).
(iii) Pūtanā was the sister of Kaṁsa and the wife of Ghaṭodara. (Brahmavaivarta Purāṇa).
2) Pūrvajanma (previour birth).
(i) Pūtanā in her previous birth was born as the daughter of Mahābali bearing the name Ratnamālā. When Vāmana appeared before Mahābali during the time of the latter's Yajña, Ratnamālā mentally desired thus :—"Oh if only this Vāmana became my child ! I could have then breast-fed him." Vāmana, the omniscient, understood the desire of Ratnamālā. So during the incarnation as Kṛṣṇa, Ratnamālā was born as Pūtanā and Kṛṣṇa gave her salvation by drinking her breast-milk. (Brahma Vaivarta Purāṇa, Chapters 4 and 10).
(ii) Once when the sage Kālabhīru and his daughter Cārumatī were travelling together they saw the sage Kakṣīvān doing penance on the shores of the river Sarasvatī. Kālabhīru saw in Kakṣīvān a suitable husband for his daughter and so gave Cārumatī in marriage to him. They were thus living happily together when once Kakṣīvān had to go on a pilgrimage alone leaving Cārumatī in his āśrama. Taking advantage of her loneliness a Śūdra made her his concubine and when Kakṣīvān returned he found out the deceit and cursed her to be born as a demoness. She begged for relief and the sage said she would get relief when Viṣṇu incarnated as Kṛṣṇa. Pūtanā was the cursed form of Cārumatī. (Chapter 18, Ādi Parva).

PŪTANĀ II. An evil spirit. This spirit which torments children stays with Subrahmaṇya. (See under Grahapīḍā. (Chapter 23, Vana Parva).

PŪTIKĀ. A creeper. This can be used in Yāgas as a substitute for Somalatā. (Śloka 33, Chapter 35, Vana Parva).

PUTRADARŚANAPARVA. A sub-divisional Parva of Āśramavāsika Parva. It comprises chapters 29 to 36.

PUTRAKA. A King. (See under Pāṭalīputra).

PUTRIKĀPUTRA. A son born to a woman who is either a prostitute or one without a brother. (Śloka 11, Chapter 3, Manusmṛti).

PŪYAVAHA. A hell. (See under Naraka).

R

Ṛ. This letter means "sound". (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).

RA. The letter ra means fire, strength, Indra. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348), RABHASA I. A monkey in Śrī Rāma's army. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddhakāṇḍa, Canto 4).

RABHASA II. A Rākṣasa on Rāvaṇa's side. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa, Canto 9).

RABHYA. An ancient king wedded to justice and fairplay in ruling the kingdom. (For details see under Ekavīra).

RĀDHĀ I. Śrī Kṛṣṇa's dearest consort. Rādhā is considered to be one of the two forms of Lakṣmīdevī. When Kṛṣṇa lived in Gokula as a man with two hands Rādhā was his dearest consort. But when he lives in Vaikuṇṭha as four-handed Viṣṇu, Lakṣmī is his dearest consort. (Devī Bhāgavata 9, 1; Brahmavaivarta Purāṇa, 2, 49 and 56-57 and Ādi Parva Chapter 11).
Different versions about the birth of Rādhā are given in the Purāṇas, as follows:—
(i) She was born in Gokula as daughter of Vṛṣabhānu and Kalāvatī. (Brahmavaivarta Purāṇa, 2, 49; 35-42; Nārada Purāṇa, 2. 81).
(ii) She was got as Bhūmi-kanyā (earth-girl) when King Vṛṣabhānu was preparing the ground to conduct a Yajña. (Padma Purāṇa; Brahma Purāṇa 7).
(iii) She was born from the left side of Kṛṣṇa. (Brahmavaivarta Purāṇa).
(iv) At the time of Kṛṣṇa's birth Viṣṇu asked his attendants to be born on earth. Accordingly Rādhā, dear consort of Kṛṣṇa, took her birth in Gokula under the star Jyeṣṭhā in the morning of Śuklāṣṭamī day in Bhādrapada month. (Ādi Parva 11),
(v) Kṛṣṇa once went with Virajā, the Gopī woman, to the hall of enjoyment (rāsamaṇḍalam). Knowing about it Rādhā followed them to the hall, but both of them were not to be seen. On another occasion when Rādhā found Virajā in the company of Kṛṣṇa and Sudāmā she, in great anger, insulted Kṛṣṇa whereupon Sudāmā cursed her to be born in human womb and experience the pangs of separation from Kṛṣṇa. (Nārada Purāṇa 2. 8; Brahmavaivarta Purāṇa. 2. 49) and Rādhā cursed him in turn to be born in the dānava dynasty. It was on account of this curse of Rādhā that Sudāmā was born as the asura called Śaṅkhacūḍa. (Brahma Vaivarta Purāṇa, 2. 4. 9. 34).
(vi) Rādhā is considered to be one of the five forces which help Viṣṇu in the process of creation. (Devī Bhāgavata 9. 1; Nārada Purāṇa 2. 81).
(vii) Rādhā is the mental power of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (For details see under Pañcaprāṇas).

RĀDHĀ II. Wife of Adhiratha, the foster-father of Karṇa and the foster-mother of Karṇa. (See under Karṇa).

RĀGĀ. One of the seven daughters of Bṛhaspati—Aṅgiras. As she was loved by all beings she came to be called Rāgā. (Vana Parva, Chapter 203).

RĀGAKHĀṆḌAVA. A cake-like thing formed in a Yajña performed by King Dilīpa. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 61, Verse 8).

RAGHU.
1) General. A famous king of the Solar dynasty. The great king Dilīpa was his father. (For Genealogy, birth etc., see under Daśaratha and Dilīpa).
2) Other information.
(i) Raghu also occupies a place in the list of famous kings of ancient days. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 232).
(ii) In the fight between the king of Virāṭa and the Kauravas (over the lifting of cows) Raghu was present along with Indra to see Arjuna fight. (Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 10).
(iii) Raghu got from King Yuvanāśva a sword, which he presented to Hariṇāśva. (Śānti Parva Chapter 166, Verse 78).
(iv) He did not eat flesh. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 150, Verse 81).
(v) Kṣatriyas who praise Raghu will not be defeated in war. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 165, Verse 51).
(vi) In the list of kings to be remembered at dawn and at dusk Raghu too is included. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 165, Verse 51).

RĀGIṆĪ. A celestial woman, daughter of Himavān and elder sister of Pārvatī. (For details see under Pārvatī).

RAHASYAVEDA. A Veda composed by mni Arvāvasu. This Veda is about Sūrya. (Bhārata, Chapter 137, Verse 19).

RĀHODARA (RAHODARA). A muni of ancient days. There is a story in Chapter 39 of the Vāmana Purāṇa about a skull falling on the muni's neck and the place where the skull was removed from his neck coming to be known as Kapālamocana.

Śrī Rāma killed the Rākṣasas who lived in Daṇḍaka forest. The head of one of the Rākṣasas cut by a very sharp knife was thrown off at a distance in the forest and it fell on the neck of Rahodara, who happened to be walking at the time in the forest. It (the head) cut deep into the bones of the Sage and that made it difficult for him to move about. Yet, he visited all the holy places on the earth with the skull of the Rākṣasa around his neck. At last he told the noble Ṛṣis about his misfortune and they directed him to visit 'Auśanasatīrtha', and the moment he touched the water in the tīrtha the skull fell into the water. Having been told about the incident, the Ṛṣis named the tīrtha 'Kapālamocana'.

RAHOVĀDĪ. A king of the Pūru dynasty. He was the son of Saṁyāti and the father of Bhadrāśva. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

RĀHU. An Asura.

1) Birth. Son of Kaśyapaprajāpati by his wife Siṁhikā. (Ādi Parva. Chapter 65, Verse 31).

2) Rāhu and the Solar eclipse. The oldest story about Rāhu is that about the solar eclipse (See under Candra IV, Para 4).

3) Other information.

(i) Rāhu is a member of Brahmā's court. (Sabhā Parva Chapter 11, Verse 29).

(ii) Sañjaya once spoke to Dhṛtarāṣṭra about Rāhu. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 40).

(iii) Rāhu exists 10,000 yojanas below the Sun. (Bhāgavata, 5th Skandha).

(iv) Rāhu is installed in temples as wearing a half-moon on his head. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 51).

RAHŪGAṆA. A sage who lived in Ṛgvedic times. It was his son Gotama, who composed the 74th Sūkta of the first Maṇḍala of Ṛgveda.

RAIBHYA I. A hermit who was famous in the Palace of Yudhiṣṭhira. Information about this hermit, found in the Mahābhārata is given below :

(1) Raibhya who was a friend of Bharadvāja had two sons named Arvāvasu and Parāvasu. They were great scholars. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 135, Stanza 12).

(2) Bharadvāja once forbade his son Yavakrīta from going to the hermitage of Raibhya. Getting angry at this, Raibhya struck his matted hair on the ground and created a wicked fairy and ordered her to kill Yavakrīta. Knowing this Bharadvāja ran to that place and cursed Raibhya that his eldest son would kill him.

Once Parāvasu, mistaking his father for a cruel animal killed him. By the effort of his second son Arvāvasu, Raibhya was brought to life again. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 138, Stanza 137).

(3) Raibhya was the son of Aṅgiras. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 208, Stanza 26).

(4) Raibhya was once an assistant at the sacrifice of Uparicaravasu. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 33, Stanza 7).

(5) Raibhya was one of the hermits who visited Bhīṣma in his bed of arrows. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 26, Stanza 26).

RAIBHYA II. An ancient hermit. This hermit learned the Sātvatadharma from Vīraṇa. After that he taught his son Dikpāla, this dharma. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 343, Stanza 42).

RAIBHYA III. The father of Duṣyanta, the husband of Śakuntalā. This Raibhya was the son of Sumati. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

RAIBHYA IV. One of the sons of Brahmā. Once Raibhya went with Vasu and Aṅgiras to Bṛhaspati and asked him several questions, about the attainment of Supernal bliss. Bṛhaspati replied that attainment of heaven could be had, not by action but only by devotion. Raibhya immediately started to Gayā to do penance. There he met with the Sanatkumāras. (Varāha Purāṇa).

Urvaśī made an earnest effort to hinder the severe vow and penance of Raibhya. But it was of no use, and by his curse, that celestial woman became ugly. She entreated him for liberation from the curse. Raibhya blessed her and said that she could obtain her original form by bathing in Yodhinīkuṇḍa. (Yoginī Kuṇḍa). Urvaśī bathed in Yodhinīkuṇḍa and from that day onwards that tīrtha (holy bath) came to be known as Urvaśīyoginīkuṇḍa.

RAIKVA. There was a noble King in ancient India named Jānaśruti. The following is a story about the fame of this King.

One night while this King was sleeping, some hermits took the form of swans and were flying through the air. One of them saw the radiance of the fame of Jānaśruti shining brightly. The other swans said that the fame of Raikva was far greater than this. Jānaśruti heard this. He found out Raikva and placed all his wealth at the foot of Raikva and gave him his daughter in marriage.

RAIVATA I. Information about this King found in the Mahābhārata is given below :—

(1) An ancient King in Bhārata. Once he heard the Gandharvas singing songs from Sāmaveda in the arbours of Mandara mountain in the south and becoming so much immersed in it, he desired to renounce his country, city, wife and everything and go to the forest. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 109, Stanza 9).

(2) He got a sword from Marutta. He gave that sword to Yuvanāśva. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 166, Stanza 77).

(3) Raivata never ate meat. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 115, Stanza 63).

(4) He is one of the Kings who should be praised in the mornings and evenings. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 165, Stanza 53).

RAIVATA II. One of the eleven Rudras. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 208, Stanza 19).

RAIVATAKA I. A mountain in Gujarat. It stands near the present Junagaḍh. The present name of Raivataka mountain is Girnar. In Mahābhārata it is spoken of as Ujjayantagiri. It is stated in Mahābhārata that while Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna were travelling through Prabhāsakṣetra once, they got to the top of this mountain. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 217, Verse 8).

The Yādavas once celebrated a great festival on the Raivataka mountain. It was during this festival that Arjuna carried away Subhadrā, the sister of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 219; Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

RAIVATAKA II. A mountain in Śāka Island. Mention is made about this mountain in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 18.

RAIVATAKA (RAIVATA). Son of Priyavrata, the brother of Uttānapāda. Priyavrata had two wives Surūpā and Barhiṣmatī. Surūpā gave birth to ten sons beginning with Agnīdhra. Three sons Uttama, Tāmasa and Raivata were born to Barhiṣmatī. These three sons became Lords of Manvantara, in course of time. (See under Manvantara).

RAJA I. A warrior of Subrahmaṇya. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 78).

RAJA II. A Sage. He was one of the sons born to Vasiṣṭha of Ūrjā.

RĀJĀ. One of the two gate-keepers of Sūryadeva. (Bhaviṣya Purāṇa, Brāhmakāṇḍa).

RĀJA (N). All the important Purāṇas have laid special emphasis on the importance of rule by Kings. All living beings will have Kings of their own. It was Brahmā who first assigned or ordained Kingship. After the creation of the Prajāpatis, Brahmā made Candra the King of the stars and medicines; Varuṇa was appointed King of waters like sea, river etc; Vaiśravaṇa was appointed King of Kings; Viṣṇu, King of Devas; Agni, King of Vasus; Indra King of Maruts; Dakṣa King of the Prajāpatis; Prahlāda King of the dānavas; Himavān, King of mountains; Citraratha, King of Gandharvas; Vāsuki, King of nāgas; Garuḍa, King of birds; Airāvata, King of elephants; Ox, King of cattle, Tiger, King of animals, Peepal tree, King of trees and Uccaiśśravas, that of horses. (Agni Purāṇa).

As to what type the King of man-kind should be and what should form his duties it is ordained as follows. The Rājā should appoint either a Kṣatriya or a brahmin as his Commander - in - chief. The Commander-in-chief should be of noble birth and well-versed in law. Only a strong man who can speak boldly and openly should be appointed emissary or ambassador. Either a male or a female may be appointed to carry chewing materials. But, that person should be loyal, friendly and capable of putting up with hardships. The body-guard of the King should be a good swords-man. Ministers should be conversant with dharmaśāstras (moral and ethical codes).

Also, the King should be surrounded by the royal physician, chief of the elephant division of the army, the mahout, chief of the cavalry force, master of the forts, the architect, preceptor in archery and the chief of the internal administration of the palace.

When it is yet three hours for the dawn, the King should wake up from sleep. Music, praises by courtiers etc. should herald his waking up. As soon as he has woken up, the King should hold talks with his spies. Then he should examine accounts and only after this should he begin the ablutions. After his pūjā (worship) is over, cows with gold should be gifted to brahmins. With their blessings he must look first into the mirror and then in ghee along with gold. Then he must look up the almanac for the day's star etc. And after having taken the medicine prescribed by the physician and also the blessings of the preceptor the King should attend court. (Agni Purāṇa. Chapter 235).

According to Chapter 8 of the Manusmṛti (a great authority on law and ethics) Kings are born from the shoulders of Indra, Vāyu, Yama, Sūrya, Agni, Varuṇa, Candra and Kubera.

RAJA (S). One of the seven sons of Vasiṣṭha by Ūrjā, the other six being Gotra, Ūrdhvabāhu, Savana, Anagha, Sutapas, and Śukra. Holy souls, these seven were Saptarṣis in the third Manvantara. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 10).

RĀJADHARMĀ. A stork, which was a friend of Brahmā and a son of Kaśyapaprajāpati. This stork was known as Nāḍījaṅgha also. (See under Nāḍījaṅgha).

RĀJADHARMĀNUŚĀSANA PARVA. A sub-Parva of Śānti Parva, Chapters 1-130).

RĀJĀDHIDEVĪ. The youngest of the five daughters of the solar King Śūra by Māriṣā. King Jayasena of Avantī married Rājādhidevī. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

RĀJAGṚHA (GIRIVRAJA). An ancient city in India, capital of Magadha. Dīrgha King of Girivraja was killed by King Pāṇḍu. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 112, Verse 27). Another King, Ambuvīca, had for a time ruled over the city. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 203, Verse 17). Afterwards Jarāsandha became its King. Girivraja is a holy place as well. He who bathes here will become as pleasant-looking as King Kakṣīvān. (Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 104).

RĀJAMUKHĪ. A celestial woman. (Skanda Purāṇa).

RĀJANĪ. A holy river in ancient India. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 21).

RĀJANĪTI. (Politics and administration).

Politics and administration or administrative politics in ancient India is dealt with in Manusmṛti and Agni Purāṇa. A very brief summary of it is given below :

The King should organise six kinds of army formations, worship the Devas duly and then set out for war. Mūlabala, Bhūtabala, Śreṇībala, Suhṛdbala, Śatrubala and Āṭavikabala are the six kinds of army formations. The list is given in order of the comparative importance of the bala. The army has six parts i.e. Mantra (advisers), Kośa (treasury), Padāti (infantry), Turaga (Cavalry), Gaja (elephant) and Ratha (chariot).

If an attack is feared either against the forts or across rivers or trenches, the army should be marched for their protection. The Army Chieftains surrounded by mighty warriors should lead the divisions. The King and his wife should be at the centre of the army-division along with the treasury and first class soldiers. On both sides of the King should march the cavalry and the chariots should form the farther wings. Elephants should proceed on the two sides of the chariot and soldiers recruited from forests must march on the sides of the elephants. The supreme commander will march behind all the others guiding the army.

If there is cause for fear in front of the army during the march, three Vyūhas (Phalanxes) Makara, Śyena or Sūcī should be put in the Vanguard. The Śakaṭa Vyūha is more suited to meet an attack from behind. If attack is feared from the flanks then also the Śakaṭavyūha is advisable. When attack from all the sides is feared sarvatobhadravyūha is indicated. It is the duty of the Supreme Commander to safe-guard his army and suppress reactionary forces whenever the army gets weakened, when it marches through caves, mountains or rocks or other difficult terrain or weakened by the persistent attacks of the enemy.

When the time, place and the people's attitude are favourable, the King should engage himself in open war with the enemy, and if they are unfavourable he shall not go in for war. If confrontation with the enemy occurs under circumstances in which the King is visible to the enemy, powerful divisions of the army consisting of warriors of great calibre should be stationed either at the front or in the rear.

In the formation of vyūhas (phalanx) there are seven factors called Uras (breast), Kakṣas (arm-pits), two Pakṣas (sides), two Madhyas (centre) and Pṛṣṭha (rear). The commanders should be surrounded by bold soldiers. The leader is the very life of the war. At the Uras of the vyūha powerful elephants, at the Kakṣas chariots and at the Pakṣas cavalry should be stationed. This is called pakṣabhedivyūha. If at the centre cavalry and at Kakṣas and Pakṣas elephants are stationed, it is called antarbhedivyūha. If there are no chariots, cavalry or infantry may be put in their place. Certain authorities maintain that in every vyūha elephants may be stationed in the place of chariots, if chariots are not available. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 242).

RĀJAPURA I. An ancient and famous city in Kāmboja. Here Karṇa defeated the Kāmbojas. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 5).

RĀJAPURA II. Capital city of King Citrāṅgada of Kaliṅga. Innumerable kings gathered together in the city in connection with the Svayaṁvara of the princesses. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 3).

RĀJAŚEKHARA. A Sanskrit dramatist who lived in India in 7th century A.D. Bālabhārata or Prakāṇḍapāṇḍava, Bālarāmāyaṇa, Viddhaśālabhañjikā and Karpūramañjarī are his more famous dramatic works. Karpūramañjarī refers to him as the preceptor of a king of Kanauj. Rājaśekhara was known by the name Kavirāja also.

Bālarāmāyaṇa, called also Mahānāṭaka, is a drama in ten Acts. Bālabhārata contains only two Acts. Its theme is the wedding of Draupadī and the ruin caused by the game of dice. Viddhaśālabhañjikā is a drama in four Acts. He has a further work to his credit, Kāvyamīmāṁsā in eighteen chapters.

Some scholars hold the view that Rājaśekhara lived in the 10th century A.D.

RĀJASŪYA. A great yajña. Hariścandra and also Dharmaputra performed it. (Sabhā Parva, Chapters 33, 35, 84).

RĀJASŪYAPARVA. A sub-Parva of Sabhā Parva. (Chapters 33-35).

RĀJASŪYĀRAMBHA PARVA. A sub-parva of Sabhā Parva, Chapters 13-19.

RAJATANĀBHA. A Yakṣa. He married Maṇivarā, daughter of Anuhrāda and two sons, Maṇivara and Maṇibhadra were born to them.

RĀJAVĀN. A muni born in the Bhṛgu dynasty. To Bhṛgu were born of his wife Khyāti, Lakṣmī, the wife of Viṣṇu and also two sons called Dhātā and Vidhātā. They married Āyati and Niyati daughters of Meru. Two sons, Prāṇa and Mṛkaṇḍu were born to the couples. From Mṛkaṇḍu was born Mārkaṇḍeya and from him Vedaśiras. Prāṇa had a son called Dyutimān and he a son called Rājavān. It was from Rājavān that the Bhṛgu dynasty multiplied. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 10).

RĀJAYOGA. See under Yoga.

RAJI (RĀJI). A prominent king of the Pūru dynasty. He was one of the five sons of Āyus by Svarbhānu the other four being Nahuṣa, Kṣatravṛddha, (Vṛddhaśarman) Rambha and Anenas. (Āśrama Parva, Chapter 70, Verse 23).

Purāṇas contain stories that Indra destroyed people born in Raji's dynasty as they hated the former. That side in which the powerful Raji fought used to win. In a fight between the asuras and the Devas, when Indra felt that his side was losing, he secured the participation of Raji in the fight on condition that the latter would be given Indra-hood. The asuras were defeated and Raji was made king of svarga.

Raji had thousands of children and they were known under the common name Rājeyakṣatriyas. But they were a foolish lot and lacked the capacity to distinguish themselves in Indra's place. Therefore, at the instance of Bṛhaspati, preceptor of the Devas, Indra destroyed them all and resumed his former position and status. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha ; Vāyu Purāṇa, Chapter 92, Verse 76 ; Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa 11 ; Harivaṁśa 1, 28; Matsya Purāṇa. Chapter 24, Verses 34-49).

RAJJUKAṆṬHA. A grammarian. In Pāṇini's aṣṭādhyāyī he is depicted as a maharṣi possessing great knowledge of the Vedas.

RĀJÑĪ. Second of the three wives of Vivasvān. The couple had a son called Revata.

RĀJYAVARDDHANA. A king of Vaiśālī. Rājyavarddhana was a great ascetic, who could comprehend the past, the present and the future. Knowing that his death was near, he told his subjects about it and went into the forests for tapas.

Sorry over the departure of their king, his subjects as well as ministers began worshipping Sūrya, who appeared and blessed them saying that their king would live for ten thousand years in perfect health, victory and with all wealth and prosperity and other resources and with unimpaired youthfulness.

The ministers and subjects greatly elated over the boon informed their king in the forest about it, but he only felt sorry about it. He told them that during his life for ten thousands years he would have to witness the death of his sons, grandsons and subjects and would thus have to be sad throughout life.

The king consoled and made them return. Then he did rigorous tapas to Sūrya and secured from him the boon that during his life-time none would die. (Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa).

RĀKĀ I. The presiding Devī of the full moon. She too was present at the birth of Subrahmaṇya. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 14).

Rākādevī was the daughter of Aṅgiras, who had by his wife Smṛti four daughters called Sinīvālī, Kuhū, Rākā and Anumati. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa. Part 1, Chapter 1).

RĀKĀ II. A Rākṣasa girl. She served, at the instance of Kubera, Maharṣi Viśravas, and a son called Khara and a daughter, Śūrpaṇakhā, were born to her by the maharṣi. (Vana Parva, Chapter 275, Verse 3).

RAKṢAS. A particular sect of asuras. Yakṣas and Rakṣas were offsprings born to Kaśyapa prajāpati of his wife Muni. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 19).

RĀKṢASA I. A particular sect of asuras. The ancients had ordained that Rākṣasas should not be killed at dusk. Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Canto 22, Verse 22).

Uttararāmāyaṇa, contains the following story about the origin of Rākṣasas. When Brahmā was reciting the Vedas at the beginning of Kṛtayuga he felt very hungry and certain forms emanated from his face. Those who were born from his anger assumed the form of Rākṣasas and those from his hunger that of Yakṣas. The Rākṣasas turned out to be evil folk killing and eating cows and brahmins. Praheti and Heti were the first born Rākṣasas, the latter of whom wedded Bhayā, daughter of Kāla, and to them was born a son called Vidyutkeśa. He married Sālakaṭaṅkā, daughter of Sandhyā. Though a child was born to them they forsook it in the Himālayan slopes and went their own way.

At that time Śiva and Pārvatī came that way and after blessing the child returned to Kailāsa. The child was named Śukeśa. He married Devavatī, daughter of the Gandharva called Maṇimaya and three children were born to the couple, viz. Mālyavān, Sumālī and Mālī. They did tapas to propitiate Brahmā and when he appeared requested him thus : "We must defeat Yakṣas Kinnaras, Gandharvas, Siddhas, Vidyādharas, Yama, Kubera, Vāsava, Nāga kings and daityas and dānavas and we must not be defeated by any one. We must kill all enemies and they shall not kill us. We three shall never quarrel among ourselves."

Brahmā granted all their prayers. The three, proud and haughty due to these boons, began roaming about consuming cows and brahmins. They asked Viśvakarmā to build a city for them and he built for them Laṅkā on Mount Trikūṭa in the south sea. The three brothers took their abode in Laṅkā. Mālyavān, Sumālī and Mālī married respectively Sundarī. Ketumatī, and Vasudhā, daughters of the Gandharva woman Narmadā Mālyavān begot of Sundarī seven sons called Vajramuṣṭi Virūpākṣa, Durmukha, Suptaghna, Yajñakośa, Matta, and Unmatta, and also a daughter called Nalā.

To Sumālī were born of Ketumatī ten sons and also four daughters.

Four sons were born to Mālī of his wife Vasudhā, and they became the ministers of Vibhīṣaṇa.

Then thousands of Rakṣasas were born as sons, grandsons, brothers, nephews, etc. to the above and they lived in Laṅkā, a terror to the whole world.

While the daughters of Sumālī, Vekā, Puṣpotkaṭā, Kaikasī and Kumbhīnasī were once walking in the forest they saw Kubera on a visit to Brahmā in all pomp and glory. They understood that Kubera owed his pomp and glory to his being the son of Viśravas and therefore, the next day one of the four, Kaikaśī, went to Viśravas's āśrama and prayed for children by him. Three sons called Rāvaṇa, Vibhīṣaṇa and Kumbhakarṇa and a daughter called Śūrpaṇakhā were born to her by Viśravas. They secured boons by performing tapas and Rāvaṇa lived in Laṅkā as king of the Rākṣasas.

RĀKṢASA II. An approved system of marriage. (See under Vivāha).

RĀKṢASAGRAHA. An evil spirit connected with the Rākṣasas. Affected by this spirit man will immediately become mad. (Vana Parva, Chapter 23, Verse 50).

RĀKṢASAYAJÑA (RĀKṢASASATRA). Parāśara Muni once conducted a yajña to annihilate the Rākṣasas altogether. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 180). The provocation for Parāśara to conduct the yajña was that a Rākṣasa called Kalmāṣapāda ate Śakti, the father of the muni and the son of Vasiṣṭha. When the yajña had reached its climax Pulastya, Pulaha and Kratu went to Parāśara and held conciliatory talks with him, and Parāśara, ended the yajña. The Agni that he had made to devour the Rākṣasas was discarded on the slopes of the Himālayas. According to the Purāṇas that fire, even to this day, continues consuming the Rākṣasas, trees and rocks. (For details see under Kalmāṣapāda and Parāśara).

RAKṢITĀ. A celestial woman, daughter of Kaśyapaprajāpati by Pradhādevī. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 50).

RAKṢOBHAKṢA. A hell. (For details see under Kāla.)

RAKṢOVĀHA. A kingdom in ancient India. The Kṣatriyas there were annihilated by Paraśurāma. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 70, Verse 12).

RAKTA. A son of Mahiṣāsura. He had two sons called Bala and Atibala. He had also a number of mighty army generals like Dhūmrākṣa and thousand akṣauhiṇīs under each general. (Skanda Purāṇa, 7.1.119).

RAKTABĪJA.

1) General. Rebirth of Rambhāsura, father of Mahiṣāsura. Stories of Raktabīja and Rambhāsura are inextricably intertwined.

2) Origin of Raktabīja. Once upon a time there lived an asura king called Danu. His two sons, Rambha and Karambha who had no children, did tapas at Pañcanada for the blessing of having issues. Rambha and Karambha meditated upon Mālavaṭa Yakṣa, the former seated at the centre of the five fires and the latter standing in the water. Indra in the guise of a crocodile dragged Karambha away by the feet and killed him. Angry at the death of his brother, Rambha decided to cut off his head and offer it in fire. When he was about to do so, Agni appeared and told him that suicide was worse than killing others, and promised to grant him whatever he desired. Accordingly Rambha requested Agni for a son more effulgent than the latter, who would conquer the three worlds and would not be defeated even by the Devas and the Asuras. Rambha further wanted that son to be as powerful as Vāyu, exceptionally handsome and skilled in archery.

Agni blessed Rambha that he would have, as desired, a son by the woman whom he coveted. On his way back home he saw a beautiful she-buffalo, which he married. He took the buffalo which got pregnant by him, to Pātāla to protect it from the attack by other buffaloes. One day another buffalo felt a passion for Rambha's wife and in the fight that ensued Rambha was killed by it. Rambha's wife died in his funeral pyre. It was from the centre of the fire that the very powerful Mahiṣāsura was born. Rambhāsura also rose from the fire under the name Raktabīja. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 17; Devī Bhāgavata, 5th Skandha).

3) Boon to Raktabīja. Raktabīja secured from Śiva a boon according to which if one drop of blood from his body fell on the battlefield, many Raktabijas would arise from the blood and fight the enemies. Each of these Raktabījas would also be like the others in the matter of strength, form and weapons. (Devī Bhāgavata, 5th Skandha).

4) His death. War between Devas and Asuras broke out and in the fight between Devī and Raktabīja blood from his body flowed. When Devī found it impossible to kill the lakhs of Raktāsuras who arose from the blood, she resorted to a trick. She asked Cāmuṇḍī to lick off the blood flowing from Raktabīja before it fell on the ground. Accordingly Devī began killing the asuras and Cāmuṇḍī consuming their blood and flesh. When the artificial Raktabījas were all killed thus, the original Raktabīja alone remained and in the fight between them, Devī cut off his head with her sword. Cāmuṇḍī did not permit even a drop of blood to fall on the ground. (Devī Bhāgavata, 5th Skandha).

RAKTAJA. A form assumed by Arjuna in his previous birth. The following story is told in Padma Purāṇa (Chapter 14) about Arjuna being reborn as such at the meeting of Kali and Dvāpara yugas and Svedaja being born as Karṇa during the same period.

Once during a quarrel between Śiva and Brahmā the former nipped off Brahmā's head. (For details see under Brahmā). Some drops of sweat appeared on the forehead of the angry Brahmā, and from the sweat which Brahmā wiped with his hand arose a person wearing a thousand shields, bow and quiver. That person was Svedaja. He asked Brahmā what he should do and the former granted him permission to destroy Śiva. He then approached Śiva with bow drawn and the frightened Śiva ran to Viṣṇu and sought refuge. Svedaja followed Śiva and when Viṣṇu, seeing him, raised a loud noise 'Hum'. Śiva prostrated at Viṣṇu's feet. Śiva extended the skull in his hand towards Viṣṇu requesting something to be given to him. Mahāviṣṇu, who had nothing else to give Śiva, put his right hand into the skull as alms, Śiva wounded the hand with his Śūla (three-pronged weapon) and pure red blood began flowing from the hand into the skull. The blood continued flowing for a thousand years in a length of fifty yojanas and thickness of ten yojanas. At the end of the period Viṣṇu asked whether the skull was not filled yet, and looking into the skull with his three eyes Śiva answered that it was full. Then Viṣṇu stopped the flow of blood, and Śiva, in the presence of Viṣṇu, looked into the blood for a thousand years and stirred it with his hand. The blood gradually turned into a bubble, and a person possessing thousand hands and as glowing as fire appeared in the skull. He had a crown on his head and he held in his hands a bow and quiver. He wore gloves on his hands. And, that was Raktaja, an incarnation of Nararṣi.

Looking at Raktaja, Śiva told Viṣṇu thus : "This master in archery is Nara. You spoke Nara, and let his name, therefore be Nara. Oh Nārāyaṇa, you both will be called Naranārāyaṇas. This Nara will be of help to you on behalf of the Devas and also in the sustenance and protection of the world. He will further help you to kill the asuras. Nara, the great intellectual that he is, will become a muni, of surpassing wisdom. Brahmā's divine fifth head possesses so much of effulgence. Nara is created from that effulgence and also from the blood from your hands and my look at it. He will annihilate all enemies in war. He will be a terror to those persons who cannot be conquered by you, Indra and the other Devas.

While Viṣṇu stood there amazed Raktaja praised him and Śiva with folded hands and asked from the skull what he should do. Then Śiva ordered him thus : You kill this asura (Svedaja) created by Brahmā with his own effulgence." And Śiva led Raktaja out of the skull by his hands and told him again :—"Look, here lies the terrible person I spoke about made unconscious by the cry of 'Hum' by Viṣṇu. Awake him immediately." After having said this Śiva disappeared. Nara, in the presence of Nārāyaṇa, kicked the unconscious Svedaja with his left foot, and he came out of his unconscious state.

The fierce fight that ensued between Raktaja and Svedaja continued for two years. By then Svedaja had lost everything but one of his shields and Raktaja had only his two arms to fight with. At this stage Vāsudeva (Viṣṇu) in great alarm went and asked Brahmā whether Raktaja might not kill Svedaja. Brahmā answered, 'In the next birth Nara may defeat Svedaja'. Saying 'Right, let that be so', Viṣṇu returned to the battlefield and withdrew them from fighting with the assurance that they would be given an opportunity to fight again during the period of the Kali and the Dvāpara yugas.

Afterwards Viṣṇu directed Āditya (Sun) and Ākhaṇḍala (Indra) to look after Raktaja and Svedaja. He told Āditya further : —"At the end of the Dvāpara yuga you should see that Svedaja is reborn, in the interests of the Devas, as your son. In the Yadu dynasty will be born a very powerful fellow called Śūra and he will have a very beautiful daughter named Pṛthā. Durvāsas will advise her some mantras as a boon and she will have some sons from the Devas whom she will invoke with the mantras. With that object in view, while in her periods, she would, at the time of dawn gaze at you with love. Then he (Svedaja) will be born as the son called Vasuṣeṇa of Kuntī, the virgin."

The Sun-God agreed to obey the above instructions of Viṣṇu and told him further :—"I shall procreate in the virgin a very powerful and valiant son, who will become well-known in the world as Karṇa. He will gift away all wealth to brahmins." After saying this Sūrya disappeared.

After this Viṣṇu told Indra as follows :—"You should, at the end of the Dvāpara yuga see that this Nara, born from blood, is reborn as an aspect of yours on earth. King Pāṇḍu will one day go into the forest with his wives, Kuntī and Mādrī, and he will then become the object of an animal's curse. He will therefore, in a spirit of renunciation, go to mount Śataśṛṅga where he would ask Kuntī to become a mother by another man. Unwilling to do so Kuntī will desire to have sons by Devas, and when she prays to you, you should favour her with this Nara as son.

Devendra raised a legal objection to the above injunction of Viṣṇu as follows :—"You, who incarnated yourself as Rāma in the twentyseventh yuga of the last Manvantara for the purpose of killing Rāvaṇa, killed my son Bāli. Therefore I do not wish to procreate Nara as my son." To this objection of Indra Viṣṇu assured him that as a penalty for the mistake of killing Bāli, he would be a companion of Nara (Arjuna) who would be born as Indra's son.

According to the above terms and conditions fighting between Raktaja and Svedaja ended. In the next birth Raktaja was born as Arjuna and Svedaja as Karṇa. Mahāviṣṇu incarnated himself as Śrī Kṛṣṇa. The meeting of the three in the battle-field is well-known.

RAKTĀṄGA. A nāga born in Dhṛtarāṣṭra's dynasty. It was burnt to death at the yajña of Janamejaya. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 18).

RAMĀ. A synonym for Mahālakṣmī. There is a story in the eighth Skandha of Devī Bhāgavata as to how the name Ramā came to be attached to Lakṣmī.

Revanta, the very handsome son of Sūrya one day came to Vaikuṇṭha mounted on his horse Uccaiśśravas to pay his respects to Mahāviṣṇu. Even Lakṣmīdevī stood aghast speechless for a very short time at the charm of Revanta changing her looks between him and his horse. Mahāviṣṇu did not at all like this and cursed that since Lakṣmī's eyes enjoyed the sight of some one she would come to be called Ramā also and that she would be born as a mare on earth.

RĀMA (ŚRĪ RĀMA). The seventh incarnation of Mahāviṣṇu, a very powerful king of the solar dynasty.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu thus: Brahmā - Marīci - Kaśyapa-Vivasvān - Vaivasvata Manu-Mahābāhu - Prasandhi - Kṣupa-Ikṣvāku - Vikukṣi - Śaśāda-Kakutstha (Purañjaya) - Anenas-Pṛthulāśva-Prasenajit-Yuvanāśva-Māndhātā-Purukutsa-Trasadasyu-Anaraṇya-Hryaśva-Vasumanas-Sutanvā - Traiyyāruṇa-Satyavrata (Triśaṅku)-Hariścandra - Rohitāśva - Harita - Cuñcu-Sudeva - Bharuka - Bāhuka - Sagara - Asamañjasa-Aṁśumān-Bhagīratha-Śrutanābha- Sindhudvīpa-Ayutāyus-Ṛtuparṇa - Sarvakāma - Sudās - Mitrasakha (Kalmāṣapāda) - Aśmaka - Mūlaka - Khaṭvāṅga - Dilīpa (Dīrghabāhu) -Raghu-Aja-Daśaratha-Rāma.

2) Reason for his birth. When Rāvaṇa was ruling over Laṅkā as a terror to the world, evils and cruelties like matricide, patricide, fratricide, killing of cows, hatred for good people, children's death, abduction of women, killing of munis, thefts etc. became rampant. When the world became grief-stricken Bhūmidevī (Goddess of earth) assumed the form of a cow and took refuge with Indra in Svarga. She told him about the atrocities committed by Rāvaṇa and the other Rākṣasas. Then Indra took Bhūmidevī (cow) to Brahmā, who took them to Śiva at Kailāsa as killing Rāvaṇa was beyond his (Brahmā's) power. Śiva thought it improper on his part to kill Rāvaṇa and so he took Brahmā and others to Viṣṇu and submitted their grievance to him. Viṣṇu consoled them by saying as follows:—"I have decided to incarnate myself as the son of Daśaratha, king of Ayodhyā. You Devas also should take birth on earth to help me to kill Rāvaṇa and other evil Rākṣasas and to protect Bhūmidevī and the good people on the earth." (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Pūrva Kāṇḍa).

3) Birth King Daśaratha of the solar dynasty ruled Kosala with Ayodhyā as his capital. Maharṣi Vasiṣṭha was his family preceptor. With the cooperation of eight ministers such as Sumantra and others he ruled the country in the path of supreme welfare and prosperity. A daughter, Śāntā, was born to him of his wife Kausalyā. Years passed by, yet he had no son. One of those days King Lomapāda, close friend of Daśaratha visited Ayodhyā. Lomapāda, who was childless requested Daśaratha for Śāntā and she was given as his adopted daughter by Daśaratha. Lomapāda gave her in marriage to Ṛṣyaśṛṅga, who had once caused rain-fall in Aṅga. (For details see under Ṛṣyaśṛṅga).

To have a son, Daśaratha took as his second wife Kaikeyī, daughter of the King of Kekaya and younger sister of Yudhājit. But she turned out to be barren. Then he married Sumitrā, daughter of the King of Kāśī. Even after many years none of the three wives of Daśaratha presented him with a son.

One of those days Daśaratha went deep into the forest, hunting. While resting on the banks of river Sarayū he heard a sound like that of an elephant drinking water in the river. Without realising the fact that the voice was that of the son of a muni filling water in a pot for his aged parents, the King released an arrow against him. When Daśaratha walked to the spot, he realised his mistake. He had hit unknowingly a brahmin-boy, a muni's son. The boy lay wounded about to die. The boy explained to Daśaratha who he was and how he had come to the river to carry water to his aged parents. After telling the King details about him he breathed his last. Sobbing at his misadventure, Daśaratha went to the aged parents of the dead boy with the pot filled with water. The parents, who were blind thought that it was their son who was approaching them when Daśaratha revealed the sad story to them. After cursing Daśaratha that he too would die of separation from his son, the aged muni expired; his wife also died in his funeral pyre. The grief-stricken King returned to Ayodhyā.

Only Vasiṣṭha and Sumantra were told about the curse, which, though a cause for great sorrow, implied that Daśaratha would have sons. Vasiṣṭha, therefore, advised Daśaratha to get the yajña, called putrakāmeṣṭi performed by Ṛṣyaśṛṅga. Accordingly the King invited his daughter Śāntā and his son-in-law, Ṛṣyaśṛṅga to Ayodhyā, and the yajña began. Ṛṣyaśṛṅga made offerings in the sacred fire chanting the putrakāma hymn. Then a divine person arose from the fire with a golden vessel full of pudding (nectar of the Devas) and disappeared again in the fire after giving the vessel to Ṛṣyaśṛṅga. Ṛṣyaśṛṅga handed it over to Daśaratha, who as advised by the maharṣi divided the pudding between Kausalyā and Kaikeyī. They gave a part of their shares of the pudding to Sumitrā also. The three queens conceived, and in due course of time Kausalyā and Kaikeyī delivered a son each and Sumitrā two sons. The son of Kausalyā was named Rāma, the son of Kaikeyī, Bharata, and sons of Sumitrā were named Lakṣmaṇa and Śatrughna. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa).

4) Boons granted to Kaikeyī. Before the sons were born to Daśaratha, the mighty asura called Śambara once attacked Devaloka. Daśaratha was at that time known as Nemi, and he was a great friend of Indra, and on his invitation Nemi, along with Kaikeyī, went to Devaloka in a chariot. Nemi killed the asura army within half an hour. Then Śambara assumed the form of ten Śambaras and attacked Nemi from ten points. In this context Nemi turned and twisted his chariot in all the ten directions at the same time and killed all the ten Śambaras and recaptured Svarga. It was from that day onwards that Nemi came to be known as Daśaratha.

In the fight with the Śambaras on all points Daśaratha's chariot was so violently shaken that the key of its axle was about to slip off and fall down. Noticing the threatened danger Kaikeyī applied her finger to the proper place of the axle and thus averted the mishap. When Daśaratha knew about this timely action of Kaikeyī he was so very pleased that he asked her to choose any two boons she desired, and she asked him to keep the boons with him to be granted whenever she requested for them. Daśaratha and Kaikeyī took leave of Indra and returned to Ayodhyā. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa).

5) In the company of Viśvāmitra. The four sons of Daśaratha grew up in Ayodhyā. Though they were equally friendly to one another, intimacy between Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa and also between Bharata and Śatrughna came to be thicker. Once Viśvāmitra decided to conduct a yajña for the happiness and contentment of all people. At the very commencement of the yajña, Rākṣasas, in batches, tried to spoil it, and Mārīca and Subāhu, sons of Tāṭakā were the leaders of the obstructionists. Viśvāmitra knew that Rāma was the most effective weapon against the Rākṣasas and requested Daśaratha to lend him Rāma's help. Daśaratha felt sad about it and Viśvāmitra was getting excited over the former's attitude when Vasiṣṭha advised Daśaratha to send Rāma along with Viśvāmitra. Accordingly Daśaratha sent Rāma to the forest in the company of Viśvāmitra. Lakṣmaṇa too followed his brother.

While walking in the forest Viśvāmitra related many old stories to Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa. They crossed river Sarayū, passed by many āśramas of munis and reached the Pāla forest. Here Viśvāmitra imparted to Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa, who felt too weak on account of hunger and thirst the two mantras Balā and Atibalā, which would ward off hunger and thirst. He also taught them the use of certain rare arrows. Śrī Rāma was specially taught the use of a divine arrow called Jṛmbhakāstra.

6) Tāṭakā killed. While Viśvāmitra was relating to them the story of Tāṭakā, who dwelt in the forest, they saw the fierce Rākṣasī coming fast with a long spear in her hand. She threw a big rock at Viśvāmitra. Rāma shattered the rock with an arrow. Next, Tāṭakā dashed forward against Rāma roaring furiously, and Rāma, with another arrow killed her. The soul of the dead Tāṭakā assumed the form of a Gandharva woman and ascended to heaven.

7) Salvation to Ahalyā. Rākṣasas like Subāhu lined up to obstruct the yajña, which Viśvāmitra began after the killing of Tāṭakā. Rāma killed Subāhu; Mārīca ran away in fright and hid himself in the sea. Rāma drove away the other Rākṣasas.

Next, Viśvāmitra, hearing about the Svayaṁvara of Sītā, daughter of King Janaka started for his palace with Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa, and on the way he told the boys many Purāṇic stories. They bathed in the river Gaṅgā and a short walk took them to the vacant āśrama of Gautama. The great muni called Gautama had once lived in this āśrama with his dutiful wife Ahalyā and their son Śatānanda, an erudite scholar in all sciences. Indra, who lost his head over the great beauty of Ahalyā went to the āśrama one midnight in the form of a cock and crew. Thinking it was already dawn Gautama went to the river for bath when Indra assumed the form of the muni, entered his bed room and slept with Ahalyā. When Gautama understood the fraud thus played upon him, he cursed her into a stone. She was to resume her old form when, during Tretāyuga, Śrī Rāma trod upon the stone. Accordingly, as soon as Rāma trod on the stone Ahalyā cast off her form as stone and resumed her old form as Ahalyā. Immediately Gautama and Śatānanda also appeared on the scene. Ahalyā ascended to the sky as a devī.

8) Marriage. Viśvāmitra came to king Janaka's palace with Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa. Janaka's daughter Sītā and his younger brothers' daughters Māṇḍavī, Ūrmilā and Śrutakīrti were living in the palace as sisters and very good friends. One day the princesses who were playing in the garden could not pluck jasmine flowers from a height. Sītā then brought the Śaivacāpa (Śiva's bow) from the weapon-room and shot down Jasmine flowers with it. As Janaka watched Sītā's action of shooting with the Śaivacāpa an idea came into his head. He announced that the hero, who succeeded in shooting with Śaivacāpa, would be given Sītā in marriage.

Just as Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa were inseparable companions Sītā and Ūrmilā were always to be found together and Māṇḍavī and Śrutakīrti were particular friends. Śrī Rāma shot an arrow from Śiva's bow and he was selected as Sītā's husband. Janaka informed Daśaratha of the marriage and he came with his attendants. Bharata married Māṇḍavī, Lakṣmaṇa, Ūrmilā and Śatrughna, Śrutakīrti. After living in Mithilā for sometime Daśaratha and others returned to Ayodhyā. Viśvāmitra went to the Himālayas for rest.

9) Paraśurāma's threat. Daśaratha and others on their way back to Ayodhyā passed the Videha kingdom and reached the suburbs of Bhārgavāśrama. All of a sudden a shining form of a brahmin with Kṣatriya effulgence appeared in front of the procession. Vasiṣṭha understood that it was Paraśurāma and Daśaratha and others were alarmed. Paraśurāma approached Śrī Rāma who was viewing the former with quiet serenity. Paraśurāma was very angry that Rāma broke the bow of Śiva who was his (Paraśurāma's) preceptor. All Rāma's conciliatory talk failed to pacify Paraśurāma, who spoke thus to Rāma : "You, impudent fellow ! you insulted me and my preceptor. All right, let me see your power. Take this my bow, and shoot with it."

Śrī Rāma took hold of the bow and bent it easily and fixing an arrow on it asked Paraśurāma to point out the target for it. As Paraśurāma feared that if the arrow was sent, it might crush the whole univese, he asked Rāma so choose the result of his (Paraśurāma's) tapas as target for the arrow. Both the bow and the arrow were of Viṣṇu's power. That power as well as his own Vaiṣṇava power, Paraśurāma transferred to Śrī Rāma and having thus fulfilled the object of his incarnation Paraśurāma went to Puṇyāśrama for permanent tapas.

10) Ruin of the country. Daśaratha decided to install Śrī Rāma as crown prince. The people whole-heartedly welcomed it. During the night previous to the coronation, while the wives of Daśaratha were gladly discussing the happy incident, Mantharā, the tale-bearing maid of Kaikeyī advised her mistress to prevail upon Daśaratha to exile Rāma into the forest and install Bharata as crown prince. Mantharā also reminded Kaikeyī about the boons, which had been promised to her by Daśaratha during the devāsura war. Kaikeyī fell into the trap thus set by Mantharā. Kaikeyī put on a wrathful face and shut herself up in a room. When Daśaratha enquired of her the reason for her anger she asked him to make her son Bharata, the crown prince and exile Rāma for fourteen years' life in forest. The king fainted when he heard the demand. But, Śrī Rāma, on hearing about it, put on an anchorite's apparel and got ready to start for the forest. Sītā and Lakṣmaṇa also got ready to follow Rāma into the forest. While the entire population of Ayodhyā stood there weeping, Rāma, Lakṣmaṇa and Sītā wearing the forest-dwellers' garb started for the forest.

11) Death of Daśaratha and Bharata's decision. As soon as Sumantra, who had accompanied Rāma and others returned to Ayodhyā, Daśaratha expired on account of unbearable grief caused by Rāma's exile. Messengers brought to Ayodhyā Bharata and Śatrughna from Kekaya where they were put up with their uncle Yudhājit at the time of their father's death. But, they were kept in the dark of all that had happened in their absence till their arrival at the palace. Bharata, who heard of everything from his mother was greatly upset and got ready to go to Rāma in the forest. Śatrughna too got ready to accompany him. Arundhatī and Vasiṣṭha in a chariot in the fore-front, Kausalyā and Sumitrā in another chariot just behind the first one, Bharata and Śatrughna behind them—in this manner the great journey into the forest started. Leaving all others behind him, Bharata went forward and prostrated before Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa at Citrakūṭa. Śrī Rāma broke into tears on hearing about the death of their father. But in spite of Bharata's pressing request Rāma refused to return to Ayodhyā. At last Bharata yielded to Rāma's injunction and returned to Ayodhyā with the latter's sandals. But he did not enter the palace ; instead he built an āśrama at Nandigrāma and worshipping Rāma's sandals lived there.

12) Trip to Pañcavaṭī. From Mount Citrakūṭa Śrī Rāma and others started towards the forest. When they continued their journey after visiting the Sage Atri's āśrama a Rākṣasa called Virādha ran away carrying off Sītā. Rāma killed Virādha and regained Sītā. Then they visited the āśrama of sage Śarabhaṅga in the Kumuda forest. Therefrom they went to the Mṛkaṇḍu forest where they visited maharṣi Agastya, and there Rāma took the vow to kill Rāvaṇa and other evil Rākṣasas and thus render the land safe for sages to perform tapas. Agastya presented to Rāma a Vaiṣṇava bow, a Brāhma arrow and a Śaiva quiver. Rāma kept them with Agastya himself to be given to him when required. Then Agastya gave Rāma a divine ornament such as was not available in all the three worlds. Rāma tied it round Sītā's neck. Taking leave of Agastya, Rāma and others went to the Daṇḍaka forest. It was on a high peak of Mount Mahākrauñca in the forest that Jaṭāyu, brother of Sampāti and a very close friend of Rāma lived. Rāma and Jaṭāyu renewed their old frindship and decided to be of mutual service in future. After that Rāma and others rested themselves on the banks of the near-by Godāvarī.

13) Stay at Pañcavaṭī. Pañcavaṭī was on the southern bank of the Godāvarī. Five vaṭas (peepal trees) of the same size stood there in a circle, and so the place was called Pañcavaṭī. (See under Pañcavaṭī). Śrī Rāma decided to build his āśrama at the centre of those trees. Lakṣmaṇa cut down an ebony tree there to put up a parṇaśālā (hut) At once the log disappeared and the dead body of a Rākṣasa youth was found there. It was the corpse of Śambhukumāra, son of Śūrpaṇakhā. He was performing tapas there to propitiate Śiva when he was overcome by the beauty of Sītā and to look at her from a hidden spot he had assumed the form of the ebony tree. It was him that Lakṣmaṇa had cut down. Śrī Rāma understood the situation and explained to his wife and brother about the trickeries of the Rākṣasas. Then the parṇaśālā was constructed and they lived there. Hearing about the coming of Rāma all the sages of the Daṇḍaka forest visited them. They lived in Pañcavaṭī for thirteen years.

14) Test by Parameśvara (Śiva) and Pārvatī. Parameśvara and Pārvatī, who knew that many tricky changes would occur in the thirteenth year of the life of Rāma and Sītā there, decided to submit them to a test. The object of the test was to see whether Rāma and Sītā would recognise each other under all circumstances. When Sītā one day entered the river Godāvarī to fetch water, she saw two swans enjoying themselves in a lotus pool in the middle of a sand-shoal in the river. When Sītā went near the pool she saw Rāma bathing in it. But on a closer look she recognised that it was not Rāma, but Śiva, in the guise of Rāma, who was bathing there. To befool Sītā Śiva, who was disguised as Rāma, told her :—Dear one ! Please come to me quickly. Why were you so late ?

Sītā :—Oh, Deva ! salutations. Why did you alone come to the bath ?

Rāma :—I had to come alone as Devī did not come with me at once and was late in coming.

Sītā :—Why did not the Devī come ? You two are unique. Devī might be alone at Kailāsa just now. It was not good that you did not bring her also with you.

Śiva : Oh great Devī ! salutations to your divine greatness. Let me return to Kailāsa after saluting Śrī Rāma. Hail unto thee.

Meanwhile Śrī Rāma was waiting impatiently for Sītā to return. Then Sītā approached him looking into a lotus flower she held in her hand and also throwing, off and on, amorous glances at him. (She was in fact Pārvatī in the guise of Sītā). And she told Rāma :—My Lord ! you would excuse my delay in returning. The delay was due to my tarrying there to look at the play of two swans. Śrī Rāma looked closely and recognised that it was not Sītā and replied as follows :—Oh Devī ! my salutations. Did you come alone ? Where is Deva ? How is it that you are separated from him ? Mahādeva and Mahādevī are one and inseparable. Then how this separation ?

Sītā (Pārvatī) :—Salutations. Thou art omniscient and omnipotent. I return to the presence of Śiva.

15) The incident of Śūrpaṇakhā. Śūrpaṇakhā was the wife of a Rākṣasa called Vidyujjihva. Once in a war which Rāvaṇa, Vidyujjihva and other Rākṣasas fought at Devaloka Vidyujjihva was killed by mistake. Rāvaṇa, therefore, permitted Śūrpaṇakhā to choose whomsoever she liked as her husband, and she went about the world in search of a suitable husband. She liked some persons, but they did not like her, and vice versa. Thus she was roaming about discontented. She was also on the look-out for an opportunity to take vengeance on Lakṣmaṇa for killing her son, Śambhukumāra.

Śūrpaṇakhā, who heard about the beauty of Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa came to Pañcavaṭī disguised as Lalitā. Śrī Rāma alone was there in the āśrama at the time and she told him that she was love-sick. Śrī Rāma rejected her prayer on the plea that he was already married.

Then she approached Lakṣmaṇa with the same request. He too refused to oblige her. Then she saw Sītā there and decided to shatter her married life and also to make a present of her to Rāvaṇa. She also thought that if Sītā were got rid of she would have Rāma for husband. Maddened by such thoughts she rushed into the āśrama. But, Lakṣmaṇa drove her out. Then, carrying Lakṣmaṇa with her she rose into the sky and he cut away both her ears, breasts and nose. Thus disfigured she resumed her form of Rākṣasī. She flew away in the sky roaring loudly.

16) Khara killed. Having heard about the disfigurement of Śūrpaṇakhā Khara sent fourteen Rākṣasas to Rāma's āśrama. Lakṣmaṇa killed them very easily. Next, Khara, his brothers Dūṣaṇa and Triśiras with fourteen thousand Rākṣasa soldiers came to fight Rāma. Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa killed them also. This saddened Śūrpaṇakhā very much and she reported the entire affair to Rāvaṇa at Laṅkā. She told him that Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa were very courageous warriors and he was not to enter into direct fighting with them, but was to abduct Sītā whose loss would cause Rāma's death. She also assured Rāvaṇa that if Rāma died, Lakṣmaṇa would himself end his life.

17) Sītā abducted. Next day a spotted deer was found playing near the āśrama. Sītā desired to have the deer and Śrī Rāma, after asking his brother to take care of Sītā, followed the deer, which enticed him to a great distance in the forest. At last, finding it difficult to catch the deer alive, Rāma shot an arrow at it. Hit by the arrow the deer transformed itself into a gigantic Rākṣasa and fell down dead crying. "Oh ! Sītā O ! Lakṣmaṇa, a Rākṣasa is killing me. Come and save me."

The Rākṣasa, who thus fell a prey to Rāma's arrow was really Mārīca, uncle of Rāvaṇa. Mārīca had gone in the form of a deer to Rāma's āśrama at the instance of his nephew to cheat Rāma. Sītā heard the false cry of Mārīca and asked Lakṣmaṇa to hurry up to the spot for Rāma's protection. Lakṣmaṇa at first did not want to leave Sītā there alone and go after Rāma. But, when she used hard and cruel words against him Lakṣmaṇa quitted the āśrama and went into the forest. When Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa were thus absent at the āśrama an old Sannyāsin came for alms at the courtyard. Sītā, who came out to offer alms was forcibly carried away by Rāvaṇa (the sannyāsin was Rāvaṇa in disguise) in his puṣpaka aerial chariot to Laṅkā. On the way Jaṭāyu saw Rāvaṇa and put up a fight with him to get Sītā released. But, Jaṭāyu had to fall down wounded by the sword of Rāvaṇa and he lay there awaiting Rāma's arrival.

Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa returned to the āśrama only to find Sītā missing. While they advanced some distance lamenting over the loss of Sītā they saw Jaṭāyu lying in the forest, his wings cut, but happy in expectation of salvation and repeating the name of Rāma. Jaṭāyu gave Rāma all details about Sītā and then gave up his body and ascended to Vaikuṇṭha.

18) Salvation to Kabandha. Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa moved towards the south in quest of Sītā. An asura woman called Ayomukhī, sister of Śūrapadma tried to entice Lakṣmaṇa, who went alone to a pool to fetch water. When Lakṣmaṇa resisted and kept away from her allurements, she tried to carry him away into the sky. But, he drove her away disfigured. When the brothers continued their search for Sītā they were caught in the arms stretched out in semi-circular form. It was a Rākṣasa called Kabandha, and they cut away one arm each. At once the fierce Kabandha (headless body) form disappeared and a Gandharva youth appeared in his place. After offering mokṣa to Kabandha Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa continued their search for Sītā. (See under Kabandha).

19) Salvation to Śabarī. Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa reached Śabaryāśrama and were duly received by the female hermit Śabarī. She presented them with fruits. Not only that, she personally tasted each fruit for its quality and then gave the best to the guests. Rāma was so very pleased with her pure devotion that he offered her salvation. (For details see under Śabarī).

20) Rāma-Sugrīva alliance. Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa bathed in the Pampā river and thus refreshed they travelled upto the height of Mount Ṛṣyamūka where Sugrīva lived with Hanūmān as his Prime Minister. Sugrīva, who saw Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa coming, deputed Hanūmān to find out whether they were friends or foes. Hanūmān, in the guise of a brahmin boy talked with them, who related their story from the abduction of Sītā. Having understood the matters Hanūmān resumed his actual form and carried Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa on his shoulders into the presence of Sugrīva.

Sugrīva related to Rāma the story of his expulsion from Kiṣkindhā by Bāli, his elder brother. Sugrīva wanted a powerful ally to recapture the country. Similarly Śrī Rāma too wanted a powerful ally to regain Sītā. So both the parties entered into an alliance, Rāma undertaking to kill Bāli and restore his kingdom and his wife to Sugrīva and Sugrīva undertaking to search for and find out Sītā for Rāma.

Though the above pact was made, Sugrīva was doubtful about Rāma's capacity to honour his part of the contract, and Rāma, knowing this suspicion of Sugrīva, wanted to dispel it. The mountain-like body of Dundubhi, the Rākṣasa killed by Bāli, lay there in a big heap of bones and at the instance of Rāma, Lakṣmaṇa threw it into the distant southern sea with the big toe of his left foot. Sugrīva was wonder-struck at this feat of Lakṣmaṇa and praised him. Yet Sugrīva was not quite cured of his doubt and Rāma wanted to further convince him of their prowess.

There were seven big trees there known as Saptasālas. Bāli used to wrestle with the trees due to his overflowing vitality and power. (See under Saptasāla). Śrī Rāma went near the trees and suddenly fixed an arrow on his bow-string and shot it by drawing the bow, with the big toe of his right foot pressed against a rock. The arrow cut down the seven trees at one and the same time and then automatically returned to its quiver. Sugrīva was taken aback by this marvellous show of power.

21) Exhibition of ornaments. They came again to Ṛṣyamūkācala and Sugrīva placed before Rāma a bundle of ornaments and said that it was dropped down by a weeping woman from an aerial chariot, which had, a few days back, passed above the mountain. Rāma recognised them as Sītā's ornaments, shed tears and sat there motionless for some time. At last Sugrīva and Lakṣmaṇa consoled him and he handed over the bundle of ornaments to Lakṣmaṇa.

22) Kingdom restored to Sugrīva. The very next day Sugrīva took Rāma to Kiṣkindhā, and the former challenged Bāli for a combat. Rāma, from a distance, viewed the fierce fight between the brothers, but he could not do anything as it was impossible to distinguish between Bāli and Sugrīva on account of their very close resemblance. Sugrīva, who was defeated in the first round and retired from fight felt angry towards Rāma, but was soon satisfied with Rāma's explanation for his inaction. To distinguish Sugrīva from Bāli Śrī Rama, the next day, put a garland on the former's neck and wearing the garland Sugrīva challenged Bāli a second time to a duel. Though Bāli's wife, Tārā, this time prevented him from accepting the challenge Bāli paid no heed to her protests and rushed forth for the duel.

Bāli and Sugrīva fought again, and this time Rāma from his concealment behind a tree shot an arrow at the chest of Bāli. The arrow felled him. Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa then came into the open and Bāli spoke disparagingly to Rāma about shooting the arrow from concealment. Rāma answered him saying that if he had seen him (Rāma) face to face he would have become his devotee and he had to shoot Bāli from his hiding place as it was not proper to kill one's devotees. At last, after handing over charge of his wife and son Aṅgada, to Sugrīva, Bāli breathed his last. Śrī Rāma decided to crown Sugrīva as King and install Aṅgada as crown prince and returned to Ṛṣyamūkācala for rest after entrusting, under the supervision of Lakṣmaṇa, Hanūmān and Jāmbavān with the duty of making preparations for the coronation. Though Sugrīva invited Śrī Rāma to Kiṣkindhā when preparations for coronation were over, the latter declined the invitation gracefully and deputed Lakṣmaṇa to represent him at the ceremony. Lakṣmaṇa installed Sugrīva as the Mahārāja, Aṅgada as crown prince, Rumā as queen and Tārā as queen-mother. Also, Hanūmān was appointed as Sugrīva's minister. Those things over, Lakṣmaṇa returned to Rāma at Ṛṣyamūkācala.

23) Lakṣmaṇa's wrath. The next four months were rainy period. Even after that Sugrīva did not make necessary arrangements to search for Sītā. At Rāma's instance Lakṣmaṇa went to Kiṣkindhā to enquire about the reason for the delay. The monkeys were alarmed by the grave appearance of Lakṣmaṇa and Tārā came out and apologised to him. Arrangements were soon finalised for the quest of Sītā. Armies of many lakhs of monkeys were deputed to the eight regions to search for Sītā. Suṣeṇa was appointed chief of the army for the west, Śatabali for the north, Vinata for the east and Aṅgada for the south. As the south was the chief place for the search, monkeys like Hanūmān, Jāmbavān, Vivida, Nala, Nīla, Kumuda, each of them an expert in various ways, were appointed chiefs of different matters. Every chief and his assistant was given suitable instructions by Lakṣmaṇa and Sugrīva, and accordingly the army of monkeys began its march under the leadership of Hanūmān.

24) Words of recognition. To convince Sītā that it was really the emissary of Rāma who went to her the latter imparted to Hanūmān the following three sentences for timely use.

(i) "When I took leave of you for life in exile in the forest you (Sītā) who were then in the inner apartment dressed in ordinary fashion came out in the same dress prepared to follow me saying 'I too...' feigning anger'.

(ii) When, for our life in the forest, we had left the city and approached a shrubbery, Śītā in her childish ignorance and goodness of heart told me "This place will do for our forest life."

(iii) While she was one day massaging my leg in our bedroom she threw away from her finger the ring studded with stones. When I asked her the reason for it she answered me as follows :—This ring studded with stones may prove to be of danger to me. When your feet touched the hard granite rock it turned out into a world beauty (Ahalyā). Under the circumstances how much more beautiful would be the woman, who would be created by the touch of your foot on the beautiful stone of the ring ? And, because of that beauty you may...me...and then...". We two—I and Sītā—alone knew about the above incident.

Carrying thus Śrī Rāma's signet ring and words of recognition Hanūmān went along with the army, which started for the south. Sugrīva gave one month's time to the searching parties to find out Sītā and warned them that their throats would be cut if they failed in their mission.

25) Saw Svayamprabhā. Aṅgada, Hanūmān, Jāmbavān and others during their search came to an extensive forest. They were dead tired with hunger and thirst. The leader of the party looked about for something to eat and drink when he saw small birds flying up from a distant pit. From drops of water falling from the wings of the birds it was inferred that the pit contained water. When Hanūmān and others entered the pit (cave) and walked a great distance they came to a spacious garden. They were astonished to find a solitary beauty there, and she related to them her autobiography as follows:—

I am the faithful maid of Rambhā. The powerful asura called Caturāsya wanted me to procure Rambhā for him and he got this garden city built by Mayācārya, the architect of the Daityas, for me as reward for my service to him in the matter of Rambhā. Various kinds of gems light this place and creepers and trees supply food materials. Catuārsya, I and Rambhā alone were living here. But, Indra came to know of it, came here, killed Caturāsya and took away Rambhā with him. He cursed me to lead a solitary life here as punishment for having helped Caturāsya. I prayed for redemption from the curse and Indra told me, that after thousands of years a company of monkeys would come here in search of Sītā and that after entertaining them with food I must see Rāma and then return to Svarga. I have thus been awaiting your arrival and now I am leaving the place, which will vanish as soon as I quit it. All of you, please stand there with eyes closed and I shall send you back to the place where you were before coming here.

Accordingly the monkeys stood there with eyes closed and when they opened their eyes there was neither the garden city nor Svayamprabhā there but they were standing in the old plain. Svayamprabhā appeared before Rāma, praised him and then went to Svarga.

26) Met Sampāti. The monkeys again went southward, reached Mahendragiri and descending on its southern side came to the shores of the southern sea. They could advance no further to the south. They were suffering from great hunger and thirst and if they returned with no tangible information about Sītā, Sugrīva would kill them. They preferred death by fasting on the seashore to death by the sword of Sugrīva.

Having decided thus the monkeys spread darbha grass on the extensive plain of Mahendra mountain and lay on the grass to die. In a large cave in the mountain was living Sampāti. The huge bird Sampāti was starving without food and was not able to fly as it had lost its wings. But it dragged itself to the mouth of the cave and saw the monkeys lying there awaiting death, and it thought of eating the monkeys one by one. The monkeys, who understood this idea of Sampāti cursed their fate and sang the praise of Jaṭāyu.

Hearing the word 'Jaṭāyu' Sampāti approached the monkeys, who related to him the object of their journey. Being told about the death of Jaṭāyu. Sampāti shed tears and told the monkeys as follows:-

Jaṭāyu was my younger brother. Our mother was Mahāśvetā and father Sūryadeva. On account of the boon of our parents I was King of all the birds and Jaṭāyu the crown Prince. As our brotherliness grew thicker our haughtiness due to our power and speed also increased. Once we flew up towards the orbit of the Sun to see him, our father. In his youthful enthusiasm my younger brother, Jaṭāyu, climbed higher up in the sky leaving me behind. Due to the heat of the Sun his wings lost their power and energy. Then, to save him, I flew up above him and shaded him. Therefore he could descend to the earth without his wings being burned and thus killed. But, my wings got burned and I fell down on the Mahendra mountain and got my legs broken. Thus I lost the power either to fly or to walk.

I stayed here as the attendant of Niśākara Maharṣi, who could divine the future also. He told me the story about Rāma's incarnation. He told me further that monkeys in search of Sītā would come here when I should tell them where Sītā was and that then I would regain my health."

After telling the monkeys the above facts Sampāti, with their cooperation, performed the obsequies of Jaṭāyu. Then the King of birds (Sampāti) raised its head and surveyed the ocean and he saw the following: Mountain Subela in the heart of the southern sea; the plain at the heights of the mountain constituting the base of Laṅkā; in the centre of Laṅkā there was Rāvaṇa's capital; nearby the ladies' quarters; near the quarters the aśoka garden; at the centre of the garden the śiṁśapā tree and under the tree Sītādevī.

As soon as Sampāti had finished telling the monkeys the above details he regained his health.

Sampāti told the monkeys another story also as follows:-

Rāvaṇa once abducted a Yakṣa beauty from Alakāpurī and carried her away in his Puṣpaka Vimāna. Sampāti clashed with Rāvaṇa on his way and destroyed his plane. But the plane, which was self-generating came again into existence. Sampāti threw away by its beak the Candrahāsa (Rāvaṇa's sword) and kicked his crown down. At last, at the request of Rāvaṇa, he and Sampāti signed a non-aggression pact. That was the reason why Sampāti could not fight Rāvaṇa in person.

27) Hanūmān saw Sītā. Aṅgada said that for the search for Sītā in Laṅkā as told by Sampāti, some one should jump across the ocean. Though many a monkey tried to do so it was Hanūmān, who succeeded in crossing the sea. At one jump he reached the heights of Mahendragiri whence he took another jump forward. But, midway Surasā, mother of the nāgas, swallowed him, and he came out through her ear and continued his journey towards Laṅkā. When he had advanced some more distance an evil spirit called Chāyāgrāhiṇī obstructed his way by a mysterious attack on his shadow. Hanūmān quickly understood what had happened and killed the evil spirit with one kick of his left foot. He again continued his flight. But, he very soon became weak and exhausted. Then Mount Maināka emerged from the ocean and fed Hanūmān with fruits and roots. He reached Laṅkā at dusk. He defeated Laṅkālakṣmī, who tried to prevent his entry into the city. In fact Laṅkālakṣmī was Vijayalakṣmī, who had been cursed by Brahmā. (For details see under Vijayalakṣmī). After defeating her, who was thus absolved from the curse, Hanūmān saw Sītā seated under the aśoka tree. But, none saw him as he was perched on a tree.

28) Hanūmān's return. That night Rāvaṇa dressed in all splendour visited Sītā and tried to secure her favour by soft words and cajolery, all to no purpose. Then he threatened her with punishments, which too proved to be of no avail. After instructing the Rākṣasa women that Sītā should be somehow brought round within a month's time, Rāvaṇa returned to his palace.

Rākṣasīs surrounded Sītā and described to her the greatness and various merits of Rāvaṇa. Sītā continued to sob. Then came there Trijaṭā, daughter of Vibhīṣaṇa, the great devotee of Viṣṇu, and Saramā, to console Sītā. Trijaṭā had boundless devotion towards Rāma and great love for Sītā. She repeated to Sītā certain dreams she had had.

Left to herself Sītā began saying to herself various things regarding her past. She referred to her infancy, beginning of youth, wedding, stay at Ayodhyā, forest-life and life in Pañcavaṭī and wept over her recurring thoughts about them. Hanūmān, who heard Sītā's soliloquy completed Sītā's story by relating, from his place on the tree, about Jaṭāyu's salvation, salvation given to Kabandha and Śabarī, alliance with Sugrīva, killing of Bāli, expedition of the monkeys in search of Sītā, meeting with Sampāti, himself (Hanūmān) crossing the sea and his finding out Sītā. Hearing the words of Hanūmān, Sītā looked up in astonishment. Immediately Hanūmān came down the tree and presented the signet ring at Sītā's feet. When she examined the ring her hands shook and tears dimmed her eyes. Hanūmān talked to her in detail and told her that he would, if only Sītā permitted him, carry her on his shoulders to Rāma. He told her further that if she did not welcome the idea of thus returning to Rāma, he would return with Śrī Rāma and others, defeat Rāvaṇa in war and take her back. Sītā was not convinced about the power and prowess of Hanūmān. He then increased his body in size so that his limbs grew into the size of a mountain, hands into that of trees, head into that of a mountain peak, tail into that of a river etc. His breathing became akin to a storm. Then he roared in such a manner that even the very ends of the world shook and the people of Laṅkā were awakened by it.

Sītā was now absolutely convinced of Hanūmān's bona fides and faithfulness. She handed over to him her Cūḍāmaṇi (ornament worn on the head) to be given to Rāma and also told him the following three words of recognition so that Rāma might be all the more convinced.

(1) When Rāma first came to the garden near the palace in Mithilā I (Sītā) saw his reflection in the blue mirror in the veranda of my palace and the beauty of the reflection attracted me. I looked towards the garden to see the original of the reflection. Then he (Rāma) was looking down into the waters of the glass pond. He also saw my face reflected in the water and suddenly he looked at me. Our eyes met and in all shyness I hurried to and hid myself in the ladies' quarters.

(2) Before our wedding I sent him through a faithful maid, a love letter to which he gave me a suitable reply.

(3) After our wedding while we were living in Ayodhyā when one day I returned to our bedroom after a long chitchat with my younger sisters, my lord (Rāma) was lying on the cot in feigned sleep. Quietly I went up to him and kissed him on the lips. Because of the pressure on his lips and as my breast then touched his chest he pretended to have suddenly woken up and embraced me.

Having received thus from Sītā the Cūḍāmaṇi and these words of recognition Hanūmān took leave of Sītā and with her implied sanction went about to have a look at Laṅkā. At one place he heard Vibhīṣaṇa reciting Viṣṇu's names. After wishing that this house of the devotee should turn into a royal abode he passed Vibhīṣaṇa's house. Then he came to Rāvaṇa's palace and gathered information about the Rākṣasa power. "Now I must see Rāvaṇa in person, let him know personally the fact of my visit and I would give him righteous advice"—with this object in view Hanūmān began destroying the garden. He drove away the Rākṣasas, who came to punish him and some of them were killed. At last Meghanāda (Indrajit) attacked Hanūmān. Hiding in the sky he shot the Brahmāstra against Hanūmān, who yielded to it. The Rākṣasas took Hanūmān captive to Rāvaṇa. He freed himself of the cords that bound him, extended his tail which he shaped into circles, one over the other so that the last one rose more in height than Rāvaṇa's throne and seated himself on its top. Rāvaṇa and Hanūmān then began a conversation. Rāvaṇa, who got angry at the disrespect shown to him by Hanūmān, ordered the latter to be killed, but Vibhīṣaṇa opposed it saying that to kill emissaries and messengers was worse than killing one's own mother. Finally Rāvaṇa ordered that Hanūmān's tail be set fire to and he be insulted and humiliated.

Immediately Rākṣasas began to cover Hanūmān's tail with clothes. But, ths tail began growing longer and longer with the result that no quantity of clothings sufficed to completely cover the ever-extending tail. At last the Rākṣasas poured oil over the tail and set fire to it. Then Hanūmān broke loose from captivity and jumped up into the air causing universal disaster by fire in Laṅkā. The fire did not affect the palace of Vibhīṣaṇa and also the platform around the Śiṁśapā tree where Sītā sat. After thus burning down Laṅkā Hanūmān extinguished the fire on his tail by dipping it in the ocean. Taking leave once again of Sītā, Hanūmān crossed the sea and reached Mahendragiri.

29) Rāma-Rāvaṇa war. Śrī Rāma and Sugrīva, who received Hanūmān's report about his visit to Laṅkā started for it with an army of monkeys. They camped on the shores of the south sea. Rāvaṇa held a meeting of his war council attended by his brothers and others. He expelled Vibhīṣaṇa, who opposed war and advised his brother to return Sītā to Rāma and to apologise to him. Vibhīṣaṇa quitted Laṅkā and took refuge with Rāma.

Rāma and others, who had assembled on the sea-shore decided to build a bund to Laṅkā. The first thing Rāma did, for the successful conclusion of the expedition, was to install a Śivaliṅga at Rāmeśvara. (See under Rāmeśvara). Then he prayed to Varuṇadeva for a passage across the sea. But, Varuṇa did not present himself and Śrī Rāma, angry with him, shot the āgneya (fiery) arrow into the heart of the sea when Varuṇa appeared, saluted him and advised him to build a bund across the sea. As a reward for Varuṇa Śrī Rāma, as requested by the former, killed with one arrow all the Rākṣasas, who lived in Gāndhāra island on the north-western shore of the ocean. Varuṇa returned to his abode. The construction of the bund was begun under the leadership of Sugrīva with Nala as chief planner and Nīla as his co-planner. Jāmbavān and Hanūmān functioned as supervisors and other monkeys as workers. Mountains, hills, rocks etc. were brought from various quarters and the construction of the bund was begun.

Meanwhile, Rāvaṇa sent a great magician called Marutta disguised as King Janaka to Sītā to convert her to the side of Rāvaṇa. But, the attempt failed. Rāvaṇa then sent his two expert spies, Śuka and Sāraṇa disguised as monkeys to Rāma's camp. Jāmbavān and Hanūmān captured and brought them before Sugrīva. Weepingly they both sought refuge in Rāma, who set them free. They returned to Laṅkā and reported matters to Rāvaṇa, who felt a desire to have a look at Rāma for which purpose he, with his attendants, climbed to the top of the northern tower. Rāma, who knew about it by his spies climbed the heights of Subela mountain whence he stared at Rāvaṇa. Their eyes met in anger seeing which Sugrīva by one leap reached Rāvaṇa and kicked off to Rāma the crown from the central head of Rāvaṇa. After performing something like a destructive dance on Rāvaṇa's head Sugrīva by another leap returned to Rāma.

Full of disappointment Rāvaṇa returned to his palace. His father-in-law, Mālyavān, tried his best to dissuade Rāvaṇa from war, all to no purpose. Rāma sent an emissary to him to ask him to send Sītā back. Rāvaṇa declined to oblige, and immediately war began. During the first day of the war, the majority of the Rākṣasas including their great leaders like Mahābāhu, Mahāpārśva, Mahodara, Mahākāya etc were killed. On the second day the Rākṣasa army under the command of Atikāya, son of Rāvaṇa, set out from the northern tower to fight. Lakṣmaṇa killed Atikāya with Brahmāstra. The other two Rākṣasa-commanders were Triśiras and Meghanāda. Lakṣmaṇa encountered them. When the latter failed to win by righteous fighting he resorted to cunningness. That too did not bring victory to him, and then he hid himself in the sky and shot the nāgāstra given to him by Śiva against the enemy. That arrow rendered Lakṣmaṇa, Sugrīva and all the monkeys unconscious. At that time Vibhīṣaṇa was away to arrange for food.

When Vibhīṣaṇa returned with food he was taken aback to find Lakṣmaṇa and others lying in an unconscious condition. Rāma was informed about the matter and when he came to the battle-ground and saw Lakṣmaṇa, Sugrīva, Hanūmān and all the others lying there unconscious he lost self-confidence for a short while and remarked that it was all the result of his having put faith in Vibhīṣaṇa, Rāvaṇa's brother whom he had put in charge of the battlefield. This comment of Rāma pained Vibhīṣaṇa much; but Śrī Rāma soon treated him kindly.

Even the Devas who witnessed the scene were alarmed. But Rāma sat there for sometime immersed in meditation and then a light emerged from his right eye, shot towards the north and disappeared in the horizon. At once Garuḍa appeared on the scene from the west and removed with his beak the nāgāstra from Lakṣmaṇa's body. Lakṣmaṇa jumped up from his unconscious state; Sugrīva and others also regained consciousness. In the fighting that followed all the Rākṣasa leaders were killed. It was Hanūmān, who killed Kumbhakarṇa. At the time of his death Kumbhakarṇa made a last request to Rāma, i.e. his head should be cut off and thrown into the sea as otherwise the Rākṣasas would laugh at him to see the head from which the ears have been bitten off by monkeys. Accordingly Rāma got Hanūmān to throw Kumbhakarṇa's head into the sea.

Then Śrī Rāma told Lakṣmaṇa thus : Today I shall fight Indrajit. The war shall not continue yet further. Today Indrajit and tomorrow Rāvaṇa should be killed and the next day we will return to Ayodhyā. Lakṣmaṇa answered:—"I shall fight Indrajit. I have told Vibhīṣaṇa that I will kill Indrajit within three days."

With Śrī Rāma's blessings Lakṣmaṇa began fighting again. Indrajit shot Nārāyaṇāstra which attracted by the 'seven-letter-Mantra' (Namo Nārāyaṇāya) of Lakṣmaṇa circled him thrice and entered his quiver. The Rākṣasa minister called Mahodara converted his elephant into Airāvata and himself changed into Devendra and encountered Lakṣmaṇa. Saying that he had no quarrel with Indra and would not fight him Lakṣmaṇa put down his bow, and Indrajit, exploiting the situation shot Brahmāstra against Lakṣmaṇa under cover of the clouds. Lakṣmaṇa, Sugrīva and others fainted. Then Śrī Rāma was in the army-camp, worshipping weapons to render them more powerful. Rāma returned to the battle-ground to find Lakṣmaṇa and others in life-less condition and crying like a mere ignorant fellow he lay by the side of Lakṣmaṇa. Vibhīṣaṇa, who returned with food prayed for the grace of Devas. Indra appeared, gave to Vibhīṣaṇa Gaṅgā water in a golden vessel and asked it to be given to Hanūmān and Jāmbavān, who, though unconscious were not dead.

Vibhīṣaṇa did so and both Hanūmān and Jāmbavān regained consciousness. Jāmbavān told Hanūmān that if mṛtasañjīvinī (herbal medicine which will put life back into the dead) were brought from the distant Himālayas before dawn the next day all the dead ones like Lakṣmaṇa and Sugrīva could be brought back to life. (See under Mṛtasañjīvinī). Accordingly Hanūmān started for the Himālayas. Meanwhile Indrajit had told Rāvaṇa about his victory, and as suggested by the latter Rākṣasa women took Sītā to the battlefield in the Puṣpaka Vimāna, showed her Rāma, Lakṣmaṇa and others lying there in a life-less condition and told her that all of them were dead. Sītā wept aloud, but Trijaṭā consoled her by saying that the Puṣpaka Vimāna would not carry widows and therefore Rāma was not dead.

Hanūmān returned before dawn the next day. As he could not distinguish mṛtasañjīvinī he had brought with him a mountain peak where the four medicinal plants, Śalyaharaṇī, Viśalyakaraṇī, Sandhānakaraṇī and Mṛtasañjīvinī grew. Jāmbavān distinguished mṛtasañjīvinī from the others and carried the four herbs into the battlefield. Contact with the air, which carried the smell of mṛtasañjīvinī brought the dead back to life. Viśalyakaraṇī removed all the arrows from their bodies and Sandhānakaraṇī healed the wounds.

Lakṣmaṇa again went out to fight Indrajit. Reluctant to fight with the former, Indrajit resorted to a new magical trick. He created an artificial or illusory Sītā and with her seated in a chariot he rose up in the sky and said as follows: "Rāvaṇa has abandoned Sītā who brings about humiliation to the Rākṣasas and ruin to Laṅkā. So, I cut her to pieces." So saying he cut into two, by one stroke of his sword, Sītā, who cried Oh ! my lord ! oh! brother." Blood fell on the battlefield and Indrajit disappeared. Though Rāma and others were alarmed by all these, Vibhīṣaṇa explained that it was all the magic of the Rākṣasas, and in the fierce fighting that followed Lakṣmaṇa killed Indrajit.

By now all the important and prominent Rākṣasas were killed. At last Rāvaṇa himself entered the battlefield. His first encounter was with Lakṣmaṇa. Then the fighting turned into one between Rāma and Rāvaṇa. The former broke the bow of Rāvaṇa and did not want to fight with the weaponless Rākṣasa King. Next day Rāvaṇa brought Pātāla Rāvaṇa and Kumbhodara to Laṅkā. Both of them entered Rāma's camp during night, but Pātāla Rāvaṇa, who realised that nothing could be achieved there returned to Pātāla with Kumbhodara. He built a tunnel from Pātāla upwards to earth, where in the fort created by Hanūmān's tail twisted in a circle lay Śrī Rāma and others. The tunnel opened into this 'fort', and Pātāla Rāvaṇa and his brother made Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa unconscious by making them inhale sammohana medicine and carried them off into Pātāla. Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa were laid in the court-yard of a Kālī temple to be sacrificed to Mahākālī the very same night. Arrangements for the sacrifice were completed.

Hanūmān had been frequently looking inside the fort. As soon as the absence of Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa was noticed, Sugrīva and others, under the leadership of Vibhīṣaṇa reached the Kālī temple through the tunnel. In the fighting that followed Hanūmān killed Pātāla Rāvaṇa and Aṅgada killed Mahodara. The only son of Pātāla Rāvaṇa, Sumālī, was crowned King of Pātāla. Rāvaṇa entered the field again against Rāma. Rāma shot the Mahendra arrow against Rāvaṇa. The arrow, which represented in itself the effulgence of Mahendra, the hardness of diamonds, the intensity of fire and Viṣṇu's glow cut off the ten heads of Rāvaṇa. His physical body fell on earth and his spirit ascended to heaven.

30). Return. Rāma and others, who were pleased with the turn of events, crowned Vibhīṣaṇa King of Laṅkā. Trijaṭā was put in charge of dressing Sītā in new clothes. Apsarās appeared on the scene. Śacīdevī presented to Sītā a chain, Urvaśī an ornament for the head, Menakā, two bangles, Rambhā a waist-let, Tilottamā a set of chains for the feet,and Anasūyā, wife of Atri, a Cūḍāmaṇi. When she wore all these ornaments Sītā appeared to be equal to Lakṣmīdevī in grandeur and charm. She was brought in a palanquin to Śrī Rāma by Vibhīṣaṇa and others. Rāma was taken aback by the glamorous dress, ornaments etc. of Śītā, and immediately a suspicion arose in his mind, and he kept mum after asking Lakṣmaṇa to do whatever Sītā wanted. As soon as she heard those words of Rāma, Sītā asked Lakṣmaṇa to light a funeral pyre saying that the woman suspected by her husband should not live and so she (Sītā) would quit her life in the very presence of Rāma.

Lakṣmaṇa cast a pathetic look at Rāma; but his face exhibited no change of feeling. He granted Sītā's request by his silence. Those present there awaited developments with bated breath. Lakṣmaṇa, with the help of the monkeys got a pyre ready. After going round Rāma with folded hands Sītā leapt into the glowing fire. Within a very short time three divine forms emerged from the fire, Svāhādevī, Sītādevī and God Agni.

His suspicions having thus vanished Rāma welcomed Sītā back and the next day they left for Ayodhyā in the Puṣpaka Vimāna. Vibhīṣaṇa, Sugrīva, Hanūmān and others followed them. After reaching Ayodhyā Rāma returned the Puṣpaka to Kubera. Bharata came back from Nandigrāma. In the presence of all relations and others concerned the coronation of Rāma as king took place. Bharata was appointed crown Prince, Lakṣmaṇa Commander-in-chief of armies and Śatrughna, Finance minister.

31) Sītā abandoned. Under Rāma's rule the country overflowed with milk and honey. Nobody had to fear anything from enemies. He made Sītā kill Sahasramukha Rāvaṇa. (For details see under Sahasramukharāvaṇa).

Śrī Rāma used to go about the country in disguise to enquire about the welfare of his subjects. On a particular dawn he happened to be standing outside the house of a washerman. The washerman scolded his wife, who had gone out of the house that night for something. He suspected that she had gone to meet her paramour. He bluntly told his wife that he was not prepared to act like Rāma, who had accepted Sītā, though she had lived with another person. Śrī Rāma, who heard the above talk, returned to his palace very sad. After thinking about for a long time he decided that it was his duty to abandon Sītā in the interests of his subjects. Then Sītā was in the seventh month of her pregnancy. She had on the previous day, expressed a desire to go to the forest areas once again. Rāma considered this as the most suitable opportunity to abandon Sītā in the forest and Lakṣmaṇa was entrusted with the matter. That day at Sun-rise Lakṣmaṇa took Sītā in a chariot to the suburbs of Vālmīki's āśrama, abandoned her there and returned to the palace. (According to the Rāmāyaṇa written by Kamba, a Tamil author, it is said that Sītā was left in the suburbs of Gautama's hut. There, Sītā who was pregnant was looked after by Ahalyā, the wife of Gautama.) Weeping aloud Sītā fell down. Young munis—Vālmīki's disciples—saw her and took her to the āśrama. At the āśrama she delivered two sons, Kuśa and Lava.

32) Aśvamedha. After abandoning Sītā in the forests Rāma led a sad life for five years. Yet, he decided to perform an Aśvamedha yajña. As soon as Rāma thought of him, Hanūmān appeared and he was deputed to invite Vibhīṣaṇa, Sugrīva and others from Laṅkā and Kiṣkindhā and the feudatory princes and armies from other countries.

Sugrīva was put in charge of the armies, Vibhīṣaṇa in charge of finance, and central authority was vested in Lakṣmaṇa. Then the yājñic horse, accompanied by the army, was let loose to travel all over the country. Accompanied by cavalry, the elephant division, infantry and the chariot-force the horse went about the various kingdoms. The army, on its way back to Ayodhyā with presents collected from many kingdoms, encamped for rest near Vālmīki's āśrama when Kuśa and Lava tied the yājñic horse, which was strolling there unfettered. Consequent upon this action of Kuśa and Lava a fight broke out between them and the king's army in which the latter got defeated. Even the arrows of Lakṣmaṇa failed to have any effect on the boys. The boys having not returned even though it had become very late in the evening, the āśramites went in search of them and it was only when they came to the scene of fighting did Lakṣmaṇa and others know who the boys really were.

During this period of time infants' death was very much on the increase in Ayodhyā. It was believed that such deaths increased when Śūdras did tapas, and to find out if any Śūdra was engaged in tapas Rāma flew over the Daṇḍaka forest where he found a Śūdra called Śambūka performing tapas hanging down from the branch of a tree with his head down. Rāma killed him and his spirit got salvation. Afterwards, appreciating the beauties of the forest Rāma came near Vālmīki's āśrama where he and Sītā met face to face. Kuśa and Lava also came there and they noticed with surprise the change in appearance brought about in their mother and Rāma on their meeting each other. When they heard from Hanūmān the real facts about Rāma they withdrew their arrows and prostrated at the feet of Rāma.

Śrī Rāma then, with the consent of all and in accordance with his own desire, took back Sītā and returned with her to Ayodhyā. Lakṣmaṇa and others followed him. Kausalyā and others received Sītā most heartily. Śrī Rāma, who till then was having no wife, had made a golden image of Sītā for the purposes of the a'vamedha. Now, since the real Sītā was with him the idol was an unnecessary thing. The Aśvamedhayajña went off very well.

33) The end. Śrī Rāma's reign became all the more prosperous. It was during this period that Rāma, as desired by the munis in the Yamunā plain, killed Lavaṇāsura, son of Madhu in the great city called Durga in the centre of the Madhu forest. (For details see under Lavaṇa). After Lavaṇa's death, a sect of Gandharvas called Śailūṣas, who lived on the shores of the eastern sea, proved to be enemies of Ayodhyā. Śrī Rāma annihilated them also. Kaikeyī began getting jealous of the prosperity and happiness of Sītā. One day when Rāma had gone to hunt in the forest, Kaikeyī closely questioned Sītā over particulars in Laṅkā and prevailed upon her, overruling her unwillingness, to draw a picture of Rāvaṇa. Sītā drew on a piece of 'sitting-plank' Rāvaṇa's figure with the ten heads. Kaikeyī took away the picture on the pretext of exhibiting it in the ladies' quarters, and gave it to Rāma, when he returned from hunting, to sit on at the time of Pūjā (worship). Rāma got angry to find Rāvaṇa's picture drawn on the 'sitting plank'. Kaikeyī then told him that it was Sītā, who had drawn the picture and also that she usually praised Laṅkā and Rāvaṇa. Rāma pronounced the death penalty on Sītā for having drawn Rāvaṇa's picture. The inmates of the palace shuddered to hear the judgement. When Lakṣmaṇa seated Sītā on the floor to kill her, Bhūmidevī (earth) rent itself open into two and carried her off through the opening.

Śrī Rāma grew sadder and sadder following the disappearance of Sītā. Ill omens began to appear in Ayodhyā in increasing measure. One day a divine Ṛṣi whom the people of Ayodhyā had not seen till then, came to Rāma's palace. He told Rāma that he had to impart certain secrets to the latter and after making Rāma vow that no one would enter the room while they were conversing and that if any one did come when they were talking, he should either be killed or forsaken for ever, he began to talk with Rāma in a secluded spot. Rāma posted Lakṣmaṇa at the entrance with the strict injunctions that nobody should come into their presence. Within a short time great munis like Sanaka came there and told Lakṣmaṇa that they wanted to see Rāma. They were not prepared to wait even for a short time as requested by Lakṣmaṇa, but threatened ruin to the royal family. Lakṣmaṇa then, was prepared to suffer the consequence, and went to Rāma and told him about the arrival of Sanaka and others. Rāma, in keeping with his vow, banished Lakṣmaṇa immediately. But, when Rāma came out and looked for Sanaka and others no one was to be found anywhere there. When he returned to the inner apartment the Ṛṣi also was not to be seen. In fact they were Kāla and his emissaries deputed by Brahmā to recall Rāma as the object of his incarnation was already achieved.

Rāma, who had already been suffering mental agony on account of Sītā's departure, lost all peace of mind as Lakṣmaṇa's banishment followed Sītā's departure. He decided to put an end to his life for which purpose he went to the river Sarayū. All the dependants followed him. While the great mass of people who thronged both the banks of the river burst out into weeping Śrī Rāma and his followers drowned themselves in the waters of the Sarayū, and their spirits attained Vaikuṇṭha. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Kamba Rāmāyaṇa and Tulasīdāsa Rāmāyaṇa).

RĀMAHRADA. A holy place on the boundary of Kurukṣetra. Ambā, daughter of a King of Kāśī once bathed here. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 186, Verse 28).

RĀMAKA. A mountain. Sahadeva, during his triumphal tour of the south, conquered this mountain. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 68).

RAMAṆA I. A son born to the Vasu known as Soma of his wife Manoharā. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 22).

RAMAṆACĪNA. A particular region in ancient India. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 66).

RAMAṆA (M). (RAMAṆAKAM). An island near Dvārakā where, according to Chapter 38 of the Southern Text of Bhārata, there was a forest. It was in this island that Vinatā, mother of Garuḍa and Kadrū, mother of the nāgas lived. Garuḍa, after freeing his mother from her slavery evicted the nāgas from this island. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 17). Following the eviction, many of the prominent nāgas lived in Pātāla. But, Kāliya, in fear of Garuḍa, lived in Kālindī. After his suppression by Śrī Kṛṣṇa Kāliya, with his family, as advised by Kṛṣṇa returned to Ramaṇakam. (Bhāgavata, 10 th Skandha).

RAMAṆAKA. The third son of Yajñabāhu, son of Priyavrata. (Bhāgavata, 5th Skandha).

RĀMAṆĪYAKA. The island called Ramaṇakam where the nāgas live. (See under Ramaṇaka).

RAMAṬHA (S). I. A mleccha tribe who lived in the kingdom of Māndhātā. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 61, Verse 14).

RĀMAṬHA (S). II. People of a low caste (mlecchas) who lived in South India during Purāṇic times. Nakula, subjugated this caste, and from that day onwards they became devoted to the Pāṇḍavas. They were invited to the Rājasūya conducted by Yudhiṣṭhira. (Vana Parva, Chapter 51, Verse 25).

RĀMATĪRTHA I. A holy place in the river Gomatī. He who bathes in this tīrtha will derive the results of performing the Aśvamedha yajña. (Vana Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 73).

RĀMATĪRTHA II. A holy spot on the top of the Mahendra mountain where Paraśurāma lived. A bath here brings the benefits of performing the aśvamedha yajña. (Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 17).

RĀMATĪRTHA III. A holy place in the plains of river Sarasvatī. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 49, Verse 7).

RĀMĀYAṆA.

1) General. Rāmāyaṇa is considered to be the first poetic composition in the world or at least in India, and hence it is called the Ādi Kāvya (First Epic). It is an epic as it contains descriptions and references to ancient themes. Vālmīki is its author, and hence Vālmīki is known as the 'Ādi kavi" also. Vālmīki and Śrī Rāma were contemporaries. During his life in exile in the forest Rāma visited Vālmīki's āśrama. It was in this āśrama that Sītā lived after being abandoned by Rāma. The connection in many ways of the life of Vālmīki with the 'Rāma story' was an incentive for him to write the Rāmāyaṇa.

2) Composing of Rāmāyaṇa. Once while returning from the river Tamasā Vālmīki witnessed a hunter shooting down one of a Krauñca (a kind of bird) couple. The intense emotion created by the incident burst out as follows in verse form.

Mā niṣāda pratiṣṭhāṁ tvamagamaḥ śāśvatīḥ samāḥ /
Yat krauñcamithunādekamavadhīḥ
kāmamohitam. //

Immediately Brahmā appeared on the scene and advised Vālmīki to write the story of Rāma in the same pattern as that verse. Brahmā taught him about the past and the future of the history of Rāma. As Sītā, Kuśa, and Lava were living in his āśrama Vālmīki was well in the know about the present. In the above background Vālmīki completed writing the Rāmāyaṇa Story in 24,000 verses. The epic is divided into seven kāṇḍas (sections) of five hundred chapters. The seven sections are the Bālakāṇḍa, the Ayodhyākāṇḍa, the Araṇya kāṇḍa, the Kiṣkindhā Kāṇḍa, the Sundara Kāṇḍa, the Yuddha Kāṇḍa and the Uttarakāṇḍa.

Vālmīki taught the poem to Lava and Kuśa and when they went with Vālmīki to Ayodhyā during the aśvamedhayajña of Śrī Rāma, they sang the poem in the open assembly there.

3) Different views about the author. Tradition ascribes the authorship of the Rāmāyaṇa to Vālmīki. But, western scholars hold the view that a part of Bālakāṇḍa and the whole of Uttarakāṇḍa are interpolations of a future date. The following are the reasons for this view.

(i) Two different texts are found for cantos one and three of Bālakāṇḍa. In one of them many of the stories mentioned in the other are missing. It may, therefore, be surmised that the two texts were composed during different periods.

(ii) In the early texts of Rāmāyaṇa stories like Gaṅgāvataraṇam are not to be found. So they must be interpolations of a later period.

(iii) Only in Kāṇḍas one and seven is Śrī Rāma treated as an incarnation. In the other Kāṇḍas he is considered in the capacity of a hero only.

(iv) Uttarakāṇḍa is not to be found among the early translations of Rāmāyaṇa into other languages.

(v) In the Bālakāṇḍa it is stated that Vālmīki composed the Rāmāyaṇa, taught it to Kuśa and Lava, and that they recited the whole poem before Śrī Rāma at Ayodhyā. Many of the things mentioned in this Kāṇḍa are repeated in Uttarakāṇḍa, which, therefore, must have been written by someone else.

4) The period of Rāmāyaṇa. According to Indian belief Śrī Rāma lived at the end of Tretāyuga, which came to its close in 8,67,100 B.C. As per Rāmāyaṇa Śrī Rāma ruled the country for 11,000 years. He was forty years old when he ascended the throne. Vālmīki began writing the Rāmāyaṇa after Lavakuśas were born. In the light of the above facts. certain scholars opine that the Rāmāyaṇa was written near about 878000 B.C. But, western critics and some eastern critics do not accept this view. Professor Jacobi holds the view that the original of Mahābhārata is anterior to Rāmāyaṇa. Most scholars do not agree with this view.

A great majority of critics are of opinion that Rāmāyaṇa is anterior to Mahābhārata. They argue as follows :—

(i) The traditional belief in India is that Rāmāyaṇa was written much earlier than Mahābhārata.

(ii) Rāmāyaṇa makes no reference to any of the characters of Mahābhārata.

(iii) The Śrī Rāma story is referred to in many a Jātaka story of the Buddhists.

(iv) Vālmīki has made no mention about the city of Pāṭalīputra established near about 380 B.C. It is an irrefutable fact that Śrī Rāma had passed by the city.

(v) During the reign of emperor Aśoka the Prākṛta language was spoken in the areas where the incidents mentioned in Rāmāyaṇa took place. But, Rāmāyaṇa was written much anterior to the emergence of Prākṛta language.

According to Professor Keith Rāmāyaṇa was written in 300 B.C.

5). Different readings of Rāmāyaṇa. In various parts of India three original texts or readings are found of the original Rāmāyaṇa. In each of the three texts nearly 1/3 of the portions differ from one another. The Bombay text is popular in northern and southern India. The second is the Bengal text. The third, the Kashmir text, is popular in the north-western parts of India. The inference to be made from the existence of these three different texts is that the original epic was composed in a Prākṛta language, which was most popular at the time and that it was later translated into Sanskrit by different persons at different times. This theory will explain the existence of the different texts. For many years it continued to be handed down from mouth to mouth till it assumed written form in Sanskrit.

6). Other Rāmāyaṇas. The Rāmāyaṇa story in other forms and garbs, is also prevalent in India. One of them is Vāsiṣṭharāmāyaṇa or Jñānavāsiṣṭha. The authorship of it also is ascribed to Vālmīki. Most of the Rāmāyaṇas like Vāsiṣṭhottararāmāyaṇa, Sītāvijaya, Adbhutarāmāyaṇa, Adbhutottararāmāyaṇa etc. found in different parts of India are believed to have been written by Vālmīki. Adbhutarāmāyaṇa is composd of twentyseven cantos. According to this Rāmāyaṇa, it was Sītā, who killed Rāvaṇa of ten heads. There is another Rāmāyaṇa in Sanskrit called Adhyātma-Rāmāyaṇa. It is a poem separated from Brahmāṇḍapurāṇa. It is written in the form of a conversation between Umā (Pārvatī) and Śiva. Ānanda-Rāmāyaṇa and Mūla-Rāmāyaṇa extol the greatness of Hanūmān.

RAMBHA. An asura. (For details see under Karambha).

RAMBHĀ I.

1) General. One of the most beautiful of the apsarā women. Urvaśī, Tilottamā and Rambhā are really reputed for their beauty.

2) Birth. All the famous Celestial women were daughters of Kaśyapaprajāpati by his wife Pradhā. Devarṣi (Kaśyapa) begot the following daughters of his wife Pradhā i.e. Alambuṣā, Miśrakeśī, Vidyutparṇā, Tilottamā, Aruṇā, Rakṣitā, Rambhā, Manoramā, Subāhū, Keśinī, Suratā and Surajā. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 65).

3) Rāvaṇa cursed. Rāvaṇa raped Rambhā and Nalakūbara cursed him. (See under Nalakūbara).

4) Purūravas and Rambhā. Indra once killed an asura chief named Māyādhara and held a festival in honour of the victory. At the festival Rambhā danced before her preceptor Tumburu. Purūravas too was present on the occasion and he ridiculed Rambhā for her mistakes in dancing. Moreover he claimed that he was a greater master of dance than Tumburu preceptor of Rambhā. Enraged by this claim Tumburu cursed that Purūravas would be separated from his wife Urvaśī. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Lāvāṇakalambaka, Taraṅga 3).

5) Rambhā and Suṣeṇa. There was a King called Suṣeṇa on mount Citrakūṭa. This handsome bachelor prince used to sit alone in the lotus pond near his palace. When once Rambhā passed through the sky above the pond her eyes met those of Suṣeṇa and she alighted on the spot and the long talk between the two ended in their marriage. Suṣeṇa enjoyed life there for a long time with Rambhā without knowing that she was an apsarā woman. He had attempted many a time to know the real facts about her, to no purpose. Rambhā did not even think about her native Svarga. Her companion, a Yakṣī, showered gold all over Suṣeṇa's kingdom. In due course Rambhā delivered a beautiful female child and then she told the King that she was Rambhā and that she had continued as his wife till then as she felt love towards him. She further told him that now she had begot a daughter, she was leaving him and that she had a curse upon her which had been redeemed now. She also assured him that they would meet in Svarga in case the daughter was duly wedded. Rambhā departed to Svarga. Suṣeṇa named the child Sulocanā and when she came of age he married her to Vatsamaharṣi and then went to Devaloka where he lived happily with Rambhā for a long time. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Madanamañcukālambaka, Taraṅga 2).

6) Other information.

(1) The powerful asura called Caturāsya once felt a great yearning for Rambhā and her maid Svayamprabhā managed things for him. He built a garden-city and presented it to Svayamprabhā in return for her service stated above. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Kiṣkindhā Kāṇḍa).

(ii) The Sage Gautama alias Śaradvān experienced seminal emission on seeing Rambhā and from the semen was born Kṛpī whom in due course of time Droṇācārya married. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Madanamañcukālambaka, Taraṅga 6).

(iii) Indra once deputed Rambhā to break the vigorous tapas Viśvāmitra was observing. She approached him in the guise of a nightingale and with her song disturbed his meditation. The muni cursed her as follows and turned her into a rock. "Oh! evil woman Rambhā, you have cheated me, who have mastered desire and anger and so you be turned into a rock for a thousand years. The great brahmin ascetic, Bhūritejas will absolve you from my curse and you will then resume your own form." (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa. Bālakāṇḍa, Canto 64).

(iv) Rambhā gave a dance performance on the occasion of the birthday celebrations of Arjuna. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 62).

(v) She had lived for sometime in the court of Kubera serving him. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 10).

(vi) When Arjuna lived in Svarga as Indra's guest Rambhā danced in honour of the former. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 43, Verse 29).

(vii) On another occasion she danced in Kubera's court in honour of Aṣṭāvakra muni. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 19, Verse 44).

RAMBHĀ II. Wife of Mayāsura. The couple had the following seven children i.e. Māyāvī, Dundubhi, Mahiṣa Kālaka, Ajakarṇa, and Mandodarī. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, 3.6. 28-29).

RĀMEŚVARA. There is in South India a very famous holy place called Rāmeśvara and a Śiva temple there. Rāma and others encamped on the sea shore to cross over to Laṅkā to release Sītā from Rāvaṇa's custody. This temple, according to Kamba, was built by Rāma at that time. The following story is from the Yuddha Kāṇḍa of Kamba Rāmāyaṇa.

To make the passage over to Laṅkā easy, Rāma decided to build a great temple at Rāmeśvara and install a Śivaliṅga in the temple. Under the expert supervision of the great architects, Nala and Nīla, all the monkeys cooperated to build the temple. As ordered by Rāma, Hanūmān went to Kailāsa to fetch Śivaliṅga. Hanūmān did not return with the liṅga though the auspicious time for the installation was very near. How could the installation be made without the idol and the installation had to be made at the appointed time.

Śrī Rāma stood ready near the installation platform. It was the exact time for the installation of the idol. A divine effulgence was seen to emerge from Rāma and immediately a Śivaliṅga automatically appeared at the spot where rituals were conducted for installation. Everyone was wonder-struck by this mysterious happening.

Hanūmān by now, returned with the liṅga and he felt sorry that the installation of the idol had already been made. Śrī Rāma told him: "Please remove the idol already installed, we shall install a new one."

Happy at the words of Rāma, Hanūmān entwined the idol with his tail and jumped directly upwards. But, his tail was cut, head clashed against the roof which was broken and Hanūmān fell down unconscious. Śrī Rāma held him up and patted him on the head and Hanūmān was more pleased than ever. Afterwards, to fulfil Hanūmān's desire and for the prosperity of the temple Hanūmān was made to install the new Śivaliṅga in front of the eastern tower of the temple. Śrī Rāma laid down the following rule also. Only after worshipping the idol at the tower, should the God inside the temple be worshipped.

The rule was also recorded there.

RĀMOPĀKHYĀNAPARVA. A sub-parva of Mahābhārata comprising chapters 273 to 292 of Vana Parva.

RAMYAGRĀMA. Capital of a State. Sahadeva, during his triumphal tour, conquered Ramyagrāma. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 14).

RAMYAKA I. A son of Agnīdhra, who had nine sons by his wife Pūrvacittī. (Bhāgavata, 5th Skandha). Ramyaka ruled the Kingdom called Ramyaka Varṣa near Nīlagiri. Arjuna, during his triumphal tour conquered Ramyaka and levied taxes from the people there (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 28).

RAMYAKA II. A particular region in Ilāvṛta, one of the seven Continents. On the eastern part of Ilāvṛta there exist three mountains called Nīlagiri, Śvetagiri and Sṛṅgavān. These mountains jut into the sea, and are separated from one another by a distance of two thousand miles each and are the source of many rivers. In between the three mountains are three regions of land called Ramyaka, Hiraṇmaya and Kuru. (Devī Bhāgavata, 8th Skandha).

RAṆA. A Rākṣasa. He was killed by Vāyu deva in the war between Hiraṇyākṣa and the Devas. (Padma Purāṇa, Sṛṣṭi Khaṇḍa).

RĀṆĀYANI. A Preceptor in the line of the Sāma (Veda) disciples of Vyāsa. (Jaiminīya Gṛhyasūtra 1, 14).

RAṄGADĀSA. A great Śūdra devotee of God. He built a number of temples on mount Veṅkaṭācala (Skanda Purāṇa).

RAṄGAVIDYĀDHARA. A Gandharva. (See under Sudeva III.

RAṆOTKAṬA. A warrior of Subrahmaṇya. (Śalya Parva Chapter 45, verse 68).

RANTIDEVA. The Kindest and the most liberal of the Kings in ancient India.

1). Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu thus: Atri-Candra Budha - Purūravas - Āyus - Nahuṣa - Yayāti-Pūru-Janamejaya-Prācinvān - Pravīra - Namasyu-Vītabhaya Śuṇḍu - Bahuvidha - Saṁyāti - Rahovādī - Raudrāśva-Matināra - Santurodha - Duṣyanta - Bharata - Suhotra-Suhotā-Gala-Garda-Suketu-Bṛhatkṣatra - Nara - Saṅkṛti Rantideva.

2). His importance. Rantideva's unique kindness is very famous in history. After the great war was over, Nārada once narrated the stories of sixteen kings to Dharmaputra. There are a number of stories relating to Rantideva's kindness, hospitality etc. He had engaged 20,000 people to cook food for guests who came to the palace everyday. He was very vigilant about treating guests day and night alike. He gifted away all wealth which had been righteously earned, to brahmins. He learned Vedas and subdued enemies by Dharma (righteousness).The very blood that flowed from the skin of cattle killed to entertain his guests formed itself into a river called Carmaṇvati. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 29. 21,000 cows were daily killed for the guest. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 67).

3. Other information.

(i) Rantideva entered Svarga by giving Vasiṣṭha warm water. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 234, Verse 17).

(ii) He once worshipped maharṣis with fruits and vegetables and achieved his desire. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 292, Verse 7).

(iii) He never ate flesh. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 115, Verse 67).

RAPHEṆAKA. A nāga born in Takṣaka's dynasty. It was burnt to death at the serpent yajña of Janamejaya. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 8).

RASĀTALA. A particular part of Pātāla where, according to the Purāṇas, the Nivātakavacas live. The Mahābhārata contains the following information regarding Rasātala.

(1) During the deluge the Agni called Saṁvarta rent the earth and reached up to Raśātala. (Vana Parva, Chapter 188, Verse 69).

(2) The Rākṣasī called Kṛtyā created by the asuras once carried away Duryodhana to Pātāla. (Vana Parva, Chapter 251, Verse 29).

(3) Rasātala is the seventh stratum of the earth. Surabhi the mother of cows born from nectar lives there. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 102, Verse 1).

(4) It is more comfortable and happy to live in Rasātala than to live either in Nāgaloka or Svarga. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 102, Verse 14).

(5) It was in Rasātala that Mahāviṣṇu incarnated as Boar and killed the asuras with his tusk. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 206, Verse 26).

(6) Mahāviṣṇu, who assumed the form of Hayagrīva went to Raśātala, killed Madhu and Kaiṭabha and resurrected the Vedas. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 347, Verse 54).

(7) King Vasu went to Rasātala because he uttered one lie. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 34).

(8) Rasātala is Ananta's abode. Balabhadrarāma who was an incarnation of Ananta, gave up his material body at Prabhāsa tīrtha and attained Rasātala. (Svargārohaṇa Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 28).

RAŚMIKETU. A Rākṣasa who fought on the side of Rāvaṇa against Rāma. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Sundara Kāṇḍa; Sarga 9).

RAŚMIVĀN. An eternal, universal Deva (Viśvadeva). (Ānuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 36).

RĀṢṬRAVARDHANA. A minister of Daśaratha. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 6).

RATĀ. A daughter of Dakṣaprajāpati. Dharma married her and the Vasu called Ahar was born to the couple. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 17).

RATHACITRĀ. A river famous in the Purāṇas. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 26).

RATHADHVAJA. Father of king Kuśadhvaja of Videha. Vedavatī was his grand-daughter. (See under Vedavatī).

RATHADHVĀNA. Another name of Vīrāgni, son of Śaṁyu. (Vana Parva, Chapter 219, Verse 9).

RATHĀGRAṆĪ. A warrior. He had accompanied Śatrughna who led the Aśvamedhic horse of Rāma. (Padma Purāṇa, Pātālakhaṇḍa).

RATHAKṚTA. A Yakṣa who rotates in the month of Caitra along with the Āditya called Dhātā. (Bhāgavata 12th Skandha).

RATHĀKṢA. A warrior of Subrahmaṇya. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 63).

RATHANTARA I. A Sāman, which, having assumed form, worships Brahmā in his court. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 30). This Rathantara sāman possesses the power to cure fainting fits. Once Vasiṣṭha restored Indra to consciousness with this Sāman. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 281, Verse 21).

RATHANTARA II. Son of the Agni called Pāñcajanya. He was also called Tarasāhara. (Vana Parva, Chapter 222, Verse 7).

RATHANTARYĀ (RATHANTARĪ). Mother of King Duṣyanta. She was the daughter of King Īlina and had five sons, i.e. Duṣyanta, Śūra, Bhīma, Pravasu and Vasu. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 94).

RATHAPRABHU. A synonym of Vīrāgni, son of Śaṁyu. (Vana Parva, Chapter 219, Verse 9).

RATHASENA. A valiant warrior who fought on the Pāṇḍava side against the Kauravas. His horses were very magnificent ones. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 23, Verse 62).

RATHASTHA. A Yakṣa who rotates in the month of Jyeṣṭha in the company of the Āditya called Mitra. (Bhāgavata, 12th Skandha).

RATHASTHĀ. One of the seven tributaries of the Gaṅgā. According to the ancients, bathing in the river will wash off all sins. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 169, Verse 20).

RATHĀTIRATHASAṄKHYĀNAPARVA. A sub-Parva of Śānti Parva, Chapters 165-172.

RATHAVĀHANA. Brother of the Virāṭa King. He fought against the Pāṇḍavas. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 158, Verse 42).

RATHĀVARTA. A holy place considered to be on the right side of Śākambharīdevī. He who visits this place will, due to the grace of Śiva, attain salvation. (Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 23).

RATHAVĪTI. A maharṣi. He lived in a hilly region very far away from the Himālayas. Once the maharṣi called Śyāvāśva invited Rathavīti to perform a homa at the yajña conducted by King Taranta, and when he came for the homa with his daughter the father of Śyāvāśva asked him to marry his daughter to Śyāvāśva. Rathavīti not only refused, but also dismissed Śyāvāśva from the yājñic platform. At last Rathavīti married his daughter to Śyāvāśva at the request of King Taranta. (Ṛgveda, Sāyaṇabhāṣya).

RATHĪTARA. A king of the solar dynasty. He was the son of Pṛṣatāśva. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

RATI I. Wife of Kāmadeva and some Purāṇas hold the view that Kāma was the son of Dharma whose father was Brahmā. But, the story of Kāma and Rati is described in the Kālikāpurāṇa as follows.

Brahmā created ten prajāpatis. A beautiful lady called Sandhyā was his next creation. As soon as she was born, seeing her exquisite beauty Brahmā and the prajāpatis jumped to their feet. All of them thought in the same way. While the court of Brahmā was in such a perplexed confusion, an extremly handsome person emerged from his mind. Fish was the symbol on his flag, and he aked Brahmā thus: "Oh father, what should I do? Give me a suitable name and you should also decide upon a place and position and also a wife for me." Brahmā told him as follows:—"You be moving about everywhere in this world (full of men and-women) engaged in the eternal function of creation with the five arrows of flower in your hands and thus multiply the population. Your arrows will go everywhere and no one, not even the Devas will dare to obstruct your arrows. Everyone will yield to your behests. Viṣṇu, Śiva and I also will yield before your arrows. You will enter the hearts of living beings in invisible form and giving them happiness engage yourself in eternal creation. The chief aim and object of your arrows of flower will be the hearts of living beings. You will be given a suitable name just now."

The prajāpatis, who understood the wish of Brahmā, after mutual consultation said: "You emerged churning our minds. Therefore, you will become famous under the name Manmatha (he who churns the mind). You will lay low Śiva's haughtiness and conceit. Oh ! best among men, Dakṣa, chief among the prajāpatis, will give you a wife."

Happily pleased at the above words of Brahmā Kāma held up in his hands the bow and arrows of flowers and decided to shoot five arrows, i.e. harṣaṇam (pleasing or gladdening), Rocanam (attracting or tempting), mohanam (deluding or infatuating), śoṣaṇam (weakening) and māraṇam (killing). He decided to use the arrows first against Brahmā and then against the prajāpatis. Accordingly the arrows shot forth and Brahmā and all the prajāpatis overwhelmed by sexual passion stared at Sandhyādevī. Sandhyā also got excited and from her body sprouted up 49 parts; 64 kalās (arts) also were born from her. She used incessantly against the leaders of the world (Brahmā and others) who were downed by the arrows of sexual passion, arrows dear to Manmatha. The expressions of Brahmā made Sandhyā sick with love.

Śiva, who was just then travelling along the sky, seeing the boisterous exhibitions of passion by Brahmā and others alighted there. He ridiculed Brahmā for his display of passion towards his own daughter Sandhyā and spoke further like this: "This Kāma too is a fool. He tested his arrows here itself, he has no sense of propriety and discretion."

Brahmā was thoroughly ashamed at the words of Śiva. He perspired and swept with his hands the drops of sweat that oozed from his body. With great difficulty he controlled his passion and gave up Sandhyā. From the drops of sweat falling on the ground from the body of Brahmā were born the pitṛs called Agniṣvāttas and the Barhiṣadas, the former 64,000 in number and the latter 4,80,000. Drops of sweat from the bodies of the prajāpatis also fell on the ground and from them were born the Devas. The pitṛs called Somapās are the sons of Kratu; those called Svakālikas are the sons of Vasiṣṭha; sons of Pulastya are called Ājyapās and Havirbhuks are the sons of Aṅgiras.

Brahmā, who was angry that Kāma shot his arrows against him in the presence of Śiva cursed the former that he would be burnt to ashes in the fire of Śiva's eyes, and Kāma trembling with fear at the curse prostrated at the feet of Brahmā and wept Then Brahmā said that though he would die in the fire of Śiva's eyes, he would be born again.

From the drops of perspiration that fell on the ground from Dakṣa's body arose a beautiful woman, and Dakṣa told Kāma that the woman, his daughter would become famous as Rati devī. Dakṣa gave Rati Devī to Kāma to be his wife. Thus did Rati become Kāma's wife. (For the second birth of Rati see under Pradyumna and for other details see under Kāma.)

RATI II. An apsarā woman of Alakāpurī. She danced on the occasion of Kubera welcoming Aṣṭāvakramuni. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 19, Verse 45).

RATI III. Wife of Vibhu born in the dynasty of King Ṛṣabhadeva of Ajanābhavarṣa. Pṛthuṣeṇā was her daughter. (Bhāgavata, 5th Skandha).

RATIGUṆA. A Devagandharva whose father was Kaśyapaprajāpati and mother Pradhā. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 47).

RATIVIDAGDHĀ. A courtesan of Hastināpura. As she performed the pious deed of feeding brahmins she attained Vaikuṇṭha after her death. (Padma Purāṇa, Kriyākhaṇḍa).

RATNAGRĪVA. A king of Kāñcananagarī who was a great devotee of Viṣṇu. He performed tapas and attained Vaikuṇṭha. (Padma Purāṇa, Pātāla Khaṇḍa).

RATNĀKARA. A Vaiśya. He was killed by an ox, but he attained Vaikuṇṭha as a brahmin called Dharmāśva sprinkled Gaṅgā water on him. (Padma Purāṇa, Kriyākhaṇḍa).

RATNAKŪṬĀ. One of the wives of Atrimaharṣi. (Padma Purāṇa, Pātāla Khaṇḍa).

RĀTRIDEVĪ. The presiding deity of night. Indrāṇī once worshipped Rātridevī for the fulfilment of her desires. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 13, Verse 25).

RAUBHYA. A hermit. It is seen in Uttara Rāmāyaṇa that this hermit called on Śrī Rāma on his return from Laṅkā.

RAUDRA. A class of giants who lived on Kailāsa and Mandara mountains. The hermit Lomaśa gave warning to the Pāṇḍavas, when they went to the north during their forest life, to be careful of the Raudras, (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 139, Stanza 10).

RAUDRAKARMĀ. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 127, Stanza, 62, that Raudrakarmā was killed in the battle of Bhārata by Bhīmasena.

RAUDRĀŚVA I. A son born to the emperor Pūru of his wife Pauṣṭī. Raudrāśva had two brothers Pravīra and Īśvara.

Once Raudrāśva fell in love with the celestial maid Miśrakeśī. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, that as a result of the married life of these two, ten archers beginning with Anvagbhānu, were born.

RAUDRĀŚVA II. A hermit who was the disciple of the hermit Kātyāyana. Once Mahiṣāsura came in the guise of a beautiful woman to the hermitage of Raudrāśva to hinder his penance. The hermit cursed Mahiṣāsura, "You will die because of a woman". (Kālikā Purāṇa, Chapter 62).

RAUMYA (S). A group of gaṇas (warriors of Śiva). It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 284, that these Raumyas were born from the hairpores of Vīrabhadra, the chief of the guards of Śiva.

RAUPYĀ. A Purāṇically famous river of Ancient India. The holy bath Prasarpaṇa of the hermit Jamadagni is situated on the banks of this river. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 129, Stanza 7).

RAURAVA. One of the twentyeight hells. For details see the part Naraka under the word Kāla.

RĀVAṆA. The Rākṣasa King of Laṅkā who had ten heads.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu thus :—Brahmā—Pulastya—Viśravas—Rāvaṇa.

2) Birth. Viśravas, grandson of Brahmā and son of Pulastya married Kaikasī, daughter of Sumālī. While Viśravas and Kaikasī were living in the forest Śleṣmātaka, Kaikasī became pregnant. She delivered four children in four Yāmas, with an interval of one yāma between them. The elder three were the famous Rākṣasas, Rāvaṇa, Kumbhakarṇa and Vibhīṣaṇa; the fourth one, a girl, was named Śūrpaṇakhā. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa).

Kubera was another son of Viśravas born of another wife called Devavarṇī alias Ilabilā. As soon as he came of age Kubera captured the Puṣpaka chariot and began ruling the kingdom with Laṅkā as capital. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).
